Newfoundland, in my opinion, should not rush into complete conversion to fresh fish. Competition from Iceland and Norway in 1952-53 nearly ruined our fresh fish business. Also, if we concentrate on fresh frozen fillets, we are likely to run up against a decrease in quotas of imports into the United States because the New England fishermen say they cannot tolerate any more imports.

The salt codfish market, it seems to me, was allowed to disappear too easily. We were not anxious to please the Portuguese and Spaniards.

A few years ago Newfoundland sold a million quintals of fish a year to just three markets—Portugal, Spain and Brazil. It is understandable about Spain, but even there I believe our market could have been brought back. In the House of Commons I advocated greater efforts by the Department of Trade and Commerce to get back the market. Portugal, for example, had a favourable balance of trade with Canada and could well put up dollars for her salt fish imports. Mr. Mayhew thought they were in a position to buy fish if they wanted to do it.

I have pointed out that the fresh frozen filleting industry is not very satisfactory in this country on account of competition and embargoes. There is another feature noticeable in this country, the plants do not always take the fish. Even in St. John's boat loads of fish have been thrown in the Harhour because Job's could not take it. I have seen many boat loads of fish brought in and the plants did not want to take it; the fishermen were bringing in too much fish.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That would be in the midst of the trap season.

MR. BROWNE: It was before the election. When the report of the Fishery Development Committee came out, I obtained a copy. I read it many times and I must confess that I cannot see how the fishermen have been able to study it. There were parts of it I could not understand. I do not believe the fishermen are familiar with it or with all the things in it. As I read the Walsh Report I remember nothing about a Fishery Development Authority in that. The co-operative principle was stressed a great deal. That I think was what the Walsh Committee had in mind when they recommended development on a community basis. I am sure they did not mean the socialization or industrialization of the industry as outlined in the Fisheries Development Authority Bill.

We are told by the Minister that LaScie is going to have a salt cod-curing plant; a bait depot; a meal manufacturing plant; a fertilizer plant and they are to have all the amenities that go into a modern town. I have been in LaScie and it strikes me that it is not a suitable place for a fresh frozen plant because it is going to be tied up for such a long time during the year. Now we are told it is going to have year-around production.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Where is the inconsistency?

MR. BROWNE: It is this: They are going to have a fresh frozen filleting plant there, tied up five or six months of the year, where it might be in operation all year around.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The quotation just read refers to a large filleting plant. There is no such plant going into LaScie.

MR. BROWNE: I take it then a small plant would be there. Then when you get this small plant you face the argument as to whether it would be as efficient as one which was operating all the year around.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If the honourable gentleman will allow me, he is missing the whole point. The LaScie development is a testing out of an operation, dryers, sun-drying, artificial drying, mechanized drying, fish meal plant, salted fish plant, frozen fish plant, fertilizer plant, fishmeal plant, all balanced out, no one thing, but a balanced operation. That is the whole point of LaScie.

MR. BROWNE: Yes. But still the argument can be made that if that is what is wanted, why not have it on the South Coast or the South East Coast where you can fish all the year around. There you can't have any fishing at all for four or five months of the year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well, the answer is obvious. You don't need to spend it on the South West Coast where you know the people can fish for twelve months a year. But you need to spend it on the Northeast Coast where the overwhelming majority of the fishermen are, and constitutes therefore the overwhelming part of the fishery problem. That is why we must try something on the Northeast Coast.

MR. BROWNE: Certainly it is desirable that something should be done. But is this whole experiment to be confined to the Northeast Coast? I mentioned that along the Southern Shore, apart from Fermuse there is no such setup as the honourable gentleman has spoken of in LaScie. But if you are going to have a scheme of such a character as that why not try it on the Southeast Coast or the South Coast. Is there any place in Newfoundland today where you have a salt fish industry, a fresh frozen filleting industry, a fishmeal plant, a fertilizer plant and a bait depot all combined such as you are going to put in LaScie? No. Then why not have one of these first in a place where it is feasible all the year around, rather than start with a place blocked with ice for five or six months of the year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend does not see the point yet.

MR. BROWNE: I think I see the point. The honourable gentleman means that on the Northeast Coast there are a number of fishermen, a great number of fishermen, and they are prevented from fishing during five or six months of the year, and they want to see if a community such as mentioned for LaScie will work under these conditions.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: Then select the people from the bays and bring them into LaScie and make a big town. Now I believe, Sir, (honourable members can correct me if I am wrong) that is the Premier's idea, because I remember reading his manifesto. I am not sure whether it was his manifesto in 1951 or in 1949, but I do remember these words, and I shall always remember them: "We want centralization and modernization of our fishing industry, centralized plants so that we can take the women and children away from the slavery of making fish." The honourable Premier can correct me if I have misquoted him. But it seems to me that is what he said, I feel pretty sure about that. Now, Sir, that all strikes me as being unsound and unjustified. In the first place making fish is not slavery, and the part that women and children have taken in the production of salt codfish has never been regarded by the people or by the women and children themselves as slavery. Unlike—

MR. SMALLWOOD: It has not been regarded as slavery by the women, you would say?

MR. BROWNE: I would say, no.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would say, yes.

MR. BROWNE: The honourable gentleman knows women today do much work in other countries, and in Canada.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, in India, China and Korea.

MR. BROWNE: I would say there is no comparison there. But they are doing other things, and harder. The honourable gentleman himself has seen, and I am sure my honourable friend who was in England during the war, has seen women working in munition factories, and the same way in Canada, working on machinery. Ask my honourable friend here who has just sat down whether it is harder working out on the flakes turning over the fish, as they still do, thank God, in many parts of Newfoundland.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is difficult to make the making of fish on flakes by women and children an appealing and an attractive life in 1954.
MR. BROWNE: No the idea, I take it now, is to put in fish plants and put them in front of an assembly line of fillets as they come along, and have them put them in packages. That is the ideal, where they are pushed through their collars, as the saying goes. What is the difference in working on a fish plant at Job's on the South Side for somebody else they know nothing at all about or working for a husband or father at Little Heart's Ease or Heart's Desire or Old Perlican or Grate's Cove or Bay de Verde, where my honourable friend comes from.

MR. MURRAY: In one place they get 60c. an hour.

MR. BROWNE: It is different because in one place they get 60c. an hour, and in another place the time is not related to a special price.

MR. JANES: They get 3c. an hour.

MR. BROWNE: The honourable gentleman has kept an account in full.

MR. JANES: I kept time in Joe Batt's Arm.

MR. BROWNE: Sir, I think there is an important factor to be considered in connection with the communities, which the women and children have given in the production of fish. They are working with their families. They are working at home. I can recall the time when I helped my own father when he was fishing down in Quidi Vidi. I helped make the fish, and I must say I never regarded it as slavery. Now take the French Canadian people in Quebec. They have grown from a few thousand people to nearly four million people in the last hundred and fifty years. They have done it because of the family life. I think you will find that the women in Quebec work as hard, if not harder, than the women in Newfoundland. In the farming settlements they have to do many things. I think it is a very desirable thing that the children should be taught from the earliest possible age to assist the family in bringing wood, in chopping wood or doing any of the little chores around the house that children can do, and even in helping harness up the horses, and going on messages and that sort of thing; and in fishing places in helping put the fish on the stagehead for the men to cut. As they grow along help in every way they can to assist their parents.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Would my honourable friend yield a moment? Does my honourable friend actually argue that it is right, it is just, that a fisherman's wife and children ought to help him to earn the living for the family, and that he ought not to get enough by his own labour to support his own family? Does he argue that way?

MR. BROWNE: The Honourable the Premier is thinking of industrialization of this country. He has had it in his mind long before he became Premier of the country, and he would like to see everybody working in a factory and getting wages. He knows perfectly well that is not a sound economy, because the factories have to close down from time to time, the industries in which they are engaged will become flat on their backs—he spoke the other day about the birch plant and people being laid off. If their industry is attached to their homes they have greater security than they have otherwise. It is in another direction in which aid should be given to the fisheries rather than industrialization. The honourable gentleman may not propose communiz-ation or socialization but he certainly intends to industrialize it, and he believes it is in that direction the sole solution for the fishery problem rests.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Tell us the honourable gentleman's idea of what should be done, and in what direction?

MR. BROWNE: No. You had a committee for two years—and you were making suggestions to them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I was not.

MR. BROWNE: The honourable gentleman did not need to appear before the committee to get his ideas through to them, and find out what it was doing. He announced last year before the publication of the report, what the report was going to contain, and he also made another announcement last year—I would remind him—a firm coming into this country was going to take over sixteen of the bait depots and establish fish filleting plants here, would have gone ahead with the idea if the Minister of Fisheries in Ottawa had not stopped it—giving a monopoly to one firm to produce fish fillets in this country. Would that be desirable? That is what the honourable the Premier advocated at that time. I would not attempt to give a solution to the problems of the fishery alone. It is the whole economy of the country that has to be regarded. We have to take into consideration all the different industries that are in existence in this country and correlate them, and give each one the proportion that it should have in our economy. As the honourable the Premier knows, I have been interested and have advocated greater assistance to agriculture in this country then has been given to it in the past. He knows the importance of agriculture in every community. It is of vital importance. It is a staple industry and should be given far greater recognition by the Government than it has been given in the past five years.

Now, Sir, I listened with great interest, as we all did, to the Minister's speech. It was excellently delivered. Like the honourable member for St. John's East, I felt too that the Minister was not delivering it in what you would call an enthusiastic manner. That might have appeared from the fact that he read it, but it was certainly interesting and clear. But the Government has already embarked on that scheme. We are asked to give second reading to a project which is already approved since October. Mr. Pickersgill is well satisfied with the fishery plan. Speaking of the Federal Government's participation in Newfoundland's Fishery Development projects, the Secretary of State said—the major undertaking at this time would be the scheme with experimental drying at LaScie and the construction of an experimental salt fish plant in the Valleyfield-Badger's Quay area as well as a smaller centralization and partial mechanization of fisheries at Seldom-Come-By. LaScie is situated in the riding of J. W. Ashbourne, and he stated that the Valleyfield-Badger's Quay was in his own constituency, the Provincial riding of Premier Smallwood. Is it accidental that these places have been selected because they are in the constituency of the Secretary of State and of the Premier? If these schemes are successful, the Minister went on, and there are good hopes—that they will be, the biggest single step will have been taken to modernize the salt cod fishery. He went on then to talk about the collaboration of the different departments of the Federal Government. He finally ended up the article with: (I am not sure if he finished it up, but I believe it was from him the information came.) The City of St. John's will benefit directly by this increased activity. The construction of a new fishermen's wharf supplied in the Federal Share of the development will undoubtedly supply the provincial capital with more and better fish and better prices. Now the Honourable Minister yesterday made no reference to that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: To what?

MR. BROWNE: To the wharf.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The reason for that is that efforts to procure the foreshore has not been successful. Should these efforts prove successful, and when they prove successful this provision will be met. That is part of the initial plan.

MR. BROWNE: Yes. But, Mr. Speaker, that should not have prevented the Minister from making a reference to the matter which is of so much importance to the fishermen operating out of St. John's, and of so much importance to the people who purchase their fish, and have been purchasing it from Steer's Cove. The fishermen in St. John's, it seems to me, did not get very much recognition from this Government when they were being rooted out from a place, which, for as long as I know, was used for selling fish.

Now, my honourable gentleman here on my left, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, asked the question, I believe, as to what extent the fishermen's organization has been consulted in regard to this programme. I know that many of the members of the Fishermen's Federation had their suggestions made to the committee, were they consulted? I wonder if they are convinced that the creation of an authority of this kind from the top is the best way to solve the problem of the fisheries? We have often been told that the way to solve a problem is to start at the bottom and build up. This one seems to start at the top and build down. The Premier picked these men first and then said; Now I want you to try and solve this fishery problem, put into effect the recommendations of the committee that has been set up for two years—and they are going to start from there. It seems to me that it is going to be a top-heavy affair, and where is it going to lead? How far does the Government intend to go? Are they now making a leap into the dark? They had forty millions of dollars, at least forty millions in 1949, and they invested twenty millions into the new industries, and today the Premier is not in a position to say if they will prove successful. He spent a great deal of money in connection with exploration for minerals, and today he is not in a position to tell us if that money has produced any returns up to the present time, and he is ready to spend another million, as he told us, taking a gamble. Is he taking a gamble today to the extent of twenty-five million dollars? Is he justified in taking a gamble to that extent. I don't intend to refer to any previous debate, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to draw to the attention of the Minister, who is also Minister of Co-operatives as well as Minister of Fisheries, that the way in which the co-operative movement has worked, has been built on a much sounder basis than this. The people who are to benefit are the people who study their problems, and they solve their problems themselves, under trained guidance. They get together in groups like the Cooperative Housing Group that we were talking about yesterday. They get together and they talk about their problems, and they find the solution themselves. Here things are going to be done for them. I was expecting to see some reference to the Co-operative Movement in the Bill. I was certainly expecting to hear some reference to the Co-operative Movement from the Honourable Minister when he was speaking, but I don’t believe he mentioned it or made any reference to it while he was speaking yesterday.

Has the Government sat down and planned this thing, and seen where it is going to go? Have they consulted with the people that they propose to benefit by the adoption of this plan, and the setting up of this Authority? Is it just going to be superimposed upon them? There is the Northeast Coast, La Scie, Seldom-Come-By, Joe Batt’s Arm, give them these—Is that the way they are going to solve the problem? Now, I have tried as I went around my district where there are many fishermen, Placentia, Ferryland—in Placentia Bay I was pretty horrified to find what problems they have to face. I have asked, and they have told me many times: Our problem is not how to catch fish but how to market it, how to get a price for it. What attention has been given that problem during the past five years? Or what attention is going to be given it now? The minister told us yesterday: if you are talking about marketing fish, see Mr. Sinclair or Mr. Howe. Don’t see the Premier. Don’t see me, we only have to do with fish from the time it is taken out of the water until it is ready for marketing, after that we have nothing to do with it. This is the problem the fishermen have to face. He told the fishermen a time ago to take every cod’s tail they could out of the water. Does he think the fishermen believed him after their experience in the past five years? Have they faith in his present decision? Is it possible to sell every cod’s tail this year, and if not sold will the Federal Government come to the rescue? For two years they have had to come to the rescue with the Fishery Support Board.

Where is the precedent for this wild, all embracing scheme? Can you find it in Canada? Can you find it in England?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Can you find the problem?

MR. BROWNE: Yes, and they have the same problems with every industry in every country. They must have it in Iceland and they must have it in Norway.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, forty or fifty years ago, and solved it as we now propose to do.

MR. BROWNE: They could not solve it very well last year when they could not sell their fish in England and had to send it to the United States and block the fresh fish market.

MR. SMALLWOOD: A serious incident, but only an incident.

MR. BROWNE: It is then Iceland that provides the ideal. My honourable friend tries to imitate them. He should give more attention to their agricultural industry because agriculture has been almost the chief industry. The sheep industry in Iceland is a very substantial part of their economy.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does not the honourable gentleman know we sent a man over there? Mr. Pat Murray, the Deputy Minister, spent weeks over there studying their economy.

MR. BROWNE: No. I did not know you sent a man over there. I knew you sent a man to Norway and Denmark.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, the same man. No, that was a different man.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, and that gentleman got into difficulties shortly after his return.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We know of no difficulty in which he got.

MR. BROWNE: Perhaps the minister of Fisheries has a better memory.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I know of no difficulty whatsoever, none.

MR. BROWNE: Ask him some time. Now, Sir, I have one question, one timely matter to talk about, i.e., where does private industry fit in in this programme? Has any estimate of the cost been prepared of how much this is going to cost? It should be possible to say how much the cost is to be to put the fresh frozen fish plant and salt cod fish plant and mechanical driers and machinery for manufacturing fertilizers, etc. We have not been given these figures. I presume the minister will be in a position to give them when we get into committee.

It seems to me, Sir, that the Government has allowed too much time to go by in this matter. It came in here in 1949, and they knew the importance of the fishing industry, and they certainly knew of the importance of the fishermen. They were put here mostly by fishermen, and they forgot about them. They have helped, I know they have said, to the tune of seven million dollars, the fishing industry. But what help did they give directly to the fishermen? My honourable friend, the Minister of Finance, is not here this afternoon. But I know the fishermen in Island Cove. A man down there I met two or three years ago, and he was crippled, and the next year I met him again getting along with crutches. He brought me into his stage and showed me where he had an electric pump to get fresh water to wash his fish and a very clean stage, and had electricity in his stage. Then he showed me his fish which seemed to me to be excellent fish. I think they make excellent fish up in that section of Placentia Bay. Then he showed me his farm and he produced figures the honourable the Premier will be interested in. He had three pigs there for which he stated he expected to get nine hundred dollars at Christmas, and it seemed to me—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Get how much?

MR. BROWNE: Nine hundred dollars.

MR. SMALLWOOD: For three pigs?

MR. BROWNE: Yes, selling it at 50c. a lb.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And make three hundred dollars each? A good price. That is three hundred dollars each, fifty cents, six hundred pounds of pork dressed. It is nice doing.

MR. BROWNE: Well, I am afraid you got me in a miscalculation there, I confess.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I was a pig raiser myself. I would say it is a miscalculation by the honourable gentleman.
MR. BROWNE: Now the gentleman who had produced the pig had produced pork each year to help his fishing industry and was making a very good living. Now then suddenly the Government has taken up this industry and they are going into these projects on the Northeast Coast, and the problem which is agitating the fishermen in other sections of the country, the question of marketing, is going to be left to the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Federal Minister of Fisheries, in Ottawa. Well, Sir, I feel that the Government has made certain mistakes in connection with this Authority. I think they have tackled it from the wrong angle. I think they have overlooked a very important factor in connection with improving the prosperity of the fishermen, and I am surprised that they should do it. I mentioned it before, but I must mention it now, and it is the last thing I shall have to say in connection with this debate: Where is it going to place the co-operatives? Now the honourable minister and I have been associated with the co-operative movement for a good many years, sometimes together. He has had more active time more recently with it than I have had, but he knows that the co-operative movement in this country has not progressed as it did in other places because of political interference.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Because of what?

MR. BROWNE: Because of political interference, and I don’t mean political now in a bad sense altogether, but I will say it has not been wise politics, there has not been the same continuity. The report of the committee has recommended that the co-operative movement should take an important part in the development of the fisheries and should be placed under the Memorial University College. I don’t know whether that has been done up to the present time. (I feel that is true; it should be placed under the Memorial University) and that greater attention should be given it in the working out of this solution with the Government. In the solution of this problem greater attention must be given to the Co-operative Movement, and it must take a much more important part than we have been led to think that it is going to have under the scheme as it has been outlined yesterday.

Finally, Sir, we are all certainly anxious to see the fishery improve, and we hope that when we get into committee the minister will be in a position to give us information and more statistics which will perhaps alleviate some of the difficulties we have had in following and accepting the arguments which he has advanced.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion carried.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move all further orders of the day do stand deferred.

Carried.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Wednesday, at 3:00 of the clock.

Carried.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1954.

The House met at 3:00 of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

None.
Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Giving Notice of Motions and Questions

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Attorney General or other appropriate Officer to lay on the table of the House the following information:

A copy of the Report made by Mr. C. E. Hunt, Q.C., following an inquiry into conditions at the Mental Hospital and the dismissal or suspension of some 14 employees.

To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the table of the House the following information:

A certified copy of Government Payment Voucher 15/363 of 50/51 Account, together with a certified copy of all documents which form part of same, and having to do with the voucher as it relates to the Birch Plant, the Newfoundland Hardwoods Ltd., Chester Dawe, Chester Dawe Ltd., and the Government of Newfoundland.

To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Explain the reason for paying over to the Canadian Machinery Industries Ltd. an amount of $25,000 in excess of the 2½ million dollars called for under the terms of the Canadian Machinery Industries Ltd. Act?

2. Give name of person who valued the machinery on entry into this country for the said plant. Table a copy of all certificates of evaluation issued in each case.

3. Is the Minister in a position to state the value of all machinery in said plant as to invoice price? And if so will the Minister advise the House as to said value.

To ask the Honourable the Attorney General to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to take legal action against the Canadian National Railways for a return to the taxpayers of Newfoundland of all excess rates paid by the people of Newfoundland to the railway from April 1, 1949, up to the time a decision was given by the Canadian Supreme Court in favour of Newfoundland?

2. What was the total cost to the Newfoundland Treasury for the handling of Newfoundland's case in the dispute over these freight rates?

3. Give details of such costs to date and inform the House if any other legal retaining fees have been given to any solicitor or firm of solicitors to handle any future proceedings which the Newfoundland Government may take in this matter.

4. List the persons to whom legal fees have been paid over this freight rate issue and the amount in each instance.

MR. HOLLETT: I might explain to the Minister that when the honourable member for St. John's West and myself were at the Department of Finance there was one document attached to the vouchers a copy of which I at the time asked the clerk to request from the Deputy Minister. He has since written me that he will not be able to give me a copy of that without my having asked a question here in the House, so I do so now.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House the following information:

How many (a) automobiles, (b) trucks, (c) other motor vehicles are registered for each Electoral District of Newfoundland for the past fiscal year? How much has been received by way of license fees for motor vehicles and drivers and dealers' license fees for each Electoral District during the same period?

Answers to Questions

Question No. 72—being prepared.

Question No. 71—being prepared.

HON. C. H. BALLAM (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have the answer to Question No. 67 asked by the honourable member for St. John's East. I will go over some of these things briefly.

I may say the work of this Labour Relations Board is shown in a report I tabled here some time ago. You will note also, Mr. Speaker, there is an amount of $10,948 shown. A little over fifty per cent of this was used in conciliation of disputes, and there were thirty-eight labour disputes reported and settled, with the exception of one strike. What I want to point out is that any one of these disputes, if they had not been conciliated and had resulted in a strike, could have resulted in the loss of thousands, yes, hundreds of thousands of dollars to the working men, and probably to the country as well. So that, in my opinion, I am very glad the question was asked by my honourable friend, so that I could point out just the work that is being done by the men of the conciliation board, and how little is being spent by this Government to get what I would call a good job well done. I table these answers:
The following information is supplied by the Honourable Minister of Labour in reply to Question No. 67 asked by the Honourable Member for St. John's East (F. Fogwill) on the Order Paper of 28 April, 1954.

Question: 1. To table a statement showing the total amount expended by the Department of Labour for travelling expenses for the fiscal year 1953-54, to whom were the amounts paid and what services were rendered in connection with such travelling?

Answer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Office</th>
<th>Amount of Expenditure</th>
<th>Cumulative Total</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1. General Office</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conciliation Officers travelling to sites of disputes</td>
<td>$400.66</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Deputy Minister travelling to meetings</td>
<td>667.34</td>
<td>1,068.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>2. Boiler Inspection Branch</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inspectors travelling to inspect boilers, etc.</td>
<td>4,364.22</td>
<td>4,364.22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>3. Apprenticeship Branch</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Director</td>
<td>711.34</td>
<td>1,091.85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apprentices</td>
<td>880.51</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4. Conciliation Boards</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Members travelling to Board meetings</td>
<td>517.47</td>
<td>517.47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5. Labour Relations Board</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Members travelling to Board meetings</td>
<td>1,700.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Investigating Officer travelling to investigate applications for certification</td>
<td>642.09</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Witnesses summoned before the Board</td>
<td>128.59</td>
<td>2,470.68</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6. Minimum Wage Board</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Members travelling to Board meetings</td>
<td>369.75</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Secretary travelling</td>
<td>124.31</td>
<td>494.06</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7. Apprenticeship Board</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Members travelling to Board meetings</td>
<td>942.26</td>
<td>942.26</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total Expenditure $10,948.54

Question: 2. Table a Statement showing the following information for the fiscal year 1953-54.

A. How many labour disputes were reported to the Department during this period?

B. How many labour disputes were settled with the assistance of a conciliation officer?

C. How many conciliation boards were set up, what were the results in each case, give the location and cost of each board.

Answer:

A. There were thirty-eight labour disputes reported to the Department of Labour during the period 1 April, 1953 to 31 March, 1954.
B. Twelve labour disputes were settled with the assistance of conciliation officers during that period.

C. Eleven conciliation boards were appointed during the period. The results of the boards are as follows:

1. In four cases the parties accepted the board’s recommendations and settlement was effected.

2. In two cases settlement was effected through conciliation.

3. In five cases the parties did not both accept the board’s recommendations. One of these cases resulted in a strike, two were settled later as a result of further negotiations and the remaining two cases are still outstanding.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location of Board</th>
<th>Cost</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Corner Brook</td>
<td>$320.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corner Brook</td>
<td>567.78</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corner Brook</td>
<td>450.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. Lawrence</td>
<td>796.22</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John’s</td>
<td>400.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John’s</td>
<td>520.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John’s</td>
<td>887.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John’s</td>
<td>915.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>St. John’s</td>
<td>700.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Port Union</td>
<td>898.47</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bell Island</td>
<td>750.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Question: 3. Have any applications for conciliation boards been refused, as from 1 April, 1958, to date, if so, how many and for what reason.

Answer: There were 15 applications for the appointment of conciliation boards where no board was appointed.

In 4 cases the applicant was informed that the circumstances of the case did not warrant the appointment of a board. In two of these cases the conciliation officer continued negotiations after the parties were notified of the refusal to appoint a board and a settlement was effected.

In 2 cases the disputes were settled with the assistance of a conciliation officer.

In 4 cases the parties reached agreement after a conciliation officer had been unsuccessful in effecting settlement of the dispute and filed his report.

In 2 cases the disputes were settled without assistance from the Department.

In 2 cases, when further details of the dispute were requested, the application for a board was dropped and the parties concluded an agreement without assistance.

In one case the parties were requested to resume negotiations and a settlement followed.

Orders of the Day

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, before you go on with the Orders of the Day, I would like to ask the Attorney General when we might expect the District Courts to work. It is of very great interest to lawyers and citizens, and they would like to know why the District Court is not operating at the present time.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, in reply to that I may say, the two newly appointed judges are at present in Ontario looking into the procedure up there. I expect as soon as they return the rules will be formulated, and they would start work.

MR. BROWNE: I would like to remind the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources that I asked for a report the other day, and he promised to table the report this week.
HON. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was checking on that report this morning and I find it is now being put in order for presentation to the House. I hope to have it tomorrow, and if not tomorrow then on Friday.

Third Reading:

"An Act to Amend the Evidence Act." On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

"An Act Relating to the Protection of Plants, the Prevention of the Spread of Insects, Pests and Diseases Destructive to Vegetation." On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

"An Act to Amend the St. John's Municipal (Loan) Act." On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Second Reading of Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority."

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would never have advocated Confederation for Newfoundland if I had not been quite convinced that Confederation would make it possible to make the fishing industry profitable and prosperous for our Newfoundland fishermen. In my view Confederation will make it possible to make the fishing industry profitable and prosperous for our Newfoundland fishermen. In my view Confederation will be an utter failure for Newfoundland if, as a result of Confederation, the fishermen are not made profitable and prosperous for our fishermen. I don't care what other benefits Confederation might have brought they will all be a hollow mockery without a prosperous fishery and prosperous fishermen.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And I conceive it to be the one big job left for me in this life to lead the Government that will make our fisheries and fishermen prosperous. This is the biggest job this Government has tackled, and as head of this Government it is my biggest job. Far more difficult than getting Confederation, far more difficult than facing and conquering Water Street, and Water Street's political influence, far more difficult than anything with which I had to contend in the National Convention or the National Referendum; indeed the opposition I met in those historical battles was trifling, picayune, easily overcome compared with the obstacles in this battle. Because here we face a problem which has conquered every government before us, and which no government has ever conquered in this Island. This is a problem which has licked every government which ever had anything to do with it, and it may lick this Government. We may not be big enough to handle it. We may not be brainy enough, we may not be courageous enough. Time will tell. But if we go down we will go down fighting for the fishermen of Newfoundland and their wives and children. Because the problem of the fisheries is the problem of economic rehabilitation of one-third of our entire population, nothing less than that. It is the rehabilitation of two-thirds of our fishermen, or one-third of our entire population.

Now before such a problem as that, if we had enough imagination, we would shudder from it, we would shrink from it, because great men of the past have bitten the dust, and great men, some of whose pictures are on these walls, have battled with it; and I have been present in this Chamber when some of them battled, and I heard and saw their battle here on this floor. And they were all licked. They all lost. The fishery problem licked them all. Incidentally, if this Government licks this problem it will be no thanks to the Opposition. For of all the piffling and trifling and nonsensical trashy arguments I have ever heard in this Chamber on a serious subject what I heard yesterday from two at least of the three honourable gentlemen opposite, the first two who spoke to the subject, were the worst. The third gentleman at least contributed a few points, as he nearly always does.

Now, our Government has been in power for about five years. In that time we have been busy with plans for the development of Newfoundland, and we have made great strides.

In the first eighteen months we had very little time for anything except to grapple with deals and projects and programmes concerned with the economic welfare of Newfoundland. During that time I went to Ottawa and we had numerous talks on fisheries. We had some long talks with Mr. Bradley and with many other officials of the Department of Fisheries. At that time we had no fisheries policy nor did the Canadian Government have a policy for the Fisheries of Newfoundland. The policy now being implemented has developed only after long and careful study of the Fishery Development Committee. The member for St. John's West has hinted that I inspired the report of the Fishery Development Committee. I can assure him I did not. I admit I kept in close touch and on literally scores of occasions members sat in my house until three and four o'clock in the morning—very long sessions—during which we discussed proposals for the fisheries, trying to get the proper diagnosis and the proper cure. If there is one thing I admit I agreed with, it was with the idea of the cooperative movement, completely. In section 8 (l) (c) of the Memorial University Act, 1949, the application of science to the study of fisheries is stated to be one of the special functions of the University. Space in the University building is limited but this does not present any real difficulty. The Committee considers that the University should provide degree courses in which students can major in biology, chemistry and physics, and that post-graduate work should be undertaken in subjects relating to the fisheries and particularly biology and bio-chemistry. The Committee considers also that courses in commerce and co-operation should be introduced into the University curriculum and that a course should be specially devised to qualify students for executive and managerial positions in processing plants and in private firms and cooperative societies engaged in the different branches of the industry. That idea to send men to the University where they will learn more about fisheries, cooperatives and other matters pertaining to the fisheries is feasible. Men with University training can probably do a better job. At any rate they have found that they do derive certain benefits from it.

Now, the first great step taken in fisheries development was the appointment of a Committee. On occasions fifteen or twenty men have sat in my office until two or three o'clock in the morning discussing various phases of the fisheries. I have had men from Wesleyville, Greenspond, Brookfield, Valleyfield, Flat Islands, St. Brendans and many other places—and some Labrador fishermen—and they sat in my office and we talked until three o’clock in the morning discussing fisheries and fishery problems.

If you look at the history of the fisheries you will find every government adopted expedients of one kind or another. They guaranteed supplies; guaranteed insurance; guaranteed prices for salt and such like. When Water Street went on strike and said "No, we are not supplying," it brought governments to their knees. All the merchants, the Tories of Water Street had to do was to announce that they were not supplying for the fishery and the governments bowed to them; they got down and crawled when Water Street cracked the whip. This Government is not having anything of that kind. We are not interested in granting subsidies, so count me out. We are interested only in fundamental reform and not in transfusions to help a dying industry.

Our market for the fisheries is unique. We have a unique foreign market. It is hard to understand. You need to have done a tremendous amount of travel; you have to know about various conditions before you can begin to understand it. It is not self-contained; it is highly exclusive; you have to know a lot about it otherwise it might as well be written in sanskrit.

As we know, Newfoundland’s resources consist of soil, forests, waterpower and fish. I, personally, have written perhaps more about fisheries than any other living man in the Province. I wrote many, many pages about the marketing of fish and other fishery matters. From 1920 on, I wrote millions of words about the fisheries. I went hungry doing it. I always felt that something should be done for the fisheries of Newfoundland. As a result, virtually all the fishermen voted for me. All the others, they voted for the party. Each government should make a supreme attempt to make the fishermen prosperous. This is the Government that ought to do it. We have everything else tucked away. We have had land and agricultural surveys, we have had our timber surveyed; we have the possibility of minerals, and more than a possibility—and there is a possibility of oil. We have horsepower. We ourselves, have negotiated the greatest search for minerals. This year we will spend three million dollars searching for minerals. The year before and for the past three years we have been increasing the amount spent in search of minerals. If this Government has nothing else, we have this much to our credit, we have spent more in search for minerals and brought about more in a tremendous search for minerals than have any two governments combined. We are not Gods and we may have to spend many millions before we find the minerals, but if they are there, we will find them. No government has done more.

As far as waterpower is concerned, we have done a tremendous job that has cost thousands of dollars. We encouraged the Power Corporation of Canada to bring in fresh capital to the country and we hope this will bring about a hydrographical development which will hereafter bear fruit in Newfoundland.

We have had timber surveys made. Unfortunately these have not resulted as yet in another paper mill. As a matter of fact, if you look at the history of North America, in the last twenty years, you won’t need the fingers of one hand to count the number. of new paper mills built in the Western World in the last twenty years. They have extended, they have enlarged as has the A.N.D. Company and Bowaters and as have the paper mills all across Canada and in the United States, but there has been virtually no new ones. But at least we are ready: We know where the water power is, how much is there, how much per horsepower it would take to develop it. We have the blue print, we have the plans. Waterpower is needed for a paper mill. We have the timber. We know where we have the timber. We have had the surveys and have the information on it. Now the Royal Commission will put the finishing touches on that.

We have the Royal Commission on Agriculture. Personally, as a bit of a farmer and one who has had some experience and some considerable interest, and still has very considerable interest in farming, that is where I am going to end my days. I don't make any bones about that, on a farm. There is one thing about fishing, no matter how much you love it you don't resolve to spend your declining days in a fishing boat. You might resolve to do that on a farm but not in a fishing boat. I have no ambition to spend my declining days fishing, but I have a great ambition to end my days farming and I have great faith in farming of a type. I am afraid I am going to disappoint my honourable friend from St. John's West—How much it has been impressed upon us in this House the extent to which he has taken over the intellectual leadership of his party; not the nominal, political leadership but at least his study, research and work has made a fine contribution to this House, as I forecast it would—He will be disappointed to learn here again my ideas about the possibilities of agriculture, which are rather radically different from his own. Here again I think he pictures the Maypole, the happy little family out tilling the soil. But that happy little family out tilling the soil will be on dole, and always was on dole in Newfoundland. The dole might have been direct from the Government but mostly it was a dole they earned, and that is all they earned, most of them. I allow for exceptions of course. There were people who made big money in Newfoundland farming, but they are very much the exception.

Now when I speak of my faith in the possibilities of agriculture I don't mean peasant farming but something far from it. I don't have very much faith, I may be a bit brash to say this before the Royal Commission reports—But I have not too much faith in root-crop farming. I have great faith in animal husbandry. My honourable friend from St. John's East, if he does not mind my making an absolutely personal illustration, has a very clever, indeed I might say brilliant son whom I saw only once in my life, and that was during the National Convention when he appeared before the committee of the National Convention which was writing a report on agriculture. That young man, who had just returned from a sojourn in New England or New Hampshire or Vermont or somewhere up there on a farm, appeared before this committee and gave the committee his ideas. He was only twenty-one years of age but his ideas were amazingly mature and he possessed an arrived knowledge that was a pleasure to behold. Perhaps he made all the more impression on me, and I thought all the more of him because his ideas happened to be so similar to my own. We always think a man smart when he agrees with us and has the same ideas. But he had great faith in the possibilities of beef cattle in Newfoundland. I also have great faith in the possibility of beef cattle, and I have great faith in the possibility of sheep raising in Newfoundland, because the House beholds in me the biggest pig-man Newfoundland ever had, the biggest pig-man and hog-man. In fact my honourable friend the Minister of Education is also much more at home dealing with hogs and pigs than in the Department of Education, just as I would be much more at home cleaning out after pigs, as I have done many, many times than I am in dealing with certain types of humans. I prefer incomparably certain types of hogs to certain types of human beings. I have great faith in the possibility of poultry raising, in the possibility of turkey raising, and duck raising. I have faith generally in the possibility of a livestock industry in Newfoundland. I do not say there are no chances nor opportunities in the root-crops, but my faith in the possibility of root-crop farming is at the very minimum. So that what you are left with is fishing: Now we have come to that—To the fisheries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just what is it that has got to be done in the fisheries of Newfoundland? I will tell you my opinion of what has to be done.

The House may remember in an earlier debate to which I am not allowed, by the Rules of the House, to refer for what I said or what anyone said in an earlier debate in this session, is now a debate that has concluded. But let us put it this way: The House will recall on some occasion or other I pointed out that along the North East Coast of Newfoundland the number of settlements in the past hundred years or so had grown from some thirty odd to some five hundred—in a hundred years. Now I am going to suggest to the House here today that, just as surely as night follows day, just as surely as that, about three hundred of these five hundred places must inevitably disappear from the face of the earth. Three hundred of the five hundred places there are along the northeast coast must disappear, Mr. Speaker. Between, say 1814 and 1914, say that century, a man might live in a cliff in a cliff. He might live with his family in a hole in the wall, a dent in the rugged shore of Newfoundland with no harbour, no soil, no land, no timber, nothing, just a bald rock. He might live there in that century, those hundred years, and wear the one suit of clothes throughout his entire life, and all the rest of the time wear a canvas jumper, and moleskins, before that. His wife might, and did undoubtedly, dress in the roughest conceivable kind of clothes, his children go barefooted for a large part of the year and dressed in the roughest conceivable kind of clothing. They might eat white bread, a few herring, molasses and an occasional bit of corned beef, such fresh birds as he could shoot. This might, and in fact did, go along for a whole century with such fishermen and families living the most primitive kind of existence. They did do that. But, Mr. Speaker, I am going to suggest this to you now and to this House—Whereas there was every likelihood that up to the outbreak of the first World War a race of men, strong, religious, devout, simple, strong-bodied, living alone for a whole century like that, one generation after the other never seeing anything and never knowing anything, might do that. But the First World War killed for all time any possibility that they would do that willingly thereafter. That kind of life died the day on October 3 or whatever it was in 1914 when that war broke out. That was the end of a whole era in our history in Newfoundland. At that time there was a full stop, a period came to an end.

Now, since then we have had another World War and in between a depression. We had elections, the spread of newspaper circulation to some small extent, and the revolutionary introduction of radios, we had a rising up of movies. Do you know that in Newfoundland today there are five hundred different settlements where movies are shown regularly—five hundred—That is incredible, past belief. Yet here in this little country of Newfoundland that has happened in the last four or five years.

I suggest to the House that the family that was willing for that century to wear the roughest kind of clothing, live in the roughest kind of homes, eat the roughest kind of food, will no longer do so—that is finished. They are not going to do it. Now what does that mean? That must mean something. There must be a moral to be drawn from that. That is not just a fact which has no particular meaning. Rather is that fact full of meaning, brimful and vibrant with meaning. The meaning is this: They are not even going to try to live that kind of life. If they can't get jobs from Bowater's and the A.N.D. Company and from Buchans and Bell Island or at Gander or Goose Airports or at Stephenville or Argentia or Seven Islands or St. Lawrence or with the C.N.R. or with some factory, if they can't get some kind of a job, a wage paying job, they are bound inevitably for Nova Scotia which, backward as she is, compared with Ontario, is so far ahead of Newfoundland as Ontario is ahead of her. They are bound for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and they are bound for these parts of Canada which are so very much ahead of Newfoundland from the standpoint of material living, the material standard of living. They are not ahead of Newfoundland in character. We all know that. We don't need to consider ourselves swell-headed to hold firmly that our people intellectually, mentally, morally are the equal of anything anywhere in Canada. But I am talking about material living. I say that it cannot be done. Wall Street, the Bank of England, no power under God can make it feasible, make it economic for the people in these three hundred of the five hundred settlements to live decently, have a good standard of living, good homes, to have good food, good clothing out of the fishery. It cannot be done. It is physically impossible, humanly impossible, it never was so. it never did exist. It is true that in the midst of the two greatest blood-baths humans have ever known, the two world wars, prices of high protein foods went sky high, including salt codfish, and during these three, four, five years altogether during the two world wars prices went so sky high that in these places, these terrible little places, these people did earn enough to have lots of food, clothing and to live on a material plane such as they never lived in all the history of Newfoundland before that. That is so. But I don't think we can base any policy on the continuation of war, continual blood-letting. No one can build on that. The only way you are going to have a decent standard of living in these three hundred little nooks and cranies along our northeast coast, apart from their going out each summer to get jobs and leave their families home and they themselves go into the bush or go out on construction jobs or go out of the Province and come back in the Fall, apart from that the only way to live is to leave these three hundred settlements. Now there is the rub, the heart of the whole thing—Where are they going? They are going somewhere. You can mark that down. That is one thing we can be sure about, if nothing else—they are going to leave these three hundred places. They will become depopulated. Unfortunately if it is left to them they won't become entirely depopulated, and that will add to the tragedy. If everyone in these little settlements moved out there would be no settlements left, but if 80% or 90% move out and 10% or 20% are left that is a worse tragedy than ever. That is likely to happen unless something is created to attract, not compel but attract, the whole population of these places to move out. Therefore whether we like it or not that the Government must do if it does not want to lose its people to Ontario and the other provinces of Canada—Certainly I don't think any of us supported Confederation for that purpose—to lose our population—and I think the Opposition, all of whom are anti-Confederates, will be as one with us in that. They have no interest in building up Ontario any more than we have.

The problem therefore is this: How to find a means of attracting the people who live in these three hundred of the five hundred places to live somewhere else within Newfoundland. That is the problem. The problem is how to do that. Now I have heard the suggestion, in fact I once read a brief prepared by a certain gentleman who was once a member of this House, once a member of the Government, a very prominent gentleman who wrote this report to the Commission of Government, suggesting that the Commission of Government should adopt a scheme of moving all the families of the islands of Bonavista into the Mainland of Bonavista Bay. He showed me the report. I read it and I said: "Are you mad? What have you accomplished after you have spent a couple of million dollars to move these families off the islands of Bonavista Bay into the mainland settlements of the same bay except to have spent the money? What chance have they got to live in there?" "Well," he said, "there is water; they can get fresh water to drink and they can't always get that on the islands." That is true. And they could get wood to burn and they could not get that on the islands. They got gardens and land where they could cultivate gardens which they could not do on the islands. True. But how were they to live? They could not live on firewood—lots of fresh water to drink and just a little garden to grow a few vegetables. You got to have a means of living. If they were taken from these islands where they had a means of living, such as it was, and put in the mainland settlements in the same bay without any means of living, what have you done? You have done a bad thing, a bad thing. No, there is no suggestion that the Government should pay the cost of moving families on a big scale from their homes in those small places to bigger places. There is no such suggestion. And there is no suggestion of forcing the people to move from these small places to bigger places. The suggestion is this: Along the northeast coast of Newfoundland probably some two hundred places—we can't say, it is difficult to say because the surveys are not completed, but they are still going on and will continue to go on—Thank God the surveys will continue. The surveys are not completed but when they are completed, the typographical surveys, the marine surveys with a team of men moving along and doing a whole section of coast—a man who can lay out a town, a man from the organization to size up the land and say how many gardens can be contained, a man who knows water power to see what water power can be developed in these places, a marine engineer to survey the water depth, the type of wharves and breakwaters necessary to make a good harbour and what it will cost, and a housing man. With a team of men like that, actual engineers, when they go along to the northeast coast, as they have now for two summers and again this summer, when all that is finished it will probably boil down to this, I don't know, I am only guessing: That there are along the northeast coast twelve places or fifteen or twenty, I really don't know how many, and nobody knows that yet, but there will be a limited number of places that are either ideal or almost ideal to be the homes, to be the centres of absolutely modern, absolutely streamlined, absolutely progressive and up-to-date techniques and methods of fishing.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me give you a picture, of the ordinary kind of fishing settlements I am talking about—In the first place it has a good harbour. Maybe at this moment it is not perfect. Perhaps what it needs is a breakwater which will make it a practically perfect harbour, but it is now a good harbour to begin with. It is commodious and the opening of the harbour is not against all the prevailing winds. It is sheltered with deep and good anchorage. It has a good foreshore, landwash, that is the land contiguous to the water is not humpy, rocky, uneven and rough but is relatively level for a townsite, to lay out streets according to modern ideas. If the land is a mile up the valley or two or three miles it does not matter. That is nothing now. In these days it is nothing to be two or three miles back from the salt water. It is a trifle and not important, and is just as good as being within a quarter of a mile. Ideally it would have a river flowing into the harbour with a head to develop a thousand, twelve hundred or two thousand horsepower at not too great a cost. In other words physically speaking it would be almost ideal. Now there are not too many of them. But each of them is big enough to be a complete town. Not Halifax, not Grimsby, not one of these lovely Danish or Swiss or Norwegian fishing towns, not that. This is not America, you can't get that. It takes centuries to build that. There is a certain spirit behind these Danish towns I have seen and these Swedish towns, but in such a place as that you have a thoroughly modern town. Why not here?

MR. BROWNE: MacLean?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not exactly. The big difference is that it is on their own initiative, their own effort. Against that the land up there belonged to the company, the machinery, factories, hotel, the movie, church, everything was given by the MacLean Brothers. No, I don't mean that sort of thing. I mean something far better. Now if you had a dozen such towns as that on the northeast coast with a population, each of them, say of ten thousand people, a very little town it is true, but modern, newly built, progressive, very up-to-date. Now how do the people live there? How do they make their living? They have to make their living, but how do they do that? Primarily from the fishery, primarily but not entirely. You have to have so many shopkeepers, so many clerks, whether in private enterprise or co-operatives is up to the people themselves, but at least there must be clerks and people working in different trades. There will be civil servants working there, teachers, and the different denominations will have their respective schools there. There will be the doctors and dentists and the movies and other entertainments, probably a tavern if the people like a glass of beer, but not if the people don't like a glass of beer. There will be all the little amenities of life, of a town, all of them. But overwhelmingly the great, basic resource for the town will be the fishery. Now what kind of fisheries? Where the man gets up before dawn and gropes his way down in the dark to the punt and tumbles aboard the punt and rows out to the boat or schooner and gets the engine going, the old Coaker, four or six horsepower, and gets out on the fishing grounds reaching them about dawn and starts jigging or catching or dragging the trawl. No. That kind of fishing cannot support that kind of town. That kind of fishing cannot give the people a living, a decent living. It never could and it never will, mark that down, it never will give these people a decent living, it is impossible. It never has done it anywhere. That kind of fishing was abandoned in Norway between the years 1900 and 1911. That kind of fishing was abandoned in Iceland around the same time. That kind of fishing is carried on today rather similarly in the Faroe Islands. That is the only place in the world, the Faroe Islands and possibly China, Ceylon and Colombo, possibly. Our fishery is today the most backward of all the fishing countries of all the whole group, ours in Newfoundland except for a few spots in Asia where they still go out in their funny boats, and they have a great long pole mounted on a pivot. They dip it down on one end with a big basket and haul it up again and may bring a few fish up. With the exception of that we have the most backward, the most crude, the most undeveloped and underdeveloped fishery in the world today. That is why we have poverty amongst our fishermen. That is the reason. These things go together. You cannot have one without the other, and if you have the one inevitably you have the other.

No. In those towns you have got to use every last modern idea in connection with the fishery, in connection with fish. Now my honourable friend spoke yesterday about a word of warning, that we should not depend too much upon the United States markets for our fresh frozen fish. There is a big element of truth in that. But obviously there has not been too much truth because, of course, unless the United States should experience a great depression and a prolonged depression lasting six, eight or ten years, unless that should happen, personally, I can't see—I am not the one to whom the world will look when the world is making up its mind whether to have a depression or not—But in my own personal view we will not have a depression, not with Russia around, not while the iron curtain is there. I don't think candidly we can afford a depression. I don't think the democratic world can ever dream of allowing a depression to take place. So that I don't look for a depression. But except in case of a depression I cannot see American fishermen continuing to fish. I cannot see it. There has been down through the years a rapid increase in the diminution, in the reduction, in the number of fishermen fishing out of the United States. I remember being down in Boston on the fish piers about three years ago. I spent a day down there with a couple of newsmen. There were at that time about eight draggers, and we were down on the pier looking at these draggers. I said: "How many have you actually got here now?" I forgot the exact figure he told me at this moment, but I think it was altogether some twenty odd draggers, using the Boston fish pier, which is one of the biggest in the world. That number had fallen from hundreds down to twenty odd draggers. No matter how modern you make fishing, no matter how modern the boat, how good the food or good the money, how quick the returns, no matter how pleasant you try to make fishing, Americans, with the kind of standards of living they have are increasingly disinclined to go at it. So that I see in the United States, with its hundred and seventy million people increasing as it is at the rate of several millions a year, a virtual new market every year, born every year, a quite considerable, quite sizeable market. If that were the only market in the world it would be a very considerable one, the one born every year in the United States. I see there, especially with modern methods—I don't know if my honourable friends there on the other side are familiar with the block frozen fish, the great new development. I don't know if they are aware that now it is almost like the old fashioned candystick, the kind we used to have here in St. John's years ago, the shape of a walking stick, like a barber's pole—What did you call them?

MR. HOLLETT: All-day suckers?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend knows I did not have all-day suckers in mind—it is not all-day suckers we are talking about now. Anyway that is how millions of pounds of our Newfoundland fresh codfish are being sold in the United States, for fish fingers. It is most interesting, a most fascinating process—remember up to now the great difficulty in our frozen fish industry was disposing of our cod. If you had rosefish and flounders and sole and all the other kinds of the more exotic types of fish to sell, you could get rid of so much of your cod. Now it is altogether different. You can take any kind now, trap fish, hand line, any kind, skin it and put it in a press and freeze it into a square block. Freeze it solid, hard. While it is frozen put it through your band saws, not just one saw but a whole bunch of them, and push your block against them, and it is sawed into strips. When you have done that and you get the long fingers, then these go through a new process. This new plant we have built, or financed, in Trepassey, this huge new plant which is the most modern on the face of the earth today, at this moment, is not open yet, it is not finished yet, but up there they have vast new machinery which goes along. I suppose, a hundred and fifty feet—a very modern, streamlined, electronically operated oven through which after this is breaded and mixed in the breaded batter—beaten eggs and crumbs and other ingredients—each individual finger is breaded, and finally comes out as breaded fish fingers, ready to eat, and frozen. They have been frozen, defrosted, mixed in batter, cooked and then become frozen again, and they come out of the other end, having gone in frozen they come out frozen.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask a question. When you are doing that you are manufacturing a new article altogether—will it be affected by tariffs?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Up to now the United States Congress has not imposed any extra or additional duties against that product. Even if it does it is a new product sweeping the United States. It is like "Oh Henry" when it first came out. Some members may remember when "Oh Henry" came out in the United States, a new chocolate bar—some members here can remember "Yes, We Have No Bananas Today" a popular song. There was never anything like it. Fish sticks are the new wonder now popular, sans music, but they are the rage sweeping across the United States. In the United States they have not got the fish. They are importing it from Newfoundland and up to now, nothing has been done in Newfoundland to develop such an industry. Now think of such an industry as this frozen fish fingers in Twillingate or Trinity Bay or Green Bay or Quirpon or White Bay or Carbonear or LaScie, especially where bait depots are. The beauty of it is this: When you block freeze this fish—I do not know how many members are familiar with such plants—they skin it, put it through a press and freeze it and pack it. When the package is open and it is put in the frying pan or bake pot or skillett, the pieces come apart. They do not adhere. In the block-frozen process, the beauty is you may have ten or thirty or forty pieces, they do not adhere. That is why they call them "block frozen" into sticks or fingers. They are ready for immediate consumption. That one thing is worth to the fishermen scores of millions of dollars—the fact that you can freeze cod fillets and they are not frozen together. With the block frozen idea, you no longer need frozen plants; by adding a quantity of equipment, you are in the block freezing business. It is a gift from God for the North East Coast. On the South Coast you have the most prolific grounds to serve these plants.

In the United States, in tens of thousands of places where they have curb services, people drive up in their cars and are able to get these fish sticks. But, at the peril of your life, they must be fresh. Obviously if there is a bad flavour or if they stink, people stop eating them. And where can you get better fish than in Newfoundland? Where can you get fresher fish?

Take a dragger leaving Jobs in St. John's or Monroes in Burin or Cy Moores in Fermeuse; they spend three days fishing; by the time that boat gets back to port the fish is four days old; by the time it gets to Boston it is relatively stale; but compared with some fish going in there, it is relatively fresh. No thanks to our government for that; thanks be to God—thanks be to science and that is God. The fishermen on the North East Coast of Newfoundland and in other parts of Newfoundland are to be relieved of the century-old slavery of fish flakes, because with this block frozen idea, this will be eliminated. This Government spent two million dollars to promote this industry of block frozen fish because we believe in it. We want it done—we want to get in on this market in the United States where there are one hundred and seventy million of a population, and we can do it.

There is a great field for investigation for further new ways to use and market our fish.

Three years ago the head of the Fisheries Research of Canada, together with three officials of the department came here to see me and tell me they were here to do some scientific research in regard to codfish. I used some very rough talk. I said, “The great Government of Canada is going to do some very scientific fisheries research. How many men have you? What is the size of your establishment?” He said, “We have three or four men.” I said, “Do not waste my time.” I said, “In Britain, when they were producing more milk than they could use, scientists got to work and began making telephone poles and door knobs.” When they were producing more milk than they could sell science got to work and began making telephone poles and door knobs and such things out of milk, and making all kinds of synthetics with milk as a basis. I say, if we don’t sell our fish, if we can’t sell our cod as cod, so that it looks like cod and tastes like cod and is cod, and there is no doubt about it, it is cod—if we can’t sell it that way, and at a price to give people a decent living, then let us start working, I say, and find some other way to put it up so that it won’t smell, taste or feel like cod. But sell it at a price to give our fishermen a decent living—get at it and do it. In Iceland, Mr. Speaker, and in Norway a great effort has been made and is being made to find a satisfactory formula for manufacturing codfish into albumen. The House will be aware of the fact that one of the great agencies in the baking trade of the world is albumen. That albumen comes from the whites of eggs. China has been a great source of it for many years, and since China went behind the Iron curtain she has ceased to be a great source of the whites of eggs for albumen for the baking industries of the world. So that in Norway and in Iceland a great effort has been going forward for the last four or five years in their scientific laboratories and research laboratories to find a way to turn the codfish into albumen. Now I have samples of it over in my office that were brought to me from Norway and from Iceland. Unfortunately that albumen, which is a pure white powder, like flour—they have not yet been able to get the flavour of the fish out of it. So that if you put it in bread or pastries or biscuits or any baking in fact everything would taste like fish. Obviously they are not going to sell a great quantity until they get that fishy flavour out of it. But let us assume they do that—and if they can make hydrogen bombs they should be able to take the fishy flavour out of fish powder. If they can take a man’s heart out and freeze it and then unfreeze it and put it back and the man goes back off to work—if they can do that and other things that are wonders in the world today, it may not be very long before they can take the fishy taste and smell out of fish powder made from codfish. Once they do then you have a vast new outlet for codfish.

In Britain it is a commonplace saying amongst farmers—there is a great relationship between pigs and potatoes. The price of each is watched
Now it may seem a mad world, and it is a mad world when we are unable to market a high protein food such as fish, which is one of the highest protein foods in the world—meat, fish and eggs—these are the three great protein foods which mankind must have. And in a world where half the population is undernourished, in such a world yet it might become a profitable and attractive manner in which to market that high protein food, not as a high protein food but as a telephone receiver. Yet, Mr. Speaker, anyone is familiar, anyone at all who is not an ignoramous, who is not an illiterate, who has read at all the magazines and modern newspapers, is well aware of the fact that one of the great new industries of mankind is the synthetics. Everybody knows that. Everybody knows that, and the endless search on the part of the industries and the scientists is on the increase for new outlets for synthetics and new sources of synthetics. Now think of this as a basis of an outlet for synthetics and a new form and new outlet in which to sell it, and it is entirely conceivable that fish will be sold in that form. Who would have said two years ago, since the last general election, who would have said just immediately following the last general election that codfish caught on the northeast coast would be put up as fish fingers and fish sticks and sold in the midst of the United States? Who would have said that two years ago? Nobody. So I say that there is a great field for research, for investigations by scientists. I say it is a reproach to Canada that that great nation is doing so little in fishery research. It is a shame and a disgrace to Canada, it is a scandal. Far better if Canada as Canada concentrated on these things than that she spend time and money, public money, on research into uranium and hydrogen and the rest of it. Far better for the world, for Newfoundland if the National Research Council, especially the Fishery Research Council of Canada would do more experimentation and fishery research than they are doing on fish, because, Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland fish is one-third of all the fish landed in Canada—one-third of all the fish landed in the whole Canadian nation is landed here in this Province. And fish means to us life or death. And at least Canada as Canada, now that Newfoundland has become a province, at least she might spend a million a year, a mere trifle, the merest trifle to a government that is spending three or four thousand million dollars, they might spend a million a year or a couple of millions on straight scientific fishery research. The Government of Canada, I hold, should scour Europe to get fishery technologists of Sweden, Denmark and England and Scotland—that Government should scour Europe for twenty or thirty of the great fishery scientists they have, and put them to work on straight fishery research and investigations.
Now, Mr. Speaker, I may have wandered a little afield, but what I am trying to do is to convey to the House something at least of our feelings, of our conception of what fishery development means. I have said that the crux of the problem is the northeast coast. Now that is not because I happen to be so small or restricted in my concept of Newfoundland as to think that because I happen to be elected personally in a constituency on the northeast coast therefore my interest is in the northeast coast. That is nonsense, pure nonsense. The greatest support I get is on the south-west coast.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I make a correction? I think the Fisheries Board spent a lot more than the honourable gentleman mentioned. I think it was about two million dollars.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I mean here in Newfoundland.

You talk about what they spend—we have a potential industry here that is worth, let me see, British Columbia two hundred thousand tons, call it ten dollars a ton, or five dollars a ton at two hundred thousand tons is what? One million dollars in the herring industry. Now we have more herring in Newfoundland than they have in British Columbia. I took an extremely low figure. It is probably worth fifty dollars a ton. We have more herring in our waters than they have in British Columbia waters—and what research has been done?

MR. BROWNE: The value of herring in British Columbia is one million six hundred thousand.

MR. SMALLWOOD: All right Newfoundland's is not half a million. But we have far more herring and they are better, far more and better herring than British Columbia. That is the report of several people who have come to Newfoundland, brought here from British Columbia, people who are thoroughly familiar with the British Columbia herring industry, and who have investigated here. How much money does the House suppose was spent in herring research in British Columbia? The Government of British Columbia and the Government of Canada, and the herring industry between them spent over twenty million dollars in research. Today in British Columbia they know herring so well, their movements, their migration, the location of herring, that they can tell you now where the year after next the herring will appear and when and what size they will be. Now they can fix the fishing dates of the year for the year after next for herring in British Columbia. And on that date they will say the date and the dates for which the fishing should extend, and on that date a great fleet of herring seiners will go out and meet the great schools of herring as they come in towards the coast. They may be a hundred and fifty miles off, but they will be there waiting to meet them, and each herring seiner with its supply ship catches them and loads them aboard and hurries off in to the fish meal plants or canneries. The year past, I noted in the papers when the date was up they extended the time by one day, and on that one day the seiners went out and caught, I think fifty thousand tons or barrels, anyway a fantastically large quantity of herring. Now we have more herring than they have, and our herring are better. We have records of our herring seiners steaming over thirty miles of herring, a solid mass of herring. How many thousand tons would be in such a mass thirty miles long? How many tons? I suppose there would be half a million tons.

MR. BROWNE: Where was this?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The southwest coast, Placentia Bay. My honourable friend has been away from the province for five years, and he has to catch up.

MR. BROWNE: Why did not the Icelandic boats catch some of them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: There were none that year.

HON. M. P. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): Did the Ship Cove man know anything about that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That year nobody caught any anywhere. There just were none. Nobody, Icelandic boats or anybody else. But if the Government of Canada would spend a couple of million dollars here in this province on herring research and tell us where to go to meet them, when they are coming in—today you never know there is a herring within a million miles until they are within a mile of the coast. That is the first notice you have of them.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, will the Honourable the Premier permit me? I believe it is in the Terms of Union, the Canadian Government will carry out such requests if asked by the Provincial Government.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't think there is such a term in the Terms of Union—I ought to know that.

MR. HOLLETT: Natural Resources.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They have a reference there to the natural resources but there is no such term as the honourable gentleman just cited.

MR. HOLLETT: In my opinion there should be. There is a term which says: “Should the Government of the Province of Newfoundland institute an economic survey of the Province of Newfoundland with a view to determining what resources may profitably be developed and what new industries may be established or existing industries expanded, the Government of Canada will make available the services of the technical employees and agencies to assist in the work.”

MR. SMALLWOOD: That has been done. And technically they can say quite truthfully that they have carried out that term. I say they have not. I say they have not carried it out within the meaning of my understanding of the spirit of that term. Technically they have indeed made available to us all kinds of technological services and have had men here in Newfoundland ever since Confederation with water gauges running all over the main rivers, very important work which must be done, but we would be a long time getting hydro-electrical development as a result, important though it is. They have also made available other men in agriculture, in geology, in surveys on topography, marine surveys. We have all kinds of surveys here and technically they have kept that term, but, not in my view, in the spirit, not at all in the spirit.

MR. HOLLETT: Will the Honourable Premier allow me? Do I understand from the Honourable the Premier that the Government has asked the Federal Government and they have refused to carry it out?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They have not refused to carry it out, in fact now over the past five years, as soon as we had Confederation they began. And I say technically they are within that term of union. I say actually they are not carrying it out in the spirit I intended when I personally negotiated that particular clause. I happened to be the father of that particular clause of the Terms of Union. As a matter of fact I don't mind saying that the one unpleasant incident that ever occurred between the Prime Minister of Canada and myself was with regard to that clause. My honourable friend who sits to the immediate left of the Leader of the Opposition, if he spoke to or reminded his brother of it, I am sure he would remember quite well the occasion. You say you are not on speaking terms with him?

MR. HIGGINS: Oh yes I am.

MR. SMALLWOOD: His brother would undoubtedly remember the occasion when I raised the matter. The Prime Minister flushed and got extremely angry, and I wondered what made him angry. I said nothing to make him angry at that point nor had I anything in mind. But I wondered why he was so angry. I dropped it at the moment and raised it again as though nothing had happened, and in the clause went. But actually in the spirit it has not been carried out the way I wanted. What I would like to see—while I am at it let me put it this way—Canada is a nation and Canada is a federation of ten provinces. She has eleven governments. Each province has its own government and then there is the eleventh government for Canada as Canada. Now the best thing that the Government of Canada could do for Canada is to do anything within its power, and within its constitutional jurisdiction, anything it can for the upbuilding of any particular province. Canada can become great as the individual provinces comprising Canada become great. All right. There is precious little need of the Government of Canada doing anything for the Province of Ontario or the Province of Quebec or the Province of Alberta or the Province of British Columbia, because these provinces have such known resources, such discovered resources, such blue-printed and mapped resources as to attract fantastic capital from all over the world, and get fantastic results. But now when you come to the Governments of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland, these four provinces down here on the Atlantic coast, which have not got such resources—we may have them—when I say such resources what I mean is known resources, mapped and blueprinted, ascertained resources. We have not got them. And the job is to do precisely that, to ascertain them, to survey them. I hold that, provided the Government of each province concerned raised no objections, and I can't imagine their raising any objections, surely this Government will raise none—I hold that if the Government of Canada did right it would do this—it would scour these four provinces with a fine tooth comb, scour the provinces, put on such an intensive survey for a measurement of the resources as the world has never seen. Now there always has to be a "biggest," always has to be a "best", and this survey should, I hold, be made by the Government of Canada and should be the biggest and best the world has ever seen.

MR. HOLLETT: They are not doing it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, they are not doing it. I hold that in the interest of Canada as a whole that should be done. Now my honourable friend must not get small about this.

MR. HOLLETT: Do you try to tell me I am small?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Look, this business of being part of Canada is now five years old. It is not perfect. I don't suppose anybody ever expected it would be.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't know.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Certainly I did not. The point is that it is now five years old. I think we have been now long enough a Province of Canada to be able to do a little self-analysis and a little criticizing of Canada without being suspected of disloyalty to Confederation. I hope nobody will suspect any disloyalty on my part toward the idea of Confederation, but I do say this: It would be real Canadian statesmanship, clearly, obviously. Anyone looking at Canada today, taking a quick look at it or a long look will see here this vast nation, more than half of the North American continent, the northern half, bigger than the United States, a vast nation. There are only two nations in the world which are bigger—Russia and China. Canada is the third largest in the world. This vast, sprawling nation extending over more than half of a whole continent is made up of ten provinces. Not only is she fantastically rich—Quebec is fantastically rich. Since the war ended Quebec province has had more than four thousand new industries. Ontario has had slightly more new factories, new industries, new economic enterprises. Now I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that can continue, and should there be another war—that process was vastly accelerated in the first world war, and immeasurably widened in the second. This process would be vastly accelerated by a third world war to the point where Canada's economy would be so lop-sided as to be quite hopeless. She might as well then lop off the other provinces, because after all Newfoundland cannot even be a good customer for Ontario manufactured goods unless she prospers. Even if it is only to make a prosperous market in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick for the products of Canada. The only way to make them good is to make our fisheries prosperous, make our industries prosperous, to give us more industries, to develop us more than we are developed. When we are developed and prosperous in this Province, this Province then becomes an even better market for Ontario, so that it would really be good citizenship. Another way would be this: I hold that the Government of Canada ought to scour these four provinces. Now we have done it ourselves in Newfoundland at a great expense and we are continuing to do it at a great expense, and it is our duty to do it, because under the Constitution of Canada property and civil rights are properly, and very properly, rightly, the responsibility of the province and the jurisdiction of the province—God forbid it should ever be otherwise. But, by arrangement and by agreement and mutual consent let the Government of Canada take twenty, thirty, forty, fifty million dollars—Mr. Speaker, that is not much money. The Government of Canada spends, I think it is, twenty-three million dollars or some such figure they are spending on the bridge between Halifax and Dartmouth. That is enough, spent on this one bridge, to conduct a survey of, say this province. They are spending enough on the new ferry from Port aux Basques to North Sydney—that is a good thing and I am not condemning it obviously, but they are spending on that one ferry enough to conduct surveys of this province which might well have the result of opening up five or six new industries. Now while we want the ferry we also want the mines, while we want family allowances, we want industries, while we want old age pensions we want a developed fishery, while we want prosperous railwaymen we also want employment for our other people. Surely it is in the interest of Canada as a whole and is the broadest kind of statesmanship for the Government of Canada to spend a great many millions of dollars on the greatest and most intensive survey, economic survey, not only of Newfoundland—Newfoundland is my particular care of course, as it is of every member of this House—but I hope I am not so small as to see Newfoundland and Newfoundland alone. I hope I am big enough to realize that in the long run the prosperity of Newfoundland depends upon the general overall prosperity of Canada, and then beyond that, the general overall prosperity of North America and of the world in general. I hope I shall never be just a "Little Newfoundlander" I hope I will be a "Big Newfoundlander."

Well, Mr. Speaker, I have been trying to give the House some concept of what we mean by fisheries development. One thing I think we will have to agree on—except my honourable friend from St. John's West. I don't think we will ever get his consent to this proposition. I don't think he will ever agree, he and Chesterton, Belloc—and I know the philosophy so well. Indeed my honourable friend introduced me to it himself when he lent me a book by a gentleman named Summerville, if I recollect correctly. I know his philosophy and respect it, and God knows, in some things I am with him, but I have to reject it in others—we must agree, I say, that salt cod, the old traditional industry of Newfoundland of salt cod is doomed, finished. It will stagger along with shots in the arm and blood transfusions, now a fishery advance, now a guarantee, now a subsidy, every year something or other to keep it alive in the hope that we are to have something bigger and better, just keep it alive in the meantime.

MR. HOLLETT: That is true of agriculture.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I was talking at the moment of the fishery. If you don't mind we will stick to fishing, and if my honourable friend insists we can come back to farming. It is a cold fact that our traditional salt cod fishery has no future to it, or a black future, unprepossessing and an unattractive future. Let me assure the newly elected member for St. John's West that regrettable as it may be it is nevertheless a fact. His concept is gone. Take even the southern shore, a shore which is more exclusively a fishing section of Newfoundland than I think any other section of the Island—without exception I think that the settlements of the southern shore are more wholly composed of fishermen than any other group of settlements in this province. Take Bonavista Bay for instance, there is a great fishery down there, always large, Green Bay and White Bay with great fishermen and they are also larger.
But for right down-to-earth fishermen the southern shore is it. Ferryland district is it. There are the real fishermen. Now I ask my honourable friend, the Minister, does he think honestly now, sincerely, does he think that it is rational to consider as a thing that is possible, probable and likely that the people of Ferryland District, in all these fishing harbours right up to St. Shotts will be content to carry on the fishery, they and their wives and their children, on the flakes, with small boats, the trap fishery, the trawls, the hand lines, the old fashioned way like they had a hundred and a hundred and fifty years ago? Do you think they will be content to do that for the next ten or twenty years as if nothing had ever happened, as if none of them had ever gone off to the air force, none of them joined the artillery or the navy, none of them ever worked on military bases in Newfoundland, none of them had gone down to Goose Airport or Stephenville, as if no two world wars had been fought, as if the world had stood still from 1914 on? Does any honourable member seriously think that kind of fishery can continue and give a satisfactory living to the people in Ferryland District?

MR. MURRAY: No, Sir.

MR. HOLLETT: No—and that is it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No one else said it. But I think my honourable and learned friend has it in his mind. My honourable friend is an energetic type of person. He did not win Ferryland District without being that type of person. My honourable and learned friend from St. John's West has another ideal in his mind, and it was beautifully painted for him by his leader in his speech here yesterday. It was most interesting—that was my honourable friend the leader, the nominal leader—the leader.

MR. HOLLETT: Not the intellectual?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, as between two Rhodes Scholars sitting side by side it might be a little difficult there to really make a choice as to who is the more literary of the two. My honourable friend described an ideal life about sixty years ago. He told us of his early existence, his boyhood, and I assume he was talking about half a century ago in Great Burin. He told us of the good people, kindly people, God-fearing people, hard-working people, where the man fished and his wife worked in the fish store and on the fish flakes as the children did, and they lived very well with no hunger, no poverty and certainly no starvation. There was one man got on relief. But he did not like it, and all the neighbours got together and decided to help him, and he did not go through with that disgrace. Now that was a lovely existence in a way. I don't deny its attractiveness, but it was fifty years ago, half a century ago. And now my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West yearns for that. There was only one thing missing in the Honourable Leader of the Opposition's description and that was the maypole. He could have had a few folks dancing and prancing around the maypole, each holding a ribbon and some folk dances! Oh yes, it is lovely, ideal. But there have been two world wars, a Communist revolution, and—

MR. BROWNE: May I interrupt? Remember when I started yesterday I reminded you of what the Honourable Thomas Lodge stated when he came here. What you are saying today is practically his thesis.
MR. SMALLWOOD: No it is not his thesis.

MR. SPEAKER: Perhaps if I had the pages turn on the lights the House might see I am here and address me occasionally.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition spoke yesterday he described this Bill introduced by the Government as nationalization of the fisheries. Then his first follower, who followed him, the honourable gentleman from St. John's East, the non-legal member, I would not say non-lawful, but the non-legal member.

MR. FOGWILL: I don't think I am unlawful.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No the non-legal member. He followed by calling it socialistic or socialization. Now we are getting along. First the Leader of the Opposition says it is nationalization of the fisheries and then the next speaker on that side it was socialization of the fisheries. Now the intellectual of the party comes on as the third speaker and he rebels—no, Sir, he has not spent four years in the House of Commons for nothing. He has not been a student all his life for nothing. He has not been a man of intense convictions all his life for nothing. He reads through this Bill and says, of all the trash I have ever heard my leader has just uttered, and he has been bettered a little by my colleague from St. John's East. My leader calls this Bill nationalization and my colleague call it socialization of the fisheries. I think that is damn nonsense, so that I will call it what it really is—industrialization of the fisheries. So that you get the three isms of the Opposition: Nationalism, Socialism and Industrialism. Now my honourable friend is right in this matter. I prefer his opinion to those of his friends. He is right. That is exactly what it is industrialization.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I happen to know Grand Falls town pretty well. There was a day there when I knew virtually every man in the place. And I happened to know Corner Brook town very well. I know many, many hundreds of men out there by their first names, in fact I know them in both towns. I can tell you this about Grand Falls and about Corner Brook: You have in those two towns two modern mills, my honourable friends know that they are extremely modern. The techniques of making paper are as well advanced in those two mills as anywhere in the world. So that you have in those two towns those two mills, magnificent examples of modern, streamlined, completely up-to-date industrial equipment. That is my first point.

My second point is this: Ninety-eight per cent of the men who operate them are fishermen, former fishermen. I know papermakers, I know boss machinists both in Corner Brook and Grand Falls, boss machine tenders, I know them personally. I believe my honourable friend, the Minister of Labour, knows them personally also. These men were fishermen, brought up to fishing, and today in these great factories they are making three dollars an hour, easily. Fishermen or former fishermen making $24 a shift, fishermen. It is true. I have talked with them in their homes, and I have detected in them a yearning and wistfulness in their voices when they say, "the happiest days I had were when I was in the fishing boat back in the home settlement." But after all is not that what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition said? Is not that what everybody says? We look back to our own boyhood, to those far off years, with yearning. Now my honourable friends will know what I mean when I say the honourable member is more intellectual than his leader—getting down to a low level I will talk pigs— if my honourable friend insists—I know something about pigs, both kinds.

MR. HOLLETT: I wish you had stuck to them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend would probably be the leader today if I had stuck to pigs, and had not come in from Gander to the National Convention. I don’t know that there would have been anybody to oppose my honourable friend in his advocacy of ruination for Newfoundland except me. Responsible Government. He might have been Premier of Newfoundland suggesting another Commission of Government to take us off the rocks—if I had been interested in pigs and stuck with pigs instead of coming in here. But I came in here, and I continued to deal with pigs, peculiarly enough, I never seem to get away from them. However, let us drop that side of it.

I hold there is nothing in God’s laws nor in man’s laws and there is nothing in logic that ordains that fishermen must be a poor, poverty stricken lot, nothing. I can’t find anything in the Bible, I can’t find anything in the teachings of any of the great religions, anything in our Statute Books, I can’t find anything anywhere that suggests that our fishermen must live worse, be poorer and their wives and children poorer than the men who work in the paper mills. I don’t find it. And I say if there is any chance of getting for our fishermen and their families the kind of life, the kind of living that the papermaker and the pulp and sulphite and paper mill workers and their families have in Corner Brook and Grand Falls, if there is any hope of doing that, it is not by following the system that we have had for the last four hundred and fifty years. It lies rather in a completely new direction, industrialism, industrialization of the fisheries. Not in socialization, not in nationalization of the fisheries either, but in centralization and industrialization, modern fishing towns. LaScie is to be the prototype. I hope to see LaScie become as modern a small town as any in North America, to be found anywhere. I hope to see it a beautiful little town with beautiful little homes, not big ones, but beautiful, with water and sewerage in them, central heating. Is that ungodly? Is there anything irreligious about that? That such fishermen should have central heating in their homes and hot and cold water, is that irreligious, is that communist? That they should have paved streets and sidewalks, that they should have beautiful schools, modern, new, shiny, efficient new schools; that they should have beautiful churches, and beautiful playgrounds, all based on an absolutely new fishing technique, is that wrong? We do not have to investigate these techniques; thank God for that. We just have to implement them. A dozen such towns then of say eight or ten thousand people, each of them with possibly two thousand fishermen, four thousand shore workers, and another thousand or so otherwise employed. I am only guessing. That is all it can be at the moment, but another thousand or so in auxiliary services that you get in any town, shopkeepers, clerks, civil servants, teachers, doctors and clergymen—and beer parlours, if they want beer parlours. Why not? Not because my honourable friend does not take a glass of beer and I don't, he and I should stop another man from taking a glass of beer if he wants to. Surely he agrees with me on that—can't he agree with me on that much?

MR. HIGGINS: And not a lawyer in the place?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now if you get a dozen such places as that, does that mean that you can reduce the fishing towns on the northeast coast to a mere dozen? No it does not, because you have another type of fishing settlement, far from ideal, but it is not one of the three hundred places that will have to disappear. You have two hundred that will continue, two hundred which would not be modern fishing towns, idealistic, modern towns such as I have tried to describe. They would be small settlements, a Quirpon, a Seldom-Come-By, a place such as Joe Batts Arm. You will have, I should think, easily one hundred places on the northeast coast far too good to disappear, but not nearly good enough to become modern centralized fishing towns. Now what about them? People live there. They have their roots down deep in these places. They go back many of them, some go back to the sixteenth century and some go back to the seventeenth century, they are very old, very ancient, very historical. And there are people living in them whose families have been there for centuries. They are not ideal. They cannot be made ideal, but they can be made incomparably better than they are today. We are going to attempt to show that that is so. That is the meaning of Quirpon, that is the meaning of Seldom-Come-By, that is the meaning of Joe Batts Arm, that is the meaning of Bay de Verde. We are testing the big scale concentration and industrialization of the fishery at one place only, LaScie. That is to cost a great many millions of dollars. This very year we figure that it will cost in all from the two governments three to four millions.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): One half million on LaScie.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is a mere beginning. I would say that housing and everything in LaScie will run probably five millions, quite easily five million dollars. That is a lot of money.

MR. HOLLETT: What is the population?

MR. SMALLWOOD: At the moment there is a small population. But we hold that by the time that money is spent for housing, streets, water and sewerage, we hope that all the people of the hinterland of Fleur-de-Lys, Coachman's Cove, all the places west or north and south of LaScie, Shoe Cove, around this side of Cape St. John, from all these places the people will move in to a beautiful, modern town. That is what we hope and if it succeeds—now in my view the Government of Canada will not go along with us on a second LaScie until the soundness of the LaScie project is established. I believe it will be established, but until it is I doubt that the Government of Canada will go along with us. That would mean that if we ourselves decided to go it alone, which I think unlikely, we would not in that case, if we went it alone and have to do all that we are doing with LaScie together with all that the Government of Canada are doing at LaScie, that would make the whole thing prohibitively expensive. But if you have a dozen LaScie's that could run to fifty million dollars, and that could centralize and benefit perhaps a hundred and fifty or two hundred small, extremely backward fishing settlements along the northeast coast.

MR. HOLLETT: Is it all based on these frozen fish fingers?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No. As I said yesterday, because LaScie is an imbalanced, a balanced out operation, not just one thing, not just block frozen fish, not just salted fish, not just artificial dryers, not just natural drying, not just mechanization of drying and handling fish. It is not just mechanization of salt codfish handling, not just a fertilizer plant or merely a fish meal plant—it is all of these and other things as well.

MR. BROWNE: Has the blueprint been made for all of this?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We have the blueprint for the actual townsite, the street lines the curb lines.

MR. BROWNE: Will they be produced here?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't know any reason why not, why they could not be nor would not be. They are a Federal matter, perhaps, but we have them. I don't know that there would be any objections to tabling them. My honourable friend, who is, I believe, an engineer (civil engineer) would probably get some enjoyment out of them. Personally I have not taken too much interest in the purely technological side of it, because I am not an engineer. But if we get a dozen such towns as that we could not get them before ten years from now because it is going to take this year and probably a good bit of next year to get LaScie built. They have not commenced yet. There has been a tremendous amount of engineering done down there, and after all that engineering was done they began to drill the bottom and drilling the bottom was a thing they knew they had to do if they were going to do dredging and deepening of the water. When they drilled the bottom they discovered it was altogether too prohibitively expensive to dredge it. So they had to shift the position of where the plant would go and certain breakwaters and wharves. All right, they get LaScie constructed this year and next year. Let us say it is in part operation this year and full operation next year. Let us assume that it is going to take a couple or two years to test it out. Now that may be some encouragement to the Opposition. If it is going to take that length of time to test it out, then possibly there is some hope for them in the next election—possibly there is—possibly our fishermen—

MR. HOLLETT: When is that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Due in the next three years, I believe.

MR. HOLLETT: Three months, I think.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend will get an election when he gets one—maybe sooner than he wants, sooner than he is ready for it. Well in the meanwhile what? In the meanwhile what? I am not foolish enough to fool myself that the fishermen of Newfoundland all now understand this development idea. I am not fooling myself that one word which I have said this afternoon is going to convince them. I am not fooling myself at all. I think the fishermen of Newfoundland are rather skeptical and doubtful of this whole idea of fishery development. Personally I could not care less, because when I go back as Leader of a Party in the next election whether the people like me or not, fire me out, believe me it will be a matter of supreme indifference to me—supreme indifference. They will have their opportunity to give me the burden of another five years, or to give me the relief, put me out on the pastures. In fact the pasture is being prepared right now on Roache's Line. The pasture is being prepared, and if people decide to put me on that pasture it will lengthen my life. So that I can go, and I shall go to the people in the next election supremely indifferent as to whether they elect me or fire me out. That means, if it never happened earlier, and if it never happens again, this time we will be able to talk jack blunt to the people of Newfoundland, and tell them I don't care whether they elect me or defeat me. If it was never said before it will be said to them this time. I assure you now I have not any doubt as to what the result will be, no doubt whatsoever.

Now in the meantime what is going to be done about this fishery development? People are not going to be happy, not going to be content, not going to wait for LaScie to be tested out, wait for two, four and ten and fifteen years, they are not going to wait for that. Today they are waiting with merchants discussing the prices of fish, and I can assure this House that 99.9% of the fishermen of Newfoundland are today far more concerned about what the price of fish is going to be this year than they are about all this Bill, this nationalization of the fishery, this socialization of the fisheries, this industrialization of the fisheries. Believe me they are far more interested in the price of fish this year, and the price last year, and perhaps the price next year than they are in this.

In some ways what is required is a government that is fanatic about the matter, that does not give a tinker's curse, that is absolutely convinced as we are, that we are right, that there is no future in the salt cod fishery, in the old way of carrying on. A government has got to be convinced of that. We are convinced of it. We are convinced that we have got to industrialize the fisheries. We are convinced of that. On that we will stand or fall. Now in the meanwhile of course we are not fools. We build all the roads we can. If they want roads we will give them roads. Oh yes, we will build the roads. If they want hospitals we will build the hospitals. Sure, and we will build the schools, and we will find the school teachers for them. We will carry on all the ordinary affairs of government. In the meanwhile we will give them all the social security that my honourable friend is able to think of. And he is the best thinker-upper of social securities and social security measures of anyone I know in Canada. And the best backer-upper of a government for ideas like that I know of anywhere in Canada. In the meanwhile, of course, we are prepared to leave it to Trade Minister Howe to deal with the price of fish—the greatest trader in the world.

MR. HOLLETT: Not traitor Howe?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable gentleman is not funny, not a bit funny, and is getting less funny every moment.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have cleared away the situation so that I can speak tomorrow on this Bill. What I have said is merely an introduction.

MR. HOLLETT: We did not inter­rupt you—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now I am hoping that every member of the House on this side will speak and I will be deeply disappointed if any member fails to do so on this subject. I will be greatly disappointed if this is not debated for the next ten days. I have been already disappointed to have had the members of the Opposition speaking and occupying a half or three-quarters of an hour on this Bill. I have only made the introduction to my speech this afternoon, my speech will commence tomorrow. If it is what my honourable friend says it is, the nationalization of the fisheries, surely they should be speaking for two weeks. If it is what my other honourable friend said, the socialization of the fisheries, the honourable gentlemen opposite should be calling public meetings. They should be doing everything to stop it, because they don't believe in socialization of the fisheries. They don't believe in nationalization of the fisheries. I do hope this debate at least will do this, and in this regard we are completely at the mercy of the newspapermen and the radio reporters, we hope through the newspapers and the radio, chiefly the radio because the radio is quicker—it takes a newspaper a little while to get on the train and the boats and get circulated amongst the people—but the radio is instantaneous, so that we are hoping that within the next week or ten days while on this fishery debate, through the medium of the newspapers and the radio to get the fishermen and the people of Newfoundland, the fishermen particularly, to understand that great and revolutionary things are afoot. That the greatest effort ever made in Newfoundland's history to do something real and big for our fisheries is at least about to begin.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

MR. CURTIS: I move Mr. Speaker, that all further Orders of the Day stand deferred, but might I first ask the indulgence of the House to ask leave to give notice that I will on tomorrow introduce a Bill, "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corporation Limited, and N. M. Rothschild and Sons Supplemental to an Agreement Dated the 21st Day of May 1953."

On motion all further orders of the day deferred.

MR. CURTIS: I move the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday, at 3:00 of the clock.

On motion the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 6, 1954 at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.
THURSDAY, May 6, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Motion and Questions
None.

HON. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, have I your permission to lay on the Table of the House a Report of the Farm Loan Board set up by this Legislature last year. Actually the board was operating for about six months last year. It did not really get under way until November. Since that time it has been most energetic. The Board is made up entirely of senior officers of the Department of Mines and Resources, the Deputy Minister and the Assistant Deputy Minister, Crown Lands and Director of Agriculture and the Assistant Director and Secretary. The Board is operated entirely on its own and does not refer its decisions to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council or even to the Minister for approval. The Board has its own powers.

I should like to say at this point, Mr. Speaker, that the Board has not included in this report a list of the names of those persons who have applied for loans and have been approved. The Board has, and I may say I have, taken the attitude that when people are negotiating loans for their private business for its improvement and expansion, etc., their business should not become public property particularly at the time of the negotiations. However, there is no wish at all on the part of the Board or of the Department to keep any information from the Opposition or for that matter from the public when it is in the public interest. So that I have had prepared simply a list of those persons to whom loans have been approved and who have either received their loans or will receive them whenever they are required. I am prepared to make that information available to the Members of the Opposition, with the understanding that the information will not be published.

I don't think, in fairness to all these farmers who have made application—I have seen the names for the first time this week and it included people from all parts of the province—I do think that the purpose of the Act and of the Loan Board would be to some extent defeated if every time a man made application to the board for five hundred dollars and that information whether approved or otherwise were spread over the province.

I would ask leave to present these reports. I would repeat that I have prepared the list of the people who received loans or whose loans have been approved, and I am prepared to make that information available to the Opposition with the request that at the present time this information will not be made public.

Report tabled.

Answers to Questions

Question No. 73:

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): I have pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in furnishing the report.

Question No. 76:
Mr. Curtis: It is not usual for the Government, Mr. Speaker, to announce in advance what its intentions are.

Mr. Speaker: I must at this point uphold the honourable member. That question may not be asked which asks a minister what advice he intends to give the Crown.

Mr. Curtis: The remaining parts of the question, Mr. Speaker, are being prepared.

Question No. 74:
Question No. 75:

Hon. J. R. Smallwood (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance and I were out of town until a few minutes ago, and the minister has gone to his home to change his clothes and should be here in a matter of minutes. I do know that he has not been to his office today, and I would rather doubt that he would have any answers to questions.

Question No. 77:
Question No. 72:

Mr. Curtis: Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the statement is being prepared. It is quite a laborious job and actually I think it will not be possible for me to answer until I raise the matter with my colleagues in Cabinet, and find out from the individual members who are the parties of these particular companies, also ask all the companies who have received guarantees and loans from the government who on the government side is on these boards.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Speaker, in connection with that question. I have a recollection that the Prime Minister of Canada was asked an almost identical question in the House of Commons and refused to answer it. He said he was answerable to the people of Canada as Prime Minister for the honesty and integrity of his colleagues in the Cabinet, and if he had any doubt on that he knew what he would do. I think perhaps I could take that same stand if the question were on all fours with that asked by the Prime Minister of Canada, but my honourable colleague, the Attorney General says, he will bring this before the Cabinet, and we can consider it there at our leisure, and decide what attitude we ought properly to take towards a question of this calibre.

Mr. M. Hollett (Leader of the Opposition): It is not your intention to answer it?

Mr. Smallwood: Not today. It is not the intention to answer it today.

Mr. Curtis: Actually, Mr. Speaker, I don’t know the answer until I try to find it.

Orders of the Day

Hon. H. L. Pottle (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of privilege. I refer now, sir, to the issue of the 'Evening Telegram' dated May 5, which reports on a statement I made in the House on May 4 in which I advised the House that in view of the recent libellous statements in the 'Western Star' involving my name I was proceeding to take legal action against that paper.

On April 20th the House, following a motion made by me, referred to the House Committee on Privileges and Elections my complaint that "The Evening Telegram" had unfairly reported my speech in the House on the 6th of April during the Debate on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

On Tuesday, May 4th, I informed the House that having seen certain libellous references in "The Western Star" to the same speech I had decided to institute legal proceedings against that paper in order to protect my name and reputation as a citizen, and at the same time to institute similar proceedings against "The Evening Telegram" whose unfair reporting gave rise to the articles complained of in the "Western Star."

Under these circumstances I feel I should ask the House to give favourable consideration to a suggestion that no action be taken here which might prejudice in any way the fair trial of these proposed actions.

Accordingly, sir, I move that the House Committee on Privileges and Elections be directed to suspend their sittings until the Courts have ruled upon the matters I am referring to them.

MR. SPEAKER: Moved and seconded the Committee on Privileges suspend its sittings on the matter referred to them on a point of privilege by the Honourable Minister of Welfare until the Courts have decided.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, that being a motion, I think it would be only fair for us to have some sort of notice of such motion. As the House will see, three members of the Opposition are not here, and have had no notification of this, and certainly I have not had an opportunity to consult on this issue with them. I know not whether the legal members of our Opposition would like to express themselves on that. We have two legal members—I am wondering if that motion could lie over until later in the day. I would make that request anyway, Mr. Speaker, and if you see fit to allow it—

MR. CURTIS: I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, in supporting the motion that I think it is very thoughtful and indeed very fair of the Honourable Minister to suggest that the Committee on Privileges should not discuss this matter, and certainly not bring in a report while the action is pending in the courts. I am quite aware of the fact that we are not bound to do anything, but this House if it likes can go ahead and dispose of the matter. But in view of the fact there is an appeal to the courts outstanding, I think it is very proper this committee should at least defer taking any action until the matter comes before the courts.

MR. HOLLETT: May I take it, Mr. Speaker, that the government are not prepared to let the matter hang over until later in the day?

MR. SPEAKER: I did not gather that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not a government measure. If the honourable gentleman who has moved it, is agreeable to that idea, we agree.

MR. CURTIS: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I myself understood so.

MR. SPEAKER: It has been moved and seconded that a decision on this question be left to a later hour this day. Motion carried.

I should add two comments on what has taken place so far: One is, that the remark, that an honourable member was prepared to let a matter of privilege drop, alleged to have been made by the honourable member after the matter was referred to a committee on privileges is a ridiculous one. You might as well say that you will not appear in court after the court is set in action. That matter is in the hands of the House. It is the House and the House only who can now decide whether this committee should carry on or suspend its action. I must point out that, as far as I see it, it could be quite legal for the committee to continue its deliberations. But I am of the opinion that, for the House to discuss the findings of the committee afterwards would then be debating a subject that was sub judice. Therefore, if the House is agreeable to letting the question stand over until a later hour today?

Question ordered stand over until a later hour this day.

Second Reading of Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority."

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I tried in my opening remarks yesterday on this Bill to give a rough and ready outline of the general policy of this Government with regard to the whole field of economic development. I spoke without notes at the time. Afterwards I realized I had not in fact made my point as clearly as it needed to be made. So that before I move on I will attempt to make my point with absolute clarity.

First of all, may I say, speaking my own personal views, and after all, I suppose, as long as I continue to be the Leader of this Administration of Her Majesty's Government in Newfoundland, my own personal views on these matters will have some bearing on the attitude of the Government, just as the views of any member of the Cabinet will have a bearing, and just as the views of any member of the party will have a bearing on Government policy because Government policy is made up of the views of all our friends on this side of the House and indeed of all our friends generally throughout the province. But at the moment I should like to give the House a purely personal reaction to these things. Although I had, I suppose, the ordinary amount of ambition about the matter of forming the first Government of Newfoundland under Confederation, nevertheless, whether the House believes it or not, and regardless of who believes it or refuses to believe it or is incapable of believing it, the fact is that my ambition to become Premier of Newfoundland was not merely that of a personal ambition. It was not merely to satisfy my ego or to enjoy the rather unique power that comes to any man who is the Leader of Her Majesty's Government in any Canadian Province. These things played their part. I would be an arrant hypocrite if I were to deny that I had a certain amount of ambition and in me a certain personal satisfaction in becoming the first Premier of the Province of Newfoundland, and indeed joining the array of great men of Newfoundland, at least joining them in the sense of occupying the same office that they once occupied. I would be a hypocrite if I denied that I had that kind of personal interest in this position. But my real reason for wishing to be Premier of Newfoundland was that it would give me, as Leader of the Administration, an opportunity which I could not possibly have, which no man can have in Newfoundland unless he occupies that very position. Because it would give me an opportunity to put into effect certain thoughts, ideas and plans that I had thought about for many years before that time.

These ideas and these plans had all of them to do with enabling our Newfoundland people to make a better living. They all had to do with that. I had gone through my life seeing and experiencing a lot of poverty in Newfoundland, a lot of it. Such poverty as I never again want to see on this earth and certainly not here in Newfoundland. Like many Newfoundlanders who do a bit of thinking, a bit of reading, move about a bit and get to see things and acquire a certain amount of experience, like many such Newfoundlanders, and this was not unique, I had come to certain conclusions as to what could be done. And anyone who does not come to certain conclusions about what could be and should be done and must be done for the people of Newfoundland is a pretty poor type. It seemed to me that there was a terrible irony about the fact that we had been talking down through the decades and even longer about our priceless natural resources. We used very colourful adjectives about them, Sir, perfectly marvellous, wonderful, untapped, inexhaustible. But, although we had used such terms, none of us had any idea what they really were or how many of them there were, of their extent, of their size. Take for example water power: During the National Convention my honourable friend, the member for St. John’s East—both my honourable friends, opposite who were members of the National Convention—will remember that during that National Convention we had a committee on something—timber, perhaps it was or water power. At all events we had a committee, part of whose duty it was to find out what Newfoundland had—it was a committee on Hydro-Electricity and Water Power, a special committee in the National Convention. I sat in at some of the meetings but I don’t believe I was a member of that committee. I did follow it very carefully and talked with the members of it, and certainly saw the evidence they had and which they brought in from the Department of Natural Resources, as it was at that time. This evidence contained maps and reports and ideas and what information they had. All they did have they gave us in the National Convention. What they had was merely this: They had a map of Newfoundland showing certain rivers. They did not know how much horse power you could develop on any of them, except in so far as Bowaters were prepared to tell them what they had in fact developed on this or that watershed and in so far as the A.N.D. Company were prepared to do so with regard to the other watersheds as was also the case with regard to the Newfoundland Light and Power and the United Towns and the Union Electric Company of Port Union. They could tell us in so far as the electrical horse power which had actually been brought into production at that time. But they could certainly tell us nothing about the undeveloped water power—we knew nothing—nothing.

Unfortunately we did discover that a great many of these potential water powers had been given away, ten, twenty, forty, seventy and a hundred years ago. They had just been given away. One source of hydro-electricity, running to something in the vicinity of a hundred thousand horse power, had been given away by the government of that day, some half century or more ago, for the payment of one pepper cone. I was the one in the National Convention who tabled a question asking the government of the day to produce the pepper cone, which they were not able to do. Whatever had happened to it nobody could find out, but the water power was gone, a hundred thousand horse power was gone and there was not even a pepper cone to show for it.

We discovered when we came into office five years ago, or soon after coming into office, that the information that existed up in the department now presided over by my honourable colleague, the Minister of Mines and Resources, about our timber resources was pitiable and pitifully meagre. It was terribly inadequate, and the public information in the possession of the government about timber stands whether privately owned such as those owned by Bowaters and the A.N.D. Company and many other private companies or whether publicly owned by the Crown, regardless of ownership or alleged ownership, actually we knew nothing about our priceless natural resources of timber as they existed.

We knew nothing of our priceless natural resources in so far as they consisted of hydro-electric potentialities, i.e. water power. We knew less than did any part of the North American Continent, we knew less about our mineral potentialities than did any other part of North America. No Province of Canada and no state of the American Union knew so little about their mineral potentialities on their own areas as did the Government of Newfoundland about the mineral potentialities of our area. In fact it was pathetic; it was heartbreaking. We had had a great geologist, Alexander Murray and before him Y. P. Jukes. Any member who has not read their reports ought to read them. Then the great Alexander Murray followed by a great Newfoundlander, James P. Howley, who was a great man. I would advise every honourable member of this House to get hold of Howley's Reports and read them, and follow them by those of the Government geologist, Dr. Baker, and then lately we have had Mr. Claude Howse and presently Dr. Baird. It is true that we have had some very distinguished men as Government geologists, but forty-two thousand square miles is an enormous area to survey with a view to finding minerals. It is an enormous area to survey even with a view to getting the geology of it, to get the general geological character of it. But, Mr. Speaker, even if the geological surveys of Newfoundland had been incomparably better than they were, the fact would remain and the fact remains it was not sufficient to have even a richly painted picture of the geology of an area. Because, after you have got that you have still to fill in countless blocks which the geologist cannot be expected to fill in, and can only be done by the prospector and the diamond drill. But we were deficient in the geological surveys, let alone the actual mile by mile physical prospecting. So it was when we took office five years ago.

Now, we came in with an ambition to do something to enable our Newfoundland people to earn a better living. We came to the conclusion that there were only a limited number of possibilities in that direction. One was our timber, another was our minerals, another our soil, the actual land itself, and then there was a fourth about which there has been a great deal of talk in this House and out of it, new industries, new industrial plants which we have been instrumental in establishing, some twelve or fourteen in our time. That is more incidentally than any other ten governments put together in the history of this province, in the history of this Island, in the history of Newfoundland.

Now, may I make a personal statement? I intend to go out of politics in Newfoundland. I intend to drop out. I am going out. I can't say when, not yet. I am not in a position at the moment to say when. But I am going out before I am kicked out and before I die in harness. I am going out of public life. I can tell the House without naming a date just when that will be. I can tell the House right now when I am going out of public office—

I think I have them listed here. Yes, Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4. 5. I am going to tick them off. (1) Minerals. I think we can forget about minerals. I think that is in hand. I think this Government has so organized this that we can forget about minerals. If there are any minerals in the province they are going to be found because many millions of dollars are being spent, and will be spent, by private enterprise, by BRINCO, particularly by BRINCO and by many other companies to search for minerals. If they are found there will be development. We will forget about minerals. That is ticked off. That is a job well done. We will forget it.

(2) Timber. Now, I can here put in the first part of the tick, but I can't complete the ticking off of it. We have ourselves conducted some important surveys of our timber resources in Newfoundland. But what is far more important is the fact that we have set up a royal commission, headed by a very great man in that field, General Kennedy. He is very famous in forestry. He was the chairman of the great and famous royal commission on forestry of Ontario. He is the author of the great report on forestry in Ontario, the report which now forms the foundation of all Government policy, forestry policy, in Ontario. He has associated with him another great forester whom we have just brought back to Newfoundland from Mexico, Mr. Cameron, who is the second royal commissioner. He was down there working for the United Nations. The third man also is a Newfoundlander in the person of Mr. Roland Goodyear who has personally traversed on foot virtually every square mile of this Island. He is a man who is in his seventies, agile and energetic as a man in his forties. He brings to that royal commission a profound background of knowledge of Newfoundland. These three men, about a year or so from now, say, will bring in a definite programme—just as definite and just as well documented and just as well blueprinted as the programme brought in by the Fisheries Development Committee headed by Sir Albert Walsh. So that in about a year from now we will be able to complete the tick on this number two item.

(3) Agriculture. We got diverted here yesterday for a few minutes on agriculture. I shall not do that again today, except to say that there again we have set up a royal commission on agriculture. Now, that is one of the smartest things we have done since we came into office. I know of one member of the Opposition who will agree with me on that, the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's West. He knows... nothing about agriculture, but he is tremendously interested in it and he really believes in it. It is not that he knows anything about it, and I don't think that he would contend that he does, not in the technological aspect of it, but sociological aspect of it. He is a firm believer in agriculture. He believes a good agriculture gives strength and solidity and health and happiness and wholesomeness to society and to life. He is perfectly right, absolutely right in that. I agree with him a hundred per cent. But we disagree in the kind of agriculture we advocate. He fancies a rather happy peasantry dancing around a maypole whereas I fancy a scientific, practical, hardbitten type of agriculture in which men can make a good living. Because I hold we can't keep them at it unless they can. They will go off to good jobs in Ontario instead.

We have set up this royal commission. I don't think our people in Newfoundland nor even those in this House are aware of the type of man we have gotten to head that royal commission in the person of Dean Shaw. Everybody here has heard of the great J. J. Hill, the great railroad builder of America. When the great James J. Hill some fifty years ago was in his heyday and building railroads in the United States he looked around the North American Continent for the best man he could find for such a purpose and picked a young Canadian, I think, from Ontario. He called him in and said to him, "Look, I know nothing about agriculture. You are a college man with your degrees, won't you come into our organization? Wherever I build railroads and open up the country I want you to organize the agriculture, be the boss, and whatever you say goes. You will answer directly to me." The man he picked for this was a young man named Shaw. At one time he called in this young man, named Shaw, then in his twenties, and said to him; "Shaw, I am going to build a new railway now five or eight hundred miles, and I want to establish there the greatest herd of dairy cattle on the earth, and I want you to do it." Shaw asked him, "What breed do you want your cattle?" The answer was "You tell me, that is what I am paying you for," "All right," said Shaw, "I know the kind." How much do you want to spend? The answer was, "You are not asking me. Tell me. A million? Five million? I want the best dairy herd on earth." Shaw went and got it in Scotland. That was fifty years ago. From that day to this Dean Shaw has piled distinction upon distinction, honour upon honour. Now then today, in Canada, the Right Honourable James G. Gardiner admittedly is the greatest Minister of Agriculture that has ever lived anywhere in North America and perhaps in the world. It is doubtful if any country has ever produced a Minister of Agriculture who is his equal or anything like it as Minister of Agriculture. The right-hand man of Jimmie Gardiner is this same Dean Shaw. He was Dean of School of Agriculture of Alberta. He has gone personally to all parts of Canada, all the ten provinces. He has been down in the Peace River, and in the far northern area. He has gone into all the principal areas where farming is done in Canada, and now he has come to Newfoundland in the past year or more, in June of last year. He has travelled around Newfoundland. He has with him, Dr. Drummond, another distinguished agriculturist and also our own Newfoundland Agricultural Specialist, Mr. P. J. Murray, Deputy Minister of Agriculture in the Department of Mines and Resources of the Government of Newfoundland, who is one of our best practical, local agriculturists. I think at the end of about a year from now we should have the same detailed, documented, blueprinted, programme for agriculture that we now have for fisheries and that we will then have for timber.

So that in a year from now we can tick that off. Now, I have done that. I have ticked these items off on a sheet of paper. What I mean is that a year from now we will be coming before this House, we hope, with a great policy on agriculture. A great new policy designed to make it feasible, to make it practical for many thousands of people to earn their living within this province. That is our hope, that this royal commission on agriculture will give us the kind of practical, down to earth programme that Newfoundland has always lacked, and has never had to this very moment—an agricultural programme so practical that we can budget for it, that we can include it in the estimate, the public expenditure to be made on it.

(4) The new industries: As I conceive it, this Government's clear, manifest duty is to bring these new industries through — bring them through—we have staked our faith and our own reputation on the soundness of these industries. We have done more than that; we have invested twenty million dollars of public money in them. Now, having done that it is our duty, our clear duty, our bounden duty, our clear manifest duty as a Government to carry these industries through to complete success. That we will do. How long? I do not know. To be very honest, I frankly do not know how long that will take. My honourable friend, the Minister of Education, who is by way of being a businessman, not a great industrialist but a businessman who gets down to work at six o'clock each morning to his factory and then goes to work as a Cabinet Minister around ten o'clock. If I don't keep a sharp eye on him he slips out and down to the factory. He is certain to be there again after tea, six days a week he is still a businessman, still runs a factory. He tells me, "Mr. Premier, don't let anybody fool you about this thing. You know it always takes industries five or six years or seven years to get the kinks ironed out of them. Don't think you are going to start an industry and right off it is going to start making money." My honourable friend, the Attorney General, a lawyer, and connected with one kind of business or another for thirty years, helps to raise the finances for all kinds of business enterprises, all kinds up and down Water Street, as every lawyer does. He told me, "Mr. Premier, don't be too optimistic now that these industries are all going to prove themselves in a year or two. It is going to take longer than that."

So that when practical-minded men tell me these things I suppose they know what they are talking about. So that we must conclude that it is going to take another four or five years to make these industries sound, and to make sure, that they will prosper, that they will make profits, and certainly that they will pay us back the money we have lent them. That is number 4. Now, we are left with number 5.

(5) The Fisheries: The fisheries which are bigger than all these put together. This Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority," is a Bill my honourable friend, the Minister of Fisheries, has brought in here, asking this House to enact. He has done it on behalf of the Government. Of course when he does so he acts as our spokesman. We, as a Government, have considered that matter in Cabinet repeatedly. We have gone through this Bill line by line and word for word, and we put it to the House asking that it be made law.

Now, what is it in fact? It is a Bill which will create, or if it does not create, authorize the creation of a great new authority, a great legislative entity, a great new legal body in Newfoundland to be brought into existence for one purpose and one purpose only—not to win elections, not to go out campaigning, not to run beer parlours, not to deal with the new industries, not to have anything to do with forestry, not to have anything to do with minerals, but one great, new legal authority set up for the sole purpose of carrying out our programme of fisheries development. That is what the Bill is.

"The Authority shall:

(a) Receive and examine all proposals and suggestions that may be made to or by the Government of Newfoundland touching the development of the fisheries and report thereon to the Government with such recommendations as the Authority may think fit and put into effect such of these proposals and suggestions as the Government approves."

This is the new body of dictators. That is what we are told. That side of the House is now asked to create a new body of dictators. We were told that here by the Opposition. A body that has the duty imposed on it by the Legislature to put into effect such of the proposals and suggestions as the Government approves is a body of dictators. No wonder my honourable friend laughs. But why not laugh when making that claim? Who could say seriously what he said?

MR. HOLLETT: I laugh now at you.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Then (b) "the authority shall undertake research and investigations of any kind that may be necessary to enable to devise and recommend to the Government of Newfoundland projects for the development of the fisheries and undertake such projects upon their being approved by the government."

You see, Mr. Speaker, one thing the government has no right to do, cannot do is to abdicate while it remains in office. It cannot abdicate its responsibility. It cannot shuffle off its jurisdiction. That is why we, the government, ask this House to set up this Fisheries Development Author-ty. It cannot at the same time ask this House to give that Fisheries Development Authority, authority that superseded the authority of the government, which is the parent body on behalf of this House of this Fisheries Development Authority.

(c) "The Authority shall investigate existing and potential markets and marketing methods for products of the fisheries and, where necessary, undertake such research and promotion as it deems desirable to enlarge, improve and increase the markets available to those products." And finally:
(d) "The Authority shall supervise the carrying out and enforcement of all agreements made before the passing of this Act between the government of Newfoundland and any person to assist in the development, mod-erization or improvement of the fisheries."

Now all that means is that up to this moment the government has made agreements with some ten or fifteen companies and individuals in Newfoundland for expansion of the fishing industry. We have made agreements under which we lent large sums of money totalling altogether six or seven million dollars. There are agreements under which we lent large sums of money to establish fishing industries, for example, Gaultois in Hermitage Bay, Trepassey, Grand Bank, all brand new plants. Then we have made agreements with companies under which we lent them money to expand their existing plants, for example, Bonavista, Dildo, St. Annes.
Then again we have made agreements with one or two other companies with which to acquire deep-sea trawlers to increase not only the quantity of fish for their fish plants but the variety of fish, to enable them all the better and more easily to dispose of their products in the American markets.

Now, this clause merely states that we are, with regard to all these agreements, delegating to the Fishery Authority, which is the one great authority we are setting up, to deal with the whole matter of fishery development, and they shall, while they are at it, take over the implementation of these agreements. Now in fact what does that mean? That means merely that the collecting of the money due the government either by way of interest or reduction of principal, the inspection of the plants to see that any conditions laid down in the agreements to be fulfilled by the recipient of the loan shall in fact be observed; to see that insurance is carried; to see that all the terms and conditions of the agreement under which these loans are made are in fact respected and carried out.

MR. HOLLETT: Is that not the job of Her Majesty?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is the job of Her Majesty, but Her Majesty at the moment is travelling in the Mediterranean and has been around the world. So that Her Majesty has to have a government, and the government sets up various boards to do that sort of thing. So that is what this is:
Her Majesty's Fishery Development Authority in the province of Newfoundland. I am glad my honourable friend enabled me to bring out that point, Sir. Surely my honourable friend is not foolish enough to think that Her Majesty would personally be making these loans and handling the fishery development in Newfoundland.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I ask the members of the House, in (a) (b), (c) and (d) where the obligatory duties of the Fishery Authority are outlined, is there anything ominous, anything sinister here. No. There is no socialization here. There is no nationalization here. No. These are innocent clauses—No? Well, let us see what is sinister, ominous, revolutionary or questionable about Section 14.

"The Authority may:

(a) At the request of the Minister co-ordinate the work of the several departments of the government of Newfoundland insofar as they relate to any programme for the development of the fisheries and, on behalf of the government and any of the said departments, collaborate or enter into agreements with the government of Canada and any of its departments or agencies in the implementation of any programme for the development of the fisheries that the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland may agree to undertake."

I think that is a pretty innocent clause. I don't see anything wrong with that. It is always at the request of the Minister that the Fishery Development Authority may co-ordinate the work of the various departments of the government of Newfoundland that may be concerned in fishery development. I will give the House some example of how more than one department might very well be concerned in fishery development. Take for example, La Scie where the great new fishery development is to take place. In La Scie there will be a problem of the erection of factories, buildings in which fish will be frozen and filleted, buildings in which fish will be salted, in which fish will be dried, in which fish will be made, in which fish will be smoked, in which fish fertilizer will be manufactured. Then obviously the Minister of Public Works should be a pretty useful person, and the Department of Public Works a pretty useful department to be involved in that aspect of fishery development. The construction of a building is not of necessity an aspect of fishery development because it might be a museum or a hospital or a fertilizer plant, a building nevertheless is a building. Similarly where plumbing regulations are concerned water and sewerage and their construction in La Scie, my honourable friend, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply, can play a tremendous part and has a tremendous amount of practical experience and knowledge to bring to bear upon the problem from the fact that he has already worked in municipalities inspecting and installing water and sewerage, in some eight or ten Newfoundland settlements. Therefore it is feasible that if the Fishery Development Authority require the installation of water and sewerage facilities they should be able to call upon a department of the government who has had considerable experience in that very field. So it would go with all the different departments of Her Majesty's Government whose work or whose jurisdiction has a bearing upon these matters, as they concern the Fisheries Development Authority. But I would also ask the House to take note of the phrase "At the request of the Minister." Then again there has already come and there will come continually in the future case after case of collaboration between the government of Newfoundland on the one hand, and the government of Canada on the other, with regard to actual or practical fisheries development in some particular harbour. Now there again what is required is some practical form of implementation of an undertaking agreed to by both governments. If my honourable friend, the Minister of Fisheries, agrees with Mr. Sinclair, the Minister of Fisheries of Canada, that certain actual developments are desirable for Joe Batts Arm or Herring Neck or Come-by-Chance or Burin or Ramea or anywhere else it won’t be expected that my honourable friend and Jimmie Sinclair will go up arm in arm to Ramea or Burin and personally engage in the business of fishery development. Yet the two governments have agreed that it is desirable, and the two governments have agreed between them to spend some money, one government on this and the other on that aspect of the development. Therefore what is needed clearly is a practical form of collaboration within the two governments and it is here as — “At the request of the Minister, etc.” Enter into and collaborate with the government of Canada and any of its departments or agencies in the implementation of any programme for the development of the fisheries that the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland may agree to undertake. Now is there anything sinister about that? Is there any socialization, any nationalism? There is nothing there to be frightened at, nothing to frighten the people, nothing to suggest that the government is practically working into Communism, to suggest that, if the truth were really known, we were in the pay of Malenkov, nothing to suggest we are secretly joined to the Fourth Internationals. There is nothing in that nor in any other clause I have so far read in this Bill to suggest anything like that.

I may read clause 24 in passing:

“The Authority, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise for the purpose of paragraph (b) of Section 14, but the aggregate of the amounts borrowed under this Act and outstanding shall not at any time exceed twenty-five million dollars.”

That is a good indication of the complete intellectual bankruptcy, the refusal even to read the Bill and the more complete refusal to understand it, that the worst they can say, all they can say, is that this is socialization, this is nationalism. It is not funny, it is not funny. This is one of the greatest pieces of legislation for good or bad, for good results or bad results, one of the greatest pieces of legislation ever brought before this House, under which scores of dollars of public money may be spent. It may be sound or unsound, true or false, but it is big. It was my honourable friend’s clear duty to enlighten the people of Newfoundland, the fishermen of Newfoundland, but he merely dismissed the whole thing with one characterization ‘Nationalization,’ ‘Nationalization’ of the Fisheries.

MR. HOLLETT: We have heard that before!

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, and may hear it again. Now I will give credit to my honourable friend’s colleague from St. John’s West who did not descend to that in his speech, but he called it “Industrialization of the Fisheries.” That is a good word, an accurate word, a word that describes it. He asks, “Who is to own all the houses to be built? Where does the public come in? Well, who owns the houses that are built in all the ten provinces of Canada, and have been built for years past and financed by public funds? Who built all the houses in Churchill Park up to a year or so ago? It was public money that built these houses. I don't know but my honourable friend had something to do with it. I don't know but he was a member of the original housing commission. If he has not then he might have been and others were. Millions of dollars of public money went into building these homes. Who owns them now? Most of them, I don't know as I am not a member of the organization, but most of them I believe have been sold to the occupants. That is excellent. It is far better that a man should own, that a family should own a house they occupy than that they should merely rent it from someone else. No one knows better in this House than my honourable friend, that public housing is a sheer necessity in Canada and that it has been a sheer necessity in the United States and it has been a sheer necessity in the United Kingdom even before the war, even before hundreds of thousands of their homes were battered and shattered by bombs and air raids and buzz bombs and all the rest of it. Even before the war, in all modern countries public housing has been a sheer necessity because private capitalism just has not been willing to build homes that were within the reach, financially, of the average family. So the governments had to come to the rescue of the underpaid portion of the public and provide public housing. But Democratic Governments, unlike totalitarian governments, try where it is possible to assist the public to acquire title to those homes. Has he got any reason from this Bill to think that the actions of the government in connection with housing infers anything new, anything radically different from our record in public housing? He has not got the faintest reason to imagine that in the matter of public housing in connection with fishery development we are going to be one bit different from what we have been in connection with public housing in all other fields. My honourable friend, while he asks the question, in his heart knows the last thing in the world this Government, democratic, liberal as it is, all of us, virtually all of us strong advocates of Co-operative Ideas and Ideal as he is himself, that we would think of anything in connection with public housing other than of providing the opportunity to fishermen to acquire these homes for themselves—That is the answer to the question.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we go on: “The Authority may assist persons, directly or indirectly, with financial aid or otherwise in the establishing of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels, equipment and installations that will contribute to the development of the fisheries.”

Yet my intellectual friend, who without a doubt prides himself for it, and most properly so, prides himself upon his intellectual integrity, yet, that same intellectual honourable friend of mine asked yesterday—Where does private enterprise fit into all this? I took down his words and have them here. In all this, what is this? In the fishery development programme. Where does private enterprise fit into it all? He was concerned to ask this. I wonder if he asked it honestly, and if so how can he explain the things I have just read.

MR. W. J. BROWNE: I asked particularly in regard to La Scie.

MR. SMALLWOOD: In La Scie everything that will be built there with the exception of purely public works such as breakwaters, wharves and the like which will be held by Public Works.

"Statism" is another word which was used by my friends opposite to describe this Bill. I hold that public wharves and breakwaters will continue to be public, but fish plants, etc. in regard to such things our fondest dream is -Now we want to be practical about it - but our fondest dream is that the whole community of La Scie, the people themselves will own these things. They have a very fine Co-operative in La Scie. It is one of the finest in Newfoundland, one of the best and most educated, one of the best and foremost, founded on the basic principles of the Co-operative Idea and Techniques. They have a fine Co-operative there and we have had our people down there from the Co-operative Division, from the Fishery Division of my honourable friend's department. They have sat down repeatedly again and discussed the matter of fishery development. Let me assure my honourable friend here and now -

MR. HOLLETT: Would the Honourable the Premier yield?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. HOLLETT: I maintain he should be loaning this money in his department and not delegating his duties and passing them over now to this Authority. That is the point on which I say the Government is giving up not only the authority of the government but also of this House - to lend money to private individuals.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If we did it you say it would not be nationalization. But if we take a banker from a bank and a merchant from a mercantile firm and give them authority it then becomes socialization.

MR. HOLLETT: They borrowed money from us before. And I did not say socialization.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am going to win over my honourable friend from St. John's West with one blow. I cannot resist this. It is not new. I am taking it up now for the occasion. It is one of the deepest convictions of my mind. I expressed it at a convention of the Maritime United Fishermen at one of their annual conventions when I said, "The last thing, I, for one, want to see in Newfoundland is a fishing proletariat. My honourable friend knows what a proletariat is - It is a landless and propertyless people. The last thing I want in our fisheries is a proletariat. Now, mind you, I don't know but I would choose to have a proletariat if the choice were given me of having a proletariat fairly well paid or practically speaking little capitalists on the dole. I think I would choose rather to have a proletariat providing they got a decent salary. But the last thing I want is to take away the very wonderful, sturdy, independent mindedness, if not independent pockets, of our people. Because our people have been far more independent in heart and mind than they have been in their pockets. The last thing I want to do is to turn our fishermen of Newfoundland, with their personalities, their colourful characters and with their integrity of person and integrity of character, natural gentlemen, all of them, the last thing I would want to do would be to turn them into shiphands, into seamen, sailors. That is the last thing on earth - Pray God it will never be said of me that during my time of office that is all I did for the fishermen of Newfoundland, turn them into proletarians! Pray God that will not be said of me or of the administration I lead!

That is the great essential difference between these great fish plants of the south of that line I mentioned, the line drawn from east to west from St. John's across the island coming out somewhere around Point Riche. South of that line and north of it the great difference is this: South of it you are right cheek by jowl off the Banks of Newfoundland. You can come into Fermeuse, come into Tre passey, Placentia, Marystown, Burin, Fortune, Grand Banks, Gaultois, Hermitage, Harbour Breton, just a hop a skip and a jump from the finest fishing there is in the world today. While that fishing is there you are going to have the great draggers. That is it, unless you pass a law to prevent it. And if you pass such a law you won't prevent it, but prevent only your own fishery and the others will have it, the Spaniards and Portuguese, the French and the Scots and the English. You can stop the Newfoundlanders and Canadians from using draggers but cannot stop the draggers. So that south of that line it is so easy to imagine great industrial plants, and great companies served by draggers costing three hundred thousand dollars each that can bring in at one trip three hundred thousand pounds of fish. That is what you can imagine. In fact it is a little difficult in the circumstances to imagine anything else south of that line. But north of it, and thanks to that thing I described here yesterday, block frozen fish, and yet make these plants balanced industrial plants similar to La Scie but on a smaller scale than La Scie but similar to it in the sense that they are balanced. If they take some fish and smoke it, and some fish and can it, and some fish they salt, and some of it they salt then dry artificially, all of it they handle mechanically in mechanized flakes, who will supply the fish? Certainly not these great draggers, not these great mechanical draggers. Not these ships which are the property of industrial companies such as is Gaultois, Grand Bank, Fortune, Northlantic Fisheries, Fishery Products, these great fishing companies.

Now on the North East Coast you can have long liners, purse seiners, different types of boats, boats of the type of the Matthew II which cost $38,000 and it should be feasible to have them costing much less than that, considerably less than that. With new types of boats, small boats, with four, five, or six or seven men, boats within the practical reach of ordinary fishermen, boats that would cost no more than a Labrador schooner used to cost and perhaps less, or perhaps a little more, built with the help of our loan boards or Fishery Development Authority.--It is not for nothing we have made the Chairman of these loan boards secretary of the Fisheries Development Authority. I hope the House will notice the connection there. We have, as the House is aware, set up three loan boards, Industrial Development Loan Board, to make small loans for small industrial enterprises. We have a Co-operative Development Loan Board which is probably one of our mistakes. But they have only lent $36,000 or $38,000. It is not a big mistake although it may be a bad one. Then we have the Fishery Development Loan Board for lending money to fishermen with which to buy boats, engines, gear and the like. Now the chairman of these loan boards is the man who has been appointed to be secretary of the Fishery Development Authority, so as to make for the closest integration of effort and approach and technique between the two. In addition to that we have the bounties, the boat building bounties. In addition to that again the Government of Canada pays bounties using our Fisheries Loan Board as their federal authority through which they can make their federal payments, which co-ordinates the provincial payments with the federal payments in dealing with any given fishermen.

Now, what we can have on this Northeast Coast is, say fifteen, say twenty, I don't know how many there will be until the final surveys have been completed, but fifteen or twenty and maybe thirty towns ranging in population of say two or three thousand on the one hand and up to ten or twelve thousand on the other hand, two general classifications of towns, the La Scie type and the Quirpon type or Seldom-Come-By type. Because Quirpon and Seldom-Come-By are in a class, these two are under test to test out the feasibility of fishery development in a harbour where it is not feasible to have the relatively large scale town and concentration, but where you can have for instance: community stages, community flakes, mechanized community flakes, put in a fish dryer, etc., and have the whole thing, preferably, owned by the community itself. Now if you can get, say your five hundred places on the Northeast Coast boiled down to say a hundred with twelve or fifteen of them towns, small cities like La Scie we hope is to become, and say eighty or eighty-five of them places such as we hope Seldom-Come-By, Bay de Verde, Valleyfield, Badger's Quay, Merasheen about which I hope my honourable friend from Placentia West will tell us more.

So that I hope my honourable and learned friend will agree that in addition to the industrialization aspect of fishery development there is another side of which this government is extremely sympathetic. After all, Mr. Speaker, we don't want to have it said after we have gone out of office nineteen years from now, and my honourable friends across are older and wiser men than they are today—of course we will all be older and wiser men by then—but we don't want it said of this government when we go out that what we did has this effect, that it could be said of Newfoundland—Where wealth accumulates and men decay. Or if men don't decay they become just proletarians serving ever bigger and richer fish merchants.

Now up to this moment how many applications have we had and how many has the Fishery Development Board approved to individual fishermen or little groups?

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): Probably twenty or thirty. Maybe a hundred thousand dollars.

MR. SMALLWOOD: All right. There is the tragedy of it. But with an organized fishery development programme what you get is this: You set up a Fishery Development Loan Board. You get a man like James Baxter as the chairman. He is a man who spent his entire life as a banker. Perhaps he was not the best choice we could have made but we were most anxious that loans that were made would be made cautiously and soundly and that the money would not be just wasted. But in four years we have had some twenty or thirty fishermen who have had their loans approved, and they got a total of a hundred thousand dollars or less. Whereas, during the same period some fish merchants have come to us and have received loans of five hundred thousand dollars, six hundred thousand dollars, seven hundred thousand dollars, eight hundred thousand dollars, nine hundred thousand dollars and one got a million dollars, or a million and eleven thousand dollars I think it was. Now why is that? Is that because this government has a soft spot for Water Street in its heart. No. The spot that this government has in its heart for Water Street is as hard as the hobs of hell. I go on record, deliberately on record—As hard as the hobs of hell. If we have lent seven million dollars to Water Street for fishery development it has not been to please Water Street, it has not been to help Water Street. It has been to help the fishermen who would be able to get jobs from those firms at cash wages. And it was to help the fishermen who could sell their fish for cash and thereby escape the slavery and escape for their wives and children the slavery of making the fish on their flakes. These figures I have just quoted up there, for loans to fishermen, are figures I consider to be pathetic in the extreme. I would hope that as a result of this great fishery development programme that, in the course of the next four or five years, it will become possible and feasible for a couple of million dollars or more, perhaps much more than a couple of million dollars, to go out to many hundreds of fishermen in loans to enable them to acquire the types of boats, the types of engines and the types of fishing gear that the modern fishing techniques demand. We plan for the Newfoundland Government to put out several millions of dollars in that way to fishermen for those purposes—and it will amount to very much more because it will of course be added to, by means of the Federal Government Bounties or subsidies for the same types of boats, provided they don't measure more than sixty feet, or fifty nine feet eleven inches.

Mr. Speaker, it has been drawn to my attention that we have only one stenographer, and, if it is pleasing to Your Honour and the House, I would suggest that we have a recess for ten minutes.

House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, before we recessed I was quoting the principles of the Fishery Development Authority which this Bill, if it becomes law, will have the effect of creating. I was pointing out that section 13 puts certain obligations upon the Fishery Development Authority and that under certain conditions, the Authority to do certain things, and I had quoted Section 14 (b) "To assist persons, directly or indirectly, with financial aid or otherwise in the establishment of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels, equipment and installations that will contribute to the development of the fisheries."

Then it goes on in the next section: "The Authority may assist the operation of such enterprises as are of an exploratory or experimental character or for demonstration in methods of fishing:

Now I regard this Section 14 (c) as being one of the most important sections of the Bill. It gives the Fishery Development Authority the authority the government itself has had in the past five years. And we have done incomparably more than any other government in Newfoundland's history by way of exploratory and experimental fishing. We built the Matthew II. Mr. Speaker, when we first came into office we found that, with the exception of one, no government in Newfoundland had ever sent any one to any other country where fish was produced with a view to looking at their methods and techniques of fishing and processing of fish. That one exception was the Squires Government that sent the Speaker of that day, Mr. Speaker Penney, the late C. H. Penney of Carbonear, to Iceland. He was afterwards Magistrate Penney of Carbonear. He had many years earlier been a fisherman fishing on the Coast of Labrador. His familiarity with the fishery was confined almost entirely to the type of fishing that was done on the Labrador. He brought back with him a very notable report which was to the effect that the Icelanders of that time (that would be in 1920-21) were actively engaged then in an effort to imitate our Labrador Cure. I remember talking with the late Magistrate Penney just before he left on that trip and after he returned. The Labrador Cure was in very great demand at that time in certain of the European markets. Now that was the only case I had ever heard or read of the Government of Newfoundland sending any one to other fishing countries to observe their fishing methods, etc. This fact shocked me and my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries. Indeed the whole Cabinet agreed that it was common sense and so ordinary a thing for a government to do as to be considered almost routine, and that the selection of such a man and the sending of such a man should arouse no particular attention. That was, however, one of the first acts of this government to arouse antagonism, ridicule and sneers.

The man we choose was Colin Story. He was an excellent type of man. He was a quite well educated man. He was well spoken. He was very personable and presentable. He was a man who could hold his own in any company. In addition to having these qualifications, he was also a practical fisherman. He had fished on the Coast of Labrador. He had fished in Notre Dame Bay. He had fished on the South West Coast. He had operated his own boat as master of her. He was at one time one of a small group of young men sent by the Commission of Government at one stage in their history to some school in the United States conducted by the U.S. Wild Life Organization, where he had some introduction at least to the study of fish processing and fish hauling. So that Colin Story appeared to be a well educated practical fisherman, who could go to any of those countries and quite competently, quite adequately, observe what was going on. He did that. He went to Iceland, Scotland, England, Denmark, Germany, Norway and Sweden. He spent some months over there. He went out in their boats to their fishing grounds. He went to the fish plants. He examined their boats. He knew enough about the practical features of boats and engines and gear to be able to give us a report on what he had noted. He also knew enough about plants to be able to bring us a report.

He came back, and he reported to my honourable colleague, the Minister of Fisheries, and to myself. He came night after night for many nights to Canada House and stayed until two or three o'clock in the morning. He told us such a fascinating story that I called a caucus so that all the members of the party at that time might have the advantage of being briefed by Colin Story. What he told us was that we were asleep. Newfoundland was asleep in so far as the fishing industry was concerned. We were asleep. We were fifty years behind the times. That is four years ago. He told us we were then where Iceland and Norway had been around the turn of the present century.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why is it? I repeat why is it that our fish merchants, with the exception of Arthur Monroe, Ches Crosbie, and there may be one or two others of whom I have no knowledge, why, with these exceptions, our fish merchants in their fond conceit, in their impenetrable vanity, should have imagined that the great countries of Europe had nothing to teach Newfoundland? Why is it they should imagine that our fisheries were sufficiently up to date, that they were not open to improvement, not susceptible to improvement? That is beyond me. That is beyond my comprehension. Now, they must have imagined it, or else, surely, they would have sent their top men or gone themselves to those countries to see what was going on. Not only Arthur Monroe and Ches Crosbie but all of them would have gone, surely they would have gone, if they thought there was something to learn in those countries.

So this Government built the experimental "Matthew II." She was the first of her kind in the Western Hemisphere, the first Danish Seiner ever built in the new world. This Government built her on the recommendation of Colin Story. Others have been built since, but we pioneered in that. Now, this Government knows that is not work for a Government, that is work for private enterprise, that is the sort of thing that private enterprise does. Does anybody suppose that the United States would have the great position she has today in the industrial and technological world if first she had not thrown her doors open to people from every nation under the sun virtually, and secondly if her private enterprise had not been so enterprising as it was by way of scientific innovations. Without that, would the United States be the nation she is today? I think the answer is obviously clear. And if our fishermen have starved, if our fishermen have lived on so low a standard of living as they have it is because their industry has been mastered, controlled and bossed, regulated yes, but principally owned by a handful of ivory headed, stone-headed, fossil-minded merchants. Oh, they could make an easy living, and they did. No country in the Western World is as easy as Newfoundland for men of some wealth to become wealthy, for men of some wealth to be powerful. There is no other country in the western world in which a little fellow can be a big fish in a small pond. And if our fishermen have languished, if they have lacked the ordinary things which people of Continental America, have, as for instance these ordinary things they look upon as sinful ambition to look for, milk, ordinary whole milk, if our people have lacked, and if our fishermen particularly have lacked a standard of living which more advanced people regard as just commonplace living, it is because the fishing industry has been in the hands of knuckle-headed fossils.

MR. HOLLETT: You are going to take it out of their hands?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We are not going to take it out of their hands. But we are going to give them the "bums rush." Does my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, know what I mean by that? Well I will tell him what I mean by the "bums rush."

MR. HOLLETT: You got it in New York one time.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, I never had. If I had I would not be ashamed to say so. Because if there is one thing about me, I have a lot of pride in my accomplishments but no pride in myself. Most of my life since I was born I was extremely poor and I expect to die that way. I don't claim any aristocratic blood. On the contrary I claim I come from ordinary people, the ordinary working class of Newfoundland, a real tough working people—I have no pride at all, no social snobbery. So that my honourable friend cannot hurt my feelings. I have a sort of pride in the fact that I have nothing to be proud of. I am proud of that. Proud of the fact that I am just an average, ordinary Newfoundlander. But I am proud of my accomplishments although not all of them. Because, like my honourable friend, I have made some mistakes too. I have made far more than my honourable friend has made—oh yes—but I am proud of my accomplishments. But I won't be diverted from what I was saying by talking about my mistakes. We were talking not about my mistakes but about the mistakes of my knuckle-headed merchants. When I say "a bums rush" what I mean is that we intend to create an atmosphere in Newfoundland in which the merchants, private enterprise will get new faith in Newfoundland. They are already getting it. I wish I were in a position to announce the name of one of the oldest, one of the most conservative firms in Newfoundland that has decided to launch out again into the fishing industry. I am delighted to hear that. I want it to be understood also that when I give my frank and candid opinion of Water Street I always make allowance for some exceptions. There are some exceptions. But most of them I would not have them running bulls-eye shops. Most of them have not enough brains to get out of their own way. Most of them have not enough initiative to get in out of the rain. Most of them have not enough brains to count their money, they have to hire people to do that for them. But it is an obviously easy place to get rich this Newfoundland. If you are worth a couple of hundred thousand in no time at all you have a million and from that two million, three, four, five millions. And if I am challenged I will name them. They all voted against me, virtually all of them. They all put up money to put this party down. They are the people who financed the campaign against Confederation. You see how much gratitude I have for them, as much as I have for half a dozen rattlesnakes, about the same amount of gratitude, and as much fear of them as I have of any ferocious mouse. That is how much fear I have of them. I have as much respect for them as I have for a rattle snake and as much fear as I have for any mouse be he ever so ferocious. But they are the crowd that our fishermen have to depend upon. They are it. They are the fishery. The fishery could never rise higher than they would allow it to rise. The fishery could never be any more progressive than they made it, never could be, so that our fishermen have starved.

Now, what we are hoping is that private enterprise, big and small would come to the Government, come to this Fishery Development Authority, and that they would borrow a million, two million, five million, ten million, twenty million, or fifty million in the course of the next fifteen or eighteen years. That is what we hope. But if they don't then we hope the fishermen will borrow it in the same amount over the same period of time. Then if they don't we will spend it, and then we will have socialism.

MR. HOLLETT: Where are we going to get it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend need not worry about that. Don't let that give him a thought. Two years ago he stood in this House, and with such power as he had, which admittedly was not great, but with such power as he had, he did everything possible to prevent us floating a bond issue, he and his then leader.

MR. HOLLETT: That is not correct.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not correct? It is absolutely true!

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker,

my honourable friend called upon the bond holders to be aware of us, and then called upon the Government.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise now to a point of order: I will not allow it to be said in this House that I ever endeavoured to damage the credit of this country in any way; and I shall ask you to take it back.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, so far from taking it back I will now repeat: My honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition stood in this House, as his leader did, and called upon the bankers and bond houses across Canada not to lend this Government one cent. He did that in this House two years ago. Do you think I am going to take that back when the whole House knows it?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, since the Honourable the Premier will not take it back, I will say it is a damnible lie. He is nothing but a damnible liar.

MR. SPEAKER: Order—the honourable member is absolutely out of order.

MR. HOLLETT: Nobody will assist me in my request.

MR. SPEAKER: When any honourable member makes a point of order he must do so without any unparliamentary comment about another honourable member. The words used here were entirely unparliamentary and entirely out of order. The point in question is easily proven, as it is a matter of excerpts from Hansard, or bringing in the journal to show the vote of the House on that occasion. I will not say what the vote was, as it is not for me to do so. I do not recognize as a point of order a statement made in such unparliamentary language. Let me inject a further point: I and the Deputy-Speaker have constantly warned honourable members of the constant use of the personal pronoun "You." "You did this," and "You did that." This Chair cannot be called upon to rule on private conversations which improperly take place in the House. If the honourable members would speak through the Chair more attention might be paid to points of order. Will the honourable the Premier continue his speech, and refrain from personal comments.

RAW_TEXT_END

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, asked me where we were to get the money. I went on to tell him then that some two years ago the Honourable Leader of the Opposition had done his best, which was not good enough, to stop the Government from borrowing a dollar across Canada, and read out a statement calling upon the banks and bond houses not to lend money to Newfoundland. That was two years ago. If my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition hopes somehow this has been forgotten, it is a vain hope.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to a point of order: I must have that Hansard produced here. I have certainly no recollection of ever making such a statement. I don't think the Honourable the Premier is right in making such a statement, unless he produces the facts. Surely I would not advise any banker not to lend money to this country. If I did, I must have been a sick man at the time. I am aware that money must be loaned to all Governments. As to this particular Government, of course, it is a different matter.

MR. SPEAKER: I must take up the point made there by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. He has a right to ask for documentary proof of the statement made. It will be impossible to produce that at once, but it certainly can be produced. But I am not saying that evidence can be brought to show that what the Honourable Premier has attributed to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is so. But the circumstances surrounding the debate itself will be shown. I will ask Mr. Clerk if the journal of the final vote on that bill is readily available at short notice.

MR. CLERK: Mr. Speaker, what was the name of the Bill in question?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The whole party advised the banks not to lend money. He not only did, but his entire party did. It was the then leader, not by him but by another leader. That party met downstairs and the honourable gentleman who is a lawyer and represents St. John's East refused to be identified with it. But they all met that day in the Opposition Room and drafted a statement, which their leader then came up and read out, calling upon the banks and others to be aware of this Government, and not to lend money to it, with only the member for St. John's East, who is a lawyer, refraining. That was two years ago. Does he think the peoples' memory is that short?

MR. SPEAKER: I must take up the point made there by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. He has a right to ask for documentary proof of the statement made. It will be impossible to produce that at once, but it certainly can be produced. But I am not saying that evidence can be brought to show that what the Honourable Premier has attributed to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is so. But the circumstances surrounding the debate itself will be shown. I will ask Mr. Clerk if the journal of the final vote on that bill is readily available at short notice.

MR. CLERK: Mr. Speaker, what was the name of the Bill in question?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Loan Bill, Mr. Speaker. It was on the occasion of the debate on the Loan Bill. The quickest way to find it is—the official statement of the Opposition was published in the press at that time. It was a special session and the Leader of the Opposition stood up and just read it out, and passed it around to the newspaper reporters, and it appeared in all the papers and on all the radios, and undoubtedly appears in Hansard. May I continue, Mr. Speaker?

MR. SPEAKER: If the Honourable the Premier can keep away from that point.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, indeed. Mr. Speaker. My honourable friend need not worry. We will finance the fishery development programme. We will do that. This Government will do that. We will finance it.

MR. HOLLETT: I hope so.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I can gauge the honourable gentleman's hopes so well. Whether you hope so or not we will do so.

MR. HOLLETT: You were going to do a lot of stuff.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We are going to finance this programme of fishery development in Newfoundland, not on behalf of Water Street, but we are on behalf of the fishermen, the people we are here to serve, who put us here and can put us out whenever they feel like it. They have the power to do it. So that I say, the Fishery Authority may assist the operations of such enterprises as are of an explanatory or experimental character or for demonstration in methods of fishing. They will be carrying out on a much greater scale and a much more intensive scale the very programme of the Government itself in the course of the last four or five years. That is, as I was saying, we, the Government, have done more than any other Government in the history of Newfoundland in this very direction.

Then again the Authority may on its own initiative or on reference to it by the Government of Newfoundland, advise and make recommendations to the Government in respect of legislation, regulations or organizations touching on the fisheries; and then:

They may make, direct or otherwise participate in research or investigation in any matter that concerns the fisheries if the authority is satisfied that the result of such research or investigation will be of such value to the fisheries as to justify the undertaking; and the results will be available to any person engaged in the fisheries who requests information thereon; and finally:

The Authority may assist directly or indirectly with financial aid or otherwise in the provision of education and training in respect of the fisheries.

Under clause 14 (f) the Authority may, if and as it deems fit, and on such conditions as it determines, dispose of buildings, installations or equipment that it acquires for the purpose of conducting research or investigation under paragraph (e);

Now, I will give my honourable friends opposite a reminder that in this sub-clause (g) of Clause 14, they have an opportunity which they could use. They could say that this Government now after five years in office, are now going to launch out to educate the fishermen, and that is what all this boils down to. They could leave out all references to Clause 13, (a), (b) and (c), they could just omit all references to that, omit all references to Sub-sections (a), (b), (c), (d), and (e) of Clause 14 and just touch on 14 (g), just one part of it. They could boil down the whole issue of fishery development into a radio speech for example and say, on Saturday night next, come out and say—"Well fishermen your wonderful Liberal Government have a great big programme now. What do you think they are going to do but start to educate you. Now, that is not what you feel is wanted. It is not education you want. You want prices for your fish." That could be one line of opposition propaganda in connection with this Bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have explained the two sections of the Bill which set out as clearly as possible the functions of the fisheries authority, the jurisdiction of the Fisheries Development Authority. One section of them, i.e., Section 13 is mandatory and one section of them, i.e., Section 14 is permissive. I ask the House in all fairness, and I hope that a couple of years from now or five years from now my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, if he is in the House at that time, will not say that he never said that the fishery development programme is just socialization, or nationalization of the fisheries. I hope he won't say that he did not say that. He said it here the day before yesterday. He called it nationalization and his colleague on his immediate left said it was socialization of the fisheries, and now confirms it by nodding his head.

Now, having read the two sections of the Bill which sets forth the Authority and the functions and jurisdiction and the purpose of the Fisheries Development Authority, I ask the fair question—Is this Socialism? Is this Nationalism? Nationalization?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think it is necessary in dealing with one or two points made by the Opposition, the two speakers the day before yesterday, they drew attention to the financial side of this "Fisheries Development Authority." You will notice that the first provision is that the financial year of the Authority shall correspond to the Financial Year of the Government of Newfoundland. That is to say from April 1 to March 31 in the following calendar year, and,

The Authority shall annually submit to the Minister an operating budget for the next following financial year of the Authority for the approval of the Minister.

The Minister shall annually lay before the Legislature the capital budget of the Authority for its financial year approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

That is, to say its very budget has to be prepared a year ahead, and submitted to the Minister for approval. Now, the procedure is every year the Fishery Development Authority draws up its own budget for the coming year. It submits that budget to the Minister to whom it is accountable, the Minister of Fisheries. The Minister of Fisheries submits it to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, that means the Cabinet, practically speaking it means the Cabinet. The Cabinet having analyzed it first, and his officials in his department having analyzed it and had finally brought it to a point that they could approve it, they then present it to the Cabinet who then analyzes it in the light of all the consideration which a Cabinet is expected and indeed must give to such things. These are financial considerations, and other practical considerations. Because a Cabinet Government is a political government wherever it is found. Then, having passed the Cabinet, the Minister brings it before this House, the Legislature, where it is debated. Now, so far there is no hint of dictatorship. So far there is no hint of it here. Now then that is not all: The Treasury Board which consists of the Minister of Finance as Chairman, the Attorney General as a member, the Minister of Labour as a member, the Minister without Portfolio, the honourable member for Harbour Main-Bell Island, and one other minister make up the Treasury Board, on the joint recommendations of the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Finance, may by regulations prescribe the form in which the budget required by this section shall be prepared. That is not all: Because I find that Section 17 of the Bill, "The Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from moneys voted by the Legislature for the purpose, make available and pay to the Authority from time to time such funds as it may require for the proper carrying out of its work." But I ask the House to note the essential fact in this sub-clause that—it shall be from moneys voted by this House that the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall pass over to it such funds as it may require for the proper carrying out of its work. Now, we have the picture fairly complete. Let us take it step by step.

The Fishery Development Authority draw up their budget for a year ahead. They submit it with their recommendations to the Minister to whom they are immediately accountable. He, with his department and his other officials attack that and list it, break it down and finally in a form that they approve recommend it to the Cabinet, which examines it and finally approves it in some form, either as it was referred originally from the Fisheries Development Authority or as it was received from them and amended by the Minister or in such form as the Cabinet may amend it, and they finally commit it to the House and the House votes on it, and the House, including my honourable friends opposite vote on an appropriation Bill, a sum of money voted on the information that has been laid before the House, and the Government passes the money over to the Fishery Development Authority. Now, what is undemocratic about that? Where is the dictatorship?

MR. HOLLETT: No one said that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I know it was called nationalization; and socialization; and industrialization which was something I agreed with. I know my honourable friend talked about dictatorship the day before yesterday, but it does not arise in this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: I did not talk about dictatorship.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now it says: "The Authority may receive and accept such other sums of money as may from time to time be paid to it by way of grant, contribution or reimbursement from any source, if it receives such funds to assist it in the attainment of its objects or in the proper exercises of its functions or to re-imburse it for disbursements made by it on any behalf." That is in connection with fishery development.

MR. HOLLETT: So they may take up a collection.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They might take up a collection or my honourable friend might leave them a large sum of money—from any source legally any money might come to them, and this permits them to receive it and also permits them to receive back money they paid out, interest on or the repayment of principal.

"The Authority shall keep proper books of account and proper records in relationship thereto."

"The Auditor General shall at least once in every financial year audit and may, during the course of the year, make an interim examination of the accounts and financial transactions of the Authority and is entitled to have access at all times to all records, documents, books, accounts and vouchers of the Authority and to require from the members and employees of the Authority such information and explanations as he deems necessary."

I don't think there can be any doubt about or objection to that. When the Auditor General makes an interim examination under sub-section (1) he shall submit a report to the chairman and to the Minister. Then it goes on and on and on, providing in every instance, in every clause, in every section and in every sub-clause and every sub-section allowance for sound, businesslike, decent, honest administration, which is naturally the thing it ought to provide for, and which are naturally the things which any Authority such as this having the spending and the practical administration of the spending of so many millions of dollars ought to be bound to. That is what it is bound to, these basically sound sensible, prudent provisions.

Now, the Auditor General shall report annually to the Minister the result of his audit or examination of the accounts and financial statements of the Authority, and the report shall state whether in his opinion (a) the Authority has kept proper books of account; (b) the financial statements of the Authority were prepared on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year and are in agreement with the books of account, in the case of the balance sheet, give a true and fair view of the state of the Authority's affairs at the end of the financial year, and in the case of the statement of income and expenditure, give a true and fair view of the income and expenditure of the Authority for the financial year, and the transactions of the Authority that have come under his notice have been within the powers of the Authority under this Act and any other Act applicable to the Authority. And the Auditor General shall call attention to any other matter falling within the scope of his examination that in his opinion should be brought to the attention of the Legislature.

In any case where the Auditor General is of the opinion that any matter in respect of the Authority should be brought to the attention of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council the Treasury Board or the Minister of Finance, he shall make such report forthwith through the Minister of Fisheries.

Now, here is the one to which my honourable friend gave some considerable attention when he spoke of this Bill.

Section 24—The Authority with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise for the purposes of paragraph (b) of Section 14, but the aggregate of the amounts borrowed under this Act and outstanding shall not at any time exceed twenty-five million dollars.

That is the aggregate borrowed under this Act, not under this clause, but under this Act, borrowed and outstanding shall not at any time exceed twenty-five million dollars.

Now, from that clause, my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, whom I have said so often jokingly, but not always jokingly, seems to be quite incapable of reading any statute and understanding it from his reading of it—from that clause my honourable friend actually argued in this House that the Fishery Development Authority, without any permission, without any sanction of the Government can go off and commit Newfoundland for twenty-five million dollars. He very conveniently overlooked the words “The Authority with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may from time to time do so and so.”

MR. HOLLETT: Should it not be “With the approval of the Legislature”?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We will come to that. That is adequately covered in the Revenue and Audit Act. The Government itself cannot give authority that it has not got. And if it gives authority that it does not possess then that authority is unconstitutional and unlawful. The Government can only give what it has. And what the Government has is lawful and constitutional authority as contained in the Statutes, and the Statute is known as the Revenue and Audit Act which lays down, spells out with great clarity, what the Government may and may not do in the matter of borrowing. There are Provinces in Canada that have the right to go on the financial market at any time and borrow on behalf of the public purse without reference to the Legislature. There are other Provinces in Canada that have to come to the House each time it desires, that the Government of that province desires to float a bond issue. Under our Revenue and Audit Act every individual bond issue has to be separately authorized by a separate statute. Now, in the absence of such a statute we cannot borrow. I have already stated publicly that this Government proposes to ask the House at this session to authorize it to float a bond issue. We cannot float that bond issue until first we get authority from this House. If there is a case to be made for having a government possess the power that without specifically referring back to the House it may go and float a bond issue, there is of course a case to be made against it. But both techniques are in use in the various Province of Canada, as I have no doubt they are in the various states of the American Union. The one advantage of being able to do this without having to come and get a special act passed is that you don’t have to wait for the House to meet or the House having met you don’t have to wait until the Act is passed. At any given moment when the financial market is favourable such provinces as have this power may float a bond issue. Issues have been floated in Canada in recent months at extra low rates and extra convenient terms compared with six months ago, due to certain unusual and exceptional circumstances. This Government could have floated a bond issue, undoubtedly, in recent months at most extraordinary advantageous terms. But we did not. We did not have authority. The House was not open. To this moment we have not even asked the House for the authority, but until we do we cannot borrow. So that this clause here has to be read in the light of that fact, the fact I have just stated.

"The Authority, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise for the purposes of paragraph (b) of Section 14, but the aggregate of the amounts borrowed under this Act and outstanding shall not at any time exceed twenty-five million dollars." That otherwise means by a bond issue. That authority the Lieutenant-Governor in Council cannot give until first authorized by this House to do so.

MR. HOLLETT: They are going to raise your loan for you, is that it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend is not being fair to himself now. I assure him he ought not to say these things, because if he says them people will think he is stupid. He ought to be fairer to himself than that. What my honourable friend is suggesting is that this is a way we have devised to get our loans raised for us, get the Fishery Development Authority to get them for us. My words seem to have fallen on deaf ears, I said before: I can explain a thing to the honourable gentleman, but only the good God can give him the brains to understand. The Government cannot give what it has not got. It has not the authority to give to the Fishery Development Authority power to borrow until first the Government gets the authority from this House. So that before the Fishery Development Authority can borrow they must get the authority, and they can then borrow only what this House has authorized except in the case of borrowing from the fishery, and even this is fully covered. To borrow otherwise they must first have the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council must first have the authority of the House.

MR. HOLLETT: You have not got it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Therefore they cannot borrow. In other words the power of the Fishery Development Authority to borrow lies in this House.

MR. HOLLETT: There should be a loan Bill before you pass this.

MR. SPEAKER: I would suggest that particular point would be better discussed in committee.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was merely attempting to show my honourable friend and to assure his immediate associates in this House. What I was trying, somewhat fruitlessly I fear, was to explain to my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition himself. The capacity to learn is one of the great attributes of mankind. Once a man reaches the point where he cannot learn then the greatest teachers just fall down in humble failure.

MR. HOLLETT: Perhaps you passed that stage long ago.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I admit it is possible in so far as my learned friend is concerned. There are so few things he can teach me. I don't know what it is my honourable friend can teach me now that he is getting advice from his new colleague.

MR. BROWNE: I say nobody can teach you anything.
MR. SMALLWOOD: He is so wrong, my honourable friend. He himself has taught me much in this present session. I hope my honourable friend does not underrate me so much, because I have learned a lot in this session, very much, and I hope I shall continue to learn. One of the things I learned from him is how better to win elections.

MR. SPEAKER: Interesting but I doubt if pertinent.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate so that I may resume the discussion of this great subject at the sitting tomorrow.

MR. SPEAKER: I cannot at this moment, of course, rule on the point of order raised. It would mean I would have to refer to Hansard of that time. Certain extracts from it must be placed here in the House. Personally I am not prepared to admit that a newspaper report is evidence for this House. It is not. However, if the honourable Leader of the Opposition desires, I think I should grant him his wish to have laid here on the table a report by the “Evening Telegram” and the “Daily News” regarding the comments alleged to have been made by the Opposition at that time. That can be done. However, I will not order it from the Chair, because it would not be fair to bring in a newspaper report of what the honourable member said and take for granted that he did use these words.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, I just have this to say: I see the difficulty in which Your Honour has been placed, but it was not by me. At this particular point, since the Honourable the Premi-do I want those words to be left as read?

MR. SPEAKER: I don't know what the honourable member wishes. All I am concerned with is that a certain remark was made and the honourable member said it was not true and asked the honourable member on the other side to take it back. That honourable member said: "I will not take it back." Then the honourable member rose to a point of order. There is nothing left for the Chair to do but have Hansard of the time to show who is right.

MR. HOLLETT: That is satisfactory to me, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SPEAKER: I merely said that if the honourable member wished to forget it I was quite prepared but would not have myself accused of favouring somebody, I don't know whom. I can assure the House I don't feel like favouring anybody.

I cannot see six o'clock because the House has ordered that a motion ordered earlier finally put at a later hour this day. Mr. Clerk will now read the motion offered by the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare.

Mr. Clerk reads: "I move that the House Committee on Privileges be directed to suspend their sittings until the Courts have ruled upon the matter I am referring to them."

MR. SPEAKER: It has been moved and seconded.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, that is open to debate, I take it?

MR. SPEAKER: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Speaker, this matter has been considered here and there has been an alleged breach of privilege of the House. According to all precedents it is the duty of the House to proceed as quickly as possible to consider whether that breach of privilege has occurred. A committee has been appointed. In fact there was a standing committee already in existence since the beginning of this parliament. This committee was designated to consider this alleged breach of privilege that has been referred to them, and it is their duty to go ahead and consider it. It seems to me they can't consider a directive which tells them not to consider it. They certainly cannot have it taken away from them. After all if you look at it in an impersonal way we know what often happens to lawsuits, they are often discontinued and not proceeded with at all. The reason the House formed this committee in the first place is that the House considers its dignity, its high position in the land has been brought into contempt before the general public. It must therefore look upon the affront which the honourable member feels has been offered him as a breach of the privilege of this House. This select committee has been appointed to consider it and it seems to me then it should continue with the work.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I have no strong feelings one way or the other, but it seems to me this House which has ordered the committee to consider this matter can withdraw the instructions it gave, surely, and refer it back. The motion is not to do that, but merely to defer or suspend the work of the committee until later.

MR. HOLLETT: The purpose in raising the point, as far as my own involvement in this is concerned, is that no steps be taken in this House to prejudice in any way a consideration of any claim before the courts.
I don’t know the legality of the point I raised but must say to my mind it is a matter of equity and fairness.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, it must be understood we come far above any court. We create courts, we pass laws, we create them and can pass laws abolishing them. We are away above any court in Newfoundland. We have the privilege as the House to deal with the matter. We may do so and no one may say, no. But if we feel that all things considered, it might be better in the meanwhile, in view of the fact that action has been entered on or is about to be entered on in the court, we might prefer to hold our hand for the time being. We have every right to do that too.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, that is the very point I was about to raise, but I was not raising it in that light at all.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order—how many times can a member speak on a motion?

MR. HOLLETT: The honourable member spoke twice. I have not spoken at all yet.

MR. SPEAKER: We could debate the thing. The arguments I have heard from both sides are incorrect. I am not entering into debate. But this House has set up a committee to deal with a point of privilege; regardless of what the court is doing or not the committee may deliberate. The point I made earlier, before the Honourable Member for St. John’s West came in—if the committee does deliberate and bring in a report, if we discussed the report we would be breaking a parliamentary rule by debating a matter definitely sub judice. Since the motion of the honourable member is that the committee merely suspend a deliberation for a time, I don’t see that we would be denying ourselves any of our privileges, and the committee would still have a right to sit at some other time named by the House. I understood the motion has been moved so that people appearing before the court may not be embarrassed by what has happened in this House. So that Mr. Clerk will read the motion again.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, there is just one point I want to raise. I think I have the right to speak. I have not spoken to this motion except to request that the matter be postponed.

MR. SPEAKER: I am afraid merely standing and saying, Mr. Speaker, constitutes speaking. The honourable member has spoken before, I let him get up then because the Honourable the Premier did also. So that I am not strictly enforcing the rules of debate at this point, because we are attempting to get the best possible solution.

MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, all remaining orders of the day stand deferred.

On motion remaining orders of the day deferred.

MR. CURTIS: May I, Mr. Speaker, give notice that I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill, entitled, “An Act to Amend the Automobile Insurance Act.”

DR. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, with the indulgence of the House I would request leave to give notice that I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill entitled, “An Act Further to Amend the Crown Lands (Mines and Quarries) Act.”
MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Friday, at 3:00 of the clock.

FRIDAY, May 7, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

MR. BROWN: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition on behalf of the voters of Sandy Cove in the District of Bonavista South. The petition asks that the Government of Newfoundland use its strongest influence to see that the road from the highroad from Alexander Bay to Happy Adventure is extended to the Government wharf at Sandy Cove. The road to this wharf is in very poor condition and it is impossible for motor vehicles to use it. This road is the only road in the area that cannot be used by motor vehicles, and is the road to the high school and church. The road has received very little attention from the Department of Public Works and needs to be rebuilt. We, therefore, wish the Government to see that the road in question receives the necessary attention to make it equal to other roads in the area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this petition is signed on behalf of some 126 residents of Sandy Cove. I know Sir, that the general condition of the roads in that area is anything but good, especially at this time of year. I am hoping that some extra money can be spent in this area this year.

I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in presenting this petition, and I move that it be placed on the Table of the House and referred to the department concerned.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the people of Sandy Cove were amongst those who returned me as a member of the National Convention, I think I would be a little ungrateful if I did not add my voice to that of my honourable friend in support of the prayer of this petition. As the petition states, it is correct that the road leading down from Alexander Bay station to Eastport and to Happy Adventure has been put in very good condition, and also the road leading from Eastport down to Salvage. All these roads have been put in very good shape in the last few years. It is only now that my honourable friend brings the petition of his friends in Sandy Cove to our attention. I am reminded of the fact that it is perfectly true that little, if anything, has been done in recent years to put that particular road in shape. Now, I think every living soul down there in Sandy Cove are good friends of mine, many of them personal friends, and because it is common justice, and they deserve what they have requested, I give this petition my very sincere support.

On motion petition received and ordered referred to the department concerned.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Giving Notice of Motion

None.

Giving Notice of Questions

(78) MR. BROWNE—To ask the Honourable the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

How many long liners have been built during the past fiscal year? Who are the owners of same? How much was paid by way of bounty on the hull and how much on the engine of each vessel? What amount of loan is carried by the owner? Is there a mortgage on the vessel for the amount of the loan in each case? Have any other vessels been built for which a bounty was paid? If so, give the name of the owner, state the kind of vessel, amount of bounty together with loan, if any, made on each vessel.

(79) MR. BROWNE—To ask the Honourable the Minister of Mines and Resources to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

To what persons have loans been made for:

(a) The purchase of livestock;
(b) Land development purposes;
(c) The purchase of farm equipment, giving the amount loaned in each case, the conditions for repayment. What was the date of each loan? Has a first mortgage been taken on borrower’s real estate as security? If not, state the reason. Have other applications for loans been approved but not yet granted? Who are these applicants and for what amounts have the loans been approved? Who drafted the mortgages given by borrowers? Was there any charge for same? If so, how much was the amount in each case? Is there a registration fee on each mortgage? Who pays for costs of mortgage and registering?

Answers to Questions

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I draw attention to Question No. 25 on the Order Paper of March 21. It has not been answered, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SMALLWOOD: In reply to that, Mr. Speaker, I will inform the honourable gentleman that this information will be forthcoming upon presentation of the estimates and the budget. Any information which will be forthcoming on that occasion is not information which may properly be asked in the meantime.

MR. HOLLETT: What about the agreement?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It could be asked for on that occasion. I don’t think it will be tabled until that occasion. That is not denying information, that is simply asking the honourable gentleman to wait for the proper moment.

MR. HOLLETT: I may say I was informed on the day after that was brought in, that it would be answered when the Bill was brought in. The Bill has been brought in but it has not been answered.

Answers to Questions No. 74 and 75, being prepared.

Question No. 77: Honourable Minister of Public Works absent.
QUESTION NO. 38:

I. Travelling Expenditure by Department to 31/8/54.

(i) Legislature

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Subdepartment</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>(a) Members of Legislature—Travelling and expense allowance</td>
<td>$28,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(ii) Premier’s Office

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(iii) Finance Department

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(a) Minister’s Office</td>
<td>$509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>2,570</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Auditor General’s Department</td>
<td>4,654</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Social Security Assessment Division</td>
<td>12,051</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(iv) Provincial Affairs

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(a) General Office</td>
<td>490</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) Museum</td>
<td>49</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(v) Education

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(a) Minister’s Office</td>
<td>$1,053</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>2,437</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) School Supervisory Service</td>
<td>23,840</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Vocational Institute</td>
<td>249</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(e) Adult Education</td>
<td>2,689</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(f) Audio-Visual Division</td>
<td>794</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(g) Public Examination Division</td>
<td>217</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(h) Curriculum Division</td>
<td>662</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(vi) Attorney General

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(a) Minister’s Office</td>
<td>$887</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>899</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Magistrates</td>
<td>10,700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Constabulary</td>
<td>2,070</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(vii) Mines & Resources

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Department</th>
<th>Expenditure</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(a) Minister’s Office</td>
<td>$594</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>1,229</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Accounting Office</td>
<td>179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Forestry Division</td>
<td>28,545</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(e) Agricultural Division</td>
<td>25,203</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(f) Land Development Division</td>
<td>8,602</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(g) Crown Lands and Surveys Division</td>
<td>41</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(h) Wildlife Division</td>
<td>29,370</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(i) Mines Branch</td>
<td>3,570</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total: $97,333
Public Works

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(a) Minister's Office</th>
<th>$531</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>647</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Accounting Office</td>
<td>51</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Registry of Motor Vehicles</td>
<td>3,496</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(e) Buildings Division</td>
<td>8,748</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(f) Roads and Bridges Division</td>
<td>10,254</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total: 23,728

Health

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(a) Minister's Office</th>
<th>$2,587</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>4,915</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Accounting Office</td>
<td>96</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Medical Staff</td>
<td>1,771</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(e) Nursing Service</td>
<td>8,186</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(f) Health Inspection Division</td>
<td>794</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(g) Business Management Division</td>
<td>405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(h) General Health Services</td>
<td>5,681</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(i) Public Health Laboratory</td>
<td>726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(j) General Hospital</td>
<td>10,130</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(k) St. John's Sanatorium</td>
<td>989</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(l) West Coast Sanatorium</td>
<td>1,969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(m) Mental Hospital</td>
<td>1,617</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(n) Gander Hospital</td>
<td>955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(o) Botwood Hospital</td>
<td>407</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(p) Cottage Hospital</td>
<td>6,677</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total: 47,705

Public Welfare

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(a) Minister's Office</th>
<th>$2,033</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>1,781</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Accounting Office</td>
<td>55</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(d) Mothers' &amp; Dependents' Allowances Division</td>
<td>265</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(e) Regional Welfare Services</td>
<td>57,604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(f) Child Welfare Division</td>
<td>282</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(g) Public Assistance Division</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(h) Old Age, etc., Division</td>
<td>196</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(i) Boys' Home &amp; Training School</td>
<td>526</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(j) Girls' Home &amp; Training School</td>
<td>82</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(k) Family Court</td>
<td>768</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(l) Northern Labrador Division</td>
<td>1,238</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(m) Corrections Division</td>
<td>422</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total: 65,262

Board of Liquor Control

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>(a) Administration</th>
<th>$1,131</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(b) General Office</td>
<td>2,276</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(c) Sales</td>
<td>54</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total: 3,461
(xii) Municipal Affairs and Supply
(a) Minister's Office .................................................. $1,363
(b) General Office .................................................. 927
(c) Municipal Affairs Administration .......................... 433
(d) Local Government Division ................................. 12,111
(e) Price Control Division ........................................ 107
(f) Supply Administration ........................................ 17
(g) Purchasing Division ........................................... 43

(xiii) Fisheries and Co-operatives
(a) Minister's Office .................................................. $1,161
(b) General Office .................................................. 362
(c) Fisheries Administration ................................... 7,485
(d) Fisheries Engineering Division .......................... 2,670
(e) Fisheries Economic Research Division .................. 522
(f) Vessel Construction Division ............................... 6,446
(g) Fisheries Training School ................................ 2,168
(h) Co-operative Extension ...................................... 8,081
(i) Co-operative Registry ........................................ 6,526

(xiv) Economic Development
(a) Minister's Office .................................................. $5,760
(b) General Office .................................................. 238
(c) Tourist Development .......................................... 4,314
(d) Economic Development ....................................... 1,240

(xv) Labour
(a) Minister's Office .................................................. $1,202
(b) General Office .................................................. 1,094
(c) Boiler Inspection Division ................................. 6,800
(d) Apprenticeship Division ................................... 704
(e) Minimum Wage Division .................................... 41

2. Amounts charged to Suspense Account as of 31/3/54
Head I: Finance
(i) Minister ................................................................. $400
(ii) Auditor General's Department ............................ 684
(iii) Social Security Assessment Division .................. 2,000

Head VI: Education
(i) Minister ................................................................. 400
(ii) General Office .................................................. 50
(iii) School Supervisory Service ............................. 1,500
(iv) Adult Education Division ................................... 760
(v) Audio-Visual Education Division ....................... 125
(vi) Curriculum Division .......................................... 87
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head VIII: Mines and Resources</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Forestry Division</td>
<td>350</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agricultural Division</td>
<td>797</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Wild Life Division</td>
<td>1,447</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head IX: Public Works</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Minister</td>
<td>850</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Office</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Registry of Motor Vehicles</td>
<td>750</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Buildings Division</td>
<td>280</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roads and Bridges Division</td>
<td>1,250</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head X: Health</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Minister</td>
<td>250</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>General Office</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Accounts Office</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nursing Service</td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Health Inspection Division</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Business Management Division</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Public Health Laboratory</td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gander Hospital</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Botwood Hospital</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cottage Hospital</td>
<td>2,200</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head XI: Public Welfare</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Regional Welfare Service</td>
<td>600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Old Age, etc., Division</td>
<td>375</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Labrador Affairs Division</td>
<td>1,143</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head XIII: Municipal Affairs and Supply</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Municipal Office Administration</td>
<td>150</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Local Government Affairs Division</td>
<td>400</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head XIV: Fisheries and Co-operatives</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Minister</td>
<td>500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fisheries Administration</td>
<td>1,900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fisheries Engineering Division</td>
<td>800</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vessel Construction Division</td>
<td>2,800</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fisheries Training School</td>
<td>760</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Co-operative Extension Division</td>
<td>1,685</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Co-operative Registry</td>
<td>1,203</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Head XV: Economic Development</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Minister</td>
<td>325</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Economic Development Division</td>
<td>500</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Head XVI: Labour

(i) Minister .................................................. 300
(ii) General Office .......................................... 100
(iii) Boiler Inspection Division ......................... 1,200
(iv) Apprenticeship Division ............................. 120

1,720

NOTE: The above figures show the position as of 31/3/54. Since that date, in accordance with Treasury requirements, the majority of these Suspense Account items have been cleared.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>NAME</th>
<th>Total Advanced</th>
<th>Accounted for as of 31/3/54</th>
<th>Date of Absence</th>
<th>REMARKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(i) Premier</td>
<td>$2,287.00</td>
<td>$664.80</td>
<td>28/8/53 - 9/9/53</td>
<td>Balance represents expenditure on account of pre-1/4/53 travelling.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(ii) Finance</td>
<td>909.00</td>
<td>(a) 167.65</td>
<td>28/8/53 - 9/9/53</td>
<td>(a) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 167.65</td>
<td>22/10/53 - 5/11/53</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 172.80</td>
<td>14/1/54 - 22/1/54</td>
<td>(b) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(iii) Attorney General</td>
<td>887.05</td>
<td>(a) 172.80</td>
<td>11/5/53</td>
<td>(c) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 172.80</td>
<td>23/5/53</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 172.80</td>
<td>18/7/53</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 172.80</td>
<td>22/10/53</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(iv) Mines &amp; Resources</td>
<td>594.00</td>
<td>(a) 594.00</td>
<td></td>
<td>Miscellaneous travelling in Province.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(v) Education</td>
<td>1,453.00</td>
<td>(a) 40.00</td>
<td>15/4/53 - 29/4/53</td>
<td>(a) Miscellaneous travelling in Province.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 400.00</td>
<td>28/10/53</td>
<td>(b) Accounting for pre-1/4/53 travelling.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(vi) Public Works</td>
<td>1,381.00</td>
<td>(a) 98.00</td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) (850.00)</td>
<td></td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 212.65</td>
<td>14/1/54</td>
<td>(c) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 220.00</td>
<td>12/2/54</td>
<td>(d) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(vii) Health</td>
<td>2,687.00</td>
<td>(a) 505.70</td>
<td></td>
<td>(a) Miscellaneous travelling in Province.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 1,069.35</td>
<td>23/5/53 - 11/6/53</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 630.80</td>
<td>2/1/54 - 24/1/54</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 181.60</td>
<td>12/3/54</td>
<td>(d) Represents T.C.A. fare only.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(250.00)</td>
<td>12/3/54</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>NAME</td>
<td>Total Advanced</td>
<td>Accounted for as of 31/3/54</td>
<td>Date of Absence</td>
<td>REMARKS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------------------------</td>
<td>----------------</td>
<td>-----------------------------</td>
<td>-----------------</td>
<td>----------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(viii) Public Welfare</td>
<td>2,033.00</td>
<td></td>
<td>(a) 92.50</td>
<td>(a) Miscellaneous travelling in Province.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 204.65</td>
<td>(b) 14/ 6/53 -19/ 5/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 459.70</td>
<td>(c) 21/ 9/53 - 1/10/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 691.51</td>
<td>(d) 1/12/53 -17/12/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(e) 589.30</td>
<td>(e) 13/ 1/54 -29/ 1/54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(ix) Municipal Affairs &amp; Supply</td>
<td>933.00</td>
<td>(a) 528.00</td>
<td>(a) Miscellaneous travelling in Province.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 410.55</td>
<td>(b) 11/ 9/53 -24/ 9/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(x) Fisheries &amp; Co-operatives</td>
<td>1,621.00</td>
<td>(a) 312.37</td>
<td>(a) 19/ 4/53 -23/ 4/53</td>
<td>Accounting for pre-1/4/53 travelling.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 354.60</td>
<td>(b) 25/ 5/53 -31/ 5/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 286.35</td>
<td>(c) 5/ 7/53 -12/ 7/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 181.60</td>
<td>(d) 13/ 1/54</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(500.00)</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(xi) Economic Development</td>
<td>5,760.00</td>
<td>(a) 3,952.37</td>
<td>(a) Accounting for pre-1/4/53 travelling.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 306.60</td>
<td>(b) 29/ 4/53 - 2/ 5/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(c) 381.60</td>
<td>(c) 12/ 5/53 -19/ 5/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(d) 247.65</td>
<td>(d) 5/ 6/53 - 6/ 5/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(e) 517.84</td>
<td>(e) 26/10/53 - 4/11/53</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(f) 172.80</td>
<td>(f) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(200.00)</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(g) 181.60</td>
<td>(g) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(125.00)</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(xii) Labour</td>
<td>1,502.00</td>
<td>(a) 990.20</td>
<td>(a) Accounting for pre-1/4/53 travelling.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(b) 212.65</td>
<td>(b) Represents T.C.A. fare.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>(500.00)</td>
<td>(Imprest charged to Suspense).</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

NOTE: Since 1/4/53, claims have been submitted in respect of all amounts shown above as being charged to Suspense, with the exception of Fisheries & Co-operatives and Economic Development.
Orders of the Day

Adjourned debate on second reading of Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fishery Development Authority."

MR. SPEAKER: A point of order arose in that debate yesterday afternoon. I shall remind the House of the situation: At the time the point of order was taken yesterday we had agreed that the Clerk would read the appropriate extracts from Hansard. I shall now ask Mr. Clerk to read the extracts from yesterday's Hansard.

"Mr. HOLLETT: Where are you going to get it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend need not worry about that. Don't let that give him a thought. Two years ago he stood in this House, and with such power as he had, which admittedly was not great, but with such power as he had, he did everything possible to prevent us floating a bond issue. He and his then Leader.

MR. HOLLETT: That is not correct.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not correct? It is absolutely true!

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order:

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend called upon the bond holders to beware of us, and then called upon the government—

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise now to a point of order: I will not allow it to be said in this House that I ever endeavoured to damage the credit of this country in any way; and I shall ask you to take it back.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, so far from taking it back I will now repeat: My honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, stood in this House, as his leader did, and called upon the bankers and bond houses across Canada not to lend this Government one cent. He did that in this House two years ago. Do you think I am going to take that back when the whole House knows it?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, since the Honourable the Premier will not take it back, I will say it is a damnable lie. He is nothing but a damnable liar.

MR. SPEAKER: Order—The honourable member is absolutely out of order.

MR. HOLLETT: Nobody will assist me in my request.

MR. SPEAKER: When any honourable member makes a point of order he must do so without any unparliamentary comment about another honourable member. The words used here were grossly unparliamentary and entirely out of order. The point in question is easily proven, as it is a matter of excerpts from Hansard, or bringing in the Journal to show the vote of the House on that occasion. I will not say what the vote was, as it is not for me to do so. I do not recognize as a point of order a statement made in such unparliamentary language. Let me inject a further point: I and the Deputy Speaker have constantly warned honourable members of the constant use of the pronoun "You," "You did this,"
"You did that." This Chair cannot be called upon to rule on private conversations which improperly take place in the House. If the honourable members would speak through the Chair, more attention might be paid to points of order. Will the Honourable the Premier continue his speech, and refrain from personal comments.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, asked me where we were to get the money. I went on to tell him then that some two years ago the Honourable Leader of the Opposition had done his best, which was not good enough, but his best, to stop the Government from borrowing a dollar across Canada, and read out a statement calling upon the banks and bond houses not to lend money to Newfoundland. That was two years ago. If my honourable friend the Leader of the Opposition hopes somehow this has been forgotten, it is a vain hope.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to a point of order: I must have that Hansard produced here. I have certainly no recollection of ever making such a statement. I don’t think the Honourable the Premier is right in making such a statement, unless he produces the facts. Surely I would not advise any banker not to lend money to this country. If I did, I must have been a sick man at the time. I am aware that money must be loaned to all governments. As to this particular Government, of course, it is a different matter.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The whole party advised the banks not to lend money. He not only did, but his party did. It was the then Leader, not by him but by another Leader. That party met downstairs, and the honourable gentleman who is a lawyer and represents St. John’s East refused to be identified with it. But they all met that day in the Opposition Room and drafted a statement, which their Leader then came up and read out, calling upon the banks and others to beware of this Government, and not to lend money to it, with only the member for St. John’s East who is a lawyer, refraining. That was two years ago. Does he think the people’s money is that short?

MR. SPEAKER: I must take up the point made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. He has a right to ask for documentary proof of the statement made. It will be impossible to produce that at once, but it certainly can be produced. I am not saying that evidence can be brought to show that what the Honourable the Premier has attributed to the Leader of the Opposition was in fact said. But the circumstances surrounding the debate itself will be shown." (End of extract from Hansard, May 6, 1954).

MR. SPEAKER: On that quotation the point of order was taken, and the request made for the production of Hansard. I might say that the entire matter is most distasteful to me. Therefore, I must ask the House to try to appreciate the situation: A certain honourable member makes a statement. He is asked to retract. I cannot order a retraction unless I know that it is properly in order to do so. I can only find that out by referring to Hansard. If I let the matter pass, then I can be accused of favour and prejudice. I must strive to maintain impartiality.

It was further stated in that debate by the honourable member making the point of order, that he was getting no help with his request. On another occasion he said he made a point of order of which nobody took any notice. The word “Nobody” whether intentional or not must of course refer to the Chair. Therefore, I shall have to ask the Clerk now to read the shortest possible excerpts from the debate referred to by the Honourable the Premier; make my ruling on that, and leave it to the House to decide. I do think that is the best way to handle this. While, of course, I cannot choke off debate on the point of order, I think the best way to receive it would be without comment. Certainly we cannot rehash the debate of July, 1952.

Will Mr. Clerk please read the two items which I have indicated, Item No. 1 and No. 2.

(Excerpt from Hansard July 2 "Afternoon Session" 1952).

"MR. HOLLETT: . . . I issue this from this side of the House, Sir, a warning to the banks in general and to those mentioned here this morning in particular, that they will have to be careful, and they will have to go very carefully in their backing of such a proposition of any government in this little province of ours if they wish to retain the respect with which they have been held in this country for many generations."

(Excerpt from Hansard July 3 "Morning Session" 1952).

"MR. CASHIN: . . . We in the Opposition intend to convey to the underwriters, and the four Canadian Chartered Banks, our definite opposition to the subscribing of this new first loan by our Government since we became united with Canada, particularly do we object to the raising of this loan at this particular time to incur a further burden of taxation upon our people as is evidenced by the iniquitous tax of three per cent upon all food commodities. Further, in view of the fact that it does not appear to us to be good business to pay an annual rate of five per cent approximately on ten million dollars when the Newfoundland Government has on deposit with the Federal Government at Ottawa approximately eleven million dollars bearing interest at just 2¾%.

"Now, Mr. Speaker, some of us in these thin ranks of this Opposition have been accused of being traitors to our country, and have been called names which at this moment I consider unparliamentary to mention. Therefore, in view of the fact that we have given our views and will continue to give those views, that we are opposed and strongly opposed to the granting of this proposed loan to the present administration, which, again I say, in our opinion, is incapable, inefficient and untrustworthy to handle public funds. We therefore, in this debate unequivocally register protest. We feel that we would be wasting not our time but the time of this House if we continued in repetition. We have decided, therefore, to leave any further comment on this particular legislation to the members of the Government, to the bankers and underwriterson whom we have warned to be careful of investing in what we consider an irresponsible Government any further money belonging to the people of Newfoundland."
(End of extract taken from Hansard of July 2 and July 3, 1952).

MR. SPEAKER: Now, I am not ruling on the correctness or otherwise of the inference drawn by the Honourable the Premier from his recollection of that speech. The question only is: Can he be asked by the Chair to retract these statements made yesterday. I cannot see that I can make such a request.

Again I would advise the House to let the matter rest there. However, appeal may be made. I go perhaps beyond the limit of my power when I make an appeal to honourable members to try to conduct the business of the House in a manner which would redound to the dignity of the House, and to avoid all personal comments. The way is clear. As I said yesterday it was laid down by myself and by the Deputy Speaker— as soon as an honourable member begins to say "You" he is bound to provoke, or say something which will arouse temper and bring debate into disrepute. There must be a way to criticize an honourable member's speech, surely there must be a way to criticize a policy, without frequent loss of temper or the saying of words harmful or opprobrious to another honourable member. Is the House satisfied?

Adjourned debate on second reading of Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority."

MR. SPEAKER: The Honourable the Premier was speaking.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the House that there are really two Newfoundlands: One is the twentieth century Newfoundland and the other a nineteenth century Newfoundland or perhaps an eighteenth century Newfoundland. The twentieth century Newfoundland is made up of Corner Brook and a number of other modern and prosperous towns of that whole Humber area; of Grand Falls and a number of prosperous and very modern towns and villages of the Exploits Valley; of Buchans which contains, we understand, one of the richest mines in the world, or known to exist in the world; of Bell Island which has the largest known deposit of iron ore in the world although it is not of particularly high quality; St. Lawrence where there are two mines together constituting, as the United States Bureau of Mines handbook says, the largest deposit of high grade fluor spar in the world; Gander, a great international airport; Stephenville which has lying close beside it a great airport; Argentia, another great military area and a few other places, all of them together constituting a part of Newfoundland that is, generally speaking, as modern, as up to date, as progressive and as prosperous as any part of continental North America.

The other Newfoundland, the nineteenth or eighteenth century, and in some respects the seventeenth century Newfoundland is all the rest of the Island. St. John's—the least said the better. I leave it to my honourable friends opposite to speak for St. John's, four of them, as they face me, represent St. John's, God help them!

We represent Newfoundland on this side. It is in this other Newfoundland that the fishery is carried out. It is because the fishery is the central occupation of the people of that other Newfoundland that it is a nineteenth or eighteenth or seventeenth century country—it is because our fisheries are so miserably poor, that they are so miserably backward, that they are so miserably under-developed and undeveloped, that they are so completely or almost completely lacking in the scientific touch of modern capitalism, the touch of very modern industrialism—because our fisheries are still little more than a handicraft—because for the most part our fishery is carried on today almost exactly as it was carried on in the year 1500 and the year 1600 and the year 1700 with no essential difference, or with one or two superficial differences. The fact that the small boats, in which the fishermen go out a mile from the landwash or two miles to the grounds, are boats that are propelled now, for the most part, by small engines whereas formerly they were propelled by small sails or oars—with that slight superficial difference, there is no difference whatsoever in the way our salt cod fishery is carried on today and in the way it was carried on by the first fishermen who settled here the year following the discovery of Newfoundland by John Cabot in 1497. We are told that the Matthew, the seamen aboard the Matthew got codfish by dipping baskets into the water over the side of the boat, and that fish were so numerous that they could actually get codfish in that way. But if they used baskets, and doubtlessly they did, it was only because they were not a fishing vessel, her crew were not fishermen. She was a boat of discovery. They were seamen but they were not equipped to engage in the codfishery. So that catching cod by dipping a basket into the water was never an actual, common practice. The common practice was to jig the fish, which we still do. It was to set trawls, which we still do. It was to handline, that is to say, let out a line at the end of which was one hook which was baited with little pieces of squid or caplin or herring and just hold the line and when the fish got caught on to it you give a little jig and haul in as fast as you could. That is the way they did it, and that is the way they do it. The same holes that were worn in the gunnels of boats from the lines coming in are still worn in the gunnels now, four hundred and fifty years later. There is the same tough and calloused skin on the index finger, it is still seen today four hundred and fifty years later. It is still the same primitive handicraft. Although it is true—it is true—for centuries fishermen could rear their families in these little nooks and crannies along our long coastline with a fair degree of contentment—these were the happy days described by my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition the other day when he was telling about when he was a boy fifty odd years ago. These were the happy days my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West loved to picture in his mind, where they dance around the maypole. While it is true that down through the centuries fishermen following their handicraft could make a living of a kind which left them reasonably contented, it was only because in those days our fishermen wanted but little here below nor wanted that much very long. It was only because they lived on hard bread known as hardtack and some herring.

MR. BROWNE: They lived better than that, you malign them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't want to be too personal about how the honourable gentleman lived when he was a boy. I am referring to centuries ago. Indeed I am referring to the period down to the outbreak of the First World War in 1914. From the first fishermen that squat in a little out-of-the-way cove somewhere along our coast, back four and a half centuries ago, down to the outbreak of the First World War. Throughout that whole long period, I say, the fishermen lived on Hamburg Bread (Hardtack) on some herring, some leggies as they call them today, on a few potatoes, and frequently not even potatoes, occasionally a bit of fat pork, fatback.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask the honourable member what authority he has for that statement?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am my own authority. I happen to be a Newfoundland historian. I am the only one who has made a living out of that, Newfoundland history, and I did it for seven years when it was my only source of income. I was a professional historian. I was secretary of the Historical Society, and author of a half dozen books on Newfoundland history. So that I am my own authority to save time. I could bring in a raft of references.

MR. BROWNE: The "Barrelman" not excepted.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend has never accepted me, but a lot of people have. I am here. There is a difference in the number of acceptances as shown by the division of this House.

I say they lived on a starvation diet for most of four hundred and fifty years. Our Newfoundland fishermen and their wives and their children dress more poorly. I have already said in this House, and I repeat, the overwhelming number of the fishermen in Newfoundland have but one suit of clothes in their entire life.

MR. BROWNE: Nonsense!

MR. SMALLWOOD: One suit of clothes! Indeed in my own time I have known fishermen who had only one suit of clothes throughout their lives. I have personally known fishermen like that. Mostly they wore a pair of pants made of sail canvas or canvas ducking and they wore a coat known as a canvas jumper. If they were a bit aristocratic they had a blue guernsey. It was a sign of blue-blood almost to see a fisherman wear a blue guernsey—I remember seeing a member of this House of Assembly, on this side of the House, wearing his blue guernsey. He was not only on this side but was for a little on that side. "They wanted little here below nor wanted that little long." So, they could live on forty quintals of fish a year. That supported them because they lived on a sub-human standard. Then came this First World War. We had a larger proportion of our young men enlisting in the Royal Navy and in the British Army and in the Forestry Battalion and then later in the Royal Flying Corp, a higher proportion than the young men of any other part of the British Dominions overseas. We had, I believe, between eight and ten thousand of our young men who went off to train in Scotland and in England and on to France and Gallipoli. Then they came back after four years, those who lived, and most of them did. Thousands of them went through the hard times between the two wars and then another war broke out and thousands more went off to Canada, to the United States, to the United Kingdom. We had, perhaps, twenty thousand Newfoundland men in the various services of the allied nations in the last war. Then they came back, most of them. In the meanwhile radio had become widespread, movies had become widespread. At this moment in Newfoundland there are five hundred places, many of them little fishing settlements, in which movies are exhibited every week. All of these things: the effect of the two great wars, the effect of the various circumstances during these two world wars, the effect of radio, the spread of newspaper circulation, the fact that during the war, the last war, some seven or eight hundred million dollars was spent by the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada to construct and expand military bases, army, navy and air bases; and that tens upon tens of thousands of our young people, our fishermen, our loggers, engaged upon the greatest migration of men Newfoundland has ever known in her history. The Island was criss-cross, it was like an ant hill of men leaving their homes and going to Gander, Harmon Field, Corner Brook, Goose Airport, Stephenville, tens of thousands of them going to work in these construction camps, getting good food, getting the best food they had ever known in their lives. I remember that during two or three years of that period I, myself, lived at Gander. I was raising pigs. I ate at the cafeteria where there were five hundred Newfoundlanders, civilian workers of the Royal Air Force Transport Command. These were manual workers who lived, for the most part, in great barracks. Those who were rather better paid lived in buildings containing single and double rooms. But we all ate at the one cafeteria, five hundred Newfoundlanders. I talked on scores of occasions with my friends there at Gander who had come from virtually every point of the compass of this Island. We discussed the food, the fresh celery every day and the fresh beef in some form or another every day, seven days a week. On Fridays and Wednesdays for those who would not eat meat there was fish of all kinds. High-class living, we thought it was, but it was just the ordinary fare that ordinary Canadian and American citizens were accustomed to, without which they would consider themselves put upon.

All these factors added together, and many others I could mention, meant that that eighteenth or nineteenth century Newfoundland would not continue to be an eighteenth or nineteenth century Newfoundland. Let no one for one moment suppose that the fisherman living in Joe Batts Arm is less ambitious to enjoy a degree of good living and a decent standard of living than is the paper-maker in Corner Brook. Let no one suppose that the fisherman down in the heart of White Bay wants less or desires less than the mine-worker in Buchans. Let no one suppose that the humblest fisherman in the smallest little nook or corner wants less, desires less, than the most prosperous and advanced wage-worker we have in our most prosperous industry. So that psychologically our fishermen are not at all behind our most advanced workmen in industry. They are only behind them materially. They live on less family income: I will quote now from the Newfoundland Fishery Development Committee commonly known as the Walsh Report:
FAMILY INCOME AND EXPENDITURE

"The discussion of income, expenditure and savings in the families of inshore fishermen is restricted to the families of skipper men, thus the limitations of the primary data. The averages obtained are probably higher than they would be if other fishermen's families had been included in the sample. Even so, they are very low indeed by general Canadian standards. While there are, of course, wide variations in the actual size and composition of these families, the average may be represented by a family consisting of the skipper, his wife and three children (some of whom assist in the fishing enterprise) living at home."

So that he will get the best of it. It is an account of how the skipper man lives, the owner of a forty, fifty, eighty or ninety or a hundred ton schooner, the skipper man, the planter, the small businessman. It is not the shareman we are talking about now, the hired man or the shipped men or the sharemen, the proletarian of the fisheries. These are the small capitalists. They could not gather enough information about the others. The averages obtaining are probably higher than they would be for other fishermen.

"In 1950 the income of such a family averaged about $1,100 in cash and $200 in kind, or a total of approximately $1,300. This represents a decline of over $300 from 1949, attributable to the fall in the price of fish which was offset only to a very small extent by an increase in receipts from other sources. At least half of all families come within the income range of $1,000 to $1,800. Income by source for the average family in 1950 may be summarized as follows, using round figures:"

Now they are talking here about Captain Thompkins, Captain Stanford, talking about the Pickets, about the great fish-killers of Bonavista Bay. Talking about the men who carry the great Labrador fishery on their shoulders.

MR. BROWNE: He is speaking of inshore fishermen.

MR. SMALLWOOD: As a matter of fact they are better off even than the Labrador fishermen. Now, let us look at the list of the income of such a family in 1950, averaging about $1,100 in cash and $200 in kind or a total of $1,300. That represents a decline of $300 since 1949.

MR. HOLLETT: Since Union.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Attributed to the fall in the price of fish which was offset only to a very small extent by an increase in receipts from other sources. My honourable friend is always very apt, very ready, to draw attention to anything that he thinks is a slur upon Confederation. He is always equally apt and equally ready to maintain a very discreet silence on anything that is a credit to Confederation. But my honourable friend is fooling no one. My honourable friend ought to know that the people of Newfoundland have settled that matter. Their minds are closed on it and they are only irritated by that little, petulant, pettiness. They are made impatient and irritated by it and they keep rejecting the people who indulge in such pettiness, and that type of carping criticism.
"From fishing:
Skipper ................... $ 500 40%
Other members of family 200 15%

700 55%

From other occupations 200 15%

From Government:
Family allowances 100 8%
Other 100 7%

200 15%

Sub-total, cash income $1,100 85%
Non-cash income 200 15%

Total income $1,300 100%

Now there is your great fishery: The skipper man $500 and other members of his family $200, a total of $700, and from the other occupations he gets $200 bringing the total to $900. He gets from the Government in Family Allowances and other Government sources another $200 making the sub-total of his cash income $1,100, of which $200 came from the Government. Then he has a non-cash income of $200. Non-cash income consists of home produced food and firewood for family use. This item appears in almost 100 per cent of family budgets, and in 50-60 per cent of the cases accounts for over 10 per cent of the total family income. In more than 10 per cent of the cases it represents 25 per cent or more of the family income. Firewood is the chief item, followed in descending order of importance, by garden produce, meat, dairy and poultry products, fish and fruit.

"Government transfer payments (excluding price support) are of considerable importance in many family budgets, although about 80 per cent of the families surveyed received none at all. Some 20-25 per cent of families obtained a quarter or more of their total."

So it goes on and on and on.

Then the report says:

"The foregoing statistics suggest that, for a good many families, income from fishing is insufficient to sustain even the low standard of living to which they are accustomed, that only a few of them are able to obtain supplementary income to any considerable extent from farming or from regular seasonal work in the woods and that a large number have to rely, to a considerable extent, on Government payments, home-produced food and a variety of occasional occupations to make up the deficiency.

The preceding analysis of sources of family income is of particular interest if one is concerned, as we are, with the possibility of a substantial rise in the general standard of living of fishermen. Fishing income, as we have seen, is much too small to maintain even the present low standard of living and is being supplemented from other sources. An increase in fishing income, in order to make an appreciable difference to family living, would therefore have to be very great for the majority of the fishermen. Such an increase can hardly be brought about by a rise in the price received by the fishermen for his product because the scope for price rises, whether they may be due to improved quality or market conditions, is too limited. What is required, therefore, as already suggested, is a great increase in production per man. That, in turn, requires a change in production methods."
Page 50:

"To conclude, therefore, we may define the problem of the Newfoundland fisheries in these terms: The traditional equilibrium of the resources, the industry (including the population dependent on it or involved in it) and the market is breaking down—as a result of pressures from several directions. The objective of a development programme should be to establish a new equilibrium on the basis of a fully modernized fishing industry—on that, utilizing the resources to the greatest advantage and meeting market requirements to the fullest extent, provides the fishing population with a living conforming to the national standard."

That is not fishermen dancing around the maypole. That is not your women out yaffling fish nor in the store gutting fish and cutting fish throats. That is not children kept back from school to dry the fish on the flakes. That is not your happy medievalism brought back in the twentieth century to the fish flakes, but rather a fully modernized fishing industry, one that utilizes the resources to the best advantage, and meeting market requirements, and providing the fishing population with a living conforming to the national standard. Note those words "conforming to the national standards." It does not say "to the provincial standards." Have you noticed that is not good enough, a standard of living that will equal our provincial level is not good enough.—But "conforming to the national standard of Canada," and that is the second highest standard of living, materially, in the world, Australia being first and it is a toss-up between Canada and the United States. In sheer cash income, probably, the United States is higher than Canada, but admittedly Canada has one of the highest standards of living in the world. Here what is called for is a fully modernized fishing industry utilizing the resources to the best advantage and meeting market requirements to the fullest extent, and by so doing provide the fishing population, the fishermen, with a living that conforms to the standard of Canada as a whole.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is what this Government is trying to do. That is our objective. That is the purpose of this Bill, to which my honourable friends on the opposite side attach so much importance. All of them present at this moment have spoken on it, and were able to express their views in a matter of sixty minutes, the three of them put together. Their views were boiled down to three words. The Leader of the Opposition described the whole programme as "Nationalization of the Fisheries." His immediate follower on his left summed it up as "Socialization of the Fisheries." The intellectual member, the Tory Representative of the Intelligentsia, or the Representative of the Tory Intelligentsia, the honourable member for St. John's West—

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, is the honourable gentleman entitled to make these personal references? I object to it, Mr. Speaker. I think he should withdraw them.

MR. SPEAKER: Yes, with reference to a party, not in reference to the honourable member concerned.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I referred to the honourable gentleman as the representative of the Tory Intelligentsia. Is it insulting to refer to a man as representing the "Tories"? I am afraid it is, although it is not meant to be.
There is such a thing as "Toryism." My honourable friends opposite seem to be identified with Toryism. They are the representatives in this House of Toryism. Now they may be "Liberals" and some of them are personally, but they are here as representatives of the organized Tories. So the third honourable member summarized this whole fishery programme as "Industrialization of the Fisheries." When he did so, I agreed with him, and I do now. But he did not mean that as a compliment. He does not think that to industrialize the fisheries of Newfoundland is a good thing. If I understand his philosophy, he thinks that is a terrible thing, to Industrialize the Fisheries. He honestly thinks, and I believe he sincerely thinks, it would be a terrible thing to do. On the contrary we think it is the thing to do, and certainly it was recommended by this committee after two years of hard work investigating the problem.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself for a few moments to another aspect of this matter. I said I think it was yesterday, that I never would have advocated Confederation with Canada, not for a moment, if I had not believed that Union with Canada would have meant automatically that our fisheries could then be made to be prosperous. Not just that the mere fact of Confederation would mean it would follow automatically, I do not mean that. But I did think, and I did mean, and I did say, that the fact of Confederation would of itself make it possible, make it feasible, make it practical that prosperity would be brought to our fisheries and our fishermen. I did say that, and I did believe it. I never would have advocated Confederation otherwise. I went on to say, as I repeat today, that unless Confederation means that, unless it produces that result, then it is a failure, because we never became part of Canada to live on Family Allowances. We never became part of Canada to live on Old Age Pensions nor to live on Unemployment Insurance nor to have all our people employed by the C.N.R. and get the good C.N.R. rates of pay nor to have the rest of us employed by the Canadian Government as Federal Civil Servants: we did not become a part of Canada, a Province of Canada, to become poor relatives of Canada. We certainly did not become a province to become a Canadian poor house. We became a Province of Canada because we believed, some of us, in fact, most of us Newfoundlanders believed in the end, by the time the final vote was taken, most of us believed that in union with that great nation, that great British nation, occupying more than half of the North American Continent, in union with that great nation, an up-and-coming nation, with so brilliant a future, governed by such able men; in union with such a country as that Newfoundland could not go down, but that she had to go up, had to go forward. Well that carried with it the inevitable belief that the thing that deals with half our entire population, namely, the fishery, that thing too must go forward. Newfoundland cannot go forward, cannot prosper, unless the fisheries prosper. It is just foolish, just hypocrisy, just a mockery, just wrong to say that you can have a prosperous Newfoundland without a prosperous fishery. It just cannot be done.

Now, I wonder if anyone in Ottawa would dare to stand in the House of Commons or in the Senate and say boldly that the Almighty God made a mistake when he made the waters that lap the shores of the eastern side of Canada, including Newfoundland, to team with fish? Was that a mistake on the Almighty God's part? Would anyone in the Government of Canada or the Parliament of Canada say so publicly? Or will anyone say that this great natural resource, which is unlike coal, unlike iron, copper, lead and zinc which can get mined out and disappear, or unlike agriculture which you have to cultivate, is a mistake. You don't have to plant and cultivate codfish but just go and haul them out of the water. It is a very natural, natural resource. Is anyone going to say that great natural resource is a mistake? Is anyone going to say that ought not to be used? Is anyone in Ottawa going to fly in the face of Providence and say: a plague on your fisheries? It is only a few years ago when the Governments of the United States, Canada and Newfoundland formed a joint board to take possession, sure and certain possession, of every codstill that was produced in North America, or any other kind of fish. The Joint Food Board said to Trinidad in the Caribbean, Europe, North Africa, their democratic friends -- If you want fish, all right you can have so much, so many cases of sardines, so many million pounds of salt cod, you can have so many pounds of fillets. Most of the fillets went to the United Kingdom to keep them going. That was only a few years ago, when fish was regarded as one of the great ingredients of winning the war. That was only a few years ago. When Newfoundland went into the Canadian Union we made Canada at once, overnight, the greatest single source of fish of all the nations of the world. We made Canada the world's greatest fishing country.

Now we won a great advantage when we induced the Government of Canada to come in with us in the appointment of this committee. It was a joint effort and that was a joint committee. They were represented in its personnel as we were. We agreed unitedly on the chairman, he was to be Sir Albert Walsh, the Chief Justice of Newfoundland. Now, Sir Albert Walsh is a Federal agent being appointed Chief Justice of Newfoundland by the Governor General of Canada, acting on advice, of course, of the Prime Minister of Canada. So that he would not become Chairman of this committee except with the consent of the Government of Canada. That was the first point at which the two governments agreed. Then we agreed that there should be two representatives of the fishermen, two representatives of the fish merchants and one representative of the two governments. That was done. So that at least they went along with us that far, that there should be such a committee. They went along with us a lot further than that since then. They have agreed with the idea of taking some five or six or eight fishing settlements in Newfoundland, of different types, with varying conditions. They have agreed with us on that. They have agreed with us also that they will spend several million dollars of Federal money, as we spent several millions of provincial money, roughly half and half, to test the ideas suggested and that are recommended in the Fishery Development Committee's Report.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is necessary to bring in this Bill. This Bill is not superfluous. It cannot be done without. It had to be brought in here, and it is here. It was necessary that the Government (this Government that is) should ask this House to set up in this Province such a special Authority to handle all these matters. That is what this Bill does. It was necessary that this Bill should give that Authority its power, that it should lay down the limitations of the powers, a clear definition of its jurisdiction, this Bill does that. For that reason this Bill has to be passed or there is no fishery development programme.

Now, I said something here yesterday that I want to amplify today. It is necessary that I should amplify it today because I noticed at lunch hour that one of the radio commentators, Mr. Donald Jamieson, to be exact, dealt in his broadcast today with a point I made yesterday or the day before when I said that my knowledge of the fishermen of Newfoundland made me think that the average fishermen would settle for a better price for his fish this year. Mr. Jamieson went on to say that (by way of defending the fishermen and quite properly but a little unnecessarily perhaps) could be expected. The fishermen only lived always from hand to mouth, from day to day, month to month and year to year, and learned to expect the worst and not the best. That is true. What Mr. Jamieson said is perfectly true. That is why I said what I said. It is one of our tragedies that after four and a half centuries of being battered, battered by fish merchants, and the gentleman whom my honourable and learned friend the Leader of the Opposition called, blood-sucking commercial agents, after centuries of that it is a little futile to expect the fishermen to have an abiding faith in the likelihood of their getting justice, especially social justice. They might perhaps expect if they bring a man before a magistrate to get legal justice, but to think that they would get social justice in Newfoundland is a little bit optimistic, is it not, when you view the history of the fisheries and the history of the fishermen of Newfoundland? So that I won't be surprised if our fishermen in Newfoundland hearing this Bill is debated for a solid month, and there is never a day passing for a month when on the radio they don't hear that the House of Assembly is at it again today debating fishery development, and the only talk in the House of Assembly now is fishery development. I would not be a bit surprised if the average fisherman is left as cold as at the beginning.

MR. HOLLETT: He is now.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And that he was concerned only with how much he was going to get on the price of this year's fish he is going to take out of the water. As Don Jamieson said today—That is what affects the standard of his living for the winter months coming. That will decide the question, will they have to come to the Government for a dollar-fifty or will they get enough from the price of fish to be able to live in frugal comfort and in Christian decency. (I know the source of that. My honourable and learned friend, my honourable and intellectual friend was the first to introduce me to it in 1925). But they will not be able to live in frugal comfort and Christian decency out of the price of fish as it has been in these recent years.

Mr. Speaker, I am a confederate. As long as I live, and I suppose after I am dead, that will stick to me. People will believe that somehow I believed in Confederation. I am sort of stuck with it, and because I am, I never feel like saying anything very harsh, at least not publicly, anything very harsh about the Government of Canada. I think the House will understand that, I don't think it will have much difficulty in appreciating how I feel on that matter. A lot of people would like to be able to say—Well he is beginning to learn—a lot of people would like to be able to say that. A lot of people would like to be able to say—Well, Smallwood is not as keen on Confederation now as he was. They would be very wrong—very wrong. But I will say this: That I doubt very seriously that the Government of Canada has, with regard to the fisheries of Canada, a sense of appreciation that these fisheries deserve to have—I doubt it. You have on the northeast coast today a hundred thousand people living on an industry that is a depressed industry. Tell me another industry in the length and breadth of Canada that could be in a state of chronic depression as long and as badly as our fishing industry, and receive so little national attention, attention at a national level, as the fisheries of Canada have—tell me one!

MR. HOLLETT: Go on with that. We will back you up. Go on.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If my honourable friend is going to start backing me up I will start talking differently. I will not be backed up. I will not have it. I must be wrong. I am wrong somewhere.

MR. HIGGINS: Start all over. No, don't start all over again.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, Newfoundlanders are very often, especially around here in St. John's and in Gander and Buchans and Corner Brook and Harmon Field and Argentia, and in the more prosperous places, usually very proud and tough people. My own experience is that in the fishing settlements they have not that same type of pride. They have pride, but it is not the same type, it is not a nationalistic pride that we find in our fishing settlements. But I think all of us are a proud people. We think we have some reason to be proud. After all we are the first of Britain overseas. This is where the British Empire was planted. Here in St. John's is the oldest town in the Western Hemisphere. Oh yes, the oldest, never mind your St. Augustine nor your saint anything else—St. John's is the oldest continuously settled place for the white man in the Western Hemisphere. St. John's has been continuously settled since 1497, on June 24, 1497. From that day to this it has been continuously settled. If my honourable friend wants a debate on historical matters, let us hire a hall and do it, the CLB Armoury, and make it real poetic justice, let us have the CLB Armoury.

We Newfoundlanders are a proud people, and we thought we honoured Canada by becoming Canadians. We are willing to admit Canada was bigger than we and richer than we and probably endowed with more natural resources than we, but not better than we are—that is our feeling. Now, as surely as God is in Heaven this is what is going to happen to Newfoundland—one of these two things:

(1) We are going to be increasingly dependent on Ottawa for our living, Family Allowances and Old Age Pensions and Unemployment Insurance and the salaries and wages of the Federal Civil Servants in Newfoundland and the salaries and wages of the CNR employees and the CNT employees, the Federal Department of Public Works moneys spent on building of wharves and breakwaters and on the erection of buildings.
these things put together, and a little handout in the way of deficiency payments on salt codfish, will loom bigger and bigger in our eyes, and we will become more and more dependent on them, and these sources of income will become proportionately greater and greater. In other words we will become a glorified poor house, or—

(2) We will become an independent province contributing more to Ottawa than we take from Ottawa so that it will be possible for the Premier of Newfoundland to do in this very chamber what the Premier of Newfoundland did last year, produce figures to show that in the first five years of Confederation the Government of Canada poured many millions of dollars into Newfoundland more than that Government took out of Newfoundland. That could be reversed. Then Newfoundland would become a great market for the manufacturers of Ontario, for the wheat growers of Saskatchewan, and Newfoundland would become a great market for the Province of Quebec.

MR. BROWNE: Is it not now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No. With a hundred thousand people on the northeast coast living on a simply barbaric standard of living there is no great market there. Of course in Gander, Grand Falls, St. John's, Argentia, Harmon Field, Stephenville, Corner Brook, Deer Lake, Bell Island and in all the industrial centres yes, but not in the fishing settlements. Along the coast of Newfoundland there are miserable markets. Surely—am I so muddled in my thinking that I am wrong when I say that the only way Canada can be great, permanently and enduringly great and continually becoming greater is for every individual province to be a "Have" province. You go ahead or you go back, you cannot stand still. Surely that is the way it is done. It is not to have half "Have" provinces and half of them "Have-not" provinces, and the half who are "Have-not" sort of living in a way of the half that have. Surely that is not the way. Why not be logical about it? Why not lop off from the Canadian nation such provinces as full-fledged provinces, make them dependencies, make them colonies, Canadian Colonies, if you like? But lop them off as full-fledged Canadian Provinces. Why not lop off Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and give us an inferior status? Why not just make us colonies for Canada? Just Canadian colonies, Canadian markets increasingly poorer and poorer as markets but that is all we would be, just markets. And if by chance there should happen to be found some raw material, some natural resource not found elsewhere in Canada, produce that and ship that up to the factories as a raw material to be manufactured into a finished product in Ontario. Now, surely it is either that or it is a case of making or helping to make these four provinces down here (I say it quite candidly; I don't give a tinker's curse for the others. My concern is here in Newfoundland. It was Newfoundland that elected me. I did not get any votes in Nova Scotia. But I see their case is the same as ours and that ours is about the same as theirs. I can see that. So that willy-nilly we have a case in common). We are four provinces down here. Here we have the fishery. It is something already here. We have got the fish. I think I said once before, if I did not say it in this House, I said it somewhere else. I will say it again now: Our biggest bay is Placentia Bay. If all the codfish and haddock and rosefish and halibut and plaice and flounder and grey sole and scallops and herring—no leave out the herring—if all these other fish swimming around our coastline headed for some mysterious reason for Placentia Bay and all swam into Placentia Bay they would misplace the water completely. You would have, where you have now an ocean, you would have a solid jam of fish, millions upon millions of tons of fish.

Mr. Speaker, the day is shortly coming when there will not be enough beef cattle in Canada and the United States to provide North America with enough beef. And they are the great beef eaters of the world. It is not the English who are the great beef eaters but the Americans and the Canadians. The time is rapidly coming, I suggest, when there won't be enough beef. The time has already come when poultry and eggs and beef and pork are really fish marketed in the form of poultry and eggs and beef and pork. They are really fish because a beef animal won't put on weight and a cow won't produce milk and a hen won't produce eggs or meat poultry without lots of protein food. The ordinary grains they eat are not enough. Wheat, corn and barley and the other grains and other cereals are not enough, you have to enrich them greatly with protein supplement, concentrated fish.

Most assuredly we have one of the greatest natural resources of nature in our fish! And assuredly, it requires only the capital, brains and determination to turn that fish into wealth to feed people, and especially to feed the people who produce the fish and to give them a decent living! I claim that our fishery should become as modernized as our paper mills. I hope that the same exactness, the same preciseness technologically should be applied to the production and processing of fish as has been applied to the manufacture of newsprint paper, sulphite pulp. It has to be taken out of the class of handicraft and put in the class of being a scientific industry. Now, I know I could get an awful hearty laugh from a public meeting of fishermen—and I can picture in my mind now if the honourable member for St. John's East, the legal member, should happen to go on the radio Saturday night or any Saturday night when his turn comes, I can picture in my mind what he could do if any fishermen were listening to him, if by any chance he got some fishermen to listen to him. I can imagine what he could do with his St. John's sense of humour. That is a peculiar brand of humour. It is about one-third Irish, one-third English and the other third a sort of melting pot of all sorts of nationalities. St. John's humour is a thing all by itself. I can imagine what he could do with his St. John's sense of humour. I can imagine my honourable friend and what fun he could make, poking fun at all this whole idea. "Do you know what the Premier was saying? I was listening to him down in the House of Assembly. I sat there saying nothing, and I just listened. Do you know what he was saying? He said there was not enough science in the fishery." I know what my honourable friend could do. In fact I believe I could almost do it myself. I believe I could caricature myself.

Mr. Speaker, we know one thing full well. We know what we get when we have not got that science applied to the fishery. What we get is poverty. What we get is destitution. What we get is an extremely low productivity on the part of those individual fishermen. What we get is pure slavery on the fish flakes for the women and children. What we get is generally a low standard of living, a sort of peasant existence. That is what we get. That is on the record. We have four and a half centuries to prove it. That is the result of not applying science to the fishing techniques.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest a recess of ten minutes.

MR. SPEAKER: Order. Before we resume I am going to make a statement. I would be grateful if honourable members present would pass it on to those who are not here: It is the duty of all members to attend the sittings of the House. When the buzzer is pressed it is a signal to come in. Honourable members should not keep those here waiting beyond the time of recess. Otherwise we shall dispense with recess.

Will the honourable member resume his speech:

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I would like now to deal with one or two absolutely practical aspects of the Fishery Development Programme. My honourable friend, the newly elected member for St. John's West, asked a question of me, I think it was yesterday or the day before. The question was: "Where does private enterprise fit into all this?" I think he meant all this whole programme of fishery development. Of course it is a very practical question and a very fair one, and is deserving of a straightforward answer, especially in view of the fact that two of his colleagues had described the programme in the terms they were pleased to imply. One of them called it nationalization and the other called it socialization of the fisheries. Now, I am not going to be enticed into a discussion of socialism. I have no doubt in my mind and my honourable friend himself has none in his, I am sure, that socialism is a good thing in some ways. I think he believes in socialism for posts, if not telegraphs then certainly for posts, for mails. I don't think he would be happy to see the distribution of letters passed over to private enterprise. I think he would prefer to see it socialized. I think he would prefer to see the navy, the army and the air force socialized. But I am not going to be drawn into a discussion of socialism. But I think we can both agree on this one point: If there is anything on this earth that you should not attempt to socialize or nationalize it is the fishing industry of Newfoundland, because you could go far and not find an industry so individualized and so inherently by its very nature competitive as the fishery. I had wondered what this Russian boat was doing out on our banks. Is she owned by the state? Are the fishermen and fisherwomen who are apparently on her, employees of the state? What are they paid in wages? Do they get a share? What is the sociological and economic arrangement under which they operate? It would be interesting to know. It would be interesting to compare these arrangements with those of the Portuguese and the Spanish ships that fish side by side with them on the same banks. But whatever might be the case in Russia, I think it must be agreed that the fisheries of Newfoundland will be the last economic enterprise on the face of the globe that will be nationalized.
Now what is left? If they are not to be nationalized or socialized what is left? It seems to me that there are two things left, two possibilities: one is private enterprise, private capital and the other is co-operative enterprise. I am quite satisfied that the fisheries of Newfoundland (and I speak of them now as fisheries not manufacturing) for all time be carried on either by one or the other or by a combination of the two. Certainly insofar as this Government is concerned (and I can speak for it as it is now, as it will be as long as we are in office) what we seek is ever more and ever more and still ever more co-operative endeavour. We are now concerned, the Honourable Minister of Co-operatives and all of us in this Government, and are all convinced now that the co-operative movement should grow naturally from the ground up and not be superimposed upon people from above. We found ourselves when we took office with a Co-operative Division, we made it into a department of the Government with a Minister in charge of it. Our whole policy has been, and my honourable friend's the Minister has been announced at Co-operative conventions, our policy in that regard is for the Government to get out of it; to have the functions of the Department of Co-operatives taken over progressively more and more by the Co-operative Unions of Newfoundland. We have done quite a bit to assist the movement to be born and to grow. It is also our policy to have a truly great department of extension in the University. Indeed if I were to express my own personal feelings in the matter, it is that we ought to have a great department of extension attached to the work of the University. It should take over the sponsorship of that great work amongst our people in Newfoundland. That movement should be a peculiarly and distinctive Newfoundland blending of the land grant colleges of the United States of which I doubt not my honourable friend is familiar—the work of the United States Department of Agriculture and county field men and county agriculture of the United States Department of Agriculture, of the various farmers and primary producer co-operative organizations across the United States, and a number of other such types of activity. We should have a peculiarly Newfoundland blending of all of these with certain Newfoundland aspects added in, and the whole of them carried on by our Extension Department in our own University. That is what we would like to see.

On the other hand our fishery is by its very nature inherently so individualistic a thing, and such rather sizable aggregates of capital are necessary, and will continue to be necessary so much and so often in so many places that it is quite inevitable that private enterprise, private capital must play a large part in fishery development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one great difference. If you consider the newsprint industry of Canada as a whole, the greatest producer of newsprint paper in the world, bear in mind that Newfoundland produces ten per cent. We produce here in Newfoundland ten per cent of all Canadian newsprint. If you look at the newsprint industry you look at an industry that has produced a great many experts, scientists with the exact and precise knowledge of the industry, scientists in the making of newsprint. If you look at the mining industry you find the scientists. It is a scientific trade, prospecting. You have your scientists in every industry. In agriculture, for example, you have your horticulturists, and when we think of agriculture, of fruit, wheat, root crops, livestock the whole varied field of agriculture, they have tens of thousands of skilled and practical men and trained men. You will find them in all these industries. Then come back to the fisheries, and you will find there, as you do in no other industry in North America, a dearth, an almost complete absence of trained men. It is a pretty formidable fact, a frightening fact, a pretty discouraging fact. There is scarcely a fish firm in Newfoundland today of any consequence that can afford to lose one man of its trained staff. Take for instance, Mr. Si Moores. I am quite confident he has to work Sundays and nights and whole holidays when he should not have to work, because he personally has to do things which he ought to have men trained to do, but has not. The same thing applies to Mr. Arthur Monroe. The same thing applies to Mr. H. Russell. Mr. Russell has two sons who are coming on very well. You can count the trained men on the fingers of one hand. He has two sons and himself. It is tragic. I am now talking fishery development. No matter how good it is on paper, and no matter how much money you may be able and willing to put at its disposal it boils down to the actual men who will do the work. That is what it boils down to. Unfortunately this fishing industry of ours has produced what? What has it produced?

MR. HOLLETT: A few, quite a few fishermen.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well, yes, it has done that, produced fishermen, tens of thousands. I suppose it has produced a couple of million if you count them all down through its history. It has produced a lot of fishermen and a lot of women who cut throats and hauled the guts out of the fish and a lot of women, who in the words of my honourable friend and colleague the Minister of Fisheries, as I heard him describe it in this very room as a member of the National Convention—Remember so well him saying: “I saw a women spell a bag of fish guts in her hands up the side of a cliff.” Is that a part of our Newfoundland culture? The answer, of course, is that it was.

Yes, our fishery produced a lot of that sort of thing. But that fishing industry has not produced scientists, has not produced scientists, has not produced skilled men. So if we apply that fact to LaScie—will somebody please tell me where we will find the men who will operate these industries in LaScie? Have we got to raid Arthur Monroe’s organization? But Arthur Monroe himself is probably going to have to raid somebody else’s organization to find the men to operate the new plant he will open this year. Where is Arthur Monroe going to get the men? Where is Si Moores going to get them? Where are all of them going to get the men? Where are we going to get them? What we have to have in LaScie is at least one man who can operate a freezing plant; one man who can operate a dryer, one man who can make fish meal, which is a pretty precise skill; one man who has to be experienced in marketing fish and one man experienced in catching fish. There are five men. Where are we going to get them? That is just LaScie. That is only one place. That is one of the serious difficulties with which this whole fisheries development programme has got to contend. And—it fails in the end it will fail primarily for lack of highly trained, highly skilled personnel.

Now you could start a few shops. Sir William Coaker, for instance, had a chain of some thirty-five shops scattered down the northeast coast, branches of the Union Trading Company. He was able to pick up from amongst young fishermen with Grade X and Grade XI and without any previous commercial and certainly no industrial training but with a little training in the fishery, and set them up as managers of these stores, and they made a success of it. Some of them are today amongst our most important outport merchants, having gotten their main training as managers of the Union Trading Stores. These were just ordinary shops taking in a few yaffles of fish, and storing the fish in a back store until the company came along and took it to Port Union. But these plants that are being planned are plants to turn out a high quality product. That, I wish the House now to know, is one of the many serious problems in the way of the fishery development programme. If this programme fails it will fail not for lack of energy and enthusiasm on the part of this Government because that will not be lacking. It will not fail for lack of capital—we will find the capital. If it fails, and it won't fail because it is intrinsically wrong or intrinsically unsound. It will fail on that one ground, the lack of trained personnel. Where can you go to get such trained personnel. Now, personally, perhaps I had better not say—

MR. HOLLETT: I know what you are going to say.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, exactly! Well I will say in that case (and it can be quoted) we might have to go to Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Germany and England for these fishery technologists. I know it is not a popular thing to do, because anyone who will stand up as I am standing here this afternoon, if he is a politician, and say publicly, as I am saying that we have not got them here in Newfoundland either does not care whether he gets elected again or he is a fool. I am not a fool. No, I am not a fool. I am trying to be honest about it, trying to be candid. The Opposition may make all they like of it if they want to do so.

Another serious point in the whole matter is this: Have we got the merchants left to tackle this? Have we got them?

MR. HOLLETT: What do you want these for?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Have we got the merchants? Are they here? Are they in Newfoundland today of the type that will tackle a real pioneer job? Have we got them? I greatly regret that one of the most progressive, forward-looking merchants we have, Senator Pratt, is in very poor health and has been for months past. I understand he is under his doctor's orders to take it easy. It is a great loss to Newfoundland. A great loss! These merchants that are energetic and progressive and modern-minded are so few that the loss of even one is a serious matter for this Province today, and it is in this whole field of fishery development a serious matter.

Sir John Crosbie, I am told, who was once a running-mate of my honourable friend, or at least he was a running-mate of Sir John Crosbie—That was the year they ran in the west end, the "CLB" I think it was called—Crosbie, Linegar and Browne. Capital, labour and brains. Capital that was Crosbie, Labour was Linegar and Brains was Browne. I understand that Sir John Crosbie was down on the wharf at six o'clock in the morning at the latest to see that the men were on the job. At eight o'clock he would go home to breakfast and at eight-thirty or quarter to nine he would be back on the job. How many fish merchants in St. John's today get down on their premises at five o'clock in the morning. Now-a-days it is ten o'clock and maybe a quarter to eleven and by four o'clock they are out at Bally Haly playing golf.

MR. BROWNE: How many workers go down at six o'clock and work until seven o'clock.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Exactly! I wonder seriously how many fish merchants we have today that are really 'entrepreneurs'?

MR. BROWNE: Very good.

MR. SMALLWOOD: How many have we got who are entrepreneurs, doers—how many have we got? Are they pioneers or are they so wrapped up in their gold and the waffle irons and tin puddings, tin spaghetti and their casinos, or are they so wrapped up in the quick buck.

MR. HOLLETT: Kick-back?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I hope my honourable friend knows no more about the “kick-back” than I do. Are they so concerned with the fast buck and easy living that the idea of pioneering in fishery development is positively nauseating to them, turns their stomachs? Have they become so fastidious that the good, honest smell of salt codfish now turns their you have not on Water Street today. There is down there today a crowd of lounge lizards, waffle iron artists. Ye Gods! Where have we come in Newfoundland. There was a time when these were the greatest merchants in the world. There was that time when little St. John's had the greatest international merchants in the whole world, right here on Water Street. They were here, they traded with the greatest, with Spain, with Portugal, with Malta, with West Africa, with all the countries of the Caribbean, with Brazil. Just one man would do all that. Yes, and I have known them to do that after the First World War. I have known a Water Street fish merchant to ship fish to Brazil where he was not allowed to be paid for it because of currency restrictions which were such that you could not get paid in dollars for the goods you sold. The Government would not allow you, if you were a Brazilian importer to pay for them in dollars. Not only that, the Government of Brazil would not allow the Brazilian importer to pay for them in their own Brazilian money. It was that fish merchant in St. John's who shipped fish in scores of thousands of quintals to Brazil. How did he do it? I will tell you how he did it. He bought the equivalent in coffee and other products of Brazil. He then exported these products to another country where the currency restrictions were almost as bad, but not quite so bad. In that other country he sold these products of Brazil. He did it through his office on Water Street. He is still on Water Street. He sold the products of that country and these he shipped to a third country and did the same thing. By the time the thing had gone around five or six or seven countries his fish was paid for. Today these merchants are in NAFEL, the great merchant princes of Water Street. Today they are out on the golf links and are leaving it to NAFEL to market their fish. NAFEL! Don't let me get going on NAFEL, I might become obscene in my remarks. It is enough to say that the old, pioneering fish merchants are gone. They are gone. They are not here any more. They are selling waffle irons and radios and vacuum cleaners and soon they will be selling television sets. They are ashamed of codfish. Their stomachs turn over at the smell of salt codfish. That is what our fishery has come to. It may be that the fishery development programme will fail because of the fact that the old, pioneering fish merchants are gone. I never thought I would live to see the day when I would be mourning the loss of the fish merchants, wishing that we had them. For any detestation I have for fish merchants is the detestation and utter contempt for lazy lounge lizards, social butterflies with their cocktail parties. I am tripping over them every time I am tricked into going to a cocktail party. I am tripping over Water Street merchants. Do they do anything else except play golf and go to cocktail parties and sell waffle irons? Do they do anything else besides that and sponsoring casino programmes on the radio?

The position we take is the position recommended to us by the Fishery Development Committee. My honourable friend will find on page 316 of the report:
"Doubt has been expressed above as to whether mercantile firms will undertake the risk of establishing large modern plants for production of salt fish, fillets and meal at the selected sites on the northeast coast. The responsibility is that of private enterprise and it is hoped that some of the more enterprising firms in the industry, on study of the advantages of the new locations, will be prepared to promote and undertake development. With all public facilities for the conduct of this business provided by government, it is expected that these advantages will attract private investment to avail of the opportunities for conduct of a large modern business."

Then again:

"Assistance for the creation of additional filleting plants will be available in the form of concentration of marine and other facilities at sites selected on the engineering survey as suitable for development. The advantage which such sites will provide will, it is considered, offer sufficient inducement for the establishment of plants at such sites with finances subscribed by private investors."

Then finally:

"It is hoped that, if the full amount of capital for the establishment of each of the large plants cannot be subscribed by private investors, they will be able to supply a large amount of it. It is desirable in all cases to promote cooperation between the mercantile firms on the one side and fishermen and plant workers on the other. All features of the scheme can be most successful if the efforts and interests of these firms and the community to be served are combined. The operation of a large modern plant, producing about thirty thousand quintals of salt codfish, a million or more pounds of fillets and a large quantity of meal and oil, and the marketing of these products constitute a business undertaking of large proportions. The skill, experience and interest of those engaged in these features of the industry would, if applied to these new ventures, go a long way towards ensuring their success. Development will probably take different forms in different areas. In some areas there may be existing premises which, on the engineering survey may be found to be reasonably suited and capable of adaptation for economic operation. In other areas mercantile interests may wish to invest a large portion of the necessary capital in entirely new premises. In such cases the committee sees the possibility of promoting a development of great social importance in the operation of the industry."

These are their recommendations, and that is our attitude. That is our hope. I say that with a certain amount of misgiving as to the actual, practical, probability that private enterprise, private interests will invest the capital. Certainly I don't think they will do it until we have gone in there first. I think that is imperative and unavoidable, that we build the plants. When I say we I mean the Treasury, the Government, that we build the plants, that we operate them, that we put them to the test, that we prove whether they are sound or not. If they prove to be sound or reasonably sound under that type of management, then should private enterprise see a reasonable prospect of success in a plant so operated they will realize that there is a dollar to be made and will come to the Government seeking the opportunity to take over those plants themselves. That is our hope. Even better it would be if soundly conceived and soundly organized co-operative fishermen or communities of fishermen would come to us and say: “Let us take over the operations of this plant.” Provided they could convince us, or our agency, the Fishery Development Authority of their sincerity and of their willingness to sacrifice something and not just wanting to take a hand-out, get something for nothing. They must show a willingness to sacrifice something for that kind of community ownership, community enterprise. Then the Government would go along with such a request.

Mr. Speaker, I don’t know how else I can put it, I don’t know what other words I can employ to convince my honourable friends opposite that so far from believing in or advocating or providing for socialization or nationalization of the fisheries we are doing precisely the contrary, precisely the opposite. We are unorthodox to the extent that we should like to see co-operative organizations of fishermen. That is as far as our unorthodoxity goes. I have had enough myself to do with co-operative societies and co-operative organizations over a sufficiently long period of time, and under a sufficiently great variety of circumstances to know this: The co-operative movement, for some reason that I have never been able to discover, and he was a professional, full-time organizer of co-operatives and organized quite a number of co-operative societies in the District of Port aux Basques. I remember when Mr. J. H. Gorvin brought in the “Gorvin Report” and the “Gorvin Plan” he telephoned to me and asked if I would come down to this very building where he had his offices and discuss the “Gorvin Plan” with him. I said: “Mr. Gorvin, if you don’t mind, I prefer not to do so.” He said: “Well, don’t be like that! Come down and talk the thing over.” I told him that I did not think it would do any good, but I would go down anyway, it can’t do any harm. When he outlined his plan I said: “Mr. Gorvin, I think that is a magnificent plan.” “I am delighted to know that you think so.” I told him that I did think so, but that I had one misgiving about it. “Who is going to do it? Who is going to carry it out? Do you think that a bunch of civil servants will do it? You find me a William F. Coaker, a K. M. Brown right in the ranks, a man who feels he has a mission from Almighty God, and no less, to organize the fishermen into co-operatives. Find me some man like that and I believe your plan has some chance. But if you think you are going to hire civil servants to superimpose the Gorvin Plan upon the outports you are making the greatest mistake of your life.” I have the same feeling about the co-operative movement. Either it grows out of the very soil, springs up out of the very sea or it does not grow. I hope, however, that there will be a co-operative movement in Newfoundland. I remember the fish merchants. I think all the fish merchants of Newfoundland, when we were in office about six months, wrote me a letter and asked if I would come and address them. So I called my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and I said: "Bill, we are going up in the world. The merchants are writing letters and asking us to come and address them. What would you say if we were to go down and address them?" He said: "Sure."

So the two of us walked down. They had brought them in from all over the island. The meeting was down in the Board of Trade Building. The Minister and I went down and made them a speech in which I said: "I understand you gentlemen are going to bed every night and tossing in your cots, sleepless and restless all night, fearing that if you go asleep you will wake up in the morning to find that this terrible government has taken your fishery business away from you and have handed them over to the co-operative movement. You expect that daily, hourly, but gentlemen, I hope the day will come when you or your sons and if not your sons then their sons, your grandsons, will be hired managers for the co-operative societies. I hope that day will come. I hope your grandsons will be sufficiently lucky to get jobs as managers and accountants and cashiers for co-operative societies of fishermen. I hope your grandsons will be that fortunate. But insofar as you, yourselves, are concerned, I frankly don't think you have too much to fear. You are not going to wake up some morning and find your businesses taken away from you by this wicked government and handed over to somebody else. Will you take my word for that?"

That was five years ago. I know they did not believe me. They thought it was some kind of fair talk to their faces, but down underneath we are ravaging wolves, and behind their fair face we are ravaging wolves—"The Communists." They thought that we were red, rabid Bolsheviks. Smallwood, they felt, if the truth were known, was in the secret pay of Mr. Stalin. Then he tells us that he is not going to take our businesses from us. A plague on that story! Don't let him fool you. That has been their attitude. That was five years ago. We still have not taken them. Yet no doubt they had a couple of sleepless nights last night and the night before because, did not the Leader of the Opposition tell them that this Government at last has brought in a Bill to socialize the fisheries, and that is even worse than handing them over to the few co-operative societies. My honourable friend called it nationalization and one of his followers said it was socialization. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that I can make these two honourable gentlemen ashamed that they ever used those words in connection with this Bill. I hope that five years from now we can taunt them with having said that the Government, in this Bill, is trying to nationalize the fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, for four hundred and fifty years, if you could take the toil of our fishermen, if you could take their sweat for four hundred years, if you could take their tears, if you could take the suffering of their wives and of their children in Newfoundland, you would have one of the saddest things since the world began. Wherever they did show a little ambition to climb up off the stage head there was someone waiting to kick them in the face, back into the water. Down through history ever since there were fishermen in Newfoundland they have been crucified. That crucifixion was not always the crucifixion of cruelty. Today I accuse the fish merchants of Water Street not of showing cruelty to the fishermen. I would almost prefer they did that. I accuse them of showing stupidity, of showing ignorance, of showing laziness, of which the fishermen were the victims.

It is the fishery that is the victim of mercantile indifference, mercantile incompetence, mercantile stupidity and mercantile laziness. It is the fisheries that suffer. And when the fisheries suffer it is the fishermen who are the first victims. The terrible thing about it is this, Mr. Speaker (and this is so terrible that there are no words to describe it, or if you could find words you would be ashamed to do so) the terrible thing about it is that the fishery can suffer, the fishermen can starve, they can even rot in poverty, as they have done at times to the point where fishermen staggered about with beri-beri, as I have seen them with my own eyes, suffering from all the diseases of malnutrition, hunger and starvation. They can do that. The fisheries can suffer in that way and to that extent while the merchants bemoan the state of the fisheries. But never for a moment, not one moment, would they be touched in their private lives with any suffering. They never suffered when they went broke. They did not suffer even when they were declared insolvent. They did not go hungry when their incompetence, stupidity and greed had brought this great industry, which is Newfoundland—it is not the foundation of Newfoundland, it is Newfoundland: When they brought it down they did not suffer. The fishermen starved and they rotted and their children starved and rotted in ignorance and disease. Who can deny that? Who can deny it? I know it is not polite to say it, it is not nice to say it, but it is true. Yes, it happens to be true.

If I could only find the words to describe the contempt and loathing I have for the masters of the fishing industry in Newfoundland, the masters and the owners of that industry upon which to this day a hundred thousand of us Newfoundlanders depend. They get a living from that or they starve. There is nothing else for them to do while they remain Newfoundlanders. They can leave Newfoundland and go to Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and probably get jobs up there where they will be paid wages. They then cease to be Newfoundlanders, and Newfoundland comes crashing down.

There are no fishermen in Nova Scotia that are half as bad off as our Newfoundland fishermen, none. Just across the Gulf and they are not half as bad off. There are no fishermen in New Brunswick that are half as bad off as our Newfoundland fishermen. Of the ten provinces we are the poorest in Canada because our average is brought down by the fishermen. If we could raise the standard of our fishermen to the level of Gander, Grand Falls, Corner Brook, etc., then Newfoundland would be the second or third most prosperous province in Canada. The reason our standard is so low is that our fishermen are down so low that they drag down our provincial average. Why is that? Why are they so much lower than Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Quebec? Why? Is it their fault? Are they to blame for it? Are the fishermen to blame? Is it because they cannot work as well or as hard or as long as mainland fishermen? No, that is not it. They work harder, they work longer, they work better, they are better fishermen. They have battled with the open Atlantic Ocean for centuries, while these others fish in calm waters of the Caraquet shores. My honourable friend here and another Minister who is not here at the moment visited there three or four years ago. It is a beautiful little haven, a pastoral rural town where they go off fishing in calm, sheltered waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence. They are good men. I am not running them down, but I think of the fishermen going off the bill of Cape Bonavista, the bill of Baccalieu, the bill of Cape Freels, the bill of Capt St. John, the fishermen off the coast of Labrador, the men of White Bay, the men down on the South Coast, twelve months a year, fishing all the year round—You are not going to tell me these fishermen are not as good as any other fishermen you like to mention on the face of this earth because I don't believe it. It is not that they won't work. It is not that they are lazy. It is not that they are stupid. Well, where is the blame? Must it not be the merchants. Has it not got to be their fault. If it is not the fishermen it must be the merchants, the so-called merchants, the apologies for merchants, the substitute merchants, if I could only find the right word to describe the utter loathing I have, the inexpressible contempt for these lounge lizards who control the destinies of a hundred thousand people far better than they are themselves. Far better. These fishermen and their wives and their children have more character, they have more personality. They are better men and better women, yet, they are their masters.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would say that this programme has nothing more than a fifty-fifty chance. I say that without caring, without minding because I know that the fishermen of Newfoundland are not going to judge this Government by whether this programme succeeds or fails. That is not how we are going to be judged. We are going to be judged by the fishermen according to whether we try or don't try. They won't demand that we succeed. All they demand is that we try. Now we are going to try. That is what this programme is. It is a great effort on the part of this Government, a tremendous effort, a tremendous drive. It is going to cost many, many millions of dollars. It is going to cost, I would say, four times as much as the causeway across the Gulf of Canso. It is going to cost, I would say, ten times as much as the new ferry on the Gulf. Now, Mr. Speaker, you will begin to get the proportions of the effort. It will cost ten times as much for a great fishery development for a hundred thousand of our people as it cost to have just one new ferry they are going to provide for us. I will put it another way. It will cost twice as much as the Trans-Canada Highway across this island. Can we not afford that? Must we not afford it? It will cost a lot of money. The money we will put in. The energy we will put in. The enthusiasm we have and lots of that. Five years in office and we are not a bit tired. Five years in office and not a bit discouraged. Five years in office and a little bedraggled and a little bit spattered, maybe but I have never seen the government yet that had the ideals of this Government after five years of office. We have not? My honourable friends will find at the next election they want to contest that we have. So far as I am concerned, if the need were there (it is not there) I would go tomorrow to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor and hand in my resignation, and advise a general election, and have a completely new slate of men—if there was any necessity of it. And I would carry them
We would win. Don't fool yourself! Don't ever kid yourself about that. We will win! We will sweep Newfoundland. And if between now and the next election any one colleague of ours should prove unworthy, I say it without hesitation—That is our strength, but it won't be malicious gossip that will do it.

MR. HOLLETT: When are you going to do it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: When there is any need. If, as and when there is any need.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the attitude of my honourable friends is handsomely demonstrated. Today, if they had their time back I think they would not have demonstrated so eloquently what their attitude is, as they did by speaking, all of them. Now the only thing I could suggest to them is this: I make them a suggestion—I have noticed that my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West has been making copious notes. Unfortunately he cannot speak in this debate again. Possibly he has been saving up these notes for another day, another occasion. I know of one honourable gentleman whose favourite practice was to take tape recordings of anything he could that was broadcast—God bless him! I am going to suggest to my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West has been making copious notes. Unfortunately he cannot speak in this debate again. Possibly he has been saving up these notes for another day, another occasion. I know of one honourable gentleman whose favourite practice was to take tape recordings of anything he could that was broadcast—God bless him! I am going to suggest to my honourable and learned friend that all the notes he has taken and the notes any other honourable gentlemen have taken be passed over to the honourable, the professional gentleman from St. John's East, as he has not spoken yet. And I suggest that all the notes be passed over to him and that before the debate is over and the vote is taken on this Bill, that he express the revised opinion of his party.

MR. HIGGINS: As to nationalization or socialization?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Nationalism, Statism, Nationalization, all these matters. Above all I suggest that he try to show the House if that first flippant comment of his party on this great Bill represents the considered attitude of the Opposition.

MR. HIGGINS: The reconsidered?

MR. SMALLWOOD: If that attitude represents the considered attitude or whether he might give the revised and brought-up-to-date edition. What they said on that date was merely a first edition and that with time to consider they now issue the definitive edition of their views, and that my honourable and learned friend from St. John's East be the medium, the publishing firm, so to speak, through whom that definite edition of the Opposition's views on fishery development be expressed in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion the debate was adjourned until tomorrow.

First readings:

Hon. the Attorney General asks leave to introduce a Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons Supplemental to an Agreement Dated the Twenty-first day of May, 1953."

On motion, Bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

Hon. the Attorney General asks leave to introduce a Bill "An Act to Amend the Automobile Insurance Act.”

On motion Bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

Hon. the Minister of Mines and Resources asks leave to introduce a Bill “An Act Further to Amend the Crown Lands (Mines and Quarries) Act.”

On motion Bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): I move, Mr. Speaker, all remaining Orders of the Day do stand deferred, and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow Monday, at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, May 10, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Motion and Questions
None.

Answers to Questions
Question No. 79: HON. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have some comment I would like to make in connection with Question No. 79. But in as much as the question was asked by the Honourable Member for St. John’s West. I would like to defer the answer until he is here, perhaps later in the day, or I could table the answer on tomorrow.

Question No. 78:
HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives has left the House for a few minutes to make a telephone call. Perhaps he may be back here in time, or Mr. Speaker, perhaps he could take the answer at a later hour today, that is assuming he has it.

HON. G. POWER (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answer to Question No. 74.

Orders of the Day
Second reading of a Bill, “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority:

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable the Premier adjourned the debate.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, when the Province of Alberta and the Province of Saskatchewan entered the Canadian Confederation in 1905, they being the last provinces of Canada to enter into Confederation, before Newfoundland, they brought with them into the Canadian Union, into the Confederation, distinctive and great problems of an economic nature. Of course, the one great problem they brought with them into the family of Canadian Provinces was the problem of the prairie farmers, or perhaps I should say the whole gambit. The whole wide range of problems associated with the distinctive type of farming known as prairie farming. Sir, it is inconceivable that confederation could ever be a success for those two provinces if that great problem of prairie farming were not solved, if their entry into union did not mean also, almost automatically a solution of that problem or of those problems. If that were not so then their entry was bound to be a failure. This fact was well recognized by the people of those two great areas of British North America, and it was equally well recognized by the Government and the Parliament of Canada. What do we in fact find? Do we find that problem ignored by the Parliament of Canada? No. Do we find the people of Alberta and Saskatchewan demanding further references to that problem. The answer in both cases is, No. Indeed one of the greatest pieces of legislation in the history of Canada is the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act. That was really one of the greatest Acts of the Parliament of Canada. The passing of that Act has meant since then that the Parliament of Canada has voted dozens and scores of millions of dollars of public funds to assist prairie farmers to overcome their problems, and to make prairie farming sound, and to make prairie farms prosperous. They got their reward. The reward they got was the solution of the great, basic problem which they took with them into Confederation when they entered the family. Sir, even before that a similar problem obtained in British Columbia, on the British Pacific coast of North America. That colony was no more a part of Canada before Confederation or immediately after Confederation than she was part of the United States. Indeed within that British Colony there were two sentiments, one highly favourable to the idea of remaining British and the other almost equally favourable to the idea of becoming American. As a matter of fact the population was by birth partly American. The Americans naturally advocating that British Columbia become part of the United States, and the British advocating that they should remain British, and join up with Canada. Now they not only brought a problem with them into Confederation, but they brought with them a problem which had to be solved. There was no if, and, or but, about it. They made it a straight condition of their entry into union. That problem was the problem of sheer physical contact with the rest of Canada, sheer physical contact because needlessly to say the Rocky Mountains lay between them and the rest of Canada. The only way then known to get to British Columbia was to go around the Atlantic Coast of North America and down to the southern tip of South America and up the Pacific Coast of South America and so along the Pacific Coast of North America, until of course, the Panama Canal was constructed, whereupon they could sail to the British Colony of British Columbia by that means. Indeed we know that Captain Vancouver, after whom the City of Vancouver is named, sailed from St. John's here to the port that now bears his name.

What British Columbia needed was a railway that would join them physically with the iron band to the rest of Canada. It was agreed that Canada as Canada would lay down that railway, right across the Prairies of North America and then across the Rockies; and that they would do it within—I speak from memory—within ten years of British Columbia's entry into Confederation. They did it in ten years and less. In doing it they accomplished one of the greatest engineering feats of the human race since the dawn of history.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that Newfoundland upon entry into the Canadian Union brought her problem with her into that union, and that her problem ceased thereupon to be distinctively, or at least to be solely her problem. It remained and remains a distinctive and peculiar problem but ceased to be solely her problem and became a Canadian Problem, a problem of Canada as a whole. I suggest to this House and to the people of Newfoundland, and to the people of our nation at large right to the Pacific Coast, where I expect to be myself in a few days from now, I suggest that the problem of the Newfoundland fishery is a problem common to all the nation. I suggest that the solution to that problem should follow as automatically from union as the solution of the prairie farmers followed automatically the entry of those two prairie provinces into Confederation, and as automatically as the building of the great Trans-Continental Railway followed the entry of British Columbia.

I was most interested to note recently that Mr. Pickersgill addressing a body somewhere on the continent of Canada, and that more recently when he addressed another body, and all the way out to British Columbia he made addresses and that in each of these addresses, as an honest man, as an honest Canadian, as a man with a very well developed sense of history and a knowledge of history, said that it was at least as important to Canada that Newfoundland became part of Canada as it was to Newfoundland that she should become part of Canada. He said that the old Canada, the Canada of the nine provinces stood to gain as much from that union as did Newfoundland herself. Now let us make due allowance that our Newfoundland representative, moved by a sense of decency and by a sense of gratitude to Newfoundland for the honour Newfoundland has done him in electing him, a stranger, a visitor, to represent a Newfoundland Riding, let us make all due allowance for Mr. Pickersgill's desire to be decent and grateful in the matter. Nevertheless I think it remains true that Canada as such gains enormously. Mr. Speaker, does this House realize that our Newfoundland case of six years ago was quite unique in the modern history of the world. It was a case of secret ballot, voted, admittedly by no great margin, but nevertheless voted by a majority in a secret ballot to merge their interests and their future with those of another people, they too being British, admittedly, but nevertheless another country. There have not been many cases in the last century of the people of one part of the world voting by secret ballot to join up with another nation. And when the people of Newfoundland by a majority, voted to become Canadians they undoubtedly paid Canada a very great compliment. They did more than that. They made Canada a nation. They completed one of the greatest dreams of mankind; the dream of the original fathers of confederation, a great dream, that all of the British North Americas should be one nation, one great British Nation, a great dream which at one time seemed impossible of achievement. We Newfoundlanders made that dream come true. It would not have come true without us. We made it come true. We realized that dream of the early fathers of confederation. We added to the dignity of Canada. We added to the importance of Canada in the world sense. Undoubtedly the United States came at once to have more respect for Canada because the people of Newfoundland, by secret ballot, voted to become Canadians.

Now, all these facts and many others I could cite, could argue very eloquently for Canada taking a real interest in this problem, in the solving of this problem that we brought with us into Confederation. Mr. Speaker, if there is a hundred and fifty thousand of our people, men, women, and children, or two hundred thousand of our people, who depend principally and primarily upon the fisheries it might be argued that the sheer disappearance of our fisheries that now give a living, such as it is, to that number of people would not be a fatal or conclusive thing to happen. It may be argued—if the fisheries disappear, so what? Some may argue that way. Yes, if those people lived in one harbour, one town or even in one bay of our many bays, the complete and absolute disappearance of the fisheries we might survive. But these people do not live in one harbour, one town, one bay. They live in seven or eight hundred settlements two and three and eight miles apart, stretching along a coastline of six thousand miles. While it is true undoubtedly and undeniably that a considerable number of them still can get jobs in the bush, in the lumber woods when the trap fishery is over, and not waiting for a fall fishery, they go off and get jobs in the lumber woods. While that is true the fact is that the number of fishermen who can go and get jobs in the woods is becoming steadily smaller because woods work itself is becoming rapidly so specialized a type of work, conducted during a season of the year when fishing is actively proceeding, and to a large extent logging has become increasingly a class to itself and loggers are not fishermen any more. It is true that a certain number of fishermen can still get jobs on Bell Island in and around the mines and at Buchans in and around the mines. But that number is decreasing steadily as you find both companies insisting, as far as they can enforce their wish, they want to have men who do not come in for a few months’ work but who work all the year around, professional miners and mine workers and not part-time miners and part-time fishermen. So you get down to this: A fisherman, living in a fishing settlement where nothing exists except the fishery has this choice before him (1) to continue fishing and (2) to get a job at Goose Airport, at Stephenville, at Seven Islands, at Harmon Field, at Argentia, at some housing project in the City here or (3) of pulling up stakes altogether and going off to live in another part of the nation. Now while defence works are carried on to any considerable extent, while economic windfalls came to us every now and then, some special but non-recurring form of employment that props up every now and then, a certain number of fishermen will continue to leave the fishing settlements and take these jobs while these jobs last. As soon as the jobs cease they will go back automatically and instinctively to their little fishing settlements. As these jobs disappear altogether you will find these men back in their little settlements, thinking again of going fishing because there is nothing else for them to do. Although they may starve at the fishery there is nothing else for them to do. Although they may get virtually little or nothing out of the fishery, little as it is, it is more than they can get anywhere else. So that the sharp bite of hunger forces them back into the fishing boats.

I say that this fish problem has got to be solved: Now in the course of my lifetime, my adult lifetime, Sir William Coaker was the first man in our Newfoundland history to see our fishery as a whole, and not just piece-meal. He was the first man to have a really wide knowledge of the fishery. He had a practical knowledge of it. He could call ten thousand fishermen by their first names. During all those years the problem of the Newfoundland fisheries was something that was entirely different from the problem as it exists today. Sir William Coaker (before he was Sir William Coaker and was William H. Coaker) travelled over to Spain and to Portugal (and they cracked jokes about him as they do about me now and my gallivanting around the world) and gallivanted around the world to Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece, Brazil in South America, and to every country of the Caribbean and certainly to some if not all the countries of Central America, and to South America. He was the first man, incredible as it may sound, and I am talking, not about the day before yesterday, but I am talking now about that period at the end of the first world war, when he was the first man in the fishing industry, the fishing trade of Newfoundland actually to go personally to every fish market.

MR. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Nonsense.

MR. SMALLWOOD: He was the first man in our history! Individual merchants went to individual markets before him. But he was the first man in the fishing trade, the fishing industry of Newfoundland to go personally to all the markets. He was the first man, and I would say probably to this moment he was the only man in the fishing industry to go to all the fish markets.

In those days the great central problem of the fishery was the problem of consignment selling. You had a broker. You could take your choice from a number of brokers in all these countries. In these fish market countries half of the population seemed to be fish brokers. If you were a fish exporter you took your choice of fish brokers amongst them, and shipped off a cargo of fish consigned to a broker in the hope that there would not be too many other cargoes arriving there at the same time, and that yours would arrive when there was not too much there, and that your broker somehow would have managed to sell your cargo of fish for you. You shipped it on consignment to a broker while hoping all that. The problem was if your cargo of fish arrived there and found six or seven other vessels from Newfoundland with an equal amount each of them all on consignment and unsold, lying in a relatively hot country, unsold. There is your broker trying to sell your fish for you while other brokers are trying to sell fish for other vessels, fish for the other vessels in the same market. The sale is made, starting off originally for 60 shillings and finally for 45 shillings. Then when it was accepted it was subject to inspection and they inspect it and find all kinds of things wrong and claims begin to be made against even that price. That was a terrible problem in connection with our fisheries from 1918 to 1930. For fifteen years all of us who were concerned with the problems of the fishery were concerned with that aspect. That is not our problem today.

Our problem today is fish. It is types of fishing, classes of fishing. I won't go over the ground I have already covered. I think, in sufficient detail during my remarks on this Bill, but the fact that there has been two world wars, the fact that there is a germ of discontent that has gotten into our people, inevitably, understandingly, and inescapably, which makes them dissatisfied and completely unwilling to live in the way they and their families once were willing to live in the homespun clothing with the canvas jackets, and before that the moleskins, on the most meagre kind of food. After all, Mr. Speaker, you need only go back a hundred years to find they had a cup of tea around Christmas and for the rest of the time drank a mixture of spruce beer and a bit of rum to splice it up. When finally they began to drink tea they could only sweeten it with molasses. I remember vividly one of the great social reforms in our Newfoundland history was when Sir Edward Morris cut the duty on sugar and allowed the poor fishermen to take sugar instead of molasses in his tea. There are people to this day that prefer molasses to sugar. It is a sociological problem as well as being an economic problem. In the language of my honourable colleague the Minister of Welfare: "It is a problem of people and their likes and dislikes."

My honourable friend, the Minister of Finance, and I were talking the other night about this whole problem of the fishery. He said, "You know Mr. Premier, there is one point you left out so far. Have you ever stopped to think, if the young girls in their teens in a fishing settlement left that settlement and go off to St. John's or Corner Brook or to Toronto to live, that the young men of the settlement will follow them."

MR. HOLLETT: Naturally.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And that if you have a settlement that has lost its young men and young women and consists entirely or almost of middle aged and older people, what future has the fishery got in such a settlement. No matter how modern you may make that fishery, no matter how attractive you may make it for the people to live in such a settlement what chance has the fishery there? I say the problem is largely a problem of people, of human beings, their likes and dislikes in 1954. What they are prepared to do now compared with what they were prepared to do thirty years ago, the standard of living they demand to have now is not the standard of living that seemed somehow to leave them fairly contented, fairly happy, thirty years ago. I would venture to say that down in White Bay, where my honourable friend is the member, the average man who works for Bowaters today with a bucksaw lives at least twice as well as the owner of a sixty or seventy ton Labrador Schooner did ten years ago.

MR. S. DROVER: More so.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Probably twice as well. And yet, Mr. Speaker, almost half of our population depends on that same industry. There is no health in us if we don't solve this problem. There is no future for Newfoundland if we do not solve that problem. We have got to do it. We have no choice but to solve it.
We must solve it, and solve it we will.

Now ideally here is how it could be done. I am going to give you an idealistic picture. It is tragic that I should have to call it idealistic because in a country such as the United States it would not be called idealistic nor in most of the Provinces of Canada, but it would be called straight ordinary, common-placed, hum-drum, matter of fact procedure. But I have to call it idealistic. This is how the fishery problem could be solved in Newfoundland. It could be solved by the entrepreneurs. (I know German better than I know French).

MR. HOLLETT: You should.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I do. I can pronounce German pretty well. But the entrepreneurs, the enterprisers, the merchants, as we usually call them in Newfoundland, the capitalists as they call them in other parts of the world. It is not the Government in the United States not in any state of the United States, or in most of the States of the United States, that starts industries. It is private enterprise that does such things. It should be private enterprise or co-operative enterprise but certainly not the government. There was a time in Newfoundland when it was so. But the enterprise has gone out of private enterprise. All that is left now is the "private" but the "enterprise" has vanished. I spoke the other day of Sir John Crosbie. I might have spoken of Sir William Coaker whom I have seen, title and all, knighthood and all, down on the wharf at five o'clock in the morning, the busiest man on the wharf. There was some devil or something divine, something in him that was driving him. So it was with most of our merchants. They had drive and gumption, those merchants. But they have not got it today. Perhaps it is not reasonable to expect it. I don't know, I don't know. But they have not got it. But where does that leave us? That leaves us in a most precarious condition, industry looking for leaders, profits in search of profit makers, and profits in search of profit takers, enterprise in search of enterprisers, business in search of businessmen. Mr. Speaker, the killing part of this business is the contrast between what is and what might be. The fisheries of Newfoundland could be developed as to outrank mining and forestry as sources of wealth for our people. The fisheries could be organized in such a way as to give our people a better living than the paper industry is giving them today. Now my honourable friend from White Bay will find that a little difficult to believe. My honourable friend from Green Bay, with a lot of loggers in his district, will find that a little difficult to believe, but I have seen it. I have seen it. I was out in British Columbia once in my life. On a Sunday morning in Victoria, one of the most beautiful cities of the whole world—after I had breakfast that Sunday morning instead of going to Church which I should have done, I said to the waiter: "Are there any fishermen in Victoria?" He said, "Yes." I asked him if there were many. He said he did not know the number, but there were thousands. I asked then where they hung out, where they put their boats, where they fished from. He told me they had a fishermen's wharf. That sounded interesting. So I got a taxi driver to take me to the fishermen's wharf. We went over around the other side of the harbour, just a few gunshots from the Parliament Building, the Provincial Parliament Building and here was this superb wharf built by the Federal Government. It was superb. But I saw no fishing boats there. There were hundreds of boats, yachts, I was wondering what the yachts were doing at the fishermen's wharf. So I walked down on the wharf. It was like a breakwater, running hundreds of feet long and running out from it at right angles into the water were what we would call wharves, and on both sides of every one of them dozens of yachts were tied on, yachts two and three on each side and at every wharf, dozens and dozens of them with their hulls shining, mostly the spars built of mahogany. But that was not what I had come to see. I had come to see the fishing boats. I went down on one of the wharves where I saw a young man sitting in the deck house of one of these yachts. There was a deck house about two-thirds of the way forward. The door was open, and I stood there and looked in through the door of the deck house. He was sitting in his shirt sleeves, a nylon shirt, spotlessly white, wearing a beautiful suit of clothes, and with his coat off and hanging on the back of a chair. He was reading the Sunday Paper. I skuffed my feet to attract his attention. He looked up and said, "Good morning!" I told him I had come over to see the fishermen's wharf. He said, "This is it, you are on it now." I told him then that the reason I had come was that I was hoping to see the fishermen's boats. "Well," he said, "haven't you seen them? They are all around you."

"Where?"

"This one here is a fishing boat."

"That is a fishing boat?"

"Yes."

"Excuse me, you are reading your paper, but I am a visitor here. I am a Canadian but from a long way off in the eastern part of Canada. I wonder if you would not mind giving me a little information?"

"Certainly."

He put away the newspaper and I went aboard. In that beautiful cabin here is the story I heard:

Every one of these boats was a fishing boat. He was a fisherman. He looked like the manager of a bank or a factory. His income for the previous year was $4,800 net. He had fished five hundred miles away, down the Pacific Coast from Victoria. All these boats there, hundreds of them, fished anywhere from fifty miles to eight hundred miles up and down the coast. Talk about going down from Trinity Bay to the Coast of Labrador, they went well beyond that, hundreds of miles.

I went down the next day, on Monday, because there was not much doing around on Sunday, and it seemed to me this one chap might be telling a bit of a tall story. So I went back to see them get ready to go to work. Smart looking, intelligent looking, pretty well all, I would say, educated. I got talking to one and he told me he belonged to Ontario. He had come out here just after the war and had a few dollars, put up at a hotel and looked around to see what he was to go at. He decided that fishing out of different trades and occupations would give him more independence. So he invested his money in a boat and engine, and this was the boat. He told me he had not told his mother and father at home in Ontario that he was a fisherman. If he should let them know and their friends asked them what he was doing they would be ashamed to say he was a fisherman. He was making $4,800 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced of this: Mr. Si Moores was in my office this morning and we talked for an hour about our Newfoundland fisheries. I have talked for many hours with Mr. Arthur Monroe on our Newfoundland fisheries, and I have talked for many hours with Mr. Ches. Crosbie on our Newfoundland fisheries. I have talked for many hours with Mr. Hazen Russell on our Newfoundland fisheries. I have talked with Mr. Spencer Lake on our Newfoundland fisheries, and I am not alone in my belief that our fisheries can be developed to give a magnificent living to people who engage in it. It can be done. It can be done and it must be done. Because if it is not done Newfoundland must go down, she must, she has to go down, and she will drag others with her. I mean the fishermen in going down will drag others with them. I will sternly resist all temptation to comment on the events of the past few days in connection with the price of fish, except to say that I would a thousand times prefer to be tackling the basic part of the problem, the fundamental side of it, to dealing with the hardy annual—the price of fish, the hardy annual. Except for the last two years of this late war you had the same old, hardy annual, but the last couple of years and two before that, four years, the last two of the war and the first two of the peace, four years, and three in the first world war, seven years, except for these seven years, as long back as I can remember, we have had this hardy annual amongst us.

MR. SMALLWOOD: As far back as I can remember.

MR. HOLLETT: That is what we want to hear about.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend may be sixty-three but he evidently has not learned what I have learned, he has not learned that you can spend the rest of your natural life dealing with the price of fish, the hardy annual, and after you are dead and you are replaced by somebody else, his strength can be used up for perhaps half of his lifetime dealing with the hardy annual. When he also is gone and buried and another strong, hardy man comes in his heart can break dealing with the same hardy annual, the price of fish. For me in my lifetime, it is too short. I have too many things to do for Newfoundland to use up my strength dealing with the hardy annual, the price of fish. We will not see the fishermen stuck, no, never. THIS GOVERNMENT, WHILE THERE IS A DOLLAR WE CAN LAY OUR HANDS ON, WILL SEE THE FISHERMEN ARE NOT STUCK. Every one knows that. We will never see them stuck. But we won't waste five minutes discussing the price of fish. But it will take the time and all the cash and all the strength and all the energy that we can find to tackle this basic problem, to change the very nature of this industry.

"Of life could you and I with Him conspire
To grasp this sorry scheme of things entire
Would we not shatter it to bits
And model it nearer to the heart's desire."

That is what we are doing. We are going to make this fishery go or something is going to pop.
MR. HOLLETT: You said that five years ago.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, my honourable friend. I know no more about the fishery then than my honourable friend knows now.

MR. HOLLETT: I know that much.

MR. SMALLWOOD: For the benefit of the House may I say that this is not an election speech.

MR. HOLLETT: I thought it was. Is it not? I know it must be a tremendous relief.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It must be a tremendous relief for him to know he has not to go back at once and face St. John's West.

MR. HOLLETT: If I might be permitted, Mr. Speaker, to ask the honourable member if he is speaking to the principle of this Bill. In some ways I hate to interrupt any man talking about the fisheries. But I like to come back occasionally.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If the honourable gentleman would listen closely and not let his mind wander to elections and facing his constituents in St. John's West, in the next few weeks, he will notice I am speaking and sticking extremely close, from the day I first opened my mouth on this Bill to this moment, I am sticking very close to the principle on which my honourable friend expressed himself in a space of twenty minutes.

MR. HOLLETT: An hour and a half. Be honest.

MR. SMALLWOOD: What my honourable friend did was scandalous in the extreme. I never thought I would see the day that the Leader of the Opposition in this Province—I would not mind it in Ontario, but I cannot understand the Leader of the Opposition in this Province getting up and dismissing in a few lack-a-daisical sentences the greatest Bill ever brought into this House in Newfoundland in connection with the fisheries in Newfoundland as he dismissed it in a few sentences.

MR. HOLLETT: You won't solve the problem with hot air.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is outrageous. My honourable friend, so I hear, in his conversation with radio stations has been smarting from the fact, even since he has realized what a horrible blunder he has committed. We won't let him forget it either.

The principle of the Bill is that the fisheries of Newfoundland shall be revolutionized. The principle of the Bill is that machinery shall be set up to do it. But I have to tell what the machinery is that is to be set up to do it.

MR. HOLLETT: MIAG?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend is such a heavyweight, such a deep thinker, so profound. He must be bitterly disappointed from what he must by now have heard about MIAG. He must be horribly disappointed by now, and he will be far more disappointed as time goes on, and he finds he has been dealing with an honest man. He will be a lot more disappointed yet, I can assure him.

MR. HOLLETT: I hope so, for your sake.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not for my sake, but for Newfoundland's sake. Mr. Speaker, if I had the strength to speak for the next two weeks on the principle of this Bill I still would not have exhausted the subject and could not exhaust it because there was not a man, starting with Mr. Alderdice, Mr. Monroe, Sir Richard Squires, Lord Morris, Bond, come right around the top row of portraits, John Buckley, Garland, every one of them has talked fish in this House more than they have talked any other topic. Why? Because fish is our life. Fish is what made Newfoundland tick. Fish is what brought people here in the first place. Fish is what kept them here. Fish has been the basis of our economy. You cannot talk too much about fish. You can act too little but you cannot talk too much.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had some maps prepared, and they tell an astonishing story of stupidity, of insufficiency, and indeed you might put a stronger word on it and call it mercantile insanity. It is a map of Newfoundland; and honourable gentlemen will see that it has lines drawn in many colours radiating from certain points, St. John’s, Bonavista, etc., and going into other settlements. It is a network, a maze, a labyrinth of lines of different colours reaching from a limited number of places but going out into many places. Now these lines represent the fish collections of the merchants. Here is what I get: Here is the key to the design here. Each of these here is a fish firm and the lines show where each firm gets its fish on the northeast coast and on the southern shore, Trepassey, St. Mary’s Bay, Placentia Bay and Fortune Bay. Now the only one that seems to have any sense to it all is Fortune Bay. That is the Grand Bank fisheries, reaching out to all these places. There is not another firm collecting there. There is no overlapping whatsoever.

MR. HOLLETT: Salt fish?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes. And there is simply no overlapping here. But in all the other cases the criss-cross and the overlapping is something fantastic. It would almost put you in the horrors to look at it. You would think that it was a man in the horrors that designed it or a man in an insane asylum. It is the most inefficient system of collecting fish from the fishermen and transportation to a store where it is to be packed and sorted that you could conceive. If you went into the hospital for the mental and nervous diseases and asked an unfortunate patient to design a system this is the sort of thing you would get.

Now we have had another one prepared, dividing the island into sections showing the volume of the fish produced within each of the sections. Just to give the House an idea: from Port aux Basques north to take in St. George’s Bay and Port au Port Bay there are only fourteen hundred quintals (that is in 1953). Then from Port au Port half way down the St. Barbe coast and including all of Bay of Islands and all of Bonne Bay and down to Bellburns, half way down the St. Barbe Coast, three thousand quintals. From Bellburns north to the Straits of Belle Isle, taking in the Labrador side of the Straits of Bell Isle, roughly twenty-four thousand quintals. Then take the tip of the peninsula from Boat Harbour around to Hare Bay, a total of twenty-six thousand quintals. Then coming south, a part of White Bay, twenty-one thousand quintals and another part of White Bay forty thousand quintals, so that White Bay has sixty thousand quintals, Green Bay seventy-eight thousand quintals. Twillingate thirty-nine thousand and then Fogo, or the shore part of Fogo District, eighty-six thousand quintals. That is what my honourable friend calls the Home of Cod.

Then Bonavista North, the district, I have the honour to represent, twenty-five thousand quintals, Bonavista South thirty-nine thousand quintals. That is sixty-four thousand quintals. That includes the Town of Bonavista, the Trinity North thirty-four thousand quintals. Here is an area which includes some Labrador fish. The South Side of Trinity Bay and all of Conception Bay from Conception Harbour North, that whole area, eighty-five thousand quintals. That includes the fish that is being brought into that area to Bay Roberts etc., from Labrador; then the Southern Shore and the St. John's Shore and St. Mary's Bay, ninety thousand quintals. That leads the whole of Newfoundland and second is Fogo with eighty-six thousand quintals.

HON. M. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): That does not include what is sold fresh, does it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is part of the district of my honourable friend from Ferryland and part of the district of the Honourable Minister of Finance and part of St. John's District.

Placentia East, leaving out St. Mary's Bay, twenty-seven thousand quintals, Placentia West, the district of my honourable friend again, forty-six thousand quintals, away up high on the list. Then there is Burin District with twenty-one thousand and Fortune Bay and Hermitage Bay and Bay D'Espoir seventy thousand, and much more surprisingly the whole district of Burgeo-LaPoile four thousand quintals. The reason, obviously being so much is packed fish and not salted fish. If you were to add the fresh and frozen fish to these figures it would bring the total very much higher indeed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is a map which shows in the first place the quantity of salt fish in each of these sections. Then in the same section it shows the quantity of fish packed. That is a fascinating picture. Just listen to this: In an area where twenty-one thousand quintals of fish were produced, packed were sixty-seven thousand quintals. Now all the people actually got in that area was the actual fishing. They produced twenty-one thousand quintals but only sixty-seven hundred of them were packed in that area. Now the next one, again in White Bay, forty thousand quintals produced and packed ten thousand quintals out of that forty thousand. In Green Bay the same amount is produced as packed. In Twillingate District thirty-nine thousand produced and thirty thousand packed. The reason for that being, of course, that the well-known firm of Ashbourne and other firms in and around that area are well-known packers and exporters as well. Then in the District of Fogo sixty-three thousand quintals produced and packed twelve thousand quintals. Now what happened to the rest of it? What happened to the rest is that collectors in St. John's sent vessels down and picked up some and brought it into St. John's and collectors in Carbonear sent vessels down and picked up some and brought it into St. John's and collectors in Carbonear sent vessels down and picked up a part for Carbonear and packed it in Carbonear as did also collectors in Catalina and Port Union, and collectors in Bona­vista. So that you have this criss-cross of schooners beating their way down to Fogo District and all these others. So that you can go right around the map and get the same results.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is one and it is only one of many factors operating in the salt fish industry and in the salt fish trade as it operates now at the present time and has operated for many years past. It is operating now to make the fishery nonproductive for the fishermen who engage in it. I noticed that Mr. Lane, the Secretary-General of the Fishermen's Federation, issued a statement within the last day or so, following the release on the question of fish prices. He made what to me was a most striking statement when he appealed to the trade unions and others involved not to drive up too high the cost of packing fish. I don't know if Mr. Lane realized what an utterly pathetic appeal that was. I don't know if he realized how sad it was to hear the representative of the primary producers, the men who go out and produce the fish in the first instance, the men who take it out of the water, for those men to hear through their representative an appeal to the longshoremen, the plant workers, the crawlers, the people who make the fish, people who handle the fish, wage workers, those who worked for a fixed hourly rate or fixed daily or fixed monthly rate, the primary producers, the gatherers of the wealth in the first instance appealing to the people who work at it afterwards not to drive the price too high. That is one of the saddest things I have ever heard. Yet it is only one of a dozen factors that enter into the picture, all of them bad, all of them combining to keep the standard of living of the fishermen and their families down low, all of them combining to produce that one effect, all of them operating down through the decades and some of them down through the centuries, always having the same effect that the last man who can make a living out of the fishery is the fisherman. He is the very last man and not the first.

The shops in Jamaica, in Kingston, these little shops we saw when driving around the highway out through the farm sections of Jamaica, the little shops on the side of the road, the shops that sell the cod fish to the coloured people, they can make a living. The larger shippers and merchants who wholesale the fish to these little shops, they can make a living out of the cod, and make a very good living in fact. The importers who bring the fish into Jamaica (and when I speak of Jamaica it might as well be Puerto Rico or any other market) the importers who buy and bring in the codfish can make a living out of the codfish. The men on the very boats that transport the fish to the market from the producing countries make a living. The men who barrel it and handle it and pack it in drums or boxes or other containers make a living. The merchants who packed it and shipped it off make a living. The local merchants who receive it in from the fishermen, nine times out of ten will make a living. There you stop. Right there you stop. You have come back now to the primary producers. You cannot go back any further. You are right back to the fisherman, and there you stop. There is no living in it for him. He is only the man that produces the fish. Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me that I ask for a recess of ten minutes, in view of the fact that we have only one stenographer.

MR. SPEAKER: There will be a recess for ten minutes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, the machinery that is being set up under this Bill is machinery designed to carry out the purposes and recommendations of the Fishery Development Committee as contained in the report to the two governments. Honourable Members who have the report before them will find on page 263 a very fine summary of the purposes of the report and of the recommendations, especially commencing on page 268 under the sub-heading "Area Development." Up to now in these remarks of the past few days I have concentrated most of my attention on the northeast coast. I would not have it thought from that, and I doubt if anyone would think from that fact, that I attach more importance to it than I do to the other two coasts, the northwest coast and the southeast coast. But the northeast coast because of the fact that it is there that the great bulk of the salt cod fishery is. If you can take the northeast coast as meaning from Cape Race say to Cape Bauld or Cape Norman, the east and northeast coast. Formerly in Newfoundland we divided our coast into northeast, southeast, west and southwest coast. We still subdivide it as the northeast, southwest, and west coast and the north west coast, but generally, I think we divide it into three sides of a triangle. Well, here in this report they deal with this very matter. Under Area Development (a) General: "The establishment of filleting plants strategically placed for diversified production and year-round operation at large centres of production along the south coast from St. John's to Isle aux Morte near Port aux Basques has gone a long way towards modernization of the fishing industry on that coast. These plants form the bases from which long-liners and other large craft using modern fishing techniques can operate. They also provide a market for a large number of trap, trawl-line and hand-line fishermen operating near their locations. In addition a few firms operate as purchasers from the knife for pickling and salt-bulk production.

"Plant development along that coast should take the form of extension of existing facilities for more diversified production. It appears desirable that these plants have space and facilities sufficient, under normal conditions, to take in all fish offered by the fishermen and place under salt suitable fish surplus to filleting requirements. Small fish and species not suitable for filleting or salting, together with fish offal can be utilized for production of meal, oil and solubles. Extensions to existing plants would provide for the necessary space for holding and storing the estimated salt fish production, for one or more mechanical driers, for refrigerated holding rooms and for the plant to reduce meal, oils and solubles. All features of these operations should be mechanized. Until it is demonstrated that light salted fish can be produced satisfactorily by mechanical drying at all stages, it will be necessary for plants to have outdoor flakes for partial drying by sun and wind.

"The erection of additional filleting plants in this area is in contemplation. Some of the existing plants, while conveniently located for procurement of supplies of raw material, have not been placed in locations suitable for requirements of plant labour or for development of a community having proper services and amenities. Selection of sites for development after a thorough survey will be discussed later.

"The erection of further additional plants on the south coast will in due course accompany or follow upon market expansion. The aim in all such cases should be full utilization of all products available. This will give the maximum benefit to the fishermen and plant workers and should at the same time result in economies in operation and higher returns on investment.

"At small places along the south coast which cannot be served by these large plants and where fishing will for many years be carried on in the traditional way, or where a few larger craft may operate, development may take the form of minor centralization and improvement of shore facilities dealt with hereafter for similar settlements on the northeast coast where the real problem of the Newfoundland fisheries exists."

I ask the House to take note of the last part of that sentence which gives the opinion of the Fisheries Development Committee after nearly two years of extensive examination of the whole of the Newfoundland fisheries problems on all our coasts. They say, in reference to the northeast coast: "Where the real problem of the Newfoundland fisheries exists." Now that is all they say about the southwest coast, and in this part of the report, and properly so, for a very good reason. When you stop to figure it out you have got at Fermeuse a fine modern plant and you have at Trepassey an even more modern one. You have one at Burin which I think is the largest in Newfoundland, one at Fortune which has just come into production, and a large one under construction at Grand Bank; one at Gaulois and then further up the coast you have two or three, at Ramea, Burgeo and Burnt Island and Isle aux Morte. That is ten plants or eleven plants, fresh frozen fish plants on the south coast, beginning at Fermeuse (if you can say that is the south coast). Now these plants are all south of that line I mentioned, drawn east to west from say, St. John's across to Point Riche or somewhere in Bay St. George. They are all south of that line where you have all-weather seaports, where boats come in and out any day of the year. I am not revealing any secrets when I say negotiations are going on (I see members looking at me hard) I won't say any more than that negotiations are going on for still other modern plants south of that line.

So that it is quite easy, especially when reading the figures on this map that I have read from, to imagine that the fishery south of that line will very quickly, and it has already in spots, become quite profitable for all engaged in it.

Now when you take the west coast, I think my honourable friend, the Minister, will agree that in his own district of St. George's Port au Port there is really no big fishery. There is a fishery but not a big one, not any more. It is not half as big nor quarter as big as it was twenty years ago.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries & Co-operatives): There is a big potential.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, I think that is true even of Bell Island, which could be the home base for a very important fishery, as almost any part of Newfoundland could be a centre for fishery. No matter where you go in Newfoundland on any coast line at all you are reasonably sure of finding a big potential for fish.

But as to the west coast generally—

What are the totals on the map? For one whole side of the triangle? I don’t think it is any more than twenty thousand quintals for the whole of the western triangle of Newfoundland. I don’t think it is more. So that what are you left with? You are left with the northeast coast. I am now told there are thirty thousand quintals for the whole of the west coast. I was not far wrong. That is from Port aux Basques down to the Straits of Belle Isle and including the Labrador Straits of Belle Isle, the Labrador side. So that if the south west coast is helped by the way of being put into a generally sound and prosperous condition we may pass on for the west coast is primarily now a great newsprint, pulp and paper industry where they have the biggest mill in the world, Bowaters Mill, a vast ramification of pulp operations, and where they have the great City of Corner Brook with seventeen or twenty thousand population, and a great airport at Harmon Field and a great woods operation in the District of St. George’s-Port au Port, and a very considerable farming activity in that district as they have also down in certain sections of St. Barbe District. I think if we can omit reference to the moment to the potentialities on that coast. I think we can say truly that the fishery on that western side of the triangle is not presently important, and that leaves the northeast coast.

The northeast coast is the problem child, and as they truly say here in this report, it is where the real problem lies. Now if the honourable gentleman would follow through with me, and see the graphic, striking, extremely depressing picture we get of this coast.

Quoting again from the report:

"Establishment of large filleting plants on the northeast coast does not appear to be feasible. North of Bonavista the season is too short to permit of operation for more than six or seven months."

Now until very recently that sentence could have struck dismay into the hearts of all people concerned with that great coast—"Establishment of large filleting plants on the northeast coast does not appear to be feasible," and north of Bonavista the season is too short to permit of operation for more than six or seven months. The overhead costs would place plants on that coast at a great disadvantage in competition with those having year round production on the south coast and in places outside of Newfoundland. At present, diversification of product can be obtained only by operation of draggers to fish on the Grand Banks with a longer haul. Marketing, too, becomes more difficult and costly as part of the production must be stored at the plant or moved to winter shipping ports or to some place near the market for storage. These factors influenced the closing of two plants on that coast and the transfer of machinery to a south coast site a few years ago. It is not to be expected, therefore, that persons proposing investment of capital in the frozen fillet industry will decide upon a plant location along the northeast coast."

That is already out of date insofar as it refers to large plants, but you can still have freezing plants because of the block frozen process, the first nee-necessary step leading to frozen fish sticks and frozen fish fingers.

"Along that coast development should, in the view of the Committee, be by centralization of the salt fish industry at a number of plants located at suitable places in large areas of production in the inshore fishery and near grounds on which long-lining can be successfully carried on. The operation in these plants would be as fully mechanized as possible and the aim should be ultimately to produce light salted fish by mechanical drying."

That reminds me, Mr. Speaker, of a most fascinating conjecture. Everybody that you ask will tell you that in Italy for instance they must have, if they buy our Newfoundland codfish, it must be codfish of a certain cure. There can be no if and but about it, but that is that. That heavy salted fish is out of the question. It has to be light salted fish, what is called the Italian cure, a special kind of light salted codfish. We, as a government, sent the late Chesley Holmes to Italy and to Spain and to Portugal. He died in Portugal. We sent the late Chesley Holmes to Italy, and he did get to Spain and to Portugal to check on one simple question and to get the answer to one perfectly simple question. You see if a market will take a fish of a certain kind then it is a bit silly to try and sell them, (if they will take that type and no other) fish of another kind. Sell them the kind they want; if they want a light-salted cure and nothing else then don't send them a heavy-salted cure. But the question is, do they want a light-salted cure and only that and nothing else? Everybody tells us that is what they want. Any merchant in Newfoundland will tell you that, any reporter will tell you, any official of NAFEL will tell you, anyone that was ever stationed in Italy on behalf of the Newfoundland Fish Trade will tell you Italy wants light-salted cod. Well, of course, some things in this world have been accepted down through history as being absolutely final. Don't ask further questions. Close your mind. But some of those things turned out not to be so. So that it occurred to us to be a little unorthodox about it; to go out and find out if it is true. Because it is an extremely important question. You can make heavy-salted fish in driers and handle it mechanically with an ease and comparable cost but trying to do the same thing for the light-salted fish is quite different. It is much cheaper to take heavy-salted fish and handle it mechanically and dry it in mechanical driers than light-salted, much cheaper and easier. With heavy-salted fish it is relatively easy, put it in a drier and through phases of heat, but it is not quite that simple with light-salted. You have with light-salted to try to imitate the sun, you got to try and reproduce the heat and relative humidity of a perfect drying day. My honourable friend who has lived in a fishing settlement will remember a summer day when you look at the stones on the road they are wet while the air is almost certain to be quite damp. If the stones are a little lighter in colour they have collected some moisture and the air is probably damp and the humidity is probably too high and it is not a good drying day. The perfect drying day with exactly the right amount of heat and relative humidity is what is needed. Trying to reproduce that in a mechanical drier is a pretty expensive thing and quite difficult although not impossible. Then just as you can draw a graph of a perfect drying day at 8:00 o'clock in the morning until 11:00 and from noon up to 7:00 o'clock at night, and maybe get perfect drying weather for say four hours out of the whole day. All right, do the same thing in your drier, bring the heat up and the humidity down, gradually to a peak, and let it fall off. Take the fish out and work it, put it back again, that is expensive, but it can be done. You can make light-salted fish in a mechanical drier as perfectly as with the sun, but it is expensive. You must either do that or get them to take heavy-salted. If they will take the heavy-salted cure the problem is obviously easier. So that we sent Mr. Holmes to get an answer to that question. He was the man who knew those countries, knew their language, he could mix with them, be convivial with them, and he could get a lot of information from them. Unfortunately, for Newfoundland he passed away in Portugal. He died before his mission was completed. We never had a report from him. He kept his notes in his mind and he died without making a report to us.

We sent another gentleman there who joined him just before he died. But he was not with him long enough to get the answers to these questions which Mr. Holmes carried in his mind. So that to this day we do not know whether Italy would take heavy salted fish or whether it is just silly and nonsensical to think of it. But if she would and if other markets for light-salted codfish would take heavy salted then the problem of mechanical drying would be solved.

MR. W. J. BROWNE: Has that suggestion been passed on to the trade delegation?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not properly a question to be settled by them. They are trying to work up markets and have no time to introduce questions of that character. That is why we sent this man around quietly, unostentatiously, socially so to speak, to try and discover the answer to that question. Naturally if he were there officially and asked that question the answer he would get would be—we have always had that type and that is the type we want. You have to get underneath. Get down and talk to traders and the people actually dealing in those products.

Now to get back to where I broke off: “The operations in these plants would be as fully mechanized as possible and the aim should be ultimately to produce light-salted fish by mechanical drying. While it has not been definitely established that this is possible, the experiments being conducted, the scientific study being made of the problem and the progress made to date tend to justify the assumption that within a short time the success of the process will be demonstrated.”

As a matter of fact it has been demonstrated since these words have been written that you can produce light-salted fish mechanically in mechanical dryers, the average of which will be higher than the average of the same type dried out under the sun.

MR. BROWNE: The average of what?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It has now been proven that light salted fish can be made in a mechanical drier of a quality which on the average is higher, better, than the average of the same type dried out under the sun. That is for this reason: If you could control the sun and the weather outdoors as you can control it within the drier, then day after day you could have perfect drying weather and your average would be very high and your cost very low, because it costs nothing to turn on the sun, if you only knew how to turn it on. But it costs money to turn on the sun inside the dryer, because you have to create your own heat. But it would cost nothing if you knew how to turn on the sun. That is what the fishermen do not know how to do. If they could do that you would not need these dryers.

MR. BROWNE: It does not cost very much—between five and six dollars.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am not able to deal with the figures at this moment. The answer is that it is rather expensive. It can be done but it is expensive to do it.

"Initiation of development of the fisheries cannot, however await the solution of this problem. Partial sun-drying with completion of the process by mechanical drying would appear to offer a procedure by which costs would in the meantime be reduced. For sun-drying there would be some mechanization by use of motor conveyance to haul from store and return wire flakes on which fish would remain spread except when press-piling is required. Mechanization should be affected at all possible stages from receipt of the raw fish to shipment of the finished product."

Now, the Government last year made a grant of five thousand dollars to Mr. Donald Andrews to assist him to conduct some experiments. While I am at it, Mr. Speaker, may I pay a tribute to Mr. Don Andrews who is operating in Bay Roberts and Coley's Point and by means of financial assistance given to him by this Government over a period of two or three years. Mr. Andrews is by way of being a highly original thinker and investigator in the physical processes of the fishing industry, and has devised some astonishing contraptions, astonishing perhaps only when considered against the background of the Newfoundland fishing industry which is so antiquated and which is so backward. Against that background he has devised contraptions which are really quite astonishing. It is quite a sight to go over to Coley's Point and go into a fish store and see a great bulk of Labrador fish still in salt, not washed out, three thousand and five and six thousand quintals and eight thousand quintals, and to see a contraption which, speaking very candidly but not by any means underrating the genius of Donald Andrews in these matters, a contraption which would remind you somewhat of the Toonerville Trolley, although the idea works perfectly. It is a machine put together by hand with a piece of wire here, a piece of rubber there and a piece of wood and a piece of belt all fastened together with nuts and bolts, nevertheless it is a strange-looking contraption. You will see this machine in length about from that wall to here, and about one yard wide, and about one yard high. One end is placed against the great bulk of fish which has a hose coming in and pouring water into it all the time. Men are standing at the end taking the fish from the big pile and laying it on, slime and everything else, on the machine, where a stream of water is pouring on it, and it goes through great round brushes revolving towards each other, with long bristles which bend somewhat but are nevertheless fairly stiff, while the water is pouring all the time. Then the belt flips and the fish turn face up and the same process goes on. Then it comes out at the far end and goes aboard a truck—it is really something.

Now, we gave Donald Andrews five thousand dollars last year to experiment with the idea of mechanized flakes. Mr. Speaker, just for a moment consider two of the simplest processes, economically speaking, in the world today. They are the laying of an egg and the making of codfish. I want to ask the House to exercise its imagination—the laying of an egg is essentially an economic operation. The hen simply goes into the nest and lays the egg, does a little cackling and moves off—very simple, uncomplicated. They wrote a popular song in England some years back—"The hen simply goes and lays an egg. There is nothing to it, but can Winston Churchill do it? Can Ramsay McDonald do it? Can Lloyd George do it? No."

That is all, the hen just lays an egg. It is one of the simplest of all the economic processes in the whole history of economics. Now, I will tell you the second most easy that I know about. It is the lady with a hat on and a shawl over the hat to keep the sun out and the big dress and the apron, and the yaffle of fish, and all the kids, the happy family group that my honourable friend likes to visualize, the yaffle of fish, spreading it out, the back-breaking bending down and laying the codfish one by one on the flake. Then at the first sign of rain gather it up quickly again, one by one, every individual fish. I wonder how many times do human hands handle every individual codfish? How many times? A man hauls it out of the water. He gets it in and gets it up on the stage head. That is twice he handles every codfish. Then it is handled again and placed on the table. Then this time a woman cuts the throat. That is four times it has been handled. Cuts the head off then guts it, then splits it. That is six times. Then it is washed. That is seven times. Then it is salted. That makes eight times. Finally they come down and get around the tub and with their oil skins and rubber boots on and put it in the water and wash it. Then it is taken out and spread. That is eleven times it is handled up to the time of the first spreading. There you have the very elements of economic simplicity. There is this difference: If you want a hen to lay an egg, and I have some little experience in that matter, if you want a hen to lay an egg really consistently and economically you have to go to enormous trouble and expense feeding that hen. You have to give the hen the very best hard Manitoba wheat, the best barley, best rye, minerals, proteins. The care you have to take to get eggs out of a hen is one of the greatest arts of all mankind today, a great art. But you don't get the fish dried on the flakes without expense. The expense begins the moment you take the fish up out of the water. Well please God; we are going in the right direction to put an end to all that. Remember this, salt codfish is exported from Newfoundland during the whole year. Allocations are made in respect of much of the salt fish produced on the northeast coast where additional transportation costs are involved and the provision of adequate stores at some winter shipping ports for such large quantities of fish.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the moment anything living dies it begins to decompose, vegetables, fish, animals.

MR. HOLLETT: The Liberal Party for instance.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Liberal Party has never been so alive. The Liberal Party, though, has to go back to the people every so often to get recharged. It has to go back to its battery, the people, to have its battery recharged, its idealism revived. We are great believers in going back to the people. Now, the honourable gentleman has succeeded in making me do something he has never succeeded in doing before, forget my point.

MR. HOLLETT: You were talking about the storage of fish.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, I know what I was talking about. Codfish is not perishable as for example are strawberries. There are various degrees of perishability in various living things. Nevertheless codfish is a perishable article. It is one of the most astonishing facts that in all Newfoundland today there is only one warehouse or storehouse for the storage of fish, codfish, with controlled temperature. Now you can cook codfish and destroy the bacteria. You can freeze it and hold it in a certain ideal holding temperature the same as meat and that will prevent for so long but not permanently, not indefinitely for years and years, but for many, many months you can arrest the process of decomposition, and you can hold its quality.

Now, what happens with the controlled temperature warehouses in Newfoundland is this: It should not be but inevitably if you put a thousand, five, eight, ten or twenty thousand quintals of fish in a store, packaged or bulk fish, in a store without controlled temperature, where the temperature varies up and down, where the relative humidity varies up and down and the climate changes daily and hourly, then every week and in fact every day that fish spends in such a store it loses its quality. Yes, there is an industry to which the fishermen have contributed their full part, they have done all the hard work, the dirty work and the dangerous work, they have done all they could do; and now the fish passes from their hands, and from that point on deterioration sets in. Their fish, legally the merchants' fish—but I don't suppose the House would find it difficult to appreciate the fact that the price that the fishermen get for their fish is determined by what happens to it at various stages along the way. It is determined by the kind of storage it is put in, what kind of packages it is put in, and the warehouse in which the packaged fish is placed, and how long it is kept there, and the condition of the warehouse and the condition of the fish when it finally reaches the market, and finally reaches the consumer. Who could attempt, I wonder, to assess the amount of human suffering that has been caused in Newfoundland in the last century, the last hundred years or the last four hundred years, or in any one year, the amount of human suffering caused amongst the fishermen and their families by the simple fact that the fish, which is the product of their hard labour, which they have in dirt and danger to produce, is lowered in quality by holding it in fish stores that are a filthy mass of vermin, rats. Oh yes, my honourable friend shakes his head. He could never have been out of St. John's.
MR. HOLLETT: If that were so, why publish it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Why publish it? Four and a half centuries and it has not been published, and we still have it.

MR. HOLLETT: Nonsense!

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not nonsense. They are alive with bacteria. Now I will admit in common fairness that most merchants, if not all, make to the limit of their ability and knowledge an effort to clean their stores and whitewash them at virtually every opportunity. When the last fish has gone out they scrub the floors and whitewash the walls and sometimes the ceiling and certainly brush the cobwebs and dust out. They do that. But that is not enough in a store eighty, ninety, a hundred or a hundred and forty years old. The stores all up and down the waterfront of Water Street averaged one hundred and forty years. Don't forget this is human food going into them; it is not animal food or poultry food but human food. I know fish stores in Newfoundland that date from 1778. What do you know about that, fish stores that have been there since 1778. They cannot be very clean. Now, I say that it is a disgrace to Newfoundland that in all the Island today there is only one modern fish store. That fish store was built by Senator Pratt. It is concrete. It is thoroughly clean and has a good quantity of water available. It is built of concrete in the first place, and there is plenty of water. It then has controlled temperature. Let me give the House an idea of what a fish store should be like. My honourable friend the Minister of Finance and I visited the fish store of Lunenburg, Nova Scotia. There you have this picture: You have a wharf, and the schooners come up from the banks or wherever they fish. Out over the edge of the wharf, slightly out over the edge is a roof built, a shed roof, and underneath the shed on the wharf are the fish washing machines. They are not as good as those of Don Andrews in Bay Roberts. The fish is taken off the schooner and goes immediately through the washing machine, then by conveyor they are brought into a large concrete room, approximately the size of this room, but not as high with a smooth concrete floor which is hosed out frequently. Now the fish had come in. It is washed. It is then stored in controlled temperature, not a steady temperature but a controlled temperature with a certain temperature for certain purposes. From there it goes to the drier and from there comes out into a room of another temperature, and finally when it is dried it goes into another room of still another temperature. Finally it is packed in that room into boxes. Then the boxes of fish are put into another room at still another temperature. Finally that fish is loaded into the holds of refrigerated vessels which take the fish direct to the markets.

Now, that is to say, as soon as the fish are caught they are dressed and salted aboard the vessel, so that they are under preservation. (Salt, of course, is a preservative). Take a piece of fresh beef and sprinkle it very generously with salt and it will arrest the process of decomposition and will so remain until it is washed out. But the moment it is washed out the process continues.

In Newfoundland, on the other hand, what have you? You have one fish store with controlled temper-nature. That one was completed last year, and I don't know even if it is in use yet. Mr. Speaker, what kind of an indictment is that of our fishing industry? What kind of an indictment is that of our fish merchants? If fish is a food the way they handle that fish determines the standard of living of a hundred and fifty thousand to two hundred thousand persons in Newfoundland, men, women and children. The way they handle that fish determines not only the standard of living of those people but the income, the revenue of the government. The way the merchants handle the fish at one point after another determines the amount of revenue the Newfoundland Treasury will get, and therefore determines, in a way, how much can be spent on hospitals, schools and roads and on municipal affairs and public housing and justice and a host of other activities. In short, the way our fish merchants handle their side of the industry clearly determines the shape of Newfoundland.

Now the great system of private enterprise, private capital is described by Adam Smith, and all the economists of the school of private enterprise from that day to this function under these principles: You have a process of selection, the worst is being dropped, the best is being held and retained, and the worst is always being dropped so that gradually one year after another, one decade after the other continual progress, continual improvement continues. Look at modern machinery and you see exactly what I mean. Take the whole business of refrigeration: If what I said were not so you would not have the great scientists, the great trade, the great industry of refrigeration brought to a degree of perfection it has been. Take the whole business of packing and packaging food. It would not have been brought to such a degree of perfection it has reached in these recent years. So it is in almost all of these things. But when you come to the salt codfish industry and the salt codfish trade of Newfoundland you discover to your chagrin, inevitably, inescapably you discover that the industry has lagged behind, has lacked leadership, the leadership of enterprising, energetic businessmen; the leadership and vision and wisdom of men keen to make a profit, in other words, private enterprise in our fishing industry has not been enterprising. In short, Mr. Speaker, the salt codfishery has been an industry in which it was too easy, altogether too easy, to get rich, too easy to do well, too easy to get along if you are a merchant. I am not saying that every merchant became rich. I am not saying that because they did not. But it is an industry in which by paying the fishermen a very low rate you can always live yourself. If you are a merchant you always had the fishermen to take the brunt of it. You could get along very well so long as you could pass your failures, to do a good job, on to the fishermen in the form of lower prices of fish. So long as you could do that the incentive was lacking for you to become expert and proficient as a merchandizer. Is not that so?

MR. HOLLETT: That is correct.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not only that, but so long as you could pass the result of your failure over to the fishermen you could be inefficient and not only as a merchandizer but as an industrialist. Remember the fish merchant is not only a merchandizer, he is an industrialist in the sense that he takes the fish in from the fishermen, he sorts it, sorts out what has grown a little damp and has to redry it, he has to package it in the drums, in the butts, in the casks, in the boxes. It is an industrial process. So that he is an industrialist and he is a trader because he trades and sells the fish. So as a trader and an industrialist the temptation is overwhelming for a merchant to be careless because he always has twenty, thirty, forty thousand fishermen between, so that twenty-five cents a quintal off, a half dollar off the price of fish would pay for a lot of merchants' mistakes and a lot of merchants' failures to show initiative and show enterprise. My complaint is that when I say that I cannot find words to express the loathing and contempt I have for our fish merchants. Believe me it is the contempt of a man who lives to see industrial efficiency, it is not a personal dislike. The fish merchants whose methods I loathe and despise I may like personally as individuals. That is not material. That is not important whether I like them or whether anyone except their own immediate friends and relatives like them. Personally I don't suppose they are very much concerned themselves about my attitude towards them. But my attitude is an official one as Leader of Her Majesty's Government here in this Province. I say that these leaders of the fishing industry have been blind leaders. It is a great tragedy, a terrible tragedy, a terrible, terrible tragedy. I listened again today to Don Jamieson and his comments on my remarks here of last week.

MR. HOLLETT: Did he do that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: His comments on my remarks about the fish merchants on Water Street. He said he thought he detected an inconsistency on my part. He said I pointed out how I loathed and despised these Water Street fish merchants, and then I had gone on to say that the Government hoped to create an atmosphere, a new atmosphere in Newfoundland in which merchants could have a new faith, a new confidence, in the possibilities of the fishing industry. He pointed these two facts out (both correct) as an inconsistency on my part. He said: if you abuse the merchants how do you expect to persuade them to have new faith and new confidence? Where Don went wrong was that he did not realize I was talking about two entirely different sets of merchants. I look for nothing from the Water Street gang, nothing except bigotry, intolerance, rank hatred. That is about all I look for from the Water Street merchants, with a few exceptions, brilliant exceptions, Arthur Monroe, Ches Crosbie, Hazen Russell, Spencer Lake, and a few others. The rest of them are the lounge lizards, as I called them, social butterflies who go to work at ten or twelve o'clock in the morning and are off playing golf in the afternoon. Newfoundland was not built that way. No country can be built by businessmen who are lazy. If you are going to have private enterprise, let it at least be enterprise. No, the merchants to whom I look are the young outport merchants, young men brought up in that great tradition of the salt codfishery, one of the great fisheries of the world, one of the greatest. Don't forget that. If you go to Boston, the State Capital of Massachusetts, you will find hung over Mr. Speaker's Chair a codfish. That is right, in the State Capital of Massachusetts.

MR. SPEAKER: Don't tell me.
MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't know, Mr. Speaker, whether in the Commonwealth of Nations, Mr. Speaker has a codfish hanging over his head. But it is there for all to see, to remind everyone that Massachusetts was based and founded on codfish. But it was never so much so as it was for this Island of Newfoundland. I hope that the young, energetic merchants of the outports brought up in that tradition, are not despising codfish, not ashamed of its smell. Codfish, you know, Mr. Speaker, is a wonderfully aristocratic thing. Some of the greatest families of the West Coast of England began by carrying on the salt codfish trade, became wealthy and became great, because much greatness is based on wealth. I know a good many of them came from the salt codfishery of this island of Newfoundland. So I hope most fervently that the young fish merchant, young, enterprising men with energy and ambition, hope and faith and confidence in Newfoundland that we in this Government have, will take hold, see it for themselves, and if they lack the capital to come in, they will come to the Government, not the Government directly but to the Fishery Development Authority that we are setting up for that very purpose, and ask the Authority to back them. They have everything but the money. Unfortunately very frequently the people who have the money have nothing but the money. Sometimes but rarely you meet someone with brains, with energy, with intelligence, with initiative, with enthusiasm and with money, meet it all in one man. But that is a very rare bird. Usually by the time he has lots of capital to do things with he has lost the energy and the flair, the divine inspiration, the desire to take the world and change it. Now we hope with the active help and co-operation of a hundred or a couple of hundred active, energetic young outport merchants, men to whom Bally Haly is only a name, and cocktail parties they never even heard of, men who get up at six o'clock in the morning as our pioneers all did in Newfoundland, who get up at six and think that by eight o'clock the morning is half gone. Give us a hundred men like that and a hundred million dollars of public money and private money combined, say fifty millions of each, and a hundred young Newfoundlanders with gumption and energy and enthusiasm and brains and hardheaded practical experience and we will build a Newfoundland that will be a prosperous Newfoundland for every man in it including the traditional and historically poor fishermen of this Province.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Third Reading of Bill: "An Act to Amend the Evidence Act." On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the order paper.

MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, that all further orders of the day do stand deferred. I move that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Tuesday, at 3:00 of the clock.

TUESDAY, May 11th, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.
Giving Notice of Motion

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I give notice I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to enter into an Agreement with Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited, Dominion Wabana Ore Limited and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited."

I also give notice, Mr. Speaker, that the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill "An Act Respecting Social Assistance."

I also give notice, Mr. Speaker, that the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill "An Act to Amend the Welfare of Children Act."

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. On what date did the machinery which was to be used in Dr. Sennewald's Optical Plant arrive in St. John's?
2. What was the amount of the declared Customs value, and the value of said machinery as appraised by the Minister, or other person on his behalf?
3. What was the exact amount of Government moneys transferred at any or all times since Dr. Sennewald signed his contract?
4. How much money was paid in Customs duty on goods and machinery brought into this country for Dr. Sennewald? Table all correspondence between the Department of Economic Development and the Federal Customs Dept. relative to the return of said duty? Is it a fact that the Newfoundland Government assisted Dr. Sennewald to get said duty refunded?
5. On what date was said machinery shipped out of Newfoundland, and by what route, and state its destination. In what insurance company was said machinery insured when shipped out of Newfoundland, and what amount of insurance was placed on same?

MR. HOLLETT: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Is the plant owned by the Hanning Electric Company yet in production, and if so on what date did it go into production?
2. How many men and/or women are presently employed at this plant?
3. What is the total amount of Government moneys paid to this Company and/or to Mr. Hanning personally? Give the dates on which moneys were paid to this Company, and the separate amounts paid on each date.
4. Is the plant owned by the Superior Rubber Company now in production, and if so on what date did the plant go into production?
5. How many men and/or women are presently employed at this plant?
6. What is the total amount of Government moneys paid to this Company? Give the dates on which moneys were paid to this Company, and the amounts paid on each separate date.

7. Table a copy of all Acts and/or agreements in connection with the setting up of each and every new industry and into which Government moneys have been paid or loaned since April 1st, 1949.

8. Account for the payment of $25,000 to Canadian Machinery and Industry Construction Co. over and above the amount pledged in that Company. Give the number of men employed at present with this Company, and the number in employment there at the end of 1953.

Answers to Questions

Question No. 78—Answer in course of preparation.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, while on that matter, might I say I have a list of questions which I have checked over and find that up to Friday last, sixty-nine questions have been asked. Out of that sixty-nine, fifty-two answers have been tabled here, which leaves quite a large number unanswered.

Question No. 79:

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, before I give the answer to that question, there are certain comments I would like to make. What I have to say is really repetitious, as I have already made those comments on the occasion of tabling the Report of the Farm Loan Board. Unfortunately the honourable member for St. John's West who has asked these questions was not present at the time and I do not know whether or not the substance of what I said on that occasion was reported to him. What I said then, Mr. Speaker, is that I would endeavour to give my reasons for stating that I do not think I should table the names of those persons who have been given loans by the Farm Loan Board or who have made application which have been approved but who have not yet received their loan. My reasons for that are: If ever there was a farm loan board set up by any government in the world intended to be completely professional it was this Farm Loan Board. We have, as the report shows, as Chairman, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Resources and the members are: The Deputy-Minister, the Director of Agriculture, the Director of Crown Lands and Surveys and one of the agricultural officers in the Department as clerk. All these serve without remuneration. The Act contains a clause whereby the Minister may require that any loan has to be referred to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. In actual practice that has never happened. So that to this moment the Lieutenant-Governor in Council does not know the names of those to whom loans were granted. Furthermore, until the report had been put on my desk, about a week ago, I did not know one of the names of the people who had made application for these loans. They are farmers for the most part scattered all over the Province. I have the list right here. As a matter of fact I am prepared to give that information to any member of the Opposition, but I do not think I should table it in the House, certainly not this year, or at the present time, for publication. I don't think that the fact that John Brown of Eastport or of Codroy Valley has made application to the Loan Board and for a thousand dollars, which he has not yet used perhaps, but which was obtained for a certain purpose, I don't think that should be made public. I don't think it is in the public interest, in fact, to make that fact known to the general public and to have it blazoned all over the province through the press and by the radio. I may be wrong on this point. This has obviously not been referred to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council for advice. I am giving this just as a personal opinion. We have absolutely nothing to hide, Mr. Speaker, but I think these men are entitled to that. I have just looked over the list, Mr. Speaker, and some of them are very great friends of our friends on the other side of the House. These men are entitled, I think, to ordinary business courtesy even though they are receiving money from the Loan Board. I do think that in a small country such as ours, every man's little private business, even when dealing with the Government Loan Board, should not be blazoned around the community and certainly not at a time when he is considering a mortgage and making plans to expand or carry on other activities. I do not think, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that it would be fair for me to table this list. I don't think it would be in the public interest for me to table the actual names of those people. To any person who has, I would say a political, moral right to know the names, I am prepared to give them or to any member of the Opposition. As it happens all of these agreements are registered in the Registrar of Deeds, and any person can go there and for twenty-five cents get that information. But I don't think that would give that person the right to immediately put it in the press or spread it all around the Province in one way or another. Personally I don't think it would be done. We are not trying to hide anything, but I do think we have to give some consideration to the farmers of Newfoundland who make application for such loans, and they should be protected in some measure from having their affairs published all over the Province.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might be permitted to make a statement on this matter on behalf of the Government. My honourable colleague finds himself in a very embarrassing position. There he is trying to protect the interest of the farmers who feel they want to apply for a loan, and some of whom have been given loans, and some of them have not been given loans, and he feels that their names ought not to be published. I think my honourable colleague ought to be willing to table the information, if the Opposition would undertake not to publish the names in the press or on the radio. There would be no objections in the wide world to their having the information. The only objection is to having that fact that John Jones applied for a loan and did not get it, or applied for a loan and did get it. I think that would be a very good way to stop virtually all farmers applying for loans. If we adopt the practice of publishing the names of all fishermen who apply for and receive loans that would be a very good way to stop all fishermen in the future from applying for loans. I think the Opposition will agree that is a practical attitude to take, after they have given the matter some thought.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I say that I can see very well the point taken by the Honourable Minister and reiterated by the Honourable the Premier. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the shoe is on the other foot as far as the Government is concerned. As a matter of fact I don't think there is anything detrimental for any man in the fact that the world knows he has gotten a loan from the Government. If we attempt to hide these things just in one instance, farmers or fishermen or whatnot, then, I think, we are, as a government, laying ourselves open to suspicion, and suspicion is something which should not apply to any government nor to members on either side of the House. I think, if I were to come to the Government for a loan for a farm or fish plant or any other thing, there is no reason why, if the information is requested, the general public should not know it, because it is not the bank's money. It is not my money, it is not your money, Mr. Speaker, it is the people's money. I think the people as such, that is the public, have a right to know the names of the persons and the amounts. I think it would be unfortunate if we adopted the principle suggested by the Honourable Minister. We have had tabled here and published information about all sorts of loans made by the Government, and I don't think we can afford to make any exceptions whatsoever, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SPEAKER: Of course, as the House knows, there is no debate on questions or comments on any answers to any questions. However, I did allow the Leader of the Opposition to state their views. The answer to the question is that the Minister concerned will be prepared to table all information other than the names of persons granted or refused loans.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, at this stage I would not like to go on record as making that categorical statement, that I refused to table that information, at this time. If the honourable member would permit, I would perhaps give the answer to that further consideration.

MR. SPEAKER: Do I understand the honourable member to say he is prepared to make the list available on condition they maintain it as private information?

DR. ROWE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I don't think that is acceptable to the Opposition.

MR. SPEAKER: Any further answers to questions?

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if anyone has any information as to when the budget is likely to be brought down?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I think, Mr. Speaker, from what I have heard from the Minister of Finance the answer would be just about the same as last time.

Orders of the Day

Second reading of a Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority":

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I have heard some suggestions, or I have read them, I forget which, either one or the other, that I am in this speech attempting to create a record for marathon speaking. I have also heard or read (I forget which) the suggestion that I was making a political speech. I should like now to say that I am doing neither. I am voicing my opinion, my views on this whole matter of fishery development in Newfoundland. The matter is itself so big, so vital to the welfare and the future of Newfoundland and therefore of this Government that I have felt and feel that I should make an attempt to make my own views thoroughly well known to the House, and if possible, through the House to the people, particularly to the fishermen. The last thing I have had in mind is to make a political speech, and certainly I have not in mind any thought of establishing a record in the length of my speech in this House. Anyone that would imagine that I was doing either has a very poor sense of the life and death importance of this matter to Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, the shape of our lives in Newfoundland, and the shape of the lives of tens of thousands not yet born in this Province will be determined by what happens in our great fishing industry. Whether we like it or not, the fact is that half of our economy is based on fisheries, half of our people get their living, such as it is, from the fishery. When half of the economy of any country or state or province is dependent upon any one industry, when half the population of that area gets its living from one single industry, even if that one industry were agriculture, even if it were agriculture, but much more so when it is the fisheries, the economic state of that area is perilous. Because the economic state is perilous the political and social state is perilous as well. In consequence twenty years from now the flavour of life in Newfoundland, the shape of things in Newfoundland in almost every field, education, health, roads and a score of other important departments of our provincial life will be what they will be because of what the fishery is and will have done for the economy of our people. In other words, anything that determines the character of half of our economy, anything that determines the livelihood of half our population directly, and indirectly a large portion of the other half, anything doing that is clearly, is obviously of utterly vital importance to us. I have, I confess, been trying in a leisurely sort of way in these past few days, and I hope with some clarity of thought and some clarity of expression, to paint a picture, as I see it, of fishery development in this Province.

I regret sincerely that it should be as late as this, five years after confederation, that we should be ready to launch the programme, and that we were not ready to launch it contemporaneously with Confederation, or half way through between then and now, but we were not. I doubt that in the writing of Newfoundland history that will ever be held against us. I think that any sober historian will see that the setting up of the Fishery Development Committee was an indispensable first step, and that it took two years, and that this report was no sooner out than that a general election in the federal field became imminent. Everybody knew it was coming. Therefore the remainder of 1953 was virtually lost in that matter because of the dissolution of parliament and the holding of the general election. Clearly it would have been very shortsighted of this Government to launch the fisheries development programme without first knowing precisely what the Government of Canada was prepared to do, and what it was not prepared to do, to join the Newfoundland Government in a programme of fishery development. So inevitably, unavoidably the time was lost, for which this Government cannot be held accountable. Indeed no government can be held accountable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned a figure of one hundred million dollars as being the probable cost of fisheries development in Newfoundland. I have not meant by that figure that a hundred million dollars would need to be spent by the Government of Newfoundland, nor have I meant that a hundred million dollars would have to be spent by the Government of Canada. I took that as a figure representing the combined costs, the combined federal and provincial costs of fisheries development. Incidentally, in connection with that figure of a hundred million dollars which I gave in this House before, I was somewhat amused to notice that the "Western Star" saw in my announcement reason for the publication by them of an editorial commenting on my announcement. Now obviously it is the right of a free press in a free land to offer free comment on any utterance of a public man, any public utterance of a public man, especially the public utterance of a public man on a public matter, in a public place. The right of a free newspaper in a free land to offer a free comment on such a statement is undisputable and not to be questioned. It seems to me, however, that it is the clear duty of a newspaper not to attribute to a public man on whose statements it sets out to offer its own comments, it is the clear duty of that newspaper to comment on what the man said, the public man or the Minister said, and not on something he did not say. There is no reason why it should not comment on something he did not say provided it did not attribute to him the thing that he did not say. The "Western Star," to my amusement, stated editorially that the Premier had announced the intention of the Government to float a bond issue this summer of one hundred million dollars for fisheries development. That is quite a bond issue! To this moment I have not said anything to indicate the size of the bond issue which, so I have announced, we intend to ask this House to authorize us to raise. I have said nothing as to the size of the bond issue. The "Western Star" editorially declared that I had said in this House that we are going to float this year a bond issue of a hundred million dollars for fisheries development.

Now, I did mention the figure "a hundred million dollars." I did say that we were going to raise a bond issue. But the two statements were not made together. They were separated by at least an hour. How anyone could put the two together; the fact that the fishery development programme over the next twelve or fifteen years would probably cost a hundred million dollars, that statement, and the statement that we proposed this year to float a bond issue in an unnamed amount. How he could put these two statements together and write an editorial about it? Now that same man would scream like a stuck pig, the man who wrote that would squeal like a stuck pig if any public man anywhere suggested anything by way of limiting the freedom of the press. He would squeal like a stuck pig. He would have recourse then to the loftiest principles of British freedom, and rightly so, rightly so. He would have to do quite a bit of writing to equal the writing I have done in my life in defending the freedom of the press. But he might do it—he might well equal it. He would undoubtedly make a strong attempt to confuse the public mind into thinking that somehow or other by some strange transformation of the press meant the right to say that a public man said something that he never said. Then if you complain that you are misrepresented you are somehow making an attack upon the great principle of freedom of the press. If you complain that your words have been garbled and distorted you are making an attack upon the freedom of the press. Now patriotism is the last refuge of the scoundrel, and appeals to the great principle of freedom of the press can equally be the last refuge of a literary scoundrel.

I said that. I mentioned the figure of one hundred million dollars as the probable cost of fishery development in this Province, of which I would visualize approximately half being found by the Government of Newfoundland half by the Government of Canada, spread over a period of a decade or rather more. In other words, an average of something between three million and three and a half million dollars a year from each government for fishery development.

Mr. Speaker, I know of no part of the Western Hemisphere where the spending of a hundred million dollars to reorganize the economy of an area would be so well spent as it would be if spent on reorganization of the fisheries of Newfoundland, because I know of no people in the North American Continent intrinsically better than our Newfoundland fishermen, braver, tougher, more generous, more ingenious, more hospitable, more devout, more God-fearing, than our Newfoundland fishermen. I know of no people in North America with finer human qualities than that of our Newfoundland people. A hundred million dollars invested in that industry by which they live and by which alone they must live, if they continue to live in Newfoundland, and so long as they continue to live in Newfoundland, I know of no people in whose means of living a hundred million dollars could be better invested than in those people. There are about one hundred and fifty thousand of them, men, women and children. They are of English stock. They are of Irish stock. They are of Scottish stock. They are of good stock. They are good people. They are not afraid of work. They are not lazy. They are wholesome-minded, they are clean minded. My honourable and learned friend from St. John's West may differ indeed, as we do, as to what is the ideal type of life for them. But I think we agree, and all members of this House regardless of party affiliations agree that although there are indeed in various parts of North America some excellent people, our people, our Newfoundland people, are at least, basically, intrinsically, as good as ever water wet.

MR. HOLLETT: The merchants too?

MR. SMALLWOOD: You are not pouring money down the drain when you invest in the industry by which such people live. You are not pouring good money after bad. It is a good investment in human welfare. It is a good investment in good people.

Now, I have already said that I cannot guarantee the kind of success such as I believe I can guarantee our industrial enterprises. I believe that without exception, I do not think that there will be one collapse, or one failure amongst our industrial enterprises. When I say our industrial enterprises I mean these industrial plants that have come here from the Continent of Europe, with financial assistance from this Government. I am not referring to all our local industries. I am referring to these particularly promoted by this Government. I do not look for one failure amongst them, I do not look for one collapse amongst them. I do not, on the other hand, look for unbroken and continuous success. I don't look for that. That would be unreasonable. But I firmly believe, and I am in very close touch with them daily, I firmly believe that after they have gotten over the hump, each one has its own humps and a number of humps, not just one, which have to be ironed out, but I believe that each of them when it has surmounted these difficulties, which will go on for several years yet, but after they have surmounted these obstacles, they will pay back the loans we have made them, service the loans in the meantime, they will employ people and they will make a profit. I don't know, and I certainly won't attempt to prophesy that in the fishing economy we can get it so industrialized as to give us the same confidence in its capacity to pay big dividends to the owners of the shares. On the other hand I shall be the last man in Newfoundland to be surprised if twenty years from now the fishery is giving the Newfoundland people engaged in it a better living than even the newsprint industry or any of the mines of Newfoundland. I shall be the last one to be surprised because the potentialities are there to do that, we have that. We have the fish. We have the people in North America and South America—we have the fish and we have the people of these two continents. Somehow these can be brought together so that those who produce the fish and process and handle it will make an excellent living out of it—an excellent living. But I won't guarantee it.

Mr. Speaker, some short time ago I was reading in an industrial publication, published, I believe, by the Canadian Paper Organization, and showing a table indicating that they had canvassed four thousand five hundred industries across Canada asking each one to state how much capital it had invested in its business and how many employees it had in its business and the returns they received, four thousand five hundred industries, real industrial concerns, stretching across Canada. They learned that the average worker in industry required eight thousand dollars to be invested in industry to provide him with a job, eight thousand dollars per worker. So that a million workers would represent a combined investment of eight billion dollars. Eight thousand dollars per worker is the amount of capital required in industry as the average in Canada. I saw another table compiled in the United States showing that it requires an average of ten thousand dollars of invested capital to employ one worker in industry in the United States. Therefore it is on the average of eight thousand dollars in Canada and ten thousand dollars in the United States. Doubtlessly the figure varies from country to country, and within a given country. I doubt very much whether it would be humanly possible, economically and financially possible to invest a hundred million dollars in Newfoundland in straight industrial enterprise and employ as many people as the same amount of money would employ if invested in the fisheries—I doubt it. I am not absolutely sure of it. I am not certain of this, but I doubt, if the Government at this moment had in hard cash in the till, one hundred million dollars in bank notes. and was trying to make up its mind whether to invest it, if it had the opportunity to invest it in, let us say, thirty or forty industrial plants of one kind or another, and all of them prospectively sound and profitable enterprises as far as you could foresee—

MR. BROWNE: What about a steel mill?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable and learned and intellectual friend, after a short stay of a few weeks in this House, after living for four years in the Motherhouse of Canadian parliament, sinking so low as to be copying tactics learned from his Leader rather than giving lessons! He has been giving lessons up to now. He is, as of today, taking them. My honourable friend, the latest leader of the party, I hope, is not to be replaced soon. My honourable friend is smarting from a number of things, some bitter and savage disappointments of the past several days—he has suffered some bitter and savage disappointments. I happen to know what they are, and incidentally one of the causes of his irritation, one of the causes of his bad feelings at the moment is the realization that has been borne in upon him within recent days of the ghastly political miscalculation and mistake he has made in having himself and two of his followers occupy an hour or so in this House to discuss the greatest topic brought before this House in the present century.

MR. BROWNE: It does not look like we shall ever get another chance to say anything.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friends cannot speak any more about it. They are permitted by the rules to speak once only on second reading. They followed the rules, and they spoke. But they did not think the matter was so big. They did not realize it, because, as my honourable friend, the Minister of Welfare, remarked—if they cross Ocean Pond they would get seasick. And as my honourable friend, the member for Fogo remarked; they never go outside the City of St. John's. What do they know about fish? What do they know about Newfoundland who only St. John's know?

MR. HOLLETT: What do you know about this Bill? That is what we want to know.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have told my honourable friend many times already that I can explain a thing to him but only God can give him the brains to understand it when I do explain it. This is the fifth day, and my honourable friend either can't, or won't or does not want to understand it. He can take his choice amongst these three.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I know of no group of people in Canada nor in the United States in whose way of making a living a hundred million dollars would be more wisely invested than in the fisheries of Newfoundland.

Now what is the alternative to it? Does any member of this House doubt the alternative? The alternative, it seems to me, is a swift depopulation of the outports. My honourable friend, the member for Fogo District, told me a few weeks ago that on Fogo Island, since the end of the recent war, nine years ago, in the past nine years on Fogo Island which is one of the great fishing areas of this Island of Newfoundland, virtually every young man who has left school has emigrated to some other part of Newfoundland, and some of them have left Newfoundland altogether. I don't know if my honourable friend has the actual figures?

MR. JANES: We have no boy or girl who has passed Grade XI in the last four or five years who has remained.

MR. SMALLWOOD: In the last four or five years, my honourable friend tells me, not one girl or boy who has passed Grade XI in Fogo has remained in Fogo.

MR. HOLLETT: No boats, I suppose. They hauled them up, did they not?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I find my honourable friend's reference a little obscure.

That is the alternative. The alternative is that these places will become depopulated. Now admittedly Fogo Island might be a rather dramatic example and in some ways an exaggerated example of the situation that is general throughout the Island. But that is not quite as bad because Fogo Island is an island in Bonavista Bay. I know islands where today not a living soul is left where five or eight years ago, as recently as that, dozens of families lived. I know one island that I canvassed, indeed I canvassed every dwelling on that island when I was seeking election to the National Convention, in the District of Bonavista Bay centre. There were there then some eighteen or twenty families. In addition to these families there were other families who went there every summer to carry on the fishery. Today there is not a single family there. We all know of other cases around the coast of Newfoundland where people have left the islands to go on the mainland of Newfoundland. That is only a more dramatic demonstration of what is going on somewhat less dramatically, somewhat less spectacularly all over the coast of Newfoundland. People are moving from the smaller places and going to the larger centres. Some of these places are in Newfoundland and some of them are on the Mainland of Canada. But people are leaving these outports. What people? In the main young people. Now, Mr. Speaker, to be quite brutal and to be quite realistic about it, it may be that 1954 is too late to launch a great fishery development programme. The opportunity may have come and gone. I don't know. I hope not. But it may be the case. Possibly 1950 would have been too late. Possibly any time after the second world war was too late. I don't know. I can only hope not. I do know that social forces were let loose, particularly during the second world war, that are operating yet which may make it quite impossible sociologically, people-wise, may make quite impossible the kind of fishery development we are planning in this legislation. Maybe it is futile to expect people to go out on the Atlantic Ocean and fish, young men. Maybe it is just a waste of time to expect young men will make a career of fishing in the salt water. I don't know. I hope not. I hope that is not the case. But it may be the case. If it is the case it is poetic justice. It is the past catching up with us. It is the historic chicken coming home to roost. It would be the result of centuries and decades of injustice if now the young men of our outports, who fifty years ago would have looked forward to no more than an entire lifetime in the salt cod fishery, if now they have their minds made up never to touch a salt cod fish. That would be the historical chicken coming home to roost indeed. I don't know. I can only hope that it is not so. If I could make my voice heard by every young fisherman in Newfoundland today I would say something like this: There is something to be said for leaving the outport home and getting a job at Goose Airport. There is something to be said for getting a job at Seven Islands. There is something to be said for getting a job on some other airport or in some military establishment. There is something to be said for going off to Nova Scotia or Ontario and getting a job for the summer. There is something to be said for that. The wages are paid in cash. They run up 90c., $1.00, $1.20, $1.50 an hour. There is something to be said for it. God in Heaven knows that there is something to be said for it especially compared with what young, able-bodied men and ambitious and energetic fishermen have known in the past, compared with what they have been able to get out of the fishery up to now. There is something to be said for it. But I would also say this: There is no future, no real future in going from pillar to post, a job now for three months and then at another airport, another job for four months, and at Harmon Field a job next year for three months, and at Gander the year after, if you are lucky, for three or four months. Then a job, maybe the year after, on some construction job for three or four months. There is no future in that. There is no real future for a young man in that.

I had a relatively young man, not real young, in his fifties, come in to see me in my office last night. He comes from Flat Islands, Bonavista Bay. For the past three years he has been working at Goose Airport. He was making $1.48 an hour as a foreman. He came in now to go down there again, only to learn that he is past the age limit, which is fifty-five years of age. His job is finished. There is no more future for him. He is fifty-five years of age. He is a patriarch at fifty-five. He was a foreman for three years getting nearly a dollar and a half an hour and with lots of overtime. Now he is fifty-five, and he is turned out on the scrap heap.

But you are not on the scrap heap at fifty-five if you are a fisherman. You can fish at fifty-five and at sixty, and if you want to, at sixty-five, if you are still in good health and active. And you are more likely to be in good health and active than if you were living in some city working in some factory or on some industrial job. I would admit to the young fishermen of Newfoundland that, if they had to judge the future in the fishery by the past, then keep away from it. If the only prospect at all they can see ahead of them in the fishery is what they have seen in their own lives up to now, and in the lives of their fathers and grandfathers before them, stay away from it. Let that be my advice!

But I would not be talking for five days in this House about fishery development if I saw nothing better in the years right ahead of us than there has been in the years right behind us. I would not waste my breath and my throat for five days talking fishery development if I saw nothing in it. That is the message that I would send out to young fishermen: What should have been done in the past is going to be done now! What former governments did not do this Government is going to do (and I am not naming former governments).

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if I could ask a question: The Fishery Development Committee Report says that the industry, if mechanized, will only need two thousand men. That is what you are talking about. What about the rest of them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Who is talking about complete mechanization of the fisheries? I have not done so. I don't propose to do so. I said this Government is going to do what former governments did not do. When I say that I am not condemning former governments. They could only do what was possible for them to do. It was not possible for them to tackle this great fishery problem, as we are going to do now.

If it costs one hundred million and the Government of Canada pays fifty million of that, that is then fifty millions that this Government do not have to pay, and it is fifty million we do have to find. But where would former governments of Newfoundland have found fifty million dollars? Between the two wars or between the end of the first world war and the outbreak of the second world war the various governments borrowed over fifty million dollars in bond issues, over fifty million they borrowed between the two wars. What for? They borrowed it to pay the ordinary running expenses of the Government. A little portion of it, but only a small portion of it was spent on capital expenditure, the vast bulk of it was spent to finance the ordinary running expenses of the government.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, to help out this argument—I think you will remember that between 1919 and 1931 that fifty million dollars was borrowed.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, virtually none was borrowed after. As I said it was borrowed between the two world wars but after the Commission Government came in 1932 we borrowed practically nothing. In 1931 we collapsed. We could not continue. There was some fifty million dollars borrowed in these twelve or fourteen years. That is about the same period of time we have in mind for this fishery development programme. That is roughly the same period of time in which these governments of these days borrowed over fifty millions not for fishery development but to stay alive, to keep the government alive, to pay the ordinary, day to day running expenses of the government on current account. Now of course I know very well it was necessary for the governments of those days to disguise the purpose of their borrowing. They could not very well go unbrokenly every year, year after year, with the regularity of the calendar, to the financial markets and say, we are back again, we are running into difficulties, we cannot collect enough from the people to pay the ordinary running expenses of the government, so we have to borrow to do it. They did not do that. They always passed their Loan Bills with a flash of trumpets and speeches by the Minister of Finance and announcing some great programme of a capital nature.

MR. HOLLETT: Like they are doing now.

MR. BROWNE: Except the last loan.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Like we are doing now? We are not even borrowing now. We are bringing in a Bill to set up an Authority, a Fishery De-development Authority. Then the gentleman, who is not the intellectual member, says: "Like you are doing now!" This is on a par with the honourable gentleman's contribution to this debate on this great topic of fishery development. I say these various governments borrowed fifty millions and more in twelve or fourteen years to carry on. We propose in about the same period of time to borrow some sum for fishery development, ranging between twenty and fifty million dollars. My hope is that it will be closer to ten millions than to fifty. I am now referring not to what we propose to spend but to what we propose to borrow because, unless there is an economic recess and unless there is some kind of a depression, we hope to continue budgeting, candidly, for a substantial surplus on current account. That surplus will help to finance the fisheries development as well as will the amounts we borrow. But the surplus we earn ourselves on current account, if, as and when we earn it will reduce by these amounts the amount that we will have to borrow for the purpose of fishery development. So that, I say, to spend fifty million dollars from the Provincial Treasury in those years does not necessarily mean that we have to borrow fifty million dollars. We have to borrow what we don't earn and no more. The ambition we have is that for our part as a government here in Newfoundland, as a government of this province, we will spend about fifty million dollars while at the same time and during the same period the Government of Canada will spend another fifty millions, making a total of a hundred million dollars.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if that appears to some members to be a lot of money will they please bear in mind that the Parliament of Canada just a couple of years ago, with scarcely a blink of an eyelid, was able to vote an amount of seventy millions of dollars in hard cash to the wheat growers of the prairie provinces. I can assure this House that it is a long time now since the wheat growers of the prairie provinces needed financial support as our fishermen need it. It is a long time indeed since the wheat growers of Canada were in the kind of need that our fishermen are in at the present time. So that I say, when we talk of a hundred million being spent on fishery development, not in a year or two, but in a decade or rather more, we are talking after all what is quite a modest statement. Indeed I sometimes wonder if technological progress in the fisheries of the world generally might not make the estimate of a hundred million dollars obsolete even in the next two or three years. Whatever the figure required, however, we should be prepared to spend. Our attitude should be and our attitude must be the attitude that nothing is too much and nothing is too good for the fishermen of Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, it has been suggested to me today that in view of the fact that we have but one stenographer a recess of ten minutes should be taken.

On motion House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, before the recess I was at a point that I fear I did not develop thoroughly, and which needs undoubtedly to be developed. I would say that if I were in a position to talk to every fisherman in Newfoundland today, to have my voice heard by all the fishermen in the province, I would agree with them that if the next few years are to be like the last few years I would not blame them if they decided to stay away from the fishery altogether, give it up, abandon it. I would not blame them. If I were a young man living in an outport today and could see no more for the future in the fisheries than the past, no better future than the past, then I for one would not only give up fishing in that harbour but I would give up living in Newfoundland. I would go out of Newfoundland and try to get a job in Ontario or Quebec or perhaps in British Columbia. I say that quite frankly. How could I say anything else? How could any man with a conscience, with any practical knowledge of how our fishermen have in fact lived in the past, how could he advise fishermen to continue living in the outports, continue fishing, if the future of the fisheries are to be no better than in the past, and especially in the immediate past?

But if I were able to talk to all the fishermen of Newfoundland today I would say this: The Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland have agreed on launching a great fisheries development programme. They have agreed on it. In the view of this Government, in this Newfoundland Government, it will take ten or twelve years or so to carry out that programme, and it will cost a hundred million dollars. We would not spend that money, we would not set up that Fishery Development Authority if we did not have two things first: great faith in the future of the fisheries and great determination to carry out these plans. I would say that to all the fishermen of Newfoundland. I would say this also: With fishery development carried on at a great scale there will be for young men in the outports a far better future in the fishery than in anything else they can go at except the professions perhaps, and only a relatively small number of persons ever go into the professions, medicine, the Church, etc. There is a better future in the fishery than in anything else they can go at in the years immediately ahead. In fact, Mr. Speaker, I would say this to the fishermen, young fishermen of Newfoundland: Unless the fisheries are made the most attractive thing they can go at then fishery development is a failure.

I have heard many fishermen say that there is no better life, if you can only make a living at it. Even if you can picture the fisheries conducted with a far greater degree of modernization of boats, engines and gear than exists now fishing will still be a free life and a good life. It always was an attractive life, if you could make a decent living at it. That is all the fishery really lacked. It is a good life but you could not make a living at it. Men had to get out of it because they could not make a living. Fishermen rarely left the fisheries for any other reason. When fishermen give up the fisheries it is only because for the most part they cannot make a living at it.

So that if I were able today to talk to every young fisherman in Newfoundland I would say to them: Before you make up your mind to leave the fishery, to give it up, before you abandon it finally and completely give those two governments in Ottawa and in St. John's a chance to show if they are bluffing. I can answer for this Government and I believe I can answer for the other one, but I can answer for this Government. Give these two governments a chance to show if they are bluffing, to show if they mean business, to show if they are really going to bring about fishery development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I before passing on to the final point I wish to make in these remarks on this Bill at second reading, may I pay a very sincere tribute to the radio stations operating in this province for a perfectly magnificent job they have done in reporting these remarks of mine. I spent most of my life as a newspaperman and radio man, most of my life. In fact if I am ever kicked out of this job the only other kind of work I can go at is back to newspaper work or radio work. I understand it. I know it. I spent my lifetime at it. I began in 1918 and was at it until five or six years ago. I know reporting when I see it or when I hear it or when I read it. I ought to know it. I made a living at it in London and in New York and in Boston and in Halifax and here in St. John's. I am a newspaperman. That is my profession, and given the occasion, politician by profession. They have done a superb job of objective reporting, of compression and of thoroughness, they have left out nothing of consequence. They have gotten in everything of importance. They have compressed it, made it interesting. They have done a proficient job. I say that, not caring a tinker's curse what they say about me or how they report me. I could not usually care less. But this was important. This Bill is important. This fisheries development is important. It was important that our fishermen should know that the head of the Government in Newfoundland considered it important enough to give five days talking to it, and that the Government as a whole and the party as a whole considered it big enough and important enough to give many more days to it. It is important that the fishermen should know that. It is important that the fishermen should know that this Government has faith in the fisheries. I thank the radio stations, and while I am at it I thank the newspapers also. They have done a good job too.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I just want to deal with one final point I have in mind in connection with this Bill, and that is the men themselves, the men who constitute the body to carry out this great programme. The Speech from the Throne said that—I don't remember if it said "never" or "rarely" but it might have said "never"—never in Newfoundland's history were three men entrusted with such a gigantic task as that which has been entrusted to Mr. Dustan, Mr. Young and Mr. Winsor.

MR. JACKMAN: Twenty-five thousand dollars a year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend is back in the Chamber. Well, I hardly know him. He visited us a couple of weeks ago. A rare visitor! He has been sick—he comes in as large as life and knows all about it, and is prepared at the drop of a hat to make a contribution to the debate. Anything you like to talk about he will make his contribution at less than twenty-five thousand dollars a year.

MR. JACKMAN: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—have I a right?

MR. SMALLWOOD: If the honourable gentleman knows what is best he will sit down and stay very quiet. My honourable friend had better do that. If he is wise he had better do that.

Mr. Jackman: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, my absence from the House can be clearly explained. I have been sick.

Mr. Smallwood: The honourable gentleman is sick now.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable gentleman has made his point and his explanation.

Mr. Jackman: It is up to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I said the honourable member has made his point, and he may sit down.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Speaker, I don't think there have ever been three men in our history in Newfoundland who have been given such a terrible task. Their failure, if they fail, will be a terrible failure, just as their success will be an enormous success. But win or lose, succeed or fail, the task that has been given to them is the biggest task ever given to three men in the history of this Island. We think we have chosen well. We have chosen a banker, a merchant and a gentleman whom it is difficult to describe with one tag, in the person of Mr. Winsor. He is a man of great knowledge of world trade, world markets, world conditions. He was one of the very highest ranking officials of FAO and a Newfoundlander of whom we have all been quite proud for the success he has achieved in that great field.

Mr. Dustan is a very successful banker. He was head of the Bank of Nova Scotia here in Newfoundland for a number of years. Then he went with Job's—Northlantic, as top man in that great fishery organization. In fact I believe that as Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia he had a great deal to do with financing Job (Northlantic Fisheries) and the various other companies associated with Job and Northlantic Fisheries. I believe that as Manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia in Newfoundland, Mr. Dustan had a great deal to do with financing and therefore the upbuilding of that great company in the fish trade and fish industry.

Mr. Ross Young, as everyone who knows him and knows Water Street is well aware, is perhaps the most brilliant and the most capable young merchant that Water Street has produced. For a quarter of a century he was a director of Crosbie and Company. He was the first person not being a member of the Crosbie family to be made a director of the Crosbie firm. He has been up to his elbows very actively and very extensively in every branch of the fisheries, with one exception, the exception of the frozen fish industry. He has been up to his very elbows in it for a quarter of a century, the export of fish, the production of fish, shore and Labrador and Bank operations and the operation of druggers, and the operation of shipping of various kinds, freight ships, foreign-going ships. He has at his very fingertips the buying and selling of all kinds of goods including, but not only, fish supplies. He is a man with a remarkably wide knowledge, remarkable experience, remarkable background in the trade and industry of Newfoundland. He is known to thousands of fishermen and is respected by them. He is known to hundreds of businessmen and just as widely respected by them.

Mr. Harry Winsor was once with the Newfoundland Fisheries Board. He was then stationed at Washington for a number of years, I believe, in government service. Then he was employed by FAO (Food and Agriculture Association of the United Nations) and he moved with that organization to Rome when its headquarters was shifted to the Eternal City.

So that we think we have chosen carefully and well. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to be very Jack-blunt about these three men. The Government can afford to be very blunt about them. We felt that we had to get three men who would burn their bridges behind them, burn them completely and absolutely and be absolutely and completely independent of every merchant and business firm in existence anywhere on this earth—absolutely independent. Not only will they work with us, but forever, as long as they live, as long as they breathe they have to be, absolutely independent, operating for this Government and for nobody else on this earth. They must have no other loyalties, no other interests beyond their purely personal and family interests.
They must burn their bridges behind them, be completely independent, completely loyal to this Government and the task we entrust to them for as long as they live and not merely through the period of their service.
We agreed, therefore, that not only would we pay them large salaries, the type that Bowaters and the A.N.D.
Company would be prepared to pay them —

MR. JACKMAN: To another point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will the Premier state their credentials and qualifications, please.

MR. SPEAKER: That is not a point of order, it is a question.

MR. JACKMAN: Well, it is a question—Are you going to answer it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker,
I am breaking a resolution I make in this House five years ago that at the first sign of a certain thing I would act as ruthlessly as a man knows how to act. I will break that resolution.
I will be a Christian. There is one thing I determined I would not have in this House —

MR. JACKMAN: You are always a Christian, Sir, God love you!

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well, don't provoke.

MR. SPEAKER: In the opinion of the Chair the question asked has already been answered.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, I said that we felt it necessary not only to insure the permanent interest, the complete interest of the Fishery Development Authority in two ways (1) to give them high salaries of the type, for instance, that Bowaters would pay their top men or the AND Company would pay their top men, and (2) to give them pensions, whether they died or whether they retired later and (3) go a step further and pension their widows so that, Mr. Speaker, if there are three men in Newfoundland tonight who are completely independent, absolutely, absolutely, independent financially it is these three men.
(1) Because they have high salaries.
(2) Because when they go out they get pensions; and (3) when they go out, if they die, their wives will have pensions. Now we can't go any further than that. That is as far as we can go, and we have gone that far to insure that this great development programme, which is our policy on which we are cheerfully willing at any time to stand or fall. Tomorrow, next week, if you like, say the word and we will have it, next week, any time at all, we will stand or fall on that great programme which has taken nearly three years to devise and which will cost a hundred million dollars to carry out. We think that great programme should be entrusted to men who are body and mind, not soul, but body and mind at the service and in the service of the Government and the people of Newfoundland. We are not willing to take any chances, to run the risk of divided loyalty. We must own their loyalties one hundred per cent. They don't have to save money. They have a pension when they go out. If they died their wives will get the pension. That is how independent we try to make them, because this programme is too big, too much depends upon it in the life of Newfoundland, and in the history of Newfoundland, too much depends upon it to entrust its success to men who might not be loyal and who might not be loyal because they are not independent.

Now let me say again what I have said once before. I have been in public life now since the first day I held a meeting in Gambo where I began my campaign one night in Gambo which is my birthplace. There I raised the flag of Confederation, there at that meeting. That was the summer that the members were elected to the National Government. I don't even remember what year it was, 1945 or 1946. Well, that was eight years ago. I held my first meeting in Gambo. I spoke that night for four hours, my first speech on Confederation. I campaigned then throughout Bonavista Bay, on every island in that bay, I was in nearly every home in that great district. From that day to this I have not stopped working. I am prepared, personally prepared and willing to do this; to go on working for this Government to get this fisheries development programme well and truly launched—Then I am out—Then I am going, I am getting out. By then the mining programme will be well ahead. The great new forestry programme, please God, which my honourable colleague will be introducing into this House a year from now, a great new forestry programme, for development based on the report of the Royal Commission. A year from now in this House my honourable colleague will be introducing an equally great new agricultural development programme. Now what else or what more can we do? Fisheries development, forestry development, agricultural development and economic development. That is why I came into public life, that is the only reason. I must accept some responsibility for the fact that Newfoundland is a province of Canada. I have no apologies to make for that fact. I glory in it, I glory in it! No pen will ever write nor tongue ever tell the happiness and welfare brought to Newfoundland by Confederation. But it is not yet a complete success. The only thing that can make it a success is economic welfare. Our people must make a good living. They cannot live on family allowances and old age pensions and unemployment insurance and civil service salaries and railway pensions and railway salaries and all these things. There must be a firm and sound economic foundation for Newfoundland's future, without that Confederation can be and will be only a hollow mockery. I have felt it to be my bounden duty as one who is most personally responsible for the fact that we are a province of Canada, my bounden duty to help, to assist in laying that broad economic foundation for the welfare of our Newfoundland people. I feel that what has already been set in motion the last great step is now in launching this great programme of fishery development. I am willing to stick with it, in fact I am determined to stick with it until all these are well in hand, until they are out of the realm of debate, until even the Opposition will cease to sneer at the new industries, until the fisheries development programme is going ahead and the forestry development programme and the agricultural development programme and the mineral development programme. I am willing to stick with it and determined to stick with it until these things are operating and the people of Newfoundland have a great sense of confidence in them and in their own economic future, their own economic security. There is nothing heroic about that. It would be a cowardly thing on my part to walk out before that is done. There must be an easier way for me to make a living than the way I am making it. There must be somewhere in the world an easier way for me to make a living. But I am not only willing but determined, because it is my plain duty to stick it out and resist sternly any temptation to drop out and take it easy. Because I can make an easier living giving lectures across Canada if I were to accept ten per cent of the invitations I get. I could make an easier living writing. I could make an easier living in half a dozen ways than in this job. But I will resist the temptation. This will be bad news for some of my friends opposite, but I can't help it. They thought I was just about ready to drop out.

MR. JACKMAN: That is very good news, Mr. Premier.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is one thing about my honourable friend—I believe he is glad that he and I are going to be over here together, he over there and I over here for the next eighteen or twenty years.

MR. JACKMAN: I don't know about that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not that long?

Mr. Speaker, if this greatest of all the Government's achievements can be brought about then I can step out of harness, with the words of Scripture on my lips:

"Lord, now let thy servant depart in peace."

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate until tomorrow.

MR. JACKMAN: I second that, Mr. Speaker.

On motion debate adjourned until tomorrow.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Wild Life Act."

Clause 1 read and carried.

Clause 2 read:

"2. Paragraph (1) of Section 2 of the Wild Life Act, chapter 197 of The Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, as enacted by Section 2 of The Wild Life (Amendment) Act, 1953, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) "resident" means

(1) a Canadian citizen who has resided in the province for a period of six consecutive months immediately preceding his application for a license or permit under the regulations;"
(ii) any person, other than a Canadian citizen, who has resided in the province for a period of twelve consecutive months immediately preceding his application for a license or permit under the regulations:"

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would indicate how he is going to carry out that provision—Would that mean several men would have several licenses depending on the area in which they are fishing?

DR. ROWE: No consideration has actually yet been given to that. I might say we felt we should have that authority. We have always had authority with regard to the different classes of applicants, but we thought we should also have this authority, which we thought we had in the current legislation. They are not too sure in the Department of the Attorney General, and thought we should put it into the amendment to the Act. Mr. Chairman, I can tell you now no infringement of the privileges the citizens of our province enjoy is in mind. We can, however, visualize certain problems developing especially on the west coast when the ferry gets on the Gulf and the road is completed there and we have many thousands of tourists, we hope, in the summer time, armed with fishing rods and seeking licenses, and we could very well have all our rivers accessible to them and monopolized by this influx of visitors to the detriment of the local population. We would like to have the power which this gives us to say to the visitor coming here—if you want to fish there you are going to have to pay a higher rate. But as I said there is no intention whatsoever of curtailing the privileges of residents.

This may not be availed of for years to come if at all. The fact is the different classes of applicants have never been availed of except in the one particular instance of residents and non-residents although it has been in this legislation as far back as we have had it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Honourable Minister would give us some assurance that this section is not designed if not intended to meet the suggestion made by the Tourist Director. During the past month, as we all remember, feelers have been spread out all across the country by the Tourist Director hinting at possible leasing of rivers.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, that is not so.

MR. BROWNE: He certainly put out the feelers.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not leasing but controlling.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

MR. HOLLETT: May I repeat that feelers have been put out all across the country by the Tourist Director as to the advisability or otherwise of leasing certain of our salmon rivers and trout rivers possibly, but especially salmon rivers. This particular section here will give the Minister power to practically do that same thing by issuing a permit to such an extent he will make it prohibitive for most of our population, and increase the cost. We have only a small country with a few lakes and rivers, and I would like to think that at least during my lifetime, as I hope do all of us, that we would be able to go to any of these rivers, pay a moderate license fee and fish, and build a camp fire and boil a kettle. Perhaps I would like to take the Honourable the Premier along some time. I am not suspicious at all, Mr. Chairman, but I can't help having a feeling that the Tourist Director, Mr. Vardy, knows something about this section. I can't help thinking it has been inspired by the Tourist Director, and I can't help—

MR. BROWNE: By the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HOLLETT: No. He would not take the fishing rights away from anybody after talking five days on fish. I am quite sure the Honourable the Premier would not keep any member of this country from fishing. But I fear that there is a suggestion at least to have some part of these powers controlled by the Director of Tourism. While his desire may be quite valid and laudable in a country the size of Canada or the United States or Australia where territory is unlimited and the rivers, lakes and ponds unlimited, it may be unfortunately necessary where they have large populations. But here we have just forty-two thousand square miles not counting in Labrador, and we have a small population of three hundred and eighty thousand, and I am quite sure we all want to go salmon fishing once in a while. I wonder, therefore, if the Honourable Minister can put a limit on the cost of permits to fish on these rivers. If I am correct, the authority is given to the Minister to make these regulations.

DR. ROWE: To the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

MR. HOLLETT: You say you may vary the fees in respect of different areas and different classes of applicants—I would like you to give the people of Newfoundland some assurance there is not going to be prohibition against going to these places by reason of large fees. I think we would all feel much better about it.

DR. ROWE: I can only give this assurance: The Government, since my connection with it, has never considered formally or informally or in any way whatever the matter of leasing rivers anywhere or in any part of the country or any part of rivers, and I am assured by the Honourable the Premier that never since the Government came into power in 1949 has it been considered. Speaking for my own part as Minister of Mines and Resources we have never considered formally or informally or in any way doing so, and we have never had any suggestion, to my knowledge at any rate, from the Director of Tourist Development or anyone else with regard to this clause. What the honourable gentleman refers to as feelers were not feelers insofar as either the Government or my Department were concerned, but were statements made by the Director of Tourist Development just as statements he made previous about the terminals at Port aux Basques and the conditions at Gander Airport. He is not putting out any feelers prompted by the Government and certainly not in this particular instance. There is absolutely nothing behind it other than what it says. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the Director of Tourist Development called me in my office only yesterday to ask me what was in this Bill we had before the House because he has had recent inquiries throughout the Province and he had no idea what this amendment contained. That is all I can say: The Government is not con-considering leasing rivers, and as far as I know, have no intention. I cannot speak for future governments.

This amendment here is exactly what it says: It gives the right to charge, but we have never even discussed the application of it. I would say also that this Government has been elected by the people and having to go back to the people periodically to get re-elected, is not likely to do anything which would not be favourably received. If I had been a party to say, raising the rates for Cartwright or Sandwich Bay on the salmon rivers and Eagle River, I would not want to go back. After all we are living under a political system. That is all I can say. It is not instigated by the Director of Tourist Development. He did not know until yesterday when I told him what was in the Bill. There is nothing underhanded there designed, as I think it was reported somewhere outside, as a first step of the beginning of an attempt to lease rivers. It is exactly what it says and it is nothing else. As to how it will be implemented in years to come I don't know any more than the Minister who brought in the original clause of different classes of applicants knows how it would be implemented ten years later.

MR. HOLLETT: On this point of the Tourist Director not knowing of the amendment, I cannot make that conform with the things that have been going on relative to the statement he has made concerning the leasing of rivers. He has been all over the country and has made addresses in Grand Falls, Gander, and I believe, Corner Brook, on the possibility of leasing rivers. I grant he comes under the Department of Economic Development. Surely the Tourist Director would not go out in his capacity as Tourist Director and comment to the people on the possibility and feasibility, and in some cases, I believe, the desirability of leasing certain rivers. He certainly would not do that without the knowledge of the Minister of Economic Development. It looks to me that there is not very much, shall I say, co-ordination between them. There is no relationship between the Department of Economic Development and the Department of Mines and Resources. The Minister admitted that. I have not yet understood apparently on account of the lack of intelligence on this side of the House, and he has not convinced me as to his reason for doing this, and until he does that I am not in favour of it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, only this morning I was reading the Corner Brook notes in the "Daily News" and the reporter there said that the Director of Tourist Development stated that he was in favour of leasing rivers in certain areas.

MR. HIGGINS: That is a mis-quote?

MR. BROWNE: If he was properly quoted then we should have a statement from the Minister of Economic Development that he is not in favour of it and the Government does not intend to consider it because, it seems to me a combination of these words—"and the fees prescribed under this paragraph may be varied in respect of different areas and different classes of applicants for different periods"—it certainly gives the Minister power to lease rivers. On that account I think we should know for certain from the Minister of Economic Development, who has great influence with the Government, and with the Minister of Mines and Resources, and if he were to favour that change in the policy that has been in effect up to the present time, I think he would likely be able to carry it out. It might be so arranged that it would not be so important to the constituents represented by the Minister as it would be in certain areas on the West Coast. Now, if we are to have the leasing of rivers we should at least know it so that we can discuss it because there are many points to be discussed. Maybe the Honourable the Premier is in favour of it. I would like to know at any rate from the Premier and Minister of Economic Development what he thinks.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I don't feel called upon to give any such opinion. The view of the Government has been stated with great clarity by the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources. Do they want a statement by several Ministers? Who cares in this debate what any individual around Newfoundland thinks? The view of the Government was stated a moment ago by the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources, and you have no other alternative except to accept or reject it.

MR. BROWNE: Does the Minister of Economic Development support the point expressed by his Director of Tourist Development, one of the paid officials, one of the gentlemen who has nothing to worry about as far as salary is concerned. He is paid, I believe, ten thousand dollars a year. He goes out and makes a statement that, in his opinion certainly, certain rivers ought to be leased, and his Minister has no comment to make on his statement.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, in case I did not make myself clear let me do so now: The question arises as to this clause being connected with the leasing of rivers—is it designed to permit the leasing of rivers as I said, and put in here without any reference to the leasing of rivers. It has no more to do with the leasing of rivers than it has to do with fishing on the Grand Banks. It is put in there because our Department feels we should have that power. It is not put in with any view on the part of the Department to make use of it. If use could be made of it for the leasing of rivers, and I don't think it can, as I have pretty good advice that it cannot, and it is certainly not designed for that purpose—I can only repeat neither the Government nor any part of it has ever considered the leasing of rivers in any way whatsoever.

MR. HIGGINS: Am I to understand the words as they now read cannot be applied to cover the leasing of rivers? It is not your intention to cover the leasing of rivers by that?

DR. ROWE: It is certainly not put in there for that.

MR. HOLLETT: I think the Minister would admit that if he wanted a permit fee of five hundred or a thousand dollars and a person wanted to fish on a certain river that is tantamount to leasing it. That is the authority you are asking for. It is all very well to get up and say you have no intention of leasing, but here you are giving authority to charge license fees no ordinary Newfoundlander can pay, and therefore he cannot go there and fish. That is leasing a river.

DR. ROWE: There is one final thing: We have always had that power in the different classes of applicants. That is not new. That was always there. We could have always charged five hundred dollars to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition if we had wanted to do so. That power was always there. I am not going to say anything more about this except to say this clause has no ulterior motive other than what it says.

Clause 2 carried.

Clause 3 read—carried.

On motion Committee reported having passed the Bill without amendment. Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons Supplemental to an Agreement Dated the Twenty-first Day of May, 1953."

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, this is a simple amendment to the BRINCO Act. The period provided in the agreement as ending before the 31st of March 1954 shall be a new period ending by December 31, 1954, the period during which they can overlook all of the area in which they are to make their selection of their fifty thousand and ten thousand square miles. They had until the 31st of March this year to do that. They have asked to have it extended until the 31st of December instead, the reason being that by the time the agreement was finally signed last year it was then so late in the season, when they got up there with their parties and aircraft and their supplies it was very late in the summer. They have not, in fact, to this moment been able to look over the whole of the area in which they are to make their selection. So they asked for this extension and we agreed, dependent upon the Legislature agreeing to do it. We agreed to give them until the end of December. I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say the Opposition would like to have until tomorrow to look over the Bill. It is not this Bill I want to look over but the original one. I see nothing against the principle, as it is merely, as the Honourable the Premier pointed out, an extension of time. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I am not at all enamoured with the original Bill, but I think it would be a good policy on the part of the Government to extend the time a little longer because once BRINCO has discarded certain areas it is unlikely that any other company would want to go in there in a hurry. I think while they have the opportunity now we ought to give them the necessary time, and perhaps a little more time than they so desire, to thoroughly search the area to see if there are any minerals there, because, as I have said, once they leave the area, and discard it, having discovered nothing, it is there, as far as the country is concerned, for a long time to come.

On the face of it, I see nothing whatever wrong with the principle, and we agree with it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Honourable Minister of Economic Development a question. He announced as a matter of very great importance a short time ago that this corporation intended to make a survey of the watershed of the Hamilton River. Has that been put into writing, or is
Mr. Speaker, if there are no other comments, may I reply at once to my honourable and learned friend from St. John’s West. The decision of BRINCO to conduct this great hydro-electric survey in Labrador is their decision. They informed me of the fact and I informed the House of the fact. It is not part of any special agreement or any supplemental agreement nor any additional agreement, it is merely the exercise by them of the rights they have under their Act. Their telling me of the fact that they are going to exercise that right in that way in that time was the significance of my announcement.

Now, with regard to the Bill itself—what my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, says is perfectly true. It is merely an extension to December 31st of the rights already given them in the original Act, so that during the rather longer period, six months, they can take a somewhat better, longer and harder look at some areas they might have just glanced over. I cannot say I agree that once they drop an area, that area will lie dormant for a considerable time thereafter. That has not been a fact in other cases I know of. There is an area right now that has been dropped by one company which another company is eagerly waiting to get. The fact is the shorter the period the better the likelihood of leasing the areas they reject. The rights we gave BRINCO in the original Bill we are now amending only as to time. We gave them possibly a hundred thousand square miles or more, possibly a hundred and twenty thousand square miles from which to make a selection by March 31st past, of fifty thousand square miles. Well even by the end of December 31st they will not have looked very hard or long at a hundred thousand square miles. What they have in fact done is to go and look at the less promising of the hundred thousand square miles, because their first job is a job of rejection, a job of elimination, so that they have kept what they think are the most promising areas for their fifty and ten thousand square miles, ten in Newfoundland and fifty in Labrador. So that their first step is to reject what is fairly obviously not very interesting. But they would like to have until December 31st to do so.

Mr. Hollett: Has the Government been informed as to any particular areas of any amount of square miles so far selected by that corporation?

Mr. Smallwood: Yes, we have. They have selected tentatively but have not informed us officially.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

Mr. Curtis: Mr. Speaker, I move all remaining Orders of the Day do stand deferred.

Mr. Speaker: The Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources wishes to table answers to a question. Does the House give leave?

Leave granted (Answers already referred to at an earlier hour today).

Dr. Rowe: Mr. Speaker, after considering the matter I consider I have given all the information required. I am quite sure that the feelings of the people concerned will be kept in mind in any use that might be made of it.
The House at its rising adjourned until, tomorrow, Wednesday, at 3:00 of the clock.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1956

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

HON. J. R. CHALKER (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the Premier in his New Year's address promised the teachers that the Government would provide an additional million dollars in the vote for teachers' salaries.

I, as Minister of Education, was requested by the Government to arrange a series of meetings with representatives of the Newfoundland Teachers' Association and the officials of the Department of Education so that a thorough analysis of the implications of the teachers' proposals could be made and that a scale be devised for consideration of government, which would come within the scope of the million dollar increase.

As a result of these meetings a salary scale has been put forward to the government, and I take great pleasure in announcing to the House that the government has agreed to implement the scale as presented by our teachers. It will take effect as from April 1, 1956.

In this new scale emphasis is placed on the training of teachers. The ultimate goal is to fill all our classrooms with fully qualified teachers, that is with those who have had a minimum of one year's professional training. This will take time, perhaps up to a period of ten years, but it is a goal well worth achieving. In the meanwhile ample time will be allowed non-certified teachers to obtain the necessary training required for permanent certificates. The new scale will also enable more teachers who have had professional training to return to university for further work. Thus, too, the number of teachers in the highly qualified class should increase yearly.

One of the provisions of the scale is the equalization of salary for male and female teachers. This principle is being recognized more and more in educational administration and is very apt in our province where the majority of those in the teaching profession are women.

The implementation of this new salary scale represents a great step forward for education in Newfoundland. In keeping with its policy of regional and central high schools this government is determined to provide our children with the opportunity to complete a good high school course and to be trained by teachers who have been fully qualified to give this training.

MR. W. J. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister if he would clarify one point. The increase amounts to one million dollars in the present fiscal year, is that right?

MR. CHALKER: That is right—On the salary scale.

Presenting Petitions

None.

Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Notice of Motion

None.
Notice of Questions

(82) MR. BROWNE (St. John's West): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Give the names, addresses and date of information of all Credit Societies now carrying on business in Newfoundland.

2. What is the total amount of share capital for such Societies and what amount of money was loaned by them during the past fiscal year?

3. Have any Societies been suspended for any reason during the past year? If so, give the names and addresses of such Societies.

(8) MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House the following information:

Has any part of the programme of road construction or reconstruction planned for this year been put into effect? If so, give the nature and location of such work.

Answers to Questions

Questions No. 90, 91.—In course of preparation.

Question No. 78.—In course of preparation.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable Minister of Public Works is in town? I have a question to ask him, or anyone acting on his behalf.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): No, Mr. Speaker, no one is acting on his behalf.

MR. BROWNE: I was going to ask if any part of the programme of construction of roads for this year has been put into effect. If so, give the name and locations of such roads.

MR. SPEAKER: It must be put on the Order Paper.

Orders of the Day

Second Reading: A Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority." Adjourned debate.

MR. P. J. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the principle of this Bill which we are now debating I would at the beginning state that in regard to the future social and economic life of the people whom I represent this is the most important piece of legislation ever to come before this House of Assembly.

As this House and Province, sir, are now aware, the purpose of this Bill is to establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority to implement the recommendations contained in the report produced by the commission under the chairmanship of Sir Albert Walsh.

Mr. Speaker, the history of the fisheries from the day the first cod was caught by our ancestors up until the day this commission was appointed and on until 6.00 o'clock yesterday has been so ably, thoroughly and factually set forth by the Honourable the Premier that it leaves very little for me to add about it, if I am able to avoid repetition. I might say, Mr. Speaker, his words were our thinking and so his opinions are ours. We, Sir, are sincere in having the welfare of the fishermen and their families at heart, as he has although most of us, I am sure, never hope to be capable of expressing our thoughts with such gift of oratory as he is blessed. However, Mr. Speaker, with the time at my disposal to defend the Bill—I will try to be brief and to the point.

When this Government took office, Sir, we found the fisheries industry like most of our industries to be an extremely sick patient. Like most of our industries, sir, the diseased patient was crippled, dilapidated and fallen down. We found the fishermen, Sir, battling against great odds, with obsolete gear and boats and under a vicious system with thousands of our fishermen giving up in despair and leaving for greener pastures, the bases or to other industries or to the mainland.

This Government, Sir, could have done like all other governments did in the past. They could have given the industry a sedative, boost its morale for a while. But that only meant that later the disease would result in the death of the greatest industry we have at our disposal. But, Sir, this government does not believe in sedatives. This government believes in getting at the seat of any evil and destroying the cause and building up anew. After all, Mr. Speaker we on this side of the House are a different type than those chosen by our electorate in the past, and are different from the choice our electorate had in the past. Sir, if there is one thing that the people of Newfoundland are modernized in, it is in their thinking, except of course the Tories, who still live in the far back ages. Most of us on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, have come from families who have worked, sweat and toiled to feed and educate us. Some of us who have come from larger families had to sweat and toil to educate ourselves and prepare ourselves for the world that lay ahead. Mr. Speaker, I don't think anybody can deny that the men on this side of the House are practically all comparatively young, well educated. When I say well educated I mean in the broad sense of the word. They are broad-minded, daring and energetic men who have studied the history of the past, have noted the pitfalls and triumphs such as they were, and the failures of men who have stood here, and the lives of great politicians of the past, especially Mr. Speaker, such politicians as had tried to bring about great things, but were crushed by other forces which held the control of the power to the detriment of the common people. So that what this government is doing now, Sir, is history, which I feel sure, when it is written, will come under the heading of something like this: The four hundred and fifty year old problem of our fisheries was solved by our Liberal Government under the leadership of Newfoundland's greatest premier.

The government, Sir, in 1949, when we took office realized that the problem of the fisheries was the greatest problem ever to face any government in Newfoundland. They, knowing the problem's great magnitude, a problem which if not solved would mean every fishing port in our country would become a ghost port, knowing the attention the Government could give it after its normal duties were performed, they took, Sir, the next best logical course and appointed a Royal Commission of well chosen persons from within and without our land to make a thorough survey of the fisheries from an economic and social viewpoint. Then, Sir, based on the findings of this survey it was the duty of the Commission to suggest a remedy by recommending ways and means to improve our most important industry. This survey, Mr. Speaker, was carried out over a period of two years. That Commission, produced its findings and suggested a remedy. That report, Sir, has been in the hands of the people of this province, the fishermen of the province for over a year. That report, Sir, has been in the hands of the people of this province, the fishermen of the province for over a year. Sir, I have studied that report thoroughly, and have read and reread it. I have studied every item, to the best of my ability, from every angle. Apart from that, Sir, I have discussed it with men of far wider knowledge of the province and of the fisheries than I possess. I found, Sir, that they all have come to the same conclusions as I have come. That is that the successful application of the recommendations will result in the solution of our four hundred year old problem. By modernizing equipment and all the methods of catching and processing the many varieties of fish nature so kindly placed at our disposal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have come to the point where this great programme is about to be launched. The Fisheries Authority are about to be made a legal body with certain powers to enable them to guide the programme through to reality. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they are the machinery which is to put into motion and guide, where necessary, the forces which will bring science into the lives of our fishermen to change their mode of catching, curing and processing our fisheries' great products, and aid them along the road from the old system and have them industrialized to improve their standard of living.

To do that, Mr. Speaker, fishermen will be encouraged to centralize, not in overcrowded cities, but to well planned fishing ports with decent housing, good schools, medical centres, where they can enjoy modern conveniences which have been denied to them in the past.

Those men who have been chosen for this committee, Mr. Speaker, are experienced and well qualified for the great responsibility under which they are placed. After the appointment of this committee, Mr. Speaker, I made it a point to check on these men. Having been interested in the fishery, and interested in the way it got along it was only natural that I should, when I heard that the government had appointed a committee, try to find out who the men were. Sir, the other day when the Honourable Leader of the Opposition was speaking in a short speech he gave us, he ended up by saying that he wondered why they were not staying at the same work that they had been at for years. Take the Chairman, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Dunstan: He has had twenty-five years of experience in the Bank of Nova Scotia, four years of which he was manager of a bank in Ontario, two years in Nova Scotia, and three and a quarter in St. John's, Newfoundland. From there, Mr. Speaker, he went to the North Atlantic Fisheries Limited, Job Brothers, and was general manager for eighteen months. Well, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the Opposition wondered why he was not still at the bank. We are lucky he is not at the bank still. Because if he were we probably could not find another man with so much experience in banking and bank loans, etc., as he is. I am quite satisfied that the government was lucky enough to obtain the services of such a man. I have had some dealings with him, Sir, during the past. two or three months. I can assure you that I am confident that he will carry his responsibilities, great as they are, to the best of his ability, and I am sure we will never regret that we were so lucky as to obtain such a man.

Another member of this committee, is Mr. Young. He is a young Newfoundlander who went to work at fifteen, at the Royal Stores and spent ten years with that firm, and he has spent twenty years with Crosbie and Company. He was a director of that latter firm. He is familiar with fish selling and while with that company was also actively associated with the cost and operation of the whale fishery. He is familiar with shipping, insurance and other matters relative to the fishery.

The third member is Mr. Winsor. He was born in an outport, attended different schools in the province. He graduated in business administration from Boston University. He spent three years with the Newfoundland Fisheries Board, and administered the fisheries assistance claims in 1938-39 and 1940. He was secretary of the combined food branch of the fisheries committee in Washington practically from its inception until the committee disbanded in 1947 or 1946 and became an associate of the United States Food and Agricultural Committee, setting up a directorate of fisheries division in that association. He was for years in the United Nations Foods and Agricultural Organization. From there he resigned and became a member of this committee.

Mr. Speaker, as has already been stated in this House, these men have the greatest responsibility ever placed on any committee in the history of Newfoundland. But, for those men to carry out their duties to a successful end they need the co-operation of us all. This programme, Sir, will decide for Newfoundland if she is to go up or down. To me, Sir, the fishery of Newfoundland is like education. It has been everybody's business to solve it for four hundred years. This problem is a challenge to the Government, it is a challenge to businessmen, it is a challenge to the fishermen and it is a challenge to the teaching profession, co-operative field workers and all others, Sir, that are interested in the civic affairs of this country. I feel sure, Sir, that those who have borne the brunt of the cruel fate of the past will have the courage to rise and throw off the feudalistic regime under which they have lived for centuries. Personally, I have an undying faith in our fishermen. I feel sure that with the help of this Government, in whom the fishermen have demonstrated undying faith, we will in the years ahead see our fishing industry the greatest in the world and our standard of living equal to any in North America.

First, Sir, we have the fishermen, the finest seamen in the whole world. We stand directly in the midst of the greatest fishing grounds in the whole world. To me, the fishermen are as the British Forces were to Prime Minister Churchill when he said, "Give them the tools and they will finish the job." Show them the things—give them assistance to modernize their equipment and boats for them to discover the fish. Give them a decent wage and they will bring forth the products of the deep.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be one of this Government who are prepared and courageous enough to lay bare facts, such as the Premier has done in the past few days, of the cause of our fishermen's long struggle for survival, and to launch forth a programme, which is long over-due, to modernize and revolutionize this vital industry of ours; to raise the standard of living of our fishermen and their families to a decent standard to which human dignity is entitled.

On the other side of this House there are two men, one of whom was born in Placentia Bay and the other whose ancestors came from Placentia Bay. I don't think he was born there, but if he were not, his father was, i.e., the honourable and learned member for St. John's West. His ancestors came from Sound Island. But, Sir, the only thing that we have in common, or have in common with those two gentlemen is that I was born in the same area.

Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Leader of the Opposition for the past two years, and having listened to the other honourable member, who is now absent, through this session, having heard them express their viewpoints, it makes me wonder (I don't know exactly how to put it) how they can differ so much from my point of view. It may be necessary here, Sir, to give a brief history of my background: Mr. Speaker, I was born at Maresheen, of a fishing family. I had to leave school at fourteen and go fishing and worked around in other jobs. I had it pretty hard, Sir, and came up the hard way. I saw people in Placentia Bay go through the bad times of the thirties. In 1939 I volunteered for the Royal Navy and spent approximately six years overseas. During that time, Sir, I gained much knowledge. Being in the navy I mixed with fishermen of several countries, visited several countries, and saw the way that the fisheries were carried out, and I noted, their standard of living. I think I owe to that experience the realization of just how backward our fisheries were in Newfoundland. After my return, but before I go on further—there was one thing I found during my experience, that the lack of education amongst Newfoundlanders in the Royal Navy kept us back. We had no chance of promotion. It was not from the fact that we were not good seamen, or that we could not learn pretty fast, rather it was the fact that we did not have the mathematics required to take the courses in navigation. But, during that time, realizing our shortcomings, I made up my mind that I would be educated. I was almost thirty years of age when I returned to Newfoundland to resume school and to finish my high school, which I did not have the opportunity to do in my younger days.

I stated earlier, Sir, that I had left school at fourteen, with Grade IX. When I came back I attended the ex-service men's school, finished my high school and went on to Memorial College. There I took teachers' training, as I realized with my own experience that if there is anything we need in the outports, that need was to educate our youth in the broad sense of the word. I felt after having travelled, that I would make a good teacher to go back amongst young girls and boys who were in the same position as I had been, I felt that I could do a good job, that I could tell them of my experiences, of what I had learned, and make them realize just how we were kept back by our mode of living in the outports. Sir, I spent three years at Memorial University. Before I finished I had my "U" Grade. Then I went into politics. I went up to my district with some knowledge of how things were in the past, with a knowledge of political science and the history of our country as a whole. I went in there as something new in politics. I went in not as the old politicians of the past. I went in there and I carried on my campaign to suit the age that we live in. I came out openly as the Premier has come out in the past five years, and laid the facts before the people. I was one of them. Some of my people are still fishing in the district. I did not mind being frank. I told the people where we had stood. I told them how backward we were. I told them how the fishery was carried on in other countries, how the people lived etc. Sir, I forecast at the time the end of the fishery. I told them that if we were to go on as we were, I could see an end within five or ten years of the salt cod fishery of Newfoundland. I had watched it for several years going down and down, and I knew the end was not far off, if we carried on in our old way.

At the time the National Convention was on, and the people were waking up, I think. The speeches made by the Honourable the Premier of today opened their minds, with the radio at their disposal they knew more of what was going on. When I laid these facts before them they did not feel insulted, which perhaps they would have a few years before. I think they grasped the idea. From then until now they have realized that they must modernize or else they can't just go on in the old way.

I made the people few promises. But I promised them that I would do my utmost during the time I represented them to modernize the fisheries. I told them that if I failed, and if they had to go on in the old way that then the Government had not measured up, and I would go back to them and tell them we had failed and advise them to leave the district, leave the province and go elsewhere to earn a living and get a decent standard of living.

Well, Sir, in the past five years I don't think anybody in the Government has taken the fisheries more to heart, maybe others have taken it as much to heart, but nobody has taken it more to heart than I have. I don't think there is anybody who has visited the Premier's Office more often than I have. Each time I went in there it was to talk fishery. I have kept in close contact with the Department of Fisheries.

I may admit that there were times when I was discouraged, times when I felt like going back and telling them we could not do anything about it, to pack up and get out. But, thanks, to the attitude of the Premier, the Minister of the Department and others whom I had contacted, they could not give the industry a sedative. They intended to start properly to get at the heart of the disease, and start from there up to reorganize and revolutionize and modernize the fisheries.

Mr. Speaker, all through this period I had confidence in the people, in the fishermen. I knew that if they were given a chance to improve their lot, if they were modernized, they would rise above the old fashioned ways and make the industry a profitable one. As I told the fishermen, my ideas coincided with the ideas of the Premier and of the Department of Fisheries and others who could look ahead. I knew that the fishery was not finished. I knew that if the obsolete gear could be replaced with modern gear a good living could be made, and I held on trusting and hoping that the day was not too far off when we could launch into a programme such as we are launching today.

Now, that was my contention, that was my conviction, that we had to change from the past to something modern, we had to uplift the standard to give the people a better chance. I had confidence in the people. But when this Bill was introduced I found that my honourable friends across the way, particularly those two to whom I referred earlier, who came from the same area as I came from, or their ancestors came, and I found that they were living in a different age. I don't think they have the same confidence as I have. Their ideas are an awful lot older. I don't think the people whom I represent will agree thoroughly with them.

First of all I would like to deal with the Opposition. They got up to attack or to object to this Bill. They started off with the Commission set up under Sir Albert Walsh. I judged, Sir, that they did not have any confidence in that committee, nor very much confidence in the recommendations. They were worried about the cost of implementing the recommendations. They went on and came to the Authority, and their pay, and wondered right through why they were not in their old jobs, and finally wound up with a cure for all ills. Their leader suggested what we should do was to go back fifty years and live and work as they did in Burin. He brought us back to fifty years ago, to the days when we had schooners without engines, with merchants lording it over the people, school children working for five cents an hour, some of them out of school and could not afford to go to school but had to help their fathers to bring up their earnings high enough to have something to eat for the winter; to the days when women worked on the flake. He said, that is the way that the fishery should be carried on.

MR. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order or a point of privilege or something. I don't think I said that that is the way the thing should be carried on. If the honourable gentleman is quoting me he must quote me correctly. I went back to describe some of these days, but I did not say I thought the fisheries should be carried on in that way. I want to have that corrected.

MR. CANNING: I have made no mistake. The honourable member painted a picture of the old days in Burin, and gave me to understand that is good enough. I don't intend yielding, Mr. Speaker, I have only an hour and forty minutes. It is not much sense the honourable member trying to defend some comment he has made and has regretted ever since. I don't intend sitting down any more.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to a point of privilege. I won't sit down. Can I do anything about it?

MR. SPEAKER: Is the honourable gentleman objecting that he is being misquoted? The honourable member agrees he painted a picture of half a century ago, but does not agree he advocated the return to conditions that existed at that time.

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, that was the picture he painted, and he thought that women and children should get back on the flakes. I am pretty well certain, Mr. Speaker, that was what he meant.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member cannot say the honourable member in question really did mean that. He may say, "I think that is what he meant," yes, but not that he actually did mean that.

MR. CANNING: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am just judging from the way the honourable member has gone on here since he came in here, since 1951.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, that drives me to rise to a point of privilege again, Sir. The honourable gentleman has started judging my statement on how I acted since 1951. There he gives it a difficult construction. If he is to quote me I must ask—

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member has said now that the inference he drew is hardly a point of privilege. Allegations of facts can't of course be proven. It gets down to an argument—you did—I did not—that is no solution of the problem.

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, I am not quoting him. I just told him he was following the trend he has followed since he came into this House. Anyhow, Mr. Speaker, he gave us a picture of the old flakes and old stageheads, and the women and children working on the flakes at Burin. Not at any time did he mention the modern plant they have today nor the way Burin has improved in the last, I will say, five years. He did not mention it, so I came to the conclusion that he did not agree with it. If I came from Burin and got up to talk on the fishery and overlooked the fact that there is a modern plant there, and that Burin has gone ahead so much in the last five years, and ignored that, and did not mention it, anyone would come to the conclusion that I did not agree with it, with modernizing the fishery. He talked about fifty years ago. Fifty years ago Burin was fifty years behind the time, so that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has put the clock back one hundred years. So by turning the clock back a hundred years or even fifty years what did he mean to do? Build up the flakes at Burin, get back the sailing schooner, scrap the engines, close the modern fish plant, send the women and children back to the flakes, put away their radios, cut off their electricity, get the old kerosene lamp in, and I think he could have added, set potatoes on Marystown highway, and if he wanted to get into St. John's, to the capital, get a boat and it will take me three days when you can drive from that area in six and a half hours.

Mr. Speaker, there is one thing that the honourable member should have done then: He should have traced that history in those days, how the people lived, how the merchants overlorded and then he should have come down through the years, not very many, when that system in Burin disappeared. I happen to know a little bit about the history of Burin. I know what he told this House was true. They had flakes all around Burin, fishing premises, merchants with bankers. They carried on. The merchant educated his children. If they could not get an education in Burin he sent them in here. But the fishermen carried on like in the rest of Placentia Bay. They were slaves. They were kept down. The merchants lorded over them. They never got a chance to throw off the shackles that bound them. However, that picture he painted of the merchants and flakes and those days, became clouded and dim down through the years and then disappeared. He did not follow on through and tell us that one morning he got up and there was none of it there. They went on for a few years, and then they failed. They failed because it was a vicious system. They failed because there was nobody getting anything out of it only the merchants. The story of Burin is the typical story of the whole of Placentia Bay, as I know it. We had Jersey Rooms up there, we had so and so, but all that is left today is a few stores and what they call sunken wharves. I think it is one time in the modern age that God got angry. He treated them as Sodom and Gomorrah, and they disappeared. And why should they not? They set the prices. They told the fisherman what he was going to get the supplies for. They told him what he was going to have to work for, what the fish would be, what his wife was going to have to work for. They told them what they were going to give them to try and have them exist over the winter so that they would be there the next spring to work for them again. That is the idea of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition—in 1954 children would work for five cents an hour, as they did not fifty years ago, but nearer five years ago in Burin, for five cents an hour. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition should remember—should remember, and what is more, should remember the days when he was a magistrate up there, when he had to go down to Placentia Bay and talk to the people on the dole and try and persuade them to kill their cattle so they could make out their dole order, and the day he arrived in Menaheen—

MR. HOLLETT: I rise, Sir, to a point of privilege. That, Sir, is absolutely foolhardy. He is referring to the time when people did kill cattle and did do other things at the order of the relieving officer, I may say I was the one who complained to the Department of Justice, and they asked me to go into the bay and make some inquiries about it. I certainly did not go down to order them to kill cattle.

MR. SPEAKER: Yes, there is a point there. There is a very grave danger of attributing as a personal power which a magistrate exercises from higher authority. The honourable member must not make personal such powers as applying to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

MR. CANNING: No, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the system at the time. I know for a fact that some magistrates were told to go around. I don't know if the honourable member who was a magistrate at the time had that unpleasant duty. But I am talking about how far down the people went under the old system of fishing, under the system, that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition recommends to this House, as he did the other day.

MR. HOLLETT: Nonsense! I did not recommend that. I don't intend to have my head cut off by a hatchet. man anyway. I want to state on a point of privilege, I did not say that, and the man who says so is not telling the truth. I realize the fact that the man has been sent here to do his job and cut me to pieces if he can. The point is that I am not going to stand for it. Every time he makes a statement like that I will demand—

MR. SPEAKER: As I said before, there is no point of privilege. The honourable member may complain he is misquoted by words attributed to him he did not say, or that he did not remember. However, I may say I have no recollection that the honourable member did say such a thing. True he painted a picture. The honourable member may express himself, I think, without suggesting to the House that the Leader of the Opposition advocated the return of that policy. Conclusions may be drawn but an honourable member cannot say the honourable member intended to do so. I cannot say more. I would be making the honourable member's speech for him.

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, it seems the honourable member is going to jump to a point of privilege and to a point of order so as to cut my time to the time he spent on the fishery the other day.

I won't go into detail any further. In those days that system which I was referring to failed, because, Sir, the suffering of the people in those days in my district was a nightmare, and I would not wish to recall them. When I start talking about it, Sir, it makes me bitter, it may convert me into a bit of a radical. There are few things that I never like to recall. Some of them happened when I was overseas in the navy, hard times we had when I saw several die, etc. I never like to talk about it any more. Next to that, Sir, I never like to talk about the thirties in Merasheen or in Placentia West or in the Island of Newfoundland.

Well, sir, I shall try my luck on the other honourable gentleman, seeing he has arrived, and see how I get on with him. He did not enlighten us very much, during his comments on this Bill which I am now debating. I just forgot how he started off, but I think he started to encourage co-operatives. Well, if the honourable gentleman has read the fishery report he would see that right through it that their angle is certainly to encourage co-operatives. I shall, further on in my talk, if they give me time to do it, tell them of the project which is about to go into operation at Merasheen, which is wholly and solely a co-operative venture.

MR. BROWNE: Wholly and solely?

MR. CANNING: Yes, wholly and solely. When this government have done their duty it will be wholly and solely, when the State does its duty to the people, the people who are down and out, the project at Merasheen will become wholly and solely co-operative. I say, after the state has done its duty, the duty it is expected to do.

Then he went on, and he said the fishermen should have training. Well, I began to think to myself, if he has read that book he is just repeating what that book had already recommended. It said they should be trained in techniques, the recommendations are there. That is our aim to bring technical knowledge to the fishermen, so long overdue, which they need. To enlighten the honourable gentleman I would tell him that recommendation is already in practice. In my district, this spring, Sir, in March, the Navy Teacher went to Little Bay. He had a class of, I think, twenty-one or twenty-two, fishermen there. He gave them a course in navigation, radar sounding apparatus and the other modern machineries used on ships today in the navy, especially the fishing branches. They made charts of the fishing areas of Newfoundland, the Grand Banks, St. Pierre Bank, etc. So that he was a little late in telling us we should set up training. While on this subject, Sir, if I might, I may make a remark that some years ago, after the first world war I believe, we had here in St. John's the old naval ship, and I think it was the R.N.V.R. who were trained on board of her. They were trained in navigation, engineering, electricity and so on. I think that, in this age, the Federal Government could again bring back the naval training ship. I can see that it would serve general purposes. Of course the first and foremost would be to train personnel for naval warfare, but at the same time it would give a chance to some of our young men to train in navigation, engineering and other modern apparatuses used on ships, such as radar, etc. I think that this government properly should approach the Federal Government and request them, or at least have them look into the matter, and see if it would not be worth while. I feel certain Sir, that the Federal Government would agree to it, and see that these advantages are given our seamen in this Island of ours where we have so many fishermen, sailors, etc.

But, the honourable and learned member for St. John's West solved our saltfish problem in a few moments. I was a bit surprised. It was good to hear a solution. After all, the saltfish problem is the greatest problem we have had in this country down through the years. We have it today, and probably it will be a problem of the future. Anyway, Sir, in my opinion (again I am not quoting him) as I understood him he said that he thinks we should get back the Spanish market. He did not give us ways and means whereby we could get it back. He talked of the Spanish seamen who came to town and said we should treat them nicely. Do not just say hello to them but go down and take them to our homes, give them dinner and look after them, and when they sail out of St. John's back across the Atlantic Ocean, they would go back and tell Spain all about it. They would say, those Newfoundlanders are certainly lovely people. I think now we will buy their fish from them. At least, that was the conclusion I came to. I have been wondering ever since how many Spanish sailors the honourable gentleman sees down on the street and brings up to his house and does things like that. Then he goes on to make that awful statement I never expected him to make. I was very much surprised—I think the women and children should go back on the flakes—

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I did not say anything of the kind. The honourable member has made a number of inaccurate statements as to what I said. Now if I may be allowed to say so, I said, I did not see very much difference between women and children working on flakes and working in factories and fish plants. And on another occasion, a number of occasions, I said it was a good thing to have a family life where fishermen were working at home and the wives and children helped them, and that it was a good thing for children to be trained under the auspices of their parents.

MR. SPEAKER: That is correct.

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, to defend that, he gave us a picture of a certain gentleman in Arnold's Cove who was lame, who had a little fishing boat and again I began to think that was a pretty good life down there in Arnold's Cove, and I think he meant we should leave that Arnold's Cove fisherman there to carry on like that. That fisherman in Arnold's Cove had three pigs and a motor boat. If I know anything about the fishery, and I do, he is going to need his wife on the flake.

MR. BROWNE: I cited this man as a sample of a modern fisherman. He had electricity in his stage and plenty of running water and he kept his premises clean. In addition he raised cattle and had pigs to sell as pork. He also had poultry. I said he was a good example of a fisherman. I still think he is.

MR. CANNING: And I was wondering what kind of school they have, what kind of medical services? I wonder can the honourable member deny that if somebody belonging to him takes sick he can go up to a phone and get a doctor. That is the kind of life he thought was good enough for our outports.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I did not say anything of the kind. I did not say at all that was good enough for our outports. I said that man was a credit and an example.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member did not say that was good enough for the outports, no.

MR. CANNING: Mr. Speaker, again I was just judging from the trend. Anyway, he went on, and looked across at this government with a pitiful look on his face and said: Don't uproot them, leave them there— he definitely did say that.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I did not say that. He is misrepresenting me by the manner in which he refers to my remarks, suiting them to his own argument.

MR. SPEAKER: Of course any honourable member has a right to twist remarks to bear out his own point. Personally I don't think it matters very much if the honourable member said that or not. The thing is, it is a very good thing to stay rooted. I could find it in my heart to wish more of us were. The honourable member may refer to speeches made but may not convey to the House he is announcing what a member of the Opposition did actually say, when as a matter of fact he did not.

MR. CANNING: These recommendations, Sir, contain a recommendation to centralize the fishery and people. I think the day has come when I think everybody must realize how very serious this problem is for our outports. I have in my district in Placentia West seventy two children who are not at school today. They come from harbours of twelve families, ten families or five families. The committee's report, Sir, recommends that we should aim at centralizing the population as well as modernizing the fishery as a whole.

At this point I shall give an account of what is to happen at Merasheen and the development that is about to take place there. Merasheen is an island situated in the centre of Placentia Bay, with a population of approximately four hundred and twenty eight people, I think, to be exactly. In 1937-38 they formed a Co-operative Society. They started with eleven dollars, with that, Sir, they started a business with anything you could buy for eleven dollars. They started in a room within a house and went from there to a small store somebody gave them to use rent free. From that they went to a larger store and then to an old school that was vacated. They now have a fairly large set-up. During these years they proved they could adjust themselves to the co-operative idea. They have a stock in their store at this time of the year of about thirty-five or thirty thousand dollars, and have ten thousand dollars in credit. They have gone into producer co-operatives. They have a freezing factory. They pool their fish co-operatively. On the whole they have made a wonderful success of it. I think it is one of the best of the successful co-operatives in all the outports of Newfoundland.

When this report came out last year I had copies sent out to this co-operative society. They studied it and had meetings, and spent five or six weeks on it under the guidance of a man Finn who was head of the co-operative scheme, and have done quite a lot in that capacity for the co-operative movement. They came to the conclusion that they could measure up to be recognized as a small co-operative centre. They wired me to come there. I went out to see them, and gave them a talk on the fishery development report, and told them what I could about it at the time. That was followed by a request to the Minister of Fisheries to have the deputy minister go out and go further into details with them. He went out to them and told them what he could about how far they had gotten up to that time. He came back and they sent somebody in with their proposition. They felt they could measure up and carry on a small co-operative enterprise. In this respect for a small community, first and foremost the essential thing is a co-operative scheme. The people of Merasheen had proven themselves to be able to work under the co-operative system successfully so that in that respect they measured up.

Their proposition was presented to the Authority. They studied it and sent out men to survey it, and finally the government decided that they would start a project there. Merasheen is another small outport on the coast which had obsolete gear, and had motor boats, stages and flakes. Now it is proposed they build one central plant for salt fish, pickled fish, pickled herring or any other type that can be cured; artificial flakes. These mechanical flakes, I believe, can spread five hundred quintals in forty minutes. That is quite a contrast to the time it would take under their system. It is also visualized that they will have a small filleting plant. So that I think in probably a month from now this operation will go ahead, or the building of the plant. By next year the people of Merasheen will be landing their fish at this central store, with all modern conveniences. This is a trial, and I feel that these people who have proved so successfully their ability to work under a co-operative scheme will make a success of it, and I sincerely hope that other places in my district will follow suit. But I may say this is not based on the bigger community scheme. It is just a small outfit to suit the community there. Merasheen is an island, and I don't think it is envisaged that people should move in there. But if I had time at my disposal I would go into details of this plant. There is certainly much left that I could say about it, and I could compare the new methods with the old as it would refer to Merasheen itself.

Considering my district, I feel, Sir, this great programme we are now launching will mean an awful lot to the fishermen who have so long toiled under the old system. I hope to see at Mortier Bay in the not too far distant future a large fishing plant.
As the House is already aware, Mortier Bay itself is one of the finest harbours on this side of the Atlantic.
When a fresh fish plant is erected there and gets going I feel sure that from many of the smaller places the people will be encouraged to move to Mortier Bay. With good housing, electricity, which I hope is to come,
and a well organized town, Mortier Bay will attract people and I am sure they will gladly take advantage of the opportunity offered them. Before very long probably Mortier Bay will be one of the biggest ports in Newfoundland.

At the present time, there are negotiations going on with a company, but I won't say anything more about it. But I feel sure that perhaps in a few days we will have the result, and the long looked for plant at Marystown will be in sight.

My district and its people are to me as the province is to the Premier.
I hope, Sir, to see the people who trust in me are rescued from their low standard of living and given a decent standard, which I am sure they deserve. They have trusted in us, and we have believed in them.
We are under the greatest leader that Newfoundland had ever had, the Liberal Party. So that is what we have—a great people, a great industry, a great leader and a great party who will stand behind its leader and the people. Justice will prevail, and we shall succeed.

MR. S. DROVER: Mr. Speaker, I rise to add my voice in support of this Bill now before this Assembly.
As a Liberal and as a member of the Liberal Party I will support any Bill that is brought in to this House that will grant to the fishermen of this country a better livelihood and better living conditions.

I was born in a fishing settlement, the son of a fisherman. I know too well the anxiety and the hardships that a fisherman in those days had in raising a family and to feed, clothe and educate them.

I spent five summers myself in Trinity Bay fishing for turbot. I fished in one hundred and fifty fathoms of water. At times fishing was good and at times we experienced a failure, and consequently we had to go in the bush to cut logs to help augment our income. Our livelihood depended on Labrador and inshore fish, and it was the common thing to hear fishermen in those days say:
"We can't make ends meet this year, but next year the price of fish will be better."

There are very few perhaps in this House who can speak any better than myself on the conditions that existed in Newfoundland anywhere from 1920 up to the present time. The Honourable the Premier painted a vivid picture of conditions in Newfoundland, and many people will say he exaggerated greatly. I say that he did not exaggerate. Before I entered politics I spent twenty years working amongst fishermen and in fishing communities. I remember the days when the children came to school in their bare feet. I remember the days when they were ragged and tattered. I remember the days when cocoa and milk was first introduced to the schools as a means to try and keep the kids going, and I remember the gaunt and thin faces of the pupils. I also remember the days when the wife of the Governor of Newfoundland raised clothing drives and sent it to the outports amongst the fishermen and distributed it amongst their families to try and clothe them. I remember too well the days of the Commission of Government when they raised up forty millions as a surplus, and at the same time the wives of fishermen were starving or semi-starving on fifteen dollars a quarter and the worn out fisherman, when he had reached the age of seventy-five, got eighteen dollars for three months, and a fisherman worn out but not old enough to receive an old age pension received a sum of five dollars a month. As late as 1947, under the days of Commission of Government we had worn-out fishermen in Newfoundland who could not earn a living, who did not get enough money to put something by, we had them in this country who actually starved to death, and the records of the Public Health bear that record—the cause of death, starvation—their files bear that record.

I am sorry to say, in this day and age, of social wealth and social government we have men in this country today, fishermen, who have to live on the sum of five dollars a month to feed a family of nine, and with five of the kids going to school. But never mind that—in the old days the slogan was: “The merchants are starving us.” A little later on come around and find—“Oh, we must have a better fishery product, we must have more sanitary conditions, we must have whitewashed walls in the stages and stores—yes we are going to get a better price.” That was in those days, the old days. So the government of the day sent out inspectors and experts. We had almost as many of them trotting over the country as we had fishermen themselves. Well we did improve and have a better product, but it certainly did not improve the lot of the fishermen. Later came the Federation of Fishermen. I was very happy indeed when the Honourable the Premier announced in this House that the Federation would be formed. I was sitting on the opposite side at the time as an Independent and I was the first member in this House to raise my voice in support of such a Federation. The task which confronts the Federation is not going to be an easy one. But I believe that eventually untold benefit will accrue to the fishermen, will keep them informed of market conditions, and will fight the fishermen’s battles when they arise.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we have the Newfoundland Fisheries Development. We have the plan. Is this to be the solution of the fisheries problem which so often besets our fishermen. I am supporting this Bill with the hope that it will help solve the problems of the fishermen or at least some of them. In supporting the Bill I make five points or suggestions to the Government:
(1) Compensation for the labour of generations.

(2) Insurance for families.

(3) Fifty-fifty chance.

(4) St. Anthony not Quirpon.

(5) Don't let the fisheries die while the fishermen are waiting.

In 1949 the Honourable the Premier asked all members of his party to prepare a report for him on conditions in each one's district. I think that was a very wise move. I did that, along with the other members of this party. One of the things which I did say in that report was that I believed that centralization of the population of White Bay was the salvation of its people. One of the chief aims of the Fisheries Authority is to bring together people from a number of settlements. These people have spent years building their homes. They have stores, barns, and their plots of land. Should they move into La Scie, what plan has the Government to compensate these people for the property which they have built up around them? Will the Government care for the people and give them compensation not only in La Scie but in other places where they are to be centralized?

Insurance for families: When the town of La Scie (we will take that as an illustration) is remodelled with new homes, fishermen will move in there. They will have, perhaps, fishing equipment, they will want engines, modern fishing equipment and homes. Some of them will undoubtedly have to pay out their homes, which will be mortgaged. What arrangements will the Government make, or what insurance will the Government give to the people moving into those centralized areas, should the husband, the bread-winner of the family, become incapacitated through accident or sickness or should the head of the family die? What will happen to his family? Who will feed, house and clothe them? If something is not done to care for that family should he die or become incapacitated then he will go back, the old story. It is said that the brains of Newfoundland died in the fishing boat; and the brains of Newfoundland will continue to die in the fishing boat. If some kind of security is not given them it may prevent families from leaving their present homes.

Fifty-fifty chance: A fifty-fifty chance with money does not matter a great deal. But a fifty-fifty chance with the lives of people, humanity, the uprooting, it matters everything in the world. We are told that we are going to make a model town of La Scie. It is a wonderful thing. I am glad that the first pioneer venture is going to be in my district. But it will cost five million dollars. What is five million dollars? In time of war the value of that would be fired away before breakfast, five million dollars any day while we are at war. The Government is at war. This action is a declaration of war on poverty, a war on dole and degradation. None of us want to see it again. I hope, I shall hear the Honourable the Premier say in the not distant future that he has a better chance of success than that fifty-fifty chance. I would like to hear him say it, with co-operation, sacrifice and perhaps with many set-backs, but I think that by joining together, going forward together, taking the ups and downs together, I believe he will, before this session of the House is finished, say there is better than a fifty-fifty chance in dealing with the lives of our people.

St. Anthony and not Quirpon: Now, for centralization of our people, the bringing together of our people—I feel today that in comparison, knowing the northern territory of Newfoundland as I do, St. Anthony with eighteen hundred people, should be the centre of centralization. I am not saying anything which will be detrimental to the people of Quirpon nor to hamper them in any way from a chance at earning a livelihood. I don't want to do that, and it is not my intention to do that. But I feel, Sir, today that instead of having centralization at Quirpon it should be at St. Anthony, and for this reason: St. Anthony has a hospital, it has a strong co-operative society, it has town planning and it has a fresh fish plant. A road which would link St. Anthony with Quirpon, (and road construction must go hand in hand with fisheries development just the same as hospitals and hospitalization, one must go with the other). A road from St. Anthony to Quirpon would include Little Breatheat, Great Breatheat, St. Luniar Bay, Griend, Quirpon, Pigeons Cove, Noddy Bay, Raleigh and Cape Onion. Quirpon is the farthest away, and if there is a road constructed it will mean that within one hour fish landed at Quirpon could be in the fish plant at St. Anthony, within one hour. The Government is already building the road towards these places. It is already under construction and has been for two years. With centralization of our fishery concentrated at St. Anthony, within a short while the population of that place will rise greatly from its eighteen hundred at the present time.

Don't let the fisheries die while the fishermen are waiting: Last year the government gave the fishermen $1.50 deficiency payment to save our fishermen. We have more fishermen in White Bay than in any other district in the country, far more fishermen, even to outdo my honourable friend from Fogo, as statistics will show. Yesterday you brought them up a little because we have a lot of fresh fish going out of White Bay. Last year the Government saved our people from a lot of hardship by coming forward with that deficiency payment. The Federal Government is reimbursing the Provincial Government $1.12 per quintal on the 1953 catch. Now the Fishermen's Federation demands $12 a quintal or, they say, they won't go fishing. We don't know if they will or not. The trade said it would give them $10 a quintal. Well, let us do this: Let the government make a break and come out and say to our fishermen: we will go in with you and give you the happy medium of $12 on this year's catch. I think we should try and force the position and have the Federal Government pay any further deficiency payments so that the fishermen would get $12 and always be a year ahead instead of a year behind in receiving their payments.

Mr. Speaker, in summing up I want to say that I give this my wholehearted support, or any bill at any time if it will mean a war against poverty and a chance for all our fishermen to raise themselves up from the dole and degradation they have known for so many years. But my words of caution are these (and I repeat again) and mostly they concern my own district of White Bay:

(1) Compensation for the labour of generations, (2) insurance for families who concentrate or centralize and (3) better than a fifty-fifty chance and (4) St. Anthony not Quirpon as the centralized area of the north and (5) don’t let the fisheries die while the fishermen are waiting.

MR. C. BROWN: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Second Reading of Bill: "An Act Further to Amend the Motor Carriers' Act."

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, this is a very minor amendment to an Act which appears in the revised statutes, and with this amendment we will be able to ignore the 1953 Act altogether, because in 1953 when we amended the Act we did not know what chapter that Act would appear under in the revised statutes. So that in future the policy of the draftsman in my department in amending an Act is to, if possible, include in the current amendment any amendments made during the year 1953, so that in time we will not have to refer to the 1953 Act at all. So that Paragraph 3 is simply a repetition of the amendment made in 1953.

The additional clause, section 4, is a clause that was omitted by accident last year. It was an oversight made when the Act was passed. It was of course presumed when the Act was passed that there would be a prohibition against public service vehicles not holding a certificate of registration.

The new section, which really is the reason for the Act, is section 5, which states that, notwithstanding the provisions of the present Act, the City of St. John's or a town or rural district or a local government area established, or any of the unrepealed Acts in Schedule A to this Act or the holder of a franchise or license to operate issued by any such body may apply to the Board for the approval of a tariff of tolls in accordance with Section 5 thereof.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the section that is here involved is Section 10 of the Act. Nevertheless if the City of St. John's or any of these areas want to have the board fix tariffs and fix fares the Board is empowered to do it. It is really an enabling provision enabling the City of St. John's in the case of St. John's or any of the town councils or anybody handing a franchise to ask the Board, and the Board is empowered if so requested to fix rates.

I move the second reading of this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I have examined the Act in the Revised Statutes, and I have found out that what the Attorney General has said in regard to the first two sections is, of course correct. In regard to Section 4 which deals with the issuing of certificates I cannot find in the original Act any reference to certificates at all. I am just wondering whether it is one for which a charge is to be made, or what does it mean? A certificate is to be issued as to the suitability of the vehicle or that he has made an application and that he is a qualified person to operate, or what really does it mean? I think when the Attorney General is answering he might perhaps give us the explanation for this.

I understand the necessity for Section 5, and that is a very good idea.

There is just one observation I want to make in regard to section 3. I notice it is an old section, but it deals with something that is likely to come to our notice before very long, and that is, that this Act does not apply to any motor vehicle for any other province of Canada or the United States of America carrying only tourists on one continuous trip to, through and from this province under contract made outside this province. Now recently there has been a federal provision and conference upon the question of controlling inter-provincial transportation. I am wondering if we sent a representative? I understand we did not. Have we been kept advised as to what is going on? They have had difficulties in other provinces over this subject, about passengers and freight transported from one province to another. I suppose one of the reasons is because the bridges have not been designed to carry tremendous loads such as have been transported. Take fish for example from Halifax for the United States and going through New Brunswick and over bridges which are not suitable for heavy loads. We are likely to have buses and transport vehicles of that kind come to Newfoundland as soon as the ferry boat is in operation, which I understand will be later this year. It is certainly conceivable that within the next couple of years many vehicles of that kind are likely to cross over on the ferry and come to Newfoundland and drive over our roads. When the Attorney General replies I wonder if he would advise us if any consideration has been given to that matter.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, perhaps when we go into committee I could reply to the point raised by my honourable friend, which deals with the question of these certificates. I think the honourable member will realize that these are really for the committee stage. These things are actually prepared by the Department of Public Works and just come to my department, and I am not as familiar with them as perhaps I should be. I presumed that there was some reference in the original Act to a certificate. But in just glancing through the Act hurriedly I don't see any reference to certificates. I certainly will check up that amendment before I ask the House to pass it.

As to the other point, I don't think, Mr. Speaker, that is a section that is really going to interest us in Newfoundland very much in the foreseeable future. The reference to a motor vehicle in any other province or in the United States of America carrying only tourists on one continuous trip, etc. I really think that section was just merely adopted from the current form of the Legislative Committee. I cannot imagine tourists going anywhere through Newfoundland. I think that section then does not apply to us here but would properly apply to areas like New Brunswick and Nova Scotia where tourists pass through and do not stop. Here I could not imagine any tourists passing through Newfoundland. Yet I think that is the only way I can read the section, is that it deals with cars or vehicles going through Newfoundland. I don't know where they would be going if they were to go through Newfoundland.

MR. BROWNE: They could go through and come back again.

MR. CURTIS: Perhaps so; perhaps that is a matter we could discuss a little more freely in committee.

MR. BROWNE: Yes.

On motion bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable minister has introduced the bill.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have been talking to the minister since he made his speech in this debate, and I would like to make a few observations, especially in regard to certain incidents that happened in the neighborhood of Placentia. At Placentia or rather in that area there are several councils, there is Placentia Council, Jersey Side Council and Freshwater Council, and the American Base, all of whom get their water supply from Larkin's Pond. There is a man there who has his home and has a big family there, ten people living in the house, and it is not desirable that he should have his residence there for obvious reasons. But it appears to be nobody's business to compensate him for removal. If it were in the hands of one council then he could deal with it. He tried to deal on several occasions with the Placentia Council, and they are very sympathetic to him. If it were their business they would try and compensate him for his home, and enable him to build elsewhere. But the government has apparently an overriding jurisdiction, or the Government acts as a liaison between the different councils I have enumerated. It seems to me the responsibility is upon the government to try and arrange that this man should receive compensation which would enable him to build elsewhere.

Now the summer is coming close at hand, and if he is to remain there it is important that some action be taken. The fact is that the drainings of sewerage from his home will go into the pond and influence and affect the water there which has been tested, and I believe, has been given a very bad percentage. It is not good water and it is certainly not desirable that so many thousands of people should have to drink water which has a dwelling close alongside. It seems to me that this Bill which is designed to give the minister power in other areas to allow septic tanks and sewerage disposal to be regulated also should make him responsible when a situation such as I have described occurs.

There are some points in the Bill which I would like to make up in committee. But it seems to me this Act is being designed, and so the minister told us, to deal particularly with the situation as it exists in surroundings near Corner Brook. I believe that is what it is intended to deal with. But I would draw to the attention of the minister in charge of this Bill that he should take up this matter with the minister of health and advise him of my remarks here, and see if something can be done in that situation. It is really a very tragic situation for the family concerned. They don't want to be a source of annoyance to so many people, and they are very much concerned about it at the present time. If the Minister of Finance were here he would know of the situation personally from his own knowledge of that area and would know that what I am saying is correct. I have it from the best of authority, from the Placentia Town Council, that they are powerless, and they are not really in a position to do anything about it. I was talking to the Deputy Minister of Municipal Affairs. I believe he may have something to do with it. He thought it was the duty of the Placentia Town Council. Placentia Town Council tells me they are powerless to deal with the matter.

HON. G. POWER (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the authority over the Placentia Watershed is vested in the Placentia Town Council, and Freshwater Town Council and Jersey Side Town Council. I think the trouble is that they cannot get together to decide on the amount or to agree to the amount which this gentleman is asking for compensation. I am very familiar with that case, but I am still rather in doubt as to whether he could be moved. The House has been there for a good many years, and I think that during the past six or seven years a place has been built nearer to the pond. There was a subsequent lawsuit here in St. John's and the man who built the house was allowed to remain there. During the past year the Freshwater Council has installed a chlorination system, and the Placentia Town Council is in the process of installing such a system. So that I don't think the problem is really as terrible as the honourable gentleman would suggest. I know I would be in favour of compensating the man in question for his property, but I think that the three councils concerned will have to agree as to the amount, before any one on the outside can make a motion. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to say very much except that we support the Bill on this side of the House. If I may, without any harsh statements from the other side, I would like to pay a compliment to the government at this juncture for the Public Health and Welfare Act; I think that is one of the really grand things this government has done. It is not often, of course, that we have the opportunity or at least that we take advantage of an opportunity to compliment the Government. But I really do think we want the government to feel, and everybody here, that we are sincere when I pay a compliment to this instrument of public welfare which is being operated by the present administration, also to the officials of the Department of Public Welfare who in every case, practically where I have had occasion to bring any matter before them have acted promptly, and where there was a possibility of help or assistance to some poor individual they have done it insofar as this Act allows without too much hesitation and without too much delay. Where there was no hope for such an individual then they just told me the facts. They just carried out the Act, and that is all I expected them to do. I do want to take this opportunity to say that this government or any government with an instrument of public welfare such as this in its hands must do an awful lot of good for the people who may be unfortunate enough perhaps to have to come under it at various times.

I do want to extend my congratulations to the government and to the minister and to his departmental officials for what they are doing and the way in which this Act is being carried out.

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Speaker, may I add just a word to what has already been said. During the past few months we have found several instances where there has been a conflict of authority between the regulations made under the Local Government Act and the regulations made under the Health and Welfare Act, or in other instances under the Highways Act. As a result of consultations amongst our various departments we have tried in each instance to bring about an amendment so that there would be a certain conformity, and the absolute authority would be delegated more or less to one department. Consequently in this Act before us now, in the amendment we say: Where there is a conflict in regulations between the Local Government Act and the Health and Welfare Act that the Health and Welfare Act shall have the final word in any instance where we have some trouble occurring, as there always is. The particular instance raised by the Honourable Member for St. John's West is one with which we have been troubled for some time. Delay in taking action, or making a decision on what action to take has been deferred repeatedly because in some respect, anyhow, there was this division of authority amongst the departments. Inspectors from the Department of Public Health were sent out on different occasions to see what the matter was. Various plans were put forward to try and overcome the difficulty there. I am hopeful that in some way or another the situation may be remedied in the not far distant future.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Honourable Leader of the Opposition for his references to the government and to this department. I will take the further opportunity of passing these over to the minister concerned. I will also call to the attention of the minister concerned the point raised by the honourable member.

On motion bill read a second time. Ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

Second Reading of Bill, “An Act to Empower the St. John’s Municipal Council to raise a loan by issue of Bonds for the Purpose of Financing the Erection of a Stadium Building in the City of St. John’s.

MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill. The members of the House are aware, I think, of the purpose of this Bill, and most of them are familiar, I think, with something of the history leading up to this particular enactment. They will recall that an attempt to build a Stadium for St. John’s emanated as a result of initiative of the St. John’s Branch of the Lion’s Club. Their efforts to raise money to build the stadium proved a little bit beyond their capacity. But again arising out of subsequent action taken by them the task was undertaken by a group of St. John’s citizens who made an attempt to try and collect the necessary funds in order that the stadium might be built. They, too, found it exceedingly difficult to get the necessary large amount of money in order to complete the building. I think talks were then held between the Stadium Council and the St. John’s Municipal Council and arrangements were made whereby the City Council extended a loan to the Stadium Council of a certain amount in order to complete the building. As a result of that undertaking the St. John’s City Councillors wrote us seeking authority whereby they may float a bond issue up to a maximum of seven hundred thousand dollars in order that they might carry on the necessary financing required by the Stadium Council. That is the primary purpose of this Bill.

The other provision of the Bill, of course, deals with the raising of that particular money and deals also with a loan of one hundred thousand dollars which was made to the stadium. That original one hundred thousand dollars was interest free and arrangements are made under this Act to provide that the hundred thousand dollars remain interest free, but that during the period of the twenty years the loan liquidates itself by yearly amortization.

The other two or three provisions in the Bill, sir, are merely technical, and deal with the carrying out of the bond issue and the payment of same by the St. John's City Council to the Stadium Council as and when required.

Mr. Speaker, I move second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this Bill. I do so with a certain amount of surprise in one way, because I was more or less of the opinion that there had already been large sums of money collected, and almost enough to build a stadium. I had not been apprised of the fact that it would be necessary to collect another seven hundred thousand dollars, as the case might be. I must say I have not had time to read this Bill carefully. But I do want to say now that the St. John's Stadium, of course, is something which is coupled in my mind with certain political features. I have heard the matter raised in here before, I think it was back in 1951 or 1952. I think, Mr. Speaker, we owe a word of praise to the patriotic and civic minded citizens who have gotten together, and by a very great effort, succeeded in raising quite a large sum of money towards the building of this stadium. We all agree, of course, the stadium in a community of this size is something absolutely essential, and that it cannot be done without if the community is to advance in keeping with the times. I think it is all the more appropriate therefore, Sir, that we should issue a word of congratulations and of praise to these people who have gotten together and drawn up plans and schemes whereby they could collect money from the citizens.

Along with that, Sir, we ought and do tender our thanks to our people in the City of St. John's for the way in which they have contributed by way of direct contributions and by way of amounts which have been taken from their wages and from their salaries. I say it is a great credit to them. I hope that this stadium will soon have the roof on it. I see it going up as I pass there nearly every day, and I see a change and improvement in the structure, and it looks to me as though it is to be a very fine building indeed. I say all credit is due to these people, and particularly to the chairman of this board, who I believe is Mr. O'Leary. He, Sir, is one of the most civic-minded men in the community, and great credit and praise should go to him. I am quite sure that he has given a large amount of his time and energy to the raising of the money for this stadium. He and all the various workers and clubs have contributed adequately, I am sure. I join with the government in congratulating them. We did not think it would be necessary, of course, to pass such a bill as this. But if it is necessary then we are all for it. If there is anything further that we have to say we will say it in committee. We certainly support this Bill, Sir.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, being a citizen of St. John's, and for some time a contributor towards the building of the stadium, I wish to say that I do support this, because at this time it seems, to me at least, we are to have the stadium completed and put into operation so that the young, and also the old, of St. John's can enjoy themselves and take part in various sports, etc., which will no doubt be carried on down in that place on King's Bridge Road. However, this seems a considerable amount of money, seven hundred thousand dollars, which I understand will really amount to six hundred thousand, as one hundred thousand is to be paid back to the government. However it seems to me if we are to have a stadium that is the only way to get it. The citizens have been very good as a whole, and have contributed largely towards the stadium, I may say, I concur with my colleague, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, as to the wonderful work done by the people who at the beginning started this fund to build a stadium, as also the present officers of the stadium council, under the chairmanship of Mr. Frank O'Leary.

I support this bill, Sir, because I believe this is the only way the citizens of St. John's are going to get a stadium. Due to the high cost of material, etc., it appears the cost will be much higher than it was expected.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, like my two colleagues I would like to express my support of this bill. Of course, like the other speakers, I too realize the committee has had to deal with the increased cost of material and the increase in the labour costs and the cost of construction since the movement began. They have been faced, I presume, with difficulties for which they could find no solutions other than ask the Municipal Council of the City of St. John's to help them in making the stadium an accomplished fact. I realize that the citizens who undertook this venture in the first place took on a very difficult task, probably not realizing how difficult it was. They did put a great deal of work into it, and deserve praise for the effort they made, especially the last committee who seemed to be doing so well that it was a surprise to find that this bill was now necessary. However, in these modern times when there is an artificial ice rink at Bell Island and Buchans and Grand Falls, to see a city the size of St. John's without an artificial ice rink is unusual. There is not enough natural ice available to enable visiting teams to come here with any degree of certainty, and therefore the city is deprived of those games of sport and hockey and of having the pride and advantage of seeing their home town team take part in the games for the championship of Newfoundland.

It is therefore apparently necessary that we should have a stadium here, and as it seems it would be too slow a process to wait for voluntary contributions the municipal council has taken it upon themselves to assist the effort the citizens have made hitherto. I hope this bill will provide the funds necessary for the completion of the stadium.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my honourable friends opposite have expressed a little surprise that after all the contributions that have been made it should be necessary still to find the sum of six hundred thousand dollars to enable the stadium to be completed. The fact as I understand it, is, that the stadium is to cost about a million dollars which is a very large sum of money. There are only one or two of all our industries that cost that much from the public till, all the rest of them costing considerably less than a million dollars. But this is a large modern building of steel and concrete construction with a very modern ice plant and fixtures and seats. I believe the seats are to be of poured concrete. At least they appear so to me when driving past there. I see forms being built at this moment that appear to me to be the forms of seats for the building. Nevertheless a million dollars is of course a lot of money for a stadium, especially in view of the fact that two or three or four years ago the estimate of what it would take to complete the thing ran somewhere around three or four hundred thousand dollars. It is surprising now to find that it is to cost six or seven hundred thousand dollars more than was estimated two or three years ago, and it is just a little shocking. But we in the government have, I confess, grown a little accustomed to that. We have had a lot to do in the past two or three years with construction in Newfoundland, the construction of hospitals and schools and the construction of factories—We have had quite a lot to do with the construction of factories—And it is a rare case indeed that we have found of a contract costing what was actually estimated to be the cost. Indeed in virtually every case construction of these factories has been much more costly than was figured in the first instance.

The city is to find around six hundred thousand dollars to be raised by the sale of city bonds, and this, together with the one hundred thousand dollars that the government have lent the stadium project makes a total of seven hundred thousand dollars. This leaves approximately seven hundred thousand dollars, the stadium collected from other sources, mainly the public of St. John's and a few people from outside St. John's, an amount of approximately three hundred thousand dollars including two, if not three, but certainly two annual payments received from the Government of Canada and a ten-year hundred thousand dollar grant which that government have agreed to make towards the cost of the stadium building upon conditions that the building itself be available for the purpose of a provincial fair and exhibition.

Indeed that is the principal condition imposed by the Government of Newfoundland also in making its loan, which is distinct from a grant from the government of Canada. That is a loan of one hundred thousand dollars, and the conditions were that it should be available to the Government of Newfoundland or its agents or agencies for the purpose of provincial exhibitions for not less than two weeks, I think, in each year.

The difference in the sums all have hitherto contributed to the stadium council is that the City Council of St. John's and the Government of Newfoundland do not get bonds for their loans. Furthermore the City of St. John's in legislation which is to come, I understand, later in this session, is to have title to the stadium. Title in the stadium will be vested in the City Council whereas the people who have contributed a hundred thousand dollars at the end of the ten year period will have no title, but all that is detail. The principal fact is that the stadium is now well underway and should be finished before the end of this year, and become available to the people of St. John's and year by year to the people of Newfoundland in connection with the annual fair and exhibition.

Now this raises the question of stadiums in other parts of the province. We have had a request from the Town of Corner Brook, or the metropolitan town of Corner Brook for a grant towards a stadium out there. There is not any doubt, I suppose in anyone's mind that the people out there are at least as deserving of a stadium as are the people here or the people of Grand Falls. I doubt that anyone will have any hesitation in admitting that. The people out there I would say are contributing much more generously and with much more enthusiasm towards the fund for building a stadium in Corner Brook than the people of St. John's did for the building of a stadium here. I think there is no comparison in the generosity of the people of the two places. The government are right now, around this time I mean and not at this very moment, considering some sound formula under which a loan can be made to the stadium fund of Corner Brook in such a way as not to make it obligatory for us to contribute to any one and every one in Newfoundland that may want a stadium. I think it ought to be pretty clear that we cannot do that. We cannot agree in advance to contribute public funds to any drive that may start at any time in any part of this province for a new stadium. We cannot do it. That is clear, that is obvious. But whether we could divide the province into say three coasts, the east coast, south coast and west coast and have a stadium for each of these coasts and then call it square is something to consider, or whether some other formula that would be fair to Newfoundland in general and to the Treasury can be devised I do not know at this moment. But having contributed already, as we have done by way of loans to the St. John's Stadium on the grounds that it is the All-Newfoundland Headquarters of the fairs and exhibitions as distinguished from purely local fairs and purely local exhibitions, having done that we feel that we should find some way soundly to assist the people of Corner Brook to get their stadium established as soon as possible.

HON. C. H. BALLAM (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might add a word to what has already been said by the Honourable the Premier and honourable members. On reading the Bill I notice that we merely authorize the City of St. John's to raise this loan but we do not as a government guarantee the bond issue. So that there is no liability upon the Government of Newfoundland as is the case in most of our bond issues.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the whole House on tomorrow.

First Readings:

Honourable the Attorney General asks leave to introduce a Bill, "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to enter into an Agreement with Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited, Dominion Wabana Ore Limited and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited.

On motion bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

Honourable the Minister of Public Welfare asks leave to introduce a Bill, "An Act to Amend the Welfare of Children Act."

On motion bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred.

On motion all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred.
MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday, at 3.00 of the clock.

The House at its rising adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, May 13, at three of the clock.

THURSDAY, May 13th, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

MR. JANES: Mr. Speaker, with leave of the House, I would like to present a petition signed by some 96 residents of Gander who were former residents of the District of Fogo. The petition is also signed by some 782 people on Fogo Island and 30 people from Seldom and 38 people from Change Islands. This petition is concerned with the construction of a high-road between Gander and Carmanville. Several petitions have already been presented here to the House, and I don't think I need say anything further except to read part of the petition which says: "Whereas Carmanville is the only safe harbour on the Mainland of Notre Dame Bay South and so provides a ferry terminal for the people and serving the whole area, your petitioners pray that those in authority take immediate steps to eliminate the isolation of this section, and further the Government's scheme for the centralization of population."

I ask leave, Mr. Speaker, to table this petition and ask that it be referred to the department concerned.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Notice of Motion

None.

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development or other appropriate Minister to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Table itemized accounts presented to the Government by W. J. Lundrigan Ltd. in connection with all goods and services supplied by them in connection with the building of the Cement Plant at Corner Brook.

2. Table similar accounts presented to the Government by W. J. Lundrigan Ltd. in connection with all goods and services supplied by said Company in connection with the building of the Gypsum plant at Corner Brook.

3. Table payment vouchers for all amounts of monies paid over to said W. J. Lundrigan Ltd. on account of the building of these two plants.

4. Table a statement showing total amounts of money in each year since April 1949 paid to W. J. Lundrigan Ltd., also on what accounts were these monies paid, whether for the building of plants, construction or repair of roads, or for any other cause.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:
Receipted bills and other vouchers for the travelling expenses of the Director of Tourist Development for the various trips undertaken by him outside of Newfoundland during the past fiscal year.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Premier to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. What machinery, trucks or other motor vehicles, if any, were purchased in Montreal, for or by the Government during the past two years? By whom were purchases made, and what prices were paid in each case? Give year and model of trucks purchased.

2. Was any machinery bought by, and/or paid for, by the Newfoundland Government for the use of contractors from Canada, working in Newfoundland?

Answers to Questions

Questions No. 82 and No. 83—stand.

MR. BROWNE: Could anyone tell me, Mr. Speaker, where is the Minister of Public Works? Is he in the City? And what is the situation in regard to these questions?

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Minister of Public Works is in town, and is exceedingly busy in his Department getting ready for an exceedingly busy year, and except insofar as it is exceedingly imperative for him to be here at every session he will continue for some time yet to work in his office on the road programme for this year and other public works programmes for this Government for this year which will not wait on the House of Assembly nor anything else. Except insofar as it is imperative that he be here to perform his parliamentary duties he will continue at his office getting the biggest programme we have ever had ready for launching this year. Any questions directed to him will reach him and the answers when prepared will be handed to me, except on such occasions as the Minister is himself present. I will table such answers as I receive them.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with Question No. 80 addressed to me on the Order Paper of May 12:

(1) The machinery arrived on three different dates, i.e., Aug. 1, 1952, Feb. 14, 1953 and March 31, 1953.

(2) On these same dates $29,996; $39,987.30 and $40,306.84—Grand total $110,290.14.

(3) The answer is the same as the answer to (2) that I have just given.

(4) In answer to the first of these three questions I say I don't know. In answer to the second part—There has been no correspondence, and the answer to the third part of the question is, No.

(5) In reply to these two questions my answer is that I have not got even the foggiest idea of any information. It is none of my business. I did not make it any of my business. I just don't know, and I may add that I don't care.

Question No. 81.

(1) The answer is that it has not as yet gone into production. The plant is not as yet complete in its construction. In that connection I would explain that at the far end or the inner, northern end of the building, a partition has been run across and in that section that is so partitioned off is an acid treatment process to be carried and an extremely unusual, extremely exceptional floor had to be made and it is only now that that floor is in process of completion. It should be finished within a week or so, whereupon that whole section of the building can and will come into use and production will commence. Up to the present they have made a few hundred batteries without the use of that special acid-proof floor, and I am glad to say that the batteries have been exceptionally good and have had exceedingly good reception. They are of excellent and very satisfactory quality.

(2) I do not know.

(3) No money was paid to Mr. Hanning personally, but amounts have been paid to the company and the amounts and the date of the payments I now table.

Question No. 81 (3):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Available to 31/3/54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>23/10/52</td>
<td>$15,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>23/10/52</td>
<td>$25,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22/11/53</td>
<td>$18,256.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11/2/53</td>
<td>$80,804.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5/3/53</td>
<td>$30,120.40</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13/4/53</td>
<td>$31,188.90</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21/5/53</td>
<td>$109,999.80</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>10/6/53</td>
<td>$50,790.75</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>19/2/54</td>
<td>$13,845.85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>$325,000.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(4) I can’t truthfully say the plant is in production now, but is beginning to go into production. They have some fifty people taken on, and I noticed on one of the radio stations during the past day or two they have been advertising for some girls to go to work there. Within the past week or so the owner of the company, Mr. Grube, has arrived back in Newfoundland, and within the same period of time the general manager employed by him, i.e. Mr. Max Brown has also arrived. So that it is only now that the plant is beginning to go into production.

(6) I table herewith the detailed answer to that question.

Question No. 81 (6):

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Advances to 31/3/54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>2/10/52</td>
<td>$25,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17/11/52</td>
<td>$25,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25/11/52</td>
<td>$22,522.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29/12/52</td>
<td>$7,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>24/1/53</td>
<td>$92,796.85</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22/1/53</td>
<td>$47,029.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11/2/53</td>
<td>$75,835.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17/2/53</td>
<td>$8,000.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>5/3/53</td>
<td>$82,546.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13/4/53</td>
<td>$74,360.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>18/5/53</td>
<td>$168,137.95</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29/6/53</td>
<td>$96,698.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>21/7/53</td>
<td>$34,167.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4/8/53</td>
<td>$60,360.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4/8/53</td>
<td>$4,500.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27/8/53</td>
<td>$1,900.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15/9/53</td>
<td>$111,777.16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>12/11/53</td>
<td>$1,250.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20/11/53</td>
<td>$51,120.64</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>$1,000,000.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(7) I shall do no such thing. The honourable gentleman has that information as much at his disposal and as much as my finger tips as I have it at mine. Any information already available to him we are not called upon to give. Furthermore we have no such intention. That information is as readily available to my honourable friend as it is to me. It is public information. All he has to do is to look up the Statutes where he will find all of them except those yet to come before this House, and will come before the House in this session in the Government's own time, and at the time of the Government's own choosing. The answer is that we will do it at the moment of our own choosing in regard to those which have not yet become statutory and have passed into law. Those that we propose to ask the House to enact we propose to ask when it pleases us to do so.

(8) The $25,000 is part of the cost of the site that was borne by the Government, the part of the cost of some fifty acres at the Octagon with a building attached which was bought as the site for CMIC. The $25,000 is that part of the cost borne by the Government. The Government bore half the cost and the company bore the other half. We did that in the case of Atlantic Gloves and in the case of United Cotton Mills and we did it in a number of other cases. We made, as a government, a contribution to the cost of acquiring the site.

The number of men employed with the company is not information to which the House is entitled, and in giving the answer I want it understood very clearly I do not admit to the House the right to the information, which at the same time I gladly give. The number is 220 men. What the figure was at the end of last year I do not know. It was somewhere around 140 or 150 people, I presume.

Orders of The Day

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority":

MR. BROWN: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak briefly to the debate on this Bill before the House I wish at the outset to congratulate the Honourable the Minister of Fisheries who so capably introduced this legislation by way of a well-delivered address. I speak on behalf of a great district on the northeast coast of Newfoundland, a district composed of men whose ancestors derived a meagre existence from the waters of the Atlantic for centuries. I speak on behalf of a cross section of a generation who through sheer necessity, and indeed for reasons of survival have been engrossed in the fishing industry from boyhood. I speak on behalf of a number of working men, men who are looking today with solemn expectancy to the Liberal Government for some encouraging news with respect to the future state of the industry on which they depend as they have depended so long for so little returns.

I listened with a great deal of interest and pleasure to the very lengthy and comprehensive speech which was presented to this Legislature by the Honourable the Premier a few days ago, when he discussed the affairs of Newfoundland fishermen from the days when their staple food consisted of hard tack and their wardrobe contained one suit of clothes. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that those days will never again return to this province, and that the fishermen themselves will never be confronted with such memorial events. I think his synopsis of these dreadful years has served to remind this House of the justification for the legislation which we are now considering. That speech, Mr. Speaker, will long be remembered by those of us who sat and listened. I would predict that if it were put in book form it would find great publicity across the entire Dominion of Canada.

I have read this Bill through, Mr. Speaker, on several occasions, and since it was tabled in this House. It's principle, as I see it, is to create a Fisheries Authority entrusted with the task of raising large sums for the development and modernization of one of our greatest natural resources. The Authority is composed of three men, in whom I have utmost confidence. Mr. Dustan, Chairman of the Authority, and former banker, is a man with whom I am personally acquainted. He is an individual of experience and talents. It was my privilege to do business with him when he managed a branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia in St. John's. It is my belief that his knowledge of banking and his mercantile experience will prove of inestimable value to the authority in the work that it is to undertake.

Mr. Ross Young was, I understand, a very valued employee of Crosbie and Company, Limited. It is my opinion that the selection of Mr. Young as a member of that board was a very sound one indeed. His comprehension and familiarity with fishery matters generally has already been recognized and accepted beyond question, and he will no doubt be looked upon as a great adviser in this reorganization programme.

Mr. Winsor is a man whom I have not had the pleasure of meeting. But from what I gather, he has spent many years in this particular field, and should bring to the authority a measure of wisdom and understanding.

Mr. Speaker, these are men who possess skill, knowledge and excellent qualifications. I am convinced of their sincerity and absolute integrity. They were selected from possible dozens of other good men. They are entrusted with a man-size job, and on their decisions will depend the success or failure of an undertaking the preparation of which involved expert advice and long and careful reasoning.

We must industrialize our fisheries. They must not, they dare not be misdirected. We must concentrate on a new pattern with vigor and energy. Newfoundland must go ahead. It must come into its own. In order that the province might advance our first consideration must be to develop our fisheries. It is a programme in which we all must share, and it is our opportunity to do something of lasting value for the benefit of all, not only the fishermen, but Newfoundland as a whole. I personally feel, Mr. Speaker, that we have a tremendous asset in our fisheries, an asset that cannot be underestimated, an asset that was given to us by the Good Lord Himself.

It is customary, Sir, when times are prosperous for the Government to formulate plans to take care of any possible recession. Our interest at the present time is in fishery modernization. It is true that we have other interests as well, other interests in other industries, but we are now in the process of tackling the greatest problem that could confront any elected government of Newfoundland. We are tackling something that has often meant a series of set backs to our predecessors, and whether we succeed or fail I am confident that the people of Newfoundland will at least give us credit for conducting a supreme and all-out effort on their behalf.

Mr. Speaker, some reference was made by the Premier in the course of his lengthy address, and later commented on by my honourable friend and colleague, the honourable mem-
The problem today, Mr. Speaker, is identically the same as in the days when Coaker and later my father represented the fishermen, the same methods of curing are used today as then, and there is very little change in the marketing system. So, Mr. Speaker, the fisheries today are operated basically on the same scale as thirty years ago or even further back than that. I have discussed the salt codfishery with my father on many occasions since his retirement through illness from public life. It is his contention that the salt codfishery as an industry will never again occupy such a prominent place in the economy of Newfoundland.

Up to the time when this legislation was introduced, Mr. Speaker, the Government had done everything possible to assist the fishermen of Newfoundland. I doubt whether their efforts could have been duplicated by any government up to that time. It would be simply absurd for any fair-minded individual to say that the fishermen were neglected or overlooked by this administration. And I feel that with the passing of this legislation the Government will have completed its duties towards the fishermen and their families. I think that in a country such as this, a policy of this nature would commend itself to the people without the benefit of publicity of any kind. I am satisfied, Mr. Speaker, that Father Time will decide whether we have moved too fast or too slowly, too soon or too late, or whether we should have let the matter rest without taking any action whatsoever.

To my mind no industrial development programme could have succeed ed without a complete and thorough modernization of our one great, natural, God given industry. In ancient and in semi-modern times to maintain our very existence the country could only thrive and advance if our fisheries enjoyed a measure of prosperity. But today, Mr. Speaker, times have changed. We are living in a new and modern age. The fishery is no longer our primary source of revenue, and many of our fishermen have forsaken the fishing boat for other and more gainful employment on shore. The Labrador fishery, Mr. Speaker, was once a very flourishing one. Today it has virtually faded into oblivion. Why? Because the bottom has virtually dropped out of the market. Let us therefore, rescue the shore fishery, and let us do something about it now before it is too late. But there can be only one solution, and that solution is the one we are now considering. I predict great success for this plan which will be adopted in the very near future. I do so because I have complete and absolute confidence in the men who were responsible for its creation and in the men whose responsibility it will be to carry it through. My Premier and his Cabinet have done much for the general good and success of our fisheries and our fishermen since assuming office in 1949. I doubt if there is a man today, Mr. Speaker, in Newfoundland who has the general ability to attempt and carry out the work of our Premier. No man in our history has ever faced a challenge with such boldness and determination.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very heavy piece of legislation. It involves an expenditure of many millions of dollars. It would be well worthwhile for this House to spend many hours in consideration of it. It is an outstanding Bill which should not alone be considered from a political viewpoint. Only time will decide the wisdom or fallacy of our actions. But as one who was born in the midst of a great generation of fishermen, I personally support and accept any proposals put forward which would bring about the conditions so desired by every person of mature knowledge with regard to our natural industry. I visualize a great future, Mr. Speaker, for the fresh fish industry. If properly organized, it could be one of the greatest means of livelihood ever to befall a country such as this. There was always a market for fresh codfish, and indications are that it will remain so for many, many years to come. If some countries of the world, Mr. Speaker, had access to such an abundance of codfish there would be less starvation and want in Europe today, and it goes without saying that Europe would have such a fishery fully cultivated.

The frozen fish industry, Mr. Speaker, as I have just said, is bound to become a great one. I predict that markets will be made available in every country of the free world for this product principally because of the general demand from all quarters for new fishing grounds and a greater variety of eatable fish. So far, in this country, Mr. Speaker, we have confined ourselves to a very small number of species but it is well known that we have a great variety of food fish which remain to swim unmolested in our waters. The possibilities of the fresh fish trade are unlimited. There can be no doubt of the potentiality of marketing fresh fish nor of our ability to secure markets.

Too long, Mr. Speaker, have our fishermen been forced to exist on the bare necessities of life; too long have they been taken advantage of by those who would profit by their loss; too long have our fishermen been forced to exist on the bare necessities of life; too long have they been trampled upon. Let us now give them a break! Let us provide a future to which they might look with confidence! Let us brighten their hopes and fulfill their cherished dreams! Let us now see to it that they are given their just reward!

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Speaker, I am put in a very difficult position this afternoon in having to follow the last speaker. The speeches on this side of the House have all been of a very high order. The standard was set up by my honourable friend, the Minister of Fisheries, when he spoke to the second reading of this Bill. The Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, in my mind, is one of the greatest orators in Canada at this time. I have heard some of the men who are supposed to be some of our greatest orators, and I have heard no one who surpasses him, and few who measure up to him.

The Premier's style of speaking is different altogether. He speaks from his heart.

MR. BROWNE: Has even the Premier—

MR. COURAGE: It is nothing to laugh at. It would be better if more members spoke from their hearts, better for Newfoundland if more members had hearts like the Premier's.

Mr. Speaker, the man who has just spoken is a young man in his mid-twenties. He has just made a great speech. It is difficult for me to follow him. I speak this afternoon because I stand here as a representative of the District of Fortune Bay and Hermitage Bay, a district which is not too well known to too many in this House. I have something to say of conditions past and present that may be peculiar to that district. The District of Fortune Bay and Hermitage, Mr. Speaker, is an old district. It sent a member to this House in 1832. Those of us who studied the Gallic Wars will remember the first words: "All Gaul is divided into three parts." The District of Fortune Bay and Hermitage may be conveniently divided into three parts. There is Bay D'Espoir, which is probably unique in Newfoundland. It is an inland sea with a climate, a foliage, a way of life very different from that of the rough headlands of Hermitage Bay, from which it is sheltered. Hermitage Bay is the second part. That has an inshore fishery, but it can’t really be called inshore because the fishermen have to go out a considerable distance to catch cod. Some of them go off in their boats for as much as ten and twelve miles. They land their fish, and up to a short time ago, they made their fish on the flakes. There was some banking but it was not so important as the bank fishery of Fortune Bay.

I am not going to speak very much about Bay D’Espoir and Hermitage Bay, because the main problem of the fishery today in the District of Fortune Bay and Hermitage is not in Bay D’Espoir and Hermitage Bay. They have their problems, and I shall discuss them too. I will have more to say about these two parts of the district which I have the honour to represent when I speak in the budget debate. Now I am going to concern myself principally with Fortune Bay.

Mr. Speaker, when the Premier spoke a few days ago, I believe it was on the last day he spoke that he produced a map showing some statistics. He gave out the total catch of salt codfish in the various districts around Newfoundland. White Bay and Fogo, I believe, were the leaders.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Ferryland and St. Mary’s were first.

MR. COURAGE: But there was one statistic that struck me somewhat forcibly, and I may have forgotten the others. The catch in Fortune Bay and Hermitage, 7,200 quintals. Mr. Speaker, that is one of the saddest statistics I have ever heard—7,200 quintals. Why Captain Jack Mills in one year landed as much fish as that in English Harbour West. Any one banker in any one year landed as much fish as that. What has happened to the fishery? In Hermitage Bay, of course, they catch their fish and sell it to the fish plant at Gaultois. That is a good thing. But in Fortune Bay where the fleet of bankers once operated, dozens of them in my boyhood, the bank fishery has disappeared, and the fish are no longer being caught.

Where are the fishermen?

Mr. Speaker, I am not going to say very much about the bank fishery. As Kipling saw it when he wrote “Captains Courageous” it may have been a romantic and a gallant and an attractive way of life. But viewed as I see it (and I am related to fishermen. I had an uncle who sailed in fishing vessels, yes, and an uncle who drowned in a fishing vessel) the bank fishery was anything but romantic. It was the most uncomfortable way of earning a living that has ever been devised. It was the most uncomfortable way of existing that has been known to men since the days of the galley slaves, and it disappeared for exactly the same reason. Men were driven to be galley slaves. They were condemned criminals driven to the galley as slaves, were driven to work by a whip. To one who saw a Roman Galley coming up through the Mediterranean, with its oars flashing in the sun, proudly breasting the seas of the Mediterranean and passing onward through the pillars of Heracles, the Roman Galley no doubt looked to be romantic and a wonderful sight, a beautiful sight, but what was at its core? What made it go through the water? Men! The blood, the sweat, the misery of men, whipped on, and if they fainted they were revived again by the whip. The galley slave has passed away because men could no longer tolerate such a spectacle. And to the bankers men were driven by a whip, the whip of poverty. And when times became a little better the bank fishery too disappeared. Now I am not going to launch a tirade against those who skippered the vessels or the owners because it was not their fault. It is just the system that I am speaking about.

In 1930 I taught school in Fortune Bay in a place with about seventy-five families where everybody almost to a man went out in these bankers. They left their homes in January or early February, and not in August or July when the sun was shining, and they fished all the year round up to the late fall. They went out on the Grand Banks in March when the water is pretty cold and when the sea is very rough. They were put out in little dories over the side and rowed away to where the gear was anchored, hauled back that gear, put the codfish in the boat and came back aboard the vessel and got something to eat, then split the codfish, often by the light of a torch. Then they had to bait up that gear. Then they had to go out again the next morning in their little dories and once more catch some fish. They did that day after day, day in and day out, many times Sundays and Mondays, many times it was from Monday until Wednesday night before they got any sleep. I have heard men tell me that they have stood splitting fish until they began to cut their hands. They literally fell asleep at the splitting table because human endurance can only stand so much before it must give in. They went on day after day. By and by the caplin struck in and the captain said: You have been good boys and have landed a few thousand quintals of fish: Now we will go down on the Labrador. So they got ready and they went down on the Labrador and they fished on the Labrador and got back about the latter part of October and sometimes as late as November.

That was the history of what took place in the bank fishery. Then after they had gotten a bit of firewood these men would have to take up herring fishing or turbot fishing because they had not made enough in the banker to enable them to live during the winter. What had they come home with? They had come home, Mr. Speaker, with a dirty clothes bag. How much did they get for working from January to late October? These men had earned what? Two hundred dollars was fair. Three hundred dollars was good. A man who made four hundred had reason to be congratulated by all his neighbours. I have known many men who never made two hundred dollars for a whole year fishing. When they went fishing the first thing they had to do in February was to get oil clothes, rubber boots and probably warm pants and sweaters. They had to take up these things, and their families had to live on the prospect of what they would earn until they got back.

That was the system known as banking in Newfoundland. That was the romantic and attractive bank fishery. Is it any wonder that is disappeared? Is it any wonder that it is gone? But, Mr. Speaker, that is not all. It is no coincidence that in my district of Fortune Bay and Hermitage we have more widows for our population than anywhere else in Newfoundland. It is no coincidence at all. It is another fruit of the bank fishery. Every year there were men who did not return. Every year there was a father who never
Mr. Speaker, sometimes whole schooners disappeared. The husband of my aunt went down with his schooner and with all his crew. There were many other people that I knew well who never came back. I have had, not once or twice, but far too often the unhappy task, because there was no clergyman in the place where I taught, the unhappy task of breaking the news to a family that a father would not come back any more. I have had that to do.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the committee which prepared this report were not able to visit Fortune Bay. Twice I heard that they were going to visit Fortune Bay, and each time something prevented them from doing so. Because up there the bank fishery has departed and nothing else has taken its place, and there are hard times in Fortune Bay today. I hope—I hope that this report, and this Authority which we are setting up have not come too late. Because, Mr. Speaker, I have at this moment on my desk letters and telegrams and a list containing the names of a hundred men who are looking for work, and I can't find work for them. I have haunted the unemployment insurance office. I have telephoned them repeatedly. I tackled everybody who has anything to do with Seven Islands, and I confess I can't find work for these men. They are looking for it. They want work. That is one thing that society owes men. It may not owe them certain things that some people expect, but society does owe a man a chance to earn a living. I hope that we are not too late with this thing, because I am sure, and that is why I am speaking so honestly and plainly, that many honourable members do not know the urgency of the problem in Fortune Bay. It is not in Burin, not in Fortune, not in Grand Bank, but from Harbour Breton and down around to St. Bernard's.

Now I said I had the names of a hundred men who are looking for work, but that is only a small number of the population, the male population of Fortune Bay. The sad thing about it is that these letters are for the most part from fishermen, and fishermen younger than myself. The reason for that is this—the reason for this is that the fishermen of Fortune Bay are today catching fish, but they are not catching them in Fortune Bay, and in many cases they are not catching them in Newfoundland. The men of Fortune Bay are recognized as the best deep-sea fishermen in Newfoundland or for that matter in the world. I challenge anybody to deny that statement. They are the best deep-sea fishermen in Newfoundland. There are good fishermen in Placentia Bay, too. I am speaking of men who go out on the Grand Banks, who man the bankers, who go to Lunenburg, fishing out of Gloucester, out of Fair Haven, out of Boston, Newfoundlanders. Honourable members should not look surprised. I have relatives there myself. Only last year a dragger went down somewhere off Boston. She was skippered by my cousin. She went down with all hands. My own father fished out of the Bering Straits, out of Seattle, San Francisco, and out of many other places. Fortune Bay men have always gone out of Fortune Bay when they wanted to earn a really good living for their families. That has been going on for far too long, because I am afraid that they are not going to come back. They are fishing in Lunenburg, Sydney, and from all around Nova Scotia, men from Fortune Bay, the best fishermen in Newfoundland, because they can't make a living in Fortune Bay. That is the problem, to attract these men, to hold them there. They are fishing here in St. John's. Go aboard the trawlers in St. John's and Harbour Grace and you will find that men from Fortune Bay are fishing there. That is why I said this is a sad statistic. These men are catching fish but it is not for Fortune Bay, and it is not for Newfoundland in many cases.

Mr. Speaker, we have all said enough in this House to indicate to anybody that the need is there for a fishery development programme. No one will dispute that. No one can dispute that who knows anything at all about Newfoundland. The need is there. On the South Coast there are a great many harbours of the type that the Premier described in his speech. Several of them came to my mind as he spoke where houses could be built, streets could be laid out, harbours where the fleet of fishing vessels could lie safely at anchor, that are free from ice all the year around, and from which fishermen can fish all the year around. And we have the men, as I have just said in these rambling remarks of mine, we have the men there to man these boats. I could name quite a number of such places. Rencontre East for one and St. Jacques for another, English Harbour West and certainly Harbour Breton, Bay L'Argent and St. Bernard's. My honourable friend reminds me there are many of them. It is difficult to name them all in Fortune Bay which is within reach and access of the Grand Banks, which is so well known that even the Russians have heard it and have come over here to fish. Mr. Speaker, these places need someone to come in with the knowhow that the Premier spoke of, with a little capital and to go to this Fishery Authority and get the necessary loan to start a fish plant or some fishery development. My honourable friend from Bonavista South said there are fish swimming in our waters that nobody is catching. I had an instance of that last fall when I went from Coomb's Cove to Little Bay West, a distance which in a motor boat took me about forty-five minutes. During all of that time we steamed through thousands and thousands of mackerel, and nobody was catching them.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that note will be taken of what I have said concerning the harbours in Fortune Bay. They are excellent for fishery development and they have excellent people. The fact is that whoever goes there in this day and age and starts a fishery development will not only benefit himself but will benefit the people—or to put it the other way around—will not only benefit the people but will benefit himself. Many of these places in Fortune Bay are suitable.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot sit down without speaking about roads. We need roads. Some people have the idea, Mr. Speaker, that you can't build roads in Fortune Bay.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member will have to tie his roads in with fishery development, otherwise he will be out of order in speaking of roads.

MR. COURAGE: I submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I say, with all due deference, that roads are an intrinsic part of fishery development, or of development of anything in Newfoundland. Roads must exist for the people to carry on the fishery, for people to walk over, to go to church, and to go from place to place.
MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member might argue that church bells are equally important—I don't think.

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Speaker, one million dollars could be spent on road development in Fortune Bay.

MR. SPEAKER: I cannot allow the honourable member to discuss roads.

MR. COURAGE: And, sir, the same is true of St. Barbe.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is out of order.

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Speaker, may I talk about cake?

MR. SPEAKER: Fish cakes, yes.

MR. COURAGE: There has come about somehow or other amongst certain people a fallacy which I call the "Have your cakes and eat it" fallacy. It is that sort of thinking where people said Confederation would be a wonderful thing if it came to Newfound-land. I agree with Confederation, but I don't like the way it came about. There are people who say such things. And there are people who say about the fishery—We must have fishery development but don't like the way the Government is going about it. Let us have a look at the way the Government is going about it: They are setting up a body of men called the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority. And this board of three men, all experienced men, is given the job of receiving and examining proposals and suggestions which come into the Government or which come in to them; undertake research and investigations of potential markets and enforcing agreements made even before the passing of this Act between the Government of New- foundland and persons to assist in the development of the fisheries. They are to co-ordinate the work of the several departments of the Newfoundland Government which relates to the development of the fisheries. They are to assist persons directly or indirectly with financial aid or otherwise in the establishment of processing plants and to assist in the operation of such enterprises as are of experimental character, etc. In other words they are to carry the burden of assisting those people in Newfoundland who have plans for the development of the fisheries. I cannot see what is wrong with that. It is not nationalization. Nationalization would mean that the Government would take over and own these fish plants. That, Mr. Speaker, is what nationalization means; the Government would step in and take over and own this industry. That is not going to happen. There is no industry in God's world which lends itself so little to nationalization as the fishing industry of Newfoundland.

It is not socialization, Mr. Speaker. Socialization means that the fishermen would own the plants and the boats and equipment in common. That is not intended. What is intended is that the fishermen should own their own boats, and the enterprisers, the businessmen of the fisheries should take over and own their own plants. That is not socialization but it is industrialization. It means that the fishermen of Newfoundland would catch more fish, that they would catch them by more modern methods, and that he would process them by more modern methods. But it is to be individual enterprise. Along with industrialization it is to be individual enterprise. It may not be as individualistic as the fisheries of today, nevertheless, indivindustrial enterprise where fishermen and owners alike can earn a good living.

Mr. Speaker, I have said here before in this House that there is a great need for modernization. I have said here before that a good catch for a fisherman today is seventy quintals of fish. If two men go out in a boat and catch 120 quintals of codfish, that is a good catch. But seventy quintals of fish, even if the price were $20 a quintal, when these fishermen subtract the cost of operations, is not enough to give them a decent standard of living. It cannot be done. What we have to do is to enable the fishermen to catch more fish. In the world today millions of people are hungry, millions of people are starving. The average calorie consumption of food is only 1,150 which is only three hundred and fifty calories above the amount upon which the human body can exist. Fish is a very rich protein food. Something must be done to speed up and modernize the distribution of fish. That is where we fall down, in the distribution. Maybe some of this fish can be made available to people who are hungry, because it is only people who are hungry who are going to eat our fish. It is a sad thing that I should have to say so. I like codfish because I am accustomed to it. But take codfish and serve it to somebody who is not used to it, and he won't like it. There are many, many people here in St. John's and the industrial towns who turn up their noses at codfish. They go to Church and say: "Please God let our fishermen get lots of fish, let our fishery harvest be bountiful, but God, don't expect me to eat it."

We must put our fish up in such attractive packages that people will want to eat it. The Premier explained here during his speech how that is being done at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, during the Confederation campaign, a friend of mine in Hermitage Bay, a fisherman, received a newspaper. On the front page of the newspaper was a map of Newfoundland, and across that map of Newfoundland was written "Where once our Fathers Stood we Stand." Now he looked at that in a different way than I would have looked at it, and he immediately wired back to the person who sent out that newspaper and said: "I don't want to stand where my father stood. I want to stand in a better place. My father died of beri-beri due to malnutrition. He stood all his life in the bow of a dory. He could not even afford an engine. He worked all his life for somebody else. I had to bury him when he died. He starved to death from malnutrition, a victim of beri-beri. I don't want to stand where my father stood nor do I want my children to stand where I am standing."

Mr. Speaker, this is a wise measure. This is a great Bill. The honourable member for White Bay referred to it as a war measure. It is. It is a challenge to all the people of Newfoundland. The responsibility for the success or failure of this measure does not depend on the Government; it will not depend on the Fisheries Authority as much as it will depend on the fishermen of Newfoundland. We must, every one of us make an all-out effort. Again the call goes out for leadership. I said in this House once before that there is need for leadership, for our young men of good education to come into this fisheries programme, to start at the very beginning of the fishery business and to learn it step by step. There is a great chance for them right at this moment.

Mr. Speaker, early this spring we buried a good Fortune Bay man, the late Senator Vincent P. Burke. He was a good Fortune Bay man. I knew him well. He told me that he had once become very angry with a man who was at that time the leader—he might not have been the Leader of the Opposition—but a man who was at that time very much opposed to the Memorial University. Dr. Burke became very angry with him because he said to Dr. Burke: "It is the height of folly to think of educating fishermen's children." Now to one who knew Dr. Burke it is apparent he could not have said a worse thing to him. Mr. Speaker, it is not the height of folly to educate fishermen's children. It is the height of wisdom to educate fishermen's children. Because a well educated province, a well educated country, is the salvation of that country.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a little book called the Newfoundland Story.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the honourable member a question? Could he clarify more or less the incident he mentioned where some Leader of the Opposition at some time or another objected to educating fishermen's children?

MR. COURAGE: I think I said at the time the University was being built or soon after. It was many years before the present Leader of the Opposition had attained his eminence, Mr. Speaker. It was many years ago.

MR. HOLLETT: Thank you, that clears it up.

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Speaker, the last speaker said that the Premier was attacking this problem with energy and with initiative, or words to that effect. In 1949 I wrote a little article about him in a Newfoundland magazine. I am going to quote now what I said: "Many people have asked the question: Who is that man Smallwood? What sort of fellow is he? Well I will answer that question:

"Joseph R. Smallwood is a fighter. He is a fighter for the cause of the Newfoundland people of whom Shelly might have been thinking when he wrote: 'The seeds he sows another reaps, the wealth he finds another keeps, the robe he weaves another wears.' That was written long before the Premier had become Premier, although he had attained a certain eminence. It is true today. It is true that he is fighting for the Newfoundland fishermen. And we invite everyone on whatever side of the House he sits to help us in this crusade. Mr. Speaker, people will ask, can we afford to do what we are doing? I would ask, can we afford not to do what we are doing?"

MR. BUTTON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority." I want, Sir, first to congratulate the Honourable Minister of Fisheries for his outstanding speech in outlining the fishery programme.

Mr. Speaker, although I am speaking this afternoon on this subject there is really not a great deal for me to speak about after listening to the great and historical speech delivered in this Chamber by the Honourable the Premier. Nevertheless, Sir, I will endeavour to occupy this Chamber for a few brief moments.

Mr. Speaker, the first stage of development in Newfoundland, as I see it, is completed. Jobs have been made available to the skilled workers in this country. Here in the great industrialized centres of the country the skilled workers can find an outlet to develop their specialized skills, mechanics, bookkeepers, tradesmen will find a livelihood, economic security and personal happiness and satisfaction. Sir, God created men, but he created them with vastly different ambitions. Mr. Speaker, not all men are fishermen born and not all men are farmers. Many fishermen today are round pegs in square holes. But heretofore they had to stay in the fishing boats because Newfoundland could not offer them outlets for their basic qualifications because of its lack of development.

The second stage of the development programme of the Government of Newfoundland has commenced. The best authorities on the fisheries, the forests and the agriculture that North America can produce have been called together to devise and blueprint and make plans on which this Government will base its policy for years to come. Already, Sir, we have a great fishery programme in operation and we in the Government are committed to carry out this programme and we are committed without any reservations. We believe to a man that it provides the answer to all the dreams that we have had as private citizens for the many years that we have lived amongst our friends and fellow countrymen in this land of ours.

Newfoundland, Sir, has been a country of frustration. It might be said that we are the most frustrated people of peoples, as we stand upon our great coastline looking upon our wealth of fishery resources without the means to exploit that wealth, and without the capital resources available to ordinary men. Sir, we must do those things which we know from our experience and knowledge we are in a better position to do than any other country on the face of the globe. We believe, Sir, this great development programme for the fisheries of Newfoundland will fulfill our destiny as a people and as a country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us turn to the second stage of this Government's development programme—this comprises, Sir, forestry, agriculture and fishery: First let us take agriculture, and I speak, Sir, with special reference to Trinity South whose good people I am most honoured to represent here in this House. The agricultural resources of Trinity South are considerable. Programmes for the development of the blueberries and sheep raising are now being carried out. Sir, we are awaiting with impatience the report of the Royal Commission on Agriculture and on Forestry. When these reports are received by the Government the full potentials in the field of forestry and agriculture will be developed. Farming, Sir, may not be as important to Newfoundland as it is to Prince Edward Island. But various specialized aspects of agriculture can, and will, I predict, become very valuable to Newfoundland and will contribute something to its economy, particularly the prospects of the blueberry industry and the prospects of sheep raising.
which, Sir, can be one of the greatest industries today in Trinity South.

Then again, Sir, I must not leave out that great fur-bearing animal known as the mink. That, Sir, could be one of the greatest industries in the history of Newfoundland and can be produced especially with the suitable food that we have in Trinity South to supply these little, small creatures which give many a fur coat to beautiful women. We could have that industry there, Sir, not sealskins but mink. These very small fur-bearing animals could be raised in the district which I represent due to the fact that we have a pot-head industry at Dildo, which is ideal, Sir, as food for these animals. I feel confident that this Government will, before very long, see that there is such an industry in this district I represent, due to the fact that we do not have to go elsewhere to procure the food which these animals require. There is no place on the North American Continent with such prospects, as I see it, for mink raising. Many of the people of the District of Trinity South could find a good livelihood in these industries, naturally established through government assistance provided through the loan boards which have been set up. This Government, to my mind, Sir, has become the economic channel of our primary producers, and the loan boards, Mr. Speaker, a new policy in its present form in Newfoundland, is probably one of the greatest steps ever taken by any government in Newfoundland. This Government, of which we can be proud, is the only government to put forth such loans in order to assist the people, and Sir, it also leads towards the liberation of our primary producers.

In forestry, Sir, I know we have a few saw mills in Trinity South, and many of our people make a living from the production of lumber, fish boxes and berry boxes. But I know, Sir, that the forestry industry of Trinity South is not so prosperous looking as are the prospects for mink raising there. The forestry development programme of this Government, Sir, will be of great assistance to this industry and will, I predict, provide a better living for mill owners than heretofore.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fisheries, which I feel sure my honourable friends on the opposite side will be fed to the teeth with by the time every member on this side has had something to say about fishery development. They will say "For God's sake don't mention fish."

Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, are our life's blood—

MR. HOLLETT: Politically speaking—

MR. BUTTON: Our present and our future, Sir, is the fishery. I think, Sir, I speak for every member of this Government and in fact for everyone in Newfoundland when I say that this legislation, which was blue printed and adopted, this policy of fishery development and is now about to pass into an Act, is fifty years, Sir, overdue. As I see it we are proud and privileged to be part of the Government that has undertaken this great issue.

Sir, speaking for the fishery itself, it is time to do so. In my career as a private citizen, as a student of the history of the fisheries of Newfoundland and being aware of the shortcomings of the administrations up to date, I never thought that I, Max Button, would be privileged to be a member of the Government that would undertake to tackle a problem of the magnitude of this development of that great industry, known to all as the fisheries of Newfoundland. I am in agreement with the policy, but I must say, Sir, that I disagree with locations selected for the development. Why Sir? Because, of course, none of them are in Trinity South—not yet. Let me tell you about the fisheries of Trinity South about which not very many members in this House know anything, except the Premier who I would say is the only one.

Now, Sir, Trinity South is located on the northeast coast of Newfoundland. Trinity South and Trinity North are the only places on that great northeast coast where twelve months fishery is carried on. Trinity South and Trinity North, Sir (I am taking up for the honourable member for Trinity North) are the only places on the northeast coast from which it is possible to ship for twelve months of the year. That is within the past few years. I know that the honourable member for Placentia West thinks Placentia and St. Mary's Bay are the only bays. Trinity South, Sir, and Trinity North produce the greatest variety of commercial fish of any place in Newfoundland. It is, Sir, second only to Bay of Islands in the value of its herring fishery. It is the biggest producer of turbot of any bay in Newfoundland. It has the biggest and only whaling operation in Newfoundland and Labrador today. Some people may call it potheads, but that is a small whale. It produces as much lobster as any bay in the country. It produces as much salmon as any bay in this country. It is part and parcel of the great codfishery of the northeast coast, but provides a longer fishing season for cod than any bay on the northeast coast. And, Sir, this may amaze some of the people, perhaps even here in this House, it also produces caplin in the month of April and in the month of September. It has a longer fishing season for these fish than any part of the whole island of Newfoundland. It is a larger producer of canned mussels than any other bay in Newfoundland. It is the largest producer of mackerel by 100% than any other bay in Newfoundland. It has greater resources of squid than any other bay in Newfoundland. It has the best indication of commercial shrimp than any other bay in Newfoundland. It has, Sir, resources of scallop in commercial quantities. And, Mr. Speaker, it is located within seven miles of the deep-water fishing grounds, from the great newly discovered fishing grounds. It is twenty-five miles distance from Cape Bonavista. It is forty miles distance from Badger's Quay, thirty miles from Joe Batt's Arm, and it is twenty miles distance from Twillingate. And that great new source is twenty-seven miles from LaSce and fifty miles distance from St. Anthony. In fact, Mr. Speaker, this great new resource of fish so much in demand in the world markets today is so close that our fishermen in Trinity Bay are better placed than any location on this great northeast coast to fish these great new grounds. All you have to do, Mr. Speaker, is just to look at the chart of Trinity Bay, which I am doubtful if any member in this House here today except the Premier has looked at, except my honourable friend from Trinity North. You will see by looking at this chart that the hundred fathoms outlined as the Banks of Newfoundland is over two hundred miles from St. John's.
It is three hundred and fifty miles from Trepassey, and it is one quarter of a mile from Grate's Cove. This fishing ground is one quarter of a mile from Grate's Point, and, Sir, around the Baccalieu reef the RCAF have in recent years reported as high as forty trawlers of foreign origin fishing within thirty miles of the Baccalieu Island in the spring as well as in the fall. That is something, Sir, to consider.

Mr. Speaker, Trinity Bay's resources are unparalleled in Newfoundland. Only neglect has failed to give this great bay its place in the sunshine in the fisheries of the country. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the great deep sea bank fishery was originated in Trinity Bay, that the original sea dogs were bred in Trinity Bay; and it was from these great deep sea fishermen that the banking fleets of the southwest coast learned their trade. These great men, Sir, were fishing the Flemish Cape, and the Greenland Grounds fifty years ago and landing their fish in Trinity Bay, and were shipping them where possible throughout the whole year, except probably a few months. Now with the warming up of our coastal areas in the past few years it is even better today.

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, about the other advantages unique to Trinity South, which I feel sure will interest the honourable member from Placentia West. From Chapel Arm in Trinity South on the northeast coast one can drive five miles by road to Long Harbour in Placentia Bay on the southwest coast, and from Belleview in Trinity South on the northeast coast one can drive five miles, Sir, to Pinchgut, Sir, in Placentia Bay on the southwest coast. It is on the very narrow isthmus crossing from Trinity Bay to Placentia Bay. Mr. Speaker, I can travel from Sunnyside which is the end of my district in Trinity South on the northeast coast, to Come-by-Chance in Placentia Bay on the southwest coast in twenty minutes, a distance of approximately three miles.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as an area for fisheries development no district in the whole of Newfoundland, particularly on the northeast coast can challenge Trinity South.

MR. HOLLETT: Hearl Hearl

MR. BUTTON: Now, Sir, I don't know if this is yet the crucial moment or not, but it is a big and a crucial moment in my life. Some of the people in the District of Trinity South have been wondering what Button is doing all the time. Some of them may be disappointed because they did not see me probably too often, although I have a good record for visiting my district. It is as good a record as any honourable member in this House, if not better. During the winter months I was absent from Newfoundland. I visited Boston, New York and Montreal. While there I went into the fishing industry to see what prospects there were in inducing some person to come to the District of Trinity South as a private enterprise, to operate a fresh fish plant. The answer I received was that it might be considered. But, Sir since then I have made contacts here with our Newfoundland firms, and I am happy to say that one of the greatest firms of Newfoundland, one of the greatest and one of the most reliable and respected fishery firms in Newfoundland has decided to erect a fresh fish filleting plant and cold storage plant for blueberries, salmon, squid, herring, lobster and whatever they can take. They have decided with the help of this Government and the approval of the Fishery Development Authority that they would erect a fish plant in Heart's Content. Now, Sir, when I received that answer I can assure you I was a happy man. And I feel sure that the great Liberal Government which I represent will go out hand in hand with me to see that this great firm, one of the greatest in Newfoundland, will be given every consideration that is possible. I feel confident, Sir, that the Premier will be at my back in this respect. Because, Sir, that fish plant, if erected in Heart's Content, which really is in the centre of my district, in a certain aspect will serve the following places: Lead Cove, Sibley's Cove, Browndale, New Melbourne, New Chelsea, Hant's Harbour, Winterton, New Perlican, Heart's Desire, Heart's Delight, Islington, Cavendish, Whiteway and Green's Harbour. Also it will serve all the fishing industries in the southwest arm of Random in the District of the honourable member for Trinity North, Butter Cove, Gooseberry Cove, Southport, St. Jones Within and all the settlements from Random Island where we have one of the greatest herring fisheries in Newfoundland, if we had the proper equipment and the right kind of boats, with echo sounding, etc., which I feel sure will be coming in the near future. It can only come, Sir, through this great Fishery Development Authority. I feel that the people whom I represent will be proud to know that so great a Newfoundlander, so great a fish merchant, as I should say is on Water Street, but is a real fishery merchant, who does not go to the golf course or sit around in lounges, but who is one of the great fish merchants who has spent more money than any Newfoundlander in Newfoundland today on the fisheries is interested.

MR. HOLLETT: Who is he? Is this a guessing contest?

MR. BUTTON: That, sir, is the $64 question. I feel sure the honourable members on the other side will be pleased to know that is my secret. It will be worth more than $64 in the end. This of course has to meet with the approval of the Fisheries Development Authority. It will take time to find a location and for the planning of such a plant. But the reason I say Heart's Content, Sir, for such a plant is this: We have a good government wharf, electricity, plenty of fresh water, and it is open all the year around. Sir, if that were not so the A.N.D. Company would not have been shipping paper from there for quite a number of years, and they should be there today. They would be except they had to please a number of people in St. John's.

I feel sure that Trinity South with its unparalleled resources presents the best case for development of any area on the whole northeast coast of Newfoundland.

MR. HOLLETT: Hear, hear!

MR. BUTTON: Mr. Speaker, Trinity Bay men as a rule fish longer than any other fishermen in Newfoundland—weather permitting, they are always fishing. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the people of St. John's during the months of March and April had the privilege of eating fresh turbot, which to my recollection is the first time in the history of Newfoundland that fresh turbot had been sold here in St. John's in that time of the year. It was all from Trinity Bay.
Sir, as I said a few minutes ago in connection with the honourable member for Placentia West, although he has a few fish plants up there in Placentia West, probably he feels that any further fish plants should be built in Placentia Bay. I feel sometimes that any more fish plants, Sir, which will be built in the next few years in the bottom of Placentia Bay, such as Long Harbour, will have to come to Trinity Bay, for its resources in the supply of fish. I have had great faith, Mr. Speaker, in Trinity South, and in the whole of Trinity Bay, not only Trinity South but Trinity North, and a feeling that it has been neglected all through past governments. I have a feeling that all the resources that are required in Newfoundland are there, especially when it comes to the fishing industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me tell you what I consider to be of fundamental value in this programme of fishery development which is taking place. You and I, Sir, like all Newfoundlanders are home-loving people. I think that I am safe in saying that the very basis of Newfoundland life is the love of our homes and our wives and our children—(your children but not mine, as I have none). The love of places in which we have our roots, the places where our grandfathers and their grandfathers before them lived and raised their families and worked and worshipped. Countless generations of our forebears have passed down to us our way of life which is Newfoundland. You and I, Sir, do not want, if we can help it, to spend six months away from our wives and our children working at Goose Bay, in Greenland, or the air bases or Seven Islands, in order to support our families. We, Sir, should like to work and live in the place where we have our roots and with which we are familiar and with our families and with our children. You know, Sir, Newfoundlanders even today will work, if employment is available at home, for half the wages they receive elsewhere. They will work for just half provided they can go home at night, that they can stay with their families and watch their children growing up. That is the life of a Newfoundlander. That is the life that he requires. We are going to try, Sir, in this Government to give our Newfoundlanders that privilege. We, Sir, are family men. I am not, but probably most of you people here are, and no doubt you love your families. And then Mr. Speaker, this is Newfoundland: Personally I have no patience with people, and with a great many people, who say that Newfoundlanders won't stick to their jobs for more than six months without wanting to go home and see their families. Traditionally, Sir, we Newfoundlanders have been forced to leave our homes and our loved ones to make a living. We have been forced to go away, Sir, for long periods of time. Probably because of this we have learned as a race to work for six months of the year, and spend, Sir, the other six months at home with our families, cutting fuel, mending our fences, repairing and building our homes, and, Sir, enjoying the only true happiness in this six months of the year. Half a lifetime, Mr. Speaker.

MR. HOLLETT: Are you going to have a maypole there?

MR. BUTTON: A maypole is always on the honourable gentleman's mind. If I can live long enough I will arrange, Sir, a maypole for the honourable gentleman.
Mr. Speaker, half a lifetime is spent by our Newfoundlanders away from home in order that they may make a living for their families. This, Sir, we do as a race due to the fact that other countries have developed more industries and industrialized their country. But if we in this Government try to do that, try to industrialize, we are all wrong. But, Sir, I feel sure that after this session is over the honourable members on the opposite side will say: let us industrialize Newfoundland, develop it, modernize it. I think, Sir, that the fundamental benefits to be gained from the Smallwood Government, the great development plan for fisheries is a creation of prosperous fishing communities. As already stated in this House on several occasions by the Honourable the Premier, prosperous fishing communities around the coast of Newfoundland in which our people can live and work throughout the year, in modern communities providing services, education and social amenities such as modern houses and modern working conditions is the answer. Why cannot the fishermen of Newfoundland have their electricity, their hot and cold water the same as the rich man in Newfoundland? Why not have them the same as the rich man in any other country? They are entitled to it more so than anyone because they are the salt of this earth. They will live under those conditions, and as already stated they will have the privileges of living in economic dignity. I am proud, as a member of this Government, to be a part of this great revolutionary programme which is taking place here in this honourable Chamber today and will be for weeks to come. It is one of the greatest programmes that ever Newfoundland will see. It is only because we have had such a man sent to us, as I see it by the will of God, who can put forth such a programme for the God-forsaken people of this country. It is only a man, Sir, who has the interest of the people, of the fishermen, the poorer class in this country, at heart such as the Premier has—I am not giving him a bed of roses, but I have known him for quite a while, and his one and only aim in life is to see that each and every Newfoundland fisherman especially will also have a decent standard of living and live the same as other people in the world today.

HON. DR. H. L. POTTLLE (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Second reading of Bill “An Act to Amend the Provincial Parks Act.”

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the amendment to the Provincial Parks Act has two changes from the parent Act. The first change is that we desire to have Section 4 of the Act changed in such a way that we could bring in under our control these small picnic sites we are establishing around the province in particular. We are trying to have these places, familiar, I think, to every motorist, where we have established a fireplace, cleared around the ground and put a table and a shelter from the rain over the table, and in other ways attempted to provide some amenities for the picnicking and travelling motoring public, and at the same time help in the prevention of fires which might originate from picknickers or camp fires. Now the wording then is changed to bring in recreational and picnicking sites. In other words technically these will become provincial parks. It is not intended to call them by that name, but technically, and it thereby gives us authority to control and otherwise look after these sites.

The other amendment is that we are able to appoint officers who may look after more than one park. The original Act makes it appear that we had the authority to appoint officers for each park. I presume what was in the mind of the framers of this Act, which was before my time, was that we would have very large provincial parks, as we undoubtedly shall, parks like the Big Falls Area and others, and that we would need at least one person for those parks, caretakers or something similar. However by bringing these smaller sites under our control and authority we do not want to be in a position where we must appoint one person to look after each one of the smaller sites. So that the section is being re-worded so we could have one person, for example, responsible for the five, six or seven picnic sites on the Avalon Peninsula.

These are the two changes, Mr. Speaker, and I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I am in favour, as I think we all are in favour of this. I was about to ask the Honourable Minister if he could tell us just how many provincial parks exist at the present time in Newfoundland? I take it, it is the policy of the Government to try and create others. But if he would enumerate them? I think the amendment is very useful and I support it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister tell us, I wonder, how many of these sites exist along the roads on the Avalon Peninsula. I don’t remember seeing any except on the road near Brigus. Are there some on the Salmonier Line and on the road down through St. Mary’s Bay and Placentia Bay? There is not very much I want to say. Certainly there is no reason to make any opposition to this Bill which seems to me to be necessary and desirable. But I don’t know if there are very many of them. In fact I don’t know of any provincial park. I think the idea is to call these location parks in order to give the officials powers of administering them. In replying perhaps the Honourable Minister could give us some idea as to what he has in mind as to just what the jurisdiction will be.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, I have just realized that I think it is time to state that this whole parks programme for the province is one in which we visualize something like three different categories. First of all we visualize the large, real provincial park, a park which deserves the name of "Provincial Park." I presume the first one in that category will be the Humber Area, which, as this House probably knows, was passed back to the Crown by Bowaters in this past year. I feel safe in saying that will become in the near future a provincial park by proclamation. In time there will no doubt be several such area parks which will comprise several square miles in area, of outstanding natural attractions, and of a kind similar to what we have in the Big Falls.

Secondly, we hope in time, but this has not been gone into very thoroughly as yet, we hope to have a second category which will enable us to give some attention to other attractive sites around the province, nothing so ambitious as provincial parks in the Big Falls category, but smaller sites which might very well be given proper attention; a theoretical case would be Belleview Sands in Trinity Bay. I say that is only a theoretical example. I believe that area anyway is owned privately—or say, Jean de Bay down in Placentia Bay or one or two places down on the Southern Shore, a smaller site which would be an attraction, and would accommodate, say, a hundred cars.

The third category is the one for which this amendment is principally designed, small picnic sites which on Sundays, holidays or any time in the summertime look after three or four cars. As a very good example there is that one at Seal Cove River, which I feel sure every member of the House has seen when going out of town. There are others, also. Now one of the honourable members opposite asked me just how many there are of those. Actually I am surprised that he has not seen more of them, not that I have seen too many myself. Right now there are upwards of one hundred of those in the province. During the slack season of the year (I am giving this information but I am not sure it is required) we have had some of our forest fire patrolmen do work of that kind, making tables and making these fire places. This past year I submitted a plan to the Government which was approved last fall, whereby we would go into that more extensively, because we felt it was both necessary for the public and was at the same time doing a great deal to prevent the spread of fires originating from that source. So we had these men during the slack season at work making these tables, etc. We have at the present time at Whitbourne a large number, upward of one hundred of these fire places and tables which are right now being shipped to various parts of the east coast. I mention the east coast because apart from the fact that a great bulk of our population is concentrated on Avalon there is also this fact which might be overlooked at times, the interior and the west part of Newfoundland is under the control, from the standpoint of forest fire protection, of the Forest Fire Association of Newfoundland, and that organization has been doing a similar work in the interior of the West Coast. I saw some of these myself last year as I motored from Grand Falls down to Corner Brook. In fact they are more elaborate in certain ways than the ones we are supplying here. Incidentally we have only recently announced where these locations would be. Just as an example, there are four between the Goulds and Ferryland and there is quite a number of them on the Hodgewater Line. We are putting a few out on the road leading across the Heart's Content barrens. On the Salmonier Line there are quite a number, seven or eight, I believe. And there are quite a number on the road from Whitbourne out towards Clarenville, and some six, seven or eight between Clarenville and Bonavista.

I think I have answered the questions of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition. If I have not I shall be glad to answer them in committee.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I move that all further Orders of the Day do stand deferred. And I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Friday, at 8:00 of the clock.
May 14th, 1952.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already informed the House that this forenoon the Honourable the Attorney General acting on behalf of the Government instituted further legal proceedings or instituted legal proceedings against Dr. Alfred Valdmanis for the recovery of the sum of two hundred and seventy thousand dollars, an amount that is alleged was collected by Dr. Valdmanis from the German manufacturing concern known as MIAG in connection with the contract that that firm had in the building of the cement plant at Corner Brook.

Mr. Speaker, so that the House will understand thoroughly what I have said, may I say briefly again what I have said: I have already informed this House of the arrest of Dr. Alfred Valdmanis and of the charges made against him by me personally. I have now to inform the House that this forenoon the Honourable the Attorney General acting on behalf of the Government, instituted civil proceedings against Dr. Valdmanis for the recovery of an amount of two hundred and seventy thousand dollars, which amount is alleged to have been collected by Dr. Valdmanis from the German firm known as MIAG in connection with the contract that that firm had in the building of the cement plant at Corner Brook.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, before we enter upon the Orders of the Day, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the fact that this afternoon my colleague the Premier, and the Leader of the House will be proceeding to British Columbia. Dr. Smallwood is going to British Columbia to receive from that university a doctor's degree. The University of British Columbia will be the second of our Canadian Universities to so honour our Premier.

We always think in the most kindly way, Mr. Speaker, of British Columbia and of everything from British Columbia. We have, as the House knows, not only the clerk's table but that beautiful mace which was the gift of that province to us when we entered union. I think that I am voicing the feelings of the House when I say of our Premier that he has our sincere congratulations that he is thus being honoured by this university. I understand there are only two persons being so honoured at that convocation, the Governor General of Canada and our own Premier. I am quite sure we will all unite in wishing him a happy landing, a very pleasant visit and a safe return as Dr. Smallwood or Dr. Dr. Smallwood, as they call men in Europe when they have their second degree. I hope he will return having enjoyed some rest. I may say that while he is in British Columbia our Premier is to address a huge gathering. So many individual clubs had asked him to speak that it was manifestly impossible for him to address them all individually, so that I understand they have all agreed to get together and have one joint gathering. We know that on that occasion, as on all others the Premier will do himself and the province he represents honour.
MR. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for our part on this side of the House, at the present time I rise to express to the Honourable the Premier our hearty congratulations on this new honour which is to be conferred upon him. We do hope that he will have a pleasant voyage both going and coming. When he comes back a double-barrel doctor; Doctor, Doctor as the Attorney General says, we shall still be able to call him "Joe" outside the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And inside?

MR. HOLLETT: We will be able to call him more than that inside the House. Outside we all have that privilege, I think. I don't mind how many doctors you confer upon him, I don't think you can take away that right. I am quite sure the Honourable the Premier will be the first to admit that the honour being conferred upon him is definitely a mark of honour and respect from the far western province to the far eastern province. In that light as well as being an honour to the Premier I am quite sure we are all grateful to the Province of British Columbia for this honour upon the Newfoundland Premier.

We do hope, sir, when he comes back that the Doctor Doctor will be in good fighting trim. We are sorry that he has intimated to us that he has more or less almost reached the end of his political life and is thinking of retirement. We hope that when he comes back, Sir, he will have renewed strength and energy politically, and probably be prepared to remain with us in this House for some considerable while longer. I am sure, Sir, we all join with the Government in wishing him God speed.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I am deeply grateful for the very kind way in which the Honourable the Attorney General and the Honourable Leader of the Opposition have referred to this incident, and to the honourable members of the House for the very kind way in which they have received these remarks. I appreciate that very deeply. I realize very vividly that this is a distinction which is being conferred upon the people and province of Newfoundland. They cannot, I suppose, offer an honorary doctorate of law to every Newfoundlander or even to every member of this House. That would have the tendency of cheapening the distinction somewhat. So that they select one person as the recipient, and when he receives it, I think, it is intended to be an indication of the regard of that province for the people and particularly the Legislature of this province.

I had a note passed to me while the Honourable Leader of the Opposition was speaking. It was passed to me by the Honourable Minister of Finance, giving me a piece of sound advice which I intend to follow. He said to be sure to get myself a new suit of clothes. I promise that if I don't get a new suit I will at least have this one pressed. I will try to uphold Newfoundland's good name by looking as tidy as possible on that occasion.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, if I may refer back to a statement of the Honourable the Premier on opening of the House, I wonder if the Premier or the Attorney General could enlighten me on this matter of a civil action against Dr. Alfred Valdmanis. It appears that this money, which the doctor is supposed to have absconded came from MIAG. I take it then the action might very well be a civil action taken by MIAG and not by the Attorney General. I wonder if that might not be explained. Apparently the money has not been taken from the Newfoundland Government. Therefore, I can not see why the Attorney General is mixed up in it. Probably that can be explained, Mr. Speaker.

MR. CURTIS: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that we have looked into the matter of the law and my department is satisfied that under the circumstances of this case the amount in question is due not to MIAG but to the Government of Newfoundland. I might say also, in ratification of what the Honourable the Premier said earlier, this two hundred and seventy thousand dollars does not of course cover the entire amount involved in the Valdmanis charges, and that it is quite likely subsequent proceedings will follow.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Notice of Motion
None.

Notice of Question
(87) MR. BROWNE (St. John's West): To ask the Honourable the Attorney General to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. How many prosecutions for the sale or distribution of salacious or indecent literature have been taken in Newfoundland during the past two years?

2. Give the dates when such prosecutions were held together with the names of the defendants and the results of each case, if any.

Answers to Questions

Question No. 87:

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker in connection with question No. 87 asked by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, on today's Order Paper, the answer handed to me by the Treasury is as follows:

(1), (2) and (3). The documents requested by the Hon. Member are available in the Department of Finance in microfilmed and original form. in respect of the period from 1st December, 1950, to date. They are now being gathered together and may, in due course, be examined at that Department during normal working hours. The Department will inform the Hon. Member when all relevant items have been assembled.

(4) The statement requested by the Hon. Member is now being prepared but it should be noted that its preparation may take some time. For the period 1st April, 1949 to 30th November, 1950 (i.e. prior to the setting up of the Government's central accounting system), the required information is available only from the various Departments. For the period 1st December, 1950, to 31st March, 1952, it will be necessary to check a large number of Vote Ledger Cards in order to extract therefrom references to payments to W. J. Lundrigan, Ltd. From 1st April, 1952, the information is more or less readily available.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable the Premier would allow me to ask a question in regard to this microfilm. We have seen some up there. It is not much avail to see them on the screen unless we can take a copy of them. Is it possible to take a copy without infringing on anybody's rights?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Of course. I would say that when the microfilms are thrown open to any member of this House that carries with it the right, surely, to copy it. Obviously if he were shown the originals he would have a right to copy them and similarly a right to copy the microfilms.

Question No. 85:

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is that the documents requested are now being gathered together in the Department of Finance and may in due course be viewed at that department during normal working hours. The department will inform the honourable member when the required items are assembled. So that the honourable and learned gentleman will hear directly from the Treasury when they have them all there and available for him.

Question No. 86:

MR. SMALLWOOD: I found a note on my desk, left there by somebody, to the effect that the reply to this question is being brought along to the House by the Honourable Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply. If it might stand over until we have a chance to confer in the matter.

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): The answer to that question is being prepared, Mr. Speaker.

Orders of the Day

Second Reading of Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority:"—adjourned debate. against dollars. There is no necessary conflict nor incompatibility between the two. There is no reason why dollars and people should not go along together. My purpose is to stress the human aspect of this all important bill. My conviction is, and has been expressed on other public occasions, that magnificent as these plans are, and as vital as the fisheries development is to Newfoundland, nevertheless, all these plans might very well be frustrated or at least hampered if the fishermen themselves, if our people themselves, do not support, cooperate with, and throw themselves into the spirit which is written into the letter and purpose of this bill. I doubt whether I can impress the House as deeply as I feel it myself that there we have something which is very vital in this bill, i.e., as I see it, the principle of the bill is not least of all in announcing a basic change in the operations of our fisheries, not least of all in so doing to foreshadow a change which must come about in the attitudes of our people.

If there has been anything approaching a revolution in the clauses of this bill, the revolution is connected with not only a change in the operations of the industry, I say, but the revolution is involved again in the change of attitudes in the people. That is what I wish to consider for a few minutes this afternoon, Sir, something of these social considerations which were felt to be important enough away back in 1951 to be a relevant, integral part of the terms of reference of the committee then even before they went to work. For here, Sir we are now about to express in law our convictions that there must be a change in the attitude from individualism to a more corporate shared responsibility in the vital business that Newfoundland has to do, or one of the vital businesses, that is fisheries. You see, Sir, we have been individualistic, and we have boasted about it, and rightly so. We have not only been individualistic with all the good things that individualism can bring, but we have even been ruggedly individualistic. At least we have characterized ourselves as ruggedly individualistic, and it has been considered part and parcel of our good way of living to be paddling our own canoe. These little black fishing boats which we find plying our waters all day and late at night over our stormy bays, as gallant in their own way as the little boats of Britain, these little black boats with their one man or two men or three men have been, over the years, Sir, symbols of our will to go it alone all down through the stormy course of our generations. I speak from first-hand experience, Sir, because before my parents made up their minds that there should be a book rather than a codfish in my hand, I had taken a very direct part as a boy in the fishing business over across Conception Bay. I knew what it was at nine years of age to be rounding the corner of a trap and trying to lift up the leads so that we could draw it up, with a southeast lop coming out of Carboncar Harbour. I was under the doctor's care for a number of years as the result of a sprained back. I say that to indicate that we are talking here about something which is not academic, something which has to do with the life-blood of people as people. I know that our work as fishermen was an individual piece of work. Every fisherman that I know marked his gear. It was his gear. His mark was on the ledge, the place where he moored his little boat. It was his ledge in the cliff. It was his little skiff in its own appointed place, his property, Sir, in a sense as sacred and individual as the family plot in the cemetery, and just as inalienable. Those old methods of going it alone helped to introduce the attitude which was so widespread—every man for himself. Indeed the motto of one of the great fishing organizations, the historic "FPU", was "To Every Man His Own." Now, Sir, there was much desirable about that tenacious, dogged individualism. But it also carried with it liabilities. Going it alone might have had some relevance for the generations past in the simplest life, but new occasions demand new attitudes, and I am saying now, as a word of caution, that we must very well reckon with what we are up against in trying to implement legislation so vital, so basic as this, when one of the features of its success will be whether the people will be with it or against it. Because the attitude of one man, especially if he be a sea-lawyer in any small community can defeat or help to defeat the vital purpose of this bill. So that I say, Sir, the human factor is not least of all, though subtle, though intangible, is yet a relevant part of the operation of this Bill as a part of our future way of life.

I say the human factor is vital. Sometimes it might rest with the fisherman himself or the fishermen in a community as to where a fish plant or any concentrated operation will go ahead there and go ahead successfully. Sometimes it might rest with the merchant or the plant owner as to how he gets in there, so to speak, as to how he impinges upon the people, especially if he comes from the outside. Sometimes this human factor will be a very important business for the Fisheries Development Authority itself; and it is not a matter for criticism that they should have sufficient staff. It would be a matter for great lamentation if they had no adequate staff. The danger is that they might become a disconcentrated corporation here in St. John’s with no liaison out there in the communities. It is going to be a very important consideration, Sir, that the Fishery Authority here in St. John’s be not identified with St. John’s as such but rather that they use every means to keep in touch with the fishermen and to learn their ways and to adopt their methods to every particular place where an operation of any account is to go ahead.

So, Sir, I think, with those things in mind, although it comes late in the terms of reference it is not less relevant than the first. Social considerations are very vital, because, as I say, these may make or break very largely the whole programme. What I have been saying is that here we are confronted with not only dollars and what dollars can do but confronted also with what men can do or will not do. It is a change of attitude we are concerned with here from that way to this way. I am suggesting now, Sir, as a word of caution, in as much as I think I know something of the working of men's minds, that here we should not expect too ready a responsibility, too ready a universal responsibility. It may be a case even right here where vital matters affecting people are involved. Nevertheless, although their livelihood depends on it, even here we may have to exercise patience. For instance, may I give three or four examples? In the carrying out of the committee's report and the implementation of this bill in some places there will be required a great centralization of population. That is to say that places may have to be moved. I will not say wiped out as that is not the proper way to express it, but they may in the course of time disappear. Now any administration which has had anything to do with moving people in the past (I think of the experience of the Commission of Government) or of having people moved, some of their experiences have been unfortunate because they have not taken into consideration the present life habits of people. Many people for instance were moved from St. John's out to Markland only to find themselves back in the same streets a few years later, because of factors, because of life habits, which we in this House know so well. They were transplanted from their roots. I believe it was done possibly without too much consideration for their habits or for their way of life. We know what happened. So that I say just the process of being moved, even if it is to earn their own living away from their own roots, even from the rootless rocks, is going to be an experience, surely, which will not be without a shock. For they have hung on tenaciously to these rocks over the years, and they are part and parcel of their way of life. Even if they go out like Abraham, not knowing where they go, but hoping to some more promised land, nevertheless the moving itself, the way they will do it, how it will be done, will be just as important as having it done at all. That is a social consideration.

This legislation, Sir, has a great deal to say in the latter part about expropriation. From Clause 27 on almost to the end of the Bill, for pages, they are seeking here powers of expropriation of people's property. It is going to be expropriation, possibly, of ordinary fishermen's property. Now what I have just said about the barren rock applies here. Property may have to be expropriated, holdings of property by people over the generations with or without title or deeds. It is theirs. How that is done will be a very important consideration. There are places where in some cases it will be necessary to set up a local organization, in order that there might be some local authority, some little group that the Authority here in St. John's can work through rather than through individual fishermen, fifty or a hundred of them. Some of our communities have not found it easy going to develop local organizations, for one reason or another. Yet, it will be very important that there will be some conscious sign that people accept self-responsibility if this Bill is to have a good effect in some communities. That is another social consideration.

In the fourth place there is the matter of adult education. I could make all my remarks, Sir, this afternoon, if I had the time, to what I have in mind now, adult education: And there is certainly a large place provided for adult education in the fisheries development committee's report. I have not in mind just a matter of "A", "B", "C", I have not in mind just the matter of learning to read and write; I have not in mind a matter of office of a government at St. John's. What I have in mind is something far more lively, far more dynamic, far more at the cross-roads than that, Sir. What I have in mind is the unfortunate picture over the years of communities going on, going on and going on without any too great positive attempt on the part of the communities themselves to take part in their own rehabilitation. It was not so in Britain. There the workers had educational associations. How is it that the ordinary labourer in Britain is so informed about a wide variety of topics? Why is the labour situation in Britain more contained and more civilized probably than in any other part of the world? Why are the people so politically well educated? It is largely through the educational classes, educated classes of people giving their leadership voluntarily in the communities, teaching the people through debates and through discussion and through cultural associations of various kinds. But there has been a vast vacuum in Newfoundland, and too often there has been a despairing, disappointing picture of leaders, so called, living in communities who over the years have not done all they should as leaders, to come out of their shells, so to speak, and give voluntary leadership for the general lifting up of the people's basic education. Because we have not had that kind of thing going on in Newfoundland I think we have missed out a great deal, so that there is a yawning gulf between the learned, so called, and the unlearned. When we think of education we think of going to college or going to a university. It should not be so, Sir, and it should not be a matter to be turned back on the government as another government responsibility. I give a word to Newfoundland; as I see it this afternoon there is a compelling, there is a very urgent, responsibility which exists now as it has done all down through the years, and not less so now, because the opportunity and because the need are so great, I say, there is a great opportunity now, late as it is, for the local communities to harness whatever power they can to help our people see what adult responsibilities are in the present day.

As I see it, Sir, there is an increasing proportion of our people, not equipped to take adult responsibility. It is a complaint that I will apply to a wider variety of areas than Newfoundland. It is, I think, unfortunate that so great a proportion and possibly an increasing proportion of adult people are coming to adulthood without having the proper equipment for adult living, and can't help falling a prey to pressure groups, as they are not able to take full adult responsibility as they should. I don't see anything that can guarantee much more the solidity and the strength of democracy than that the ordinary man should be respected enough that the leaders in our community, or the businessmen as the case may be, might take a full share of their responsibility in sharing their experiences with their fellowmen. So that I say: In Newfoundland at this moment I would rank pretty close to the front, as one of our vital needs the need for a dynamic and local level adult education. The irony of the situation is that here is something that will affect the livelihood of so many thousands of our people, and from the point of view of adult responsibility we are not ready for it. That is another social consideration, Sir.

Now I come to develop another point, and it has to do generally with adult attitude, especially our fishermen's attitude toward fish as such. I say, Sir, that over the years (and when I say it as one who comes from a fishing family, and know it at first hand) our fishermen have not for one reason or another looked upon fish as essentially an article of food. The tendency has been for them to look upon fish as something to be sold. I recall as a boy when the famous Coaker Regulations were promulgated in Newfoundland. I did not know their significance then, and probably I did not calculate them all right nor may not even yet, but I believe they were very significant. I think that basically they were a good thing. But I can recall, Sir, as these regulations became known, one of them which was that we should clean the napes and fins of the black film. Well I remember two crews working side by side on the same landing heaving up their fish on the same gallery. One crew was an F.P.U. follower and worked assiduously to clean the fish of all the black film. The one that was not a Coaker crew took no pains at all. I happened to know because my people were one of the crews. Now, here is an important feature of this Bill, Sir, that a basic change is suggested here with regard to the catching and curing of fish, namely that in this Bill it is indicated that if these plans go through the catcher will not necessarily be the curer. There is no ritual, there is nothing in the reality of things that says that the fishermen who catch fish should be also the person who cures it. I have said on other occasions what must be obvious to anybody who sees what goes on in July in the fishing centres, when you find fishermen agog, excited, especially when the fish are close to the rocks, and the little traps and big traps are catching them in great quantities and bringing them ashore. They are lively and enthusiastic and good to talk to. But when August comes and the stores are filled with salt bulk fish—now they must think of washing it out and going through all the different processes indicated. Hear and see them in the middle of August and see if they are lively, optimistic and cheerful and aggressive looking people. Now they must sit around and watch the face of the sky. Newfoundlanders, Sir, are famous for and part of our tradition in looking at the sky. When I went to Toronto as a student and began to talk to people about what a fine day this is, they did not know what I was talking about. But for our fishermen it is a part of their way of life to be looking at the weather. From August to October and sometimes until the snow comes they are there waiting to complete the job started in July. The old tradition was that fish killers were to be fish curers. But there is nothing, I say, which says that must be so.

As a matter of fact the people who catch and process the most fish must be, other things being equal, less careful because they have not the time to cure the fish. I have seen fish on the culling board at the merchants, the fish of the fish-killers, not nearly as good in quality as the fish of the little trawlers who had possibly only ten or fifteen or twenty quintals to sell. So I say, Sir, here we are faced with this question of trying to change the attitude of our people now with regard to this factor of regarding fish as what it is, genuinely, an article of food. This bill, I repeat, foreshadows a new condition of things where fishermen will be released from the business of curing very largely and set apart for what they are best fitted to do, i.e., to catch fish. I would suggest that possibly one of the ways to dramatize this bill would be for the Fisheries Development Authority to set up a system of films whereby it could be shown to our people just how much they are part and parcel of a very human thing, to help feed people in other parts of the world, especially now when standards of living have risen to that point at which people are very, very particular as to what they eat and how it is to be eaten.

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if I could ask the honourable minister a question? If people are confined to catching fish they will have to catch very much more to make as much money as they do now when they make it themselves.

DR. POTTLE: I am not suggesting, Sir, that they will live completely on what they catch any more than they are doing now. It is not foreshadowed that people will be able to live for twelve months.

MR. BROWNE: I don't know what is foreshadowed but they will not be able to live for twelve months or three months' work.

DR. POTTLE: I come now, Sir, to say a few words particularly about the Bay de Verde area; I have been gratified since this discussion began that Bay de Verde is included within the northeast coast for the purpose of fisheries development. I want to say a few words about that district, Sir, insofar as my remarks pertain to fishery development. I represent that district, which is a dual district, the District of Carbonear and the old District of Bay de Verde. Anyone who has watched the development of the trend of population in that area for the past twenty years or so will see what is happening. At the Carbonear end the population has increased until now Carbonear is one of the very largest towns in Newfoundland, comparing favourably with the very largest areas of specialized industries from the standpoint of population. With the two local industries which are there, Saunders and Howell and W. J. Moores, together with the other new industries which we hope will get on their feet solidly before very long, it should continue to be a quite prosperous town. Many people are moving in there from the shore, and I think the prospects of Carbonear are very bright. As you move down the shore the population thins very considerably, and as you go farther north, as the case may be, from Freshwater—(Freshwater was an area which many years ago contributed at least as many people as professionals as probably any other place its size in Newfoundland. The same holds true for the Blackhead area which is sprinkled with names which have adorned many of the professions or most of them)—today it is a series of little, practically deserted villages. In Northern Bay and Gull Island people have deserted the fishery just the same, until now they depend mostly upon Goose Bay, Seven Islands or Gander or other places of concentrated employment. As you look down the shore in the middle of July you will find it practically deserted of boats, while fifteen years ago it was lined with heavy engined boats and small boats as well. For many miles down that shore now, Sir, there is not a boat to be seen even in the prime of the summer season. I have had more than one man in my office looking for work last summer, who the year before had three traps in the water.

When you came to Bay de Verde area there is another trend that is again towards concentration of population. That is an area where the people have stayed put, so to speak, for a number of reasons. They are in the great majority, part of the traditional stock of fishermen in Newfoundland. Within recent years around the Old Perlican, Grate’s Cove, Red Head Cove, Daniel’s Cove, Bay de Verde area shore facilities have been improved, such as breakwaters, large and small; and not least of all there is this reliable factor that there is a body of fish continually around these shores, so that probably nine seasons out of ten there are a lot of fish to be caught. Not least of all, Sir, and again I say: one solid fact is that you have fishermen there who are as devoted to the fishing industry as you will find in most parts of Newfoundland. They will remain there, Sir, by choice, even though they do not enjoy as high a standard of living as they themselves would like or their friends would wish for them. They are referred to on page 266 of the Fishery Development Committee’s Report.

"Nor is the problem met capable of ready solution by allowing the exodus to continue. Many, particularly married people, have their roots firmly in the settlements which have for years been established along the coast and on the islands nearby. They have not the skills to procure employment in other industries, if avenues of employment were open, and they have not the means to move with their equipment to other parts of the coast to engage in the fishery near processing plants."

These remarks, sir, apply very directly and relevantly to the people of the Bay de Verde area. The fishery development report indicates that there will be various kinds of organization set in motion to carry out the processing of fish and modernization of the fishing industry. In some places, I say, there will be large scale centralization. But that is not all. In some cases centralization will not apply and cannot be carried out. There are provisions made, therefore, for a sort of intermediate development, and that is spoken of in the report I have just referred to. I may quote here:

"There are a few large settlements along the coast which have limited waterfront facilities and have been established in coves or small harbours against a background of high rocks limiting expansion and making the provision of roads, water and sewerage and other services difficult and costly."

The words I have just read describe Bay de Verde very exactly. There we have a large fish producing centre with a history of continuous success.

"These settlements are unsuitable for establishment of large plants for centralization of the operations and of the population of an area, yet their production of fish is such that abandonment of homes and premises and resettlement of the people in other areas is most unlikely."

The Fishery Development Committee recognized this factor that there are people in certain communities who are going to stay there. On paper worth while as it might seem, almost essential as it might seem to move these people out, nevertheless you have one stubborn social factor, (and it is about social factors I am talking this afternoon, Sir) you have one stubborn social factor, and that is that these people are going to stay there with their children.

"In some of these settlements the precipitous approach to the sea and the limited extent of the waterfront has caused crowding. There is inadequate space for sun-drying and the fishing premises are in a most unsatisfactory condition. The Committee considers that the remedy in these cases lies in a scheme for centralization of operations on a scale between that for a large area development and that for minor centralizations."

Well, sir, I am glad to say that the report of that Fisheries Development Committee has not fallen on deaf ears as far as Bay de Verde is concerned, and that it has been included within the overall plan of development.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I interrupt to ask a question? Is it not a fact that there is a fish plant of some sort in Bay de Verde at the moment.

DR. POTTLE: Yes, Mr. Moores operates one there on a limited scale for just freezing. I am glad to give here now certain details of what the Government has approved funds for, which of course will have to be voted by this House. If it passes this House in the course of time, I am told, there will be two block freezers at Bay de Verde, a filleting machine and other equipment necessary for a complete block freezing filleting operation.

I should like the radio stations, if they will, to take note of what I am saying for the people of Bay de Verde, and if I may say so, for the DOSCO News, or, as the people out there call it "The Gospel News," because that is the only way at this time of the year for me to get to the places there what I should like to say, not only by way of an announcement but by way of other things I want to say in a few moments.

The plan of operation there is intended to cover five months at least, from June to October inclusive, and at a production rate of two hundred and forty dry quintals a day, or processing equivalent to two hundred and forty dry quintals a day during these five months. The two block freezers capacity will take in nearly twenty-four thousand quintals. These figures show that, except for the trap fishery, the proposed plant will permit a large increase in the fishery during the season, because at the present time it is estimated that in the classes represented by this operation in Bay de Verde, Red Head Cove, Lead Cove and places alongside production is under fifteen thousand. So that it will be an increase from fifteen thousand to nearly twenty-four thousand.

Now the Federal Department of Public Works will be making necessary repairs to the breakwater, and I understand the work will begin there on the 1st of June. That will require probably four months to complete. The site of the plant will most likely be at the base of the breakwater which runs out obliquely from the shore.

Now one feature about Bay de Verde, Sir, is the congestion of the people in that settlement. There has been a considerable increase in population over the years, but the possibility of manoeuvring there is very small so that the people had to centrate and build their houses very close to one another. Now how the plant will be placed there, how one can manoeuvre towards the plant by proper roads and with plenty of room to manoeuvre around the plant site itself will be a question that will call for consideration as far as getting the necessary property is concerned.

Now least of all there will be concern also for a fresh water supply for the plant. I have on another occasion expressed to this House my very great concern about the most undesirable water supply which is endured by the population of Bay de Verde. I understand there is probably but one other area in Newfoundland where anything like it exists. But I am quite sure the majority of this House do not appreciate the distressing and very unfortunate conditions which exist at Bay de Verde with regard to the supply of water. The people there are as impressed with it and are as worried over it as anybody else. Now for this plant to operate there it will be necessary to supply fresh water. That will bring up the whole question of the problem of the inadequate supply for the place as a whole.

I want to say these few things before I close:

I had hoped that as these plans developed, the people of Bay de Verde and the section around that area will give every co-operation they can towards the carrying into effect of whatever plans may be adopted there for the development of the fisheries. An opportunity has come to that important area of the North Shore of Conception Bay which even the most hopeful of them even might not have anticipated even five years ago but is now in the making. I repeat: I hope that in every individual and organized way, whether it be a responsibility for the community or any section of the community, I hope that whoever's responsibility it is, that as individuals and as a community they will give every degree of co-operation and lean over backwards, if necessary, in order to insure that one chance they have of enlivening their prospects of getting a livelihood from the fisheries and in order that this prospect will not fail. In the second place I would hope that the enterpriser, the operator, the entrepreneur who goes in there, whoever he might be, will adapt himself and will deal in a human, kindly, business-like way with these people.

Prime Minister Nehru at Bombay told us when speaking with a group of us a few years ago that if you want to know the Indian you must approach him gently and kindly. (He did not mean the North American Indian. He meant the civilized Indian of India). There is a way of approaching our Newfoundland people whereby we can bring the best out in them. I hope that whoever undertakes this business there will elicit from our good, kindly, people only the best that they can give in co-operation and in any other way. If I may say so, I am sure I echo the thoughts of my colleague in fisheries when I say that I hope that his and our responsible body, the Fisheries Development Authority, will likewise do all they can to accept the local needs, the local conditions in the local field, their social considerations, so that one link in the chain won't break, the chance that the people will be lead through the Fisheries Development Authority itself to get the most out of this plan that can be gotten. I hope, too, that whatever development there be they will develop in such a way that those people now who have already invested a good deal over there (I could name the firms) will be able to continue so that the investment they have made there over the years will not be jeopardized in any way.

Sir, these are part of my simple views, these social matters, and I undertook to explain them in this way because I thought it might be quite proper while we are thinking of dollars and cents not to forget that a vital feature of this legislation is that it affects people, and people can frustrate or they can expedite, they can help it or they can hinder it, they can make it good or make it sour as the case may be. That was certainly in the minds of the Fisheries Development Committee when they said: In the view of the Committee the most important section of the industry is comprised of the thousands of individual fishermen engaged in catching, and curing fish.

The plea I am making this afternoon is that they are the cornerstone of all this. Not only are they the receivers in many respects but they are the givers. They have a contribution to make in their own right which no man can substitute for, no man can take away, and no man can surplant.

My last illustration takes me back to India again. When we were there a five-year plan for India was discussed in the House of all the people, the central parliament at Delhi. Around far and near there was widespread hunger, and there still is desolation, destitution, diseases, pestilence that we shall never know, pray God, in the Western Hemisphere, and there was a five-year plan that had developed over the years. It took a long time to develop it. It was not done overnight. Even while people were dying like animals there, the parliamentarians were studying what to do just the same as Britain studied what to do when the blitz was on as to how social security might be developed for Britain. So in India the chief factor is time. In a letter from the High Commissioner of India to Canada some months ago he said: It is a question of time whether India can hold out until the results of the five-year plan get working. That also is the question in my mind, Sir. Good as this thing is, vital as it is for Newfoundland, has it come time enough? Or rather will the people hold on there? Will the people still remain fishing until the returns that should ensue from this Bill will be seen out there, until something develops and happens out there that they can see with their own eyes and that it is not just a promise? Time is the essence of the matter. It could be, Sir, that vital as this is it might be a matter of too little and too late. The Government have seen to it, after study and careful thought that our resources that we shall apply will not be too little whether they are applied this year or in the years to follow. We have tried to see to it in collaboration with the Federal Government, we have started to see to it at any rate, that the resources we shall apply to the great problem facing Newfoundland shall not be too little. It is very largely now up to the people themselves to see to it that it is also not too late.

House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. G. NORMAN: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the present bill before the House I am placed in a rather embarrassing position having to follow the Honourable Minister of Welfare and to speak after his having delivered such an able address, and again after hearing so much about the North East Coast, Trinity Bay and Conception Bay and Bay de Verde. I was wondering if the district of Burgeo and Lapoile was still a district of the province.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, every district cannot be looked after at one time, and I am sure that they will be all taken care of in the not too distant future. Newfoundland has been a province of Canada for just five years, and the present government has been in power from that day to this. They have introduced some pretty remarkable legislation in that period of time. In fact, from what I have heard and read, they have introduced more good legislation into this House in the past five years than any other government ever did since we got representative government back in 1832. I do not hesitate, however, to say that this present legislation is the biggest for this first five years of Confederation, and I doubt whether there can be any thing else so big in the next five.

I have been in this House for the past three sessions, and I have spoken at least once in every session. Anytime I have spoken the fishery has been the main topic of my remarks. I have lost no opportunity to discuss the fishery in this House. I regard it as a great honour and a great privilege to have the opportunity to take part in this great debate on a great subject.

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Premier passed some remarks about the conditions of our fishermen and their families in the past. I knew about the conditions of some of our fishermen and families during the past, through no fault of their own, probably the least said the better. I have travelled along every coast and in all the districts in this country including Labrador in schooner and steamer. As a purser and wireless operator on the coastal boats I have travelled the Southwest Coast, the West Coast, Notre Dame Bay, Green Bay, Bonavista Bay, Trinity Bay and Conception Bay. I have heard some fishermen say it was better they were never born, because conditions were so bad at the time. One only has to consider the circumstances and conditions of our men, women and children and to travel to the Labrador on our coastal steamers and schooners. However, let us forget that—the past—and try and think of changes and improvement of conditions for the future.

I have heard some honourable gentlemen say that some of the best fishermen were in their districts. I would say, we have good, hardworking fishermen in all our districts. I have travelled in all of them and know the fishermen. I would not single out any district in the country for all I think the fishermen of the District of Burgeo and Lapoile go through the same hardship in frost and stormy weather as any district in the country.

MR. HOLLETT: More.

MR. NORMAN: The Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives introduced this bill into the House with a speech which was a solid pleasure to hear. The honourable minister always speaks well, and it is always a great satisfaction to listen to him. He excelled himself in the speech he made when he introduced this present bill. The Honourable the Premier also excelled himself. For five days he spoke on this great topic of fisheries development, and every day he had a fresh, new approach to it. I think it was very easy for every member of this House to see his earnestness and sincerity. I don't think there was much doubt as to the deep interest he has in the topic. The Premier has travelled throughout this Province, to all parts of it. He knows Newfoundland almost like the palm of his hand. That is why he realizes so clearly the wonderful importance of fishery development.

Every single settlement in my district, with the exception of Channel and Port aux Basques, is a fishing settlement, and not only a fishing settlement but exclusively a fishing settlement. You can travel along scores and hundreds of miles of the coast of the Burgeo-LaPoule District and see nothing at all except fishing settlements. Practically every man you see is a fisherman. If by chance you meet up with a man who is not a fisherman now, ten chances to one, he was a fisherman last year or the year before. The district that I have the honour to represent, in this House is a fishing district, first, last, and always. If the fisheries die my district would die. When the fishery goes down my district goes down. When the fishery goes up my district goes up. I said a moment ago that every settlement in my district is a fishing settlement with the exception of Channel and Port aux Basques. That is true, although Channel and Port aux Basques are no longer what is called a big or important fishing centre, fishing is not something that is unknown to us there. In the quarter of a century I have lived at Channel-Port aux Basques I have seen tens of thousands of quintals of codfish brought ashore; I have seen great numbers of salmon brought in; I have seen great numbers of lobster brought ashore, and I have seen fishermen come from other parts of our coast to fish there for the season. I have seen fishermen commence their fishing season in the month of November. I have seen them fish through the fall and winter until April of the following year. Many a time I have seen these boats come in low in the water with the ice that coated them in freezing weather. More than once we had to send a coastal boat out to search for and find the missing boat, more than once I have seen families bereaved.

Mr. Speaker, only a fool would utter a word against development in other fields, for example, development of our forests, development of our minerals, development of our water powers. These are good things and we cannot have too much development in them. The government are to be praised for their endeavours in these directions. At the same time I hold and I always held that no real prosperity is possible in Newfoundland if you do not have a prosperous fishery and prosperous fishermen. You can go into one district after another in Newfoundland and find the people depending mostly on fisheries. You can travel north for hundreds of miles and scarcely ever pass out of a fishing settlement. You can travel for hundreds of miles eastward or westward or southward and experience the same situation. We must never forget that Newfoundland is very largely a fishing country or a fishing province. The fishery is still our mainstay, still the mainspring of our very existence. I am delighted that this Government is going in for fishery development with such vim. I think it is only fair to say that this is only what we would expect from any government led by the present premier.
I am very glad that our fishermen, especially our younger fishermen have so many encouraging words directed at them in this debate. I know that this encouragement was badly needed. Goodness knows! our fishermen have not had very much to encourage them in the past years. It is most encouraging and stimulating for our fishermen to know that great efforts are to be made to make the fishery greater and sounder and more prosperous. At the same time I think it would be only fair to utter a word of caution.

I do not think that every project is bound to be a success. I think it is pretty certain that a number of them will fail or fall short of what we may hope for them. I do not think for one moment that we should be discouraged by the fact. It would be foolish and childish to expect absolute success all along the line. I think the Government might just as well make up their minds right now that they will be ridiculed for their mistakes far more than they will be praised for their successes. Unless I am greatly mistaken this is not going to dishearten the Government one little bit. I am quite sure they will press on with this great programme, and I am quite sure that all the fishermen of Newfoundland will be at their backs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I consider myself lucky to be a member of the House and to have the privilege of debating and passing this bill to launch Newfoundland upon the greatest fishery development programme we have ever seen in all our history.

MR. G. JANES: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate. Motion carried.

Second reading of Bill, "An Act to Amend the Welfare of Children Act."

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of the bill. This Bill is designed to improve the present legislation relating to the Welfare of Children, taking into consideration development within the Department of Public Welfare within recent date, or within the last year or so, which makes at least some of these amendments necessary.

There are in this Bill five proposed amendments. The first amendment has to do with the commitment of children either temporarily or permanently to official care. In the present Welfare of Children Act, courts adjudging a child to be a juvenile delinquent may take one of several courses. One of these courses is to commit the child temporarily or permanently to the care and custody of the Director of Child Welfare. He, if he deems it desirable, may place the child in a training school. Now, Sir, since the legislation was passed we have set up a Division of Correction within the Department of Public Welfare; and the administration of the training school comes now under that director and not under the Director of Child Welfare. It is therefore necessary to take into consideration that administrative change, and because of that and because we believe a child should be committed temporarily or permanently not to the head of any one division in the department but to the minister of the department representing the State. That is for these two reasons: (1) because there is a change in structure and (2) because we believe a child should be committed temporarily or permanently not to the head of any division in the department but to the minister of the department representing the State. That is for these two reasons: (1) because there is a change in structure and (2) because we believe a child should be committed temporarily or permanently to the care and custody of the minister.
Now the second amendment has to do with awarding compensation. The present law allows compensation to the extent of only $50, the court is given wider discretion in raising it to $200 and this clause gives wider discretion now and raises the sum to $200.

The third amendment is a verbal amendment of no significance. In the drafting of the Act the word "Relieving Officer" was retained and that is now incorrect and should be changed to "Welfare Officer."

The next amendment has to do with the laying of complaints and proceedings of complaints. This amendment relates to Section 92 where the words "Relieving Officer" was retained instead of the word "Welfare Officer." Because the word "Relieving Officer" was retained certain magistrates felt that Welfare Officers had not the authority to proceed and carry on with complaints originally made to the director. In order to clear up that difficulty and to leave no misunderstanding whatsoever it is now authorized in this proposed amendment that the welfare officer be given such authority.

The fifth and closing amendment had to do with the repayment of unexpended balances which lie in the hands of the Director of Child Welfare as a result of (1) affiliations agreements made by the courts where funds are ordered by the court to be paid and (2) funds which are ordered under private agreements.

Now under present legislation the director is authorized to repay these amounts which are unexpended, such as these amounts which have been ordered by the court and are expended because the child dies or is adopted. But we have no authority to repay to the putative father funds collected under private agreements. There is no logical distinction between the two, and it asks here that authority be given so that the director will have the necessary authority to repay unexpended amounts in the case of private agreements, as well as in affiliation orders by the court in cases where the children concerned are adopted or die.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. J. HIGGINS: Mr. Speaker am I to read into the amendment here that it provides for the increase of awards of reasonable compensation which is presently $50 to $200? The only point that has occurred to me here is that $200 does not necessarily cover all the possibilities of injuries or damages that could be suffered by a person. I have in mind frankly, a case that came to my own attention not too long ago, where a young lady employed at Pepperrell Airforce Base received injuries as a result of being struck by a motorcar tire rolled down over the hill by two young children. The result was that she ended up in hospital and spent some six weeks. In the meantime due to the circumstances of her employment at Pepperrell where they don't pay when an employee is not working the total loss involved was something of the order of, I think, a thousand dollars. Under the law as it exists today she is absolutely without recompense except to the tune of $50. I don't know if this is the time or possibly in committee, but it does seem if we are going to open the gates to an increase of the amount of liability we should be consistent and make it to come in line with damages which would reasonably be incurred. Here is a case where a person has no recourse except to the tune of $50.

The other point I would like to mention is this business of agreements the minister referred to where no provision is made in the event of death or adoption for the return of money paid in accordance with the private agreement. Is that a lump sum payment? Usually when an agreement is drafted provisions are made for that eventuality. With that one enquiry, Mr. Speaker, I must say the rest of the amendment seems to be in order.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, to deal with the last clause first: When the agreement is made between the mother of the child and the putative father—It seems to me that is going to be very difficult to carry out in cases where this money has been actually paid over. I presume there are cases to the minister's knowledge where the money was actually paid over to the mother. In such cases it seems to me it would be very difficult to do anything further about it. However there is one point involved in this bill upon which I would like the minister to give us some information when he replies: It refers to the first amendment which commits the child permanently or temporarily to the custody and care of the minister. The 'care and custody of the director' is now taken out and is made 'care and custody of the minister.' It always seems to me to be one of the last things that should be done, and I feel the minister agrees with me on this, to take children out of the custody of their parents and place them in the custody of somebody who is only interested usually in the amount of money he is getting for looking after them. I would like to know how many cases are there like that in this province at the present time. I hope that the number is not great. Some of them have been brought to my attention because it often happens that when the parents are considered to be unsuitable to look after their children there may be five or six in family and then they are all taken away—The minister himself has told us of a locality where ninety-five per cent of the children should be taken away from the custody of their parents, so I presume there have been many cases in that settlement. He has told us also of the report of a welfare officer on the matter. We have not seen that report, and would like to hear if there are many cases where children had to be taken away from their parents because of these reasons. I have come across several cases here in the city, and I know that conditions are pretty bad when the government steps in and takes the children away from the parents. But usually the fact that the children have been taken away has a good effect upon the parents and makes them better. At least they indicate to me when they come to see me that they are now determined to do all that is necessary to carry out their proper responsibilities as parents.

The mere fact that they are poor, it seems to me, is not justification, and if condition in the homes where the children are residing are not all they should be, nevertheless, it seems to me, that is not the way to handle the situation. I would like to know, therefore, Mr. Speaker, how many cases there are where children have been taken away from their parents.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I don't wish to say very much on this Bill, except to say that I believe it applies chiefly to delinquent children. In this particular section which is being amended I would like for the minister to advise us just what procedure it is his intention to adopt when the children or the child are temporarily or permanently committed to his care and custody? Are they to be passed over to the director of corrections of what is to be done with them? Before when they were taken over the director of child welfare apparently has certain agents which he could invoke in order to take care of these children. Would it be the idea of the minister to utilize these same agencies which have been set up, if such have been set up, to take care of these children?

My honourable colleague referred to a child, I think it was a child, that let loose a tire on top of a hill to roll down over the hill. I don't think such a child comes within the scope of this. I would not call such a child a delinquent. It is just what my honourable friend would have done himself when he was a boy, I suspect. Of course when the child crippled some one that is different. Most children want to roll things down over a hill, snowballs and all sorts of things. I want to repeat something I said yesterday. With all due respect to the Minister of Health and his department the remarks I made yesterday were meant for the Honourable Minister of Welfare. I made a mistake of thinking that health and welfare come under the Minister of Health and not Welfare. I made a mistake of thinking that health and welfare come under the Minister of Health and not Welfare. I want to say now that the department under the present Minister of Welfare, in my opinion, is working very efficiently. They have as a matter of fact on several occasions done work which it was my duty to refer to them and ask for their aid for certain poor people in some branch of their department. I received courtesy always and where it was possible under the Act to lend some assistance they did so without any hesitation. I would like that to be passed on to the department of the honourable minister.

On the other hand I would like to have an answer to that particular question about the disposal of delinquent children being passed over to the minister rather than to the director. Mr. Speaker, we certainly do not oppose the principle of this bill.

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Speaker, if there are no other honourable members who wish to address themselves to this bill, I have taken note of the comments made in the first instance by the honourable member for St. John's East, where he, I presume, in agreeing with the principle of compensation, suggests that the amount is not sufficient. I respect his view. We raised it to two hundred dollars.

MR. HIGGINS: Two hundred dollars is not enough.

DR. POTTLE: If you agree with the principle we could perhaps discuss it in committee the actual amount.

Now, I am not so sure in replying to the comment of the honourable member for St. John's West that there are any cases where funds are actually passed over to the mother. The funds are passed into the hands of the Division of Child Welfare on a monthly basis to be spent for the child on a monthly basis. I don't know of any cases where the funds are passed over to the mother. On the amount of the cases I cannot advise the honourable member now but in as much as he is familiar with the workings of the juvenile court from his own practical experience, we would be glad if he wished to consult with the staff there and get a fuller picture than he would have as a result of my giving the number here in the House, which might be misconstrued. I agree that it is most undesirable to have children taken from their parents and from their homes, but it is only done as a last recourse, and we are not the initiators, the court takes that step. That is the function of the court and we come in only when the court has issued a judgment to say that the court decides the children should be taken over from there. I may go a bit further and say we may advise the court as to what to do, but we do not rush in to take children away from their parents for very good and practical reasons. As the honourable members know we are talking now of delinquent children. When we were operating the old boys' home and training school at Bell Island we accommodated over sixty boys there. When we built the new institution at Whitbourne, when plans were laid for that institution even though Newfoundland's population was increasing and even though a greater number of people were living in larger areas, because in larger areas you have by and large more delinquency, nevertheless even though Newfoundland's population was increasing and social conditions in certain areas were not improving, we built that structure to accommodate only forty boys, indicating that our trend was away from the institutional care to foster homes care. The thought is that if a boy or girl must be taken away from home to try and put him or her in another home, and not necessarily and strictly to an institution although it is the place for some boys. But I want to say we are looking forward to less rather than more, indicating what our thought is.

Now the honourable member is still right when he says that poverty is no reason that we should take a child from its parents. That is one of our principles. That point indeed is no reason whatever for taking the child away from its own parents. Indeed the mothers' allowance both in Newfoundland and elsewhere is designed to do that preventative job of allowing a child to stay in his own home. That is one of the most effective results, the most positive outcome of a mother's allowance. Where children years ago had to be taken away from their homes now they can be kept in their homes.

Now the Honourable Leader of the Opposition raised a point as to what happens to a child committed to the minister. What happens, Sir, is that he looks around at the facilities in his department. It may be the Director of Child Welfare he needs or it may be the Director of Corrections. In other words, once a child is committed to the Department of Public Welfare the minister is able to take advantage of whatever resources therein, the facilities of the director of Child Welfare are foster homes, or the facilities of the Director of Corrections which are training schools. After consultations the minister decides whether it is better to place the child in a training school or whether he should be placed in a foster home.

I would like to thank the honourable leader of the Opposition for the compliment paid to the staff of the department and I shall be happy to pass the word of commendation along to the staff.

I move the second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker.

On motion bill read a second time. Ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.
Second reading of Bill, "An Act to Amend the Corrections Act, 1953."

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Speaker, there are three proposed amendments in this Bill. The first one has to do with that section in the original corrections Act which involved a possible transfer of a boy or girl from a training school to an adult correctional institution. Now, that, Sir, is a drastic step, the transfer of a boy or girl from a training school to a penitentiary. The present section of the Corrections Act provides that the Attorney General may, upon the request of the authority (that is youth guidance authority) direct the removal of any juvenile lawfully committed to a juvenile training school to a school for adults if the training required is the training in that adult school rather than in the juvenile school. As I say, it is a drastic step. So that in order to help the Attorney General and give him something to work on it is here proposed that before he takes any such step, and so that he be better advised, a psychiatric report should come to the Attorney General from a psychiatrist. That would assist him to decide as to what steps he should take, because some children are very sensitive while others are not so sensitive. Under this amendment he would be given the benefit of this extra information.

The second amendment, Sir, is very much more relevant and in view of the business of the House today, the minister may submit to a training school any juvenile delinquent permanently or temporarily under the custody of the Welfare of Children Act. The Welfare of Children Act as amended would provide for the minister to be responsible for the child permanently or temporarily given into his care while this Bill gives the minister the discretion to place the child in a training school if that is the proper course to take. That is to say the minister looks about in his department and sees what facilities he has for the proper placing of the child.

The third amendment has to do with Section 15; as it stands the present section provides for the Minister of Public Welfare to make an examination into the personal and family history of the juvenile who is supposed to have committed the delinquency. Under Newfoundland conditions it takes a long time for these reports to get to the proper law enforcing bodies so it was thought necessary to cut out the sub-clause so that the hearings in court could be held more promptly.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this bill.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I have examined this Bill and have compared it with the original and there are some questions I would like to ask again while we are on the second reading, to which the minister might reply at the close of the debate.

I was wondering how far this provision has been put into effect at the present time. He has told us that under the last section he has found it necessary under Newfoundland conditions to dispense with a review of the family and the personal history of the juvenile delinquent, and with the social history of the family as well. Has he found it necessary to establish a Youth Guidance Authority and Director of Corrections and would he be good enough to tell us who they are and have they on the staff a psychiatrist? I take it it is one of the doctors attached to the hospital for mental diseases who is assigned part time to attend to work of this kind. I would like to know how long this has been in operation and whether it has been a practical measure? It seems to me it would be very difficult if the provisions of the main Act had to be called upon.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I don't know how far the Department of Public Welfare goes with regard to the proper examination into the history socially and otherwise of such delinquents. In this particular amendment here the Minister is seeking an amendment which would give authority to have a juvenile examined by a psychiatrist registered in Newfoundland. It seems to me it might properly be more advisable to have the parents of such juveniles examined by a psychiatrist. From all I have read on the subject the delinquency of the child relates back somewhat to the kind of persons who are looking after him whether it be the parents or foster parents or what not. I suppose we are all more or less delinquent at times in our youth. Even there perhaps that relates back to something in our parents, who knows? I think if the Minister went after the matter in the proper way he probably would look into the background and history of the parent and family, and perhaps have this newly appointed psychiatrist who does the work pay a visit to the family of the delinquent children. I think perhaps the Minister would not mind if I referred that remark of mine to a remark he made here some time ago relative to delinquency not only of children but of parents in a certain area in this country, at least I don't know if it were a certain area nor where it was or whether it was the whole country the Minister was then referring to. Unless the place was mentioned of course I am not in a position to say. Certainly there would be an ample field for a psychiatrist such as the Government has to exercise his psychiatry and find out just how close a relationship exists between the parent and the children with regard to delinquency. The Minister certainly would not be able to claim that there are no files for investigation. I don't know whether the Minister would be able to inform us as to whether or not his department has been able to have the psychiatrist visit this particular area and find out the cause of the waywardness of the grownups in such a community, and what is the cause of their delinquency and their departure from the usually accepted conduct of human beings. Surely there is a place where a psychiatrist would have ample opportunity to exercise the knowledge which he has of human beings and their character and characteristics. I am wondering therefore if the Minister would consent to have entered there in this particular section some clause that would relate to examination of parents of delinquents rather than to the children themselves.

I think it is rather frightening for a child of say from eight or ten to twelve or five or six as the case may be to be brought before a psychiatrist. You know, hard looking individuals as are some of these psychiatrists, even the name is hard, and some of them very stern individuals. They try to get at the basic cause of everything. I would say it would not have a good effect upon a child to have that child examined by a psychiatrist. But if that psychiatrist would apply his genius to the conduct of the parent then I think you would perhaps find out why the child is delinquent and could probably apply that knowledge to something that would cure the trouble.

Certainly apart from that remark about having the children go before a psychiatrist I don’t think there is very much, Sir, to object to in this amendment. The original Act is good. But I think the Minister will have to be careful how he handles even delinquent children, at any rate if he is not careful he may have that condition which the honourable Minister described in a certain area popping up all over the country. If children are not properly treated when very young and small, I don’t know what would be the result. I don’t know what the minister would think of having parents of these children examined by a psychiatrist.

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply as adequately as I can to certain points raised by certain honourable members of the opposition.

The honourable member for St. John’s West asked about the constitution of the Youth Guidance Authority. That Authority, Sir, has been set up in the proper way under the authority of this Act, or the original Act, and is composed of the Director of Corrections as Chairman, the Director of Child Welfare, ex officio, who takes the place of the Chairman if the regular Chairman is absent; the Principal of the Training School for Boys and the Principal of the Training School for Girls, and Mr. J. A. Clancy, the administrative officer of the Department of Public Welfare. The Authority, I might say, from all I can gather are doing their work very well indeed. They hold weekly meetings up there.

Now, when the same honourable member refers to the question of the social history not being required, I should not wish it to be understood that we do not require the social history. I am only saying we should not make it obligatory under all circumstances. The truth of the matter is that we will make them available in every circumstance we can, as we have made a special point of doing, because we regard it as one of the chief factors in helping a judge or magistrate to make up his mind as to what to do. But to make it obligatory under all circumstances would defeat some of our purposes. This is required administratively just the same.

Now on the question asked by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition: He raised a point which this House cannot settle regarding the culpability of parents. Nobody can settle that question, Sir. Under these circumstances all I can say, from the point of view of our position, we certainly regard parents as being directly involved in delinquencies. We have not probably come to the point in Newfoundland where we are prepared to go as far as the honourable Leader of the Opposition suggests. We can only go so far in these matters. We have come a long way, I believe, from the days when we believed the solution was to locate the child and bring him to the justice of the courts. The primary problem now—We know that the delinquency of a child is only the reflection of something else. What we can do beyond what we are doing now is really a vexing problem. In certain states they have adult courts where they fine the parents directly and impose other sanctions on them. For our part what we try to do is this: We admit that any delinquency involved almost inevitably involves the home. It is the child however who commits the delinquency act so that what we try to do is that we bring the delinquent to account but in doing so we also require the parents to accept all the responsibility they can. For instance they must appear before the magistrate or family court judge. And while we have a delinquent in our care, we support the home, we build up the home in whatever way we can by visits to them and by their visits to us. We have not arrived at the time where we bring direct sanction against parents under the Welfare of Children Act. But, as I say, we do involve the homes in our point of view without actually applying sanction against them.

Now with regard to psychiatric services for parents: Let me say that these services in Newfoundland are very limited, and they are being called upon more and more in the treatment of morbid and difficult cases such as some difficult prisoners, and there are not nearly enough psychiatrists in Newfoundland for the demands made upon them. But it is a point that we recognize that psychiatric services and not definite judgment is sometimes the thing required.

Now, I think I should clear up the point that was in the mind of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, and rightly so. First of all psychiatry is not nearly so terrible as it sounds, and the modern psychiatrist is a very friendly doctor who makes a child normally feel at home. This clause, however, has nothing to do with the small children, but with grown-up children in the boy's or girl's home who is the subject of a transfer from a juvenile institution to an adult institution. It does not involve a little boy but a boy probably up to seventeen years of age who has become so difficult in the training school that the services of the training school are probably not strict enough, and possibly a little more drastic treatment is required, not only for the individual boy's or girl's sake but for the sake of the other boys or girls of the training school who are disturbed on his behalf. It is not the young children we are here concerned with. What will happen in all these cases is that we will ask the Attorney General to consider only those grown-up institutional children who are really giving us a too difficult time in the ordinary institution such as the training school. In a debate of this kind we cannot solve the difficulty or say how these children should be dealt with.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, before you put the question I wonder if I may ask the minister a question? Who is the Director of Corrections?

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Walter C. Walling, who is from B.C. and a B.A. from the University of British Columbia.

On motion bill read a second time. Ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

HON. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the House will remember, in the early days of the present session I introduced a bill here, an amendment to the Mines and Quarries Act which was subsequently given second reading. But we found it necessary to bring in another amendment to the Mines and Quarries Act, and the House was kind enough to give me permission to withdraw that bill and to submit another incorporating the two amendments.

The present Bill therefore of which I am now moving second reading, has two amendments. The one which I have already explained I will refer to very briefly, i.e., the third section of this Bill. The preposition "on" which was in the parent Bill is being removed and the preposition "for" is being put in (for every forty acres of land). I have explained that if the holder of a mining claim is, although of a checker board design divided in forty acres squares, not deliberately but technically the parent legislation required that the holder of that claim should perform a certain amount of required work, twenty-five days' work, on every forty acres, which was not of course the intention. In fact after preliminary exploration work is done only certain blocks will require any extensive time or money. Consequently the preposition "on" is removed and the preposition "for" is substituted, for every forty acres of land. That, of course, in no way invalidates the spirit of the parent legislation, the total amount of work and the total expenditure would be the same as before.

The second and new amendment which has not previously come before the House is to Section 38 of the, or at least relates to that section of the parent Act which is found in Vol. 3 of the Consolidated Statutes, page 2118.

These sections give the minister certain discretionary powers where necessary.

He could extend that time at his discretion where necessary.

MR. HOLLETT: For how long?

DR. ROWE: For a reasonable time. However the minister's discretion was confined to death, where performance of the work has been delayed because of pending proceedings or the death or incapacity through illness of the permit holder. Under these conditions then the minister would recommend to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that the time be extended for the performance of the work. We have found in actual practice that these conditions are not enough particularly when you get down on the Labrador. As a matter of fact we had instances last year as a result of which we are recommending that a wider discretionary power be given to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. Actually we had a company who were unable to fulfill the letter of the law not through any neglect or omission on their own part, but because of a number of factors beyond their control they could not get their engineers down there in time—things, Mr. Speaker, which you could ordinarily call "Acts of God". We ask therefore that this clause be inserted to extend the powers so that in addition to death and incapacity through illness: "That where the performance of the work is delayed by any cause whatsoever other than that mentioned in paragraph (a) of the subsection, whether the cause is of the kind mentioned in that paragraph or not, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council has approved the extension of such period."

The rest of the Bill is just a copy of the parent Act.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, we have not had an opportunity to study the parent Act. It seems to me here again we are delegating too much authority and power into the hands of the minister and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council by the amendment suggested here, I really think if an extension of time were required in any one year, it would be quite reasonable for the minister to grant it, and then the matter could be reported to the House and the authority sought for any further extension. As it stands now the minister or the Lieutenant-Governor in Council could extend the time to any period, for instance from three years to six years or seven or ten years or for as long as they remain in power. I feel if there is to be a House of Assembly in this Province some of these matters ought to be brought before it. Several Acts have been brought in now, Mr. Speaker, which have a tendency to pass over to the minister and to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council powers which should really come from this House, and be voted by the House. If we vote for this now we give the minister and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council the authority at any time in the future to extend the mining privileges of any corporation away beyond the time set out in that agreement. "If it seems reasonable." Who is to say when anything is reasonable to any man—It could be made reasonable. I am not casting any reflection on the Lieutenant-Governor in Council or upon the honourable minister, but such things have happened in other countries and could very well happen here. I don't think we ought to allow the minister nor the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to have the power to extend these periods beyond the time. They could come before the House, explain the situation and seek through the Legislature the proper authority for the extension of the time.

I have no further objections to it, but I do voice that complaint, Mr. Speaker. We are living in an age, or have just come through an age when dictatorial governments have been set up just by starting the way we are starting, in some of these things, here by delegating the authority of this House to certain individuals. In certain Acts before us now we are delegating authority which only the people's representatives should have to other authorities, and in this Act are going to delegate this to the reasonableness of any minister. Now there are times when any minister becomes unreasonable, and they can be made unreasonable, if you want to put it that way. As to the general principle, Sir, I say I am casting no reflections anywhere, but it is the general principle we ought to consider in this Bill as in other Bills, and we should not be too flippant in voting away those rights which are the inalienable rights of the people's representatives, and that is the thing we are doing here.

That is all I have to say on the matter, Sir. I don't favour that particular point.

DR. ROWE : Mr. Speaker, if nobody else wishes to speak on this matter, I can appreciate the point made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, however none of that discretion already exists in mining legislation, and if the honourable member will read the Crown Lands (Mines and Quarries) Act which is a rather long piece of legislation which has I believe 42 pages of closely written words, all through it, I think he will find the Lieutenant-Governor in Council has far wider powers than anything envisaged in this particular amendment here. As I see it, if we are to have a minister and a Lieutenant-Governor in Council the House must delegate powers to them. I suppose in any democracy we always face the possibility of the mis-use of powers that are delegated to the government by the elected house of representatives. In this case here I think it would be very silly if the minister of the government had to come back to the House every time and wait until they get the sanction of or the approval of the House.

MR. HOLLETT: I did not suggest that.

DR. ROWE: I believe the honourable member suggested that the House should have to approve any act of that kind or it should come before the House at the next session.

MR. BROWNE: Report to the House.

DR. ROWE: However, I would merely make this point: If you are going to refuse to give the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that discretionary power then I think we would have to go over practically all the legislation we have to deprive the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of far greater powers than we have envisaged here.

MR. HOLLETT: Quote some of them.

DR. ROWE: I refer my friend to the Crown Lands and Quarries Act. If he would read through even the Crown Lands itself—That was not done by this government nor in my time. The powers there conferred on the minister and on the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, he will find, are there infinitely greater and out of all proportion to anything envisaged here. For instance the power of granting or leasing of land, which has far-reaching powers. It is theoretically possible, in fact, for the minister to give away all the land that is in the province.

MR. HOLLETT: It has been done. You have done it.

DR. ROWE: It is theoretically possible, but no minister has ever done it. I appreciate the point, but I don't see it, if in a government the Lieutenant-Governor in Council cannot be trusted with that amount of power then it should not be in power at all, it should be out and be kept there.

If there are any other points, I think, Mr. Speaker, they might come up in committee. In the meantime my honourable friends will have the chance to look up the parent act. I move the second reading of the bill.

On motion bill read a second time. Ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred.

So ordered.

MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Monday, May 17, at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, May 17th, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

None.
Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Giving Notice of Motion

None.

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Public Welfare to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Into how many foster homes have the Government placed children? Where are these homes located?

2. How many male and female children have the Government placed in those foster homes? What is the total number at present being cared for?

3. What is the amount paid each month, in respect of each child?

4. How many male and female adults are supported in boarding houses by the Government at the present time?

5. State number and location of these boarding houses.

6. What is the amount paid each month in respect of each adult?

7. Do the Government prescribe the diet to be supplied the children and adults in these foster homes and boarding homes?

8. Are regular inspections made, if so, how often and by whom?

9. Are these foster homes and boarding houses visited regularly by a medical officer? Give details.

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. What progress has been made in the construction of bridges on the Trans-Canada Highway? State the number of bridges completed, the number of bridges under construction, the type of each bridge, concrete or steel, the dimension and cost of each bridge, also state if this work has been contracted for or is being done by the Department of Public Works.

2. How many local road committees were operating in the Provincial District of St. John's East during the past year, where are these committees located and what amount was allotted to each committee?

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance or other appropriate Minister to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. From what person or persons was the land purchased for the site of the Newfoundland Hardwoods Co. Ltd. buildings? What was the total acreage purchased and what was the amount paid for same?

2. Give an itemized statement with vouchers of the amount of $1,497.17 travelling expenses incurred by Mr. Chester Dawe in the United States of America during January 9th to January 18th, 1951 in re-ordering machinery for the Birch Plant and in seeking markets for birch products. Has this amount yet been paid by Mr. Dawe?

3. Give detailed account of all travelling expenses paid to Mr. Chester Dawe on account of Nfld. Hardwoods Ltd., giving dates and amounts involved on each separate trip.

4. What was the total amount of monies paid to P. B. Yates Machine
Ltd. for machinery for Nfld. Hardwoods Ltd? List machines bought and amount paid for each machine.

5. How many men are presently employed at this plant? What is the total amount paid out in wages each week?

Answers to Questions

Question No. 87—
HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): The honourable member is not here, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps that question might be asked when he is present.

Question No. 86—
HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is none and to the second part the answer is no.

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if before we go on I could draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that some nine questions I have asked have not been answered.

Question No. 85—
HON. G. J. POWER (Minister of Finance): The answer is being prepared, Mr. Speaker. I did not know there were any questions outstanding.

Orders of the Day

Second reading of Bill “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority.”

Adjourned debate:

MR. JANES: Mr. Speaker, this is May 17th. It is one day I am glad to be alive. Twelve days ago, May 5, in the Year of Our Lord 1954, was probably one of the greatest days in the History of Newfoundland. We have seen some very difficult days in this little island. We have seen heroic days and days of disaster and we have seen days of great rejoicing, and days of great poverty, almost starvation. We have had two generations which through malnutrition have just about succeeded to tuberculosis. All these days we have seen, all these days we have passed through, some of it is history, some of it we are still living with. But of all the days through which we have passed I do not think that any day in the whole history of Newfoundland was as important to Newfoundland nor as important to the future of Newfoundland as the day when the Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives introduced into this House a Bill, “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority.”

I am happy, Sir, to be on this side of the House to support a Government and an administration which at this time has brought in this measure. Since Confederation we have seen many bombshells dropped into the social and economic life of Newfoundland. They have been dropped and they have been felt by thousands of people but yet have gone unnoticed by many thousands more, in our island homes. What is being dropped by this Bill is a load of dynamite. The fact that it is being introduced by the same government that has dared to introduce an economic development programme through the establishment of these new industries which we have—a government which has dared to carry on welfare services as far as they have carried them, gives us reason to believe that the plans are well-laid, that it is not something that has been thrown up to somebody as a bit of political alibi.
Now, sir, it is difficult to raise new points in this debate, still it is something we can continue to talk about for many weeks, yet the ground has been covered pretty well by previous speakers, and it is difficult to know where to begin. I don't want to cover too much of the ground already covered by other speakers. I would like to forget, Sir, the past four hundred years of the history of Newfoundland, if I could. We have talked a lot about fish stages, we have talked about unsanitary stages and about the poverty of the fishermen; and we have tried in some small measure to visualize what the future might hold for the fishing industry of Newfoundland. But I do not think that we have gone far enough in trying to build up our hopes and our dreams, I don't think we have gone far enough in trying to help the fishermen to understand just where this legislation is likely to carry them, in other words, what it is going to mean to them.

What I would like to do, sir, in the few minutes which I am going to take up is to try and reason it out (if I might call it that) with the House, in order that I might build up a picture which I believe to be true. Before I do that, Sir, I want to just say a few words, and I am going to read them from a memorandum which I did prepare once on the fisheries:

The Indictment of History

"Most picturesque, indeed, was the description of the Newfoundland fishery possibilities some 450 years ago—'More valuable than the mines of Peru.' I am not conversant with what the mines of Peru have produced in the past four and a half centuries but I do feel that our heritage, our contributions to a western way of life as distinct from that of the South Americas as well as our present hopes and aspirations have supported the prophecy made 450 years ago. It is not impossible that I numbered myself among the few—a number steadily decreasing—whose faith in the future possibilities and attractions of our fisheries remains unshaken. My faith, however, has often been shaken by the lack of imagination, vision and social conscience in those in whom Dame Fortune placed her trust for sound direction, management, energy and vigour. No primary industry anywhere in the world has suffered as much from lack of leadership as the fishing industry of Newfoundland. No class of primary producers anywhere in the world has been so misled and misused for selfish political and commercial ends as the fishermen of Newfoundland. This is not the indictment of the member for Fogo, who has been for the past few years alternately, "a Communist," "a Socialist," "a hauler-up of boats" and "man who caused the shortage of salt," etc. It is the indictment of history to be seen in 75% of our fishing communities and on the faces of 90% of our fishermen and best illustrated by the statement of a few indisputable facts.

About six years ago I first became conscious of what was happening to our potential labour force in the fishery, especially on the north east coast. Since the end of World War I, Newfoundland has lost two generations of fishermen—included in these two generations have been the most ambitious and most energetic of our youth. Lost to Newfoundland fisheries are the many thousands who immigrated to the U.S.A. and Canada in the early 20's as well as 'the babes of World War I'—5,000 veterans of World War II who never returned to their former vocation, the fishery. A war within the next few years of half the duration of the two wars within the past forty years would so tend to deplete the workers available for the fishery that our fisheries could not exist for a further ten years even on the scale it is today. In case this should seem a bit too pessimistic we shall examine a case in point. I was born at Pools Island, Bonavista Bay, 1918. I first entered school at the age of six in 1924. Our one room school contained approximately 50 children ranging in age from 6 to 20. Pools Island was a fair fishing community and the livelihood—such as it was—was obtained from the fishery. I have vague recollections of what was the end of the “bully boats” and fishing on the Funks and Flowers Island, indeed, boats as good and as capable of the range as the much admired present day long liners. Were my great-grandfather alive—he died in 1935—he could have assumed charge of a long liner with little or no technical training in operation. He was typical of his generation of fishermen; but what has happened to the fifty children who were at school in Pools Island in 1924? To my knowledge not even one of the males is a fisherman and not one of the females married a man whose vocation is today a fisherman, and on Pools Island today we may have three men—no more—whose chief source of income lies in the fishery. What has happened to Pools Island has happened to Greenspond, Safe Harbour, Badger’s Quay, Wesleyville, Pound Cove, Brookfield and Newtown—in short the whole of Bonavista North, with the possible exception of that highly productive fishing area of Cape Freels. As a matter of fact, the only fishing communities which exist today, as fishing communities, on the whole north east coast are communities which are highly productive: Cape Freels, Seldom, Joe Batt’s Arm, Tilting, La Scie, etc. and even in these communities the age of those actively engaged in the fishery will eliminate the whole industry within twenty years unless sound, quick, remedial action is forthcoming. It would be an error of the first magnitude to think that the generation in our schools today are going to be workers in our fishing industry unless things change quickly. Children are being discouraged by all the means at the disposal of both parents and schools; by parents because they have known only futility of endeavour and by teachers indirectly because most of our teachers are badly equipped sons and daughters of dissatisfied fishermen. Over and above these two facts the expanding Canadian industrial economy is beckoning to youth, and children of today will leave our unattractive outport fishing communities as flies leave a molasses puncheon when the bung is drawn. To me two courses of action now remain open and both are extremes. We can continue the road we are now going and desert our fishing banks to the Europeans, New Englanders, and Nova Scotians or commence immediately the reorganization, resettlement and revitalization necessary to a sound fisheries policy. Such policy cannot be handed out piecemeal as political appetizers because time has already passed us by and at most I cannot visualize more than ten years in which to complete the policy programme. It is obvious, of course, that what I have stated thus far primarily refers to the north east coast and here I have to make an observation the truth of which is probably open to some doubt. The problem as I see it is primarily concerned with the coastal area from Bonavista North to Bonne Bay and that the problem of the south and south west coast is more technological in concept than that of the north east coast, although many parallels can be drawn.

The Problem of the N.E. Coast is Stated

During the past few years I have developed a feeling that the problem of the north east coast has been over simplified in that publicity has focused attention only on the development of long liners, improved gear production and experiments prior to the erection of suitable shore facilities. It would seem to me that the technical problem, as I shall later show, is not nearly as acute as the present social and economic problem. It has been my misfortune to have read statements by supposedly intelligent people warning us against disturbing the "peaceful isolation" in which some 70,000 people live. The grumblings and dissatisfaction expressed by these people with regard to roads, mails and medical services are not as peaceful as the picturesque isolation by any measure. Nor in this age is the summer calmness of the sea a substitute for even a dusty road. It is most strongly suggested that a study of the north east coast is not a job for academicians who wax eloquent in the solitude and humidity of July nor for commercial pirates who grow rich on monopoly. The solution and programme of rehabilitation if there is to be such can only be formulated by able men whose heritage is not too far removed from the sea. Men who understand more than the cold statistics of fish income and numbers. Men who will realize that human beings are involved and not merely industrial units. Men who will see the job through even though they might feel it a waste of time and effort in that the North American Continent is headed for a mental asylum anyway—70,000 Newfoundland fisherfolk cannot prevent such a catastrophe! What then, are the immediate social and economic problems to be faced? As I see it, there are two simple problems which can be solved within a very short time from the raising of the curtain. The most pressing problem facing shore fishermen today is the disposal of their catch. It is a most ridiculous situation in which the fishermen find themselves—having to stay ashore in the first place to cure fish and then having to sit sometimes for months, until some buyer sees fit to stroll along the highway of this Atlantic and leisurely purchase the fish lying in unsanitary stages for months. The consequences of this historic debate are so numerous that no attempt is necessary to enumerate them beyond to point up the two most serious consequences:

(I) Fishermen know that their ability to cure fish is strictly limited by weather and number of helpers in the family and the evil result of this has been that little or no effort has been made to improve methods of catching or finding new grounds. The inshore fishermen of the N.E. Coast can catch at least 50% more fish than they and their families can cure, so why even try to produce more or improve equipment? Long liners, new grounds and improved production are sound propositions only when shore facilities are equal to the task of handling the catch and not necessarily when, as a result of an experiment, improved methods are shown to be commercially feasible. In one year a thousand long liners can be built on the N.E. Coast but under present circumstances it would be better to build a thousand rowboats.

(2) Our fishermen have continued to live in isolation because they saw no community which offered anything better than the community in which they lived. Academicians have tried repeatedly to have us see a serenity and a soulful attachment to family, relatives and home in all this isolation, whereas the truth of the matter is that the immobility and inertia inherent in the Newfoundland fisheries is the century old curse of this Island. Isolation is both a consequence and a problem in itself. It would seem therefore, that, while political appetizers are being concocted, fire extinguishers designed for trap boats, half-hearted experiments leisurely pursued, long wearied debates on principles ensue and this, the Newfoundland specimen is being examined for everything from tooth decay to fertility—we might as well commence now to find a solution to the co-related problems of isolation and shore facilities. None of the other important experiments enumerated above will lose their importance because we happen to start doing something about conditions which we know to be important to the economy of the Province.

That as I have said in 1951, Sir, and as I have read here to this House is a result of four hundred years of the fisheries in Newfoundland. I have no more to say about fishing stages, no more to say about boats, motor boats and gasoline engines, no more to say about lounge lizards after this is finished with, and as surely as night follows day, Sir, it is on the way out.

Now there were a few points which were raised by the Opposition which I want to deal with. I made some notes as they were going along.

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Sir, wandered on through his address to this House looking for the principle in this Bill. He found it in the last few moments of his speech when he told of the community in which he was born, no longer existing. That is the principle of this Bill. There are many communities in Newfoundland which barely exist. There are hundreds of communities in Newfoundland which are not going to exist very much longer. That is the principle of this Bill. He thought, Sir, that the appointment of two of the members of the Authority should not have been made because they had been connected with fish companies.

MR. HOLLETT: Now, Mr. Speaker, I must rise—I did not say honourable members should not be appointed. I made no objections to any appointment.

MR. JANES: I understood the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, Sir, to have said he did not think Mr. Dustan and Mr. Young should have been appointed to the Authority because they had been at one time or another working with fishery companies. If he did not say that, Sir, I retract the statement.

However, I think, sir, in the Fisheries Authority, irrespective of whom they might have worked for before, I think they are as good as we are going to get in this Province.

The Honourable Leader was highly concerned because he thought the Authority could assist the industry either directly or indirectly on their own initiative, and because they could do so it was equivalent to a Crown Corporation. The Honourable Leader knows this is not a Crown Corporation, Sir, just as well as I do, and just as well as this House knows.

Then to climax his speech he called it nationalization. Now if I know anything of the political history of Canada or of the world for that matter, I know no "Tory" is going to vote for nationalization. I presume, Sir, that when the debate on this Bill is finally finished, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is going to vote against that measure—going to vote against it. How else is he going to reconcile his thoughts with the fact that it is nationalization, as he said, and as the Leader of the Tory Opposition, how can he then vote for nationalization in Newfoundland?

MR. HOLLETT: Nationalization might be a good thing.

MR. JANES: The Tories tell us nationalization is a good thing?

MR. HOLLETT: Who told you I was a Tory? What is a Tory? Would you know one if you saw one?

MR. JANES: Why don't you go over there as an independent and move down.

MR. SPEAKER: Order. Let us cease this private conversation. It takes from the dignity of the debate and adds nothing to the furtherance or to decide for the Bill or against it. Will the honourable member continue his speech.

MR. JANES: The Honourable Leader also thought, Sir, that the Government were hedging for the past five years on the fisheries development programme.

MR. HOLLETT: I said no such thing.

MR. JANES: Mr. Speaker, I made a note as the honourable member spoke. At least he left me with that impression. I took it down verbatim or nearly so. He said the Government were hedging and the fishery development report was hedging. If the programme which is being put into effect in 1954 is hedging let us have more of it. The Government is not hedging. The Fishery Development Committee's report took as long as it did because it is a report of first-class importance to the fishing industry of Newfoundland and to the fishermen of Newfoundland. If the report had taken ten years, and more time had been permitted, more time allowed for the Government to examine it and had not come as soon as it did but perhaps had taken another five years to produce it might have made the report twice as good as it is.

Then, Sir, we had the magnificent spectacle of the honourable member for St. John's East, (the member who wears the mustache) tell us it was not nationalization but socialization. There is no debating these things, Mr. Speaker, we had the honourable members in this House tell us Brinco was Bunco, the machinery plant property was bolted together, to be carried off to Ontario when they were ready. They now tell us this fishery development authority is socialization of the fisheries. Do we have to say more. When the honourable member is not distressing he is highly amusing.

The other member for St. John's West, the legal member, did try, Sir, to inject into his thoughts something which would give us something to think about.

MR. SPEAKER: I am not interrupting the honourable member with his remarks, but there comes a time when certain references may be overdone. Any honourable member of Parliament who holds her Majesty's Commission in the House therefore takes the title of Honourable and Gallant. Any member of Parliament who is a member of a bar association is a lawyer, his title is Honourable and Learned Member. Therefore there is no difficulty whatsoever in referring to the Opposition. There is the honourable member for St. John's East and there is the honourable and learned member for St. John's East. It is really quite simple. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition and the honourable and learned member for St. John's West.

MR. JANES: The honourable and learned member for St. John's West, Sir, could not see anything to criticize in the fishing industry of Newfoundland. He could not see any crisis, and because there was no crisis in the fishing industry of Newfoundland we could very well begin at the bottom and build up again co-operative structures, co-operative associations and organizations to have them run our fisheries.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is nobody more in sympathy with that than I am myself. But I have seen it tried. I have reason to believe that I know some of the reasons why it is not a practical suggestion. I do not think the time is ripe for it. The fishermen, Sir, have plenty to do without either the government or anybody else burdening them with the cost of fishing plants and shore facilities necessary to the carrying out of the processing of fish. There is the fishing industry, or there can be in the fishing industry the same division as we find in any other industry. First we have the producer, then the processor who uses the plant and shore facilities and thirdly those who market the thing which has been produced by the primary producer and the processor. These are three separate functions. Why they cannot apply to the fisheries of Newfoundland as they can apply to the fisheries of any other country or apply to any other industry we have here is something I do not understand.

At the moment we have the fisherman in the unfortunate position of being the producer and not only is he the producer but also the processor, and there his activity stops. There is plenty of room in the fishing industry for the development of co-operation. They will have their hands full, Sir, in trying to build their boats, trying to get the bounties, which are very liberal. Even with financial assistance which might be forthcoming from the Government they are going to have their hands full to build the boats. And if they should run out of things to do they can form a co-operative consumers' society, they can build their credit union organizations for the marketing of lobster where they don't need any financial organization, and a society for the marketing of salmon, where no finances are necessary, but when it comes to the long haul of producing codfish, which needs heavy financing, it is no place for a fisherman to be, not at the moment. He has his hands full, as I said before, in trying to build his boat, organize his consumers' society and credit union association for the marketing of lobster and salmon, but not for the establishment of a million dollar fish plant.
That is something about which he knows nothing, something that he could not enter into at all, and it is only folly for us to say: build at the bottom and build your fishermen up. This is not the time. There might come a time, but that time is not now.

The curing of fish was not slavery, so he said. Now, Mr. Speaker, we have seen our fishermen in iron collars in former years, and the golden collar, which I understand is slavery, trying to take fifty quintals of fish, put it on a flake and try and make it, and keep it, and hold on to it, for starvation wages, for five cents an hour. If that is not slavery, I would like to know what slavery is. It is slavery and it always has been slavery. Down through its history the whole industry has been slavery, as we have known it on the north east coast. If this thing is desirable, if as the Premier said, he wants us all happily dancing around the maypole and if he would like to keep things as they are, that is generally—I know that the honourable members want to see progress—but if he does not want to lose the things peculiarly Newfoundland in all this, if he wants to hold on to these, how does he expect that the fishermen are going to feed their families, how are they going to provide their families with clothing? Who is going to educate them? He cannot do it on the fish flakes. The day is passed when a fisherman could feed his family by catching his fish, salting and carrying it to the flakes and drying it and then waiting for someone to stroll along and buy it. I remember in November, 1962, the fishermen on Indian Island and Seldom waiting for someone to come from Port Union, Bonavista, St. John's to buy their fish, which had been ready since September. For two months they could not leave home to earn a dollar or take a pick and shovel and go on the road. They had to sit there on that waterside and wait for someone to stroll along the highway of the Atlantic and take the fish out of their stages. Well, it is over, finished, they will sit there no longer, and my blessing to them.

Now, Sir, whatever we have gone through in the past, however ugly it might have been, however peculiarly Newfoundland it might have been it is over. Our past is behind us. What we have to think of is the future. I think, Sir, there was an editorial in the "Daily News" on the day on which this Fishery Bill was introduced into this House. I will read part of it to the House:

"... The objectives are far-reaching. The ultimate aim is not alone a highly mechanized and efficient operation but also the establishment of new kinds of communities. Centralization of fishing activities and facilities is to be combined with the development of modern fishing towns. The objectives are therefore social and economic.

The economic side is of primary importance. The resources of our adjacent waters represent our greatest supply of raw material of industrial worth. For about four centuries they constituted the main support of first a visiting and then a permanent population. But in primary industry more than dry salted fish has there been more uncertainty during the present century and the events of the 1930's brought major changes disadvantageous to Newfoundland.

It was in these grim days of world depression that the policy of self-sufficiency replaced that of free-trading in its broad sense. Portugal, Spain and Italy, always producing countries on a small scale, were forced for lack of foreign currencies to invest more heavily in domestic fisheries.

In 1919, admittedly an exceptional year, our exports to Europe were: Greece, 140,000 qtls.; Italy, 212,000; Spain, 270,000; Portugal, 550,000; and in the same year we shipped 310,000 qtls. to Brazil. That was a total of about 1,500,000 quintals or double last year's output. World consumption has not declined but Portugal is catching most of its own requirements and the remaining European countries and Brazil have been compelled by currency difficulties to buy most of their needs from countries with which barter deals can be negotiated or whose currencies are easier to obtain than dollars.

These are difficulties that the new policy cannot overcome. It is recognized that in prevailing world trading conditions, there is a limit to the amount of salt cod we can sell at remunerative prices. It seems to follow that one of the first aims of the new policy is to share the proceeds of what we can sell among a smaller number of producers and processors so that individual earnings will be much higher. In the course of putting this idea into effect a division of labour becomes important. Some men will do nothing but catch fish. Others will handle it on shore. But diversification of handling methods is also important. The major centres will be equipped for both salting and filleting. They will have fish meal plants. The end product will be considered in relation to the circumstances when each load of fish is put ashore. It may be doubtful if maximum efficiency in handling can usefully reduce the costs of producing a quintal of dry salted fish. The value to the producer will come in increased individual productivity."

Now the question has been asked not only in this House but outside it many times: "If you are trying to industrialize the fishery what are you going to do with all the fishermen who have nothing to do? Someone suggested that 2,500 fishermen can catch as much fish as our twenty thousand can, even in our best days.

MR. HOLLETT: That was Sir Albert Walsh in the fishery report.

MR. JANES: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about the fishing industry, and unless we close our eyes and our thoughts to the fact that there is going to be certain dislocations we are never going to do anything in the fishing industry. Nothing will ever be done because of this problem of twenty thousand people, and wondering what you are going to do with them. But what we have to do, Sir, is this. We have to face up to the fact that there is a problem in the fishing industry of Newfoundland. We have to tackle that problem as we would tackle any other industry in Newfoundland. If in the process there is some dislocation, if you are left with certain people unemployed, what in the name of reason have these unemployed people got to do with the fishery of Newfoundland? Nothing whatsoever. Supposing because of certain improvements in the mines at Bell Island that a certain number of workers are laid off and without jobs, does that condemn the mining industry on Bell Island? Of course it does not. What we are talking about in this legislation and what we have been trying to say all through this debate is that there is a problem in the fishing industry. It is no longer an industry. You have to face up to that problem, and have to recognize it. We have to bring the fishery up to a standard that is acceptable in the modern world, and if in the process of doing that there is some dislocation of people employed in the fishery that is a separate problem altogether and has nothing whatever to do with the fishing industry. In the fishing industry what they have tried to do is to take the father, son, daughter, mother and employ the whole lot of them in the fishery and the old man ended up in the fall with not enough to pay for the food he ate during the summer.

I cannot continue. As I say, there are two separate problems involved, the problem of industrializing and mechanizing the fishing industry of Newfoundland and another problem, to find employment for the people who are likely to be unemployed at some time or another because of the industrialization programme of the fishing industry.

Now, Sir, touching on the District of Fogo, if I may: The honourable member for White Bay and myself had a little debate the other day as to which was the largest producing district in Newfoundland. He thought the figures for White Bay were not complete because of the fact that certain production at St. Anthony was not included. When you look at the map which had been produced by the Honourable the Premier you will find that the Cape Frels area is not included. If I included Cape Frels and St. Anthony, I think that Fogo District would be the largest fish producing district in the whole island of Newfoundland. We have, Sir, over seventy or eighty thousand quintals of fish being produced down there. Now, Sir, if the honourable members of the Opposition would not get seasick, I would like to take them for a trip around Fogo District. The water is a bit rough at Cape Frels, but if we can get around there—

HON. E. S. SPENCER (Minister of Public Works): Use the road, and drive around.

MR. JANES: I am going to tell them about that road, Sir. Fogo, Cape Frels, Lumsden North and Lumsden South, are very fine fishing communities. Then we have Deadman's Bay there, and farther up the shore is Musgrave Harbour. It has already been announced that there will be built at Badger's Quay a fish plant. We are very fortunate, Sir, at this time, that we have the roads, thirty miles and probably thirty-five miles of roads being constructed between Valleyfield and Musgrave Harbour. There is one thing about Fogo which is rather unusual. We have no small communities as such. We have no population scattered about. They are in large communities. We have four to five communities down there with over a thousand people each in them. We have Musgrave Harbour with over a thousand people. The bulk of these people are fishermen. But by the time this plan is ready to go into production—in Valleyfield we are already ahead of the game by having thirty-five miles of road cutting across Cape Frels connecting Lumsden North and South, Deadman's Bay and Musgrave Harbour. In that area alone we have some fifteen or sixteen thousand quintals of fish or more, in that little area alone, which is only thirty miles from the plant in Valleyfield, which opens up all sorts of possibilities for us. Coming along the shore we come to Carmanville, which is not a fish producing area any more. It had at one time though a number of Labrador schooners. Then Gander Bay: The people there don't fish any longer. But we hope, Sir, to have the road built from Gander to Carmanville, to start it this year. That is an important link as far as the fisheries are concerned because it is only one hour's run away from Carmanville to Fogo Island and Change Islands by small boat. We have a growing town in Gander, five thousand now, that can eat our salmon, lobster and in season we will have there a small market right at our doorstep for a certain amount of fresh fish, which can be landed there from the fishermen coming in in the morning and can be in Gander within four hours, or before dinner, if we want to do so. So that I think this road which is being constructed from Carmanville to Gander will provide an outlet and play a big part in the development of the fisheries in Fogo District. Not only that, but give us a real link with Gander.

Then, Sir, we come to Change Islands. It has already been announced that there is to be a plant put into operation at Change Islands this year. I think that plant will probably be in production sometime late this summer, but it might not be ready for the trap season, but might come in on the tail end of it. But it will certainly be available for the fall fishery. The plant at Change Islands will carry two plate freezers and a filleting machine. These two plate freezers are capable of putting up 108,000 pounds of round fish per twenty hour day. That is the equivalent, Sir, of 240 quintals per day. Now banking on a fishing season down there with the fishermen able to get out 120 days, we should be able to put up somewhere in the vicinity of twenty thousand quintals of fish. In 1953 we had one hundred fishing days, and our fishermen produced 95,000 quintals of fish. With this development at Change Islands, making allowance for any difficulties arising, there is no reason why the fishermen of Change Islands in 1954, cannot produce twice as much fish as they are producing today, and have that fish taken from them from the knife, with no more curing, no more fish flakes, and allow them to fish. I believe, Sir, they can almost do it. I don't know. It has not been tried. I am not committed completely to the thought that our shore fishermen can produce twice as much fish as they are now producing, but I do feel they can produce 25% more fish than what they are now producing. But we have the satisfaction of knowing the plant at Change Islands will take twice the production of Change Islands alone for the year 1953, and to pick up the lag, if there should be any. We have the small communities of Cape Island and Hare Bay and Herring Neck quite near also.

The Joe Batts Arm effort, I might say, Sir, was made to get that plant into operation last year, but circumstances developed which could not be helped by anybody. It was not the fault of the Government nor the company. There were things that happened from time to time and nothing anybody could do about it. But I am assured, Sir, that in Joe Batts Arm we are also putting two freezers and a filleting machine. The catch last year in Joe Batts Arm and Barr'd Island, where another thirteen or fourteen hundred people live, in one hundred days totalled seventeen thousand quintals of fish. With the block freezers there the people of Joe Batts Arm and Barr'd Island can produce twice as much fish as they are producing now, providing they can catch it. Only this morning I was informed by the operator there that they are putting in a new additional building measuring 134 feet where they intend to carry out an experiment in salt codfish operations. If it works out well they will be able to take more fish from the fishermen than they can handle in the two plate freezers. Certainly if this experiment is successful it will serve both Joe Batts Arm and Barr'd Island and Tilting, because it is the intention to bring fish from Tilting by truck to the Joe Batts Arm plant, which is only three miles by road across there. With the development at Joe Batts Arm to handle both the frozen fish and salt codfish, I think, we will be well on the way to seeing the type of development which fishermen want. The fishermen down there don't play around with the thing. They don't go out and catch a few fish for the winter and go off to the woods. The people of Fogo Island must live off the fishery. It is the only employment they have. They are fishermen. The same thing applies to the people of Change Islands, they are fishermen, people who lived by the fishery either Shore or Labrador for generations.

At Seldom, Sir, the Government is there constructing a plant along the basis of a community idea, and it will be purely a salt codfish operation. Seldom is one of the most amazing fishing communities in the whole of Newfoundland. It is a community of three or four hundred people who produce anywhere from ten to twelve thousand quintals of fish a year. I have seen their fish rotting in the stages. The fishermen have gone out, taken it from the trap or hook, brought it in, got it salted and put it up in their stages, and the summer just was not long enough for these fishermen to cure that fish. God himself did not give us enough sunshine to cure the fish which they catch at Seldom. Consequently their fish was not always good. The catch was big, the quality poor. We have the same thing existing at Lumsden, fishermen going out, filling their stages, salting their fish and finding it is impossible to cure it because there is not enough sunshine, not enough time, not enough hours in the day for that fish to be cured.

At Seldom an experimental plant is being built. The plant will contain pickling vats, proper cold storage for the holding of fish in proper temperatures and salt storage space. With these developments—for Cape Freels and Musgrave Harbour, and Tilting by road to the plant at Valleyfield; the plants at Change Islands and Joe Batts Arm and Seldom we only have one other community left in the whole of Fogo area, and that is Fogo itself, where we do not have a lot of fishermen. We have some but not a lot. Most of the people there are engaged in the summer months by two mercantile firms which operate there. With the coming of the plant at Change Islands and Joe Batt's Arm this situation must change, and there is the possibility that more people from the town of Fogo itself will go back to their fishing boats again. There is already a small cannery there operated by Earle Sons & Company. What the intentions of the company are, I do not know, but of a certainty, Sir, unless the two mercantile firms which are there now don't begin to do something about relieving the situation in Fogo— the fishing in that area will be a failure. One has a small cannery—but unless these two firms are prepared to do something I am going to be knocking on the door of the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives looking for something for Fogo. Then with Fogo will come a rounding out in Fogo District for fishery development.

We have there Musgrave Harbour with over a thousand people; Change Islands, a thousand people; Joe Batts Arm and Barr’d Island with twelve or fourteen hundred and Seldom four or five hundred including Stag Harbour and if the Minister of Public Works would only build a road to Stag Harbour, they would be able to bring their fish in to Seldom. We have a few small communities down there; Wild Cove is quite near Seldom. I see no reason for these people to be living in Wild Cove. There are only four or five families down there, and they should get out and settle in Seldom. We have a few other small coves. We did have a Cape Cove, but I don’t think there is anybody living there now.

Fortunately, Sir, at this time we find that in the District of Fogo we have the concentration of population in good fishing communities, and I hope the development at Change Islands and Joe Batts Arm and Seldom will put us ahead of the game. This, as I say, leaves only Fogo itself to be looked after, and the deal will be cast for better or for worse. Whether the people are going to stay on the island and continue where they are I do not know. I don’t think it is a question that even needs to be argued. I don’t think it is important in communities of that size whether they are to remain on these islands or move off to be centralized. The important thing, as far as we are concerned, Sir, is to get the shore facilities down there so that our fishermen can dispose of their catch and spend their time fishing as they want to spend it. The day might come, and is probably not too far distant, when the fishermen will come to the realization that they are using their motor boats, gasoline engines and traps and trawls to maximum advantage and with these motor boats, gasoline engines, traps and trawls they cannot catch any more fish than they are catching. By this time their income will have improved over and above what it is now, but they are going to be in the position of finding it as easy to spend two thousand dollars in 1955-56 as they found it to spend four or five hundred dollars in 1952-53 nor will they be more content, nor perhaps should they be. Only then, Sir, are they justified in disposing of the capital which they have invested in their fishing premises and in their boats and traps and trawls, and shutting up and going to look for something else, a long liner, a dragger or whatever it might be. But I will say this, Sir, their sons not only on the northeast coast but on every coast in Newfoundland and in every cove in Newfoundland, on every island in Newfoundland, have passed the stage where they are tied to the rocky coves because of immobility. As soon as that day comes, Sir, there comes a parting of the ways, and what the fishermen of Newfoundland will do I do not know, whether they will continue to live in the communities in which they now are or pack up and say; why should we sit down here—yet, I am making a fine lot of money—yes I have an old tin lizzie by the door, but where am I going for a drive on Sunday afternoon, where am I going for a picnic, where can my children go? There is going to come a parting of the ways, Sir, and what the fishermen will do, Sir, whether they will continue to live in the communities in which these developments are taking place today or not is something which we cannot decide. Sufficient is it, as far as we are concerned in Fogo District, that we have our plant which is being erected at this moment in a community where the catch of fish is good, and where the catch of fish can be extended; where we do not suffer the complete isolation of the smaller communities. In the larger communities in the District, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is sufficient for us to know that these shore facilities are going there and that the people will have the opportunity to develop the fisheries around our shore. If in ten or twenty years time the motor boat has given place to the long liner and draggers, if in that time people are wanting to move elsewhere, that will be their business. I don't think, Sir, that we can decide that any one place today is the strategic spot where this will happen or that will happen. We can make it happen. Sometimes I sort of feel that probably we should, but I am not going to debate that point now.

MR. HOLLETT: You are doing that at La Scie.

MR. JANES: We are not doing it at La Scie. There is nobody being forced into La Scie. The honourable member cannot tell me about that community. Over and above that La Scie is a fine fishing community, a very fine fishing community.

But, Sir, this programme has been launched. The load of dynamite that I spoke of at the beginning of this address has been dropped into the economy of Newfoundland. And mind you, it is a load of dynamite. Just as surely as we sit here today it is a load of dynamite. It is going to change, Sir, the face of Newfoundland, for the people either one way or the other. It will be a terrific failure, and there will be nothing left or it is going to be a great success, and in ten years' time we will be coming back here praising the 5th day of May, 1954 when this legislation was introduced into this House. I have faith in the fisheries of Newfoundland, Sir. I have just as much faith in the fisheries of Newfoundland as I have in any other industry in the Dominion of Canada. The other day in the same issue of the Daily News as I have already mentioned, I picked up this statement, and I am only going to change one word or two, just so as the House can hear what it sounds like: "You may recall last fall I spoke of the possible future of "Fishtown" and foretold the day when flour would go around the stage head. Believe you me the day is a lot closer now than it was then. I also spoke of better roads, of running water in our town, that also is closer to arrival. On these things really depend the security of the company, for without that, security will not exist for the community; and as we improve our production and lower our cost we will be in a better position to sell more and more fish in the competitive foreign markets, in fact able to sell against any competition presently existing or maybe likely to exist. We still have a long way to go but we will do it. So my friends and fellow workers once again I express pleasure and appreciation of our staff and union and men and with "Fishtown" here, I suggest we all adopt this change for the community. Let us clean up our plants. Let us give "Fishtown" a new look, because we are going to have many visitors here from time to time. "Fishtown" can be a very important factor in a community."

Is there anything wrong with that? Are the economics of fish any different from the economics of mining. That message is to the miners of Bell Island, substituting "Fishtown," for "Iron and Steel" substituting "Food." The economy of mining is the same as the economy of the fishery, and the theory is all the same. When he speaks of competition he means competition. When he speaks of competitive world markets for minerals we know we also have them for fisheries. Yet, Mr. Dickey, the Manager of Wabana can issue this message to the people of Bell Island. I believe, Sir, the time is not too distant when we will have the managers of fish plants in Newfoundland issue messages like that to the people, to the fishermen, to keep the plant geared to the worker who works in the plant, to the administrative staff who operate the plant. Why not? Is not food as important in this world as iron and steel?

It is in that faith, Sir, the faith that food is as important as iron and steel, it is in the faith that the primary producer and workers in the fishing industry can have as good a life and earn as good a wage in that industry as they do in similar industries, not necessarily mining. In other words all we are looking for the fishermen and all they are looking for for themselves is something that will take them out of the starvation bracket and the crisis, although the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's West did not see its existence, the crisis is here, it has been with us for centuries, although it is a little more pronounced today because people are a little more informed, a little more free. And if I live on Fogo Island and I want to get off that island I can do it today without going to a relieving officer and asking for a pass. For years there was no other way for a small number of people to get off that island except to go to the relieving officer and ask for a pass. If I want to leave Fogo and go to Corner Brook or Grand Falls, if I want to move off Fogo and cross the Gulf I can do it, and I don't have to get an extra ration before I go. That is why the crisis in the fishing industry today is more acute, it was always there, but the changes in social and economic conditions over the past five years have made that crisis more acute than ever it was.

Because we have faith in the fishing industry of Newfoundland, because we believe there can be a future for the fishermen of Newfoundland although generations of fishermen, our forefathers, might have starved to death at it, in spite of that, although they died of "TB" and malnutrition, in spite of that, in spite of all that, we have reached that stage in our history where there can be a future. It is my firm belief, Sir, that this legislation which we are here debating now to set up this Fishery Authority and to give them the money and the powers to do what needs to be done is going to bring the day to the fisheries of Newfoundland that generations of fishermen have looked for in vain. We blamed Coaker. We blamed Morine. We blamed every man who ever came into this House, but they were helpless. Most of the time they were helpless. But that is not the situation today. We don't have to feel hopeless and helpless. We don't have to feel helpless about the fact that there might be twenty or thirty thousand people to be relocated and rehabilitated. We don't have to feel that way about it. I think the province is big enough, the Dominion of Canada is big enough to face up to this problem, and for that reason, Sir, I support this legislation.

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am hoping to speak in this debate this afternoon. I was wondering if it would be in order to have a recess of ten minutes.

MR. SPEAKER: Would honourable members please return to the Chamber when they hear the buzzer.

Sometimes I wish I had the authority to ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to bring the police officers to do that. The House will recess, however.

Sitting resumed.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Speaker, what I have to say today will not be, I am sure, either startling or very profound. My knowledge of the fisheries of Newfoundland is not as intimate as that possessed by some of my colleagues here, and my contacts within recent years have not been so very much directly with the fishing industry. However, like all other Newfoundlanders I have some ideas on it. Before I do elaborate on these ideas I should like to express my congratulations to those members of the House who have spoken in this debate. I feel that the standard of debate was extremely high, and the material in the speeches in some strange way seemed to be free of any boring repetition. I sat here and listened, I think, to every word that the Premier gave in that ten or twelve hour marathon of his, and I listened to all the other speeches. In no case did I find myself losing interest in what was being said. I dare say there are people who might say that this House has been occupying valuable time in needless repetition about the fisheries. I do not believe that has been so. It seems to me that we have derived a great deal of valuable information from this debate. I would refer only to one, the speech made here by the honourable member who sits to my immediate left, the representative of the district of Trinity South. I visited every community in his district and spent some considerable time in some of them. Yet I must confess that I heard a great deal about Trinity Bay that was new to me, and helped me to see the thing in a different light. Then again that ten or twelve hour speech made by the Premier enabled me, and I feel certain all the House, to see the fisheries in its proper perspective against all our history and our cultural, economic, racial and geographic background. So that, apart from any intrinsic value of the debate, I feel that we are all like the Ancient Mariner, wiser if not sadder men.

As I listened to the various speakers one thing that struck me was the fact that no person who spoke in this House seemed to be able to speak with perfect objectivity and an unbiased approach. That, I feel, is understandable. It is indicative of the background of us all here that not one of us who has spoken so far has been able to divorce himself personally from the problem of the fisheries. That is true of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition who went back to his boyhood days in Burin and spoke about his family who played some part in the south-coast fisheries. The honourable and learned member for St. John's West went back to his boyhood days in Quidi Vidi. The honourable member for Bonavista South spoke of his father's connection with the fishing industry. The honourable member for Fortune Bay and Hermitage went back to his boyhood associations and the associations of his relatives with the bank and other fisheries. The Honourable Minister of Public Welfare went back to the Bay de Verde District. He spent his boyhood days there and he spoke of his relations and connections with the fishery. That struck me, as I listened, as a rather significant fact. Everyone of us here in this House feels a personal connection, and I suppose a personal responsibility for the fisheries and for fishery development.

I was born and lived in a place for thirteen years. I was thirteen years old, Mr. Speaker, before I saw my first quintal of codfish. I suppose I am one of very few Newfoundlanders who can say that. I did not see my first quintal of codfish until I visited Seldom-Come-By, from which my great-grandfather came. Yet I have to repeat a statement which I made here earlier: I am as much a product of the Newfoundland fishery as any person in this House or in this Province. When I was at a university (I am going to digress a moment) we had in one of our psychology classes something which I dare say some members of the House are familiar with, i.e. the Rachis Tests. These were psychological tests based on impressions one got from looking at a ink blot, someone splashed on paper and passed to a person and asked that person to give his impression, thereby, gaining some insight into the person's character, which was revealed in the spontaneous impression that he had when he saw the ink blot. They tell me, in fact I have seen it, it is practised very extensively. That is one way of trying to get at the bottom of a person's personality, one method they used to try and get some insight into a person's subconscious thinking. Another method was to give a word and ask the person's immediate reaction, given without thinking. For instance the word "water," and from what he responded immediately they would form opinions. I suggest, Sir, that if a psychiatrist were listening to our speeches here in this House he would know a great deal of our background. I feel that here is one place where the lack of the purely scientific, purely objective approach in attitude is not a defect. It is a desirable thing and shows all our inward relationship, our intimate connection with the fisheries, and our sense of responsibility.

In spite of the fact that I was almost a man before I saw a quintal of fish, and although I never had any direct personal contact with the fishery, yet the fishery of Newfoundland is as much a part of me as is almost any other association I had. If you say "fishery" to me what does it mean? It may mean that at one time my great-grandfather leaving Trinity and going down and founding that very settlement the honourable member mentioned, Seldom-Come-By in 1820, and incidentally, I am told, it was his progeny who became the greatest fish killers in Newfoundland. It means to me that on another occasion my paternal grandmother sitting down in Seldom-Come-By waiting for her husband, who left Seldom-Come-By in a schooner, after a successful fishery in Labrador, to come up and get his winter's supply, and the picture of her waiting and waiting for him to come back, and waiting in vain because neither he nor any member of his crew nor his vessel were ever heard of afterwards. It means to me that same paternal grandmother leaving Seldom-Come-By in the middle of December and walking from Seldom-Come-By along that footpath to see the magistrate at Fogo to get the widow's portion, the indian meal and molasses she was entitled to, and bringing that back herself across the island, eleven or twelve miles. She did it only once, Mr. Speaker. Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, it means to me my maternal grandfather, after years of fishing at Joe Batts Arm, again in my honourable friend's district, turning his back on it and going with three other friends and settling in the Bay at a place called Burntville, now the Town of Lewisporte. It means to me my own father, before I was born, for thirty odd years going down to the Labrador, some years getting fish some years not, shipwrecked twice, once at Cape Harrison and on another occasion in a snowstorm, climbing up, I am told, to do something to sails during that snowstorm and spending a month afterwards in hospital with two frostbitten hands.

Every person in this House has a background somewhat similar. We cannot divorce ourselves from the fishery even though we have never seen a quintal of fish in our lives, we are still part and parcel of the fishery. So, Mr. Speaker, that is one reason why all who speak on the fishery in this House are speaking personally on it. Almost every member who spoke has gone back into his boyhood or into his experiences or the experiences of his father or of his relatives somewhere, because the fisheries have been carried on in Newfoundland as a vital and integral part of our very nature. Then again when you say the word "fisheries" to me perhaps it brings to my mind what I saw in the depression years in 1932-33 on the west coast, I saw six hundred fishermen gathered together in one spot, sending a telegram (I was there when it happened) to the Government asking that they be given relief. All the merchants were just about out of supplies. That was in 1932-33, the year before the Commission of Government, and these men sent a telegram saying that unless they be given relief they would have to break into the stores in Bonne Bay to get food for themselves and their families. I think, Mr. Speaker, of the years I spent in Wesleyville, one of the great centres of the Labrador fishery. When I went there, there were twenty-two schooners from seventy to one hundred and thirty tons going down to the Labrador. When I left it four years afterwards there were perhaps half that number. Today I don't believe there is a single one. I remember the frustration, the sense of utter frustration all these men had, the Whiteley's, Hill's and Roberts' and Keans and others, when they came back in the fall. I was teaching their children, going into their homes, and I remember the utter frustration that they had when coming home with the gunwales in the water, and getting prices for their fish that did not in some cases half pay their bills, and many of them having to look forward to relief.

Then mention the fisheries again and I see my own constituents on the Labrador last year and the year before. I travelled amongst them in almost every place of the one hundred and eight communities that are there. I don't think I visited that many.
There were a few I did not get to, but I visited almost every place. When I went in there in June and July, what was the question asked me? "Sir, what do you think the price of fish is going to be this year? Is it going to be as good as last year? Is there any chance that it might be a little better?" These are the impressions, the picture brought to my mind when somebody mentions the fishery to me.

Now, we have here before us a Bill based on a report. It has been stated and argued that this Bill diverges from the report. I will come to that later. This Bill we have here is the essence in principle of the fisheries report and the studies being conducted by the committee, and by the Government, I suppose, generally during the past two or three years. One man cannot speak for a government. One man can only speak for himself, unless he happens to be the head of the Government. I can say that as far as my own approach to this whole problem in the past three or four years, anyway I could throw my weight, anything I could do, I did. One position to take would be to say: Let the fisheries alone. Do nothing about it whatsoever. Let those who are in it stay in their poverty and frustration and disappointment, with all their hopes deferred and with all their resentment. Let them stay in it. That was one choice which was up to me to advocate in the councils of the Government, just as it was up to my colleagues.

Now there are two basic objections to that, Mr. Speaker. One is, from a purely political viewpoint, any government that does that—and history shows this statement to be true—any government that does that will, in the course of time, be booted out. That has happened over and over again. There is hardly a man whose portrait is down there on that wall whose administration was not kicked out basically because they could not handle the fishery problem. That was the basic reason. Often there were other reasons more apparent, more obvious, but the basic reason for their being kicked out was their failure to cope with the fishery problem. So that, looking at it from a purely political standpoint as a member of the government; if we did nothing for the fisheries, and just let it go on, all we could look forward to in the course of time—we might stand two or three years—but eventually we would be kicked out on that issue. Just as soon as a general depression or even a recession sets in then the people would focus their resentment on the government in power. That has always happened, so that from a purely narrow, political standpoint that approach is wrong.

Then there is a still stronger reason, Mr. Speaker, why any government should not adopt the laissez faire approach. That reason is humanitarian. In spite of the mistakes it is supposed to have made, this Government, I think, can claim that it has shown interest in the welfare of the ordinary people of the Province. I think that is a fair statement to make, and no doubt it has a humanitarian approach. No government could ever sit back and do nothing about a problem of such magnitude as the fisheries problem.

There was another choice that confronted us even in the past year, and we did something about it. That was a choice again which confronted all other administrations, and from time to time some action was taken. That is to let things go on until they get so serious that the thing is split wide open, or step in and take some action. Even in my own time I can recall that in 1930 there was some guarantee of supplies, some subsidies and rebates on salt. Last fall we had to do that very thing. We had to step in and give advance payments of a dollar fifty a quintal over and above the offered price. Any government that has been in power any length of time has had to do just that. There again, and nobody knows that better than this present Government, that is only a salve being put on a deep-set malignancy. That is a palliative, and a palliative cannot take the place of surgery.

The third choice open to the Government was to tackle the problem wholesale, to tackle it with imagination, with energy and with courage, knowing that what is being done or will be done may very well not succeed. That is the calculated risk this Government has taken, and taken with the approbation of the great majority of our people irrespective of their political affiliations. They may disagree in detail; they may think it should not be La Scie or Valleyfield or that it should not be Quirpon, but in principle, I believe, that the steps taken by this Government have the approval and approbation of the vast majority of our people. Although there has been some criticism against it, most of this dealt with by previous speakers—I refer to them very briefly, because as a matter of fact most of the criticisms have been very trifling anyway. There was no criticism that could be called serious. As to "Socialization" and "Nationalization" I think these statements are just for the sake of saying something about them.

Sir, at this point I want to repeat again: I think it is a serious mistake for any person in this Assembly to be banging around words like "Socialistic" and "Communism" not only in this debate—I know we can all think of examples in the world today where every liberal movement or every new thing or every constructive idea was labeled, no matter how humane, how sincere it was, it was labeled by the arch-conservative, not in the derogative sense now, but labeled, and when the real thing came along it was found that they had cried "wolf" too often by bandying these words around. We are living in too serious a time to be bandying around unnecessarily words like "Nationalistic" and particularly, of course, "Communistic" and associated labels. I don't think we need to be sticking tags on most of these things.

This is an honest attempt by the present Government, with the support of the people, to try and cope with these most serious problems. I don't think I should refer in any detail to these little criticisms of the honourable members on the opposite side. The honourable and learned member for St. John's West drew attention to so-called socialistic housing in this Bill. This Bill does not ever intend to socialize housing. All that this Government has ever done (and I think that is true of the Government and in fact for most of the governments across the Nation insofar as housing is concerned) was to try and do what private enterprise was unable to do, that was to try to enable people who would not otherwise get housing to get such housing and to become owners of them in the shortest possible time—That is all. That is all, and that is what is envisaged in this legislation here. I am going to enunciate a principle here which has probably been enunciated before, but I am going to put it in my own words. I am sure the Premier has drawn attention to it: No matter how often we bandy around words like "Nationalization" and "Socialization," etc., the fact remains that in every country in the civilized world there is one principle and that is: if some operation of development is necessary in the public interest and private enterprise is unable or unwilling to assume responsibility for that development, then the Government has the right and the duty to step in and do that. Now that has actually faced governments in this province over and over again. I don't need to remind the House that at one time mails were delivered by private enterprise in Newfoundland. I don't need to remind this House that the coastal service, freight and mail were private enterprise. But private enterprise could not do it and operate at a profit and the Government had to step in. We have the same thing in regard to our railway in 1922 or 1923 when the private enterprise could no longer carry on and the Government had to take over and operate it. Nobody then cried "Socialistic" or "Nationalistic" or anything else. As a matter of fact I am going to remind this House in the country in the world where private enterprise has reached its highest point, the United States of America, where the emphasis is all upon private enterprise, yet in 1930, in fact 1940, the Government with the approval of the great majority of the people had to engage in socialistic development in Kentucky and on other great power developments. I don't think any government goes into it because it wants to do so. I think governments go into these things because they are forced to do it, as we are going into it.

I heard another criticism about the location of some of these industries, and I think some of the arguments had been derived from the fishery report, like the criticism of going ahead in places which are ice-bound for several months of the year. I am not going to try and answer that argument in detail, but I am going to say this: It seems to me that if two hundred and fifty or two hundred years ago somebody had gone up the St. Lawrence River and had gone ashore at a spot there and said: "Right here will be one of the world's greatest ports," the critic would have said, "But you know this river is frozen over and you cannot get up here for four or five months of the year in the bad winter. This place can never become a great seaport." I dare say that was said. Ice and the cessation of navigation usually present great difficulties, nevertheless, I understand, on the Quebec side of the Labrador and on the north shore of that area stretching from inside Seven Islands right on out to Blanc Sablon, I understand, development of one kind or another is going ahead there although it is closed by ice for longer periods than La Scie or Quirpon or Seldom. The honourable member reminds me that Seldom is very rarely closed. As a matter of fact I have an idea that too often we place too much stress on this matter of navigation closing. I think in some ways we are a victim of habit. I found some years ago, and I think my predecessor representing Labrador found also that one reason why the coastal service closes down in October in Labrador was due to the idea that that was the time in the year to close them down because the climate in the winter necessitated that. Since it has been found that vessels can operate not only in southern Labrador but even in the northern Labrador right up to December. The fact is that in this past December, ships left Goose Bay, of all places, and came out to Lake Melville in the month of December.

One other criticism which has been made, and I think it has been hinted at from both sides of the House, is that the programme envisaged by the report and by the Bill will affect only certain parts of the Province and will leave others, which you may call sore spots, virtually untouched. They have been cited, as a matter of fact. I don't mind saying here that when I was discussing with certain people the implications of this programme one of the first things I said, as you might expect me to say, was "What about Labrador?" I am sure that is the first reaction of my honourable friend sitting here, "What about Trinity South?" "What about the stretch of coast from Rose Blanche over to Bay d'Espoir?" etc. That is something to be expected. After all we are politicians and we represent districts, and naturally we have to show some concern for these districts. Nevertheless I feel there is a danger that we might overdo that. I will only ask one question here, or suggest a question: If by some chance the Corner Brook mill closed down tomorrow would it affect Bay of Islands and the Humber centres only, or would it affect, let us say, Trepassey or Ferryland or Cartwright? Would it affect St. John's here? We all know that the answer to that question is that it would. And of course the other way around if we can get an industry going, say a new mine this year, no matter where it is, whether it is over in Bay of Islands or in Tilting, it is a very elementary principle that no matter where it is it will affect for good our entire economy. All our people would in one way or another eventually benefit whether they lived at Rose Blanche or on the Horse Islands.

There is just one other thing in passing, which I want to make reference to, Mr. Speaker: I have found a tendency in people to speak somewhat loosely about the Labrador fishery. I think that most people when speaking about the Labrador fishery (I realize this is digressing from the main theme but I am doing it deliberately, Sir) when people mention the Labrador fishery they are thinking of the fishery our people carried on for so many years in schooners going down there. They seem to forget entirely that Labrador in its own right has a great fishery. I have heard here in this House comparisons made from time to time about the people of their district, who are among the best fishermen or depend most on the fishery, etc. If that can be said of any district, I suppose it is true of all districts or some parts of them, nevertheless, if there is any part of the Province of Newfoundland where the people depend almost one hundred per cent on the fishery it is in the Straits of Belle Isle, on the Labrador side. Hundreds of people in that area have never done a thing in their lives except to fish. However, in the last year or two many of them have been changing their mode of living. I will come to that later. I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, no matter how disappointed we might be individually and politically from time to time at the fact that this district and that district is not included immediately in the scheme of things, the fact remains that what is good for one area of this province will be for the good of all areas in the province. The Government, as I see it, has selected the most logical spots for experimental development, and I have not the slightest shadow of doubt that should these developments meet with a measure of success then they will be extended to include other areas not now included.

I have heard here the honourable and learned member for St. John's West look backward a bit. He looked backwards, I thought, with nostalgia. If we could only get back to what it was when he was a boy. The Premier put it a little more strongly, but I think that is a true criticism to make of what the honourable gentleman had to say here—he seemed to be looking back with nostalgia, almost like some of our sailing captains look back to the days of sails and say; “These steamers, what do they amount to? If only we could get back the sailing days.” Or like they tell me, on some parts of the Mainland, people used to look back with nostalgia to the days when they had their horse and cart and used old dobbin and hitched her on to the cart. People look back to these days and think, these are the days, the happy days. We all do that. I went back to my own home, where I spent the best part of twenty years, a couple of years ago. I went back for two or three days to Lewisporte, one of our fastest growing settlements—everywhere you go is a hive of industry. Once everything you knew there was sleepy and quiet, but now nobody has time anymore to talk to you. I could not help looking back with a little regret to the time I spent there as a boy when everything was so quiet and peaceful. They were not tearing roads to pieces to put down mains and you did not have to jump off the road to get away from huge trucks. But I think we have to resign ourselves to the fact that whether we want to or not we cannot go back. It sounds simple to say but some people never get it in their minds. We have to go ahead and move with the times.

The honourable and learned member for St. John's West talked about and contrasted the lot of the women who worked out in the field and on the flakes and stages to the lot of the women in the factories. I recall as a boy visiting Seldom-Come-By and seeing the women out there hauling barrels of fish. I remember seeing one woman cry because of the ache in her shoulder. I have visited a few of those so-called factories that our honourable friend referred to, Job's factory on the Southside, and some years ago I was in the Fishery Products factory in Burin and the year before last, I think it was, I was in the fish plant that was down in Englee in Canada Bay, and I saw the girls and women there working. I could not help feeling that their's was a lot better than that of the women I had seen in Seldom-Come-By thirty years ago. I did not see any slave-driving going on there. I could hear music in the distance, and all the girls seemed to be happy and pleased. I went into the stores at Englee and was amazed at the stock and the variety of goods there in such a small place. The storekeeper told me he did not have that a few years ago but with women and girls making the money they do they want these things, and if we do not stock it here they send to Eatons or Simpsons and get it from there. Our people are rapidly undergoing a revolution. I don't know how many people realize that in 1949 when I first went down in Public Welfare I was told over and over again by older, experienced people in that department that men in certain places, once they had relief because they could not go away to work, were forever satisfied to stay there and get relief. As it happens, Mr. Speaker, one of these places which I remember very well in 1949 was a settlement in Labrador, and I was told that the men there would not go away anywhere even if they found work for them. I don't suppose there is a member in the House today who does not regard as his greatest problem, how to find work for his constituents who are keeping after him for work. From that very settlement—I won't name it—from that settlement only this spring I received message after message saying: "Can you get me work at Seven Islands, Goose Bay, on the railway, at the iron mines, anywhere? I will take work anywhere." These messages are from the very spot where they told me that a few years ago you could not get men to go away to work, and that they were quite happy on relief. That may have been true then but today, I don't believe there is any sizable body of men in any community, no matter how remote or isolated, who are satisfied to stay at home and get relief, if they can get work at Goose Bay, Labrador, the railway, Gander or anywhere else. I don't believe that such a condition exists. But, Sir, it existed a few years ago in certain parts of the province. There is a physical, sociological and economic revolution going on in Newfoundland. Our people, boys and girls, young men and young women and older people too, most of them are living better than they ever lived before. That is revealed in a variety of ways.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, some years ago, in the days of Commission of Government, a certain area was reported on in Newfoundland by a group of specialists in nutrition and psychology and related things. One of the things mentioned in the report was the fact that there seemed to be an inaptitude, a lassitude in some of our people, and the responses, the reactions of the average person seemed to be slower than normal. One of my honourable colleagues mentioned the other day about beri-beri. I know that in a number of places in Newfoundland where people were accused of being lazy—too lazy to work—there were plenty who were without work, and they did not feel like working because of the accumulated effects of malnutrition and near starvation. They did not feel like working, but did not know what was wrong with them.

But after months and years of better food and improved environment no normal man wanted to stay at home on relief. I said there has been a great revolution throughout our Province, and that it has been brought about by a number of factors. That revolution has taken place, and is taking place today. That revolution, that changed outlook in our people, is physical and mental, and it is one of the things that augur well for the success of this new fishery development.

Other countries, Mr. Speaker, from time to time have had to institute revolutions. I don't need to remind this House of what Denmark did, the people and Government of Denmark together, in the latter part of the 19th century, which made that country, small and poor in natural resources, one of the most prosperous in the world. I don't need to remind this House what the industrial revolution did in a few years in heavy in-
I don't need to remind this House what the Japanese people and government were to do not too many years ago with regard to the textile industry, how they revolutionized it overnight. And I am not suggesting that we should use the methods used in Japan and Denmark. We have to find our own solutions and work out our own salvation. People and governments from time to time have met problems similar to ours and have grappled with them and have been able to solve them, and that I think we can do. As a government we could not sit back and allow things to go on as they have for years. We have taken this step, Mr. Speaker, for good or ill, and I submit that we had to take this step. My prayer is that this programme will meet with success. I say that with all sincerity whether I am in politics one year or thirty. And I believe I am voicing what every member of this House feels, on both sides, and the people on the outside too. Here is a great experiment that may cost a hundred million dollars. Nevertheless it is worth trying, the risk is worth taking. I pray for its success, and I believe that it will succeed.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill designed really to provide that all insurance policies issued in Newfoundland should have the same statutory provisions.

At the moment all the Board companies doing business here have used what they call their own conditions that they have prepared and adopted for their own purpose. But other companies are doing business here other than the Board companies listed are doing, through several agencies. There are other companies, I believe, that they are not on what we call the board or not members of the Board of Insurance Underwriters.

The main effect of the Bill before the House is to provide uniformity of conditions, and these statutory conditions will be in all policies. I don't think I need to labour the matter at this juncture, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps there might be some questions that may be required to be answered in committee, if so, I would be glad to answer them on that occasion.

I move the second reading of the Bill.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Amend the Community Councils Act":

MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Speaker, since the passing of the parent Act in 1952 authorizing the creation of community councils we have found from experience, the need for amendments in that Act, for instance the community councils elected were given certain powers of making regulations, but they were not given any powers to exercise control in seeing the regulations were carried out. Consequently one of the first things in this proposed Bill is to try and remedy that lack.

The new amendment in the Bill naturally follows in order to bring the subsequent sections into agreement with the amendment made in the first section. Other provisions in these amendments provide for the appointment of the auditors; some regulations affecting the holding of office, particularly of the new councils. But the second important thing in this Bill is the matter of taxes:

At the present time the community councils are authorized to collect a business tax, but that is arranged entirely on an arbitrary basis. This amendment here wipes out that arbitrary assessment and places upon the Bill a standardized formula, so that it makes it easier for the councils to make the assessments, and not under the arbitrary conditions found under the old system.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HIGGINS: I wonder if the Minister could tell us if under Section 20 the auditors which he proposes to appoint would be civil servants?

MR. HEFFERTON: They would probably come under the Auditor General's Division. Practically all our auditing is done at the present time under the Auditor General's staff, Mr. Speaker.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Amend the Automobile Insurance Act":

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, members of the House will be aware, I think that all the insurance companies doing business in Canada have an organization which is composed primarily of the superintendents of insurance for each province. This organization of superintendents of insurance had a meeting, its annual meeting, last September at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island. We were represented there by our superintendent, Mr. Walter Marshall, or rather by his deputy Mr. J. Channing, as Mr. Marshall was unable to leave the Province at the time.

At that meeting the superintendents, who have with them the representatives of all the insurance underwriters for both fire and automobile casualties, made certain recommendations to the various provinces with respect to automobile insurance. Apparently one of the points worrying them was the extent to which a motor vehicle's liability policy should cover liability for loss or damage arising in cases where mechanical equipment or apparatus is joined on or attached to the automobile or trailer. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, having seen going through the streets some such automobiles having attached to them compressors and other attachments.

The object of this amendment is to provide for the matter of insurance of such vehicles. This matter was discussed at that meeting and all the provinces were asked to approve legislation covering these points; loss or damage due to the operations of a mobile crane; the truck being stationary during the operating of welding or spray painting; or similar apparatus.

I don't think the House is really very much interested, Mr. Speaker, in the minute details. But the recommendation made was that the Automobile Insurance Act be amended by adding clause (g).

"For loss or damage arising from the ownership, use or operation of any machinery or apparatus, including its equipment, mounted on or attached to the automobile with a separate power or heating unit, while at the site of the use or operation or such machinery or apparatus."

There is also another minor amendment under Clause 9, which I might say is uniform throughout Canada.

MR. HIGGINS: That is the amendment to Section 24? Would the Honourable the Attorney General tell us what that amendment means? It means nothing to me.

MR. CURTIS: There are times, Mr. Speaker, when I would like to refer these Bills to the Department to which they relate. I could have given the answer a couple of weeks ago as to just what it is all about, but this order has been on the Order Paper so long: It simply involves the uniformity factor, and there will be no difficulty there. I think it deals with unfair allocations and duplication in adjusting cases.

MR. HIGGINS: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, we could wait for the committee stage.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Speaker, the distinction here is between a car that is damaged in collision and which is insured, and a car which perhaps caused the collision and which is also insured; and there is a division of the liability under the "Contributory to Negligence Act." However, these are highly technical matters and I don't think they interest the House. They certainly do not interest me. I certainly agree, Sir, that it is of the utmost importance to have all the laws of all the provinces uniform so that if a stranger comes here we may know that his insurance is the same as the insurance policies on other cars here. As long as the insurance policies are the same I don't think we need worry.

I move the second reading of the Bill.

MR. HIGGINS: I appreciate the feelings of the Honourable the Attorney General that we should have uniformity and when a stranger comes here be able to read his policy and understand it. I am not much interested in the Bill either, but must say that I want to know all about it. With all due respect to the Honourable the Attorney General I must say his explanation has not clarified things for this side of the House. Unfortunately the Premier is absent. Perhaps we will be able to see it in Committee, Sir.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.
Second reading of Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited, Dominion Wabana Ore Limited and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Ltd."

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, the House will be glad to know there is no trouble about this Bill.

In 1929, Mr. Speaker, the government of the day made an agreement with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company with respect to taxation of ore at Bell Island. It will be remembered that at that time the House ratified a twenty year agreement, which agreement expired in 1949. That agreement exempted the company on Bell Island from any and all taxation, including income tax, and prescribed that in lieu thereof there should be a tax, I think, of ten cents a ton on the first million five hundred tons and three per cent on the excess. This taxation was enforced in 1929 and expired in 1949. In 1950 we collected for the year 1949, $114,167.24. But the House will remember that we signed an agreement with the Federal Government which provided for the collection of income tax by the Federal Government. Income tax, therefore, was no longer collected by the Provincial Government of Newfoundland. That meant, Mr. Speaker, that we could no longer collect income tax from the Bell Island Company. At the same time we were permitted to impose a mining tax, and we did impose a mining tax of five per cent on the profits of the company.

Now everything went very well, Mr. Speaker, for the first year, because in the first year they did not come under the tax because they had an agreement with the government to pay the royalty of ten cents and three cents. But since 1952 we have made no collections from this company whatsoever. In spite of the fact that very, very considerable tonnage of ore was produced and shipped we found that the taxation of 5% was completely inadequate, and that we had gotten no returns whatsoever that were worth while from the company. So that in that year we passed a special Act making the tax a 25% tax on their net profits. With that taxation we did get in the year 1951 an amount of $156,000, but for the year 1952 we were able to collect nothing, and for the year 1953 we were able to collect nothing, because in 1952 the company filed a statement showing a loss of $257,000 and in the year 1953 a statement showing a loss of $36,000. As long as that company, Mr. Speaker, filed reports showing a loss our taxation, whether it be 5% mining tax or 25%, is not worth collecting.

So that we have been forced to reconsider the situation of the taxation of this company. We are running into some difficulties with Ottawa because of our rights being limited under the Tax Rental Agreement, as the House knows. But we do think that, if we renewed the agreement as it was in 1929, Ottawa would permit us to collect it in lieu of the mining tax, as the Mining Tax Act is not a satisfactory Act to collect under. You really need to be an expert to know how to analyze these company statements. Certainly, in the case of Bell Island the case is aggragated by the fact that when we took office all these companies were consolidated and both Sydney, Bell Island and other operating companies were all one. Since union they have split up their companies again, and it makes it possible from now on to collect from them.

But in 1950 when we found the old Act had expired we were asked by the company if we could give them an extended agreement. We refused to do so and elected rather to try and collect under the Mining Tax Act. However, in spite of the fact that we increased the amount of the taxation under that Act to 25% we got no satisfactory returns. So that we felt the time had come when perhaps we ought to look over the situation again.

The object of this Act, therefore, is to authorize the Government to enter into an agreement, which agreement, you will notice, Mr. Speaker, is retroactive to the date of the expiration of the old agreement, and goes back to 1950, and will provide for payment for the years 1952 and 1953, and from now on at the old rate that was in existence, with, however, this improvement, that whereas the old rate was ten cents a ton on the first million and three cents a ton on the excess, the new agreement calls for ten cents a ton on the first million and a half and eight cents a ton on the excess. Now the agreement calls for an increase in their operations from a million and a half, which was their capacity then, up to two and a half million which is to be their new capacity. We are releasing them from all taxation, but of course in our release from taxation we are not releasing them from income tax because our income tax is assigned to the Federal Government. So that I consider, Mr. Speaker, and I think the House will understand that this new agreement is much superior to the old agreement, inasmuch as these companies are now although still paying income tax, paying the same taxation to us as they had paid in the old days when we exempted them from income tax.

Now I notice the hour is late, and I do not want to bring back members. So that, perhaps at this juncture I might move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion debate adjourned until tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move that all further Orders of the Day do stand deferred.

Motion carried.

MR. CURTIS: I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Tuesday, at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 18, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Notice of Motion

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): I give notice that I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill, "An Act to Amend the Local Government Act."

Notice of Question

MR. W. J. BROWNE: To ask the Acting Minister of Economic Development or the Minister of Finance, to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. Were tenders called for the supply of machinery to be installed in
   (a) The Gypsum Plant.
   (b) The Cement Plant.

2. If tenders were called and received, lay copies of them on the table.

3. If tenders were not called for the supply of machinery or equipment for these buildings why were they not called?

4. If tenders were not called were contracts in writing entered into by the Government for the supply of machinery? If so, table copies of the contracts in each case.

5. Were tenders called for the construction of:
   (a) The Gypsum Plant.
   (b) The Cement Plant.

6. If tenders were called for the construction of the said plants or either of them, table copies of tenders received.

7. If tenders were not called for the construction of the said plants or either of them, who drew the plans for the buildings, who drafted the specifications, and who estimated the cost of the building?

8. What was the estimate and what was the actual cost of each building?

9. What was the duty paid value of all machinery in each plant?

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Acting Minister of Economic Development or the Minister of Finance, to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. How much money has been supplied to the Newfoundland Hardwoods Ltd. as working capital since it began operations?

2. Has this Company accounted for the expenditure of this working capital to the Government at any time?

3. Has the Auditor General the right or duty to inspect the books of accounts of the said Company on behalf of the Government?

4. Has any money been advanced to the Company since Jan. 1, 1954, for any purpose? If so, give date and amount and purpose.

5. What security, if any, has been given the Government for such advances?

Answers to Questions

Question No. 88—Stand.
Question No. 89—Stand.
Question No. 90—Answer being prepared.

HON. G. POWER (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have referred to Question No. 75 to the Department concerned.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the honourable member for St. John’s West asked a question, No. 87. He was not here when it was called and I did not answer it. I may say, that I am getting the information, but as far as I know we have had no prosecutions. Not because my department does not desire to prosecute such cases, but frankly, we find it very difficult to decide just what items should be prosecuted and what items should not. Several times, the police have, on my instructions, brought in samples of literature. On one occasion at least I committed this literature to a friend of mine who is a clergyman, and the reply I got from him with respect to the items I handed him on that occasion was that two of the books were pretty good reading. The worst thing about them was the cover. The third one, he said was just pure trash. The difficulty is to know who is to judge in what cases we should prosecute. We could, of course, have censorship, but I understand no one wants that. On the other hand I would like to assure my honourable friend that if any particular case is brought to the attention of the department we will be very happy to prosecute. The fact that we have had no such prosecutions is not due to the lack of desire, but is entirely due to not being able to satisfy ourselves that in any case that has come to our knowledge we could obtain a conviction.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question? Has anyone complained to the Attorney General?

MR. CURTIS : I did get a complaint which came from this clergyman himself who is connected with educational institutions in the city and the complaint that reached him was that these things were being sold in certain schools. I immediately sent for the police to go up and search the place. They found nothing that would justify action. So, no prosecutions have taken place.

MR. J. HIGGINS : Mr. Speaker, if I may—were there not persons prosecuted last year for selling some pencils around Conception Bay area?

MR. CURTIS : I believe, Mr. Speaker, there was some prosecution, now that I think of it. I did indicate that I did not know of any and that I would ask the police and the R.C.M.P. to find out the correct answer, if there were any that I did not remember. Now that my honourable friend has mentioned it, I do have some recollection of that.

Question No. 78—Answer tabled by Mr. Keough:

Question: How many liners have been built during the past fiscal year? Who are the owners? How much was paid by way of bounty on the hull and how much on the engine of each vessel?

Answer: Six long liners were completed in 1953-54 the details of which are supplied in Schedule A attached hereto. Nine additional long liners are under construction, the details of which may be found in Schedule B. Four draggers were also completed which, while not classed as long liners are designed to operate also as long liners. Details of these vessels are to be found in Schedule C.

Question: Have any other vessels been built for which a bounty was paid? If so give the name of the owner, state kind of vessel, amount of bounty together with loan, if any, made on each vessel.

Answer: During the year under review one general fishing vessel and one vessel for general trading were completed. The details requested on these vessels are to be found in Schedule D.

In the various stages of construction are two vessels classed as draggers and nine fishing vessels of the ordinary type which are not classed as long liners or draggers. The details requested are supplied in Schedule E.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Loan</th>
<th>Mortgage</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Brooklyn&quot;</td>
<td>W. C. Hancock sold to Peter Hackett</td>
<td>Woods Island</td>
<td>6,750</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;William Frank&quot;</td>
<td>Gerald Hayley</td>
<td>Bonavista</td>
<td>2,200</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Donald Diane&quot;</td>
<td>Mel R. Power</td>
<td>Portugal Cove South</td>
<td>13,600</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Tommie L. Vincent&quot;</td>
<td>Raymond and Bramwell Vincent</td>
<td>Newtown, B.B.</td>
<td>6,843</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Doris and Lydia&quot;</td>
<td>Arthur L. Sturge</td>
<td>Valleyfield</td>
<td>11,200</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 27-53</td>
<td></td>
<td>Princeton</td>
<td>3,500</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Chesley Abbott&quot;</td>
<td>Howard P. Lake</td>
<td>Fortune</td>
<td>14,681</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Veteran Explorer&quot;</td>
<td>Wallace Smith</td>
<td>St. John's</td>
<td>33,750</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Mercedes&quot;</td>
<td>Wilson Evans</td>
<td>English Hr.</td>
<td>27,195</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Fortune Bay&quot;</td>
<td>Reginald Buffett</td>
<td>Fortune</td>
<td>26,364</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Miss Beaumont&quot;</td>
<td>Ralph Burton</td>
<td>Port Anson</td>
<td>3,000</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 2-52</td>
<td></td>
<td>St. John's</td>
<td>11,291</td>
<td>No</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Island No. 10&quot;</td>
<td>James Ellsworth</td>
<td>Carmanville</td>
<td>2,363</td>
<td>Yes</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
SCHEDULE “A”

List of Long Liners on which Bounty Payments were completed during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Total Bounty Paid on Hull</th>
<th>Bounty Paid on Diesel Engine</th>
<th>Paid 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Wilson M.”</td>
<td>Harold Mouland</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>$1,750.00</td>
<td>(not fitted with diesel)</td>
<td>$700.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Brooklyn”</td>
<td>William C. Hancock</td>
<td>Brooklyn, B.B.</td>
<td>1,960.00</td>
<td>$700.00</td>
<td>1,960.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Gertrude Flemming”</td>
<td>James Flemming</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>1,890.00</td>
<td>1,900.00</td>
<td>2,740.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“William Frank”</td>
<td>Gerald Hayley</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>1,190.00</td>
<td>600.00</td>
<td>1,160.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Don and Diane”</td>
<td>Michael R. Power</td>
<td>Ferryland District</td>
<td>3,060.00</td>
<td>1,400.00</td>
<td>2,285.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Tommie L. Vincent”</td>
<td>Raymond and Bramwell Vincent</td>
<td>Newtown, B.B.</td>
<td>3,150.00</td>
<td>1,400.00</td>
<td>3,875.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SCHEDULE “B”

List of Long Liners not ready for Final Bounty Payments during Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Bounty Payments Made on Hull</th>
<th>Paid in 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Bright Eye II”</td>
<td>Clyde Little</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>$1,570.00</td>
<td>$525.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Jennie R”</td>
<td>John Russell</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>1,365.00</td>
<td>1,365.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Doris and Lydia”</td>
<td>Arthur L. Sturge</td>
<td>Valleyfield, B.B.</td>
<td>2,025.00</td>
<td>2,025.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>“Barbara and Darlene H”</td>
<td>Ralph Hicks</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>1,687.50</td>
<td>1,687.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 16-52</td>
<td>James Justinean Philpott</td>
<td>Cottle’s Island, N.D. Bay</td>
<td>875.00</td>
<td>875.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 25-52</td>
<td>Frank Ayles</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>875.00</td>
<td>875.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 27-53</td>
<td>Ralph Moss</td>
<td>Princeton, B.B.</td>
<td>875.00</td>
<td>875.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 29-53</td>
<td>Heber John Keel</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>1,260.00</td>
<td>1,260.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 35-53</td>
<td>William M. Lane</td>
<td>Summerville, B.B.</td>
<td>1,260.00</td>
<td>1,260.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
SCHEDULE "C"

List of Dragger Type Vessel, fitted as Long Liners, on which Bounty Payments were completed during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Total Bounty Paid on Hull</th>
<th>Bounty Paid on Diesel Engine</th>
<th>Paid 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Chesley Abbott&quot;</td>
<td>Howard Patten Lake</td>
<td>Fortune, F.B.</td>
<td>$3,690.00</td>
<td>$2,100.00</td>
<td>$5,790.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Veteran Explorer&quot;</td>
<td>Wallace Smith</td>
<td>St. John's</td>
<td>5,220.00</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>6,720.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

List of Dragger Type Vessels, fitted as Danish Seiners, can be fitted as Long Liners if owners wish it, on which Bounty Payments were completed during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Total Bounty Paid on Hull</th>
<th>Bounty Paid on Diesel Engine</th>
<th>Paid 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Mercedes&quot;</td>
<td>Wilson Evans</td>
<td>English Hr. West, F.B.</td>
<td>$3,690.00</td>
<td>$1,500.00</td>
<td>$2,760.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Fortune Bay&quot;</td>
<td>Reginald Buffett</td>
<td>Fortune, F.B.</td>
<td>4,140.00</td>
<td>2,600.00</td>
<td>6,740.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SCHEDULE "D"

Fishing Vessels other than Long Liners or Dragger Type Vessels on which Final Bounty Payments were completed during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Total Bounty Paid on Hull</th>
<th>Bounty Paid on Diesel Engine</th>
<th>Paid 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Miss Beaumont&quot;</td>
<td>Ralph Burton</td>
<td>Port Anson, Norte Dame Bay</td>
<td>$1,820.00</td>
<td>$700.00</td>
<td>$1,580.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

General Trade Vessel on which Final Bounty Payments were completed during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name of Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Total Bounty Paid on Hull</th>
<th>Bounty Paid on Diesel Engine</th>
<th>Paid 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Bongate&quot;</td>
<td>John Bradley</td>
<td>Bonavista, B.B.</td>
<td>$1,160.00</td>
<td>$520.00</td>
<td>$1,680.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Schedule E

List of Dragger Type Vessels not ready for Final Bounty payments during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Bounty Payments Made on Vessel</th>
<th>Paid in 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 2-52</td>
<td>Frank Collins</td>
<td>St. John's</td>
<td>$2,050.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 37-54</td>
<td>Eli R. Grandy</td>
<td>Garnish, F.B.</td>
<td>$1,305.00</td>
<td>$1,305.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

List of Fishing Vessels other than Long Liners or Dragger Type Vessels not ready for Final Bounty Payments during Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Bounty Payments Made on Vessel</th>
<th>Paid in 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 700</td>
<td>William Burton</td>
<td>Little Hr. West, P.B.</td>
<td>$654.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 764</td>
<td>Kenneth Rideout</td>
<td>Cottle's Island, N.D.B.</td>
<td>210.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 761</td>
<td>Hiram Hounsell</td>
<td>Jackson's Arm, White Bay</td>
<td>700.00</td>
<td>700.00</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 29-53</td>
<td>Gerard M. Kelly</td>
<td>Beau Bois, Placentia Bay</td>
<td>770.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 682</td>
<td>Kenneth Power</td>
<td>North Harbour, St. Mary's Bay</td>
<td>746.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 716</td>
<td>Joseph W. Vokey</td>
<td>Little Harbour, T.B.</td>
<td>1,620.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 15-52</td>
<td>J. H. Marshall</td>
<td>St. Margaret's Bay, St. Barbe Dist.</td>
<td>420.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Island No. 10&quot;</td>
<td>James Ellsworth</td>
<td>Carmanville</td>
<td>735.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 697</td>
<td>James McQue</td>
<td>Bar Haven, P.B.</td>
<td>560.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Schedule F

List of General Trade Vessels not ready for Final Bounty Payments during the Fiscal Year 1953-54

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Vessel</th>
<th>Owner</th>
<th>Address</th>
<th>Bounty Payments Made on Vessel</th>
<th>Paid in 1953-54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Laura Spencer&quot;</td>
<td>Frank Bond</td>
<td>Bay L'Argent, F.B.</td>
<td>$1,520.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>&quot;Miss Vera&quot;</td>
<td>Reginald Weir</td>
<td>Little Bay Islands</td>
<td>787.50</td>
<td>787.50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 590</td>
<td>H. S. Sansford</td>
<td>St. Anthony</td>
<td>160.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 715</td>
<td>Stewart Blanchard</td>
<td>Bonte Bay</td>
<td>2,680.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 8-52</td>
<td>William Goosney</td>
<td>Bonne Bay</td>
<td>140.00</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Permit No. 31-53</td>
<td>J. &amp; P. Croke</td>
<td>St. Brendan's, B.B.</td>
<td>600.00</td>
<td>60.00</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I addressed a question to the Honourable Minister of Public Works a short while ago, asking if any work had been started. I wonder if it has been brought to his attention, as he was not here when I asked the question?

HON. E. S. SPENCER (Minister of Public Works): The answer was given yesterday, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand the honourable gentleman did not hear, or that he would like me to repeat it.

MR. BROWNE: I was not here.

MR. SPENCER: I can simply say that I have not the question with me. I remember that the answer to the first part was, none.

MR. BROWNE: If the answer were tabled, that is enough.

MR. SPENCER: No it was a verbal answer.

Question No. 83: (1) The answer is none. (2) Of course, if the answer is, no, in the first part of the question, there is no further answer required for the second part.

Orders of the Day

Second reading of a Bill, “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority”: (Adjourned debate).

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Bill my first wish is to congratulate the Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Cooperatives on the manner in which he introduced this bill. I think I may claim to have had a longer acquaintance with the honourable minister, and I hope a friendship, than anyone else in this House. We were at school together and we played football together. I know it is rather hard to concede that today. He has fallen into more flesh than I have, and than he had then. It is always a pleasure to hear the Honourable Minister when he speaks in this House. His introduction of this bill was a very clear and very lucid presentation. Indeed it is a pity that the time occupied by the Honourable Minister was so short in comparison with the remarks of subsequent speakers. I refer in particular, of course, to the marathon address of the Honourable Premier; because whilst the Minister did keep his feet on the ground, or in the water, whatever it is proper to use as a reference; in debating this subject the Premier took off into the wild blue, and he brought us everywhere. He came down to earth only occasionally just long enough to rap these numbskulls on Water Street, so that at times it was rather difficult for those of us on this side of the House, with the limited intelligence with which we have been credited, to follow just what was going on.

I can say quite definitely, speaking for the Opposition, that we have just as much interest in the fisheries as any honourable member in this House. Through some strange reasoning one would get the impression that members on the government side of the House seemed to think that we of the Opposition are not interested in fishermen or maybe that is just a matter of good political cackle, i.e., it is good policy to suggest that that crowd in the Opposition don't care about the fishermen; that the fishermen are the peculiar province and peculiar interest of the Government alone. Now, Mr. Speaker, I don't think that that thought... is perhaps quite fair to our honourable friends opposite. I don't think that they really intended to convey that impression. Anybody who got that idea would not be doing himself justice. But I would point out Sir, that we of the Opposition, whose minds are not taken up with such things as real estate and other mundane matters are quite interested in this plan. We don't propose to brush if off with cursory discussion. It is a bit unfortunate that all the time during this debate the impression seemed to be given that St. John's is a separate place from the rest of the country; that those people in St. John's are so benighted that it is good enough for them to be represented solely by the gentlemen who sit to my right here, and to your honour's right. That is not quite fair, Mr. Speaker.

This Bill is a very important bill to the whole of Newfoundland. Whatever one may in the heat of political debate say, you cannot take St. John's away from the rest of the country. Indeed St. John's is a very important part of the country, and St. John's is just as much vitally interested in the development of the fisheries as any district represented by any of my honourable friends opposite, and I do not exclude Fogo. So that I do say, Sir, that it is unfortunate that sometimes the suggestion creeps in that St. John's is not interested, and that the Opposition is not interested. The Opposition is very interested. This question of the fishery is not one that is not new. This question has plagued every government since we have had Responsible Government. Is this Bill the answer to it? I don't know. The fishery question is possibly the hardest and most intricate question that has ever been discussed in this country (I suppose in the absence of the Premier it is all right to say "country.")

The Bill itself, one gathers, is a by-product of the Walsh Report. Now when the Honourable the Premier was speaking I think at some stage in every one of the five days when he did speak, he referred to the Walsh Report as "That great document." Indeed Mr. Speaker, long before this debate last year, those of us who were in the House will remember the most elaborate introduction, the extravagant description that the Premier gave of the Walsh Report. I remember quite clearly now his explaining to us how he had to go away and lock himself up so that he could read it undisturbed; and he warned everybody that it was not a document which could be easily understood. I doubt it very much if a Philadelphia Lawyer would understand it. I am quite frank enough to admit that I know of at least one St. John's Lawyer who does not pretend to have taken in all the implications. But one would get the impression from the build-up that was given this thing that never before had there been an investigation into the fishery problem. Whilst I don't lay claim, Mr. Speaker, to being a very keen student of history, even very little research would let any one know that as far back as 1880 there was a fishery development committee. Their report is still on file. That report was at the time not a particularly optimistic one. The principal thing, if one could follow the reports of it as given in the papers of the day, the principal findings of that committee were a restatement of the fundamental principle that the quantity of production must be tied up to the demands of the market. Now that principle is fundamental in any form of economic enterprise. It is so fundamental that even I can understand it myself, Mr. Speaker. And I propose later on in my few remarks to revert to the question of marketing. Sir, that was in 1880. Now in 1937 there was another committee, headed by the late Honourable Mr. Justice Kent, which did a lot of investigating. It is a very fortunate thing, for the Government of this country that we have judges of the Supreme Court, because, it seems that every time a particularly thorny problem comes up there seems to be a judge of the Supreme Court available. I can well understand why it is that the Government has such reverence and respect for the "Lordship" but the Kent Report itself recommended a modernization of the system of production. It made what at that time was regarded as rather advanced thinking when it made the suggestion that the future of the fisheries might probably be in fresh fish rather than in salt fish.

Now the Kent Report, like the Walsh Report, was a very exhaustive study of the situation as it then was. I don't propose to go into it, but, as I understand the report, it seemed the basic thought they got out of their investigations, was that the days of the salt codfishery, the great days of the salt codfishery, if one could call it that, seemed to have been on the decline; and that the future lay in fresh rather than in salt fish. It was subsequent to the publication of the Kent Report that the first real exporting of fresh fish began. Now the Kent Report was published in 1937. There was then some implementation of the proposals contained in that report, but nothing was done in a large way until sometime in the late season of 1943, when the Commission of Government, which had been in power since 1934, began to look to the fishery as a possible aid to Britain during the war.

In 1944 Commissioner P. D. H. Dunne announced in a broadcast speech the Commission of Government's Scheme for the fisheries. Mr. Dunne was the gentleman, who amongst other things, introduced a brand that is still in popular demand; i.e., a very popular brand of rum. But Mr. Dunne is remembered for other things than his "Trouters' Special," Mr. Speaker, because it was Mr. Dunne who brought forth this scheme, which in very many particulars might be said to have the advance copy of the Walsh Report. There are recommendations in the Walsh Report that are almost word for word, at least thought for thought, as found in the Dunne Report. Mr. Dunne suggested a fishery development programme which would be centred around fresh fish. He suggested locating these centres in some fifteen places around the Island. It is true he did not name the places such as La Scie, Quirpon, but he named other places. It is peculiar enough that in these very places he had in mind, and for which he had the same type of development in mind, i.e., they were going to have wharves and plants, and they were going to be made into townships, very much along the lines spoken of by the Premier.

MR. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, could the honourable gentleman tell us what year Mr. Dunne made these suggestions?

MR. HIGGINS: In 1944, in a radio address. I think it was January 21. I am not sure of the exact date, but I know the year was 1944.

Indeed when one goes back to the Dunne Report and to its proposals the similarity in thinking is so very marked that one almost wonders if the present Fishery Development Authority is not really the Dunne Plan dressed up in post-war verbage. It is true that Mr. Dunne, at the time he made his announcement over the radio, was not an elected member of the people. He was a civil servant. He had a secure position. He did not have to go back to the people and say; "Well, this is our plan. It is a good plan, and we want you to re-elect us because it is a good plan."

No, Mr. Dunne was secure. Mr. Dunne could afford to say, we the Commission of Government have examined this problem. This is our considered opinion, and this is what we are going to do. Mr. Dunne, as I said, could afford to outline his scheme in very blunt, (very stilted, at times) language. The people of 1944 were not privileged to have the Dunne Scheme outlined with the colour, and imagination that has accompanied the presentation of the Walsh Report and this particular Bill into the House. But, I say, Mr. Speaker, that when one compares the two plans the basic principles are remarkably similar. Now that brings me to a point.

The Premier, in one portion of his address, wandered, having told us all the wonders that were going to be done, then he dropped down on the lower level and became almost conservative in his thinking for a moment. I say conservatively with a small "c," and he said, "Of course it may be that this plan has come too late, maybe this plan should have been brought in five years ago, and if it should be found now that it is too late it is only fate catching up with Newfoundland." Now, Mr. Speaker I take it that when this Government took over in 1949 from the Commission of Government that it had available to it all the information which the Commission of Government had garnered during its years of office. It had available to it the very report of which I am speaking now, the Dunne Report. If that scheme were sound in 1944, if that ground work were available to the present Government in 1949, if the points that I have outlined in the Dunne Report were in fact there and were known to the government in 1949, how can the Government now turn around and say—we could not go ahead before; we did not have the information. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that any impartial observer will find in the Dunne Report these very things I have said existed in it, these very suggestions of centralization of the people into some fifteen places around the country the same suggestion of the development of these places into townships. The Government said—"we did not know it before and could not have done it before, and if it is too late don't blame us."

I say, Mr. Speaker, that excuse is not sound and does not hold water.

If these proposals were in the Dunne Report, and I say they were, then the Government had them available to them. If they did not think they were worthwhile why are they now suddenly so valuable in 1954? That is a very moot question. Surely, Mr. Speaker, we are not going to be forced to the conclusion that the Walsh Report, and I say this without reflecting in any way upon the gentlemen who comprise that committee, surely we are not going to be forced to conclude that the Walsh Report is merely an elaborate re-examination of the same question answered by the Dunne Report with a few additions meeting problems that have come up since? Is the answer, Mr. Speaker, that the Government had this information in 1949, but that the Government was so obsessed with economic development that it merely postponed the question of fishery development? Is that the explanation? May I suggest, that may very well be the answer to the question, because if these facts were known to the Government, if these proposals were available to the Government, and they were, I suggest that they might well have been put into operation on a limited scale long before there was any necessity for convening the Walsh Committee.

When we look back and find the feverish flurry of activity that went on in the early years of this Government's life, when we find that everybody was told that the country was going to be re-shaped, that there were going to be increases all over the place, it is very easy for one to think that the fisheries were in fact neglected, although the means for their assistance were available, or the suggestions for them and their improvement were available, because the Government was not interested in the fisheries but was interested in economic development. On that point, Mr. Speaker, somewhere, I don't hope to try and find out just at what stage, the Premier said various things because he was talking so long, but somewhere in his speech he did express misgivings as to whether the Government would be able to get the men to go back fishing now. Well that feeling may be very well rooted in the Premier's mind because certain it is that in the first few years when economic development was the theme, the fisheries were certainly put into the background, and the people were encouraged to forget the fisheries.

Now I don't want to resurrect old sores, because they apply equally on both sides of the House, I am told, but there can be no doubt that certain people at certain times during the early years of this Government's life did say to their people—you are better off on the land, working in the factories or working in new jobs, and that was the general feeling. There was no one member who said that. That was the general impression that was given to our people—forget the fishery—go out and make your quick buck—go to Goose Bay. Go to Seven Islands. Get your cash wages. Don't be kidding yourself, depending on a price in the fall. Mr. Speaker, that philosophy was deliberately fostered among our people. Now the Government expresses misgivings. The Government may well express these misgivings, because the Government has largely created that type of thinking.

Now to get back to Mr. Dunne and his proposals: Mr. Dunne expressed his ideas in recommending the setting up of these fifteen central ports and what they would have. Mind you we must not forget that Mr. Dunne was not interested in sentiment. He was not interested in traditions of Newfoundland. He was simply a civil servant sent out here to run this crowd of blacks or blue noses or whatnots. He was sent out from London to run this country as cheaply as he could. Well, one of Mr. Dunne's ideas was that quickly they should get these people into ten or a dozen or fifteen centralized places, allowing them to cut the expense of maintaining services to small settlements. They would have to give them one post office instead of a half dozen post offices and a half dozen postmasters in half a dozen places—get them all into one place and cut down our expenses.

That same idea is still sound today. The thing about it is this—and I will later come to a point made by the honourable member for White Bay—the only thing about that, Mr. Dunne's thinking was predicted solely on the blueprint that he had drawn up for himself. It did not take into account the feelings or desires or home ties of our people. It is all very well, Mr. Speaker, to say: "You shall go from your own place and live somewhere else because you are going to be better off." You cannot dispose of the human element quite as easily as that, Mr. Speaker. You have to take into consideration that the Newfoundlander is cross-grained enough to say that this is where our family lived for the past hundred years and this is where I am going to live. If you get that situation repeated in too many places your whole scheme is seriously affected. So that it is not simply a matter of proving to yourself by a set of figures that such and such is the most desirable scheme. You have got to settle it to the people's satisfaction. And I do say, Mr. Speaker, that not the least of the difficulties in this new scheme is going to be to convince our people that they will be better off by moving out of the place where they have lived, and where their fathers and grandfathers lived all down through the years, and move them into some place where they will have electric light and sewerage and bowling alleys and beer parlours. They can be just cross-grained enough, Mr. Speaker, not to want it. They may be satisfied with the way things are going. These are imponderables which of course it is really pointless to discuss at this stage, other than to revert to them as things that unfortunately will have to be considered as we go along.

Now, Mr. Dunne, in connection with these ports, envisaged frozen fish, frozen fillets, filleting plants as the main product of that type of fishery. These plants would be geared to use all sorts of fish in season. In other words, Mr. Dunne said, you will get cod at such and such a time, and other fish at such and such a time. Mr. Dunne used that in just ordinary parlance. Today the Premier describes that type of thing as an in-balanced operation. Now that is what I mean, Sir, when I say that one is tempted to wonder if the Walsh Report and the advocacy of it in this House by the members of the Government is not really the old Dunne Report dressed up in 1954 wording, because Mr. Dunne had exactly the same idea as the Premier, but he would never in his wildest dream refer to it as an in-balanced operation. The principle is the same. The idea is the same. It is just in the way that it is expressed that it is different. Mr. Dunne in his talk hazarded the point that the inshore fishery alone would not provide a steady supply of all kinds of fish for these plants. His idea was that some of the fishermen were going to take up deep sea fishing. Now he did not, and probably was not advanced enough, he did not speak of Danish Seiners or long liners. His idea was draggers.

Now basically, and I run the risk of the Minister later mowing me down, but basically the principle was the same whether they got their fish by way of druggers or by way of Danish Seiners. That is immaterial. The idea was that the yield of the inshore fishery would not of itself be sufficient, and would have to be supplemented by deep sea fishing. Then, Mr. Speaker, he went on to discuss the financial angle of the operation.

Now it must be borne in mind that this was ten years ago, in 1944. Mr. Dunne's figure was not fifty nor a hundred million. Mr. Dunne, as I said, was an English Civil Servant, a conservative fellow. He said; "I believe this thing could be done, could be financed for an outlay of fifteen million dollars." But here is where we come to the radical difference between Mr. Dunne's type of thinking and that which prevails in today's Liberal Government. Mr. Dunne, a cautious fellow, suggested that the government would only put up about four million and the remainder would come from private enterprise. If anybody were to suggest that today, I imagine the Government would look at him much as though he were cracked, because this Government, does not believe in private enterprise. All it wants is a fellow to come along with the scheme and say, we will give you the money. No objections. Dole it out to you, my son, and the crazier the scheme the better. I imagine if any of our friends in the Government were to read Mr. Dunne's report and see that on the money angle he said that we can do it for fifteen million by government assistance or investment is going to be limited to slightly more than 25%, they would say that it is a good thing we got clear of the Commission of Government. That man must have been cracked. He wanted people to spend their own money—that is not good government. Certainly not, we have to be elected. Ask the people to invest their own money? No, the government will do it for you. There is no doubt about it, Sir, Mr. Dunne would be a minor leaguer in today's operations. Anyway, Mr. Dunne's scheme did have an effect on the production of fresh fish for export. I am afraid I have not got the statistics, but I do know that the production of fresh fish jumped tremendously between 1943-44 and 1948. I have no doubt that my honourable friend, the Minister of Fisheries, has got these figures, but subject to correction by him, I would venture to say that the export of fresh fish at least doubled in that period between 1943 and 1948. It went on to say, some ten million pounds to at least twenty million—these figures are approximate. But in that period from 1944 to 1949 the Commission of Government made about three million dollars worth of loans to companies interested in fresh fishery development. And since 1949, here again I speak subject to correction, the present Government spent approximately the same amount and maybe slightly more, but certainly nothing in excess of five million dollars. But now we are being committed, indeed, Mr. Speaker, we have been committed since June 1953 to this new scheme for the fisheries. This scheme which places high limits on the authority of the fishery development group itself, I think they have the right to borrow up to twenty-five million dollars. That is undoubtedly a very much larger sum than we have or that the Government has previously committed itself to for any form of aid to the fisheries. Indeed the only thing quite like it was the amount of money that the Government extended in creation of new industries. Mr. Speaker, we are all interested in the fishery.

As I say, we would all like to see the fisheries resuscitated, indeed it is not a matter of liking, we can't afford not to see them. But if the criterion of the success of this venture is going to be the measure of success that attends the ten million dollar expenditure in economic development then I say that the Premier’s estimate of a fifty-fifty prospect of success is generous. One does not want to flog a dead horse, but certain it is that twenty million dollars that went into economic development has not yet manifested itself by way of any steady return. We are told that the Premier himself is quite satisfied that in time all these industries will be a success. I hope so, Sir, but in the meantime with that money gone we are now faced with the prospect of committing another amount. We have been told that twenty-five million dollars is by no means the end of the amount that is going to be spent on this scheme, and that it may reach a hundred million over a period of years. I do say, Mr. Speaker, that to expend that amount of money on that type of thing without more thorough investigation seems to me to be following the rather peculiar precedent of the economic development. It has just occurred to me, I was reading an old paper the other night which was referring to government assistance. I think that was from a paper known as the “Evening Telegram” which is published in St. John’s. It is not required reading for this House, I understand, but away back on the 17th of May 1929, Dr. Campbell, M.H.A. introduced a Bill for a franchise for a company known as the Newfoundland Wool and Silk Mills. One of the promoters was E. Collishaw. It stated that the mill will employ three hundred persons. The government is to put up a guarantee up to twelve thousand dollars a year for the next fifteen years. We have been told, Sir, that everything that happened in this country happened under the tenure of office of the Liberal Government—that was economic development in these far off days of 1929.

MR. CURTIS: And it was a Liberal Government.

MR. HIGGINS: I don’t know what happened to Mr. Collishaw. History has recorded it. But I won’t go into that. But in these days the Liberal Government is prepared to finance anybody on any kind of wildcat scheme. However, I have strayed from my point, Sir.

Now, I don’t propose, because at the outset I stated my lack of qualifications. I hope and trust that they have not been proven too clearly as yet, but I don’t propose to attempt to analyse all the implications of this Bill. But there are certain aspects of the legislation which are novel, the powers to expropriate land are covered in section 27 and section 28 and section 29, and they certainly are rather sweeping. Section 27 proposes that whenever the Authority deems it necessary to acquire any land for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking under this act for any purpose incidental or related thereto, or for the purpose of assisting or encouraging the establishment or development of any fishing enterprise by any persons or for any purpose incidental or related thereto, and the owner of the land refuses to accept the sum tendered by the Authority for the land or for any other reason the Authority deems it advisable to do so, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may expropriate the land.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is, as I say, a very sweeping power. It is almost, and my honourable friend the Attorney General or any honourable member of the Government will agree with me, that type of verbage is what you find in a company. In other words, if the Fisheries Authority or any person who is interested and gets the ear of the Fisheries Authority decides La Scie is going to be a big place and wants to put up a beer parlour and goes to the Authority and says: Bill Smith got a place down there and he and his family have been there for the last fifty years. But I think a beer parlour would be a nice adjunct to the development of the town. The Authority could go to Bill Smith and say:

"Here is a hundred dollars. We are taking your house." And the foolish fellow says: "No. I don't want to give up my house." "It does not matter whether you want to or not, we are taking it."

MR. CURTIS: Surely my honourable friend does not sincerely think that he would as a lawyer advise anybody that his right to take the property for a beer parlour could be brought under that section.

MR. HIGGINS: I say, with this Government, maybe it would be brought under any section; I make no apology. That power is in that Act for any purpose related to the development of any area. And we have been told that part of the things to be provided for all is the amenities of civilization for this town. And amenities, according to declared policy of this Government, provide provision of amusement centres, places of recreation. I do say I have sufficient faith in, shall we say the discretion of the Government, that I don't think they would take a man's house to make room for a beer parlour. But the point is, Mr. Speaker, the power is there. However, that is only one part of section 28. It goes on to show how the person is notified. And then under Section 29, "The Authority shall make compensation to the owner of any land expropriated under this Act, or to the owner of any land used or injuriously affected by expropriation for all damages necessarily resulting from the exercise of the powers given under subsections (1) and (2) of Section 28 and in all cases any advantage which the owner may derive or likely to derive directly or indirectly from the contemplated work and operations shall be taken into account in reduction of the compensation."

(2) The amount of compensation to be paid shall be ascertained by the Board of Assessors which shall consist of three persons one of whom shall be the chairman of the Board, who shall be appointed by the Authority, and the other two of whom shall be appointed, one by the Authority and the other by the owner of the land, and if the owner refuses or neglects to appoint an assessor within thirty days after being required by the Authority in writing so to do, or if the owner cannot be found or is incapable of appointing an assessor, the Authority may appoint the third as assessor."

In other words, Mr. Speaker, they are setting up this business to assess the compensation a man is entitled to. The Chairman is appointed by the Authority and one member is appointed by the Authority and one is the owner's representative.

MR. CURTIS: Is that not much better than what happened in the case of Pepperrell?

MR. HIGGINS: I don't know of any one complaint at Fort Pepperrell. Although they were named by the Government of Newfoundland and not by the people expropriating. The Government of Newfoundland expropriated and were getting paid back. They did name the three people. But in those days the Government of Newfoundland was not creating the Authority taking over there.

MR. SPEAKER: If I might break in on the conversation which has developed: I might suggest this point might be more properly taken up in the committee stage.

MR. HIGGINS: But, Mr. Speaker, I am enjoying myself. You would not spoil that? As I say, and I won't labour this point, the authority given here is too sweeping. The position here is that the people who are doing the expropriation are appointing two of the appraisers. The findings of the board presumably will be made by a majority finding, so that the owner of the land may find himself in the position that he does lose his property without his side of the question being considered, and, sub-section 6, Sir, provides:

"The assessors are deemed to be assessors and not arbitrators and their finding or the finding of any two of them shall be deemed to be the award of the Board of Assessors and is final in all cases."

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is, I suggest, a very sweeping authority and a one-sided authority. That, Sir, brings me to the question of compensation, and what I regard as a very important contribution to this debate on this subject made by the honourable member for White Bay. Indeed that honourable gentleman—I am sorry he is not in the House today—but it struck me that his words of caution to the Government would entitle him to that place, which of course he is always welcome to accept, on this side of the House. Because, Mr. Speaker, the honourable member for White Bay made certain points (and I have clipped the press report out so that I would not be too far astray. But I never heard him yet complain of being misquoted. I take it I am on fairly safe grounds in referring to the speech he was reported to have made). He did make five suggestions to the Government, of items which he felt should be considered very seriously in the course of the administration of the Authority. The first one was the matter of compensation for abandoned property. In other words if people are shifted from one location to another—when I say shifted I don't mean shifted in the sense that the Acadians were driven out—but if people are induced, put it that way, whether by the pull of gravity or the lure of the machine, to go somewhere, what compensation, (and I did use the word induced not seduced) what compensation are they to be given for the property they have given up; now that is apart altogether from the question of land that is taken. As I understood the honourable gentleman he was referring to people who left their homes, left everything there, so to speak, other than their movable property, and moved, say, to La Scie. Are you going to compensate that man for what he has given up, the land he has tilled, the house he has lived in?

The second point he made was—what happens if a man gets settled in this new place and settles his family and then before he can re-establish himself and pay off what he owes he dies? These are, I think, the two most important points. He did refer to other things; he felt that the Government should investigate this matter more thoroughly and come up with a better odds that fifty-fifty. He thought they should try and gear the percentage of the chances of success a little more heavily in favour of the scheme.

His fourth point was of course not acceptable to some other learned members. He suggested that he would rather see it at St. Anthony rather than at Quirpon for it was a bigger centre.

Fifthly he made what can only be generally accepted as a most reasonable suggestion, i.e., that during the time that this Authority is learning how to work the fishermen be not allowed to starve, and that some measure of price support will have to be continued.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these points are very well made, and they are points that deserve the serious attention of the Government. With the type of development that is envisaged there are a lot of complications that can set in. It is all very fine for the Government to say we are going at such and such a place to set up an unbalanced operation. Is that going to mean that fishermen who have just done shore fishing all their lives are going to be told you can no longer fish solely in the inshore fishery, you must be prepared to go out in trawlers or long liners or something else? It is not too easy, Mr. Speaker, to change the habits of a lifetime. And I predict that the Government is going to find some difficulty in making its blueprint be entirely acceptable to the fishermen.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is one section of this Bill which to me is more important than any of the others i.e., sub-section (c) of paragraph 18.

"The Authority shall investigate existing and potential markets and marketing methods for produce of the fisheries and, where necessary, undertake such research and promotion as it deems desirable to enlarge, improve and increase the markets available to these products."

That, Mr. Speaker, I feel is the most pressing job that this Authority will have to tackle. All the other things are important, but without markets where are we? We can spend millions on experiments of one kind or another. We can build all these model towns. We may invent or devise artificial fish driers that will produce fish just as good as the sun-cured product. We can do all these things, but unless we can profitably sell what we produce, what will it all be worth? Mr. Speaker, we are right back to the question posed by the Fishery Development Committee of 1880. We must realize the fact that the quantity of production must be geared to the market demands.

Mr. Dunne—and I finally found Mr. Dunne’s Speech. It was a radio address delivered by Hon. P. D. H. Dunne, O.B.E., Commissioner for Natural Resources, Jan. 21. 1944. The source is the Legislative Library of Newfoundland. I shall read the first paragraph: "The purpose of this address is to lay before the people of Newfoundland the proposals of the Government for dealing with the re-organization of the fisheries in the postwar period."

MR. SPENCER: Is there nothing as to why they did not implement the policy?

MR. HIGGINS: There was some suggestion Mr. Dunne was speaking for himself. This little thing, Sir, which I cannot table because it belongs to the library, now purports to be the proposals of the Commission of Government, and as such, I take it, can be regarded as the considered opinion of that body at that time. The gentleman says in his pamphlet:

"We must avoid the lazy assumption that all requires to be done is to set up a vast organization for producing certain kinds of fishery products and that then Newfoundland's troubles will vanish. In fish production, processing and distribution many things can be done, but if they are to be of permanent value these must be done economically and at a price which will enable the product to be sold at competitive prices in the foreign markets, and at a profit." Now that principle was recognized by Mr. Dunne. But, as I said, it was only a re-statement of the principle of the first fishery development committee of 1880.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do say that, in my incompetent opinion (I don't profess to be competent to express an informed opinion on the fisheries. I might, like Bill Rodgers, only know what I see in the papers) for what it is worth, markets come first. The economy of any industry must be based on what the markets want, and on our ability to supply the demand with profit to the fishermen. It does appear that at the present time the filleting industry may be reaching the point where production capacity will be equalled by any presently foreseeable demand. As far as the salt cod-fishery is concerned, I believe that we can sell more salt codfish, but only if existing exchange restrictions are abolished or moderated by certain consumer countries. Now, as I say, I am not sufficiently versed in the intricacies of exchange. I do think, however, that the Honourable Minister of Fisheries will agree with the statement that, in the present condition of international exchange, our foreign markets for salt codfish are seriously restricted. The likelihood of our increasing our sales of salt codfish in these markets is conditional on a moderation of the exchange conditions presently in existence. Then again these markets will only open up to us if we can supply a standardized product at lower prices. That is, we must reduce our cost of production before we can make larger sales, and we must give a standardized product.

To get back to the fresh fish filleting industry: Up to the present time, although the Government has assisted many firms by way of loans, the greater part of the financing has been done by private enterprise. Now I am not going into the "Breaded Sticks" field because breaded sticks are a very recent development and the extent of government assistance there is not known, but we do have reason to think that it has been substantial. In the filleting industry the government has helped but private enterprise has largely gone ahead as well. Now in this field the Government can be of real assistance in the question of exploration of outlets and combined with that in a study of kinds of fish food presently being accepted by our consumer countries, and the prospects of introducing new fishery products into these countries.

Now, the Premier did say, and say very properly and reasonably that one of the things which this Fishery Authority would set up would be some form of laboratory. I think he did not overestimate the necessity of and the importance of that. I don't attempt to emulate his flights of fancy in his description of it, but I do say that one of the primary tasks which this Fishery Development Authority should undertake is the provision of or the acquisition of first class industrial chemists who can experiment with every possible aspect of the utilization of fish as a basic raw material. Because, Mr. Speaker, it is just as well for us to face up to the situation as it exists in this country today with employment only on defence projects and employment in construction on a large scale is definitely declining. It is going to decline. It is not too long ago that we saw in the papers and heard over the radio that down at Pepperrell there is going to be a cut back in the number of people employed, and Pepperrell and the American Bases generally have been a major source of employment. Most of these people have come from the fishery and are people who were formerly employed in the fishery and went on to construction work and defence work because it meant the ready dollar. It meant the cash money at the end of the week instead of waiting until the fishery wound up in the fall. As these jobs close thousands and thousands of our people will be left with no alternative but to go back to the fishery. In the meantime while this thing is getting underway you will have to adopt various expediencies, maybe price support or maybe a variety of things. But it seems to me that market research and exchange moderations are the only safe road to follow for a cure of the fishery problem, and they are vital factors in the success of this programme.

Now, there are other aspects of this thing, Mr. Speaker, such as the question of remuneration of the members of the Authority. These are things that may properly be debated in committee. I don't agree with a lot of things that were said by the Premier. I don't agree with his remarks on the fish merchants, I think that may be very good politics but it is very poor statesmanship, it is only dividing our small community into two camps, because we must not lose sight of the fact that this country is only a little dot out in the Atlantic. It is not a huge country where you can afford to say, as he has done, that east is one and west another. We are all together and unless we do go along together, Sir, we have no hope. I cannot see the common sense of setting one place or one district of the community against the other. I can't see the necessity of singling out these unfortunates as doing nothing but going to Bally Haly and going to cocktail parties. I have never missed a cocktail party, to which I have been invited in recent years, and any one I go to, Sir, I am up to my hips in cabinet ministers. But I don't think that is anything against their character, they are just the same fine people all the time. I don't think this fact that one attends cocktail parties can be regarded as a yardstick by which to assess one's contribution to the community as a whole.

In closing, Sir, I would just refer to a broadcast I heard the other night over that fine, fair radio station CJON. It was on Sunday past at 9:00 o'clock when Mr. Max Lane met the press. The press consisting of two gentlemen, Mr. Don Jamieson, who is known to us all; and Mr. Jeff Stirling. Certain questions were put and Mr. Lane was asked what he thought of the Fishery Development Authority. He said, I hope it will succeed, we all do.

He was asked, what did he think of the prospects of success, and he very properly and very wisely refused to commit himself, but he did say that his people (and by his people he meant the Federation of Fishermen) were willing to give their support to the thought behind the Fishery Development Bill. He did, however, express the hope that time would be taken to consider all the problems of the fishery. He said, "You know sometimes we rush into schemes. I would like to see the Fishery Development Authority act on its own rather than act as a medium whereby people may be able to get money for their own schemes. Some schemes look grand on paper but I have seen such schemes and when they are tried out they are miserable."

Mr. Speaker, that is the approach that we all, I submit, must take to these questions of the Fishery Authority. This is not a time for rushing madly into this, building here and building there, slapping out money hand over fist. This is a time to make haste slowly. This is the time, Sir, I do suggest with all respect for experimentation, the money that is going to be spent in the implementation of this thing is money that has to be borrowed. We have not the money to pay for it. The Government has not. They have got to borrow it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the light of our earlier experience in investing money (and I use "investing" now charitably) in investing money in economic development I do say that before this Government asks this House to be a party to raising more money to be spent in fishery development we should have some assurance that it is going to be money that will be spent not in one glorious spree but money that will be spent wisely in the experimentation and in the organization generally of this thing; money that will only be spent on a large scale when the investigations of the Authority have shown a guaranteed chance of success. When I say guaranteed I mean a chance better than fifty-fifty. Fifty-fifty may be the gambler's chance. Fifty-fifty is too reminiscent of "Make or Break," "Survive or Perish." We cannot afford to spend money in a pursuit of that philosophy.

I do say, Mr. Speaker, there are in this Bill many, very many good things. We of the Opposition can support the principle of the Bill with reservations along the lines that we have all intimated.

I do finally, Sir, congratulate the Minister again on what to me at least was the most lucid presentation and discussion of the whole topic. I assure him that on this side of the House we wish him well in his endeavours. As long as we are satisfied he is proceeding conservatively we will be with him.

MR. I. MERCER: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the honourable member for St. John's East, and it gives me very much pleasure to adjourn the debate.

Motion carried.
Second reading of Bill, "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with the Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation Limited, Dominion Wabana Ore Limited and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of this debate yesterday I had nearly completed the remarks that I had in mind to make, but I might briefly recapitulate:

First, the agreement made in 1929 was for twenty years and expired in 1949. That agreement provided for payment by the company of ten cents a ton on the first million tons of ore produced and for three cents a ton on the excess of one million tons. That agreement gave the company exemption from income tax and also gave the company exemption from all other taxation, and limited the contributions of the company to the community of Bell Island, to ten thousand dollars taxation in the case of their having a town council, and provided for the payment of four thousand dollars a year to the Department of Public Works for road improvement.

Then, Mr. Speaker, we had the tax agreement which Newfoundland signed with Ottawa in 1949. Under that agreement we were unable to continue to collect a royalty from the Bell Island Company and we were limited to a tax known as the Mining Tax Act. That tax was originally a tax of five per cent. We endeavoured as far as we could to secure the right from the Federal Government to continue to collect a royalty from the Bell Island Operation but in that we were not successful because the Tax Agreement which we had signed had to be similar to that signed between Ottawa and all the other provinces, and any amendment on one would automatically open the door for the amendment of every other tax agreement.

Unfortunately in the tax agreement royalties were limited to royalties payable with respect to mines which were still owned by the Government and leased to the operators. In the case of Bell Island the company owned it freehold, and therefore, royalties could not be collected.

When, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, we did put in a Mining Tax Act of five per cent, we found that as a result of the 1950 operation of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company that their taxation based on a five per cent income basis brought in less than $31,000 actually $30,264.00. At the Session of the House of Assembly which took place in 1951 we increased the Mining Tax Act retroactively from five per cent to twenty-five per cent, putting however a ceiling saying that in no case should the Dominion Iron and Steel Company be called upon to pay more than ten cents for the first million and a half tons and eight cents for the additional tonnage. As a result in that year instead of collecting thirty thousand dollars we collected in all $105,000 and that amount was subsequently paid by the company. In the year 1951 the company's obligation to the Newfoundland Government was, under this Mining Tax Act, $156,000 and that amount was paid early in 1952. But for the years 1952 and 1953 we collected nothing because the company during these two years lost between two hundred and fifty thousand and three hundred thousand dollars.

Under the proposed legislation now the agreement we propose will be retroactive, and one of the first amounts due under that agreement will be a payment of $350,000 by the company, representing the years 1952 and 1953. In other words we will receive not only ten cents for the first million and a half tons and eight cents for the excess tonnage during the present year, but we will receive it for the years 1952 and 1953.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, it is not desirable for us at this moment to sign this agreement, and therefore, the Bill before the House enables the government to sign it, and the government will only sign it when it has received final authority from Ottawa. We need that authority because, if this is a taxation which they will not permit us to collect under the Tax Rental Agreement it is no good to us, because if we collect the tax, they will only deduct the equivalent amount from the amount payable to us under that agreement. On the other hand the company will not sign it unless the company in its turn is assured that it will be allowed to deduct the amount paid to us as an operating expense of the company.

Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think I can safely recommend this legislation to the House, and I move the second reading of this bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I have been told there is no reason why we should have any objection to this, except in so far as the minister has just explained, we are not sure whether we are allowed to collect such a tax. It seems to me a rather strange thing to ask the House to give authority to enter into an agreement under some scheme whereby we know not whether we have the right to enter into such a scheme.

I see no objection to giving the government authority to collect money from this company especially in view of the fact that they have been able to get away without taxes for the last couple of years. That brings me back in memory to the taxation which was originally supposed to go on the development of the iron ore in Labrador. I think there the stipulation was that we were to receive five per cent of the net profits. In the first instance it was ten cents a ton and later it was amended by the Commission of Government to five per cent of the net profit. I have almost continuously tried to point out that it is almost impossible to collect money on such a taxation as that five per cent on the net profit from any company digging out of the ground. It is the steel companies who make the big profits afterwards. If we had some way of getting five per cent from the steel companies we could probably get some revenue.

In this case I think the effort to obtain a certain number of cents per ton is certainly right. I don't think any of us have any objection to getting what money we can. On the other hand we have to remember that the company itself manifested last year that it could not pay any taxation without upsetting the company and consequently upsetting the earning power of two thousand men employed there. Therefore, the government would have to use a little caution.

It has been drawn to my attention by the Honourable and Learned Member for St. John's West that we are asked to make this retroactive to the 1st of January, 1950, which fact, I believe, the minister has already pointed out, and that we would thus collect two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand dollars.
Personally I see nothing wrong with it. The only objection I have is that the government seems to have asked the House to give them authority to do something which they know not whether they have the authority to do. That is rather strange. What I mean is that we are giving them the authority to do something which may be impossible for them to even attempt. That is the only objection I have to this Bill. I support the general principle.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I was not present when the Attorney General introduced the Bill and only heard part of what he had to say. Having read the provisions of the Bill coupled with the fact that it is retroactive and there is some talk about the company having an expenditure of six million dollars during the next two or three years, I would like the Attorney General when he replies to tell us if there has been any negotiation with this company along these lines, or whether this whole thing is going to be put up to them with an ultimatum, saying, this is what we want you to sign and you have to sign it. Does the company know anything about this agreement, and there has been no negotiations, how can we go to the company and say to them: Here is a measure we want to be retroactive to over four years.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member knows very well that is not the point I was referring to. Continue your speech!

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I was only making a comparison to the way this bill was introduced. I did not hear the minister say, and I understood the company concerned may not be consulted regarding the provisions.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I object to the honourable member talking out of turn. He was not here when I spoke, and I said the company had been asking for this legislation since 1950, I said that they have been asking for this agreement.

MR. SPEAKER: Exactly. If the honourable member were not present he has no right to infer certain things he did not hear.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Speaker if the Attorney General advises us now this has been negotiated—But I understood, or drew the conclusion that it had not been consulted at all—If it has been then, of course, what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has said, should go without saying.
DR. ROWE: There is one point, Mr. Speaker, which perhaps I might contribute to this debate: That five per cent profit is an excellent thing when everybody is making a profit, and especially during the early years of the Korean war when most of the mining companies were making a profit. Last year, I believe, for a while the bottom went out of the metal market, and most of the mining companies last year, especially the last six months, had deficits, not only in Newfoundland but everywhere, some of them very heavy. As a matter of fact that was true to such an extent that I did hear of a number of mines that had to close down in British Columbia, that is a number of marginal mines that had been operating at a small profit during the early part of the Korean War, and in fact during the course of the Korean War, closed down across Canada—especially in the base metals, because the bottom went right out of the base metal markets. I am not sure, but I don't think any operators in Newfoundland showed any profit at all during the last six months, and I think that is true right across Canada.

As the Honourable Leader of the Opposition pointed out, if we could get at the people who manufacture the lead, zinc, etc., then we would have something.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Speaker, did I understand the Honourable the Attorney General to say that the company has been requesting this type of legislation? Are we to understand that they are familiar with this Bill?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry my honourable friend was not here when I was speaking because I did say that immediately after the expiration of the twenty-year agreement in 1949 the company got after us to renew the agreement and that we were not prepared to renew it, as we did not know exactly where we were under the Tax Rental Agreement, and we felt that there might be some objections to our collecting the tax. We put on the Mining Tax Act thinking that would do the trick, but it did not. We even increased the amount in the Act from five to twenty-five per cent so that we could get money out of them, but that did not do it. So we have come back to the position where we want to get that money—We feel that a mine that is taking millions of tons of ore out of our territory every year should pay a taxation. With this agreement worked as it is now that can be achieved. In fact it has been intimated to us that agreement will be acceptable but we have not that as yet copperfastened, we have not got it from the Federal Government in black and white, and we do not want to sign anything or have anything signed in black and white until we know exactly where we get off. I think possibly in view of the fact that this is not an income tax we are collecting but a royalty which is in lieu of all taxes, on these grounds we may be able to get it from Ottawa—that is in view of the fact that it is a payment in lieu of any taxation. So that we are keeping our fingers crossed. Just as soon as we hear from Ottawa, and if this House gives it approval, we will execute this agreement, but we will not execute it until we are sure, Mr. Speaker. We do not want to have to wait until next year because the company will naturally only want to sign and pass us three hundred thousand dollars if they are sure we are authorized to act.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this bill.
On motion bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

Committee of the Whole on Bills:
(1) "An Act to Amend the Apprenticeship Act."
(2) "An Act Further to Amend the Workmen's Compensation Act."
(3) "An Act to Amend the Slum Clearance Act."
(4) "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with the British Newfoundland Corporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons."

(Honourable Member for Green Bay Chairman of Committee:)

"An Act to Amend the Apprenticeship Act."

Clause 1 carried. Clause 2 read:

MR. F. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I should like the minister to explain to the committee what is intended under paragraph 3, sub-section 2:

HON. C. H. BALLAM (Minister of Labour): I take it, Mr. Chairman, that is this reference to "All persons in an Area." If in a certain area a firm in this area having an apprenticeship agreement, that agreement is set up by an employer and employees committee—then any person in that plant, other than a registered apprentice, would have to have a certification of qualifications, and no such person would be employed in that plant other than an apprentice or a certified person. It does not mean that people working in these plants, etc., will now be certified or apprentices, but nobody would be hired on there unless they are given a permit by the Board or by the advisory committee. I may say in every industry where we have an apprenticeship agreement we have an advisory board in that industry chosen from the employees and the employer. These are the ones who set up these and suggested these recommendations, etc., and they have all gone over this so often they are more familiar with it actually than I am, but that is the purpose there, Mr. Chairman—It applies in any area or any plant where they have an apprenticeship agreement, other than those who are operating there and those with a permit and those who have gone through an apprenticeship training, persons would not be employed unless they had a permit to do so.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, that is not quite clear to me. The minister's explanation has it to mean an area.—Just what does an area mean? Does it mean an area like the City of St. John's or a town in which any trade operated? If for instance St. John's, Corner Brook and Grand Falls are designated as areas and certified for and certain designated trades could operate, does it mean that after the passing of this section that a tradesman such as a carpenter would have to have a permit from the Board to go to work, or does it not? What does it mean?

MR. BALLAM: The only reason for "Area" being here is so that it would not apply generally throughout the country. If, for instance, the motor or plumbing or electrical trade is designated, well it could be a designated trade in the Area of St. John's, if you like, but need not be a designated trade in Clarenville, unless they so wished. The honourable member mentioned carpenters and whether carpenters could go to work. That depends entirely on whether they have
MR. FOGWILL: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied, because if we go on under this same section we find in (m) that the Board may by permit exempt from agreement any persons engaged in designated trades when regulations made under paragraph (i) come into force. In other words when a person is a tradesman working in a certain area he would have to receive a permit to go to work. Further on in that section which we are going to come to, you have a clause which provides for the issue of permits and cancellation of permits. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the government is attempting now to provide legislation whereby any person in a trade designated by a said trade apprenticeship board in any area designated such a person would have to receive a permit to go to work under this amending Act, otherwise he could not be employed, because it definitely states “requiring all persons in that area other than registered apprentices to receive a permit.” In other words a man can’t go to work without a certificate and has to get a permit. He will be exempted from that Act by the issue of a permit by the Board.

MR. BALLAM: Mr. Chairman, I think that is already done now by the plumbing and electrical trades in St. John’s. And if any other trade like the carpenters trade, if they choose themselves to select an employers’ and employees’ committee, and if that becomes a designated trade, and it is their wish their company be so, well I don’t see—It is not something that is new or uncommon. It is the same probably across the Dominion and it is being recommended to us by the Board and by the advisory committees, and I don’t see what further we need to do. I don’t see what my honourable friend is thinking about. We are not going to prevent anybody from working on a job nor from getting a job because he is not an apprentice. If he is through his apprenticeship, he may be in a particular trade where it would be required that he have a permit showing his ability, if you like.

MR. FOGWILL: It does not follow if they had an apprenticeship that makes them competent because of the fact that they served an apprenticeship. There are just as many good electricians, plumbers and carpenters who have served no time.

Mr. Chairman, apparently what the government is trying to do is to assure that nobody with the exception of those already working at a designated trade will be issued permits under this amending act, and that from then on nobody else will be able to work at it under this amending section, or a section that we will come to later, limiting the permits to the tradesmen. I am sure no tradesmen in this country asked for that. It is absolutely ridiculous that they should have asked the government to limit their employment. I don’t know who the government was advised by under this amending act. If a tradesman comes to me to do work, I want to choose my own man whether he has a permit from the Minister of Labour or an apprenticeship, I don't care, if he is able to do the work to my satisfaction.

MR. BALLAM: There is nothing to prevent him. If you went to the electrical trade here in St. John's you will find that. Probably the other trades might like the same thing.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, who issues a certificate of qualifications?

MR. BALLAM: In every designated trade they have their boards set up who work in conjunction with the apprenticeship board of the government. They have a board at Bowaters and an apprenticeship system on which they have gone in with us, and they have an advisory board in the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company. They have the same in Canadian Machinery Industries Corp., an advisory board set up by the employers and employees. In the matter of the vehicle repair trade there is the same thing and the carpentry and plumbing and electrical apprenticeship advisory committee. These are boards selected by them individually who through our Director of Apprenticeship and our instructors would advise on these things.

MR. HOLLETT: In any case, Mr. Chairman, a young boy, who is not an apprentice and goes to any designated areas in this country or any area as it says here "All persons in any area other than registered apprentices and persons who receive a permit under Section 27A." And "prohibits the employment of persons who do not hold such a certificate." It seems to me you are putting a hardship on a man say from Burin, if you like.

MR. BALLAM: It seems to me a man can't get a job unless he has a certificate of qualifications. There is no board there to give him such a certificate. I am wondering if the thing is quite clear there—my honourable friend from St. John's East knows more about it than I do.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, this is amending Section 9 of the Apprenticeship Act, and Section 9, I think, is concerned with the powers of the board. In other words this section here deals with apprenticeship boards. And the apprenticeship board will decide whether or not a person will be allowed to work unless he has a certificate, or a permit from the board.

MR. BALLAM: The board is not going to say, you can't go to work. I don't think we are looking at it in its proper perspective at all. It is merely that the board "May" do all that.

MR. HOLLETT: Make regulations?

MR. BALLAM: Yes, the board or on recommendation of the board the Lieutenant Governor in Council may do all these things. I may say that when first I had a look at it myself I was a little bit concerned, but I don't think now that there is anything to worry about.

MR. FOGWILL: I don't think I am satisfied with this "May" business. They "May" do this and they "May" do that. The fact remains they have the power to do it under this section. They have the power here to see to it that a person will not receive employment unless he has a permit or a certificate from the board, which they will issue. I think between the two of you you will make a hash of it.
MR. BALLAM: Under this it gives the board power to recommend to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. I don't think they will suggest anything to prevent Tom Jones or anybody else from getting a job. It always has to be approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council who may make regulations providing for this and that and something else, if and when.

MR. HOLLETT: Why should the Honourable Minister ask for authority to make regulations to prohibit John Jones from getting work.

MR. BALLAM: I am certainly not doing that.

MR. HOLLETT: But you are asking authority to do just that, prevent John Jones from doing just that.

MR. BALLAM: I beg your pardon! I do not like these words. The Minister is asking nothing of the kind. It merely asks an amending bill which will give the board more power to make regulations to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. The Lieutenant-Governor in Council asks for the authority, but I am not looking for it. Don't worry about that. You are just trying to make something out of it actually.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, we are trying to make something out of it. I must read that section again. I say the Minister is asking us to give him authority to recommend to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that he make recommendations to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that John Jones can't get a job. That is exactly what you are doing, and that is what I said in the first place, and I say it again—you are just doing that.

MR. FOGWILL: Dictatorship. Mr. Chairman, I am still not satisfied with this section. I think the section should come out, or the Minister should let it stand.

MR. BALLAM: Mr. Chairman, I don't see why it should stand, we have gone through all this before.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, if the honourable member for St. John's East, who is after all familiar with this, requests this section stand over, I think he ought to be granted that courtesy, Sir. Surely it is important.

MR. BALLAM: Let the whole thing stand over as far as I am concerned, but I don't see the point.

MR. CURTIS: Why do you want it to stand. Do you want to consider it again?

MR. HOLLETT: I believe the honourable member for St. John's West would like to look into his objections again.

MR. FOGWILL: I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the section should come out altogether. I don't think it is for the best interest of the people concerned anyway. I certainly do not think, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister was well advised by any reputable group of tradesmen in St. John's or elsewhere in the Island on such a clause as this.

MR. BALLAM: Take that out and we might as well tear up the amendment.

MR. FOGWILL: I make my objections to it.

MR. BALLAM: To what point?

MR. FOGWILL: To (3).

Section 2 stand. Section 3 carried. Section 4 read.
MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I would like the Minister to explain to the committee the new Section 27A. What it means and what can be done by the director of apprenticeship under this new section.

MR. BALLAM: Well in a designated trade, if there is an agreement of apprenticeship, except for boys who may be home from college during the summer time or something of that nature, any young person engaged in these particular places, between the age of fifteen and twenty-one should enter into an agreement of apprenticeship unless he is outside of these age groups or unless for some reason the board should issue a permit for persons in that age group. Otherwise the idea is to try in the designated trades the plan of getting all the young people who start in these to take advantage of our apprenticeship training, so that they would become skilled tradesmen after the apprenticeship stage. Otherwise you could have people engaging all kinds of boys just with the idea of getting cheap help, if you like, and never achieving the idea and principles of apprenticeship training. This is merely to try and enforce the idea of bringing the Act within the scope of apprenticeship training, and that is only in the designated trades where they agree to have it and where there is an agreement made. There is nothing wrong with that. There is an agreement made, you understand, in every one of these plants between the management and their union and the apprenticeship board. It is their agreement, and they certainly know what they are doing.

MR. BROWNE: What are the designated trades at the present time?

MR. BALLAM: We have several designated trades, as I just told you a few minutes ago.

MR. BROWNE: You mentioned there about students in the summertime being occupied.

MR. BALLAM: Yes, they may be employed without signing an apprenticeship agreement.

MR. BROWNE: Only for three months?

MR. BALLAM: That is as long as they will be at home in the summertime. I also said that if for some other reason, they will be taken on under permit.

MR. BROWNE: Does that apply to surveyors?

MR. BALLAM: I don't think that would be a designated trade. It is not as yet at any rate. It is a profession.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, under this section, if in a place where there is a designated trade an agreement concerning the training of apprentices, does that mean a young man of twenty years of age would not be allowed to work in that place for a period of any more than three months out of any year unless permitted to do so by the director, or unless he is an apprentice? Does it mean he cannot work unless he has a permit to do so?

MR. BALLAM: He would be given a permit.

MR. FOGWILL: But it does not say he would. It says, he may be. It comes under the authority of the Director of Apprenticeship. That means the Director of Apprenticeship although a fine man as I know, can interfere with the ordinary life of a young man of twenty.

MR. BALLAM: The Director of Apprenticeship has this authority in between times when the board is not sitting, and everything that he does can be reported back to the board. It says here: Any person who feels aggrieved thereby may within sixty days of the exercise of the power or duty review the matter—May take their grievance back to the board.

MR. FOGWILL: In the meantime the young fellow loses two months work. Why give anyone this power, Mr. Chairman? That is the trouble, nobody should have it.

MR. BALLAM: Why have anything at all?

MR. FOGWILL: That can be described as limitation of employment and restrictions.

MR. BALLAM: That is not a restriction. It is permissive—we may do this and we may do that, if and when the advisory committee and the board and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council say so and not until then.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I must agree with my honourable friend on my left here.

MR. BALLAM: Of course.

MR. HOLLETT: As I see it the minister here has an awful lot of power. He may, or at least on his advice this John Jones may get a permit to go to work, and if he does get a permissive slip then the Lieutenant-Governor in Council is going to tell him how much money he is to make per hour. Sir, it seems to me this is a screwy legislation.

MR. BALLAM: Well now, I know you are just trying to get a rise out of me, and when you said you knew nothing at all about it I am sure we agreed with you. You understand, all of this is done by agreement. Section 27A and 27B all come under Section 27 of this Act which states that the "Minister may from time to time with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council enter into such agreements." All of these things are done by agreement with the parties.

MR. FOGWILL: It does not say that anywhere in the Act.

MR. BALLAM: You cannot start an apprenticeship scheme in any plant without an agreement.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the honourable minister could tell us what effect this has on people who have taken a course of training in vocational schools where some of them serve, I believe six months. Do they become fully qualified then to work as full-fledged trained men?

MR. BALLAM: No, they are not full-fledged, and could not be after six months vocational training. That just gets them into a trade and gives them some basic training, but they must go on and spend more time in a trade before they become full-fledged trained men. My honourable friend will tell you that is just to give them basic training.

MR. HOLLETT: Would the honourable minister tell us from whom these recommendations came for these amendments?

MR. BALLAM: From the board through my department, and were taken from other agreements, etc., and made so that the apprenticeship division could go ahead and proceed properly. I have myself gone through them and I can see nothing in them other than permissive.

MR. HOLLETT: Who is the Chairman of the Apprenticeship Board?

MR. BALLAM: Dr. Frecker.

MR. FOGWILL: Who are the members?

MR. BALLAM: I don't know if I recall the names of the members. Dr. McCarter, Architect, is the employers' representative. J. R. Broadbent is also an employers' representative. He is the technical instructor with Bowaters in their vocational training school out there. A. Rowe who is in the paper mill at Grand Falls; J. Gillingham who is here in town. F. Templeman, B.S., Ed., Department of Education and the Superintendent of the vocational school, and G. Dwyer and W. J. May. These are the ones who recommend these things here.

MR. HOLLETT: Will the honourable minister tell us if these men are under pay, and if so, what is their salary?

MR. BALLAM: Oh, my! You are having a grand bit of fun! This advisory committee is not under pay. The apprenticeship board, those who are not civil servants, get a per diem rate. But I don't see what that has to do with this amendment. There are members of the board who are civil servants and members who are not. The latter are paid a per diem as laid down in the Act which we passed here last year.

Clause carried. On motion the committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again tomorrow. Ordered sit again tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred, and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday, at 8:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 20, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

MR. JANES: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition signed by the residents of Victoria Cove in Gander Bay. The petition requests that a road be constructed between Victoria Cove in Gander Bay and Horwood in Dog Bay.

I might say, Sir, for the benefit of the House, that some work has already been done on this road. It is cut through, the rocks being blasted out, and it has been ditched part of the way. This road, Sir, connecting Victoria Cove and Horwood is very important to the people living down there and will probably be the means eventually of connecting them with the road coming out from Lewisporte and give them transportation from Lewisporte. They are on the north side of Gander Bay and therefore cannot be connected with any road coming through the south of Gander River.

I have much pleasure, Sir, in supporting this petition, and request that it be tabled in the House and forwarded to the department concerned.

On motion petition received and referred to the department concerned.
HON. E. S. SPENCER (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to lay on the Table of the House a report of the local roads committee work for the past year 1953-54. I shall not go into much detail but do crave permission of the House for a few moments to describe briefly what work is undertaken by these committees. We feel in the Department of Public Works that a very great effort is really being made particularly in the outlying settlements of the Island more remote from the larger centres, where it is true we get far greater results from the local road committees than from around the larger and more thickly populated centres.

During the past year, 1953-54, six hundred and two committees were operating, an increase of nearly forty from the previous year and twenty-four from the year 1951-52. Twenty-five hundred persons served on these committees, and gave their services free during the year; 449 committees were authorized to carry out repair programmes, and this compared with 434 in the previous year. The total value of work undertaken by these committees was $387,598, the Department of Public Works providing out of that sum $222,941 and the balance of $165,157 was in cash donations and/or free labour.

I would like to pause for a moment there, Mr. Speaker, if I may, to mention this business of cash donations: One of the greatest difficulties facing the local roads committees in the past has been that where men undertake to do work on this fifty-fifty basis, these people who actually perform the work are about the only people who contribute in some of these communities, hence this idea of cash donations, which incidentally was arranged by our predecessors, the Commission of Government, who brought this idea into effect to provide an opportunity for businessmen and others who ordinarily would not do any part on this fifty-fifty basis other than through a cash contribution. So that the opportunity is there for these people to play their part. That is why cash donations are referred to there by the chairman and/or his group of the committee. Returns are made to our department, the Department of Public Works. The cash is sent in to us, and we deposit it to the consolidated revenue fund, and of course they get their regular grant. I feel it is necessary for the House to understand that is how people who are not going to work with a pick and shovel, if you like, can do their part in helping along the local road committees.

Very concise figures are given throughout this report. For honourable members and those who wish to obtain a copy I have sufficient on hand. Honourable members will see that it is laid out in districts, the various members of committees concerned, the total expenditure by the department and the sum or value of free labour and contributions.

I don't think I need go any further to delay the House on this, Mr. Speaker, but I stress the point that it is very important that we have these local road committees. Were it not for the operations of these six hundred or more committees, in many of the outlying places in Newfoundland our people and their community roads would of necessity suffer. I believe the House will understand that it is a physical impossibility with the revenue available in our province to take care of road work in all the numerous communities we have, and I need not mention the six thousand miles of coast line and the twelve hundred communities, as we all know the story. Were it not for the operations of these local road committees many of these small communities would suffer considerably on account of their roads. We in Public Works are very proud of the efforts of these people. They do a grand job, and as long as the Government permits us, it is the policy of the department to assist local communities in the fullest measure possible.

I would like also to pay special tribute to many of the magistrates around the island, and I have in mind the year 1952 when we had a very serious layoff of men and a lack of labour along the southwest coast due to a slump in the fisheries, and special work had to be provided to take care of quite a section along the district of Burgeo and LaPoile. The honourable member for Burgeo and LaPoile went, together with the magistrate, through the district and compiled statistics for us enabling us to set out allocations whereby a very fine job was done. When that report came in it was my privilege to add a comment on the report of the magistrate in that district. I think the magistrate in that district has done a very noble piece of work, and I was privileged to call the Justice Department to convey to the Attorney General the appreciation of the Department of Public Works for the work that gentleman had undertaken. It was really commendable and something well worth while.

Mr. Speaker, without further delay I would ask the pages to have these copies distributed to the honourable members and to the press, as far as they will go, and I think there are sufficient for all. I commend them to the serious perusal of the members of the House.

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Attorney General to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Is he aware that discrimination exists in rates of pay of Departmental Chief Clerks, employed on the Newfoundland division, Atlantic Region, of the Canadian National Railways?

2. Will the Attorney General bring this matter to the attention of the Management of the Newfoundland Division of the Canadian National Railways so that this question may be rectified, and the rates of pay of all Chief Clerks affected be adjusted to the basis of the highest rate paid Chief Clerks on the Newfoundland Division, and the adjustment be retroactive to the date the highest rate was established.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. What are the items referred to in Paragraph 39 of the Auditor General's Report for 1951-52 where it was observed that "Goods other than those ordinarily sold by Chester Dawe Ltd. were supplied" to the Newfoundland Hardwoods Ltd.?

2. Give names and serial numbers or other identification marks of items referred to together with names of manufacturers and prices for each item.
Answers to Questions

Question No. 91:
HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, the answers to Questions No. 91 and No. 92 are being prepared. Actually I do not propose to answer them but to refer them to the Minister himself, who ought to be here if not tomorrow then the next day.

Question No. 89:
MR. SPENCER: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to lay on the Table of the House the answer to Question No. 89 asked by the honourable member for St. John's East.

Question 1. What progress has been made in the construction of Bridges on the Trans-Canada Highway, state the number of Bridges completed, the number of Bridges under construction, the type of each Bridge, concrete or steel, the dimension and cost of each Bridge, also state if this work has been contracted for or is being done by the Department of Public Works?

Answer: 23 Bridges have been completed, 20 being constructed by the Department of Public Works and 3 under contract. 1 bridge being constructed under contract not yet completed.

Bridges built by Department of Public Works:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location</th>
<th>Type</th>
<th>Dimensions</th>
<th>Cost</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Salmon Pond</td>
<td>concrete</td>
<td>15' 30'</td>
<td>$9,189</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salmon River</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>2-36' 27'</td>
<td>20,453</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Island Lake</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>8' 30'</td>
<td>2,987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lake O'Brien</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>8' 30'</td>
<td>4,701</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eel Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>36' 27'</td>
<td>10,791</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Middle Brook East</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>18' 30'</td>
<td>55,697</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pharaoh</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>15' 30'</td>
<td>10,155</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bundell's Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>15' 30'</td>
<td>6,718</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Middle Brook West</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>36' 27'</td>
<td>11,920</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jumpers Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>2-36' 27'</td>
<td>27,888</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Corner Brook Stream</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>36' 27'</td>
<td>8,154</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camp 14 Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>10' 30'</td>
<td>7,179</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pinch Gut Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>2-36' 27'</td>
<td>14,718</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Camp 22 Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>18' 30'</td>
<td>6,018</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Campbell's Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>30' 27'</td>
<td>7,875</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cooper's Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>30' 27'</td>
<td>9,486</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>McDougall's Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>30' 27'</td>
<td>21,939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Big Pond</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>36' 27'</td>
<td>8,243</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sta 710-58</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>36' 27'</td>
<td>15,237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cold Brook</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>30' 27'</td>
<td>20,534</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bridges built under Contract:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location</th>
<th>Type</th>
<th>Dimensions</th>
<th>Cost</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Gander River</td>
<td>concrete</td>
<td>418' 24'</td>
<td>438,051</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grand Bay</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>165' 27'</td>
<td>123,924</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>South Branch</td>
<td>&quot;</td>
<td>240' 24'</td>
<td>172,891</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bridge being built under Contract:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location</th>
<th>Type</th>
<th>Dimensions</th>
<th>Cost</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>North Branch</td>
<td>concrete</td>
<td>160' 24'</td>
<td>181,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

(estimated)
Question 2: How many local road Committees were operating in the Provincial District of St. John’s East during the past year, where are these Committees located and what amount was allotted to each Committee?

Answer: (i) Six.
(ii) Flatrock ................................ .. ...................... $ 500
Middle Cove ........................................... 200
Outer Cove ............................................. 420
Pouch Cove ............................................. 1,000
Shoe Cove .............................................. 150
Torbay ................................................ 1,250

Giving Notice of Motion:

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I give notice I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill “An Act Respecting the Franchise of Electors and Election of Members to the House of Assembly.”

Orders of the Day

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are entered upon, I would like to ask the acting Premier if any consideration has been given to a petition sent to the Government some time ago regarding the holding of a plebiscite in Mount Pearl–Kilbride Area regarding the Old Mill operating there?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, apart from hearing there was a petition I have no recollection of its having come before Cabinet, but I did miss the last meeting. However, if the honourable member will renew his question I may be able to answer it on tomorrow and if not on the next day.

Second reading of Bill “An Act to Establish the Fisheries Development Authority”:

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Speaker, the honourable members on the opposite side are somewhat similar in position to two or three members on this side of the House inasmuch as they do not represent constituencies which in the main are depending directly upon the fishing industry. On the other hand, most of these on this side of the House represent constituencies in which the main industry and the main standby of the people in these constituencies are dependent directly upon the fishery in its various aspects and particularly is that true in the large number who are dependent upon one or another phase of the salt fish industry. For that reason, Sir, apart from any seeming strangeness which people may attribute to this particular debate in the House of Assembly there is every reason why those of us who represent fishing constituencies, as we may call them, should take particular interest in this particular legislation which we are now considering, the fishing industry although it no longer holds first place in the export value of our goods to other countries is yet an industry which contributes some twenty-five per cent of our total export value, is great enough to warrant the interest of all of us. And I believe that all of us on both sides of the House are for that reason genuinely interested in the success of this particular measure.

Not only do the fisheries contribute 25% of our total export value, but more people are directly or indirectly concerned with the success or failure of the fisheries in this province than are dependent on any other industry. For that reason then the field is more universally appealing to us in this province than even the mining and paper industries, our other two main and staple products.

When we come down to the principle of the Bill, which we are arguing, I think it can be expressed in a very few words: All that we are trying to do is to try and bring about conditions in the fishing industry which will ensure to these people engaged in it and directly dependent upon it a higher standard of living than they have hitherto enjoying, and bigger returns for the work in which they are engaged. With that statement I feel that no one here, whether he may object to some of the methods or not, can argue against the principle of this Bill.

I am particularly happy at this time to endorse some of the statements made by my colleagues from Trinity South. Since we represent opposite sides of the same bay and common fishing grounds I should be particularly interested to countenance his appeal for more attention to the potentialities of the Trinity Bay fisheries. I do not want to expound on the facts which he stated here the other day, but he had evidence from which he reasoned well that the fishing potentialities of Trinity Bay, in its variety of fish and the proximity of the fishing grounds and other favourable factors are indeed very great. It has very much indeed to commend it.

For that reason it was of some little disappointment to us during recent months to know that the main efforts or the early attempt to recreate the fisheries on a paying basis should have overlooked the potentialities of that great bay. To some extent since then, however, the position has changed. In the last issue of the "Fishermen's Advocate" published at Port Union, there was an article describing how Fishery Products had recently purchased a site at Catalina with every intention of erecting, and carrying on a fishing industry at that centre as soon as work can be completed. That will be of particular interest and concern to some of the great fishing settlements of Trinity Bay; Little Catalina, is one of the greatest fishing pools (if you like) of the codfishery but yet cursed with the fact (I cannot say enjoys) that it suffers from one of the worst climatic conditions in the country. The atmospheric conditions and humidity are such that fish drying is extremely difficult. I don't know of any parallel in the province. It is so much so that I find invariably the fishermen of Little Catalina writing "finis" to their fishery immediately at the end of the trapping season. They do well invariably with six hundred quintals of fish per crew and then find it takes all their time to cure it and frequently have to send their fish over to other settlements for that purpose. Any action that would take care of that production will be of immense importance to the people of that area.

The argument has been advanced that it is strange that this Government should at this time, some five years after taking office, give so much attention to the fishing industry, and not at all in accordance with the action which this Government has taken during the last five years. In my opinion this Bill before us today cannot be construed in any way as something put forward to cover up the alleged failures of the economic policy. I am not going to argue the success or otherwise of the industries which we have started, at this particular juncture, but I am going to contend that this Bill, which we are trying to pilot through the House at the present time carries with it something which is an intrinsic part of the overall pattern which we set up in the year 1949. I have already remarked on other occasions that in September of 1949 with the devaluation of the sterling the Government of this province received a sharp reminder of the weakness of our economic policy because we were dependent entirely upon primary products, and any curtailments of demand in the markets might inevitably carry a recession in business and work conditions in our Province of Newfoundland. That sharp reminder helped largely to focus the attention of the Government at that time upon trying to provide alternative measures to iron out some of the difficulties under which we were suffering, and have always suffered. The fishery policy was not forgotten, and indeed there has been evidence in this House repeatedly through the years of the Government's concern in trying to do things to help our primary producers. In fact it has already been stated that some seven million dollars has been spent during the last five years in order to help out the fisheries in Newfoundland. Ridicule has already been leveled upon one unhappy venture that the Government made in its early days when it tried to bring about some change in the herring fishery. But many of us are yet convinced that the herring fishery still remains a great potentiality in the fishing ventures of this Province.

Now, the honourable and learned member for St. John's East in a report, brought forward the idea that the policy or rather the findings and recommendations in the Walsh Committee's Report were largely drawn from or patterned upon the Report of the Commissioner, P. D. H. Dunne in 1944. I am very well sure that the members of the Walsh Committee, particularly the honourable chairman himself, is very well aware of the attempts that have been made at different times in the past in order to try and analyze the problems of the fisheries, and so seek for some improvements. I am quite sure the honourable chairman was not ignorant of the fact that a report had been made in 1880. I am absolutely sure he was also familiar with the findings of the "Kent Report" in 1937, and the writings and publications of Mr. Dunne's Report in January 1944. It was done by a man with whom Sir Albert Walsh (or Mr. Albert Walsh at that time) was associated in some fashion, and consequently the setting up of the commission in 1949 came at a time when these things had already been done, and would certainly not be ignored by a committee set up in order to make a thorough survey of conditions, as it were, and bring forward recommendations for the guidance of the Government. It is quite true there is a difference between the two, in spite of what the honourable member for St. John’s East said yesterday, and this difference goes much beyond the mere difference in the amount of money allocated for the plan Mr. Dunne put forward. As a matter of fact there is no particular significance between the amount of fifteen millions put forward at that time and the amount of money which is estimated might be regarded for the full implementation of the Walsh recommendations today.

Mr. Dunne came here in a peculiarly interesting position. He was a member of an appointed Government who were not concerned at all about votes; and therefore were not particularly troubled by the voters, and the economic position was entirely different from what faces us today or has faced us since restoration of Responsible Government. They came during the life of the Commission of Government and during the early years they had aid from Britain, and the policy which Mr. Dunne put forward was one in which he did not figure that the entire money would be found by the Government. As a matter of fact he gave a certain percentage which he thought should be used, and during the next four or five years something was done to implement some of the things advocated in the report which Mr. Dunne had made. But when we are facing the same problem we realize Mr. Dunne’s report may have been based upon insufficient data in the first place. He had been out here a comparatively short time and had gotten together perhaps information gathered at different times, including the information in the Amulree Report, and considered the problem as it was at that time, when he brought forward a report which seemed to him to possess a certain solution to the problem as he saw it. Conditions in 1949 had changed somewhat from conditions in 1944 and conditions in 1954 are entirely different again, and that is one of the important things we want to remember.

Two years ago one of our larger fishing firms was approached by a delegation of people from a certain settlement on the northeast coast, and the firm was asked whether they would consider the possibility of a fish plant in their particular area. The reply was, no. They gave at that time certain reasons why they thought the plant was not feasible at that time. Today the situation has been entirely reversed, largely because of something which happened during the last twelve or fifteen months. Mention has already been made in this House of Assembly of the tremendous growth in the sale of fish products, due to the advanced technological processes, brought into use and put on the markets last year, breaded fish and fish sticks. In the last issue of “Time” for example there was a short item by one firm in Seattle saying it had increased sales enormously simply by processing and putting on the market these new fish sticks. They are selling them at the rate of something over seven million pounds per year. In another journal last week there was a descriptive article which gave some of the phenomenal circumstances which attended the processing and marketing of the new fish sticks now on the market.

Now a few days ago one or more of the honourable members of the Opposition referred to a meeting which is scheduled for the 27th of this month, at which time one of the matters to be discussed will be the matter of increased tariffs on fresh fish going into the United States of America. Some fear was expressed that at this meeting President Eisenhower might possibly increase the tariff on such products. If that were so, I think all of us who have followed this particular line of reasoning in the last few years, felt that was not the first attempt. An attempt was made two years ago and failed, and there is a certain amount of trepidation over the possible outcome of this particular conference. Judging from the article in the "Monetary Journal" corroborated by other information which we are able to gather there seems to be some evidence today to lead us to believe that the situation which confronted the New England fisheries at the time they presented their report to President Eisenhower had radically changed, and we have heard certain things to indicate that some interests in the industry, most anxious at that time for increased protection for their products, are now hoping that no increase will be granted because now, through the new process, they see a means of augmenting their basic supplies in order that they may increase their processed article.

In the course of this debate reference was made to different names. Some people called it "Nationalization" some "Socialization" and "Stateism" and what not. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am not at all interested in what it is called if it achieves the main purpose for which this Bill was introduced. If this Bill can bring about a revolutionized and revitalized industry in the fishery, assuring to the people engaged therein, higher returns for their product, then I say the end will be achieved, and that is what we set out to do—it does not matter what we call it. I am sure it will not matter to the fishermen whether it is socialism or socialization. Personally I cannot see that it is any of the things which I have mentioned, because the actual carrying out of this policy, although it is financed in some ways by certain Government assistance, yet the success of this thing will depend largely upon private enterprise and the cooperation of the people in the various centres affected.

The honourable member for White Bay and the honourable member for St. John's East referred to certain things which had to be borne in mind, and which, according to their opinions, would have to be borne in mind for the success of this particular venture, and they mentioned particularly the matter of compensation, and the difficulties of centralization. Anyone who has kept tabs on events in Newfoundland for the last fifty years must have been conscious of the movement which has been going on down through the years, the movement from smaller isolated places to larger centres. I am going to speak of two areas in particular because I know them very well indeed.

In my early days there were twenty-four families or more living on small islands, Bennett's Island, Flower Island and Cobbler's Island in Bonavista Bay. They all moved out some fifty years ago. Last year some twenty-five families moved from Pinchard's Island to the mainland. The year before that some thirty families moved from Cape Island to either Newtown or to Cape Freels. There you have a complete dissemination, a complete depletion in certain places in order that people might move into other larger centres. In the area of Salvage during the last thirty years some twenty or thirty families moved from Sailor's Island, three or four families from Wild Bight and three or four families from Hare Island, all to larger centres, and in no instance was there any mention of compensation. As a matter of fact the idea of compensation for such people leaving their homes raises an issue of far-reaching importance, and one which does not come within the ambit of this Bill we are discussing at the present time. If we go back further and look at what happened in Grand Falls in 1908 and in Corner Brook in 1929 and onward we see where many hundreds of families moved from different places around Newfoundland and made new homes in the place of their adoption, and in no place was there any mention of compensation for the home they left. They did ask for one thing, and in most places they obtained it, and that was an assurance of employment in the place of their adoption. That is the central thing, Sir, in the idea we have in mind. When we speak of centralization we are not thinking of forcing evacuation of centres, but I believe we can set up conditions in any one or half dozen places where the people in the smaller centres will be driven by forces outside, and changing economic circumstances will inevitably bring them into these larger centres because they will be drawn by social circumstances, they will be drawn by reasons pertaining to health and welfare, mail services and the many different things which help today to make a person, not an isolated individual unit, but part and parcel of a group of citizens. Give them only the assurance that they will secure work for a reasonable time of the year and at wages that will give them a reasonable standard of living and inevitably you are going to get that depletion of former places and congregation into larger centres.

Now, it is natural that certain members, thinking of their own constituencies, should argue for certain plans and certain parts of this programme within the areas in which their particular concerns are centred. I take second place to no one in hoping that certain expansions will occur in my own constituency of Trinity North. But I feel, when looking at this thing, we should be rational and objective enough to forget for a moment the particular claims of any one particular place and to look upon this as it will affect all the province as a whole. When it was decided to decrease, for instance, the number of places as mentioned in the Dunne Report to the number of places which are earmarked in our present policy for fishery development we were conscious of that fact, we were conscious of the fact that after a thorough investigation and survey certain things had been given far more consideration than had been given by Mr. Dunne himself.

The selection of any one place for development is dependent upon a great number of factors, as any student of economics should understand: The availability or otherwise of a labour supply in the place itself might be offset by others coming in from the outside, but the natural facilities must be there in the beginning; harbour facilities, implemented perhaps by dredging operations; water supply suitable for industrial purposes and for domestic consumption is something which is of extreme importance; the availability of land should people come in and settle. These and many other factors all had to be considered before any decision could be taken upon what places should constitute the most favourable area for development of the fishery policy.

One of the questions asked by the honourable member for St. John's West was: Why should the Fishery Development Authority take chances on the northeast coast where they were subject to a short season and other disadvantages because of its position and not concentrate on places on the southeast or southwest coast where there is a fishing season all the year around? In one sense that question is more than rhetorical in that he did not bring it out that our problem down through the years has been not with the places which are open the majority of the year around and where fishing can be carried on all the year around, but with those places where the season is short and in the past the attempts to make a successful fishery plan operate on the northeast coast had been doomed to failure largely because of the shortness of the season. This new Bill, Sir, takes advantage of advances made in the last year or so. The entire setup is completely different. We are not depending entirely on the two or three months of actual operation of the fishing operations, but on a number of factors not the least of which is that we can have facilities on that part of the coast where it is possible to store products until they are required in the market. That can be done only because of the new process which has come in the fishing industry.

One of the many questions which have been troubling us in discussing this fishery policy is the main one of whether increased production will give to the fishermen the returns which we feel will be adequate to give them a decent living. It is natural enough that there should be some difference of opinion on this particular matter. On the other hand, even if it is possible for a man to catch a hundred quintals of fish and find the returns from that hundred quintals are enough to provide him with a decent living for eight months of the year, by the same measure a hundred and fifty quintals of fish would allow him to carry on for twelve months. But overproduction is only one factor. Then there is another question raised by the honourable member for St. John's East, when he referred to marketing conditions under exchange restrictions. The honourable and learned member for St. John's West asked another question—why it was that we had allowed the salt codfish markets of the Mediterranean to disappear so quickly? I was rather surprised, as a matter of fact, that he should have raised that question at all, because anyone who studied the matter objectively at all, anyone who has thought about the collapse of European currency immediately after the cessation of hostilities in World War II, must have been conscious of two facts: (1) The resources of England had been seriously depleted by her sale of overseas investments and (2) The Mediterranean countries are a part of the Sterling area, and what affects one affects all. In all these countries and particularly so in the Mediterranean countries, the dollar reserves had gone down to practically nil, and for a period of years they were unable to bring in imports from abroad except from those countries with which they were monetarily allied. There was another situation which had arisen after the cessation of war and that was the subsidizing of native fisheries by certain of the Mediterranean countries. They subsidized their own fleets in order that they might conserve and raise their dollar reserves. That was the reason why our saltfish markets disappeared.

If we go to the other side of the world we see something of the same thing applies in a different way. Brazil, which was a very big customer for our fish put on tariff restrictions and for a time prohibited entirely the importation of our fish. It was only during the last twelve months or so that there has been any change there. Happily for us perhaps the picture in Brazil looks a little brighter. Recently the coffee and cocoa beans, the two chief products of Brazil, have been in short supply and have risen to a very high price, so that Brazil has been able to build up their dollar reserve and, as a matter of fact, had a favourable balance of trade, so that she will increase the quota of imports including, I hope, our saltfish during the coming year. Something of the same sort has happened in the Sterling area and the reserves in England are much greater than at any time since the war. The dollar reserves of some of the Mediterranean countries have reached a position where it is possible for them to do trading outside the Sterling area. Only a fortnight ago the International Bank placed at the disposal of the British Government certain funds as a reserve not to be actually used but as a buffer to be used should it decide to change its present system or raise the value of the pound. All these things, of course, are tied in with the exchange restrictions which were mentioned by the honourable and learned member for St. John's East.

Now there are many other ways, of course, in which this Bill of ours and its successful operation may be affected by the trading policy and the monetary policy of the markets in which we are trying to sell. There are certain things which Canada can do at the present time. Within the past twelve months or so there have been movements when, at a certain level, feelings have not been too happy between the United States and Canada. You had a particular instance of that in the tariff question of late last fall, and you had another question which came up in March 1954. As a matter of fact the latter one brought about the question of retaliation being advanced by certain members of the Canadian Press. To overcome the trading situation of the day, and to make it possible for our fish and other products to become a little more marketable, Canada must do certain things; and all of them have arguments which can be advanced in their favour and against them. There is, for instance, a reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada. There is the trade alliance by which Canada would become a part of the Sterling area. Now both of these things have been tried. There was a reciprocal agreement between Canada and the United States a hundred years ago, but equally so you had the tariff laws in 1930 when Canada was hit very badly by Government restrictions imposed by the United States. You have the Roosevelt Treaty of the last few years, and the whole problem is so difficult that to think that we can put our fish into markets just by saying so is ignoring all the laws of supply and demand.

The most reasonable thing advocated today by many is a lower rate of exchange between Canada and the United States. But although our rate of exchange carries with it two things, one of which people try to avoid; the first thing is a lower rate of interest on money and the second is an extra supply of money which brings about inflation. These things are so important, and I bring them in now because I feel they are part and parcel of any development which we may attempt in order to carry out our fishery development policy. They may not be important to the fishermen at large, or so he may think, but it is necessary to understand that ten dollars is not sufficient for the price of fish, yet there may be many strong economic reasons why eleven dollars a quintal cannot be given. From the market angle there may be ways of overcoming that. Governments of the past have been known to subsidize the industry. We, ourselves, last fall supplied the deficiency payments on fish purchased and produced in Newfoundland. That policy, of course, can be carried out. There are subsidies carried out on many things even by the Canadian Government. Last year Prince Edward Island pledged itself to fifteen cents a bushel on their potato crop. But the whole question of subsidies, of course, is somewhat outside the ambit of this particular Bill.

When we come back to the Bill itself, we find that with the principle of the Bill, with the purpose for which it was originated and intended, that is trying to stabilize our fishery, trying to put them on a basis which will give sufficient returns to the people engaged in them, and trying to take people out of some of the small, isolated places and placing them in larger centres thereby offering to them certain services they cannot enjoy under the circumstances in which they now live, against these purposes, I feel sure, there is no argument to be put forward. Therefore to this purpose, Sir, and to the principle of bigger development of Newfoundland, which includes a fishery policy as an intrinsic part of the over-all policy devised by this Government, I give my heart-felt support. And I support the second reading of this Bill.

On motion House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. MERCER: Mr. Speaker, on entering into this debate on the fisheries I realize that quite a good deal has been said, particularly on the Government side of the House, so much so that one sees now and then reports in the papers and over the radio to the effect that the members of the Government are being boring and repetitious because of the fact that all that could have been said on the Fisheries Bill must have been said by the Honourable the Premier in his twelve-and-a-half hour address. But, Sir, I feel that the principle of this Bill is so vast, so all-encircling of this Island, that it is almost impossible to exhaust what can be said, then I feel, it is important that, even though one may be repetitious, one may be repetitious because it can stand repetition. In fact the latest speaker from the Opposition, the honourable and learned member for St. John's East, I think yesterday afternoon, emphasized that fact when he referred to the Commission of Inquiry into the Fisheries of 1880 and 1937 and to the Dunne Radio Address in 1944, each having a little more to say. When he referred to these things showing that they had already been discussed and inquired into, he was perfectly correct. The only thing he fell short in was that he did not mention ten per cent of the commissions of inquiry which had been appointed to deal with the fisheries of Newfoundland. That in itself, Mr. Speaker, shows the all-importance of this subject.

Now, Sir, you cannot, I suggest, read and study this Bill without having read and studied the Walsh Report, at least you cannot read and study it intelligently otherwise. And I am sure, Sir, one cannot read, study and digest that Walsh Report without reliving the history of the fisheries of Newfoundland. It was natural, therefore, for so many of the members to relive that history through their speeches to this House on the principle of that Bill. Even Commissioner Dunne, in that same radio address to which the honourable and learned member for St. John's East referred yesterday, said that as far as he was concerned the fisheries were the life and death of Newfoundland. Even in the limited sphere which he proposed in that address in 1944, (even that which was very limited; and I shall refer to it in a moment) he said that if even that failed we might as well get out of Newfoundland. If it were a success, he said, Newfoundland would be greater. That is what he stated in his little radio address in 1944. It shows therefore the very great importance of this Bill and why I said it can bear repetition and never, never be exhaustively dealt with.

During the past two weeks on this debate we have heard, I would say, from the Premier an excellent history of the fishing industry of Newfoundland, and his hopes for the future of that industry. From other honourable members we have heard the social problems involved in the carrying out of this Bill. From the Opposition we have also had some suggestions, particularly from the latest member to speak. Generally speaking, though, I cannot refrain from saying that from them we have heard the general idea of nationalization. My honourable colleague said a short time ago that industrialization, socialism, statism; and I would go further and say criticism and pessimism, and I suppose as it is fairly natural in debate of any importance, there was at times during the debate name-calling from one side of the House to the other. I have no intention, Sir, in indulging in name-calling from one member to another nor even in telling the Water Street merchants what I think of them. In fact I have no intention whatever of talking about what great fishermen we have in Port de Grave. But many reasons have been advanced not only during this debate but during the past hundreds of years as to why the fishermen of Newfoundland have never been able to make a living. I believe that the various reasons given during the years may be summarized, at least this is the way I put them as reasons that have been given:

(1) Our exports in fish until recent years were mostly cod, and that mostly in the form of salt dried. That was exported to countries too poor, except during war years, to pay very much for it.

(2) Fishermen have been blamed for not washing, not salting and generally not taking care as far as the cure of the fish was concerned.

(3) Merchants have been accused of gypping the fishermen both in the cull and in the price.
(4) The in-between or semi-merchants have been accused of putting rocks in the centre of catches.

(5) Fishermen claim that it was due partly to lack of good drying weather and on the other part the merchants.

(6) The merchants, on the other hand, claimed that the failure was due partly to the fishermen and partly to the weather between the time they bought it and the time they delivered it to the market in the Mediterranean, and partly to lack of Government interest in the matter.

Now following these accusations (I won't mention others) or at least intertwined with these we have had scores of Royal Commission reports during the hundreds of years of our fisheries, and then in 1944 we have had the radio address of Commissioner Dunne, which actually was only an address in the form of a Bill such as we are presenting here today, and was the result of the report brought in by a commission which had been appointed by the Commission of Government. Then the next thing you had this Government coming into being in 1949 and refusing to do anything about any overall policy of the fisheries until they had received a report from an investigating committee. That investigating result is now well known as the "Walsh Report."

While on that point of the "Walsh Report," Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to some of the remarks made by the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's East yesterday. He, from what I understood from him, disposed of the "Walsh Report" of 1953 merely as a rephrasing of the Dunne Radio Speech of 1944. In fact I believe his exact words were that the Walsh Report was a dressed up post-war verbage of the 1944 Dunne Radio Speech. Now, Mr. Speaker, as far as I am concerned this is the only name-calling I shall do during my few minutes addressing this House on this Bill. I just cannot refrain from saying that that statement to me is senseless, idiotic, ignorant and inconsistent. It shows on the part of the Opposition a complete ignorance of the fisheries of 1953 and of 1944 and as of 1949, and even more so of today.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I rise to a point of order: I wish to state the point of order thusly: If the honourable member is referring to members of the Opposition as being ignorant I am afraid I shall have to ask him to withdraw the statement, also the term "idiotic."

MR. MERCER: Mr. Speaker, you will remember I said the statement was senseless and idiotic. I said nothing about any person.

MR. SPEAKER: It would, of course, be utterly unparliamentary to refer to any member in that way.

MR. HOLLETT: What is the difference.

MR. MERCER: Mr. Speaker, I shall go on to prove the statement I have made about the statement as uttered by the honourable and learned member for St. John's East. He compares the radio address of Commissioner Dunne of 1944, consisting of eleven pages with the three hundred and twenty-six pages of the Walsh Report of 1953. He compares that Dunne Report which consists of approximately seven thousand words to the Walsh Report of 1953 which consists of approximately one hundred and seven thousand words. The Walsh Report was made after some two years of intense study by merchants, fish-killing captains, the former chairman of the Newfoundland Fisheries Board, and some two or three other gentlemen with the present Chief Justice as Chairman. He ridicules that two years of intensive study, resulting from a large representative number of the outports all around the coast of Newfoundland, as well as the reading of reports of other royal commissions which had been appointed for this very thing during the past hundreds of years. The opportunity which that Walsh Committee had and took of visiting outport merchants and St. John's merchants, going into their books which apparently were given to the committee quite voluntarily, after visiting stage after stage all around the coast of Newfoundland and talking to the fishermen themselves in order to get their ideas on their problems, produced his Report.

MR. BROWNE: All around the coast?

MR. MERCER: I did not say every settlement, I said various settlements.

MR. JANES: On the northeast coast?

MR. MERCER: More than on the northeast coast. A commission which had that opportunity and took two years to do it, and took three hundred and twenty-six pages to report on it, to compare that with a report of a committee appointed in 1943 who stayed in St. John's for two or three months, and made a report on one phase of the fishing industry in Newfoundland. The Dunne Address distinctly states it is only the fresh fish industry alone on which he is reporting. That Walsh Committee is on the whole fishing industry, salt cured and fresh frozen, pickled and everything else, all sorts.

Now in the event that the honourable gentlemen opposite are a little bit worried about the Walsh Committee, let me read (if I may, Mr. Speaker) a couple of paragraphs or quotations in the foreword of the Walsh Committee Report:

"The members of the Committee represent the fishermen of Newfoundland, the fish processors and exporters, the Department of Fisheries of Canada and the Department of Fisheries and Co-operatives of Newfoundland.

The Government assumed responsibility for providing personnel to undertake such investigations and obtain such information as the Committee might require. We thus have had at our disposal the services of expert research staff, provided by several departments of the Federal Government and by the Provincial Government, who have carried out a number of special surveys and studies on our behalf. These include reports on the working conditions and income position of fishermen, the location and extent of fishery resources, the nature of the markets for fish products, catching methods and equipment, processing plants and techniques, costs of production and distribution and the like. In some cases, the Committee and their investigators sought the assistance of specialists outside the Government service. For example, an official of the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations visited Newfoundland on our invitation to supply special information on fishing craft and gear.

The Government of Newfoundland also set up an inter-departmental committee to co-ordinate the assembly of information for the Committee's use from the various Provincial agencies.

At the Committee's invitation, the fishing industry and trade in Newfoundland appointed advisory groups or "working parties" who were helpful in facilitating the investigational work.

Some of the investigations involved detailed examination of premises and of confidential records. In general, the operators concerned freely permitted such examination and assigned members of their staff to assist our investigators. Their co-operation has been most valuable.

In April, 1951, the Committee interviewed a number of delegates to a convention in St. John's of fishermen from all parts of Newfoundland. These men were able to communicate to us a direct appreciation of the individual fisherman's problems.

During the summer of 1951, the Committee visited some fifty fishing settlements around the coast of Newfoundland for the purpose of obtaining first-hand knowledge of local conditions. It was not practicable to visit every settlement, and to do so would have involved a duplication of the work of our research staff.

Following a recommendation by the Committee, a detailed survey of the coastal settlements of Newfoundland was begun in July 1952, by a group seconded by government departments for the purpose of obtaining first-hand knowledge of local conditions. It was not practicable to visit every settlement, and to do so would have involved a duplication of the work of our research staff.

MR. BROWNE: And the next paragraph?

MR. MERCER: I can read it all. Would the honourable and learned gentleman like me to read it all.

MR. SPEAKER: Order. I would like for honourable gentlemen to address the Chair.

MR. MERCER: No, Mr. Speaker, the next paragraph is perhaps more explanatory and greater proof of my statement with regard to the statement of the honourable and learned member being idiotic and certainly inconsistent. That is the next paragraph to which the honourable and learned member for St. John's West now wishes me to refer:

"Notwithstanding the quantity of information which government departments and the industry have made available to the Committee, their work has been handicapped by the lack of precise knowledge on many important questions."

Yet, Mr. Speaker, one of the statements in the speech of the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's East was that we had sufficient information in 1949—from an eleven page radio address of a Commissioner in 1944—to carry on and do the same thing we are doing today.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the honourable gentleman a question: He speaks of the intense work of this Walsh Committee during the past two years. Does he know how intensive the work of the Committee itself actually was. There is nothing in the foreword about it.

MR. MERCER: Mr. Speaker, I was not on the Committee. I did not attend any of their meetings. I was not asked to attend any of their meetings.
I cannot say, therefore, how intensive it was. I can only accept the word of the gentlemen who composed that Committee. I know I am speaking on it from their word, and I accept their word. Now the gentlemen who composed that Committee, Mr. Speaker, were Sir Albert Walsh, R. Gushue, H. A. Dawe, G. Groves, Clive Planta, Hazen Russell, Capt. Clarence C. Williams, and P. Lloyd Soper, the Lawyer and Executive Secretary. I can only take their word that they did do an intensive survey.

MR. BROWNE: Where is their word for that?

MR. MERCER: In this great big book, this report, Sir, the Dunne Report of 1944 was the result of a sub-committee to the general committee appointed by the Commission of Government to look into the natural resources of this country. His report was based on the sub-committee’s report and dealt solely with fresh fish and not at all with salt fish. In that report, as the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John’s East said, Commissioner Dunne in 1944 was prepared to have the Government invest four million dollars out of ten million which he thought would be necessary—four to ten—ten million dollars. The Government was prepared to put up four out of ten or maybe it was four out of fifteen. Now I feel, Mr. Speaker, that if that same Commissioner Dunne was here today, in 1984, instead of 1944, that even he would agree that ten to fifteen millions dollars in 1944 today would mean twenty to thirty million dollars; and he was dealing wholly and solely with fresh fish, whereas this Bill based on the Walsh Report is dealing not only with fresh frozen fish but is trying to find the answer for the crippled salt fish industry, which may mean many millions of dollars more. Therefore, when this Bill says that the authority should be allowed to borrow up to twenty-five million dollars it is not too far out of line with the thinking of Commissioner Dunne in 1944.

The honourable and learned gentleman also stated that this Government should have started this Fishery Bill, which is before the House now, in 1949. If I remember correctly, he said, because of Commissioner Dunne’s Radio Address in 1949 the Government had all the evidence about the fisheries of Newfoundland which they now have as a result of the Walsh Report. He said, Mr. Speaker, that the Dunne Radio Address was based upon an investigation of fresh fish only, and if the honourable and learned gentleman had read that report fully he would have seen that Commissioner Dunne at that time said in that address: “We are going into an unexplored field.” Up to 1944, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, we had little or no fresh frozen fish industry in Newfoundland. It was a completely new thing which private enterprise had started and the Government decided, well, let us look into it and see if this is the cure-all for Newfoundland’s ills in the fishing industry. So they put in this Committee. Now, we then had no fresh frozen fish industry, we were just starting; Mr. Dunne was quite convinced of that fact, and quite openly said in that same address: “We are going into an unexplored field.” He did not know, Mr. Speaker, if ten million or one hundred million would be required even for the fresh fish industry alone. Therefore to compare that—since 1944 a lot of merchants in this country have gained a terrific amount of experience and information, and a lot of heartaches. Some made profits and some met losses in the fresh frozen fish industry. But they have gained a lot of experience, and they know a lot more in 1953 than they knew in 1948 and 1944 when they first started out. When you take a Royal Commission in 1953 with the advantage of hearing from and having the help and co-operation of all these people who had had their heartaches from 1943 to 1953 in the fresh frozen fisheries, and going out and talking with fishermen themselves, to compare the Dunne Radio Address of 1944 with a report such as we have here today I personally think, Mr. Speaker, is idiotic, senseless and shows ignorance of the fisheries.

MR. BROWNE: In those days do you not think he talked to the fishermen just as now?

MR. MERCER: Did you not also look at the reports filed to see if they went around, went down on the stages and talked with the fishermen; to see if they went to the merchants and said, "show me your books?" It was never done before.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the honourable gentleman—they had representatives of the Salt Codfish Association and NAFEL, and they were composed of men in the fish trade.

MR. MERCER: But that was not the subject of a Royal Commission or report. In fact here in this Walsh Report you have representatives of the Salt Codfishery Association and representatives of NAFEL on that commission.

MR. BROWNE: You had that from Dunne too.

MR. MERCER: No, you did not, at least I don't think so, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BROWNE: And on the Newfoundland Fisheries Board—Gushue was the head of it.

MR. MERCER: Now, Mr. Speaker, what the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's East forgot was this: He forgot the Dunne Report was on fresh fish only. He forgot that Dunne was talking at a time when the fresh frozen fish industry was just barely beginning in this country, and when we had no experience with it. He forgot to compare the report from which Dunne made his radio address and the work which they did in the two or three months sitting in St. John's, he forgot to compare the work of that committee with the Walsh Committee, going all over the country to get information and having various sub-committees on various other phases of the fish trade involving the whole picture of the fishing industry in Newfoundland.

And, Mr. Speaker, supposing it could be shown that there was a similar committee in 1943, suppose it was exactly the same set-up in 1943 as in 1953 and they both brought in a report, and went to just as many places, surely it must be obvious, Mr. Speaker, to anybody with an open mind that you would still require an investigation to be made in 1953, or in 1949 for that matter, because there were a great many changes which took place in world conditions from 1943 to 1949: A war ended in Germany and in Japan. You had the United Nations being formed. Even if none of these things happened, we had no experience, no know-how in the fresh frozen fish industry in Newfoundland in 1943 as compared with 1949, and to go further afield for something very important to the fresh frozen fish industry, you did not have the accomplishments of science with regard to refrigeration in 1943 as you had in 1949. Therefore it would have been impossible for any government in 1949 to base a programme for rehabilitation of the fisheries on a 1944 report. That to me, Mr. Speaker, is so simple that I am quite satisfied that every member of the Opposition realizes that, including the honourable and learned member for St. John's West. They are just as satisfied of that as everybody in the country and as we are over here, but of course they must say something against the programme now being proposed by this Government.

I say also, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's East was inconsistent. He said this Government knew as much in 1949 as they do now, because of the Dunne Report of 1944, and therefore they should have got going then. But he ended up by saying that the Government should go very slowly with this programme and should not spend too much because we don't know enough yet about the industry. Now how inconsistent is that?

We do know this, Mr. Speaker, that the fishermen of Newfoundland (and I don't think anybody will disagree with this) have always been on the starvation end of the scale, and some merchants have been on the same end of it, while some merchants on the other hand have been on the wealthy end of the stick. We all know these facts. We all know that there have been numerous investigating committees and Royal Commissions. We all know that most of the reports have been filed and forgotten about officially; by any government very few reports have been acted upon at all. The only one I know of is the Dunne Report which was acted upon half-heartedly between 1944 and 1948. We now have a great deal more information about how much fish we have around this coast, we have not very much more information about how much salt we should use per quintal of fish. We have not got any more information about how many days the sun is going to shine.

MR. HOLLETT: You should have that.

MR. MERCER: But we have got more information about artificial drying of salt fish. Perhaps we have not got very much more information, and there may not be a great deal more to get than we already have of the markets to which our salt codfish goes. But one of our great difficulties has been the cure. We now have more scientific knowledge on artificial drying and curing, and certainly we have more scientific knowledge on refrigeration and the means and methods of putting up fresh frozen fish, and far more information during the past year or two on the markets for which that fish is destined, within the United States particularly. Now having had that, and the only way we could have gotten it was from some sort of a report whether a Walsh Report or Browne Report or whatever kind of report, the only way was to appoint a commission to spend a couple of years and go out and get the information, and having done that we now bring in this Bill.

This Bill may not cure all sickness of the Newfoundland fishery. This Bill does not say that we have to put a plant at LaScie. I have heard several objections to LaScie maybe being the wrong place for a plant. That I do not know, Mr. Speaker. I am not sufficiently acquainted with the geography or the climate or how many weeks or months in the year there may be ice. But I do say this: We are not concerned in this Bill or in this debate on the principle whether it is LaScie or Quirpon or Joe Batts Arm or Burgeo or Port-au-Port or anywhere else in the island. That is a matter of administration. If they put a plant at LaScie and it does not work all the year around that is not the fault of the principle of this Bill. The principle of this Bill is this: We have, without any argument at all, a fishing industry which is our biggest industry from an economic point of view and from the point of view of employment and it may be many generations, if ever, before it will be replaced from its present position of employing so many people as compared with other industries. We know it is not bringing in as much money, but we now want to try and make it bring in money. No government, no private industry has in the past been able to do anything about that situation. Now let us say that private industry has done its best and every government in the past has done its best—yet they have not made one iota of difference to that salt fish industry. Now if they have done their best, why is that?

Now this Bill says that from the investigations of this Walsh Committee, and that is from representatives of the fishermen, of the merchants and of two governments, it is claimed that you can put curing stations, drying stations for salt fish in certain places of this country, and it is claimed you can put fresh frozen fish plants and filleting plants in a number of places or in some places where you have curing and drying of salt fish so that you can work the two together in combination, co-operating with each other, but that it is going to require the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars. Now who is going to do it?

We asked private enterprise and private enterprise says: "Look at what it is going to cost. You cannot even look at a fresh frozen fish plant under a million or two million dollars." We have not got the private individuals and private companies in this country to put the money into it.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? You said a few moments ago the fresh frozen fish industry amounted to nothing in 1944. Do you realize that thirteen fresh frozen fish plants have been established, new ones since 1943?

MR. MERCER: If the honourable gentleman will go back again to where he got that information and look a little further, and then go back and report on the number of pounds of fish which were exported by these fourteen plants in 1943 or 1944 as compared with today, and then see if he will agree with me when I say the fresh frozen fish industry in 1943 was little or nothing compared with today.

MR. HOLLETT: May I ask the honourable member a question? Does he realize that in 1944 we shipped twenty-three million, six hundred thousand pounds of frozen fillets out of this country? May I also ask him how much in pounds we shipped out last year?

MR. MERCER: I don't know. But I do know this much: He will find that what was shipped out in 1943 or 1944 as compared with 1953 will be less than ten per cent.

MR. HOLLETT: Nonsense.

MR. MERCER: Now, as I said here, the Opposition seems to place great stress on Mr. Dunne's Report of 1944. Mr. Dunne in 1944 said; "If this policy which this Commission of Government is trying to put into effect in Newfoundland now, if it fails, this business of trying to make fifteen or twenty centres where we can build filleting plants and fresh frozen fish plants etc., if that fails, regardless of the salt codfish industry, we might as well all pack up and leave Newfoundland." Newfoundland is gone. If it is a success, he says, "We are all right, we are going to be a great country." Here we are today, quite a bit further ahead in other fields than we were when Mr. Dunne spoke in 1944, and so we are trying now to bring in this fishery plan. Personally I don't care if the Commission of Government did start the fresh fish industry or whether it was private enterprise. I believe private enterprise did first of all start and then Commission of Government came in and started lending money because they could not carry on. But just as the Commission of Government in 1944 had to lend money to private enterprise so today, if you want to continue with the fresh frozen fish industry, other than to a couple on the Southside or a couple of others, the Government must lend the money as private enterprise has not got the money. Personally I think, Mr. Speaker, that if our merchants in Newfoundland had the money they would go into the thing. But they have not got the money. They just have not got that basic capital. So that this Bill proposes that the Government should invite private enterprise to take advantage of the fact that the Government is ready to loan money to build fresh fish plants in various parts of Newfoundland.

Now if the administration or the committee in charge of the administration of this Act, after it becomes law, puts a plant in a place not economically feasible, that may well be done. They may put a plant in one place where it is very successful and into another place where it is not. That has nothing absolutely to do with the principle of this Bill.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, this is one of the greatest, if not the greatest and most important pieces of legislation ever to come before this House. It is a piece of legislation in which, I hope and pray, we shall have not only the co-operation and good-will of the Opposition but also the co-operation and good-will of the fishermen and the merchants. We should, and in my opinion, must have the co-operation of every person be he fisherman, processor or merchant or government, and that includes both the Federal and the Newfoundland Government, but be he fisherman, processor or merchant or government we must have his co-operation and good-will. And I sincerely hope and trust we shall have the co-operation of every one of them in the carrying out and in the administration of this Act when it becomes law in order to make it a success.

MR. MORGAN: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

MR. SPEAKER: Committee of the Whole on sundry Bills. Leave has already been granted for this committee to sit again. I shall now leave the Chair.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Amend the Slum Clearance Act."

Clause 1 read and carried.

Clause 2 read:
2. Sub-sections (2) to (6) of Section 3 of The Slum Clearance Act, chapter 86 of The Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, as enacted by the Act No. 28 of 1953, are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Minister may make an agreement on behalf of Her Majesty with any cooperative society registered under The Co-operative Societies Act undertaking jointly with the society a project for the construction of

(a) houses to be conveyed upon the completion of the construction project to members of the society together with such land as the Lieutenant Governor in Council may prescribe; or

(b) houses for the use of members of the society, and for the acquisition of land for either of those purposes; and subject to this section every such agreement may contain any terms and conditions prescribed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

(3) Any moneys required to be furnished by Her Majesty under an agreement referred to in sub-section (2) shall be advanced only by way of loan and the advance shall not exceed a sum equal to seventy-five per centum of the estimated cost of the joint housing project which is the subject of the agreement and may not be made until the society has given proof satisfactory to the Lieutenant Governor in Council of its ability to furnish the balance of that cost.

(4) Every advance made by Her Majesty in pursuance of an agreement made under sub-section (2) shall be repaid

(a) where the advance was made in respect of the construction of houses referred to in paragraph (a) of that sub-section, before the expiration of two years from the date of the advance and of such additional period as may be prescribed by the Minister; and

(b) where the advance was made in respect of houses referred to in paragraph (b) of that sub-section, before the expiration of twenty-five years from the date of the advance.

(5) Repayment of the amount advanced in pursuance of an agreement made under sub-section (2) and interest thereon shall be secured by mortgage, but the Lieutenant Governor in Council may prescribe other security in lieu of or in addition to a mortgage.

(6) Her Majesty has all the powers necessary to enable her to carry out any of the terms of any agreement made under this section."

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would be good enough to explain to us at this time just what happens when these housing groups are formed. I understand they study for a considerable time, a year or so, and save up some money. But I also understand they don't have a great amount of capital, and in fact are not in a position to buy out the land. Now where does the Provincial Government come into the picture?

MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Chairman, each of the members of the cooperative group is supposed to have a certain amount, and as the honourable and learned member suggests, provided approval has been given by the Lieutenant Governor in Council to the application made to the Government, the Government is in a position to advance to them an amount so that they are able to go ahead with the first step of the building. That is continued until they reach the stage where they can receive a maximum loan of somewhere around seven thousand.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, but when does the Government first lend them money? Do they have to have a building lot, because if they have a building lot they can get a loan from the housing corporation at that stage?

MR. HEFFERTON: They have to have a minimum amount of money themselves before they can.

MR. BROWNE: What is the minimum?

MR. HEFFERTON: Off-hand I could not tell you.

MR. BROWNE: Can you tell us now, does this section vary from last year, or does it just carry on, as the Attorney General told us a little while ago, and repeats sections of the previous Act. Is there any difference in this section and last years?

MR. HEFFERTON: Yes, quite a difference, as I have just pointed out. They will receive all their mortgages from the Government before any return can be received from C. M. & H., under this amendment they all receive a certain percentage from the Government—in other words—at the present time if we were to build say ten houses, the Government would be forced to advance, as we have been doing, seventy thousand dollars, that is $7,000 per unit, a normal figure. In the meantime the co-operative individually would have had to put in some $30,000 of it either as labour or money or both. Now then seventy thousand dollars would have to be advanced by the Government before they could get anything back from C.M. & H. But under this amendment it is possible that the Government may advance, say, thirty thousand and the co-operative ten thousand, but instead of advancing it the Government puts in a claim to C.M. & H. and this C.M. & H. pays it back to them and then pays so much to the co-operative group.

MR. BROWNE: It gets reimbursed, so to speak.

MR. HEFFERTON: Yes, exactly the same.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, that seems to me a lot better plan than we had before. But I would like to ask the Honourable Minister if, in respect to their own labour, is there a value put on it related to the amount of their own labour they put into building the homes?

MR. HEFFERTON: Just the same as if they were ordinary carpenters.

MR. FOGWILL: A minimum flat rate?

MR. HEFFERTON: There again I am sorry I cannot answer in detail, but I believe it is the current rate received by carpenters and possibly by electricians—where they are qualified and have permission to do the work they get electricians' rates.

MR. FOGWILL: Their own labour then would be valued at the current rate of carpenters' hourly pay?

MR. HEFFERTON: That is right. And the accounts are kept by members of the group authorized to do it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, in regard to sub-section 4, I wonder if the Minister would explain that.
MR. HEFFERTON: That happens to be the provision under which the house is built.

MR. HOLLETT: Has the man to whom the house built belongs to pay that back in two years?

MR. HEFFERTON: No, he is given a mortgage and he has twenty-five years under a mortgage plan to pay off, which is done under an amortized plan, monthly payments. The advance made to the co-operative groups is made in two years, but the Government has to receive the advances from C.M. & H. and the whole thing must be carried to a certain stage where he can get a mortgage within two years of the date of building. There are two years allowed in which to build the house.

MR. FOGWILL: It has to be put up in two years?

MR. HEFFERTON: That is right.

MR. HOLLETT: Who repays the advance which must be made before the two years expires. I may have this wrong but I am just trying to get to the bottom of it.

MR. HEFFERTON: C.M. & H. repays all advances made by the Government to the co-operatives within the period of two years.

Section 2 carried.

Section 3 read:

3. The said Act is further amended by inserting therein immediately after Section 3 as Section 3A the following:

"3A. Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Minister may make an agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation undertaking to act, and may act under the agreement, as agent of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the purpose of carrying out any project for the construction of houses and for any purpose in connection therewith or incidental thereto."

MR. BROWNE: I think this is the section which gives powers to the Central Mortgage and Housing. There is really no change in the previous section at all, but this is the one which gives the power to do that. Why does the Minister find that necessary, would the Minister tell us?

MR. HEFFERTON: It is necessary to make this change here because the Central Mortgage and Housing are satisfied now to do this but in the first place they would not do it. It is an entirely different arrangement. In the first place they would not make any advance until all the work was completed. This is a completely new agreement.

Clause 3 carried.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether I am especially in order when I refer to this, but it has been brought to my attention in connection with some of these houses built under this measure here, the assessor or whoever makes up the rental amount added to the earnings of the men the amount which he receives by reason of the children coming under the family allowance regulations. This brings up the rental to be paid on these houses. It seems to me that was not the intention of the family allowance in the first place. Family allowances are for the benefit of the children to buy clothes and shoes and not to pay rent on houses. But it is here added in to the earnings of the householder in order to arrive at an assessment for rent. I wonder if the Minister would give us his opinion on that?

MR. HEFFERTON: I think the Honourable Leader of the Opposition is speaking of something entirely different from the purpose of this Bill, because this is a case where the person is building the house himself and enters voluntarily into an agreement by which it is amortized over a number of years. The family allowance has nothing to do with it, not a thing in the world. The only possible way it could have anything to do with it is that when an applicant forms a group and makes application to us, we have to concern ourselves with all his earnings in order to find out if he is in a position to qualify.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I have read the rental agreements which the applicant for the house has to sign, and there it definitely states that family allowance payments will be taken into consideration when arriving at the amount of rental a person will have to pay per month. That is an agreement which emanates from the office of the Honourable Minister, and I read it.

MR. HEFFERTON: The amount of money the co-operatives pay is approximately the same. They borrow seven thousand dollars, they pay seven thousand dollars, and on the same basis, the only difference being the amount which the individual is able to put in in the beginning, that is all.

MR. HOLLETT: Will the Honourable Minister tell me how they arrive at the amount which each householder has to pay under the Slum Clearance Act?

MR. HEFFERTON: Co-operatives?

MR. HOLLETT: I am not quite sure whether it is on a co-operative basis or not, but it is under the housing scheme.

MR. HEFFERTON: That is a different thing.

MR. HOLLETT: I have seen the agreement.

MR. HEFFERTON: I know. But it is a little different. We are talking about something affecting the house building scheme, not co-operative housing. The same principles do not apply.

May I say for the information of the honourable and learned member for St. John's, this particular Bill is a misnomer and is something that has been under consideration for some time between our own department and the Department of the Attorney General. I believe it is our purpose during the coming year to look at the whole thing, if possible, and bring in a new Bill, and —

MR. BROWNE: I was surprised to learn you were dealing with co-operative housing because I don't see any relationship between them and slum clearance. I have before me the original Act, chapter 86 of the Consolidated Statutes and it certainly seems to apply in assessment of land in areas adjacent to development areas. This has to do with where you improve land by bringing water and sewerage and laying culverts and gutters. I have in mind a particular instance at the junction of Empire Avenue and Newtown Road where an assessment was made by your predecessor in office. I am aware of the fact that many of these housing groups, co-operative groups are situated outside of the developed areas. Unfortunately they have to go elsewhere as there are not enough developed land areas within the town to satisfy the number of groups looking for land at the present time, and they have to go out to other sections. Therefore this particular section you are dealing with now has no relation to that at all, only in those areas where there is this service. Is that correct?

MR. HEFFERTON: That is right.

MR. BROWNE: In that case when assessment has been made and has not been satisfied then the man files in the Registrar of Deeds something in the nature of a charge or mortgage so that anybody who goes to buy the property will find out in the record of John Jones or John Smith that he did not pay his assessment. I think that is the purpose?

MR. HEFFERTON: That is right.

MR. BROWNE: Has the Minister any knowledge of any people who have not paid that assessment, who are connected with the co-operative societies or who have given reason for the inclusion into this Bill of this particular clause?

MR. HEFFERTON: I cannot give the honourable and learned member for St. John's West a decided answer on that subject. But there is such a case in an area not connected with St. John's at all at the present time, but a co-operative housing group.

MR. BROWNE: I see.

Clauses 4 and 5 read and carried.

Motion is the committee report having passed the Bill without amendment.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons Supplemental to an Agreement dated the Twenty-first day of May, 1958."

Clauses 1 and 2 read and carried.

Schedule read:

SCHEDULE

THIS AGREEMENT is made the day of 1954 BETWEEN HIS HONOR COLONEL THE HONOURABLE SIR LEONARD CECIL OUTERBRIDGE, C.B.E., D.S.O., LL.D., Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Newfoundland in Council (hereinafter called "the Government" which expression shall wherever the context so admits mean the Government for the time being of the said Province) of the first part BRITISH NEWFOUNDLAND CORPORATION LIMITED a company incorporated under the laws of Newfoundland (hereinafter called "the Corporation" which expression shall wherever the context so admits include the Corporation its subsidies and assigns) of the second part and N. M. ROTHSCHILD & SONS of New Court, St. Swithin's Lane in the City of London (hereinafter called "Rothschilds") of the third part SUPPLEMENTAL to an Agreement made between the parties hereto and dated the 21st day of May 1953 (hereinafter called "the Principal Agreement").

WHEREAS:

A. Pursuant to the terms of the Principal Agreement the Corporation has since its incorporation in April 1953 carried out operations for the exploration and investigation of the natural resources of Newfoundland and Labrador for the purpose of enabling it to select the areas in respect of which it wishes to exercise its option to take exploration leases pursuant to Clause 3 of the Principal Agreement.

B. Pursuant to the terms of Clause 3 of the Principal Agreement such option is exercisable by the Corporation at any time on or before 31st March 1954.

C. It has not been possible to complete before 31st March 1954 the study and evaluation of the reports prepared as a result of the said operations for exploration and investigation carried out by the Corporation and it has been agreed between the parties hereto that it would be to the benefit of all parties if such study and evaluation were completed before the Corporation was required to exercise its said option and accordingly it has been agreed that the said date on or before which such option is exercisable shall be postponed until 31st December 1954 and the Principal Agreement shall be amended in manner hereinafter appearing.

NOW THIS DEED WITNESSETH as follows:

1. The provisions of the Principal Agreement shall be amended in manner following

(a) By the deletion of the words "31st March 1954" in the second line of Clause 3 of the Principal Agreement and the substitution therefor of "31st December 1954."

(b) By the deletion of the words "31st March 1954" in the first line of sub-clause (a) of Clause 8 of the Principal Agreement and the substitution therefor of "31st December 1954."

2. Save as hereinafter expressly provided all the provisions contained in the Principal Agreement shall continue in full force and effect.

3. This Agreement is conditional upon its being approved and confirmed by the Legislature of Newfoundland.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF His Honour the Lieutenant Governor in Council has caused the Great Seal of the Province of Newfoundland to be affixed hereto and has signed these presents and N. M. Rothschild & Sons has executed these presents and the Common Seal of British Newfoundland Corporation Limited has hereunto been affixed the day and year first above written.

By His Honour's command.

Minister of Provincial Affairs.

SIGNED, SEALED and DELIVERED by N. M. Rothschild & Sons in the presence of:

THE COMMON SEAL of British Newfoundland Corporation Limited has hereunto been affixed in the presence of:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, there is something I wish to inquire about there: The Corporation has since its incorporation in April 1953 carried out operations for the exploration and investigation of the natural resources—now that is a positive statement of which we have no knowledge. I wonder if the Honourable Minister would advise us just how much investigation has been carried on by this firm?

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, a full report has been given to the House by the Honourable the Premier. As I remember it was also published in the paper. I think they spent last year three hundred thousand dollars or some such sum. Perhaps the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources may know more about it?

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, this agreement would be invalid. They have to, I believe, spend $300,000. They have gone over the minimum amount they had to spend, but I don't recall the exact figures. As the Honourable the Attorney General said, the Premier did table the figures here in answer to a question. I know that BRINCO have more than fulfilled the terms of their agreement, and that is on record.

MR. HOLLETT: I am not doubting the Honourable Minister's word at all. It is all very well to get up and say, we know they have gone over their contract, but that is not proof to this House. Who know it? Is it the Premier who knows it or the Attorney General or the Minister of Mines and Resources, and how, and if you know, what have you got? I would like to have that information as, I know, would the people in Newfoundland generally. I think you could give us a little more detail than that. It is not sufficient to satisfy me, no.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, the honourable gentleman should refer to some answers tabled here by the Premier with regard to BRINCO. If my memory serves me correctly there were a number of questions asked about BRINCO, and I am quite certain the honourable member would find this information in the answers filed by the Premier. I am speaking from memory, but that it my understanding. These questions were asked here anyway.

MR. CURTIS: My feeling is, Mr. Chairman, that the House has been told. I have not got the figures in my mind. But my understanding is that they spent over three hundred thousand dollars, and there was some definite statement made in the House. However, I can assure the honourable member that very substantial investigations have been made, far in advance of those required under the agreement. If I am right I think the agreement calls for an expenditure of a million dollars in five years, and they have in the last year spent more than their one-fifth of that sum.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, the reason I raised the point is, I did not see last year's report, but I saw something the other evening when I called for a certain person at one of the local hotels and discovered that there were some thirty-two young men from one or other of our districts who had already been flown in that day to work for BRINCO in Labrador. I was delighted to hear it. As I say, that is the only evidence that I have seen or any concrete evidence that BRINCO is doing anything at all. But I was delighted to see thirty-two young men—I was sorry to see them leaving the Southern Shore which is one of the great fishing places. In one way I was glad and in another sorry. These were good fishermen, good men, who had to go down to the Labrador to work for BRINCO. I don't know whether I should say this, Mr. Chairman, but it was suggested to me by some of these men that they would rather go fishing if they could get what they were going to get by working for BRINCO, and that is unemployment insurance for lack of work next fall. I believe that is something in which the Government should activate itself largely. I think you can bring in all the fishery authority acts you like and all the regulations you like, but unless you envisage and bring into effect some scheme of unemployment insurance for fishermen all around Newfoundland then they are all going to have to go to Labrador and work for BRINCO or some other company.
That is the reason I raised this point, and not by way of criticizing the Government for anything. I just wanted to say that. Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if the Minister could tell us if he has received any report which could be made available to the House at this time?

MR. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, the BRINCO Agreement unlike some others was with the Lieutenant Gover in Council, and was not an agreement such as the Falconbridge Agreement, which was between our Department of Mines and Resources and that Company, and which specified they would furnish reports to the Minister; in this case it is the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

In the second place, there is the very closest liaison in operation between our department and BRINCO.
I would say that there is hardly a day passes that BRINCO's officers and men are not in our department for this information and that. And at times they have given us information which we were looking for and did not have. BRINCO has never yet refused any information we have requested from them, but we have not received from them any formal report. They have not been in operation for a year yet, and I doubt if there has been any time for them to submit a formal report of an annual nature on the work they have done so far. But in every possible way they have certainly gone far beyond the letter of their agreement insofar as my dealings with them is concerned. But I would again emphasize their agreement is with the Government itself.

Motion is the committee rise and report having passed this Bill without amendment.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker,
the Committee of the Whole have considered the matter to them referred and have passed the Bill "An Act to Amend the Slum Clearance Act" without amendment.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, there may be an error in that Slum Clearance Bill and I would like to have it recommitted. Instead of having this report received I would like to ask leave to report progress and ask leave to sit again.

MR. BROWNE: We could recom-
m it it on third reading.

MR. SPEAKER: Providing the amendment is nominal.

MR. CURTIS: We passed an amendment last year that the House has the right to refer a Bill back after third reading. I think, Mr.
Speaker.

On motion report received. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker,
the Committee of the Whole have considered the matter to them referred
and have passed the Bill "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corrporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons Supplemental to an Agreement dated the Twenty-first day of May 1953," and have passed the Bill without amendment.

Report received, Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

First reading:

Honourable the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply asks leave to introduce a Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Local Government Act."

On motion read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move that all further Orders of the Day do stand deferred, and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Friday, at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 21, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Motion
None.

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Labour to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. Is the Minister aware that a work stoppage is in progress, in a majority of city garages, for the past three weeks?

2. If so, what action is the Minister or his Department taking, in trying to solve this problem, which is causing great inconvenience to the general public, much loss of wages to the workers concerned as well, as interrupting the normal operations of those engaged in the car service business.

3. Did the Garage Workers' Union make application for the services of a Conciliation Board, if so, why was a Board not appointed? Give full details.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister for Economic Development to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. How much money, if any was paid to architects for (a) drawing plans (b) making specifications (c) supervising the construction for each of the buildings erected by or for the Government in its industrial development programme? Give the names of Industry, name of architect, and amount paid him.

2. Were any tenders called for the construction of any of the said buildings? If so give the names of persons tendering with amount of each tender and the name of the one who was successful.

3. If tenders were not called state the reasons why they were not called and the basis on which construction was conducted.

4. Were sub-contracts given for (a) electrical wiring (b) heating (c) plumbing in connection with the construction of the said buildings?

5. Were tenders called for these sub-contracts? If so, give the names of persons tendering, with the amount of each tender, and the name of the successful one.

6. On what basis was sub-contract issued in each case?

7. What was the amount paid to each sub-contractor or person doing the electric wiring, heating and plumbing in each building?

Answers to Questions

Question No. 93:
HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that there was any discrimination in the rates of pay. But I might say for the information of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that the matter is between the railway and its employees and the Terms of Union, and has been all more or less handled by my colleague, the Premier, and I feel quite sure that when he arrives here, by next sitting, he will be able to give the member the information.

Question No. 94:
MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, the answer is being prepared.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable the Attorney General has had time to get the answers to Question No. 34 asked on April 2nd. That is over six weeks ago now.

MR. CURTIS: I think that answer has been prepared. I thought it was tabled. I might say we have been very busy in my department.

HON. DR. H. L. POTTLE (Minister of Public Welfare): The answer to Question No. 88 is being prepared, Mr. Speaker.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are entered upon I should like to ask if it is correct that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are guarding night and day the person of Dr. Valdmanis, and if so, by what arrangement, for a person who has been arrested under a civil process in the Supreme Court?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I might say that no arrangements have been made except that the RCMP agreed to do it. There is no financial arrangement.

MR. BROWNE: Are not the RCMP engaged to do criminal work in places outside the City of St. John's? Have they any jurisdiction in matters concerning the Supreme Court?

MR. CURTIS: In reply I might say to my honourable and learned friend that it is true the RCMP are under contract to serve those portions of Newfoundland outside St. John's, but in view of the fact that the prisoner in question was arrested by the RCMP and that they are interested in a criminal charge already outstanding against him, we felt it advisable that they might continue, and they look upon him as their prisoner really.

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on that point, I understood that the prisoner had given security for his appearance. Now I understand from the Honourable the Attorney General that the RCMP regard him as their prisoner. Perhaps it is insolence on my part, but I wonder why—I don’t wish to defend the prisoner or say anything against him. At the moment I think we ought to guard ourselves in this country against what appears to me almost something touching things we have heard about happening way, way behind a certain curtain, which we have heard people talking about—I don’t know where.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the honourable member, I refuse to discuss the matter any more in the House while the case is pending.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

Orders of the Day

Third reading of a Bill “An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor in Council to Enter into an Agreement with British Newfoundland Corporation Limited and N. M. Rothschild & Sons Supplemental to an Agreement dated the Twenty-first Day of May, 1958.”

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

First readings:

Honourable the Attorney General asks leave to introduce a Bill “An Act Respecting the Franchise of Electors and the Election of Members of the House of Assembly.”

On motion read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, before you put the next motion I should like to inform the House that I have had this Bill printed and I have arranged to have it distributed immediately so that honourable members may have it as approved reading for the long week-end coming up. It is a long Bill, and I don’t think the publishers of the Sunday newspapers would complain if we studied the Bill on Sunday so that we may be ready to introduce it at the next sitting.

MR. BROWNE: Arising out of that statement, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Honourable the Attorney General if this Bill follows along the line of the one we have, or whether it follows any other approved by the committee on uniformity of legislation. Could the Honourable the Attorney General give us any indication as to what the Bill follows?

MR. CURTIS: I might say, there is obviously no uniformity on this Legislation, otherwise we would find ourselves in the position of British Columbia, and consequently everybody would vote three times. I might say the Bill follows the pattern of our old Bill plus the improvements of the Federal Bill. We think from the committee’s report it is a good one and I am sure, embraces the best features of all their Bills, adapted to our circumstances.

Bill read a first time, ordered read a second time on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority”:

MR. MORGAN: Mr. Speaker, in rising to support this Bill I should first of all like to congratulate the previous speakers, in particular the Honourable Minister who introduced the Bill. I remember hearing him speak, I think it was in 1945, for the Rotary Club, and I am glad to find his basic thinking along the lines of fishery development and fishery policy is much the same now as it was then; that it was in dire need of reorganization and that the reorganization meant not only the procuring of larger quantities of fish and the matter of higher returns of the social and sociological conditions of our people.

As Newfoundlanders we are very proud of our long historic past and of our great traditions. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that most of our traditions are connected with the sea, with seamen and with fishermen. In a country such as Newfoundland bounded by the ocean it would be rather surprising if that were not so. Our livelihood has depended upon the fisheries, and the fisheries have certainly been the most discussed subject in the history of the country and province. I say, this is only natural because the success or failure of the fisheries is the measure of the prosperity or otherwise of our people.

Today with the population of the globe on the increase, and with the sources of food gradually declining our fisheries will become more and more important not only to us but to the world in general. Unlike agriculture both vegetable and animal the fisheries provide a source of food which is practically inexhaustible. It is almost a “toil not neither do they spin,” but just have the fish, the fish from the water, and of course it is true that by conservation and other means, fish such as salmon or lobster or shrimp or some of the more expensive types of fish can be increased or conserved, but the great bulk of our fishing goes on and on without much interference from man. Fortunately for us in Newfoundland we have fish in plentiful supply. And with such great wealth on our doorstep we should take every precaution to see that they are managed to the best possible advantage to the people of the province. I am sure that we all agree that up to the present time there has been much room for improvement in the way that our fisheries have been managed, in the way that the fish have been cured and in the way that they have been marketed.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, who was to blame for this mis-management. I hardly think the fishermen themselves can be blamed because over the years, despite their adverse circumstances, despite their lack of proper equipment, catching equipment and handling equipment, they have managed to produce a fairly large number of codfish. I do not like to blame the merchants too much. I think they have always had their problems; the problem of the salt codfishery becoming a thing of the past, and at the same time the problem of their own old equipment, Labrador fishing schooners and traps and other gear becoming worn out at the same time as the fisheries slumped. I would possibly lay some of the blame on the Government. I do not mean this Government of course, I mean governments of the past, because, while I do not subscribe to the idea that governments should have their finger in every pie and conduct the complete welfare state, I do think that in such matters as the fishery which affects every person in this province, not only the fishermen but people who live in Grand Falls and Corner Brook and in St. John’s, indeed every man, woman and child in Newfoundland, if such things which have such a great effect upon our people have not been handled properly then governments should at least take some regulatory action to see that these mistakes and these neglects are rectified.

This present Bill will, I believe, be a beginning towards regulating our fisheries. I believe this Bill is designed not merely for the economic improvements of our fisheries (and I mean by economic, the fact that a fisherman in one year makes one thousand dollars and in the next year makes two thousand dollars) it is designed to assist far more than the barely economic end of the fisheries. I think it concerns itself with the social conditions as well as the economic. Actually I cannot see how one can be saved without the other. I think that while we have these hundreds of small communities scattered amongst the rocks and in the coves of our coastline, even if the fishermen were making ten thousand dollars per person per year we would still have the need for a Bill such as this. If we had that happy state the clause covering the borrowing or raising of those millions of dollars could possibly be eliminated, and in that case we could finance our own development programme. But while we have people living in those small communities who can never attain any great improved living conditions, there is need for such a Bill.

This problem, Mr. Speaker, is not only the problem of fish itself. It is the problem of people, and the implementation of the clauses of this Bill will affect not only our fishermen, the people who actively and actually engage in taking the fish from the water, but also the families, children, wives and mothers, and most particularly the children and grandchildren of our fishermen. It is with the lives and living standards of people that this Bill deals.

The purely technical problem of increasing the amount of fish produced in Newfoundland is not a difficult one. For instance two or three years ago, I think, there was an English boat in Harbour Grace, actually an English fish plant. I think her name was the "Fair Free" and I believe one that came later was the "Fair Try." About two years ago the "Fair Free" was here, and I think the "Fair Try" was meant to be an improvement on the "Fair Free." But the matter of increasing the volume of fish produced is simple because it means only the construction of four or ten or twenty or one hundred "Fair Frees" and we would have the volume of fish we need.

MR. BROWNE: At £1,000,000 each.

MR. MORGAN: That, as I say, could be done simply by having enough money. That also could result in Newfoundland becoming an uninhabited island where we would not have to worry about social problems or economic problems as far as the people of Newfoundland were concerned, because Newfoundlanders would no longer be Newfoundlanders as they would have to leave Newfoundland.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that there is any intention on the part of the Government nor on the part of the Fisheries Authority to have our fishermen become slaves of the factory whistle, whether that whistle is in a factory on the land or a factory which is afloat.

The problem of Newfoundland is, I think, intensified on the northeast coast. I will refer mainly to the District of Green Bay because I happen to know that district very well. In the District of Green Bay we have and we have had the problem of reorganization of the fisheries thrust upon us for the past four or five years. Up to 1945 most of the fish produced in Green Bay was caught either up on the French Shore in the White Bay District, or Straits of Belle Isle and the Labrador. With the abandonment and almost complete failure of that fishery, from the point of returns to the fishermen, we had the problem of resettlement and re-organization right on our doorstep. For instance, in 1934 the firm of James Strong Limited, just one firm of a number in Green Bay District, packed some forty-seven thousand quintals of codfish. In the year 1953 that same firm packed less than ten thousand quintals. Mr. Speaker, the important question to me is; what happened to the people who produced the forty-seven thousand quintals of fish in between that forty-seven thousand and the ten thousand? Unfortunately most of them are no longer fishing. Many of them have left the district and have gone to work in Corner Brook and Grand Falls and latterly at Goose and some at Gander and some have gone to the Mainland. A whole generation of fishermen have left the district, and we are left at the present time in that central part of the district, which was concerned primarily with the Labrador and French Shore Fishery, with communities with half the population gone, and in a great many cases these have been the younger and more active men.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these men did not leave the fishery voluntarily. They were and are good fishermen. But they were driven from the fishery because of the fact that they just could not make a living. They could not make enough to provide the ordinary necessities of life for themselves and their families. Unlike, say, the District of Bonavista North and to some extent the District of Fogo, the fisheries in Green Bay were carried on through schooners which were owned by merchants. On the north side of Bonavista Bay and some parts of Fogo District and possibly Twillingate District, this did not seem to be so. In these districts we had a large number of people operating their own vessels. In the District of Green Bay we had a number of large firms who owned the vessels. Immediately then that the fisheries had to be abandoned the fishermen themselves were left not only without a job but without means of producing a livelihood. The merchants themselves were also caught in the same dilemma because they did not have the capital and probably in some cases did not have too much of a desire to modernize and to re-adjust themselves to changing conditions. They found that in the bottom of the trough they were left with badly outworn gear and with a number of old hulls which were past the stage where they could be repaired. I say that in the central section of the District of Green Bay the people as a whole have had their own economic problems and have solved them by leaving the district, thus making the district worse through their loss.

This particular area, Mr. Speaker, has a particular problem. It is the problem of the large number of scattered communities with the best and the great part of their population gone. Under the Fishery Authority I can see such an excellent harbour as Robert's Arm being developed as a townsit with a road linking it to the Trans-Canada Highway, with acres and acres of good arable land, with a plentiful water supply, with docking facilities to take care of all fish that could be or will be produced in that central area. As a result of this improvement in some such particular port, which may not be Robert's Arm, I can see a great many of our people today living on the rocks and islands moving into these central areas. And in a great many cases, Mr. Speaker, they will not be requesting compensation for leaving their stages and flakes and their homes on these islands because they have been moving around in the past two or three years, and no longer are they satisfied to live in these small communities where they can never have proper medical care, where they can never have proper schools for their children, and where they can never look forward to having electricity and running water. Now these things are becoming more important in the lives of our people. I think it is a good sign that our people are looking for improvement and development. And our people in the central part of the District of Green Bay are more than anxious to move, and will gladly move as soon as some place is offered which will provide them with these amenities and also at the same time provide them with the means of gaining a livelihood.

On the north side of the District of Green Bay the problem is different. There for hundreds of years people have lived and gained a livelihood through shore fishing. I doubt if there were twenty people who left the area between Nipper's Harbour and Shoe Cove during the war years to go to work on any of the bases. Most of them stayed there, and they kept their fishing gear in good order. They have excellent boats. I may say I was rather surprised a few days ago, as a matter of fact I could hardly believe it myself, when I was told that the average earnings per fisherman in that section last year was something in the vicinity of $2,400, which is much higher than the average for Newfoundland.

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): All from the fishery?

MR. MORGAN: All from the fishery. But, Mr. Speaker, I would like to go on and clarify that. Evidently most of us when we speak of fish think of codfish, and when we think of codfish we think of dried, salt codfish. In the Nipper's Harbour area some eighteen thousand quintals of salt dried codfish was produced in 1953. This was handled by two firms, L. J. Noble & Sons and the Fishermen's Union Trading Co. However, in addition to this eighteen thousand quintals of salt codfish, some hundreds of thousands of pounds of fresh salmon were exported directly to the United States. I understand that in Nipper's Harbour alone some fifteen hundred barrels of Turbot were produced last year, bringing a return, I would say, directly to the fishermen of some thirty thousand dollars. In addition to salmon, turbot and cod, there is a fairly active lobster, live lobster fishery. Coupled with that we have, I would say, one of the most prolific mackerel grounds in Newfoundland. I remember in my own experience going down in a boat in Green Bay and driving for miles by the edge or through the centre of a school of mackerel that were practically on the surface of the water. Then of course, we have a reasonably substantial seal fishery. All of these taken together have meant that these people, from the standpoint of dollars and cents, have been able to make a fair living. However, they still have the problems of living where they are still scattered in small communities which are isolated and where it is practically impossible because of the mountainous contour of the country to build even roads connecting these small communities. They have also become dissatisfied because of the things which they cannot get, and knowing there are so many things which they cannot get.

I have visions, Mr. Speaker, of Nipper's Harbour playing its part in this development programme. To go back to the turbot fishery alone, last year some fifteen hundred barrels were produced. Some four hundred of those were disposed of on the west coast of Newfoundland. I think another four hundred barrels in Nova Scotia and another four hundred barrels around New Brunswick. Of the other three hundred barrels I am informed that two hundred of them went sour because of the lack of proper storage facilities. The turbot fishery could begin at the beginning of June but for this lack of proper storage facilities. The fishermen just cannot commence fishing for turbot until the weather cools off in October or November and December. In that one thing alone if facilities could be provided in Nipper's Harbour, if only cold room or some type of refrigerated warehouse whereby the people could start catching turbot along say from the beginning of June to the end of the season, I am sure that they could increase the cash returns to the fishermen by at least another hundred thousand dollars per year.

Mr. Speaker, here I speak of men who have been and who are today good shore fishermen. I also know that these people are anxious and willing to participate in any development programme. I think I mentioned in this House before that a committee from Nipper's Harbour approached me over a year ago and told me that they were willing to raise twenty-five thousand dollars and more if necessary if something could be done to provide proper landing facilities there for their codfish and for their turbot and salmon and halibut. They are anxious and they are willing to play their part. And I believe this development programme is something which will fill that need.

Now this report of Commissioner Dunne has been up for some discussion. So far, however, I don't think anyone has mentioned one of the most important points, at least insofar as I see it, that is his plan of having the fishermen participate in the ownership of the plants and of the means of production. I believe his plan was that the Government would buy common shares in these companies and the companies would agree that the fishermen could buy out these shares at the cost. That, I think, Mr. Speaker, should be and will be a part of the pattern of this development programme. We have a great many people in Newfoundland today who have a great interest in the fisheries, and we have in Newfoundland people who like fishing, people who would not go at anything else if there was the possibility at all of making a livelihood fishing. These people will be anxious to play some part and acquire some ownership in these plants and so regard them as theirs. I think, Mr. Speaker, that point is one which should be very seriously considered by the fishermen and also by the Fisheries Authority. I think the honourable and learned member for St. John's West mentioned the point and the place of co-operatives in this scheme. Like him I am very much interested in the co-operative movement, and I always have been. I feel sure that in this scheme there must be provisions made for the inclusion of our co-operative societies who wish to participate. Particularly do I think this will be true in the case of the LaScie development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I take a little personal pride in the LaScie scheme. Unfortunately LaScie is outside my district by about two miles, and I do not want to encroach upon any other member’s territory, even if there is a Redistribution Bill coming up. But I happen to have the honour of having held the first co-operative meeting in LaScie sometime in the fall of 1944. I was in that area four years, and I watched that little spark fanned from a meeting of some forty or fifty fishermen first into a credit society and then into a buying club. Their next venture was to buy an oil plant, a cod oil plant. After that they went into the retail business and latterly they have come into the fish business. They have come, in ten years from the first meeting, to one of the largest, and I would certainly say, the most successful co-operatives in Newfoundland. I would like to think that this evidence of their sincerity, this evidence that they can work together, this evidence that they are anxious to improve their community—I like to think that had something to do with LaScie being included in this first section of the development programme.

I know LaScie very well. I know the people. I am interested in LaScie not only because of my personal associations but also because of the fact that it will benefit the northern section of my district, say from Shoe Cove, Tilt Cove and these small settlements there which I hope some day will be connected by road to LaScie, and over which they can ship their fish into that port, and also that later on they will be connected to the Trans-Canada Highway and be able to take advantage of some of the local markets in Newfoundland for their specialized products such as salmon and turbot and lobster.

Mr. Speaker, I will be very sadly disappointed if in the LaScie development there is not some provision made for the co-operatives to play their part in the development of the community.

Mr. Speaker, our people in Newfoundland today demand much better living conditions than they have ever had. I am inclined to agree with the Honourable Leader of the Opposition about the happy times which we have had in the past in our small communities, and I am not too anxious to see some of these communities disappear completely. We have them in Green Bay, fairly prosperous, growing communities such as Paradise, which really lives up to its name. It is a large harbour dotted with small spruce-clad islands. It has acres and acres of practically flat rolling land where people can make a living. I think of Rattling Brook nestled under the Needle Ridge where most of the people are farmers, and most of them fairly prosperous.

MR. BROWNE: Watch out for the Maypole now.

MR. MORGAN: They are fairly prosperous and fairly happy, and I would hate to see such communities disappear. But there are so many communities where people are not so happy, where they can never develop to the prosperous point, the land is just not there. They are living in rocks and coves where the land is just not there whereby they can develop and where they can build a community. They, Mr. Speaker, as well as myself are looking forward with hope and with enthusiasm to what this Authority can do. It is my firm conviction, Mr. Speaker, that the terms of this Bill, if implemented, will do much to make Newfoundland a better place in which to live, a place of which we can be justly proud and a place wherein all our people will be happy, will be contented and will be prosperous.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion debate on second reading of Bill “An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority” adjourned until tomorrow.

Committee of the Whole on Sundry Bills:

MR. CURTIS: Perhaps before we enter upon the next order I should say: The remarks of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in reference to Valdmanis might be misunderstood by the public if I do not make an explanation. I understand his remarks to mean that the holding of Dr. Valdmanis, as he is now being held, suggests that we in Newfoundland are treating him as if he were behind the iron curtain. I think that is a most unfair remark.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I said nothing about “iron curtain.”

MR. CURTIS: The Honourable Leader referred to a “curtain.” There is only one that he could have been referring to, the “iron curtain.” I am afraid I cannot have his remarks go to the country without some statement, as they may tend to further mislead the public along the lines that have been used by the press and by the radio since Valdmanis was first arrested. The honourable members will appreciate that since the arrest of Valdmanis there has been a certain campaign of propaganda inspired by those who are responsible for his defense. The object of that campaign is clearly to arouse sympathy for Dr. Valdmanis, and apparently the Honourable Leader of the Opposition with others has swallowed the bait, hook, line and sinker.

The proceedings taken in these cases, both criminal and civil, are in every respect normal. Dr. Valdmanis is today being held by the Sheriff under the direct supervision of the Judge of the Supreme Court. I may explain to the House, and through the House to the public at large, that bail in criminal proceedings permits the accused to leave the province; it permits the accused to leave the country, and it obligates only that the accused shall appear for trial as and when called upon.

My department was not prepared to accept the bail that the magistrate accepted to insure the return to Newfoundland of that accused, had he been free to leave. Civil proceedings were strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Judicature Act of 1904 which was brought forward in the Consolidated Statutes of 1916 and again in the Revised Statutes of 1953. These proceedings are normal in every respect. I am endeavouring only to recover back for the Government of Newfoundland moneys which we say belong to the people of this country. There is no persecution, although that word has been used. There is no persecution of Dr. Valdmanis. Indeed the same people calling "persecution" today would be most offensive in their references to us if we fail to take the very steps that we are taking.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I do not expect any applause for what I shall say (if I may say anything)—

MR. SPEAKER: Let me say at this point that there can be no debate. A question was asked at the beginning of the sitting to which a reply was given. In the opinion of the Chair the question ought not to have been asked. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition made a comment, but did not ask a question. The Honourable the Attorney General, after careful consideration, replied. He addressed no comment to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition but merely stated the position of the Government in a highly delicate matter on which it would be highly irregular to have a debate.

There is no motion before the Chair.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I rise to a point of privilege? The point of privilege is this:

I am, according to the Honourable the Attorney General, supposed to have swallowed some sort of bait, hook, line and sinker. I believe the inference was that sympathy was endeavoured to be aroused by somebody, and that I had swallowed the bait. I just rise, if I may, Mr. Speaker, to make my position clear with regard to the individual. My position today is as it was a year ago or two years ago.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is making a speech. He must not add anything further to what he has said. He has made his point clear. Why not let the matter rest there?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I cannot allow the Honourable the Attorney General to give the country the opinion that I am now backing Valdmanis.

MR. CURTIS: You referred to a curtain.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is persistent in misunderstanding what the Chair says: I am trying to preserve the honour and dignity of the House. The honourable member, to begin with, is entirely out of order, there being no debate permitted on questions, and no statement should be made on questions. It is entirely out of order.

I allowed the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to clear himself of some point that might be misunderstood, that is, that he had not "swallowed" some "bait." Therefore let him resume his seat; and get on with the business. However, he did refer to "curtain." He can, if he wishes, have Hansard read back. However, he did not say "Iron Curtain."

MR. HOLLETT: I don't think, Mr. Speaker, it is quite fair to this side of the House for any member to insinuate we are trying to make politics out of this unfortunate affair. I want to say right now—if I am allowed—my position now is the same as it was a year ago.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker—

MR. SPEAKER: There is no debate!

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to one observation in that question I asked which should not have been asked: surely we can ask questions of the Minister?
MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member was allowed to ask his question, and received his answer. He should not enter into debate with the Chair.

Order.

Committee of the whole on sundry Bills:

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Amend the Apprenticeship Act":

Clause 1 read and carried.

Clause 2 read:

2. (1) Section 9 of The Apprenticeship Act, Chapter 261 of The Revised Statutes of Newfoundland, 1952, is renumbered as sub-section (1) and amended by adding thereto as paragraphs (k), (l) and (m) the following:

"(k) may by resolution delegate to the Director any of the powers or duties vested in it by paragraphs (b) to (i) and Section 27A and in like manner may revoke any delegation so made;

(l) may in respect of a designated trade, upon recommendation of the Minister and with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, make regulations

(i) providing for examinations for and the issuance, renewal, replacement, suspension and cancellation of certificates of qualification,

(ii) providing for the issuance, renewal, replacement, suspension and cancellation of permits;

(iii) requiring all persons in any area other than registered apprentices and persons who receive a permit under Section 27A to hold a certificate of qualification and prohibiting the employment of persons who do not hold such a certificate; and

(iv) prescribing the terms and conditions under which certificates of qualification and permits may be issued;

(m) may by permit exempt from the operation of sub-paragraph (iii) of paragraph (l) any person who is engaged in the designated trade when regulations made under paragraph (l) come into force."

(2) The said section is further amended by adding thereto as subsection (2) the following:

"(2) Whenever any power or duty is exercised by the Director pursuant to paragraph (k) of sub-section (1) the Board

(a) may on its own initiative, and

(b) shall at the request of any person who feels aggrieved thereby made within sixty days of the exercise of the power or duty review the matter and shall either confirm the action of the Director or act de novo in the matter as if the power or duty concerned had not been delegated to the Director."

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in paragraph (k) where the powers of the Board may be delegated to the Director, I have no objections at all to the powers exclusive of the duties of the board being delegated to the Director, but I think these powers should be rightly left within the powers of the Board and should not be delegated to any one person. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that section should be struck out, and that it should remain entirely within the powers of the Board, and not delegate too much responsibility to any one person. It is a responsibility, I think, which should remain upon the shoulders of the Board and on the board alone. Therefore I move that the words in the third line be stricken out.

HON. C. H. BALLAM (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, which section are we referring to now.

MR. FOGWILL: Under (k) third line.

MR. BALLAM: I might say for the information of the House that all of these amendments have been passed with the exception of 3 which is the only section that was allowed to stand over.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I might say that all of section 2 was permitted to stand. We did not pass any part of section 2 at all. The Bill has been passed except for that clause. The honourable member for St. John's East has just made an amendment to (k) third line—and Section 27 be deleted.

MR. BALLAM: I might say, Mr. Chairman, that would change the whole idea of the amendment. I am not quite willing to accept it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the Honourable Minister did not quite get the tenor of the remarks. I would like to read (k) or to see him re-read it:

"(k) may by resolution delegate to the Director any of the powers or duties vested in it by paragraphs (b) to (j) and Section 27A and in like manner may revoke any delegation so made;"

Now the honourable member thinks, and I think, that the powers given under 27A should be employed by the Board and not by the Director. I think my honourable friend on my left believes that the authority should be vested in the Board and not in the hands of one man who would have to take it upon himself to say to John Jones, you cannot work. Whereas if the Board made a decision then of course there is nothing you can do about it, but if the Director makes a decision then, of course, it is a hardship upon the Director himself. Under 27A the Board issues the permit. I don't know if I have made it any clearer.

MR. BALLAM: This deals with section 2 (l) The Board may in respect of a designated trade, upon recommendation of the Minister and with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, make regulations. My honourable friend is assuming all this is done, and these powers are delegated and all the rest of it, but that is not so. It may be done upon the recommendation of the Board and the Minister, and with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I think the Minister is reading the wrong section. We are dealing with section 2 amendment to section 9. The Minister is on another section altogether.

The section is—2—The Board may by permit exempt from the operation of sub-paragraph (1) any person who is engaged in the designated trade when recommendations made under paragraph 1 come into force.

MR. BALLAM: Now to fully understand and realize the implications of the above provisions one has to be fully acquainted with the set-up to deal with apprenticeship matters. The Apprenticeship Board is comprised of representatives of employees, employers, two government departments, education and labour. The Board has been established and the Board has appointed several advisory committees upon whom the Board depends to advise it in respect of apprenticeship matters in each trade or private plants. These advisory committees are composed of representatives of employers and employees and it is now, and will be their advice upon which the apprenticeship programme of the province will be formed.

In order to provide the type of service necessary to a successful trade training in this province the Board has deemed it advisable to make certain recommendations to the Government, and the amendment in this Bill, in effect, represents these recommendations. It will be readily seen that this legislation is enabling, and recommendations made by the Board, with of course the advice of the trade, can be confined to any area or plant and can only be made effective providing it has the approval of both the Minister and the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Now this has been the advice of the Board through their machinery set up for the proper functioning of this Bill, and I don't see any reason for complaint. It comes from the trades themselves, and we hope in order to further the work of the Board to implement their work by this amendment.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, the Minister does not quite see the position. I am inclined to feel there is something in the suggestion of the honourable member for St. John's East. I think that the speakers are talking at cross-purposes about different sections. Would the Honourable Minister tell us why that Board should not still issue the permits and why it should want to delegate that authority to a Director?

MR. BALLAM: They delegate the power to a Director so that he may carry on the work. The Board meets only about three months or maybe four or five months. During that time they want to give the powers to the Director so that he can carry on the work. When the Board meets again, if there is anything that the Director has done in the meantime that is not according to Hoyle, to use an old expression, it may be referred to the Board, and they may review the thing. It is to carry on the work.

MR. CURTIS: That seems a reasonable explanation.

MR. FOGWILL: Yes, that is reasonable now that the Minister has made an explanation. Well, how much work would be entailed in that, which would be handed over to the Director? How many people are involved? How many permits will have to be issued? Has the Minister any idea how many permits will be involved in this?

MR. BALLAM: Perhaps none.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Does the honourable member who has made the amendment wish to have it put?

MR. FOGWILL: I am not going to withdraw the amendment.

MR. HOLLETT: I do not see why he should withdraw it. The principle of the thing seems to me that the House is asked to give authority to the Government to do certain things. The Government says we will give so much authority to the Minister, and the Minister says we will give so much authority to the Board, and the Board says we will pass it over to the Director.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I will now put the clause as amended.

Amendment not carried.

Committee passed the Bill without amendment.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Amend the Workmen’s Compensation Act";

Clause I carried.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I see no reason why there should be a fifteen page document here. For instance on page I, sub-section 3, the only amendment is "Where" instead of "When" still they quote five or six lines there in order to do that.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Would the Honourable Leader of the Opposition suggest we just call the numbers on this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 2 read and carried.

Clause 3 read:

3. Sub-section (5) of Section 18 of the said Act, as enacted by the Act No. 23 of 1953, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(5) When an account for payment of medical aid is not received by the Board within six months after the medical aid has been rendered, the Board may refuse to pay the account or if in its opinion the circumstances so warrant may pay the whole or such portion of the account as it thinks fit."

MR. CHAIRMAN: Does this clause carry?

MR. HOLLETT: No, Mr. Chairman, not until we get an explanation of that "Where" and "When." I wonder did the Government think they would be short of legislation to bring into the House and do something like this. I wonder if the Minister could tell us why the change was made, otherwise let it stand.

DR. POTTLE: "When" refers to a point of time. "Where" refers to circumstances, and time is not essential here. It is the circumstances—at any rate that is my guess.

MR. CURTIS: That was a deliberate change made by my department.

MR. BROWNE: May I make a suggestion? Make it "wherever."

MR. CURTIS: The change was made by the draftsmen in my department and was a deliberate change. I do not think it is important.

Clause 3 carried.

Clause 4 read:

4. There shall be inserted in the said Act immediately after Section 28 as Section 28A and 28B the following:

"28A. Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Board may acquire by purchase, gift or otherwise property of all kinds and may erect such buildings as it deems necessary for its purposes, and may with like approval sell, lease or deal in any other manner with its property.

28B. (1) Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, the Board may make regulations with respect to the establishment of a pension fund for the members, officers and employees of the Board and authorize contributions to be made to the fund, and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, may make regulations providing for

(a) the amount of the contributions to be made to the fund by the Board, its members and officers and employees;

(b) the persons to whom payments may be made out of the fund; and

(c) the terms and conditions upon which payments may be made out of the fund.

(2) Contributions made to the fund by the Board under sub-section (1) and the costs and expenses of administering the fund are payable out of the accident fund."

MR. HOLLETT: There are a couple of points there which strike me, in 28A: "Subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council the Board may acquire by purchase, gift or otherwise." Could we cut out the word "gift" I do not like the idea of gifts being necessary to the Workmen's Compensation Board. They have a delicate job to carry out.

MR. CURTIS: The Government may give them a gift.

MR. HOLLETT: That would not be a gift. The Government never gave any gifts yet. They always demand a pound of flesh. I don't think any board should be put in the position by the House of receiving gifts. Now none of us have any objections to any of these members of the Board being pensioned at all, but we do think that any pension scheme set up should have the approval of the House and not of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I think the stage we are arriving at is any board, you set up a lot of boards, and any of these boards can look around and say we propose to do this—raise money, pay money, get pensions for ourselves, this scheme or that, let the Lieutenant Governor in Council approve, and the House of Assembly is never asked whether it approves of it or not. I think you have opportunity there for two great scandals, casting no aspersions on the members of the Board, but we are passing legislation not only for today but for the future. I don't think we should in the first instance allow a board set up by this Government to receive gifts from anybody. And I think if they are to be pensioned that a pension scheme should be approved by the House and then at least everybody knows about it. These are two points of which the Government should take due cognizance before they pass it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of other observations to make. I notice in 28A at the end it says: "... and may with like approval sell, lease or deal in any other manner with its property."

Now I presume that means that the board may give the property away as well, but I am referring especially to the words "Board's property," I don't see how it can be regarded as property of its own. The Workmen's Compensation Board has been set up, I take it, with Government assistance, and collects funds through assessments made upon employers. Is that money then the property of the Board or is it held in trust for the benefit of the workmen, or can it be regarded as property of the Board, or the property of Her Majesty. How is it going to be defined? It seems to me to be important particularly when the Board is just getting on its feet, and it should not feel too free to deal with property that comes into its possession. Now I realize the Board has had pretty steep assessments on employers and has built up a fund very rapidly and very fortunately has had no serious actions concerned with disaster or anything of that kind. Money has come in very rapidly and it is in a very nice financial position today. I think it should have restrictions placed upon its actions, and it should not be entitled to regard the property in its possession as its own.

Now the next observation I have to make is that a pension fund for a Board that is carrying on duties under an Act passed here by the Legislature should be approved by the House of Assembly before it goes into effect. It is the Board that is going to draw up these recommendations and submit them to the Government and they come into effect if the Government approves, and the Legislature has nothing to say about it at all. That is a function which the Government is performing on which the House of Assembly has nothing to say about it at all. That is a function which the Government is performing on which the House of Assembly has nothing to say, and there is no appeal therefore to the House of Assembly in any fashion regarding the way the Board spends its money or what kind of contribution is made to the establishment of this particular fund. It seems to me it is taking money out of industry and has a trust in regard to that, and I think the members of the House of Assembly should have some concern in regard to the pension scheme to be introduced.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, if there is no money available in the fund for payment of compensation which becomes due the Lieutenant Governor in Council may direct that the money be advanced . . . In that case the money has to be repaid to the Minister at his request. It goes to say that the Legislature at least have some responsibility. They may have to vote funds to the Board, to pay injured workmen. It seems to me, therefore, the Legislature should maintain control to a certain extent at any rate in this Compensation Board. They have, I understand, done a good job, indeed they certainly have done a good job by way of collecting money from employers. They have collected over three million dollars. They paid out in compensation a million and invested in Newfoundland Government Bonds another million and in Canadian Government Bonds. They are now “cock of the walk.” They have two million dollars, so that they decide they are going to set up a pension scheme, and they are going to do that on their own with the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. We think that ought to be with the approval of the Legislature. I do think we are letting ourselves in for something if we don’t do something about that. The Board of course has to file an annual report and at that time it would report just what the arrangements were.

MR. BALLAM: But if we wait for the Legislature to meet they won’t have a pension scheme for another whole year. They are not ready to bring it into the House now. I may say the Lieutenant Governor in Council does not want to take responsibility for doing it, but here is a Board set up which is not a Board paid by the Government and is therefore not under any civil service pension scheme, and has to work out one of its own, and this Act enables them to work out one and submit it to the Lieutenant Governor in Council and if approved it becomes law.

Now then with respect of this permission to buy, sell and lease, I understand the position is that the Workmen's Compensation Board are now paying quite a high rent and their quarters are not suitable, and they may wish to be in a position to invest some of their money in housing themselves. That is the reason for this clause. They have the right to buy land, the right to lease or obtain it by gift from the Government, to put a building on it, and this clause gives them the right to deal with it, because it gives them the right to rent, sub-let, or sell part of the property they don't need, and otherwise deal in real estate in a perfectly normal manner. I don't think my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West is correct when he says they don't own this property, they hold it in trust. Of course they hold it in trust, but they are acting as a Board, and I think that money that has come into their possession is money belonging to the Board as against which they have certain obligations. I don't think that there is anything at all in the position that they should not be allowed to look upon what they have as their own. It is not theirs personally. It does not belong to the members. It belongs to the Board. The members are only here today and gone tomorrow. I may say that we are advised that there is hardly need for this particular amendment at all, because the Board has the power from time to time to invest their funds in any manner whatsoever.

MR. HOLLETT: In pensions?

MR. BALLAM: We are not talking about pensions. We are talking about the building for their own use, and for them to rent part of it. It is quite a normal thing, and is covered under the Act. We could read it into the Act, but we thought it better to be specific about it and have the amendment.

As regard the pensions, I don't think there is anybody here going to anticipate, in the Government at any rate, that the mere fact that we allow this Board to have a pension scheme for themselves is going to create a scandal. I do not like these words. The honourable member for St. John's West said we had two points here that could be cause for major scandals.

MR. HOLLETT: Yes, there is a chance of graft there.

MR. BALLAM: No, not with a well-run organization like this—such insinuations are not very good.

MR. HOLLETT: There are no insinuations.

MR. BALLAM: Such suggestions are not good, and I am surprised at my honourable friend for making them, giving them ideas.

MR. CURTIS: Putting ideas into their heads.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I know it is to be carried, but my honourable friend, the Minister of Labour, must remember that if we pass this section we are giving this Board (and I don't give a hang who they are) this House is giving that Board the authority to take the money which they have taken from the employers and use it to set up a pension scheme for themselves. The House is doing that. They are going to bring in a scheme which will probably be a fair scheme of pensions, I am not casting any reflections on any person, but this is one of the most ridiculous things ever brought in, and the Lieutenant Governor in Council could be expected to recommend it, let it go. They have done some funny things, the Lieutenant Governor in Council, they have done some most peculiar things in the past. I don't want to mention any of them now, Sir, but I do say that we, as a House, have no right whatsoever to delegate this authority to a Board, no right whatsoever to give any board the right to collect money from the despised merchants, if you like, on Water Street, and set themselves up as pensioners of these Water Street merchants.

HON. J. R. CHALKER (Minister of Education): They delegated that power to the Library Board.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't know who has authority. I do know it is not right, Sir, for this Government to legislate authority to any board either to receive gifts from the hated merchants on Water Street, if you like, and they could do a lot under that. Yes there are plenty of chances for graft. Nor should they be allowed to set up a pension scheme for themselves with money collected from the same "Lounge lizards." Mr. Speaker, I am not in favour of this and the Opposition is not in favour. Yes, we are in favour of these men getting pensions, but I do think it must be recommended by the Legislature and not by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. They have too much authority now, a lot more than they should have. I think the Government ought to see that point and meet us half-way on the matter.

I could go on talking about this, Sir, but I think the Honourable the Attorney General would like to recess for some purpose or other unknown to me at the moment. I will say nothing further on it.

House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, before we recessed we were speaking on Section 4 of the Bill. The Honourable Minister drew attention to the fact that I made some observation to the effect that the Board is collecting assessments from employers, and unless the Legislature has some power to exercise supervision over this then it is just a matter for the Government. Now when this Board was set up originally the appointments made were political. If these men had been recruited from the civil service and set up in the ordinary way I don't think there could be the same objection. However—in regard to the next section; is there any reason why regulations could not be drafted and attached to this Bill, in the Schedule, as otherwise we have no idea of it at all. I think the matter is now pretty well advanced. I think the report stated they had a staff committee energetically engaged in examining various contributory pension schemes with a view to adopting one most suitable for the Board's needs. Now would this be a suitable time to give some indication to the House as to what sort of pension scheme the Board has in mind? Apparently the Board is the one to work it out and put it to the Government. Surely it should at least be indicated to the House what kind of pension scheme they are going to have. Now, Sir, I feel the House should be informed fully of the Pension Plan and also with regard to the building—the Minister says they have power now to invest money, but I don't think they have the power to go and build. They have power to invest the money in a trust fund. Is it the desire of the Government that they should have a separate building to themselves? The tendency today is to have one large central building where for instance there is one joint heating system. Several small buildings require separate heating systems and watchmen, more than one large building, thus the overhead is higher. This money does not come out of the Government, I grant you that, and there is no reason why they should worry too much about it. But at the same time it seems to me there should be some supervision to see the Board conducts itself modestly in regard to its pension scheme. Nine thousand dollars is the rent now being paid, and it seems to me a good round sum to pay for premises such as they occupy. No doubt they could get a building somewhere in the vicinity of two hundred or two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. But I do not think the Board should feel that it is entitled to the last word when it comes to recommending buildings. It should be taken into consideration in the whole picture of government buildings. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Government to put up a government building, but it certainly seems to me to be desirable, rather than to have government departments scattered all over the city. They should be united. And there is no reason why the Workmen's Compensation Board should not find quarters in such a building, and pay rent to the Government.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, before you put that clause, I just want to say I would like the Minister of Labour to take the few words which I have spoken in the spirit in which they were spoken. Certainly I do not want him to get the idea I was imputing any dishonesty or danger of dishonesty to his Board. Far from it. I do think we ought to be heard from on this side of the House on this matter because I do think it is wrong. I have been trying to think of some similar case where a board appointed by the Crown has the right to figure out its own pension scheme, particularly when the moneys for that pension scheme have to be paid by assessment from employers. In other words you are assessing the employers not only to pay compensation where a workman is injured, but you are assessing the employer for pensions for the Board which is set up by the Government. In other words the Government sets up a Board and says to it; the employers are going to pay you your pensions. I don't think that is right, Mr. Chairman. That is all I am going to say on that.

I do notice that since we recessed a plane has flown in from Western Canada and has brought back the Premier. I feel it my duty to say we are glad to see him back, and we are glad to see him looking so well, and we are glad to see he has a new suit on, for that matter. I would say on behalf of the Opposition that I am glad to see him back, because it has been rather quiet for the last few days.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, has the Minister any idea now what sort of pension scheme the Board is likely to introduce?

MR. BALLAM: Mr. Chairman, the Board, as it says in its report, is inquiring into various pension schemes in order to find one that may be suitable and which would be later presented to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, who I am sure are sufficiently competent to say whether it is the right kind of scheme. All the Boards across the Dominion have pension schemes and I am sure my honourable friend is not worried about the fact that they would have to be paid from the assessment from the merchants etc.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't see it.

MR. BALLAM: Is it not so that you are getting a pension, and that must come from somebody, it is assessed from the people.

MR. HOLLETT: Yes, I see that.

MR. BALLAM: So that this is nothing new, and there is nothing ulterior about it, like my honourable friend mentioned about the recess: He thought we were up to no good, just because the Attorney General suggested we would have a recess in order to give our stenographer a little rest, and there was nothing ulterior about it at all. I can assure my honourable friend there is nothing ulterior about this—I think he was only joking anyhow.

MR. HOLLETT: No, Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to say anything else, but now that my honourable friend has mentioned about my pension, I hope he is not going to try and take it away, like one honourable gentleman did in the House. I may say, again, any pension I have received from this Government is by way of employment by the Government for twenty-five years, and my appointment was not political like your Board, like the Workmen's Compensation Board—that is purely and simply a political appointment. Of course the scheme is not set up yet for these pensions, but I do say this House ought to know what the scheme is before we give them authority to go ahead and do it. I stand on that, and I am prepared to stand by it. Surely a Government cannot allow everybody to go out and settle their own pension rates, particularly when the money for that comes by way of assessment. I think I am right—as a matter of fact, I am right, Sir!

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister think this scheme is likely to go into effect before the House meets again?

MR. BALLAM: I have no idea.

MR. BROWNE: There is no reason why it could not be attached to the Act as a Schedule so that when recommendations are passed, the House could have something to say about them.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, do you mean to say that the Honourable Minister of Labour has no idea at all when this comes into effect, and he is the Minister who has brought in the Bill? Surely he is acquainted with some of the facts essential for the setting up of the scheme? I don't like answers like that to any member on this side—he has no idea—don't know—don't care—that sort of thing. I don't want to hear that, and the people don't want to hear that. I think we should have some explanation.

MR. BALLAM: This legislation is merely enabling legislation.

Clause carried.

Clause 5 read:

5. Sub-section (l) of Section 34 of the said Act, as enacted by the Act
No. 23 of 1953, is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(1) The Board may

(a) invest any funds arising under any of the provisions of this Part and any other moneys under its control in securities authorized by the laws of Newfoundland for the investment of trust funds and approved by the Minister of Finance and, subject to the like approval, sell any securities and re-invest the proceeds in securities so authorized and approved by this Act;

(b) place any of its funds and moneys on deposit in a bank or banks approved by the Minister of Finance."

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this clause is really the same as last year, but I would just like to make one observation—"The Board may place any of its funds or moneys..." I take it, it all depends on how that is carried out. It is not very wise to have too much money in the banks like that when good interest could be earned if invested.

MR. BALLAM: This section is merely a copy of an Act passed last year. I don't think we can debate it.

MR. BROWNE: Yes we can.

MR. CURTIS: Yes, definitely.

MR. BALLAM: In any case it is merely a copy of what was passed last year.

Clause 5 carried.

Clause 6 read:

6. (1) Section 43 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"43. (1) Where permanent partial disability results from the injury, the impairment of earning capacity of the workman shall be estimated from the nature and degree of the injury, and the compensation shall be a weekly or other periodical payment during the lifetime of the workman, or such other period as the Board may fix, of a sum proportionate to such impairment not exceeding in any case the like proportion of sixty-six and two-thirds per centum of his average weekly earnings ascertained in the manner provided by Section 42.

(2) Where the impairment of the earning capacity of the workman does not exceed ten per centum of his earning capacity, instead of such weekly or other periodical payment the Board shall, unless in the opinion of the Board it would not be to the advantage of the workman to do so, direct that such lump sum as may be deemed to be the equivalent of it shall be paid to the workman.

(3) The Board may compile a rating schedule of percentages of impairment of earning capacity for specified injuries or mutilations that may be used as a guide in determining the compensation payable in permanent partial disability cases.

(4) Notwithstanding the provisions of sub-section (1), where the amount which the workman was earning before the accident has not been diminished, the Board may pay compensation in any case where the workman has suffered a permanent injury which, in the opinion of the Board, is capable of impairing his earning capacity.

(5) Where the Board deems it more equitable, the Board may award compensation for permanent partial disability having regard to the difference between the average weekly earnings of the workman before the accident and the average amount which he is earning or is able to earn in some suitable occupation after the accident, and the compensation may be a weekly or other periodical payment of sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of such difference, and regard shall be had to the workman’s fitness to continue in the employment in which he was injured or to adapt himself to some other suitable occupation."

MR. BROWNE: I believe that Nos. 1, 5 and 5 are new, and Nos. 2 and 4 are the same as last year. Now in regard to No. 3, is the Minister in a position to say if this is being done at the present time. That, I remember very well was done in some of the States of the United States particularly in the State of New York, so much for one joint of a finger, so much for two fingers etc. With each additional injury the compensation came up. Can you say if that is being done at the present time. In regard to the other sections they seem to be very reasonable and I have no objections.

I don’t know if honourable members can follow the section we are dealing with now, Section 1 of 48 of the Revised Statutes while in the Act which was passed last year it referred to Section 40 of the Act.

MR. BALLAM: Yes, they had to be renumbered to fit into the consolidation.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, the honourable members can pretty well treat the 1953 Act as having never been passed. The idea of the drafted amendment now is to treat the amendments of the Revised Statutes as they are set up—so forget the 1953 amendment altogether and treat these as amendments to the Revised Statutes. In other words you can forget everything that came before—in other words you can rip that amendment out of your 1953 Acts—I think it is clear as day.

Clauses 6-9 read and carried.

Motion is the Committee report having passed the Bill without amendment. Carried.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Motor Carrier Act."

Clauses 1 through 3 read and carried.

Clause 4 read:

4. The said Act is further amended by inserting immediately after Section 2A the following as Section 2B:

"2B. No person shall operate a public service vehicle on any highway without holding a certificate issued by the Board allowing the vehicle to operate."

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I think I raised the point the other day, I don’t think there is any provision in the main Act for issue of a certificate.

MR. CURTIS: My honourable and learned friend brought that matter up on second reading. I checked on the matter and find it is provided for in the rules and regulations. There is no reference in the Act but the reference to the certificate here is covered in the regulations, so that it is perfectly all right.

Clause 4 carried.

Clauses 5 and 6 read and carried.
Motion is the Committee report having passed this Bill without amendment. Carried.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Amend the Health and Public Welfare Act."

Clauses 1 and 2 read and carried.

Clause 3 read:

3. The said Act is further amended by inserting therein immediately after Section 13 as Sections 13A and 13B the following:

"13A. (1) Notwithstanding The Local Government Act, the Minister of Health may by order declare any area which he shall define in the order, within or without a municipality, to be a restricted area.

(2) The Minister of Health shall publish or cause to be published in The Newfoundland Gazette and in a newspaper published or circulating in the area to which the order applies any order made under sub-section (1) and the order shall come into effect from the date stated in the order or, if none is stated, then from the date of publication in The Newfoundland Gazette.

(3) No person shall erect or construct or cause to be erected or constructed any building or sewerage facilities in a restricted area except under and in accordance with the terms and conditions attached to or to which is subject a permit issued under this section by the Minister of Health.

(4) The Minister of Health may issue permits for the erection or construction of buildings or sewerage facilities in a restricted area and may attach to each permit such conditions as he deems fit and may prescribe other terms and conditions to which each permit shall be subject and may attach and prescribe different terms and conditions in respect of different restricted areas or in respect of different permits in the same restricted area in different circumstances.

(5) The owner and the builder or maker shall at all times during the erection and construction of any building or sewerage facilities under a permit granted under sub-section (2) affix and keep affixed in a conspicuous position upon or adjacent to the erection or construction a placard which the Minister shall furnish, reading "Permit granted by Minister of Health," with the date on which the permit was granted.

(6) Any person who commits a breach of any of the provisions of this section or fails to comply with any of the terms and conditions attached to or to which is subject any permit issued under this section is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars or in default of payment to imprisonment for a period not exceeding three months.

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if we could stop at this section and discuss 13A. Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering how this is going to affect places where people are going to build where there is no serviced land? I do not know who is looking after this Bill at the present time, nor to whom I can address my questions. There are a good many people who are building outside this area. Are they likely to have their property depreciated by orders coming from the Minister of Health?

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply):
I don't know if I could give any answer or not. In the ordinary course of events, in any area in which there is some danger of setting up conditions that would impair the health of the people themselves, then the Minister of Health is in a position to say that area is restricted and disallow or prohibit building—whether that affects the property is immaterial to the people concerned.

MR. BROWNE: But it is material to the people investing money. Let's suppose twelve people buy a piece of land to put houses on it, and the Minister should come along and say each septic tank should be one hundred and fifty feet apart, in other words it is a restricted area—should not the people know that before it happens? The Minister has the power here, but there is nobody who knows what it is going to be. I can assure the Minister of Municipal Affairs that it is getting very difficult now to purchase land, there are so many people, so many boards and so many things you have to bear in mind when you are buying a piece of land—you have to figure out how many rules and regulations there are. I tell you it is not good Government, it seems to me, when you don't know beforehand what you have to face. But I don't know how that can be resolved.

MR. HEFFERTON: I don't know whether the honourable member is referring to areas within the vicinity of St. John's or not. If he is referring to areas within the vicinity of St. John's, and these areas come under regulations administered by the Department of Municipal Affairs and Supply, there should be no particular beef, because people know themselves that within certain areas they are not able to build unless in accordance with certain regulations which they can easily obtain from our department. That has been known now for a couple of years and we have repeated them even when people reapply to us for a sub-division of property, and that sub-division is not allowed unless in accordance with certain laws and regulations laid down. In accordance with certain laws and regulations laid down in the Department of Municipal Affairs and Supply, they are unable even under existing regulations to issue a permit until the land itself, the building site, has been looked over by the health officer and he has given approval, at which time then we issue a permit.

MR. BROWNE: What is the meaning of "Municipality" here? Does it refer to the City of St. John's?

MR. HEFFERTON: No, it refers to any area where there is a municipality. For instance in the last six months we had rather serious trouble with a town council area on the west coast where we had a conflict between the regulations laid down by the municipal council in that particular area and the medical health officer. Certain permits had been granted, as a matter of fact, by the town council itself, and they were stopped by the medical health officer because they were creating a hazard to the health of the people. That is why this amendment is made to the Public Health Act here, in order that we may clear up the conflict under different legislation, between the Local Government Act and the Act as administered by the Minister of Health. Now we put the authority squarely on the health authorities.

MR. BROWNE: Well it does apply to St. John's then and to every municipal area?
Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Minister to say the reason for this is that on the west coast there is a dispute between the council and the Minister of Health’s officer. Is this the reason for this legislation; to give the Minister power where the rules of the medical health officer could not be enforced, or was not being enforced?

MR. HEFFERTON: Yes, that is right.

MR. BROWNE: Why were they not enforced? There are provisions under the law to see that the local government concerned should do these things themselves, and they can be forced to do them. Why not do it that way instead of taking away the power from them?

MR. HEFFERTON: I am under the disadvantage that I am not able to hear very well. I am not piloting this particular Bill through the House, I just happened to know something about it because of consultations between our department and the Department of Health.

MR. BROWNE: May I restate the question?

Why does not the local governments in the area, the councils concerned, enforce the rules and regulations or at least be made to enforce what are reasonable rules and regulations given by the medical health officer?

MR. HEFFERTON: May I say first of all that the regulations under the Health and Welfare Act precede by a long period the regulations which were brought into law by the Local Government Act. But I believe I am stating the case correctly when I say that the subsequent law more or less takes precedence, and to some extent at least, but it is not so in this particular case, they run counter to the health regulations. Therefore to make the matter clear and to avoid that conflict between what the local councils think should be so and what the medical health officers know is proper we are making the amendment to bring about uniformity between existing legislation. Does that answer the honourable and learned member?

MR. BROWNE: Not completely, but you are doing very well.

Clause carried.

Motion is the committee report having passed the Bill without amendment.

Committee of the Whole on Bill “An Act to Empower the St. John’s Municipal Council to Raise a Loan by Issue of Bonds for the Purpose of Financing the Erection of a Stadium Building in the City of St. John’s.”

Clause 1 read and carried.

Clause 2 read:

2. The St. John’s Municipal Council shall have the power to borrow by way of loan upon the credit of the City by the issue and sale of bonds of the City a sum not exceeding Seven Hundred Thousand Dollars ($700,000.00) at an interest rate not exceeding five per centum per annum.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I understand not all of this money is needed for the stadium. I understand only four hundred thousand dollars is needed for the stadium, plus the one hundred thousand dollars to be given to the Government to reimburse them for their free of interest loan; and two hundred thousand dollars is for some other purpose.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, I am able to answer that probably better than anyone in the House. The original committee or organization estimated and the estimate of the Municipal Council commitment was about four hundred thousand dollars, but on going into the matter further it was discovered, much to the misgiving of the council, that four hundred thousand dollars would not be sufficient to complete the work, and that the figure was nearer six hundred thousand dollars, because of course there is not only to be included the financing of the building itself but certain work to the grounds immediately adjoining, and there was, of course, the one hundred thousand dollar loan which had been advanced by the Government, which therefore calls for provisions for repayment. So that the city instead of needing four hundred plus a hundred needed six or nearly six hundred thousand dollars, and that has to come out of the taxpayers some way in the next few years. The amount is required.

Clause 2 carried.

Clauses 3 to 8 carried.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, there is just one question before we pass the Bill: Perhaps my honourable and learned friend from St. John's East might be able to answer the question. In whom will the title rest in connection with this property now?

MR. HIGGINS: The Municipal Council. I might say, Sir, the House may not be aware, originally when the Stadium Council were going to operate themselves the Municipal Council agreed to give them a lease of the property, but when they found it had to be a municipal operated stadium the title will actually rest in the City. I believe there is another Bill coming before the House later appointing a committee.

Motion is the Committee report having passed this Bill without amendments.

Motion is the Committee rise and report having passed these Bills.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole have considered the matters to them referred and have passed the Bill "An Act to Amend the Apprenticeship Act," without amendments.

Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

The Committee reports having passed the Bill "An Act to Amend the Workmen's Compensation Act" without amendments.

Report received. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

The Committee reports having passed the Bill "An Act to Amend the Motor Carrier Act," without amendment.

Report received. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

The Committee reports having passed the Bill "An Act to Amend the Health and Public Welfare Act," without amendment.

Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

A Bill "An Act to Empower the St. John's Municipal Council to Raise a Loan by the Issue of Bonds for the Purpose of Financing the Erection of a Stadium in the City of St. John's."

Passed without amendment. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.
MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move that all further Orders of the Day to stand deferred, and the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Tuesday, May 25th., at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. BUTTON: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of privilege:

In today's issue of the "Daily News," in the editorial column, there is an article which states:

"... we are a little surprised, however, to discover the member for Trinity South describing the opinions of an Opposition member on fishery policy as 'ignorant, idiotic and senseless.'"

Mr. Speaker, I feel sure there must be an error on the part of the "Daily News" editor who put that there. I would like to have a correction made, Sir, because I was absent from this House, and I did not make any such statement. I should like to have that correction made, Sir, and I lay this paper on the Table of the House.

Presenting Petitions

None.

Presenting Report of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Giving Notice of Question

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. What was the total quantity of fresh frozen fish, in pounds, produced in Newfoundland in the years 1949 to 1953 inclusive?

2. What was the total quantity of fresh frozen fish, in pounds, exported from Newfoundland during the same period?

3. How many plants for the freezing and storing of fresh fish fillets were in operation in the years 1949 to 1953 inclusive, where are these plants located, and what is the maximum daily production rate and storage capacity of each plant?

4. How many plants for the freezing and storing of fresh fish fillets are presently in construction, where are these plants located, and what is the proposed maximum, daily production rate and storage capacity in each such plant?

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Public Works to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. What was the extent of Electrical, Plumbing, and Heating repairs (improvements and new installations) made in all Public Buildings, Hospitals and Institutions, during the fiscal year 1953-1954?

2. Were tenders called for such work, if so, table details.

3. Who were the individuals, firms, companies or persons performing this work?

4. What was the amount paid to each individual, firm, company or person concerned?

MR. FOGWILL: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

1. What is the position of the Provincial Debt, as at April 1, 1954? Answer to include: The total amount of interest paid as of April 1, 1954 and the total amount credited to each sinking fund in respect of the 1940-1965 War Loan, 1942-1957 and 1943-1958 Victory Loans and the 1952-1964 Development Loan.

2. What amount of interest did the Government pay in respect of bank overdrafts and/or temporary bank loans during the 1953-1954 fiscal year. Answer to include date and interest rate, etc.

3. Did the Government negotiate any loans with the Industrial Development Loan Board, the Co-operative Development Loan Board, or the Fisheries Loan Board, during the 1953-1954 fiscal year, if so, state the amount borrowed, the rate of interest and the amount of interest paid in each case?

4. Did the Government of Newfoundland receive from the Government of Canada, the $1.12 per quintal price support payment, in respect of the 1953 production and sale of salt cod, if so, state the amount and the date when this money was received?

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

Details of the expenditure incurred under the special vote provided for those attending the Coronation ceremonies last year.

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

How many inspectors have been appointed for the purposes of the Social Security Assessment Act? When were they appointed? Who are they? How many prosecutions have been taken under this Act? How many convictions have been registered? Give Magistrates before whom prosecutions were taken indicating number of prosecutions before each Magistrate? Where are the Inspectors located?

MR. BROWNE: To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the Table of the House the following information:

What amount of money has been paid to Ministers on account of travelling expenses since April 1, 1954? Give names of Ministers, date and amount of payment and dates of trip in each case.

Answers to Questions

Question No. 95: Answer being prepared.

Question No. 96:

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): (1) the only industries to which the question in fact applies are the cement mill at Corner Brook and the Gypsum Plaster Board and Plaster Lathe Mill at the same place, and the Birch Veneer Plywood Flooring and Door Plant at Donovans:

In connection with the cement plant, all architectural and engineering work for the plant was done by the builders, MIAG, (the firm of MIAG in Germany). They have their own construction department and their own engineering and architectural departments in Brunswick, Germany, who designed the plant and installed it. They also designed the building which was constructed by William J. Lundrigan, Limited, under the supervision of MIAG. Both firms were under the supervision of the Government's own engineer in the person of Ernest Leja. With regard to the Gypsum Plant the same observation applies, except that in that case the parent or major firm was that of Benno Schilde, Bad Hersfeld, Hessen, Germany. They had the contract to manufacture the plant, install and erect it. William J. Lundrigan, Limited, had the contract to erect the building. The designing and the engineering for all was done by the firm of Benno Schilde in their own engineering department at Bad Hersfeld, Hessen, Germany. Again the contract was supervised on behalf of the Government by the Government's engineer for that purpose, Mr. Leja.

At the third plant, at Donovan's, the basic architecture was done by the firm from whom the Government, through Chester Dawe (not Chester Dawe, Limited) purchased the machinery that went into the plant. The Cole people of the United States, Preston Woodwork Machinery of Preston, Ontario, and Yates. These three famous firms in plywood and the wood industry generally provided the basic plans for the mill at no cost to the Government nor indeed to Mr. Dawe. Mr. Dawe himself personally adapted this plant to the site chosen for the birch industry. In conformity with ideas of his own gathered by him on the occasion of many visits to similar plants in many parts of Canada and the United States the actual physical changes made in the plans and designs were effected, at Mr. Dawe's request, by Thomas Lench, a local architect who was paid a sum of $11,875.00 for his professional services.

The Government believes that because of the fact no architect was engaged to design the plant and to receive the normal fee of about five per cent for his services, and again because no supervising architect was engaged to receive anything from one-half per cent to six and a half per cent fee, the savings resulting were at least $120,000 to the Government.

(2) It is necessary here to break the reply down into two sections: (1) The Cement Mill and (2) the Gypsum Plant at Corner Brook: The Director General of Economic Development, Dr. Alfred Valdmanis, negotiated with a number of firms in England, in Canada, and in the United States and in Germany. He named several firms to the Government at the time, I remember one in particular, Allis Chalmers, whose representative came to see me in my office. I believe the Attorney General was present on that occasion, I would not be certain whether Dr. Valdmanis was there or not. I remember the prices quoted were considerably in excess of the prices charged by MIAG. I remember quite vividly that the lowest price which could be obtained anywhere in the world, as far as we knew at that time, was the price obtained from MIAG. Allis Chalmers is a very famous firm in the United States and in Canada as well. What happened was that the contract was negotiated by Dr. Valdmanis and signed by me as Minister of Economic Development.

The same thing applied in the case of the Gypsum Plant. There again we were assured by Dr. Valdmanis that the price at which Benno Schilde agreed to build the plant and install and erect it, and get it into operation to the point of satisfactory production, was the lowest price obtainable.
Again he named firms whom he had approached with that in view. In that case also the contract was negotiated by Dr. Valdmanis and signed by me as Minister of Economic Development.

MR. BROWNE: I take it no actual tenders were called at all?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, there were none for either of the plants. I would say that it would have been more than slightly unusual if it had been done. I have yet to see in any paper published in North America an advertisement calling for tenders for the construction of a factory. I have yet, in the last five years since I have been personally concerned in the matter, to see one in the “Financial Post” or the “Financial Times” or in any daily paper calling for tenders for the building of machinery, the installation and erection and the organization to the point of satisfactory operation.

96 (4) For these connected with the two plants at Corner Brook the answer is—No.

In connection with the Birch Plant the answer is—Yes.

The electrical installations were made by Snows Iron and Electrical Works of St. John’s, and the price paid was $72,000.

Plumbing, heating and boilers were sub-contracted to William Tiller, Limited, and the price paid was $120,000. Both were cost, plus 10% contracts. The contracts covered all buildings. There were five buildings; two main buildings and three others. The contract in each case covered installations in all buildings where installations were made.

No tenders were called.

These sub-contracts were negotiated on behalf of the Government by Chester Dawe (not Chester Dawe, Limited).

Question No. 94: (1) and (2):

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have not the foggiest notion what it is all about. I can only give the answer without knowing what it really is: The answer given to me by the Treasury is: There are identification marks on bills rendered to Chester Dawe Limited, but bills rendered by Chester Dawe to Chester Dawe Limited do not contain identification marks.

That may mean something to my honourable friends opposite. I might as well say that I do not understand it. If the honourable member should need more information on it, he could table the question and I shall pass it along to the Treasury, and certainly remit to him whatever information the Treasury gives me.

Question No. 91:

(1) The answer is; yes they were, that is, in the sense I have just described in answer to an earlier question.

(2) I am afraid they would be in the possession of Dr. Valdmanis.

(3) For the reasons I have given they were called in the sense I have spoken of.

(4) The answer is that they were, and they have already been tabled, and they are available to the House. Therefore, I must decline to table them at this moment, because they have been tabled here long ago.

(5) That too has been tabled here long ago in this House.
Question No. 92:
(1) The answer is $1,005,090 cash and $1,500,000 guaranteed bank loan, of which $350,000 has been retired.
(2) Yes.
(3) Yes.
(4) No. Therefore the second part of the question does not arise.

The security of the operation is the security we have for any advances made. All but three shares have been handed to the Government as security. There are twenty-five thousand dollars worth of shares.

Question No. 90:
(1) Fifteen acres were bought from the Misses Leslie for $18,000. A smaller piece in addition to that was bought from the Estate of J. Dunne for $3,750. That was sold by Mr. Dawe, who bought it, to the Government who subsequently sold it to Atlantic Hardboard Industries Limited. Is that clear.

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Are you tabling that. We don't get any Hansard.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am fulfilling my duty in answering the questions, and I am answering them slowly and distinctly at dictation speed.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: These questions directed to the Minister ask the Minister to lay upon the Table of the House that material. That is not being laid upon the Table of the House.

MR. SPEAKER: To that point of order: Laying on the Table of the House means to answer the questions. In my view it always meant so in this House. If my honourable friend wants to be so technical about it; a Minister discharges his full duty when answering the question either orally or in writing or handing it in to the page without a word to be laid on the Table of the House.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, if I may, we are laboring here under difficulties. As Mr. Speaker will realize we have no Hansard. I remember distinctly asking for a Hansard about three weeks ago of just one honourable gentleman's speech and I have not been able to get that yet. That is three or four weeks ago. Now there are important answers tabled today from the view of the Government and the public and are being answered verbally. I say, sir, that if the thing is going to be answered verbally at least we ought to be sure the Hansard shows this. I can make that request, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SMALLWOOD: 90 (2) Now, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what that means, but I am quite sure what (3) means, and I have no intention of answering it. What Newfoundland Hardwoods paid Mr. Dawe or any other employee for travelling, I think, is of no concern to this House whatsoever.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, once more on a point of order: The Premier only a few minutes ago stated the Government owned twenty-five thousand shares and that all the other shareholders only had three shares, does not the Government think with that amount of interest in the company ...

MR. SMALLWOOD: Excuse me—I did not say the Government owned all but three. The honourable gentleman has misquoted me completely five minutes after, and he could not misquote me more than he has done.
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, if I have misquoted the honourable gentleman, that is what I understood the answer was.

MR. SMALLWOOD: You understood quite incorrectly. We hold all but the three, I said.

MR. BROWNE: Who owns them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mrs. Chester Dawe, Chester Dawe and his counsel, Mr. Mercer. The Government holds the shares as security, all except three shares, but we don't own them, we hold them.

MR. BROWNE: Well, who owns the assets of Newfoundland Hardwoods Limited?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The shareholders, Chester Dawe Limited, Mrs. Chester Dawe and Mr. R. C. B. Mercer, in short, Mr. Chester Dawe, the other two being qualified shareholders. The assets of Newfoundland Hardwoods Limited are owned exclusively by these shareholders.

MR. BROWNE: Worse than I thought.

MR. HOLLETT: Where does the Government fit in?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Government owns the plant, all the property. There is no mystery about that. The honourable and learned gentleman need not look surprised at the news. It is three years old, and well known in this House. The Government owns the whole property, all of it, the land, the machinery, the building, everything there except the inventory which is owned by Newfoundland Hardwoods Limited, which is a private company.

Now as I say, the answer to (2) is that the Government paid nothing to Mr. Dawe for travelling expenses, and the answer to (3) is that it is the business of the Newfoundland Hardwoods Limited as to what money they paid Mr. Dawe for any travelling, or for that matter any employee or officer of the company. I do not think it is the concern of the House. It is not anyway in my view, and I propose to act according to my views unless this House orders me to do otherwise—This House, I say—it is not my fault but rather perhaps the fault of the honourable members of the Opposition that the majority of this House are on this side. But when I say this House remember we are of this House on this side. We form part of this House, and I say if this House orders me I will do it. My honourable friends must not moan or cry or wail or shed too many tears because they are in the minority. That is what the Newfoundland people did. I did not do that.

(4) The answer is that it is a long list, and I table it. If it were not long I would read it out and give the information orally at dictation speed so that the honourable members or anyone concerned could take it down.

(5) I would suggest that my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, ask Mr. Chester Dawe, the President of the Company. He might or might not be willing to give the information.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must say a word, if I may, on that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: To a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is the honourable gentleman permitted to say a word or merely to ask a supplementary question?
MR. SPEAKER: He may ask a question, yes. It may not be debated.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, today I shall not ask the question I intended to ask.

MR. SPEAKER: Any further answers to questions?

Question No. 88:
HON. DR. H. L. POTTLE: (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the answer to question No. 88, asked by Mr. Fogwill, May 18, 1954:

1. Into how many foster homes have the Government placed children? Where are these homes located?

Answer.—301.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Location of Foster Homes</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bay Bulls (Calvert, Burnt Cove, near Tor's Cove, Wiltress Bay)</td>
<td>Belleoram (Great Harbour).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bell Island.</td>
<td>Bonavista (Lower Amherst Cove, Middle Amherst Cove, Port Union, Upper Amherst Cove, Newman's Cove, Birchy Cove).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bonne Bay (Norris Point, Woody Point, Rocky Harbour).</td>
<td>Brigu (Georgetown, Chapel's Cove, Hr. Main, Conception Harbour, James Cove, Colliers).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Carbonear (Crocker's Cove).</td>
<td>Carmanville (Doting Cove).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cartwright (Fox Harbour, Labrador).</td>
<td>Clarencville.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Grand Bank (Fortune).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Grand Falls (Botwood, Peter's Arm, Bishop's Falls, Northern Arm, Windsor, Point Leamington, Southern Arm).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Harbour Buffett (Merasheen, Davis Cove).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Harbour Grace (Riverhead, Bristol's Hope).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Lewispore (Campbellton).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Milltown (Cul-de-Sac, Rencontre).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>North West River, Labrador.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Old Perlican (Grate's Cove, New Chelsea).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Placentia (Ship Cove, Townside, St. Bride's, Patrick's Cove, Bond's Path, Dunville).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Port aux Basques (Channel).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Ramea (Francois).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Renews (Trepassey, Portugal Cove, South, Long Beach).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>St. George's (Flat Bay, Aguathuna).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>St. Mary's (St. Stephens).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Sunnyside (Hillview, South Port).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Stephenville (Lourdes, Port au Port).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>Torbay (Portugal Cove).</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Trinity (Plate Cove West, King’s Cove, Open Hall, Hodge’s Cove).

Wesleyville (Safe Hr., Valley Field).

Western Bay (Lower Island Cove, Adam’s Cove, John’s Cove, Burnt Point).

2. How many male and female children have the Government placed in those foster homes, what is the total number at present being cared for?

Answer: From April 1st., 1953, to March 31st, 1954, number of placements was 135, of which 83 were girls and 52 were boys. The total number being cared for on March 31st, 1954 was 557, of whom 255 were girls and 302 boys.

3. What is the amount paid each month, in respect of each child?

Answer: (a) $24 per month for normal children up to 12 years of age.

(b) $26 per month for children between the ages of 12 and 16.

(c) $30 per month for a child over 16 years of age.

(d) Special rates for handicapped and mentally defective children range from $31.50 to $60.00.

4. How many male and female adults are supported in boarding homes by the Government at the present time?

Answer:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Licensed Homes</th>
<th>Private Homes</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Male</td>
<td>78</td>
<td>27</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Female</td>
<td>108</td>
<td>19</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>186</td>
<td>46</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

5. State the number and location of these boarding homes.

6. What is the amount paid each month in respect of each adult?

Answer. The rates in Licensed Boarding Homes are as follows:

$54 monthly ambulatory patients.

$69 monthly bed patients.

In private homes the rate varies; the maximum being $45 monthly except in the case of bed patients when an additional $10 or $15 may be granted.

7. Do the Government prescribe the diet to be supplied the children and adults in these foster homes and boarding homes?

Answer. In licensed boarding homes there is a prescribed diet followed, recommended by a dietician from the Department of Health.

In foster homes the children share the family diet.

8. Are regular inspections made, if so, how often and by whom?

Answer. Visits to foster homes are the responsibility of the Welfare Officers for the districts. There are no specific intervals set down for such visits but the aim is to have babies visited once every two weeks, children of pre-school age once every month, and those of school age about once every two months. In all cases closer follow-up is required if the children are in poor physical condition or have other special difficulties. In short, the frequency of the visits depends on the needs of the child and the type of home. From a practical point of view the number of visits also depends on the exigencies of the other services for which the Welfare Officer is responsible. Our services have not yet developed to the extent that our visits to foster homes for offering encouragement to foster parents and foster children, etc., are entirely satisfactory but the various Welfare Officers are reporting at least once yearly on the foster homes and foster children in their districts.

The licensed boarding homes in St. John's, the Goulds, and as far as Middle Bight, Kelligrews are visited by Mrs. M. E. Ward, Welfare Worker, regularly. Most are visited once weekly and others bi-weekly. The remaining homes are visited by the Welfare Officers in the respective areas.

9. Are these foster homes and boarding houses visited regularly by a medical officer? Give details.

Answers. A plan for free medical attention and free medicine for foster children has been worked out with the Department of Health and has been in operation for some years. When a foster home is licensed the Division of Child Welfare sends the foster parents a circular on the matters of medical attention and medicine. Moreover the Department of Health has sent doctors a circular relative to medical care of children in their districts.

If special services such as hospitalization, eye-glasses, dental attention, etc., are recommended by a doctor the Division of Child Welfare arranges transportation and escort and pays for them.

Foster parents are really substitute parents and to all intents and purposes are given wide scope to use their own discretion, under the general supervision of the Department of Public Welfare, in obtaining medical services for foster children.

District nurses from the Department of Health visit the homes in and near St. John's two or three times weekly. The services of a medical doctor are always available from the General Hospital, and availed of quite frequently. The services of Medical Health Officers in other areas are readily given whenever the need arises.

Giving Notice of Motion

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I give notice I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill "An Act to Establish the Pharmaceutical Association," and a Bill "An Act Further to Amend the City of St. John's Act."

Orders of the Day

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority".

MR. SPEAKER: The Honourable Minister will close the debate.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): Mr. Speaker, as no other honourable member apparently wishes to speak, I will now in accordance with your suggestion bring the discussion on second reading of this Bill to a close. Bring to a close what I think I may justly call the greatest debate of this sitting of the House.

During the past several weeks honourable members have had the opportunity of expressing themselves on many phases of the fisheries, and in particular upon the problems of fishery development. I want to thank the House for the time and attention that it gave to this measure, and for having seen fit to debate this important Bill at the great length that it did.

In bringing this debate to a close it is not my intention to introduce any new matter other than such as may arise from some comments I wish to make upon several points that were made during the course of the debate. These points can serve me as useful pegs upon which to hang some further information which I think the House should have, and which the House might like to have.

Now, first of all I should like to refer to the fact that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition was apparently puzzled as to what the principle of this Bill is. The House will recall that for quite some little time he carried on a sort of debate with himself as to just what the principle of the Bill is. What is the principle? That after hedging five years the Government was going to do something about the fisheries. Was the principle that the fisheries were going to be taken out of the hands of the incompetents? Was the idea behind the Bill, maybe, to replace NAFEL? If by any chance the principle of the Bill was to make it possible for fishermen to come by higher standards of living, a decent standard of living, then, of course, the Opposition were all for it.

As I say, the Leader of the Opposi-
of that report, wherein development comes under the jurisdiction of the province.

There was another point made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that I should like to comment on. The honourable gentleman remarked (and these were his words) "This Act has nothing to do with the Walsh Report." Now naturally I would take it that the honourable gentleman had a good long and careful look at the report of the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Committee, and he found therein no reference to a Bill such as this and in particular no reference to setting up a Fishery Development Authority. If that is what he meant by that remark he is quite correct. In the report of the Fisheries Development Committee there is no recommendation anywhere that there should be set up a Fisheries Development Authority. What the report does recommend is that there should be set up a standing joint committee. The recommendation is made upon the final page of the report, and is made in these words:

"For the full and successful implementation of this programme of development co-ordination of the work of the two Governments and those engaged in the industry is essential. The features requiring action by governments will be within the responsibility of their appropriate departments. To secure co-ordination of the activities of the Governments and their respective departments and the departments of each Government amongst themselves, and co-ordination of the activities of those engaged in the industry with the Government, it is recommended that a standing joint committee be created at once."

That is the recommendation. Then the report goes on to say what it thinks the duties of that standing joint committee should be. Now merely because the report was accepted in principle it does not follow that all of the details will have to be implemented. Actually when the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland sat down to discuss the implementation of the board's recommendations, in their discussion of this particular section with reference to a joint committee, an alternative arrangement was agreed upon. The alternative arrangement was this: It envisaged the setting up by the Federal Government of an inter-departmental committee that would consist of the Deputy Ministers or the senior officers or officials of the departments at the federal level most immediately concerned with fishery development in Newfoundland, on the understanding that where the federal department is not immediately concerned but is bound to be concerned from time to time, the Deputy Minister or senior officials from each department should be drawn in to participate in the discussions of the inter-departmental committee at the federal level to make representations of the fishery development in Newfoundland to the Federal Cabinet.

At the provincial level the Government of Newfoundland decided to set up such an instrument as is envisioned in this Bill. Now this Fisheries Development Authority then is of this Government's own design. The Federal Government has had nothing to do with it, has had no part in suggesting it. As a matter of fact since the Fisheries Development Authority is to be concerned with fisheries development wherein it falls within the jurisdiction of the province, the Federal Government would be very careful to have nothing to say about the instrument set up for that purpose.
However, it is only right that I should go on to say that the Federal Government has, of course, formally recognized the Fisheries Development Authority as the instrument for development at the provincial level. Just to expand that last point I have just made, I may add that not only have the Federal Government given formal recognition to the Fisheries Development Authority at the provincial level to implement fishery development, but I can add that the Federal Government are very much impressed not only with the idea of having set up a provincial authority, but they are impressed also with the personnel who constitute that development committee.

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Leader of the Opposition appeared to be troubled about the powers that this Bill proposes to invest in the Authority. In particular he appears to be troubled about the financial im­ lications of their powers. He seemed to think that the Authority in its own right could borrow up to twenty­ five million dollars and then proceed to spend that twenty-five million dollars without a by-your-leave to anybody, provided it was spent on fishery development; and he spoke of some sort of an assurance of protection. The construction that I placed upon that was that he wanted some sort of assurance or protection that the Fisheries Development Authority would not run hog-wild and spend twenty-five million dollars of the province's money without reference to anybody or very much concern as to how they spent it.

First of all let me say something about this twenty-five million dollar business: I have seen it stated in the press, and I have heard other people say so, although I have not heard it said in this House, that still quite a number of people seem to be under the impression that the Fisheries Development Programme herewith proposed is a twenty-five million dollar programme. Now I have been wondering just where or how that idea got started. It is true that the Bill proposed to authorize the Authority to borrow up to twenty-five million dollars. But that is merely the limit of what may be outstanding at any one time. And over the course of ten or fifteen years the Authority may borrow thirty or forty or fifty millions, provided that the repayments it makes in the meantime keeps the amount outstanding at any time at twenty-five million dollars or below twenty-five million dollars. Then of course there is another point to be taken into consideration; the Government at any time can come back to the Legislature and request that the ceiling of twenty-five million dollars placed upon the borrowing powers of the Authority be upped. Another factor is that in addition to the borrowing that the Authority may do in any one year for development purposes every year this House is going to be asked to vote moneys for the carrying on of the Authority's work.
There again it is not impossible that over a period of ten or fifteen years
the House may be asked to vote say, thirty, forty or fifty million dollars out of current revenue for the purpose of fishery development, which the Fishery Development Authority will have authority to spend in addition to such borrowing as it may do. So that it will be seen that to say that this is a twenty-five million dollar programme may well be far off the mark. My guess would be that twenty­ five million dollars would not be half enough, and may be perhaps quarter enough. But who can say with certainty what it may be. Estimates of the total costs of the programme at this stage of the game can be purely and unconditionally crystal ball.

I was speaking of the borrowing which the Bill proposes to vest in the Authority, but precisely the situation is that that Authority is going to have such power only as granted by this Legislature or as it comes by it through the Lieutenant Governor in Council. The Authority in its own right won't be able to hire a staff, but has to ask permission. The Authority will be able to spend only such moneys as are voted to it in this Legislature, and will be unable to make loans without authority. The Authority will not be able to borrow without the sanction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and will not be able to expropriate without the sanction of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Indeed, if I may say this without being vulgar, the Authority would hardly be able to go to the washroom unless the Chairman comes in to me and puts up his hand and I then go into the Cabinet as their spokesman. To my mind it is quite doubtful that the Bill vests sufficient authority in the Authority. I would not be at all surprised if at some future date the Government will have to return to this Legislature and ask that the Authority be granted more powers that it may exercise in its own right.

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition in the course of his remarks set up a couple of straw men to shoot at, and he scared up a boogy or two, which I took, and I imagine everyone else took, with a grain of salt, but I should make some mention of them in passing. He spoke of triplication: The Fisheries Research Board and the Department of Fisheries and Co-operatives, and the Fisheries Development Authority, which were three bodies all set up to do the same thing or much the same thing, therefore, he said, triplication is involved or will be involved. Now I have no intention of going into at this moment what the functions of the Fisheries Board are but I will have a word to say about what the functions are not; and they are not concerned with the erection of a plant in LaScie, they are not to be concerned with other aspects of community organization in Quirpon or Meraisheen, and they are not to be concerned with other concerns of fishery development which fall within civil and property rights. In any case the Fisheries Research Board is a Federal organization and no Federal agency would presume to skip over into fishery development nor into the field within provincial jurisdiction which is to be the particular concern of the Fisheries Development Authority. With regard to the Department of Fisheries and Co-operatives I have already said that a department of government should not undertake this work because the action it calls for is beyond and outside of the scope of what is usually undertaken by governments through its departments, and I do not intend to go over that again.

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition foresaw the Authority resulting in a great increase in civil servants. Actually there is to be no increase in civil servants, as the Bill itself provides in Section 12, subsection 2 that no person employed by the Authority becomes by reason of such employment only, an officer or servant of Her Majesty. Actually the members of the Authority's permanent staff do not necessarily be great because much of the work will be done by hiring the necessary staff on an as-you-go-along basis and their employment will terminate with the cessation of that project; or the hiring of staff in connection with a project which will not be a continuous project as far as the experiments and Authority are concerned, but will be a continuous project in its own right, and the cost of that staff will be borne by the project as such and not by the Authority.

Then finally the Honourable Leader of the Opposition raised the bogey of expropriation. They, according to what he said, meaning the Authority, will be able to expropriate anything. Its expropriation powers which we propose to give under this Bill are not new, they are already provided for under several Acts that have been passed by this Legislature. Similar powers are invested in the Minister under the Public Works Act, the Industries Acts, the Urban and Rural Planning Act. They are not powers that are new but rather powers such as have already been given by this Legislature, and in this instance, they are not given to any particular individual such as the Minister to exercise but to the Authority who will have to seek permission from the Lieutenant Governor in Council before they can be exercised. So much for that.

The Honourable Leader of the Opposition made mention of some other matters that I could refer to. In particular he had something to say about nationalization. But the Premier has already swarmed all over that one, so that there will be no need for my going into it. So that I will pass on to the remarks of his colleague, that is his colleague from St. John's East who is unlearned in the law. Now I should not say that, because a man has not a Q.C. after his name it does not necessarily mean he is unlearned in the law, but I should say; his colleague from St. John's East who has not been admitted to the bar.

Actually with that honourable gentleman's remarks I have no great quarrel or with few of them. Indeed he pointed to one or two matters that should receive careful study and that have received careful study for quite some time. Of course his remarks about "Socialization" I did not take too seriously and I don't think that anybody else took them too seriously, as I don't think the honourable gentleman himself took them too seriously. But there was one remark of his which I feel I should take issue with. He was speaking of the "CCF" and he remarked that the "CCF" or "Liberals in a Hurry"—and he went on to say that he thought that the Liberals in Newfoundland had caught up with the "CCF." Well in saying that I think the honourable gentleman did us a great injustice. Actually we have never been that far behind as to have to catch up. True it is that the CCF never did and do not stand a chance of a snowball in you know where of catching up with the Liberals in Newfoundland, not mind you now in those things in the CCF programme which made for socialization, but rather in the promulgation of all endeavours calculated to make for the common people a rich and full inheritance of the good and bountiful life within the framework of our traditional liberty.

The honourable and learned mem-
Member for St. John's West began his remarks by wondering about and being concerned about the role that the co-operative movement might be expected to play in fishery development. I think that the proper and correct thing to say to him in reply, is that this will depend upon the co-operative movement itself. When the honourable and learned member speaks of the co-operative movement he and I are on common ground. It is well known that he has long been associated in co-operative circles in this province, and that he has in his own right made quite a contribution to the spread of the co-operative idea.

For my own part I practically cut my eye teeth on the co-operative movement, and I gave ten whole years of my life to its active promotion, every month of every year, every day of every month and almost every hour of every day. During that time I organized study clubs and credit unions and buying clubs and co-operative stores and co-operative markets for lobsters and God only knows what else. During that time I probably participated to a greater extent than I should have in co-operative store management and have done the auditing of co-operative accounts until blue in the face and bleary in the eyes. I know all the implications and recognize the tremendous significance the co-operative movement can have for the greater welfare of our fishermen.

Now the Premier during the course of his remarks said that not during the course of a lifetime associated with the co-operative movement had he been able to put his finger on just exactly why it was so difficult to put the co-operative movement across more effectively than it has been put across in Newfoundland. And he doubted if I, during my association with the co-operative movement, had been able to put my finger upon the cause of that. In saying that he was of course quite right. But I think that I can put my finger upon part of the cause of why the co-operative movement in Newfoundland has not invaded the field of production to the extent that possibly it might have—Credit Unions and co-operative stores, these are all right and they have their impact. But what of the people who are primary producers? What they are looking for most in a movement is something that would assure them of greater returns for their productive efforts? The co-operative movement in Newfoundland has not been particularly effective in fish.

Now I should go on to add that this fisheries development programme will provide a great opportunity for the co-operative movement to become effective in fish. We obviously could not write the co-operative movement into this Bill any more than we can turn around tomorrow morning and direct the Fisheries Development Authority to deal only through co-operatives. In presenting legislation, the Government has to be careful to present legislation of general application, and the Government has to be concerned in all its actions with the wish of all the people. And it just so happens in Newfoundland that there are people who are not partial to the co-operative movement. Nevertheless the opportunity will be there in the fisheries development programme for the co-operative movement to become, as I said, quite effective in fish.
velopment Authority have in hand to proceed with this year. Six of these projects are projects that have been agreed to specifically and in detail by the Canadian Government, the other three we are working out in this Government with local concerns.

Now of the total of six projects that have been agreed on with the Government of Canada four of these are community projects. The places where these projects are proceeding were selected because amongst other reasons good co-operative organizations are functioning therein, and because the people have built up a sort of habit and tradition of working together. These places are Quirpon, Seldom, Meraisheen and LaScie. I will come back to that point in a moment but I am going to divert for a short while to review what the plans are for these places this year, because during the course of the debate there seems to have been some little confusion as to just exactly what and how much is going to be proceeded with.

Now at Quirpon the project is to be an experimental project in community co-operatives, and it is proposed to replace the present system of production and individual fishermen's stages and flakes by establishing a small-scale salt fish plant, pickling vats, cold storage, bait and salt stores and with centralized flakes. The aim will be to improve the fishermen's production and to produce higher quality salt fish. It is hoped, and the plan is, that this project will be ultimately community owned. The estimated cost of Quirpon is as follows: It is estimated that the Federal Government will have an investment therein that will cost them in the vicinity of one hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars; and it will cost the Provincial Government one hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars.

With regard to Seldom the project is to be similar in nature to that at Quirpon, except that the operation is to be tested on a somewhat larger scale. The reason for this being that the season there is longer and the fishery is greater. The salt fish plant at Seldom will include pickling vats, cold storage, salt storage, natural drying flakes and a bait depot. There also it is hoped to replace the existing handling and processing facilities of individual producers in the settlement and possibly the near vicinity. The cost of that project is estimated to be, for the Federal Government, one hundred and eighty thousand dollars and for the Provincial Government one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, that is for work this year.

At LaScie the project is to be a full scale community development. It will include in its initial stages, a salt fish plant with a dryer, mechanized drying flakes, salt storage, cold storage, pickling vats and a bait depot. When conditions warrant there will be a fresh fish plant and a fishmeal plant will be erected, and a housing development including water and sewerage will be part of the second phase of this programme. It is estimated that the cost for LaScie for the coming year will be for the Provincial Government seven hundred and thirty-three thousand dollars and for the Federal Government eight hundred and seventy thousand dollars.

For Valleyfield the project is to be a Federal Government experiment in large scale centralization of the handling and artificial drying of salt fish. One important aspect of this project will be to determine the feasibility of transporting light salted fish in salt bulk or other semi-finished stages by road or water from outlying areas for finishing at Valleyfield. It is anticipated that subsequently a fishmeal plant and facilities for fuel oil storage and a haul-out for larger fishing craft will be included in the Valleyfield project.

The Valleyfield project is estimated to cost $750,000, and is, as I said, a project completely for the Federal Government.

At Merasheen the project for that settlement is to be a small plant for centralized handling and processing of cod, herring and mackerel. The salt fish plant there will include a small dryer, a bait storage plant, salt storage and pickling vats and mechanized flakes or centralized flakes, as conditions may warrant. The estimated costs there are, Provincial Government fifty-five thousand dollars and Federal Government ten thousand dollars.

At Bay de Verde the Federal Government will provide the necessary marine works at an estimated cost of one hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars.

For the moment I just want to make some mention of mechanized flakes: It will be recalled that the Premier spoke of these during his remarks, and in particular he made complimentary reference to the very fine work that is being done in the modernization of salt codfishing technique and curing technique by Donald Andrews of Andrews Labrador Fisheries. For my own part I not only go along with everything the Premier said, but I should like to add that in the short time that he has had to work out his ideas, which has only been the last five years, with some assistance from the Government, in the short time he has had to put his ideas into practice, Donald Andrews has made a most significant contribution to the modernization of the salt codfishery processing techniques in Newfoundland, more than all the rest of the industry put together has done for the last hundred years or probably longer.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Hear, hear!

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Andrews fathered this idea of mechanical flakes. Last year my department made some money available to him to put his flake into operation. Now it was too late last fall when that flake was ready to do any exact costing, but from the costing that we were able to do, which could not be accurate because the time was too short, it would seem that as compared with hand spreading, mechanized flakes are going to cut the cost of the spreading operation in half.

Now during the coming season the necessary steps are being taken to see that this operation will be properly costed, so that we would know by the end of the season whether that would be so or not, that is whether the use of the mechanical flakes as compared with hand spreading will cut the spreading operation costs in half.

The other projects that the Fisheries Development Authority have in hand for this year have, with one or two exceptions, been already mentioned in the House during the course of this debate. These include a project for Bay de Verde, Joe Batts Arm and for Twillingate. What is envisaged in all cases are plants that will have installed therein facilities for the production of block frozen fish. They will all have installed plate freezers and modern filleting machines. They will be all plants of a capacity of one hundred and eighty thousand pounds of round fish per twenty hour day. That will make them plants of at least a capacity of thirty thousand or the equivalent of thirty thousand dried quintals. Actually they will have a capacity in excess of that, but from the figures compiled by the Fisheries Development Authority that is all that these plants may safely count upon from the fisheries production in these areas except at the high peak of the trap fishing season in July when the production of several of these plants will be in excess of what these block freezing plants will be able to handle.

I should add, and I believe it was added by the Premier that there is also to be one for Fogo.

The project envisaged for Joe Batts Arm will be inclusive of an experimental salt fish plant in different forms; that traditional form for which at the moment there appears to be quite a good market, and if this works out, there is no reason why the project at Joe Batts Arm may not be developed to the point where the load at the peak of the trap fishery may be taken over and processed in this form.

The plant envisaged for Twillingate is to have attached to it in addition a fishmeal plant that will be able to draw upon the area from St. Anthony to Greenspond for its supply of offal to be converted into fish meals.

There is one other project that the Fishery Development Authority has decided to proceed with since I spoke to the House in introducing this Bill. That is a project for the Catalina-Port Union area which is to be a similar project to that envisaged for Bay de Verde, Joe Batts Arm and these other places. In other words a project for the production of block frozen fish in the same capacity of one hundred and eighty thousand pounds (round figures) for a twenty hour day, and inclusive of two plate freezers and one Baader filleting machine.

There is one other point I wish to make on that matter: According to the calculation which is being made of these estimated costs of the projects for this year both Federal and Provincial, our estimate is that on these six that have been agreed, in other words the projects at Quirpon, Seldom, LaScie, Mersheen, Valleyfield and Bay de Verde, in which there is a definite undertaking on the part of the Federal Government to participate with us, we estimate a total cost this year of roughly three million three hundred thousand dollars broken down into Federal $2,200,000 and Provincial $1,100,000. Normally I would not give these figures until the Estimates come down, but I have been moved to mention them this afternoon because of the item that appeared in the "Daily News" this morning with regard to the omission of specific estimates from the Federal vote for the projects to be proceeded with in 1954. I may say that we knew before that item appeared, after and before that assurance was given by the Secretary of State that there was no doubt of the necessary money being forthcoming at the Federal level to proceed with these projects. As the House will have noted, the Secretary of State gave further assurance this morning that they would be forthcoming. Indeed since the "Daily News" appeared I, myself, have been in touch with Ottawa on another matter, but happened to mention this particular matter, and I received further assurance that there was no doubt of the necessary expenditures being available at the Federal level to provide for our proceeding with all fishery development projects we have planned for this year.

Mr. Speaker, I don't know if honourable members are tired of hearing me talking, but I am getting a bit tired of myself at the moment, so that I would move a short recess.

The House recessed for ten minutes.

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Speaker, when we recessed I was just about to come back to a point I had made earlier, that the fishery development programme would provide an opportunity for the co-operative movement to become quite efficient in the fishery, and it will provide such an opportunity through the medium of the community organizations that are to be established in connection with a number of fishery development projects for this year, and will be established in connection with a number of fishery development projects in each year from now on. In instances where it is decided that a fishery project should be a community project it is intended that there shall be a formal organization of all the people in the community who are interested in participating in the effort. That formal organization will, in the beginning, be in the form of a corporation or a registered company. The reason why it has been decided that the formal set-up of the organization should be thus is because it will be necessary in the beginning for the Fisheries Development Authority to retain a certain measure of control. The House will appreciate that it will not be possible, and that it is not possible, to pull a man out of the stern of a dory and make him the manager of a modern fish plant. So that in the beginning, management certainly will have to be acceptable to the Fisheries Development Authority. Indeed in the interest of these community organizations in their formative years it is quite likely that the Fisheries Development Authority will have to be responsible for the management by moving management in to train likely local persons. But the day will come when local personnel in the community will have been trained, and when the organization will have repaid its loan to the Government or have given evidence of satisfactory earnings to indicate that it will be able to repay its loan to the Government over a period of time, and at that stage then there will be no reason why the community, if it so desires, cannot transform its organization into a fully fledged co-operative, because in actual fact that community for some time before will actually have been functioning to all intents and purposes as a co-operative. For instance such things are planned as would, with regard to capital structure, provide that the membership may acquire interest in the capital assets of the organization, not only by way of cash investments and by way of labour or capital credit for the labour they may contribute generally in providing the original buildings and stores, but also that provision will be made so that they may be able to acquire interest in capital assets of the organization by way of and in proportion to their patronage, so that they will be quite familiar with co-operative techniques and there will be no reason why, at the point where the Fisheries Development Authority will be ready to withdraw from the picture, the community organization and the people in the community, if they so desire, would not be able to transform their set-up into one that would be completely co-operative.

The honourable and learned member for St. John's West at another stage in his remarks was wondering how large this northeast coast is going to loom in the fisheries development programme. I may tell him that he is not the only member of the House who has been wondering exactly the same thing. There are members on this side who have had a little bit of concern as to just how large the northeast coast was going to loom in this programme. Now I may tell him that the northeast coast will certainly get the lion's share of attention. The reason for that is because the crux of the salt fish problem is down on the northeast coast, but other areas will come in for their share of attention in time. We cannot get around to everything in the first year. But as an indication of the over-all attention we are giving to the problem of the fishery development I would like to have a word to say about the surveys that have been conducted preparatory to development taking place. On the recommendations of the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Committee, the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland jointly carried out a reconnaissance survey in the summer of 1952 of the more important fishing communities along the northeast coast and part of the south coast of the province. While the emphasis was placed on the existing fisheries of existing communities, factual information was also compiled on harbour facilities, sanitation, and the social aspects of community living. Now during that 1952 reconnaissance, surveys were carried out and during the summer of 1953 these surveys were continued along the southwest coast and the west coast of the province. Reconnaissance surveys were conducted in fifty-five communities.

Now a reconnaissance survey may be said, I suppose, to be a quick look at a likely place for development. And these reconnaissance surveys pointed up the likely places for development, and are followed by full-scale surveys in detail usually. In the subsequent year, 1953, we went back for a second look and to do a full-scale survey in thirteen communities. These communities were, LaSalle, Fortune Harbour, Twillingate, Bay de Verde, St. Anthony, Lewisporte, Badger's Quay, Valleyfield, Fogo, Old Perlican, Bonavista, Maresheen, Harbour Breton and Woody Island. Now these full-scale surveys in addition to giving a general description of the area, dealt with the geography, community characteristics, access of land, town planning, harbour facilities, water and sewerage systems and estimates of costs. The programme of carrying on with these surveys will continue this year. During the last week, as a matter of fact, the Federal Government's representative, who came to St. John's for the purpose, and the Fisheries Development Authority have agreed upon the list of places where surveys are to be done this year. I don't know whether I am at liberty—I should imagine that I am not at liberty to give the House the names of these places. But I can say that before 1954 ends surveys are planned in sixteen places. The member for Green Bay who was particularly interested in Nipper's Harbour, and if I recollect correctly, an understanding was already given by the Premier earlier this year or last year, that Nipper's Harbour would be well to the fore, and at the top of the priority list for development. The member for Green Bay will be glad to know that Nipper's Harbour is well up on the list for surveys this year. I mention that one because there is practically a commitment.

MR. BROWNE: Why not give them all?

MR. KEOUGH: I should like to very much.

The full list is: Nipper's Harbour, Marystown, Burin, Fortune, Grand Bank, Carnish, Belleoram, Trepassey, Furemuise, Bay Bulls, Cape Brought, Ferryland, Conche, Englee, Moreton's Harbour and Port au Port Bay.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable Minister would allow a question: Would he again give us the nature of the surveys to be made in these places, please.

MR. KEOUGH: The type of survey that is contemplated for these places will fall into two categories, that is, a full and complete survey and a limited survey. When an area gets a full and complete survey it may be held that we are looking into that particular area having in mind a full scale community development. When a place receives a limited survey then we are possibly looking at that place not for a full scale development but for one or other of the intermediate, small scale developments as envisaged by the Fisheries Development Report. The full scale survey then covers such things as a general description of the area, human, geographic, communications, economy, agriculture, use of land, town planning, harbour facilities, water and sewerage systems and the estimate of costs. The limited survey is inclusive of such things as a brief description of the agriculture of the area, use of land, harbour facilities, water locations and potentials and an estimate of the costs.

Now I was going to remark that it will be observed from the list of places that I said were to be surveyed this year, that it is intended to survey places in which fish plants have already been established. The reason behind surveying such places is to provide the necessary information upon which community development may materialize from there on.

The honourable member for St. John's West wondered why he had not heard from me regarding the project of the fishermen's wharf for St. John's which was announced last fall as a project in which the Federal Government would likely be participating. If I remember correctly, the Premier explained at that time that the difficulty is that no site is available. Well I can confirm that. I can say that the Fisheries Development Authority have been trying to obtain a site for quite some time. It will have to be a waterfront site at which point a fishermen's wharf would have to be constructed, and upon which the Province has undertaken to put certain marketing facilities. All the investigations of the Authority have, up to now, resulted in nothing. There are possibly some places that could be acquired by expropriation, but it is extremely doubtful if in these several instances expropriation would not involve certainly inconvenience and possibly hardship to people presently carrying out operations on that waterfront. But I add this, within the past week, the Authority has made a contact and there is now some prospect that a suitable site can be acquired in St. John's. In that event there is no reason why the fishermen's wharf and provincial market facilities could not be proceeded with this year.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask the Minister a question? Have they considered the wharf which the Federal authorities own themselves?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Speaker, the Authority did, but I think were of the opinion that the property there was a little too far west. That property has been considered. I doubt very much if it would be available in any case.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to turn for a brief moment to the honourable and learned member for St. John's East. For a fellow who on his own admission knows only what he reads in the newspapers the honourable and learned member for St. John's East does pretty well. There have been times when I have been inclined to think of him as the ablest politician on the opposite side of the House. Certainly during the course of this debate he came forward as probably the ablest political debater. His main argument was that the Walsh Report is nothing more than a repeat performance of the Dunne Proposals of 1944, that is if you add ten years and a hundred thousand words. In order words the fisheries reorganization plan now being put forward was put forward ten years ago, and the Government has had that plan for the last five years but has done nothing about it, and has been stalling around and wasting its energies upon economic development, and in the meantime doing nothing about fishery development. Now it is a good argument, mind you, if you can make it stick. But I have been wondering in the first place whether the honourable and learned member has actually read the Dunne Proposals, and I concluded he did. Then I was wondering if he had read the report of the Fisheries Development Committee. I do not know about that one, but I presume he has. So having taken it for granted he has done both of these things—he put forward a good argument, if it can be made to stick. But in essence what were the Dunne Proposals?

First of all, Mr. Dunne came to the conclusion we were stuck with the salt cod fishery and cannot do anything about that. He certainly had nothing to suggest about it. But he thought there was a possibility of doing something with the fresh fish industry. There was a possibility that they might be able to do something with the fishery in fifteen centres. So then the Fishery Board said: "All right, let us try and put fresh fish plants in these fifteen centres, with draggers to service them." But, incidentally did not make it a point that there should be built around these plants modern centralized towns and communities such as are envisaged in the report of the Fisheries Development Committee. Finally, Mr. Dunne said this: "Each central fishery operation would be carried on with a view to the production of frozen fish as the main product." You know that sentence is the key to the difference between the Walsh Report and the Dunne Proposals, because with that sentence the Commissioners wrote off the northeast coast and left it to stew in its own juice, and made it quite clear that the policy of the Commission of Government with regard to the north­ est coast was "Root, dig or die." Because Mr. Dunne's plan was fifteen new centres based upon the production of frozen fish, and in Mr. Dunne's day, in the days of his proposals, frozen fish production on the north­ est coast was uneconomical. Therefore, Mr. Dunne's proposal was to leave the northeast coast, I say, to stew in its own juice. That is the essential difference between the Dunne Proposals and the plan now proposed. The Walsh Committee faced up to the problem of the north­ est coast, and made specific recommenda­tions to deal with it. I grant you these specific recommendations had been made easier by the advent of block freezing. But had they not faced up to the problem, and had they not made proposals to deal with it, then that report would not have been acceptable to this Government.
The Walsh Report is a rounded out proposal for the development of the fisheries in all its phases while the Dunne Proposals are not and are primarily and essentially confined to fifteen centres and based upon fresh frozen fish.

Mr. Speaker, I have a number of other notes here, but I think I will let them go. Before I finish, however, I feel that I should say a brief word on behalf of the vicinity that represents one side of the triangle.
When I say that I have in mind that to geographically Newfoundland is set down in the North Atlantic roughly in the shape of an isosceles triangle.
I have in mind that the west coast comprises one side of that triangle, and that west coast is represented in this House by three members. Now there has not been much mention of the west coast during the course of this debate, as far as the members of the House are concerned. First of all Mr. Speaker was in no position to speak, and the Minister of Labour elected that, if there is to be talk on fishery development on the west cost, the man to talk about it was the Minister of Fisheries. For my part I have been practically precluded from talking west coast during this debate because I am the Minister of Fisheries, and it occurred to me that it would not sit too well with members of the House if I were to begin beating the drums about my own district on fishery matters. And if I did begin pounding the table at the Government about the need to do something on the west coast in fishery development about all I would be likely to achieve would be the curt comment: "Why not do something about it yourself, Fisheries are your portfolio—your baby."

Then of course actually there is another, the main reason why in this debate there has been no considerable mention of the west coast area while a number of other areas in this debate have been our immediate and overwhelming concern. These are the areas concerned with salt fish and depending completely on it. However, the fact that we have not talked much about the west coast does not mean we have not been thinking about it, and that it does not figure in our plan for development. We are quite aware of the great potentials of the west coast and in its exotic variety of fish and indeed in practically all varieties known in our waters except cod. As far as cod is concerned that is not to be overlooked either. I must say for my own part that the only place where I have stood on the shore in Newfoundland and jigged codfish is in Port au Port.
Bay. We have got the west coast in mind in our development plan. As a matter of fact we have already conducted a reconnaissance survey of some forty communities on the west coast from St. Barbe down to my own district of St. Georges-Port au Port. As I have already announced; Port au Port Bay area is in our list for this year for a full-scale survey. I thought I should make mention of that in passing, in order to reassure my colleagues in the House and also to reassure anybody from the west coast who may have been following the debate, to let them know that the west coast will figure in our plan for fishery development to the extent that its potentialities warrant.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the House longer in voting upon this measure. Before taking my seat there is one thing more I would wish to add: I dare to hope that the passing of this Bill will mark a long stride in the realization of a dream that I have long been dreaming. I was born, Mr. Speaker, with the smell of salt codfish in my nostrils. I was born on the Southside of St. John's Harbour, on the fishing room of my maternal grandfather. I grew up never very far from the salt water, and I made more quintals of salt cod with my own two hands than many a later day fishery expert ever saw. I came very early, Mr. Speaker, to know our fishermen's peculiar problems. All my life I have had my eyes fixed upon the far vision that some day somehow the fishermen of Newfoundland will come by a greater portion than has been their historic portion and a larger place in the sun. Whatever I may have been able to do in my own time to that end I have done. This Bill, Mr. Speaker, is part of what must come about to achieve such circumstances for our fishermen, and it has been the greatest satisfaction of my life to have had the high honour of introducing it to this House on behalf of this Government. I know that we will have the good wishes of all men of good will that we shall succeed in this great endeavour upon which we are embarking, that we shall accomplish this task to which we have set our hands. Certainly no other undertaking of like dimension and of similar shape has ever before been attempted in this island, and the like is not going to be attempted again in our time. If we fail then history will at least write of us that we made a great effort, and if we succeed—if we succeed—then will this generation of men merit of history the verdict that Walter Whitman put into these words:

"In the dust of which they were made there was also fire, lit by a great wind from the sky."

Mr. Speaker, I move that this Bill be now read a second time.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill "An Act to Amend the Local Government Act."

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Although, Mr. Speaker, there are quite a number of amendments in this particular Bill many of them have no particular importance, but are consequent upon three or four major changes in the parent Act which we think necessary in the light of our experiences during the last four or five years.
Under the parent Act the word "chairman" is used: But during the past three or four years there has been a definite plea put forward that the chairmen of the councils should now be known as mayors. Now the first and biggest single change in the amending Bill is the one dealing with Section 3 providing for (1) the creation of the municipalities. Under the present procedure as laid down in the Act, the Department of Municipal Affairs and Supply insures that the Government becomes cognizant of the feelings of the people in a particular area in various ways, possibly by voting, and we act on that. A notice of intention is published in the Gazette for three weeks, and during that three weeks people in the area are given an opportunity of protesting or commenting upon the proposed action. As a result of the comments received, whether for or against, a decision is taken to incorporate a particular area, but if the comments received are in the majority against the incorporation the matter is dropped. We have had several instances of that occurring during the last two or three years. Now if the protests received are from a minority then the matter is proceeded with forthwith. Under the amendment before us today there is a change. The change calls for a petition signed by not less than half of the adult residents in an area that they are in favour of incorporation, then, if such a petition is received, it takes the place of the existing notice of intentions. Consequently, as the majority are in favour of it then the Lieutenant Governor in Council may go ahead and proceed with the necessary incorporation.

Under the present Act there is room for the organization of local-improvement districts even in unincorporated areas. In the programme which will be coming up during the next few years particularly in the case of fishery development, we can here see the need for careful planning in certain selected areas. So that this new amendment makes provision for the creation of a local organization where certain services may be required and may be a necessary part of the improvements to be made in any such areas.

Another principle involved here is one of procedure: Under the present Act the first council is selected and at the end of two years lots are cast and half the councillors retire but are eligible for re-election and an election is held to fill the vacancies. Under the amendment as proposed here we propose to do away with that two years and the whole slate of councillors will be elected at the same time every four years. Something the same as the procedure which has been adopted and which has been in vogue in the St. John’s Municipal Council for some time. That change is advocated by us because during the last two or three years we have found several instances where at different times difficulties have arisen in trying to carry on the work of the council. We believe that if the councillors were elected all on the same day then it would result in much smoother continuity of the work.

Several of the other amendments, of course, are consequent upon these I have just mentioned.

On the request from the Federation of Municipalities their year is being changed, and the end of the year for the councils instead of being March 31, as it now is, will become the end of the calendar year, December 31.
That request has come to us because, in the opinion of the councils, with which we heartily agree, the calendar year is much more practical than the present existing year.

Under the Local Government Act provision is made for the councils to open a bank account. In the last three or four years several councils have become not only administrators of the local areas but also trustees of various public utilities, and some provision is also made here so that they may open one or more accounts in banks. In other words keep their public utilities accounts separate from their municipal account. That is an important measure because grants given by the Government are based upon the municipal collections and are not upon moneys which they receive from the services of public utilities.

Again if we go down a little further we come to Clause 20. We have made provisions there whereby a council, if it so desires, may adopt a national building code in any particular area, in order that any building for which it has regulatory control may be based upon some building system. We do not think for one moment this particular provision will have general application for there are many areas where there is no particular need of it. But we have had that request from one or two councils, particularly Corner Brook Area, that provisions should be made in the Local Government Act whereby they may be able to put in such a provision. At the present time, under the Local Government Act, municipalities have control over the local roads and they provide maintenance. A provision here in this new Bill vests all streets and roads other than highways in the town councils.

The amendment makes provision for the maintenance of fire brigades. Under the present Act there can be voluntary fire brigades in any particular local area, but no provision is made for the maintenance of the fire brigade. Now we made some departure from that a year ago when we made a special definite grant to Corner Brook Area to provide certain fire services, and to pledge people for taking care of the fire apparatus and such. Provision is made here again enabling all municipalities if in a position to do so, to maintain and pay a fire brigade. It also makes provision for them to enter into agreement with other parties. For instance it is possible that some municipalities might be situated near a United States Army Base or something of that nature, so that we make it possible for the town council to make an agreement with the base authorities to carry out joint operations in the protection of property and the maintenance of a fire brigade.

It also gives municipalities authority to establish electrical plants and install transmission lines both within and without the limits of the municipal area. That again is because a request has been received from different councils to that effect. Provision is also made whereby an electrical code may be used and insisted upon by the council. Again this is a necessary part of fire protection in many of the larger municipal areas.

There is some nuisance at the present time in the arbitrary rate of the property tax and business tax. We have had half a dozen instances during the last two or three years of councils or members of certain local areas refusing to pay business taxation because, to give one reason alone, certain people refused to submit their accounts to the municipal council revealing their private business, in order that councils may be able to levy a certain basic taxation based on gross profit or turn-over of the business concerned. Therefore we made provision here that assessment has to be carried out by any municipal area and, of course, the tax levied on assessment whatever that assessment might be. Already some six or seven of the various councils have that assessment, and carry out a property tax and not a business tax, and other councils have made similar requests to us.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, there is very little in that Bill to which anybody on this side of the House could be opposed. The amendments there, Mr. Speaker, are one of the inevitable results of our entering into Union with Canada.

MR. HEFFERTON: They antedated it.

MR. HOLLETT: The amendments, I said, which have been made in the Local Government Act are an inevitable result of our entering into Union with Canada, the power to tax income and the power to tax business and the power to tax various things to carry on the work of the councils in the communities. Well there is nothing in particular wrong with that. If we are going to organize our larger settlements into municipalities that has to be done. I say, therefore, it was a natural result of our entry into Union with Canada. I do not say that in any detrimental way, but merely make that as a statement of fact.

I have not had the opportunity to study this very carefully, but I do hope there is something in the Act which would prevent the Lieutenant Governor in Council or the Premier or even the Minister from nullifying any town council, which has been done in the past, and I am speaking of the Town of Bonavista, which, as we all know, was an incorporated town, incorporated according to law, even though I am told they did go around with tin cans to collect the ballots of the people in their homes. I do not know if that is correct or not. At any rate they were duly incorporated and councillors were elected and the council was carrying on its duties. But suddenly on the eve of a certain election, if I remember correctly, there was in that town an uprising, an upsurge of feeling against the council and the councillors, and they demanded there and then that Bonavista be no longer a municipality. They wished to be, I would say decontaminated—that is a word used here quite often—but they demanded that the council be withdrawn and that they no longer be a municipality or else—well they were not given the opportunity to prove whether or not it would be "or else" because promptly this Government promised a plebiscite to the people, as soon as the elections were over, to decide whether or not they wished to continue as an incorporated town. The plebiscite was, I believe, granted after the election, and I believe the majority favoured doing away with the town council in that Municipality of Bonavista.

One would have thought probably the first thing a council would have done in such an area, where the people had voted against it in that way, would have been to immediately resign, and then, of course, the whole thing would have been over. But they did not do that. I think perhaps I had better not make any remarks on that—they did not do that at any rate, and are still in office there now although the large majority of the people, the householders in that community, have voted that they do not wish their town to be a municipality. It is rather an awkward situation brought about, I maintain, Mr. Speaker, by mere political expediency on the part of this present Government. Whether or not the people obtained a town council in some way which was not legal, or whether they obtained it against their will or what not, they did have a town council, and they had a municipality set up under the provisions of the Act. Legally set up councillors were elected. Yet this Government says: “Very well, if you don’t like the town council you have one and got it legally, there is not much we can do. But we will see about it after the elections. What we will do after the elections is have a plebiscite to see just what you want.” All right the Government promised them so they waited. They got the plebiscite and they voted largely against the municipality. Then, as I said, the councillors, correctly or incorrectly as the case may be, just stood by their guns and said; “No, we don’t resign and get out. We will stay here. We are the duly elected town council and are going to stay here until our term expires.”

I take it there is something in this Act to remedy that. I don’t know if it is this amendment. But I hope there is something there to remedy it.
councils in Newfoundland doing a good job in that area. They have not all the amenities you will find in other communities. They have not the industries there that other communities have. As you know, Sir, Windsor grew up as a result of the paper industry in Grand Falls. Many people went to Grand Falls for work and did not get it so they squatted outside and eventually there grew up the Town of Windsor. That situation is still there in a sense, but the Town Council is doing a good job there in Windsor, and I say, all the credit is due to the men who have put up with all sorts of, in some cases, abuse, but stuck to their guns and are making improvements in the Town of Windsor. So I say, there is nothing in this Act which we of the Opposition, as far as the principle is concerned, could oppose. It is not that we are always looking for something to oppose, but if there were anything there contrary to the principle which we as a party believe in, it is our duty to say so.

We support the Bill, Sir, although we may disapprove of some of the sections, but we do support the principle of the Bill.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly interesting to see the progress that is being made in the development of the organization of municipalities in Newfoundland and that a Bill of this nature can be introduced. There can be no doubt about the desirability to have municipalities established as widely as possible, and the different classes referred to here; city councils, town councils, local government boards etc.

There are two or three things in the Bill to which I take exception or which I regret to see. There are two alterations which the Minister announced in the method of electing councillors and extending their term to four years. I think it would be preferable if the elections were held every year, because the object in view is to train local people to have their own affairs taken care of, and if a council is elected for four years then the majority of the citizens are likely to become indifferent with such a long period between elections, and not take the active interest they should take. In England and in Canada the elections take place every year. I am not sure what the provision was before, whether a portion should retire every two years, but if continuity is desired then it could be arranged by having a percentage retire every year so that there should be an election every year. I think four years is too long.

Then in regard to the question of taxation, I am not sure if it is desirable to have a provision permitting the councils to make an estimate of the value of the magnitude of the business done by people. It seems to me they could make a great many mistakes. I remember one very prominent businessman who was a member of another place for many years who had a very small little office on Water Street, but did a very big business. Anyone looking at him standing in the doorway of his premises would never estimate how much he was worth, and could not tell from looking at his business there. So that it would be a difficult task, I think, for any council to be able to estimate with any degree of accuracy, any reliability, the magnitude of a man's business. Besides, a man might be doing a roaring trade and not making any money. I think the fairest taxation is based upon the man's income. The next sub-section though gives them all the powers they need on the assessed value of the profit.

I am not sure whether that first provision to which I referred has been advanced because of what the Minister said of the difficulty of getting people to come forward and tell what their income is. There are such things also as sales taxes. There are places where they have sales taxes in the United States. I believe in the City of New York there is a federal sales tax and a city sales tax as well on the one item. I don't know how far this provision has been in effect, but it seems to me to be in advance of anything in effect here in St. John's. Maybe they have been introduced in connection with the Housing Corporation, for example, the extension of water and sewerage is going to be carried on, and it seems to me if a person has a piece of land to be developed and a street to be put through it, then the cost of making the street, putting down water and sewerage mains and the cost of putting in curbs and gutters are all particular cases which should be paid by the owners of the property adjoining in proportion to the frontage along which the facilities will pass. That provision is laid down here, and I must commend the Government for introducing it. I don't know whether it is in effect except in regard to housing development. It was a great surprise to many owners of property in the neighbourhood of St. John's when they found out that they were being charged with the full value of improvements. But there is an improvement here, and a sensible one, to allow that payment to be made over a period of years, up to fifteen years, because it is extremely difficult for most people in a development of that kind to be able to put the money down right away, and I don't think it would be fair that they should have to put it all down at one time. I remember many years ago introducing to Mr. Jonas Barter when he was a member of the council a whole series of forms used in a certain Township along these lines, dealing with these things: curbs, gutters, pavements, sidewalks, paved streets, electric lights and all the facilities. There was a rate charged for each one of them depending upon the cost of raising the money and the cost of doing the work. That seems to me the best way. These are powers which I hope will be used very frequently and very soon in Newfoundland.

MR. HEFFERTON: If there is no one else who wishes to speak, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one or two comments.

First of all, in answer to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, there are no provisions here for the dismissal of a council.

Now the honourable and learned member for St. John's West made two or three comments which I will answer briefly. First of all, whether one member should retire each year or whether they should retire half of them every two years or be elected in a group every four years are questions on which we have had considerable experience during the past three or four years, and the consensus of opinion seems to be that the best way out is to adopt the principle which has proved (and I believe the honourable and learned member for St. John's East will bear me out) quite practical and reasonable in St. John's even though St. John's deals with a bigger area and has had a charter very much longer. That seems to be the consensus of opinion we gathered and we made the amendment along these lines.

In the matter of taxation we still feel a little bit wary about saying to the councils; you have to impose a property tax. I said on introducing the Bill that five or six councils in Newfoundland have made application to put on a property tax. We have an assessor who has been trained and become a well qualified assessor, and he is lent to municipal authorities on their request to go out and make property assessments for them, on the basis of which a tax is approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. We propose to increase the number who will be desirous of using the property tax instead of the business tax, but we don’t want to put it down here as law that every council is to be forced to do so. Therefore, I say, this is enabling rather than mandatory, Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole on tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move all further Orders of the Day do stand deferred and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Wednesday, at 3:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, May 26, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Motion and Question
None.

Answers to Questions
Questions Nos. 97, 98, 99, 100, 101 and 102—Stand.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I have the answer here to a question asked by my honourable and learned friend, the member for St. John’s West: The only comment I have to make on filing this information is that lists have already been published every year since 1949. If we are going to repeat year by year and year after year fees paid lawyers, ad infinitum, we will soon get no one to act for us at all.

Reply to Question No. 34, asked by the member for St. John’s West, Mr. W. J. Browne:

Question No. 34: What amount of money has been paid to legal firms since April 1, 1949? Give the amount or amounts paid to each firm with the name of the matter for which such amount or amounts was paid.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Lawyer</th>
<th>Amount</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Aug. 26, 1949</td>
<td>W. R. Kent</td>
<td>$1,050.00</td>
<td>Drafting legislation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 13, 1950</td>
<td>Cook, Bartlett and Soper</td>
<td>250.00</td>
<td>Defending Counsel, Rex vs. Dwyer.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>E. J. Phelan, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>E. J. Phalen, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Eric Cook, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Eric Cook, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>1,750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>1,750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Eric Cook, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Eric Cook, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>3,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Donald Dawe, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,500.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 27, 1950</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>1,750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 31, 1953</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>750.00</td>
<td>Consolidated Statutes.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nov. 3, 1950</td>
<td>Barry &amp; Parsons</td>
<td>100.00</td>
<td>Prosecutions under Vegetable Grading Act at Corner Brook.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 22, 1950</td>
<td>Myles P. Murray</td>
<td>300.00</td>
<td>Amendments to Alcoholic Liquors Act, and advice to Board.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 24, 1951</td>
<td>Myles P. Murray</td>
<td>314.08</td>
<td>Amendments to Alcoholic Liquors Act, and advice to Board.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>July 4, 1951</td>
<td>Myles P. Murray</td>
<td>150.00</td>
<td>Rex vs. Gerald Snow.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 9, 1951</td>
<td>Ewart, Scott, Kelly &amp; Burke-Robertson, Ottawa</td>
<td>77.55</td>
<td>Opinion in re Judgment in Transportation case.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apr. 25, 1951</td>
<td>Ewart, Scott, Kelly &amp; Burke-Robertson, Ottawa</td>
<td>75.00</td>
<td>Opinion in re Harvey Estates.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sept. 21, 1953</td>
<td>Ewart, Scott, Kelly &amp; Burke-Robertson, Ottawa</td>
<td>169.50</td>
<td>Opinion in re Election Act.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Date</td>
<td>Name</td>
<td>Amount</td>
<td>Description</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------</td>
<td>-----------------------</td>
<td>---------</td>
<td>------------------------------------------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oct. 3, 1953</td>
<td>John G. Higgins, Q.C.</td>
<td>406.20</td>
<td>Dispute between the Town Council of Placentia and the Town of Freshwater regarding the use of the water supply at Larkin's Pond.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 3, 1953</td>
<td>Hon. P. J. Lewis, Q.C.</td>
<td>2,500.00</td>
<td>Mental Hospital Inquiry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 3, 1953</td>
<td>Charles E. Hunt, Q.C.</td>
<td>1,750.00</td>
<td>Mental Hospital Inquiry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jan. 3, 1953</td>
<td>Gerald G. Tessier</td>
<td>1,000.00</td>
<td>Mental Hospital Inquiry.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>June 30, 1951</td>
<td>Hon. P. J. Lewis, Q.C.</td>
<td>30,000.00</td>
<td>Royal Commission on Transportation and the Transportation Board (Rates) Case.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Feb. 1, 1954</td>
<td>James E. Nurse,</td>
<td>125.00</td>
<td>M/C. 19-'53 Retained by Dept. Attorney General at an annual fee of $250.00 for services in connection with head-noting etc., of Judgments of the Supreme Court of Newfoundland for inclusion in the Maritime Provinces Reports.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mar. 3, 1954</td>
<td>McRov &amp; Lewis</td>
<td>250.00</td>
<td>Professional Services rendered from June 1st to June 7th, 1951.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

$58,773.43
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable Minister has the answer to No. 87 in regard to indecent literature?

MR. CURTIS: No, I will try and have it tomorrow. I have asked the RCMP and the police for that information.

Question No. 95: Answer tabled by Honourable Minister of Labour.

The following information is supplied by the Honourable Minister of Labour in reply to Question No. 95 asked by the Honourable Member for St. John's East (Mr. Fogwill) on the Order Paper of 25 May, 1954:

Question 1: Is the Minister aware that a work stoppage is in progress, in a majority of City Garages, for the past three weeks?

Question 2: If so, what action is the Minister or his Department taking, in trying to solve this problem, which is causing great inconvenience to the general public, much loss of wages to the workers concerned as well as interrupting the normal operations of those engaged in the car service business?

Question 3: Did the Garage Workers' Union make application for the service of a conciliation board, if so, why was a Board not appointed, give full details?

Answer to 1 and 2: Continued efforts have been made by the Department to arrange a joint meeting of the parties. A number of meetings have been held with the parties individually since the strike began, the latest meeting being held on the day this question was tabled.

Answer to 3: The Union requested the appointment of a conciliation board. Originally the Union had requested the appointment of a conciliation officer and an officer was appointed to assist the parties when their first efforts at negotiations had failed. The dispute became stalemated when the Newfoundland Motor Trade Association took the stand it was not prepared to go beyond the terms of its previous agreement while the Union was unwilling to reduce its original proposals. Further efforts to conciliate the dispute appeared fruitless in view of the uncompromising stand by both sides and it was felt that the appointment of a conciliation board was not warranted at the time. This view has since been confirmed by the parties.

Orders of The Day

Third readings:

A Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Slum Clearance Act."

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Speaker, may I make a little explanation on that? A few days ago when in committee stage of the Bill, I asked that it be held for a while for time to check one particular section of which I was not sure at the time, because when the original Act was drafted reference was made there to a section of the Housing Act. Now since that time the Housing Act has been redrafted and renumbered and certain amendments put into that section, and section 25 was renumbered. However, I found that earlier in this session we had passed an Interpretations Act which allowed for certain changes to be made, without making special provisions in the amendment. So that the Bill then remains as it was.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, do
I understand now that you can make a change of that kind in the Bill without coming before the House?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, maybe I could explain: The Slum Clearance Act as published in the Revised Statutes refers to sections such and such of such and such an Act. That Act has since been amended and what was, say, section 48, is now section 108. Well we don't need to amend our Act because under the provisions of the Interpretations Act, which we passed this year, a reference to an Act which has been amended, carried on to the amendment, so that the position is quite clear now. My honourable friend, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply, thought that in view of the fact that the Slum Clearance Act is published in the Revised Statutes, and since it refers to a certain section of the National Housing Act, and since that section referred to has been amended, then perhaps the amendment ought to be brought forward in our Act. I would point out that under the provisions of the Interpretations Act the reference to this section which is no longer there now automatically goes on to the new section substituted for it in the new Act. Does my honourable friend know what I mean?

MR. BROWNE: Yes, but does the Attorney General not think that the Honourable Minister's intention to recommit this Bill so that the new section could be put in is better? There is no hurry about it, is there?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, the third reading might be deferred so that we can consider it. I might say I am inclined to favour it myself.

MR. SPEAKER: Motion now is this order be deferred.

On motion third reading of Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Slum Clearance Act" deferred.

Third reading of Bill "An Act to Amend the Apprenticeship Act."

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Third reading of Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Workmen's Compensation Act."

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Third reading of Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Motor Carrier Act."

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Third reading of Bill "An Act to Amend the Health and Public Welfare Act."

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Third reading of Bill "An Act to Empower the St. John's Municipal Council to Raise a Loan by the Issue of Bonds for the Purpose of Financing the Erection of a Stadium Building in the City of St. John's."

On motion read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the Order Paper.

Second reading of Bill "An Act Respecting Social Assistance."

HON. DR. H. L. POTTLE (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this Bill, let me state as simply as I can the main principle involved in this Bill, which is to integrate into one single, unified, comprehensive scheme our present system of Mothers' Allowances, Dependents' Allowances and various other sundry benefits.

When we became a Department of Public Welfare in 1949 we automatically became entitled to certain universal social welfare benefits which were largely Federal in origin; the most notable of which was Family Allowances. But along with these benefits to which we became entitled automatically there were other benefits which we as a Province felt we ought to initiate as a province in order to meet with special needs amongst our people, our dependent class of people; and seek in thus doing to bring our social services more nearly up to a level with those enjoyed by other provinces. When we undertook that project we had to devise some way by which the families of widows, where there was no breadwinner, could be cared for and so the Mothers' Allowances Act was devised to meet a wide variety of social welfare needs where dependent children were involved in families having no living nor effective head of the household. That is the way it has been done in the Canadian pattern, that is by passing a Mothers' Allowances Act. However, when that was done there was still a large field of various needs lying somewhere, let us say between Mothers' Allowances and the Old Age Pension groups. These needs we combined under one general heading called "Dependents' Allowances." These allowances were not spelled out in the Act but they did in fact, under a general provision, provide for such needs as convalescing TB patients and their families and a wide variety of incapacitated or other persons needing rehabilitation through financial and other means. That widespread category of people such as those I have described, we take within the boundary of the Act which we have come to call "The Dependents' Allowances Act."

To begin carving out the field in that way was a very obvious way to begin. It was the usual way, I say, for any department to start. Instead of getting its aims, in a sense, around the whole problem under one definition—We did not know how to define the problem under one definition and so we carved the field up into various little fields.

Now, Sir, as time went on we began to see, as other states have seen, weaknesses in that system. There turned out to be, as we expected, overlapping. There turned out to be inconsistencies between one set of allowances and another. Here would be three people in the one family where there is a Mothers' Allowance getting "X" plus "Y" dollars possibly. And we have not been able, from the point of view of good welfare, to be able to explain to people at large why it is that one group of three should be getting "X" dollars while another group of three apparently in similar circumstances but in a different age group are getting "X" plus "Y" dollars.

Furthermore from the point of view of administration, that is, from the point of view of trying to manage this thing from headquarters and of applying it through to the welfare officers in the field, it may turn out that a welfare officer may have to go to a family three different times, whereas properly speaking he should possibly only have to go once. In other words in order to qualify, people now may have to go three times (1) for Mothers' Allowances because there happens to be a widow in the family (2) for Dependents’ Allowances because there happens to be a chronically sick adult in the family, not necessarily a direct member of the first family and (3) they may have to go again for Old Age Pensions for other members of the family.

Now, think, from the point of view of good welfare administration, if we have a staff who understand what it is all about, and we believe we have, and an all-round department organization, we now have come to the stage where we feel we can do this: We can think in terms of the whole question of different allowances being very well tied together more effectively, because we believe, as our society believes, that the family is a unit. But we do not make it a unit when we go three times to investigate when we ought more reasonably to be going but once. There is one thing that any good system of allowances, whatever you call them, ought to satisfy, whether you call them Mothers’ Allowances or Dependents’ Allowances they ought to be consistent from one place to another. That is to say they ought to be consistent from one area to another very much as that area is similar to another area. Sometimes, I admit, you have to make a difference between urban and rural areas, but that can be dealt with in the regulations. Here we are concerned with the main principle of trying to make this more consistent, and trying to tie together in a single package various allowances which now have different names. I am afraid also they have other weaknesses. They don’t give as they ought to to people having the same need and living in the same circumstances and who ought to receive similar benefits. It is very difficult to do this when you have different systems of allowances all administered under different statutes and all spelled out by different regulations.

Now we have taken certain steps, Mr. Speaker, to prepare for what we think is a forward move. We do not think we ought to be precipitated in making this move, and I can assure the House that we will not be. That is to say this Act will not come actually into force until we are sure that it can be administered with at least some reasonable degree of success. We can only go so fast in pushing social measures. We in Public Welfare have been, for the purpose of welfare, in a sense conservative. That is to say, we have not pushed, I think, our welfare measures precipitately upon the people because there is danger in that.

Now what have we done?

Well, at Headquarters, as I have already said, we have a Mothers’ Allowance Act and a Dependents’ Allowances Act. These two Acts are now administered by the one Chairman, and that one Chairman will be the director of the Act of this Legislature which we now propose. He has in fact one staff. We have made them interchangeable so that if they are examining Mothers’ Allowances they can turn right over in the same hour and examine Dependents’ Allowances. The analysts in the department for Mothers’ Allowances and Dependents’ Allowances are interchangeable.

In the field we have been training our welfare officers to prepare for this Bill, amongst other things of course, in the last two or three years. Two years ago the University of Toronto conducted a summer school for just Newfoundland Welfare people. Last year they came down to us. And amongst the various items on the agenda for the six weeks’ training was the implication of such general assistance as we find in this Bill. They are at least, I say, Sir, reasonably prepared for a step of this kind.

As it is now, Sir, our classification of persons to be helped under our various statutes are very inclusive. I venture to say as a matter of sober record that our Mothers’ Allowances Act covers a wider variety of mothers (that is what we call in the vernacular, widows) than any other similar provincial statute across Canada. But I have to add that our scale of allowances are smaller than in some, in fact, in most of the other provinces. One picture of the need in Newfoundland in this one field alone, the field of Mothers’ Allowances, can be grasped from a single table which is being put out by the Department of National Health and Welfare for the year ending March 31, 1951. Now that may sound a long while ago but the figures are still maintained, in the same proportion. If we take all the provinces and note in each province the number of families receiving family allowances and out of these take the number of families that are getting Mothers’ Allowances, and compare Newfoundland with every other province, what happens? Like “Abo Ben Adam,” Sir, Newfoundland leads all the rest. Out of every one hundred families receiving family allowances in Newfoundland a little over six receive Mothers’ Allowances. In Prince Edward Island it is 1.7; Nova Scotia 2.2; New Brunswick 2.5; Quebec 2.6; Ontario 1.2; Manitoba .8; Saskatchewan 2.3; Alberta 1.1. I will not mention British Columbia because British Columbia has a general assistance Act such as we are providing here, which includes most allowances, so that it is not comparable. In other words, as far as Newfoundland is concerned, it has anywhere from two and a half to seven-tenths and more families on Mothers’ Allowances than any other province, on the basis of families receiving family allowances, which can be taken as a cross section of population. Now what does that mean? I could spend some time in describing what that means, but I shall come to that a little later on, not only in regard to Mothers’ Allowances but in regard to other needs as well.

In this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we have given a broad definition to social assistance. It includes financial assistance, and it includes assistance in kind, maybe clothing; it includes institutional nursing, board or for home care and it includes non-financial service like advice given by our staff and by others. It includes provisions for a variety of emergencies such as arise out of dangers sustained through fire, storms, floods or other like causes. It includes also assistance towards repairs and renovations to homes of destitute people; burial of needy persons and transportation of indigent sick, destitute or stranded persons; finally, generally speaking, any other form of assistance necessary, in our opinion, to relieve distress. So that therein is indicated the scope of what we think might come under social assistance.

We have a unique situation in Newfoundland vis-a-vis the other provinces because in the other provinces the municipalities share some of the costs of provincial social services within the province. Here the municipalities do not subscribe to any share of welfare costs. It is the central, that is the Newfoundland Government, which has to meet the great bulk of the cost, sharing the cost to some extent with church groups and bodies, community associations and services of various kinds which commit themselves to special projects. But there is no municipal sharing in Newfoundland. Now looking at this picture through the eyes of the Government, focused through the eyes of the Department of Public Welfare, we are in much the same position as British Columbia was some years ago, we having the same kind of distribution of population, a lot of people in a few places and the remainder in scattered communities over a wide area. I say, Newfoundland in that situation had to take a new look at its allowances just as British Columbia looked at its allowances years ago through the eyes of three very capable persons, the late Dr. Cassidy of Toronto and California, Dr. George Davidson, now Deputy Minister of National Welfare, and the late Dr. George Weir, then Minister of Education. These three great spirits decided to propose to the Government that instead of having these various classifications of allowances there should be a general assistance plan for British Columbia. So it came to pass. Today possibly one of the foremost pieces of legislation on the books, as far as Public Welfare is concerned, on this side of the water and indeed one could go further afield, is the Social Assistance Act of British Columbia. All I am saying here is that we are doing much the same. It does not mean to say that a good system is going to cost any more. We will still be limited by the revenues we produce. But we still want a good system. Whether it will cost more is another matter, but being good does not mean that it is proportionately more costly. We think that even with the distribution of the people we have, with the Government away out here at the south-east tip of the island, off centre, we still think that by decentralizing our authority through the welfare officers, and there are fifty of them, we can still speak to the people with the voice of welfare right on the spot, and through these agencies interpret to the people, and with every other agency there that has an educational and social responsibility out there, interpret to the people what we are trying to do, and to get the people to understand it in such a way that it will become part and parcel of their thinking too.

What our feeling is on this side of the House, I think can be expressed in this way: What is the best for Newfoundland? Whatever that is in welfare we shall try to do it, within our means. There will not be any new staff needed just because of this Bill. If any new staff is needed it will only be because of the ordinary extensions of the services. For instance there may be concentrations of people in fewer areas and the unit cost of administration goes up as it does in other fields, or because we are planning to improve our standards or review our supervision. Only because of these general needs will the staff be increased. I want to assure the House it will not be increased just by the passing of this Bill.

Mr. Speaker, I want to come now to the question which is contained in Clause 9: This Bill does not cover the able-bodied unemployed. I wish I could say to the House this afternoon that it did. At the very beginning I tried to express an ideal that people in the same kind of need anywhere in Newfoundland ought to get the same kind of treatment. I want to be frank with the House and say; from the point of view of sound, ideal social welfare, I see no good reason why the man who is unemployed and cannot get, with all his efforts, any work, but is ready and willing to work but no man will hire him—from the point of view of good social welfare, I say, I don't see why that man should not be treated in the same way as a widowed family.

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Why is he not?

DR. POTTLE: Well, I said also that we can only go so fast in these matters. This is an instance I am now giving of where we are going along cautiously and feeling our way. Newfoundland has had a long tradition of relief giving, and it would be so very easy, especially during a recession if it should hit us, or worse still a depression—we can very well understand what might very well happen, especially in some of our areas where working people would not be eligible for unemployment insurance. The situation might very well get out of hand. Again I trust to the interpreters of what I say to be responsible in their interpretations. Ideally there should be a way of meeting these needs at the same level as we are meeting the needs of the people who will come under this Bill. There was a time, and there are still people who think today, when a man is unemployed he is so largely through his own fault. I have known administrators in this field to say that because a man is unemployed it is his own fault. I think, Sir, that represents a false view of the situation, because many people are thrown out of work through no fault of their own. We are living in a day where unemployment more than ever is the result not of provincial affairs so much as because of what happens in national and international policies, so that any great or even medium catastrophe coming over the United States, about which we had very little to do, would certainly affect us directly. If our society were at that level in its thinking where in thought and in deed men realized they were their brother's keeper, we could put the able-bodied unemployed under this Bill and take the consequences. I hope that I shall live long enough to see this come under this Bill or some such Bill. There is still a tendency at large to make it a bit tough for the man who is without work. We boast of our independence, but, as Roosevelt said; "The totally independent man is as much of a myth as the man of the stone age." None of us, Mr. Speaker, is independent in the absolute sense. We are very much dependent in many aspects. And the man who is unemployed is dependent in one sense when even we are dependent in another sense.

As I said, this spreading problem of unemployment is not a local matter, and a man may be just as much a victim of unemployment and the need for being helped as a result of that circumstance as a family is in need of help because the bread-winner has been taken away. But I am practising what I earlier preached and that is that we can go so fast, and I hope we shall not be accused of going beyond where the public can go along with us pretty wholeheartedly. We have not been asleep in regard to this problem, nevertheless, Sir. Ever since we became a province in 1949 in every statement I have made for one, on this matter, to the Federal Government and to the Canadian Welfare Council, which is the national body to take briefs to the Government from the public on these matters; in every statement I have had an opportunity to make on these matters, I have tried to impress upon the Government of Canada, with possibly a piccolo voice from this far end, nevertheless I have made it, that special regard should be had by the Government of Canada for this peculiar problem of unemployment, let us say, especially as it affects Newfoundland, which is an example in the extreme form of the other provinces especially the Maritime Provinces. I may say it now—I quoted earlier, figures that showed that Newfoundland had a higher proportion of need in Mothers' Allowances than any other province, and was away out in front—I can go through this report here, Sir, as I have done on other occasions and show that in every area of need, Newfoundland is in the forefront. Whether it is in Old Age Assistance, Old Age Pensions, totally and permanently disabled or Mothers' Allowances, we have the greatest proportion in these various fields of any province. It looks as if we are showing up in these figures a generation at least, and probably many generations of need, accumulated and aggregated across the years. The ravages of malnutrition, of disease, of low living standards forced upon our people by conditions over which they had no control have taken their toll in all these ways that I have mentioned.

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if I could ask the Honourable Minister of Welfare if in these figures that he gives showing the percentage of Mothers' Allowances and Family Allowances, have these been segregated to show similar percentages for rural and urban areas, because Newfoundland is like a great, big rural area compared to some of them.

DR. POTTLE: They are not separated into urban and rural areas. They are taken as a big, large block.

One thing we could do, of course, is to see what the problem is for Newfoundland within itself. That would be a very good example, I think, of the point I am trying to make.

Our thought has been, Sir—well let me put it this way—every new arrangement we make with the Federal Government on a means test basis means that Newfoundland has to spend that much more proportionately in that special field, because we have a disproportionate number of people qualifying in that particular field. My thought would be that instead of having to match dollar for dollar, as the case may be, we might be given a block vote proportionate to our needs, which would be administered by the Provincial Government in such a way that it would be applied in those fields where it was needed most. I shall not extend that argument now, Sir, but I can say, not merely because we have been protesting, but I think it is our voice that is being taken up in other quarters, and the Government of Canada is being constantly made aware of its responsibility for providing some special means of assistance in this whole field of unemployment. If we could wipe this question of unemployment relief off we should have no fears for the integrity of our welfare services. I may be frank with the House in saying that for this administration or for any other administration the one thing we have to watch is that a good welfare system does not overnight become jeopardized by the possibility that we may have to pay out many many more dollars probably than we can afford in this field of unemployment relief. That is why we have been putting it to the Federal Government that inasmuch as unemployment is nationally more than provincially determined they should therefore, go back to the earlier position of 1940 odd and accept responsibility, as they ought to, constitutionally for this problem.

Now, before I close, Sir, I would like to say that in the field of public welfare in Newfoundland now, as far as our allowance system is concerned, with the exceptions which I have just mentioned, our house is just about in order as we see things today. That does not mean to say that everything is done. That does not mean to say that we have covered every need as it ought to be covered. There are still problems to be solved in the welfare field, and I have mentioned this relief situation as one important case in point. But as we see things at the present time, and as we see our revenues at the present time, and our staff at the present time, we believe that our house is not too badly in order for doing for Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders what we think ought to be done in this particular way. We have come a long way since 1949. We have now, I believe, a smart working technical operation in the Department of Public Welfare. But more important still is the fact that we have been trying our best right on the local ground to interpret to our people as we go from door to door what welfare measures are all about. Sometimes we have been accused of being too strict, sometimes of being too lenient. But we have to work through human agencies, and as long as you do you are bound sometimes to fall on one side of the line or other. With our spacious districts, our sparse populations over a great area, we must lay hold of every agency of good will we can. In their own place they can do a more effective job than we can because they sit where the people sit, whether they be teachers, doctors, clergy or other leaders in the local field. They can in their own respective places do a better job in the field of public welfare by helping to cultivate the right attitude amongst our people.

I am especially concerned, Sir, that our health and welfare facilities go hand in hand. It is easy enough to raise a critical voice again. If I had anything to say about our ways of looking at this problem up to now it might be that our health and our welfare have not gone in hand in hand as much as they should. Sometimes unfortunately we have had to treat through health many problems which have originated as welfare problems. We have had so much lost ground to regain, as in other fields of Newfoundland's social effort, and if it seems that now we are giving so much attention to social welfare, to the lifting up of those who are fallen, to brighten the lives of those whose faces have been set to the wall. If we seem to be giving out a little bit of sustenance to those who have been dispossessed and possibly outside, too often, our pale of consideration, it is only because, as I say, we are trying to catch up so much lost ground in so short a time.

The figures I have quoted here this afternoon, and figures I could quote from other sources indicate, in fact, how much lost ground we have to recapture. If we have had any success, Sir, it is because in the large climate of government fields in this matter we have been left as a Department of Public Welfare, under the general direction and advice of the Government to develop as we have thought best for Newfoundland, and that is a very happy and liberal atmosphere in which to work. I believe we have been successful in the selection of our staff. With all human frailties coming into the picture, and we are well aware of those, we have, by and large, and even more so, a staff with at least the required integrity for doing the things that are committed to them, which is present at every level. It is timely for me to say that it has been an enlarging and inspiring experience to be a part of this development all along the way.

Here we are witnessing a march of great events involving great human concerns for so many of our people. In this forward march the Bill now before the House represents a signal milestone. It represents our conviction and our confidence in the conviction that one of the central concerns of any enlightened government must be here, there and everywhere its people, especially the needy people.

I move the second reading of this Bill, Mr. Speaker.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare on a great many occasions in debates on matters connected with his department, and I believe, Sir, that I have a fair idea of where the Minister's ideals lie in respect to social assistance. Of course, Sir, the Minister did speak a few moments ago about malnutrition. I do not know if he meant that there was any great amount of malnutrition amongst those of our population today or whether he was speaking of the past.

DR. POTTLE: The past.

MR. FOGWILL: Because I believe he was speaking of the past. I am glad he said so, because after becoming a Province of the Dominion of Canada or just prior to becoming a Province of the Dominion of Canada the people of Newfoundland were told on so many occasions, so many times, that they would never see another hungry child in Newfoundland. And, Mr. Speaker, I hope there never will be.

I did note, Mr. Speaker, a little note of concern in the Minister's remarks in relation to the expenditures of his department for current relief. Now, Sir, I believe that is one thing that the Minister has in mind always, although we may not at the present time be reaching it, however, sometimes we must reach a maximum of what this Province can pay in the way of social assistance. There must be a point, Mr. Speaker, where the burden on the taxpayer becomes greater than he is able to bear.

The Welfare Department, Mr. Speaker, is one of the largest spending departments of the Government. In fact, Sir, during the last five years, looking at figures in the Auditor General's Report and in the estimates of expenditure for the year just ended, the Department of Public Welfare spent forty-two million dollars in the five year period. That, Sir, in relation to all the money which was taken in in current revenue during this same period was 28% of the total. We took in, Mr. Speaker, in 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, 1953, and up to 1954, in current revenue approximately $150,000,000. This included, Mr. Speaker, the moneys received from the Federal Government for their share of social welfare in this Province. The Welfare Department, as I said, Mr. Speaker, spent forty-two million dollars in five years. There was an offset of revenue amounting to twelve million, which brought their net expenditure to possibly twenty-nine million dollars in the five years. I would like to point out too, Sir, that in 1949 the expenditure for salaries in the Department amounted to approximately three hundred thousand dollars. The estimate for salaries in 1953-54 is just up to six hundred thousand dollars and in 1954-55 is just up to seven hundred thousand dollars. The total amount paid in salaries during the given years was $2,200,000. You will see, therefore, Sir, that the Department of Public Welfare is one of the largest spending departments we have. Sometime, Sir, we must reach that point where welfare payments cannot be increased.

I agree in principle with the Bill whereby the two pieces of legislation dealing with the Dependents' and Widows' Allowances will be repealed and all these needing public assistance, as outlined by the Minister, will be put under the one heading. I believe, Sir, it will be the means of perhaps more close or a better administration of the department. While I am on my feet I would like to say that at first when this social legislation was brought into operation there was quite a period between the time people made application for assistance and the time when they received it. I know of several people who had to wait quite a long time to get their social assistance collected. But I do believe that is now cleared up and I don't think it takes quite so much time as it did before.

However, Sir, I would like to ask the Minister before I close, if his department is considering participating in the new legislation which was just introduced at Ottawa in connection with the pensions for disability, or would the pensions for disability come before this House at the present time?

I think that is all I have to say. I support the Bill in principle. I believe it will tend to a better administration of social welfare payments. There is one other point, Sir, which I hope will never be evidenced in Newfoundland, that is when we have so many people receiving social welfare payments from the Government I trust it will never take away their independence and that their dependence on the Government won't make them feel afraid to vote or should have any fear of doing anything that would injure the Government in office. Because, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it has been brought to my notice, not on one occasion but on many occasions particularly in the case of several old people whom I know very well who have been receiving old age pensions, and several of them have expressed the fear to me that if they did not exercise their opinion in a certain way they would lose their old age pension. Now nobody wants that kind of fear brought into this land of ours where a person who is in the unfortunate position of being forced to seek public assistance from the Department of Public Welfare should have to do it but he in fear of threat from some one in the Government he might lose that assistance if he did not exercise his opinion and his own rights so as to do certain things at certain times.

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have very little to say at this time on this particular Bill. I would like, however, to make a general comment that this Bill is the realization of one of the things that I personally looked forward to, and, I think I can say, worked for for a long period of time. The fact that this legislation is introduced at this particular time should not leave the impression that it is something that the Government and particularly the Minister of Public Welfare have just only now come to realize the necessity for. I very well recall, and I am sure the Honourable Minister concerned won't mind my making this reference, he has emphasized to me over and over since 1949 our need for just such a measure here. I very well recall too, Sir, that in the several visits that he made on behalf of welfare to the various parts of the Mainland, particularly to Saskatchewan and to Ontario, and talking with welfare authorities there, including such men as the Honourable Minister referred to, particularly that greatest man in welfare in North America and in the world the late Dr. Cassidy, whose untimely death occurred the year before last, how he frequently emphasized our particular and our unique opportunity here in Newfoundland, unique in the sense that we had an old tradition, an old foundation of cultural attributes which belong to us and us alone but that in this sense we were now beginning a new era particularly in social welfare reform. In fact we could almost say we were initiating social welfare in Newfoundland now for the first time. No one knows better than I what social welfare we did have before that, both immediately prior to Confederation and back into the past centuries. I don’t need to remind the honourable members we had some social welfare back in 1860 when my grandmother became a widow and walked across Fogo Island for indian meal and molasses—that was social welfare at the time.

I repeat, the need for this is not something which has just suddenly come into the mind of the Minister and of the Government. It is something that has been pressing here, I think, ever since 1949, but it is agreed by all who studied the matter that in 1949 we were not ready for a generalized system of public welfare in Newfoundland, and there are reasons for that, which have been referred to by the Honourable Minister on a number of historical occasions. I am very happy, although I am no longer connected with the department, that the Honourable Minister has now found it possible to introduce this Bill here which puts us on a par with all the other provinces of Canada qualitively, and I believe puts us ahead of several other provinces.

I would like to refer, if I may, to one or two comments made by my honourable friend on the other side who has just spoken. He mentioned the fact that the cost in 1949 was one figure and that the cost today is a much higher figure. That, I think is to be expected. Apart from anything else, salaries themselves are presently nearly, I think, doubled since 1949, in certain areas at any rate. But there is another important point, which I believe must have escaped the mind and attention of the honourable gentleman who just spoke, that is, during the Commission of Government a good deal of social welfare, such as it was of the day, was handled out in the field by the ranger force. There were, I believe at one time upward of sixty rangers and perhaps sixty-five. I am not sure of the actual number, but what I am getting at is that this work was done by the rangers and no charge was shown under the Public Health and Welfare Department's estimates for that work. It was done as a part of the responsibilities of the ranger force. For example, the relief administered in Labrador, St. Barbe, White Bay or on the south coast, in fact, in most of the rural areas of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador was done by the ranger force.

There is also another point to which I think it is worthwhile to refer: At that time, prior to 1949, certain areas of Newfoundland were discriminated against. Now I don't know whether that was done deliberately or not, and it is not my place to say, but the fact remains they were discriminated against—certain areas had far more relieving officers, for example and far more other services of welfare or semi-welfare than did other areas. In order to make a more equitable system, apart from any other consideration, for our people it was necessary to extend the number of people who were involved in social welfare.

My honourable friend also referred to a statement—as a matter of fact it was the first time I had ever heard it—made around about the time of the Confederation campaign or around about then; that there would never be a hungry child again in Newfoundland. I take it the statement was probably made by the Honourable the Premier, but I don't know.

MR. FOGWILL: It was made by the Premier, yes, thousands of times.

DR. ROWE: It was the first time I ever heard it. As a matter of fact I say this, and I am not afraid to go on record as having said it: There has not been a hungry child insofar as this Government could prevent such a child from being hungry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend spoke about the fact that apparently a mild form of blackmail has been used somewhere along the line to tell people that if they wished to retain their Old Age Pensions they should vote a certain way. That may or may not be so, I do not know. Assuming that it is so, it is still no worse than the fact that thousands of our people were urged to vote a certain way on the grounds that Old Age Pensions and certain other welfare measures were only a farce anyway, and that they would never become a reality. I would also say that it is no worse than the fact that—and we have documentary record of this—people were told over and over again that if they voted for Confederation and this Government, and if Old Age Pensions did come in force, and if they applied for these Old Age Pensions in all probability they would lose their land and homes when they died. Now that is a matter of record. Let us keep the record straight. That was done over and over again by people who should know better. And I am able to say now through official knowledge of that matter that there were many people in Newfoundland who in some cases suffered hardships for as much as two years since April 1, 1949, because they in their simplicity, and because they had accepted the statements made by people whom they considered to be their friends, refused to apply for the Old Age Pensions.

There is just one other thought: The honourable gentleman who just spoke, referred to the danger of people losing their independence through welfare measures. I have always felt that is a real possibility. However, as I have gained new experience I have come to worry less and less about that. I recall—in fact I believe I mentioned this here before. I do not think I am out of order in repeating it—I recall in 1930 being in a settlement where men were compelled to go on relief amounting to a few cents a day, I believe six or seven cents, and were also compelled to go out and work on bridges and roads to get that money. I recall a businessman telling me, in this particular place (and I am in a position to add that the statement has been made by others) that these people, these men on relief were too lazy to work anywhere. If they could get remunerative work they would try to get out of it. I recall in the Spring of 1941 coming back here and going down to Quidi Vidi to get work for the few weeks I had before going back to the University. I remember seeing the queue down there longer than anything I have ever seen outside a theatre. I remember seeing that queue there shortly after daylight in the morning. I remember going down there and seeing men by the hundreds who had slept on the ground that night so that they might be in their place to get a job next morning at forty cents an hour.

MR. BROWNE: Where was that?

DR. ROWE: Right here at Quidi Vidi.

MR. HOLLETT: They stayed all night?

MR. ROWE: Yes, they stayed all night.

MR. HOLLETT: Were you out all night?

DR. ROWE: The honourable gentleman can check that if he wishes. I have heard it said also over and over that the people in Newfoundland never want to go away from home. And it was said if they had the Old Age Pensions and Dependents' Allowances etc. coming into their homes, and these added to the Family Allowances and the little bit of fish they could jig they never would want to go away from home again. I spent the first half hour after this gentleman next to me, Mr. Speaker, came in this afternoon trying to provide ways and means whereby this gentleman who is a liaison officer with the iron mines of Canada could procure work for scores and scores of men down on the Labrador, who are applying to me by every means in their power saying; get me a job at Seven Islands or anywhere under the sun. If I can get work for a reasonable rate I will go anywhere and take it. That is how much our welfare allowances have undermined the initiative and energy and enterprise of our people. They have done nothing of the kind. I realize there is always a danger there, but they have not done it. I would like to make it clear that the honourable gentleman who spoke ahead of me did not say that that had happened in Newfoundland.

MR. FOGWILL: There were supposed to be three jobs for every one man, you know.

DR. ROWE: The fact of the matter is that the welfare measures this Government have introduced have been most moderate. We have not tried to go to the extremes that they have in some parts of the world in matters of welfare. We have tried to meet the needs wherever we have found them insofar as possible. I will say that nobody can administer a huge welfare service without having some abuses. Nobody in the world has ever devised any means of paying out, let us say, ten million dollars for Family Allowances every year or five or six million dollars for Old Age Pensions without having some abuses of that somewhere. Nobody has ever been able to devise a means of preventing that any more than the most efficient commercial organization in the world like one of the great departmental stores on the Mainland has been able to devise a means to eliminate all dishonesty amongst its employees. They have never been able to devise a means of preventing dishonest customers from stealing and pilfering goods. So also nobody has been able to find any way of eliminating all the possible opportunities for abuse in the administration of social benefits. I will say this, in my opinion, and I have done a good deal of reading and study and inquiry into this, in my opinion we have here in Newfoundland a minimum of abuse, a minimum of dishonesty in the administering of the various social measures both Federal and Provincial. I think that is attributable to the honesty of the Newfoundland people and also to the efficiency of the various departments of welfare both Federal and Provincial here in Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, I give my whole-hearted support to this Bill, and I congratulate the Honourable Minister who has just brought it in.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, both of the honourable gentlemen from the other side of the House who have spoken to this measure this afternoon have for a good while been very closely in touch with the Department of Public Welfare. The Minister himself has had a long and intimate and direct concern with the administration of the law regarding public welfare. The Minister of Natural Resources was for a time a very good Deputy-Minister with the Department of Health and Welfare. Now, Sir, this very important explanation was given to the House by the Minister when he introduced this Bill to enable the House generally to consider the question of poverty, unemployment and the methods by which these were alleviated. There is no doubt about it, it is an old problem. As the previous speaker said, there is nothing new about those measures. This is a consolidation, an amalgamation of two very beneficial Acts which were passed in the early stage of the present Government; Mothers' Allowances and Dependents' Allowances. I don't see how any government coming into power as this Government did in 1949 could have done anything else than introduce both of these measures. I think that was a natural follow up. There were indications in 1949 that whatever government came into office should do that very thing, and thus bring the social welfare in this Province up to the level of the other provinces, such as the Maritime Provinces which were not so well endowed by Providence with natural resources as some of the other Provinces in Canada.

Now I do think that the Minister might have referred to able-bodied relief. He did not mention sick-relief at all, although I think it was included in some of his references. But as regards widows and orphans although we had no statutes on our statute books up to 1949 specifically dealing with Mothers' Allowances and Dependents' Allowances, nevertheless as long as I can remember, and I am sure for a long time before that, widows and orphans have been receiving special consideration from governments. In fact since the first poor law was introduced in England in 1601 which made state assistance necessary for the poor, all governments have had to do that. Then Belvedere, for instance, was built by Bishop Flemming over a hundred years ago, and to this day continues to do, I think, fine work, better than any government could possibly do. In the past, children who have been bereft of one or two parents and widows in the same manner, although they have not received any special institutional care have received allowances small though it might have been. Now it is being brought up to the standard of the Maritime Provinces by our legislation. The Minister of Natural Resources says we are equal to them in social services and in some respects, he thought, we are far ahead of our legislation. But I could not help comparing that observation with the one made by the Minister of Public Welfare when he said that in every area of need, Newfoundland is in the fore. In other words, there is a necessity upon the Government to have more legislation or to certainly be aware of having legislation dealing with the great needs of Newfoundland in that respect. Here, when I mention Belvedere, I should also mention other orphanages such as Mount Cashel where the Christian Brothers labour so well as they have laboured for generations in bringing up boys who are a credit to them and to the country; and the Church of England Orphanage and the United Church Orphanage, they have done, I think, inestimable good.

Now the causes of poverty and the causes which require attention from the Government are sometimes unpreventable, unavoidable; the death of a bread-winner in the family, the father of a family, and then if there is no life insurance or no method of pension to go to the family, they are in need. Always such families have been the object of sympathetic concern by their neighbours and attention from the Government. Similarly in cases of disease and serious accident, which constitutes unavoidable misfortune where there is no insurance and where the dependents are not otherwise provided for—but there are other causes for poverty and other causes for unemployment.

Then again, as the Minister well knows, there is such a thing as improvidence and wasteful living and drinking. Here I think I should make a special reference to the emphasis in this country that is being placed during the past five years on material standards and raising the standard of living and incidentally in causing people to demand greater luxuries and living more extravagantly perhaps than they are entitled to or are able to. The provisions of financial corporations to enable people to get loans easily, and the ease with which a man can get a motor car today often puts a man in a position where he cannot meet his obligations and falls into debt and many fall into unemployment as well as a result. But I think one of the causes which have been generally recognized as probably the most serious social disease is the misfortune of people who are addicted to drinking. And I think while this Government on a technical and mechanical basis has done remarkably well in the administration of public welfare, it has not, it seems to me, given the attention that should be given to the educational methods which would make our people more frugal and more thrifty, and I hesitate to say it, but, perhaps more industrious.

I got an answer the other day that the number of beer parlours in this country dropped in 1952 and 1953, but it seems to me, we have just as many outlets through which we are selling beer or can expect more beer to be sold. If more beer is to be sold then there is to be more money wasted. Now there were people here not long ago in the neighbourhood of St. John's who protested against the erection of a tavern in their neighbourhood. What happened to their appeal? It was not allowed to be brought in here, and it was sent to the Government. We have heard nothing from it since except an acknowledgement, and the Attorney General had not even heard of it. But if we want people to keep off relief we must get them to save and be frugal.

There is a need, so it seems to me, for sickness and accident insurance. I know that matter has been discussed elsewhere, and I believe this time it is going to get national attention from the Government. It was promised, I believe, as far back as the election of 1945, by MacKenzie King. It was astonishing to me the other day to learn from a poor client of mine who had the misfortune of having judgment against him for four or five hundred dollars and having been sick for three months, received no wages in the meantime— an employee of the CNR. I learned a CNR employee when sick does not get any wages. Who then is going to look after this chap and his family? That could happen to any employee of the CNR. There is nothing there to make it a part of the welfare scheme. I might say the Railway employees have a welfare organization, but this man, unfortunately, did not belong to it.

Now in regard to administration: I am sorry it is necessary for me to jump from one subject to another, but I have not had the long experience which the Minister had in dealing with this subject, and the opportunity to prepare the various speeches. But I will speak of things as they come to my mind. In regard to the administration, it seems to me that a poor person in the city has a better opportunity than a person living in an outport of having his needs attended to promptly. I have had numerous cases of people coming to me from districts with which I have at one time been connected asking if I could get them relief, get them in hospital, see about Old Age Pensions. Just imagine now, Mr. Speaker, for a letter to come to me from Cape Shore, St. Brides or Branch area, I have to see someone and then there is some excuse, such as the welfare officer is in another part of the district. It seems to me it is at the local level the thing should be handled, and I recommend to the Minister that he take whatever steps he can to see that these complaints of need are investigated as promptly as possible. From reports that have come to me it seems that these officials are not always fulfilling their duties as they should be done in a truly charitable sense. I am sure it must be the experience of anyone who has gone to an outport district frequently to go into homes where there is a person so sick that you almost become ill looking at him, and you ask: "What are you doing here?" I remember one case of a person in a very advanced stage who was brought to this particular community only to be told; "You can't leave her here." "Why not?" "No hospital" or the welfare officer said there was not a bed. That person was in a terrible condition. I went in and saw the doctor, and the doctor said he would look after her. Then not long ago I met someone from the locality and asked how so-and-so got on? I was told she was fine. She went into the hospital and got cleared up. There was a case of a person suffering and having to stay there as if she was not a human at all, and there was no attention being paid her. Now it seems to me welfare officers who have not got that spark of christian charity to appreciate suffering when they see it should not stay in their job. Now I know that is maybe from lack of common sense, but the person who is hungry is the person who should get food, and the person who is sick should get prompt attention and the hungrier they are or the sicker, the quicker they should get that attention because that is when they need it.

If we try to analyse poverty and the need for supplying social assistance I think we have to look at the problem from a different angle. When the Minister was speaking he quoted figures prepared by the Department of National Welfare, I believe, which showed that Newfoundland had a greater percentage of persons receiving Mothers' Allowances compared to those in other provinces in relation to the number of people receiving Family Allowances. Now I consider that Newfoundland is like a great rural adjunct of the populous cities of Canada, and thousands of our people who have left Newfoundland can be found today in Montreal and Toronto and Winnipeg and other large cities on the Mainland. In that way they have left us with the aged and with the incapacitated and disabled and the widows and people who are anchored here and can't leave. That is why our percentage is higher in every department in which public assistance is given. Well, how are you going to get around that? I know, Mr. Speaker, the Government is very anxious to win the good esteem of everybody. I am not sure they are anxious to win the good esteem of certain people carrying on business on Water Street, but they are certainly anxious to win the good esteem of people outside and the great bulk of the voters of Newfoundland, not only by actual administration of the Department of Public Welfare, but by the positive things they do to eliminate the need for public welfare. Yet what do we find during the five years that this Government has been in power? Where is that valuable improvement which was designed, it would seem, to benefit the poor person more than any other person in the country? Where is the Co-operative movement today? Does anybody know where it is? It seems to have fallen between two stools while we are waiting for Memorial University College to take it over and establish an extension department. The Department of Fisheries and Co-operatives seems to have washed its hands of it, and the Government has no responsibility for it now. The other day the Premier said he could not understand why it was but it seemed to him the co-operative movement for some reason or other did not seem to be very successful in Newfoundland. Why? As far as the Government is concerned, I think, they are looking too much for a quick solution to the problems. These problems are not capable of quick solution. They must be looked at from the long view, and you must build up by education from the ground, and train people in the ways and means to help themselves. "God helps those who help themselves."

I have talked long enough with Dr. Coady and Dr. Tomkins of Antigonish Co-operative movement to know how abject the people were in the different parts of Nova Scotia when these men started their co-operative movement over thirty years ago. The fishermen of Canso and other parts of Nova Scotia were just as backward as the fishermen in the outports of Newfoundland. But by pattern, by study and by perseverance these fishermen were taught to help themselves, to study their problems and eventually to solve them, and they have solved them to a degree that has won the admiration of the world. And where are we who began not very long after them, and had the benefit of the inspiration of men like Tomkins and Coady, and the benefit of having men trained in Antigonish? Where are we today? Are we much further ahead of them? Have we progressed in the same direction? No, we have not. But why have we not? It seems to me you are going to have this problem of unemployment and poverty in increasing degrees unless the Government recognizes what they are. You are not going to solve them by big ventures and talking in a big fashion. That is not the way. But it is started by education, planting the seed, helping development and by keeping to the pattern and training. It may be a long time but it will eventually flower like a tree and bear fruit. That is the way these things have to be done, and it seems to me it has not been done. I know from personal experience how the people of this community or part of Newfoundland can be helped if we had a co-operative credit society. However, I am sure there must be men on the other side of the House who have visitors to their offices too asking; "I wonder if you could lend me the money to get as far as Corner Brook? I have a job there." Or "I wonder if you could lend me $20 to get my license for my car, or lend me fifty dollars for a parcel coming from Eatons?" I have had people come to my office and talk like that. I ask; "Are you in a credit society?" Why are there not more credit societies to enable people to escape the loan sharks extracting an interest of 2% a month on unpaid bills? Why are there not? Is it because the Minister of Co-operatives and Fisheries has gone to sleep on the job, and is not doing the things he should be doing, building up the country in that fashion, which is the solution for a country such as ours.

Honourable members on the other side have spoken about having electric lights and telephones and other social amenities in their homes in the outports. Of course they should have them. These are the things they should have to make life more bearable in the outports and then people would stay there and not crowd the cities looking for employment. Anytime there is any kind of work, men come in and their families come in, and they board up their homes in the outports and these people live under crowded conditions in the city, and are eventually out of employment and are down looking for relief. We got to look at the problem from that side. If I may be pardoned for referring to this personal matter again—when I was in Ottawa I could not understand for the life of me, with all the hundreds of millions of dollars being given out by Central Mortgage and Housing which was going to people to build homes in cities and big towns, what about the people in Portugal Cove, Ferryland and Cape Broyle who were not eligible for homes? That is one of the beneficial things of the LaScie movement and other places. At last they are going to qualify to get a loan from Central Mortgage and Housing co-operatively.
That is one thing the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives deserves credit for, and the Government with which he is associated. I thought all through these years when that money was being poured out the people in Seldom-Come-By, Joe Batts Arm should qualify just as much as people living in larger centres for loans from the central Government in that way.
If a man loses his horse, for instance, what does he do? He writes to his member saying, I lost my lovely horse, what can you do about it? I can't do anything about the ground now.
I cannot go to town. If there is no credit society in the place for him to go—I think a man that loses his horse like that is in a desperate situation, and I think the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources who has the care now of the agricultural development of this country should sometimes give a thought to the problems like that. I don't know whether there is insurance for horses which are destroyed, but there are provisions for loans, and much hardship could be alleviated by helping a person who has suffered such a loss to enable him to get a new one.

There is, it seems to me yet another problem in this country: It seems to me that a lot of money is being thrown away every day. As the honourable gentlemen who listen to that programme on the radio "Know
Your Newfoundland" realize very well.
The person is given some sort of a number and whether it is solved or not, and the chances are about one in twenty thousand of ever getting it right, yet people are sending in letters from all over Newfoundland costing postage. The Federal Government will benefit by that. Then it is costing for paper. But what is more important, a lot of people, hour after hour, are listening to these gambling programmes, and many of them are ridiculous, and it does not matter whether you get the right answer or not, you may not be picked. I wonder how much money is being spent on "Lifebuoy" soap or something like that because one must have four coupons in order to qualify for the prize. Even if you get the right answer and do not send in the requested number of coupons you don't get anything at all.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that special measures should be taken, in this country to develop the country by the provision of roads across the country. Everyone feels that if we had a cross-country road it would be the means of inducing thousands of tourists to come here, who would spend a large amount of money, and in that way bring employment for hundreds of our people. They are not doing anything like that that would give steady employment such as would the tourist trade, which brings hundreds of millions of dollars to Canada, and could be a means here of reducing this expenditure for public assistance.

I want to refer to another matter in connection with the Minister of Mines and Resources: Very often—and it has been done in other countries at any rate—people have allotments which they till in the summertime and grow a lot of produce, and help out the family in that way.
That takes a lot off the Government it seems to me. I don't know if the Government has given any consideration to these questions of land allotments. They were conducted here during the war. Perhaps it is cheaper today to buy produce produced and dumped from the neighbouring Provinces of Canada. It can be bought very cheaply. But I think in addition to providing produce, people would gain a good deal in health by working at their gardens in the summer time. I remember over twenty years ago the Alderdice Government with the stadium at their disposal were able to hold exhibitions at St. John's and Conception Harbour and Bell Island and probably other places as well to encourage people to grow things. I remember in the stadium when visiting these exhibitions seeing the huge pumpkins and the tobacco plants raised in this country, and all the fine things exhibited. I would suggest as a positive constructive measure to the Government that they give more thought to that question than they have done in the past.

The problem of casual labour seems to me to be the chief cause of poverty, and anything which will give steady employment or occupy people for the principal portion of the year would be a constructive measure.

We are all anxious to see the standard of living improved. We are all anxious to see the standard of education improved. Education, organization and a high standard of living go together. Now what are we going to educate people for? Not necessarily for luxuries. I think it was the Premier the other day who spoke, I don't say offensively at all, but he did not seem to be satisfied with the standard set by Pope Leo XIII when he talked about working people living in frugal comfort. I don't think any of the working people he was talking about were satisfied to live in frugal comfort. Everyone feels today he should have a very much higher standard of living, not merely frugal comfort and certainly all the comforts of life, but have them in substantial abundance. But there is a difference between living a good comfortable existence and in having luxuries. Now luxuries often lead people to extravagance, and the road to extravagance is the road to unhappiness and dislocation. I think it is a road we ought to avoid—talking about roads reminds me of the statement the Premier made the other day when speaking to the press in British Columbia, and it was also made by the Minister of Finance last year in his budget speech, when he said: “In 1949 there was one motorcar for every sixteen persons and now there is one for every five.” Well we certainly have more than a third more motorcars, but have we a third less relief? While the figures have gone down since 1949 they are a little on the up just now, and things in the future may not be so good as they were during the past couple of years. I would say this, Mr. Speaker, that they are endeavouring to do a good job in administering public relief. I must say the officials are courteous and attentive in the City here. But I have made these complaints about things that happened outside the City of St. John's—they may not be done deliberately, but it seems to me cases of that kind ought to be brought to the attention of higher officials in St. John's.

The Bill as an amalgamation does not deal with able-bodied relief, but nevertheless it is interesting to see a combination of the two Bills such as the Minister has explained to us. I had to read it very carefully to see what it meant. It is compact and well drafted. I don't know whether the Minister is responsible for it, but I think it is an importation. It seems to me to be an excellent Bill although I do not know who is responsible for its drafting, but I have a suspicion it came from another province such as British Columbia.

MR. CURTIS: No, it is our own.

MR. BROWNE: Well I must congratulate the Minister on the job he has done in that respect.

Finally, Sir, I would like to say this in reply to what the Minister said about our statistics showing up the ravages of generations. Let us hope, Sir, that in the administration of this new Bill, and if the Government will take into consideration this suggestion which I have hesitatingly advanced to them this afternoon about providing us with a better co-operative movement than we have seen in the past, then these statistics, as far as Newfoundland is concerned, will begin to show a better trend for the future.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion debate adjourned until tomorrow.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move the remaining Orders of the Day do stand deferred, and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday, at 8:00 of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 27, 1954.
The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Motion and Questions
None.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before you call the Orders of the Day I wonder if I could be permitted to tell the House of the death in New York City of a man who has been a great friend to Newfoundland for the past two or three years. I refer to Mr. Littleton
B. P. Gould of New York City.

Mr. Gould entered hospital two or three weeks ago. I had a letter from him written from the hospital that I received about a week ago. In that letter he was quite cheerful. He told me that he had to undergo an operation, but he evidenced no fear or foreboding that I could detect in the letter. He, however, succumbed to the effects of the operation, and passed away on the twentieth of the present month, which I think was Thursday of last week.

Mr. Gould was a gentleman who was extremely well known in certain circles in New York City. He was known personally to virtually all of the bankers and financiers of importance in Manhattan. He was known as a club man, a man about town, and he was very prominent indeed in the Harvard Club of New York. I have myself been present when he was called by his first name or by the diminutive of his first name "Litt" by great bankers and great financiers of New York. I have been present in the Harvard Club as his guest in New York when men who are quite distinguished in American life called him from various parts of the room and came over to the table to shake hands with him.

Mr. Gould devoted himself quite ardently in the past three years to promoting and advancing the interests of Newfoundland insofar as he was capable of doing so. He was one of the first directors of NALCO. Indeed with the Attorney General and myself, Mr. Gould played a very important part in lining up the great firm of Harriman Ripley as one of the original parties in the NALCO project. Indeed Mr. Ripley himself and Mr. Gould had a rather intimate relationship in that the son of one of them was married to the daughter of the other. They were therefore on very intimate terms. I think that perhaps because of that particular relationship, Mr. Gould was able to introduce Mr. Ripley so affectionately to us.

His son wrote me a letter, which I received last night, to say that his father had died. His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor has also received a letter to the same effect.

Mr. Gould was a very religious man. He was what I would call a good Christian, a very devout and prominent member of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine in New York, where he was quite prominent and highly respected. I believe he was personally well acquainted with His Lordship, the Bishop of Newfoundland with whom, I understand, he maintained a correspondence extending over a period of years.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that Newfoundland has lost a sincere friend, and in some ways a valuable one in the death of Mr. Gould. I think that note might be taken in this way, rather informally, in this House of the death of a good friend of this province.

Orders of the Day

Second reading of a Bill "An Act Respecting Social Assistance": (Adjourned Debate)

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before making any comment on the Bill, I would like to join with the Honourable the Premier and the Government on behalf of the Opposition in an expression of our regret upon the passing of Mr. Littleton P. B. Gould who, as the Premier has pointed out, was prominently connected with Newfoundland during the last two or three years. We are all very sorry to hear of his sudden demise. I have not had the pleasure of meeting him, but I knew that he was a great financier and promoter of companies etc. I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, to hear of his death.

Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say very much concerning this Bill, "An Act Respecting Social Assistance," because I had already spoken, I believe, on several occasions with reference to the Mothers' Allowances Act and the Dependents' Allowances Act, although I do not believe I was here when these Acts were introduced into the House. But I do remember on several occasions that I complimented the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare and indeed the Government, rather strangely possibly, on their forethought in bringing in these two measures. These two measures, I maintain, have done more than any other Acts that I know of to alleviate suffering, sickness, hardships and poverty in places where it hurt most and where it causes the most misery, mental misery probably more than anything else. We all know—any of us who have anything to do with relief—and I, myself, Mr. Speaker, have had to do with relief in rather a big way when I was a magistrate and also acting as a relieving officer in the Burin area. I have seen the fishermen's families bereaved of a breadwinner and little children deprived of clothing and food because of the fact that the parent went down beneath the waves in an endeavour to support his family. I have seen dependents of incapacitated and sick men suffering untold misery indeed. Sir, I remember one case which stands out, I believe, more vividly than any other case that I have seen. I was on my way one time from Burin to Lamaline or at least on my way back from Lamaline back to Burin when I suddenly had a visitor who said I should go to a place further up the shore and see a family there. I, with the police officer, there went to see this family, Sir. I went into the home where I found the father and the mother were in bed. They were, in my opinion, in almost the last stages of tuberculosis. The mother was poorly clad. The condition of one or two of the children I will not describe, they were indescribable. I made some inquiries. The mother of that family told me that she had nothing to eat. I said; "You have something, surely?" She answered; "No, Sir, we have not a thing in the house." I told the constable to take that information down. Even in those days, Sir, we hardly ever got families who had reached the state where they had nothing at all in the house.

She opened the cupboard door and said; "Here is the cupboard." That was the one time I saw the cupboard was bare. There was nothing, absolutely nothing whatsoever in that house, and the dole order was not due for several days or a week. I believe there were no neighbours in the neighbourhood in a position to alleviate the misery of this family. I firmly trust and hope I shall not live to see such misery again.

Needless to say, Sir, we immediately tried to relieve that family. We immediately also, in addition to that, wired into the department. And I will say that the department at that time although not flush with money like the present Department of Public Welfare, they were not flush at all with the funds to finance these things—they immediately ordered that this family be taken care of in a special way. So we can see, Sir, that not only neighbours but also all governments have been, I believe, most anxious to prevent that sort of thing and having found any cases of that nature, to alleviate the condition.

I do, nevertheless, Sir, congratulate the Minister on bringing in these two Bills, Mothers' Allowances and Dependents' Allowances, and I have done so before, and, as I have said, I congratulate the Government on implementing these two Bills.

In the present Act before us, Sir, I see no great change. It is more, I believe, a consolidation of the two Bills, the Mothers' Allowances and the Dependents' Allowances Acts. That is to say this Act respecting social assistance is very little different whatsoever. The people under the same conditions receive assistance just as they did under the Mothers' Allowances Act and the Dependents' Allowances Act. The only big change that I see in the Act is that they have here appointed a Director of Social Assistance now. Under the other Acts, as I remember, Sir, there were two boards set up consisting of anywhere from three to five members. In the case of the Dependents' Allowances Act there had to be a lady on that board. That to my mind, Sir, was a very good arrangement. You had anywhere from three to five on that board, and it could not be less than three. That board could decide just what the relief was and what the family concerned could get, and what families should get relief. The Government has now taken away these boards by the repeal of these two Acts, and have put in their place one director. I am not going to use the word "Autocratic" or the word "Dictatorial" nor anything of that nature, but I do say in all such cases, in any Government or in any country, where the implementation of a Bill of this nature, and one which can have such effect on the lives of so many people, to place the implementation of the Act into the hands of one sole individual is, I think, inviting a little possible trouble. Now I am not describing this director, whoever he may be, as a dictator, but we do know that when one individual is weighed down with too much responsibility he is apt to become impatient and possibly not give every case which comes before him the due consideration which it deserves. However, I think that the department, under its able head, will not allow such a thing to happen.

This Bill, Sir, is a good Bill. The only regrets I have about it is that yesterday the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources had to take occasion to apparently make politics out of the poverty, I call it; making politics out of poverty. I think this Bill brought into this House is a good Bill, received with good will, and one which should be carried out. Unfortunately one honourable member should have raised the matter of politics in discussing the Bill. As I say, it is unfortunate that politics had to be raised in this matter—if it is not politics I don't know what it was. I do remember the Minister stated certain things which he said he had a record of being said, I believe, away back in years gone by about dire threats to the people of Newfoundland if they should vote this way or vote that way. Well, Mr. Speaker, we must fight the devil with his own fire from this side of the House. I can look across this House now, Sir, and see individuals who did in the 1951 election intimate to certain constituents that it would be rather dangerous to vote for the PC's because the people, the constituents might lose Old Age Pensions and Family Allowances. I can look across the House, Sir, and see individuals who hinted what to their constituents. I say that, Sir, in reply to anything which the Minister did say yesterday when speaking on this Act. As a matter of fact, Sir, I fear that there was one remark which the Minister made yesterday, the Minister of Public Welfare, or the Minister of Mines and Resources when he was Deputy Minister of Public Welfare, I recall, Sir, his being on the air for about two years every week telling the people of Labrador and of Newfoundland of all the benefits which his department, the Department of Public Welfare, were to heap upon the suffering people. That went on for two years, Sir, as a matter of fact right up to the time when he went before the people and asked them to exercise their franchise on his behalf. I sometimes wonder, Sir—after all he was a valuable man in that department at that time as Deputy Minister—and I often wonder how, in the name of goodness the Department of Public Welfare manages to get along without such a valuable man at the present time. I must not be unfair, but I sometimes wonder if the Honourable Minister does not himself wonder sometimes how they get along without him. Possibly that is the reason which he ascribed to this Bill here. They had two Acts which they are now going to make one. It is impossible perhaps to carry out the provisions of the two Acts so that they made them into one Act because of the loss of the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources.

Mr. Speaker, I must refer to some figures which were given me in reply to a question sometime ago. I find that for Mothers' Allowances for the first eleven months of 1953-54 some one and a quarter million dollars was paid out by the Government and for Dependents' Allowances one million one hundred and forty-six thousand dollars; sick relief three hundred thousand and Old Age Assistance one million, eight hundred and three thousand; a total of four million six hundred and fifty-nine thousand; almost four and three-quarter million dollars paid out under these two Acts, Mothers' Allowances and Dependents' Allowances and with regard to sick relief and Old Age Assistance etc., altogether there was some four and three quarter million dollars paid out. The way the Minister talked yesterday, and I don't refer to the Minister of Public Welfare, but to the Minister of Mines and Resources, it almost appeared here that he and other members on the other side of the House dug right down in their jeans, Mr. Speaker, and collected four and three-quarter million dollars for relief of people destitute of fathers and destitute in other ways. I have to point out, Sir, that it was the people themselves, these very people themselves, who were probably helped by this fund, it was these people who dug down into their jeans and pulled out this money to help relieve their own misery. The people—because the people of Newfoundland, Sir, are not only the people in this House, not only the people living in luxury and in wealth, but they are all the people, the poor, the destitute, the mothers who have no breadwinner and the children who have no father etc. All these people are the ones who have supplied the money which paid for these allowances. As proof of that, Sir, from what I can find last year, 1953-54, there were practically six million dollars collected under the "SSA," Social Security Assistance Act, that 3% tax the Government levied and called the "SSA," but it was a 3% tax, Mr. Speaker, and the people of all of Newfoundland were the ones who supplied the money, and supplied six millions to pay four and three-quarter millions on these. What happened to the other million and a quarter is something the Government will tell us later. But I strongly suspect, Mr. Speaker, that some of it went, Sir, to other, shall I say, industries.

Now the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare gave some figures yesterday which were rather disturbing to say the least. He told us that there were about seven times as many per one hundred thousand re-receiving these various allowances, about seven times as many as in certain other provinces of Canada. Now that is a very disturbing statement, Sir. I have no doubt as to the accuracy of his statement, but we ought to ask ourselves why it is. My honourable and learned friend from St. John's West gave yesterday one reason when he suggested that conditions in the country during the past number of years had been such that many of the younger people had left the land of their birth and gone to greener pastures in other lands and set up housekeeping there, and left behind the old folks. There are undoubtedly a good many cases of that kind. We do know, Sir, that there are other reasons as well. There are many more widows in this Newfoundland of ours than there are, say, in British Columbia or in Alberta and other provinces. We have many more widows by reason of the fact that: They go down to the sea in ships and do business in deep waters—and very often, Mr. Speaker, they do not return. Hence up around the district of my honourable friend from Fortune Bay you will find, I believe, more widows perhaps than in any other part of the country, not because it is Fortune Bay but because the men folks have in times past and up to the present time earned their livelihood by fighting the dangers of the deep. Consequently there are more widows and more orphans, more dependents, and I am quite sure my honourable friend will bear me out on that. We find that, Sir, in many places around our coast.

That brings me to the fisheries, Sir, and perhaps it is very timely that the Honourable Minister has brought in this Bill now just after we had so much talk concerning the setting up of the Fisheries Authority, because Sir, we are fishermen, because we always have been and always will be a fishing country. That, in my opinion, is the one reason why we have so much need for such a Bill as this, the Social Assistance Bill. I do not wish to say much about the fishery at the moment, Sir, but I do know that I was informed only yesterday or the day before of thirty men being laid off at Burin from the fish plant there. That, Sir, shows how uncertain is the occupation to which so many of our people have set themselves—thirty men laid off in a fresh fish plant, which we have been told was the solution, the saviour of the southwest coast. We don’t need to worry much about the southwest coast. That opinion was expressed here in this House by members of the Government—we don’t need to worry so much about that. Their only worry was the northwest coast. I want to point out, Sir, that we do have to worry, and we have to worry very much. While I grant they have better opportunities of making—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: Is the honourable gentleman in order reviving the debate closed here the other day? Is that in order?

MR. SPEAKER: Hardly. The honourable member was commenting on a statement made in a previous debate.

MR. HOLLETT: I do remember Sir, I will not be speaking five days on this, and I will not roam afar, all over the field of human endeavour, but I do want to point out that one of the reasons why we have to pay out seven times more than the average per one hundred thousand people than the other provinces is because our people are engaged in the precarious occupation of the fishery. Even now, Sir, on the northeast coast, fishermen are on strike. What is going to happen to the families of these people?

I would say to the Government now that the best thing they have done since they came into office was the payment of $1.50 a quintal which they gave to the fishermen last year. That, Sir, relieved the necessity of application to the Mothers' Allowances and Dependents' Allowances. That helped greatly. I am proud that the Government did that. I hope that if the occasion arises again they will only be too happy to do it. But I want to point out that they are going to have a heavy call on this particular Act respecting social assistance, and with ten thousand fishermen on strike last month, there were ten thousand unemployed people in this country. It is true, Sir, that for a while these people did get unemployment insurance. But there comes a time when unemployment insurance stops, and immediately it stops then, Sir, there will be a call either on this Act or for able-bodied relief. Ten thousand fishermen on strike. Ten thousand labourers out of work. I would be unkind if I said—"Three jobs for every man."

Something else was spoken of yesterday, Sir, to account for the large numbers who have to be assisted by this Act. That, Sir, I believe, was mentioned by my honourable friend from St. John's West—the amount of rum and whiskey and beer and gin sold by the controllers all across the country, in twice as many taverns, with twice as many outlets as we had last year. Unfortunately the honourable member was right when he said that was one of the causes.

If I may, I would like to refer to section 9 of the Act where it says that social assistance shall not be granted under this Act or the regulations thereof to a person whose only claim to social assistance is on account of his being unemployed. We are bound to ask ourselves why. This is a Social Assistance Act, and whilst I do agree with the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare when he said yesterday that he believed that all able-bodied relief should be taken care of by the Federal Government—I agree with him on that. We have to admit that such is not the case, and until such time as it is somebody will have to look after the man who is unemployed, who has lost his job, who has a wife and family and small children perhaps and perhaps larger children and perhaps no children at all, but who has no job and no food. Somebody has to look out for him. I ask, therefore, why not assist him under this Act?

Sometime ago, Sir, I asked another question with regard to relief, and I found that, I think it was at the beginning of this year, there were some fifteen hundred and fifty families in Newfoundland on relief, and they received, Sir, during that month some $45,126. On an average, Sir, that was $30 per family for the month or one dollar per family per day—one dollar per family per day—I wonder if the Government is proud of that figure? Take an average family of five persons, Mr. Speaker, that is twenty cents per person per day. In other words this great Liberal Government, during January of 1954, this year of Our Lord 1954, assisted people who were able-bodied and on relief to the extent of slightly less than twenty cents per person per day. Is that great Liberal Government, which the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources defined, and not only defined, but praised to the skies yesterday, proud of that? Slightly less than twenty cents per person per day. Oh I know there are people who would say it is better than six cents per day. I wonder is it? I wonder, Sir, if slightly less than twenty cents per person per day is better now than six cents a day in those days when that relief was doled out? I sometimes doubt it, Sir. We have to remember, Sir, that the duty of the Government is to keep abreast of the age in all matters, particularly in the western world along the lines of this Bill, that is, social assistance. Did the Government keep abreast of the times when it tried to feed an able-bodied man, his wife and his children with less than twenty cents per person per day? We must remember too, Sir, that that twenty cents was given out by means of an order on a merchant. The merchant, Sir, undoubtedly took at least 40%, six cents, which brings it down to fourteen cents, and the Government itself, Sir, undoubtedly on many of the articles bought by that twenty cents, took its pound of flesh, one cent, to help out in social security. I again ask myself and again ask you, Sir, if that twenty cents per person per day is very much ahead of six cents per day in the bad old days? I doubt it very much. Now I am not forgetting that there is such a thing as Family Allowances, and I am not forgetting that where these apply in certain families, that the Family Allowances also did help the child. But that, Sir, did not come out of this Government, that came from the Federal Government. And we boasting of surpluses! I believe we are supposed to have a surplus of six million dollars. At any rate on the Social Security Assessment, our 9% tax, we had a surplus of one and a quarter million. It would be much better, Sir, if those in need who were hungry, it would have been better if the Government had increased the order to much better than twenty cents per person per day. Especially, Sir, we must remember, and I hope the Government will bear with me if I remind them, that they themselves spent over four hundred thousand dollars in travelling expenses last year. The Honourable the Premier complained that Dr. Valdmanis got away with over five hundred thousand dollars in just two industries. We know that some five hundred thousand dollars were lost in regard to the Icelandic Boats. Sir, I myself can quote scores of places where, in my opinion, money was wasted right and left. Over a million dollars, Sir, and I don't say this was wasted, was spent as working capital for the birch plant. Twenty million dollars, Sir, altogether, during the last three or four years have been spent for the new industries.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is now discussing a budget speech which has not yet been made.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order. It seems to me the honourable gentleman is discussing everything that he could properly discuss in the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne and whatever else he might fail to discuss in that debate but could discuss on the debate on the budget, and following that what he might discuss on some particular resolution. That honourable gentleman is wandering all over the world, and he is completely out of order.

MR. SPEAKER: I have already given the ruling. The honourable member will resume his speech.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, am I out of order?

MR. SPEAKER: I have already told the honourable member he was discussing the budget speech which has not yet been made. This is hardly time to discuss the finance of this province.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, if I raise the question of the inadequacy of relief I surely ought to be entitled to show why better relief has not been paid or forthcoming; and I quoted these figures to show why, in my opinion, these people who were receiving relief did not get better relief. I was going to quote some more figures, Sir, but if I am out of order then I shall have to stop.

MR. SPEAKER: I think the argument is very very far-fetched.

MR. HOLLETT: It may be, Sir, but a hungry child is not far-fetched, a hungry child and a hungry parent. If I show that the Government has wasted money—they are today paying salaries of $25,000 when some of that money should be applied to relief of children who are hungry.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is entirely out of order. It is certainly not parliamentary to take the ruling of the Chair and twist it into an item of debate. I am not at all concerned with the honourable members who sit on my left. I am sure they are able to answer the honourable member when their turn comes to speak in this debate. To include Mr. Speaker in the debate is entirely out of order. I merely pointed out that the honourable member has no right in this debate to discuss the expenditure and finance of the Government, the expenditure in the Department of Welfare, yes, but to cover the whole gamut of provincial expenditure is very far-fetched indeed. Will the honourable member continue his speech. The honourable member will have ample opportunity of saying all this in the debate on the budget speech.

MR. HOLLETT: Well, Mr. Speaker, I bow to your decision, Sir. But I am wondering how the man on the bill of Cape St. George, if there happened to be one of these who received able-bodied relief, how he managed on one dollar per day for himself and his wife and three children, how he manages on twenty cents for himself? Did he have three meals a day and a roof over his head? I wonder if he had on twenty cents a day?

Mr. Speaker, there are certain sections in this Bill which we shall take up in committee, but I say again that it is a good Bill. It is a good Bill because it is merely a consolidation of the Mothers' Allowances and the Dependents' Allowances Acts, and I believe, Sir, that these two Acts have been implemented in a fair and just way by the Department of Public Welfare. I have had occasion to bring a good many cases before that department's officials, and I will say here, Sir, that they have acted fairly and squarely and that, where it was possible under the Act, they have assisted. I compliment the Minister and his staff on their carrying out of these two Acts, and I do hope, Sir, that this Act, under the supervision of the director, whoever he may be, will be carried out in the same manner as have the other two Acts. But I do maintain, Sir, that the Government ought to give consideration to the possibility of assisting the able-bodied in a more generous manner, and not to lay down the law here as they have done in this Act that it does not apply to a person whose only claim to Social Assistance is on account of his being unemployed. I do hope, Sir, that rather they will come back to Section 6 on page 7 which says that it may be given to any person on behalf of himself and his family if in the opinion of the director, social assistance is necessary for the proper maintenance or rehabilitation of that person or his family. That section is humane. That section is one which does credit to the Minister and his department and the framers of this Act. I do hope that when the Government finds families who are destitute by reason of the fact that no work can be found by any member of the family that they will apply that section rather than that the director should say: "Look here, my boy, we cannot help you under this Act. Such and such a section says so, and therefore we cannot help you." I do hope that the Government, as I believe the Government has tried to do, Sir, in the past, will give help where help is needed.

We support this Bill, Sir, and I congratulate the Minister on his speech in bringing in the Bill.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I have heard political speeches in and out of this House, many of them good, some bad and some indifferent. But one of the most contemptible of all political speeches I have ever heard anywhere at any time by any one was the one to which I have just listened.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I think I shall have to rise to a point of order there—if I made a contemptible speech—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Contemptible and political, I said.

MR. HOLLETT: I ask the Honourable Premier to retract. It is a pity he was not here yesterday to listen to the Minister of Mines and Resources.

MR. SPEAKER: I don't think I need ask the honourable member to retract, but as to the way it was used, I do deplore the use of that word and hardly think it ought to be used.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I heard the honourable gentleman speak in this same chamber as a member of the National Convention. I was a member and he was a member. I sat across from where I sit now. He sat almost immediately behind me, so that I had a good opportunity of hearing every word he ever uttered in the National Convention. I have also heard him on the radio in the great fight for Confederation, in which I fought against him. I heard him discuss Family Allowances which he has the temerity to mention here today. I heard him discuss Family Allowances. It was not he who called them immoral. It was he who called them—

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order—is the Premier entitled to bring up the National Convention now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order I hold. I am entirely in order to bring up the National Convention, the House of Parliament in Westminster or the House of Commons anywhere, except those debates which have already taken place and have been concluded in this present session of this House of Assembly.
MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order—Mr. Speaker, my honourable colleague on my right rose to a point of order and asked for a decision of the Chair.

MR. SPEAKER: Any honourable member may speak to a point of order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Exactly, Mr. Speaker. I am now addressing myself to that point of order. And I say this in regard to that point of order raised by my honourable and learned member for St. John’s West: I am entitled to quote from remarks made by my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, when a member of the National Convention in exactly the same way as he is entitled to quote from remarks I made as leader of Confederation in the National Convention and out of the National Convention. That is exactly what I am doing, and my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition, desired Family Allowances, which he did not call them immoral but a “bluff,” a “fraud,” in other words, “A cod.”

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of privilege: I never did call Family Allowances a “bluff” and I do demand—I won’t put it that way—but I do ask the Honourable Premier to take that statement back. I never did call Family Allowances a “bluff” and if he is going to quote me he ought to produce the document.

MR. SPEAKER: These are allegations of fact which cannot be proven or disproved one way or the other and does not constitute a point of privilege.

MR. HOLLETT: My point is that that was not an allegation of fact.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is a statement of fact by me, Mr. Speaker, I state as a fact that I, with my own ears, these two good ears, when sitting not more than four feet from the honourable gentleman in this very chamber, heard the honourable member describe Family Allowances as a “bluff.” I make that statement now.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of privilege or order, I don’t know what you would call it—but that was never said by me, Sir, and the man who says that, Sir, I must say is not telling the truth to the country.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I have been told in this Chamber in the present session that what I said was a lie, and that I was a “damn liar” and out of forebearance I did not prove my case which could have been so easily done at that time. Out of Christian forebearance—but I will not be told I am a liar. I will not be told that what I said was a lie supposing I have to bring the evidence, which I can so easily do and as I could have done some few weeks ago so easily, and in fact did do and then dropped it, as everybody present knows. Now, Your Honour, not only did my honourable friend describe Family Allowances as a “bluff,” but he also had a description for Old Age Pensions. He is one of the honourable gentlemen, not the only one, but he is one of those who said that it might be true that there would be Old Age Pensions paid at the rate of $30 a month, as it was then, but if so the Government of Canada would take a fisherman's boat from him and would take his house from him and would take his garden from him, and would take his land from him and would take any bit of property he had because the Government was to give him the Old Age Pensions. Then that same honourable gentleman today again has the temerity to talk about Old Age Pensions.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to a point of privilege. Mr. Speaker, I believe I did say such things or I might have said it as did others at that time. As everyone knows it is a fact that the Federal Government could do such a thing, and so they could under this Act. I suppose I can read an Act. I was not allowed to say certain things here and I stopped, I was told I was roaming all over the world. Is the Honourable the Premier allowed to wander afield when I may not do so? That is my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to that point of order—I hold I am allowed to answer anything the honourable gentleman has said. I am in order in answering what he has said.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I speak on that point of order? The honourable gentleman says that if the Leader of the Opposition is out of order in mentioning something he is entitled to answer.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I said no such thing, Mr. Speaker—to a point of order—the honourable and learned gentleman is pleased again today to misquote me. He seems to be incapable now as he was a day or two ago to hear me and then three minutes later quote me correctly. What he might do in three days or three years I shudder to think. I did not say I was in order. I said I was no more out of order in answering what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition said than he was in saying it.

MR. BROWNE: You did not say that. No, you did not. You said you will answer it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: So much for the memory of the honourable and learned gentleman. When he has been in this House a little longer and has a little more experience of my memory he won’t often challenge it. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition denied that he said that. He also denied or would deny, no doubt, that he called the people of Newfoundland too lazy to work, although I heard him say it in this very chamber.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise again, Sir.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Of course he denies it.

MR. HOLLETT: Certainly he denies it. Mr. Speaker, I never said any such thing, and the man who said that I did is a contemptible liar and a crook. I say that, Sir. I never said such a thing, and I will deny it emphatically. I will have no more to say.

MR. SMALLWOOD: There are at least two hundred thousand Newfoundlanders, Mr. Speaker, who heard the honourable gentleman on the radio saying that Newfoundlanders were too lazy to work.

MR. SPEAKER: We are very closely bordering on the point of grave disorder. An honourable member in replying to another honourable member is quoting something he says was said in a speech made in another place before ever this House convened. The point is; can you quote from those speeches? Every honourable member knows, of course he can if (1) he has a memory for quotations (2) lacking that, from any newspaper or book that has been written he may quote from or any speech that has ever been made in any part of the world as long as it has not been made in this House during this present session, as long as it is not pertaining to that. In the course of making these so-called quotations another honourable member says he did not say it. I ask the House, how is the Chair to decide who said what or when. The honourable member may say he did not say it. Very well, why not let it go at that. Better still to keep away from personalities and opprobrious words.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, could I speak for one moment to the Honourable Leader of the Opposition's point of order?

MR. SPEAKER: There have been so many so-called points of order I can't see which one the honourable member wishes to speak to.

MR. FOGWILL: The one, Mr. Speaker where he was accused of saying the Newfoundland people were too lazy to work. On that point I want to say this: I sat in at every meeting of the National Convention, every meeting. The present Leader of the Opposition was Mr. Hollett in the Convention, and he never said at any time that the Newfoundland people were too lazy to work, that is, not to my knowledge, and I believe that is correct. That is not recorded anywhere.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now, Mr. Speaker, I would give the exact words.

MR. SPEAKER: May I say something more. The honourable gentleman in speaking to the point of order reminded me of the accused who offered to bring any number of witnesses to say they did not see him do a certain thing. This has become a little ridiculous.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, here is what happened: I remember as though it were yesterday or this forenoon because it burned itself on my memory as it did on the memory of hundreds of thousands of Newfoundlanders as it was the dirtiest and foulest insult ever offered to the Newfoundland people. Here is what happened: I was speaking—

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I must rise to a point of order. Mr. Speaker, I am a human being.

MR. SMALLWOOD: You are going to hear it though.

MR. HOLLETT: Not from you.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, from me, and now. You are going to hear it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I have never offered any dirty nor foul insults to the Newfoundland people. I deny this thing completely and irrespective of anything—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, a mere denial is not a point of order. He is taking my time. I have the floor. Mr. Speaker, I was at that time commenting on a situation that I thought existed in Newfoundland at that time, and I said that there was unemployment in Newfoundland, whereupon the honourable gentleman who is now Leader of the Opposition, and who, as his colleagues said, was then Mr. Hollett, the member for Grand Falls in the National Convention, Mr. Hollett said; There was lots of work if they were not too lazy to work.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, to a point of privilege: I claim the right, Sir, to correct the honourable gentleman, and I remember just as well as he does.

MR. SMALLWOOD: To correct me? Is that in order?

MR. SPEAKER: Yes, the honourable gentleman is in order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I am going on speaking until the honourable gentleman rises to a point of order. He is merely contradicting me.

MR. HOLLETT: I have the floor and I am staying there.

MR. SPEAKER: I shall take the floor, and both honourable gentlemen must resume their seats. I have already pointed out that one honourable member may say that this was said or done and another may contradict it if he feels himself misquoted. I rule this debate and this milling over the debates of the National Convention out of order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, the honourable gentleman, the Leader of the Opposition, has repeated today in his speech what he said on another occasion in this House, although today I was glad to know that he qualified it somewhat and that was this: He congratulated the Minister of Public Welfare upon having brought in legislation before the House. Then, unlike earlier occasions, he added, indeed he congratulated the Government. Now I want to say this, Mr. Speaker: The Attorney General is equally responsible with the Minister of Public Welfare for this Act.

The Minister of Fisheries and Cooperatives is equally responsible for this Act which the Honourable Minister of Public Welfare as are the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply and the Minister of Public Works. Every Minister of this Cabinet is co-equal in his responsibility for this Act. This is not an Act of the Minister of Welfare. The Honourable Minister of Public Welfare might be in this House until he grows long whiskers and no Act of his will pass this Chamber unless the Government adopts that Act and sponsors it and introduces it as a Government measure. This is not a "Pottle" Act. This is not a "Minister of Public Welfare" Act. This is an Act of the Smallwood Administration of Her Majesty's Government in this Province. If my honourable friends opposite have any vague idea in the back of their minds that they can somehow get credit for this Act or take credit from the Government by giving it to one member of the Government, then again they are making one more mistake to add to their 928 of this present session, making it 928 plus.

The honourable gentleman referred to making politics out of poverty. In answer to that I say—yes, yes, indeed, the best politics is poverty—bread and butter politics, belly politics. The kind I deal in—bread and butter politics, poverty politics. I came up from the ranks of poverty myself and know something about it—Poverty—Bread and Butter Politics—Belly Politics—that is the politics of this Government. I am not ashamed of it. We glory in it. We are the champions of the down-trodden in Newfoundland, the toiling masses of Newfoundland. Where were the champions before we came into office? To this moment and ever since we came into office we have paid out twenty-six and a half million dollars in social security in five years, twenty-six and a half million dollars we paid out of the Treasury, and that is net. Old Age Pensions for Newfoundland paid from the Treasury, Old Age Assistance paid from the Newfoundland Treasury, Dependents' Allowances from the Newfoundland Treasury, Widowed Mothers' Allowances from the Newfoundland Treasury, and children's allowances from the same. In the five years a total of twenty-six million five hundred thousand dollars, and we are proud of it. It is not enough. We would be prouder if it were double that, but that is more in five years than all the Governments of Newfoundland since Newfoundland was Newfoundland paid out from the beginning to the day we came in. Then the Leader of the Opposition, who said what he said about Family Allowances, who said what he said about Old Age Pensions, dares to get up here today and talk about social security.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order, Sir. Have I to dare to get up and speak?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Certainly a man may dare to make an argument the honourable gentleman dared to make, the intellectual baseness, and effrontery, intellectual argument, he of all men dared, the representative of the Tory Party of Canada who fought Family Allowances, who dared the representative of the party in this Province who tried to deprive the people of Newfoundland of the benefits of Confederation in that great political fight, and deprive by lies and deceit, of course, and yet is prepared—

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: When a group of men tried to persuade people by means of lies and deceit—let us recite some of them. Mr. Speaker: I said if we got Confederation there would be Family Allowances. I said it many times. What did its opponents say? They said it was not true, it was a lie, a bluff. Then what else did they say? When they finally were forced into admitting that there was such a thing as Family Allowances what did they say when forced to admit that and when forced to abandon their argument that it was only a bluff, all nonsense, not true, they then had to fall back on their second line of defence which was: Well, yes, it is true the Government of Canada pays that but only to those who are born in Canada, therefore no Newfoundland child could or would get it. But they overlooked something, and they hoped that the Newfoundland people would overlook it—the minute we became a province we were all born in Canada. Even if we were born out of Canada we were born in Canada as soon as Newfoundland because a part of Canada. So when the line of defence had to be abandoned, which it did, because in a few weeks I made mincemeat of it—

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of privilege, simply to deny that. It is emphatically wrong. No member of the Opposition even thought that.
MR. SMALLWOOD: It was common knowledge to hundreds of thousands of our people. To deny it now is so pathetic. The people will soon get where they won't believe a word that is said by people who deny what everybody knows they said. It is common knowledge. They abandoned—you don't like it do you? You don't like it.

MR. HOLLETT: You will blow a gasket.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend blew a gasket in the last two elections, and there they are. It must hurt sometimes. They get a couple of their colleagues in here. Once or twice this whole session they have had all five present, but you usually look over there and see two or three. If we see five we get half scared and it looks like the House is crowded when all five are there. Why? Because, Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland remember so well, so vividly what these same men said, all three of them, and the two who are not here—all three of them on the radio—and one man from the beginning did it.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I object to what the honourable gentleman who leads that party today on the other side of the House has said. He is not telling the truth—does not know anything about what I said—if he thinks he knows I will ask him to state specifically.

MR. SPEAKER: That is not a point of order.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, can the Premier get up here and say that I said certain things about Family Allowances and Old Age Pensions which are absolutely untrue. He knows perfectly well I was advocating Family Allowances long before they had them in Canada.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Perhaps the honourable gentleman is the father of Family Allowances in the same way as he is the father of the Fishermen's Federation?

MR. BROWNE: I want a showdown, Mr. Speaker, this man thinks he can run the House as he runs his party. I was advocating Family Allowances to the Commission of Government in 1939.

MR. SPEAKER: When both honourable members begin to shout, how can I hear what any one member is saying? The honourable member has no right to make a speech. These are allegations of facts—and again these things cannot be settled.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, what are we to do?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Why don't you go up and hit the speaker?

MR. HOLLETT: Shut up!
members as—"This man" and "That man"—has all sense of decorum left this House? Asking me to rule on things which were said in political campaigns, to defend political parties, when honourable members know full well that no political party has any right to defence in this House—only honourable members themselves have that right. I will not be jockeyed into this position again! I will leave the Chair if it happens again! If any honourable gentleman wishes to make a point of order, or if he wishes to deny a statement he has a perfect right to do so, certainly. Let the matter rest there— you cannot carry on with: "You did say this" and "I did not say that."

I will now ask the honourable member who has the floor to keep away from the National Convention. Why must he rehash all this political debate which occurred in previous elections. It is not the time nor the place for it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling. But I would point out that on yesterday the honourable member for St. John's West started this. He began it.

MR. SPEAKER: That is quite true, yes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I do not propose while there is a House and while Your Honour will allow me and the House sustain me to allow the honourable member for St. John's West to make the statement he made and have it go on unanswered.

MR. SPEAKER: He was answered by the Honourable Minister of Mines and Resources.

MR. SMALLWOOD: But by me! By me, the Leader of this administration, the Leader of the House. And when the honourable member makes the statement he made yesterday he is going to be answered by me. He said yesterday, and he quoted me that in a statement I had made in the great fight for Confederation that—"Never would there be a hungry child in Newfoundland again." True! I said that. And it is true there has not been a hungry child. If there has been a hungry child, if there has been, it is because it has not been brought to our attention. We don't allow any child to go hungry in Newfoundland. We do not allow it. But, if I were talking about making politics out of poverty, I said: "We admit that that is the only politics we know, the politics that are based on the past poverty of the island and people of Newfoundland—bread and butter politics, Mr. Speaker."

I was also talking about Family Allowances, and I said that those who attacked Family Allowances, said at first that they were a bluff, there was no such thing, I had invented them. They were a figment of my imagination—Smallwood lies—Smallwood bluff—when I proved that they were not a bluff, that it was not a lie, then they fell back on their second line of defence, and that was this: It was true, yes—it was true all right that the Canadian Government paid the Family Allowances but they paid them only to children born in Canada—therefore they went on to argue that Family Allowances would not be paid to Newfoundland children since they had not been born in Canada.

MR. FOGWILL: Who said that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: In deference to His Honour's ruling I will say:
"They—the leading opponents of Confederation."

MR. FOGWILL: That is not us.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I will defer to His Honour—I will still accede to His Honour’s request. Having been driven from that and having been shown that the moment Newfoundland became a Province of Canada we would all be Canadians even if we had not been born in Canada, and we would be entitled to Family Allowances, they then fell back on a new defence, the third line. What was that?

It was this: Yes, you will up to sixteen get the Family Allowance. But as soon as a child is sixteen he starts to pay them all back again to the Canadian Government. After this argument went the length and breadth of this island of Newfoundland and the coast of Labrador as well, I had to battle that down and demolish that line of defence. Then they fell back on the dirtiest one of all—their final line of defence—yes, it is true there will be Family Allowances. We have to admit that. We have to admit it will be paid to children in Newfoundland, as they will become Canadian children. We have to admit it. It is not true they will have to begin paying back when they are sixteen. But here is the biggest catch in Family Allowances: As soon as a child becomes sixteen, if he is a boy, he is conscripted and forced to put on a uniform in the Canadian Army. That is the argument that went up and down the island of Newfoundland. It may be funny today, but it was not funny six or seven years ago when the fight was on. It was a dirty and filthy lie, and it is a dirty and filthy lie today.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I rise to a point of order?

If the Honourable the Premier is attributing that idea or statement to any member on this side of the House I would like for him to retract it, because nobody on this side ever suggested such a thing.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Now, Mr. Speaker, that was Family Allowances. Now we come to Old Age Pensions. I remember well the point being raised. I remember well the famous debate on the Old Age Pensions. For two long months I had to pilot the debate, advocating and explaining Confederation, and the famous 28 dictators meantime trying to misrepresent and defeat me, but I downed them. I remember turning to one gentleman from Ferryland, Mr. Dick Goodridge, who then represented the district, and surprisingly, because he was a decent gentleman at heart, and a decent man, he supported me and backed me in a crucial part of the argument. The argument was this:

Well, yes, it is true. We cannot deny that Old Age Pensions are paid. If you are seventy years of age you get it, and you will get $30 a month. That is true. But before you can get it you have to sign a paper, sign a document and hand it over to the Canadian Government, and in that document you have to sign your name to this: That you give to the Government of Canada all your property, and when you die the Canadian Government will take your property from you and sell it off, and out of the cash they will get for your property, as far as the cash will allow them to do it, they will pay themselves back for the Old Age Pensions they gave you.
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the honourable gentleman a question relevant to this point? Is not his own Government today collecting from people in Newfoundland moneys which have not been properly paid out, or have been received contrary to the terms of the Act?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I would like the House to understand the nature of that request. I suppose I am in order in repeating the question. If I am wrong the honourable and learned gentleman may correct me. The question he now asks is not—Are the Government of Newfoundland now collecting back money which was properly paid in Old Age Pensions—lawfully, legally and rightfully paid, but—Are the Government of Newfoundland collecting back moneys which were wrongfully paid out to somebody who has misrepresented the facts or evaded the law. The answer to that is, yes. If we know of such cases, then we collect such moneys back.

MR. BROWNE: Are there any such?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not that the Minister knows of. But if there should be any because of someone lying or committing perjury as to his or her age as to any point he or she is supposed to answer, or if it is shown that there is fraud, we would do but to get back moneys. The Act itself provides that we get back money wrongfully paid out. We are presently trying to get back a lot of money wrongfully taken from the Government of Newfoundland.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have been in power for five years. We are now entering our sixth year. We have paid out in social security benefits twenty-six and a half million dollars, and in this our sixth year we will pay out five millions more. That will be thirty-one and a half million dollars at the end of this coming financial year. That is not good enough but it is the greatest in the whole history of Newfoundland, and relatively it is the greatest of all the Provinces of Canada. I think the Newfoundland Government, the Newfoundland House of Assembly leads the ten provinces; we are in the very vanguard of social reform, in the very vanguard of generosity compared with our means to be generous. We are far more generous than Ontario, than Alberta, than Saskatchewan, socialized Saskatchewan, and far more generous than wealthy British Columbia and fabulously rich Ontario, far more generous than these, in relation to our capacity to be generous. A higher proportion of our total expenditure as a Government is paid out under this heading than the proportion of any other Province of Canada, indeed, I believe, than the Government of Canada itself.

Now I sometimes think that it might be a good thing if the Liberal Government went out of office, the Liberal Government of Newfoundland went out of office and let the "Tories" in for, say, five years. I think that would be a good thing because, Mr. Speaker, in this past five years that we have been in we have brought so much, so very much social security benefits to those who needed it, we have done so much for education, we have done so much for public health, we have done so much for Economic Development, in this five years more than all the Governments of Newfoundland in any fifty years you like to take. We have done these things so much in these last five years that I sometimes wonder if the Newfoundland people are in danger of listening to the Leader of the Opposition and the ex-judge, in danger of listening to them and in danger of accepting their political philosophy. Maybe it would be better if the Liberal Government walked out tomorrow. Maybe it would be better if we did not even go back to them, if we did not even ask the people to re-elect us again. Maybe it would be better if we said to the people—look, we have been in five years. That is an awful long time. The "Tories" are telling us that we are a pack of scoundrels, a pack of crooks, a pack of fools, a pack of inefficients, a pack of incompetents. They are telling us that. Maybe it would be a good thing if they went in for five years and you got a taste of "Tory" rule. Maybe the people of Newfoundland have been getting so many breaks from Confederation that they are now at the point of taking them for granted. Maybe they need to be reminded that all these benefits came through the Liberal Party, through Liberalism, the Liberal Party who fought like tigers to bring them to them, and the Tory Party who fought like tigers to prevent them. Is that forgotten? Is it forgotten?

MR. HOLLETT: Is that in this Bill?

MR. SMALLWOOD: As much as all the things talked about on the other side especially by the honourable and learned gentleman from St. John's West. It is just as much in the Bill as the things he talked about yesterday.

I was particularly interested when the Honourable Leader of the Opposition expressed his wonderment that the Department of Public Welfare could get along at all since the present Minister of Mines and Resources had ceased to be the Deputy Minister down there. By the same token I sometimes wonder, and it puzzles me, how the magistracy gets along without the present Honourable Leader of the Opposition. How do they manage? How does the Bench get along? How does the judiciary get along without the distinguished and learned gentleman from St. John's West? Why has not justice simply broken down, the Bench both magisterial and the one that is slightly higher, about half an inch higher than the Lower Court, the one occupied by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, that could handle up to two hundred dollars—

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. BROWNE: How about the piggeries?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It takes real brains to run a piggery, I can assure my honourable friend. On hundreds of occasions when I cleaned out the pig pens I learned a lesson of humanity.

MR. BROWNE: You don't seem to know it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend is an excellent judge of humility. I noticed that particularly in his conduct in the House of Commons. I noticed his humility there especially on those occasions when Canada's great Minister of External Affairs—

MR. SPEAKER: We are becoming personal again.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Exactly Your Honour, and I am being personal because the honourable gentleman referred to piggeries.
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I was provoked into making that remark. The Premier was making unnecessary references to both the Leader of the Opposition and myself. Surely the honourable gentleman cannot have it both ways. If he is going to make these references he must expect some reply.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If the Honourable Leader of the Opposition expresses his wonderment as to how the Department of Public Welfare is now able to get along since the then Deputy Minister and present Minister of Mines and Resources ceased to be Deputy Minister, then am I supposed to remain silent?

MR. HOLLETT: Yes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Then the honourable gentleman is disappointed again as he has been many times in the past. If there is ever a time when the honourable gentleman is able to silence me it will be a frosty Friday.

Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the only hope the honourable gentleman really has of sitting on this side is in my blood pressure, heart condition or liver condition or lung condition. He is interested personally in every organ of my body, because his only hope of sitting on this side is in some functional disorder of mine. And I remember an occasion in this Chamber when I led the debate on Confederation, I remember many private bets going on as to how much longer I would last. I fooled them, and at this time I was never in better health than I am today. And if the honourable member is waiting on my health he is going to have, with the help of God, a long wait, because I never felt better.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am extremely sorry that the honourable member for St. John’s West, the ex-judge, saw fit yesterday, and that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition saw fit today to indulge in a series of insulting personal remarks.

MR. HOLLETT: And the Honourable the Premier, today.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Honourable the Premier today is giving back two to five hundred per cent more than the honourable gentlemen opposite were able to send, and will do that every time and is able to do it any time he feels like it, and can stay within the Rules of the House. The honourable member for St. John’s East indulged yesterday in some remarks about what happened during Confederation. He is smarting under that. I understand there was a time when the honourable gentleman was like me in one regard, and was a strong confederate. I am told that the honourable member, during lunch hour at the machine shop at the Railway where he was a respected and very valuable man, and he would during the lunch hour, regale them by the hour and by the day and by the week about the benefits and advantages of Confederation. He was then a strong confederate, so I am told.

MR. FOGWILL: That is not true, Mr. Speaker—to a point of privilege—I have taken part in many debates sometimes for and sometimes against, as the Premier himself has on a number of occasions. Anywhere where men talk we sometimes talk for a thing and sometimes against it. But for the Premier to say I was an ardent confederate, he is not telling the truth.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I accept the statement of the honourable gentleman. I can only say it was common talk during the National Convention that the honourable gentleman was an ardent confederate, and talked confederation until he was elected to the National Convention, whereupon he became one of the strongest, I won't say bitterest, opponents in the National Convention.

He yesterday saw fit to indulge in certain personal remarks aimed at me. I was not present. I dare say he would have said them if I had been present, but I was not present. Then yesterday the honourable and learned member for St. John's West aimed certain remarks at my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives, and because he was not present, I dare say the honourable and brave member—

MR. BROWNE: I think the Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives was present.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): Yes, but I was not in my seat, I was down there.

MR. BROWNE: There was nothing to prevent his reply, nothing.

MR. SMALLWOOD: All right, I stand corrected on that point. The fact remains that the honourable and learned member for St. John's West directed certain personal insults at the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives.

MR. BROWNE: I did not direct any personal insults. I understood the Premier was not present.

MR. SMALLWOOD: What I understand is that the honourable and learned gentleman referred to my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives, who happens to be one of the ablest, one of the sincerest, one of the cleanest, most decent, most loyal friends I have in this life. In the beginning when it took men of real guts to stand out and be a confederate he was one here in this Chamber. I understand that my honourable and learned friend said here yesterday that he was asleep on the job, or words to that effect; a man who works early and late, night and day, Sunday and Monday, of absolute integrity and absolute sincerity and a very able man.

Today the Honourable Leader of the Opposition offered a gratuitous insult, I hold, to the Minister of Mines and Resources when he wondered how the Department of Public Welfare can get along since he left it. Is it any wonder that I should reply vehemently, that I should reply in terms of some warmth or even heat, because, let me say this—for any part I played in making Newfoundland a Province of Canada I thank God for it and for the strength I had to devote to it. I thank God, the same God that the honourable gentleman prayed to to prevent Confederation I prayed to to bring it about. For the part I played and the strength I had I thank God today, and there are hundreds of thousands of Newfoundlanders tonight who will thank God for the day we became a Province of Canada. We are not ashamed of Confederation, and any time my honourable friends opposite want a fight on it I will give it to them.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, are we to have a debate on Confederation. If we are we can go into it. We don't want to do it, but the Honourable the Premier is asking for it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They did not mention the word "Confederation" therefore they have not referred to Confederation. Never again a hungry child—but they made no reference to Confederation because they did not mention the word. I say; anytime you want another fight on Confederation we will give it. We have licked them before and we can do it again. We trimmed them, and what a trimming that was. There never was a trimming like it in Newfoundland before. We fought against them, we out-maneuvered them, we out-pointed, we out-boxed, we out-faced, and we trimmed them. And I think we can do that anytime we want with one hand behind our backs. I think we can trim that crowd. When it comes to Confederation we are proud of it.

Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in supporting the Bill which my colleague has piloted through this House, and which all my colleagues have considered so carefully in Cabinet, and which we have adopted. With all my supporters in this House, the private members who have considered it in caucus and who have supported it again in this House, with the kindness and humanness of everyone on this side of the House, I support this Bill. It is our Bill. If the Opposition wish to support it we welcome their support. If they like to oppose it they can oppose it and be blessed in doing it, but it is our Bill, and we ask the House to support it.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Might we now have a recess, Mr. Speaker?

On motion House recessed for ten minutes.

HON. DR. H. L. POTTLE (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take up a few points of the number that were raised by the members of the Opposition. I have listed as many as ten, and to these I shall refer somewhat briefly but I hope adequately for the present purpose.

The honourable member for St. John's East raised a question as to whether the Government planned to share with the Government of Canada as to the proposals with reference to permanently and totally disabled persons. I would remind the House that the legislation is now before the Commons at Ottawa, and as to what is going to be our attitude I think I have already expressed it. I believe the Government's view will be that we would examine the legislation when it is ready for examination, we would consider its merits or otherwise, and on the basis of two points we would discuss whether or not we should take part on a fifty-fifty basis with Canada. These two points would be (1) whether by entering into agreement we would give a better welfare system of benefits to the people in Newfoundland who would be concerned, probably as many as from three to five hundred who are already, I say, receiving assistance under the Dependents' Act and (2) could we afford to do so, not only by way of what it would itself involve, as there would be a saving actually, but rather by signing would there be other benefits? Would it be good welfare service, and would we be able to afford it?

The second point I wish to refer to has to do with a point which was by implication raised by the honourable member for St. John's East, that is, that some people were afraid of losing their Old Age Pensions because of pressure that might be brought to bear on them because of the way in which they thought. Frankly I have no idea what the honourable member was speaking about. We did, in fact, as I recall, refer to Old Age Pensions and Old Age Pensions as given, Mr. Speaker, is a matter of right universally, to all persons in Canada of seventy years and over who can prove their age. And I can't see how their feelings would interfere. If any other implications are intended, as Minister of the Department concerned that is as to provincial benefits, I have absolutely no knowledge of it or what the honourable member was referring to.

Now I may say that I was glad to receive the support yesterday of my colleague from Mines and Resources, who has been in a large measure identified with the measure and with the progress which led up to this Bill.

Now, going on to some other points, Sir, the third point I wish to make has to do with the question raised by the honourable and learned member for St. John's West when he said that the present Bill should have included sick relief. In fact it does in the definition of social assistance, even if it could not be considered to come in under the first or the third section, as the case may be. It would inevitably come in under sub-paragraph 7 "generally any form of assistance necessary in the opinion of the Minister to relieve destitution and suffering or to rehabilitate any person." In fact it is specifically intended that sick relief will come under this Bill.

The fourth point I wish to make has to do with the point raised by the same honourable member in which he eulogized the place of voluntary charitable institutions especially churches and of institutions fostered and sponsored by church charity. I can heartily agree with all the remarks he has made. It has been our tradition, and will continue to be our tradition to work wholeheartedly in collaboration with these, if for no other reason than that they can do, in their own way, a service which a state organization is not qualified by any means to do. Public Welfare at its best is really a cooperative enterprise between both kinds of bodies, each with its own respective span, as the case may be. He drew something to our attention in which he was interested and I was a bit concerned, i.e. it appears that some welfare officials outside the City of St. John's, I may say, in his view, were not dealing promptly with certain cases of urgency, i.e. chronic illness and sudden and severe illness. Well I have one or two things to say there: Our welfare districts are large districts. By saying that I don't mean that is excusing the welfare officer completely. He is out there, I was going to say, in an advisory position, he represents the department and he has to take the responsibility for a wide variety of—last fall, and this is a unique thing that would never happen, I suppose, in any other Province of Canada, but it is an illustration of how deeply the welfare officer is identified with the total welfare of a community—our welfare officers last fall undertook responsibility for collecting fish receipts from our fishermen, and paid them on the spot, a welfare undertaking which was unorthodox for the Nation of Canada and yet had, I said, very, very worthwhile significance for our people. Now I say that to indicate that the variety of their duties is very considerable. That is not to excuse them. And if would say that, if any elected member of any district has any knowledge of any such, shall we say delinquency or neglect or delay, he should let us know at the earliest possible moment. When I say that it is not to excuse the community from bringing to the proper attention needs of that kind, because it very well may happen that a welfare officer may get to a certain section of his district and the moment he leaves a very urgent case might very well arise. It is not always easy to meet these needs, and it would be a good thing if the communities took even more responsibility than they do. I saw this morning on my desk a letter written by a lodge in a certain community backing up the efforts of the welfare officers to get a very needy person in an institution. Now that is a very worthy undertaking. The welfare officers can only do so much, the institutions can only do so much. There are only so many beds whether in the infirmary or the mental hospital or any other hospital. Accommodations although increasing are nevertheless limited at any given time, and these points need to be understood.

The next point is intended to answer the question of the same honourable member in complimenting the Government on evolving this Bill and those who framed it. I may say that it was, or the substance of it was set out by the Department of Public Welfare, but it was the law officers of the Attorney General's office who put it into proper shape, in legal shape. So that it is a joint enterprise between the departments that I have just mentioned.

Now there is just this point I might refer to in closing the debate. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition referred to that change in doing away with the voluntary boards under the two Acts concerned, and appointing instead a director of social assistance. I gather he felt that was a retrograde step. I can say we have looked over that point quite thoughtfully and we got all the best advice we could, without leaning too much in any one direction on this question of whether it is advisable to have a voluntary board on that matter on the statutes or not—and we have been working with these boards for five years, and they have given excellent service—what happens, however, is that after the first year or so of operations the business of the board becomes routine, and it is very difficult to maintain the interest of people at large in routine matters. But let me say there are other ways in which the public reaction can be tested on matters of public welfare, and I think I am not being too presumptuous when I say that we in Newfoundland, and in the Government, and the Department of Public Welfare in Newfoundland have never been at least willingly too far off from the public feelings in these matters. Every now and then we call together a meeting of citizens, just on our own, because we believe that the Government has this view, and we try to express it, and we sit down together and hammer out points of common interest in public welfare. My view would be that if we have framed a Department of Public Welfare Act, as it is our intention to do, I would recommend to the Government that we provide for a public welfare board which would be made up voluntarily of representative citizens, whether their duties be executive or advisory, who would nevertheless be a sounding board for public welfare feelings in the community at large. But our experience with these smaller boards is, as I say, they start off enthusiastically, but it is very dif-difficult to keep up their interest after the first few years have passed. When we introduce a Bill here having the effect ultimately of doing away with these boards, let me say it has been a matter of great satisfaction to us that so many people, because the membership has changed, so many people have volunteered and given freely of their services on these boards. We have acknowledged their contributions at various times, and I am glad to do so again.

I noted that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition ran into some inconsistency in the next part where he said: "Why not assist the unemployed under this Bill?" I will come back to that question later. The inconsistency to which I referred is of this order: He was critical of the cost of public welfare, or at least of relief and other forms of benefits, but at the same time he was critical of the low rates of relief.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't think I was critical of the costs—I mentioned the costs.

DR. POTTLE: I know that members on the other side have been critical of the cost. I raise the point now, if you took the whole stand of the Opposition, they run into the same kind of inconsistency that one is likely to run into in these matters. That is to say we like to keep down costs, but when we see a low rate we like to step it up. Now we cannot have it both ways, and I am making no great defence for present relief rates. They have been stepped up considerably, but as I say, it is a question of how much we can afford. And the Premier has read figures to show how deeply we have already involved ourselves in welfare expenditure, which I am bound to say is money well invested—twenty-six and a half million dollars read out and another five million dollars for this year proposed represents funds as well distributed, I think, across the border as any twenty-six million dollars or any five million dollars, as the case may be, that we may have spent in any public way.

Now to come back to the point of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition; when he asked why not assist the unemployed under this Act. I shall not give any answer to satisfy him I am sure, but was as frank as anyone might be in introducing a Bill of this kind yesterday when I spoke, and I add this now: This Bill merely integrates what we already have. This Bill sets up allowances which we think will go on for sometime, maybe for three or six months before they are reviewed. You cannot put a recipient on a list one day, or five thousand of them, and take him off the next. Once they go on there is a tendency for them to stay on until some reviewable time, some time of reckoning comes. The regulations will provide for the intervals at which these social assistance grants will be reviewed. That is a big administrative job. In other words the people who will come under this Bill are chronic, particularly those who have some special needs and who will go on indefinitely for some time, maybe three, four, five or six months. In other words their condition, as far as we can see for medical advice or otherwise will continue. Now you cannot apply that to relief. A man may be unemployed today because he is unemployed and may get a job tomorrow. In other words, unemployed people are, shall we say, incapacitated for a short period. We have to deal with them in a somewhat different fashion. Now that is one reason it is not included here. Whether it is the best reason or the reason that will satisfy the Honourable Leader of the Opposition—what I mean to say is that there are difficulties, and that is one of them. Ultimately and from the point of view of basic social need with a man genuinely out of work we try every means to get him work. I think it is the responsibility of the state to see it is provided and the statutes of Newfoundland do in fact say so by law. It is the only state in Canada and probably the only state in the western world that by legislation commits itself to help the unemployed. It is entered in our Health and Welfare Statutes of 1931 and we have fulfilled the bond, so they are being assisted. But the special problems that they represent require that our unemployment problems be treated in a slightly different way. There is, and I shall be quite frank again, probably another reason. I have never discussed this fully with the Government, but I think I can afford to say that now because the Government knows our point of view on this—as long as we keep the unemployed outside of a scheme like this, (I am not saying we shall) but we may have a better chance of going up to the Federal Government with these people as a special problem, but if they were classed with five or six thousand families of this kind, or more, then it would be more difficult to untangle them again. But as long as they remain separate we can always say to the Federal Government that they are our special problem and we are trying to deal with it in a special way. But once we put it on the Statute that requires us to put them under payments month by month by month then we are not in the same position, shall we say, to deal with them as a special problem. Now I have spoken quite frankly because the House would expect me to deal frankly with it in this matter, because it is a basic Newfoundland issue.

There is just one other point, Sir, I wish to make before I close, and that is with regard to the use of the word “dole”: We used to speak of the insane asylum and the lunatic asylum and we used to speak of the poorhouse. These names are going out and not because it is just a fad. We now speak of the Mental Hospital or Hospital for Mental and Nervous Diseases and not the lunatic asylum, not because it sounds better but because we have learned better. When people were sent to the Mental Hospital, or asylum as it was called years ago, they were regarded as expendable, they were done for. Today I suppose the turnover is anywhere from seventy to ninety per cent going back to the community again. In the same way with dole, the tendency has been to look upon this matter of relief—dole it out—do it reluctantly—you don't want to have to do it, but have to face the sorry business sometime sooner or later—you do it with your eyes closed—don't want to see the sorry thing, but there it is—now, Sir, I plead that in our more civilized thinking today, we should think of this matter not as a "dole" but as a right. Because we live together this way we create problems for one another, and by living this way there are human problems. Unemployment is a human problem just as war is a human problem. Therefore it must be solved in humane ways. I hope that we might take possibly a little more enlightened and a little more modern, in the best sense, attitude towards this question of relief. It is not a dole just reluctantly, niggardly measured out. It is rather society's absolute obligation to see to it that people who are in need, for whatever reason, may exist, and that we do our best within our resources to meet that need.

The last thing I have to say, Sir, is to recall that the principle of this Bill is to integrate the present Mothers' Allowances Act and the Dependents' Allowances Act. It represents a stage of progress whereby we hope to render a more effective service to certain needy classes of our people.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of the Bill.

On motion Bill read a second time, ordered referred to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.

Second reading of Bill "An Act Respecting the Franchise of Electors and the Election of Members to the House of Assembly":

HON. MYLES P. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move the second reading of this Bill, and perhaps in doing so I might not be out of place in making a few observations as to the Act which it supersedes, the Election Act of 1913, which is completely repealed by the last clause of this Bill. So, Sir, as it will be seen from this, it is not too much to say that our old Election Act of 1913 has become a little outdated, and the purpose of this new measure is, as far as we can, having regard for our peculiar geographic and climatic conditions, to incorporate the experiences that other provinces have gained having to do with elections, and to bring these into our Act to make our Election Act more in keeping with modern times, and to reap the benefits of what improvements could be observed from the experiences of the other provinces.
That, Sir, is the purpose of bringing in this Bill, to bring our old 1913 Election Act up to date as far as it is possible.

Now the principle of the Bill is the same as the principle of every Balloting Act, that is every modern Balloting Act at least, to give universal suffrage to every resident of the province. The principle of the Bill, I suppose, could be stated in Clause 3 of the Bill itself. Every man and woman is qualified to vote who is the full age of 21 years, is a Canadian citizen or other British subject. Has been ordinarily resident in the province for twelve months immediately preceding the date of the issue of the writ of election, and was ordinarily resident in the electoral district at the date of the issue of the writ of election. That, I say, Sir, could be the principle of the Bill, coupled with the secret ballot, with of course the object to protect voters from intimidation. But, Sir, I think myself, or I would anticipate that most of the discussion on this Bill would come in the Committee of the Whole stage because, as I say, the principle of the Bill is almost outlined in Clause 3 of the Bill itself. All the subsequent clauses, and there are up to 120, are procedure, and set out how the main object of the Bill will be accomplished. But perhaps, Sir, it might not be out of place and perhaps aid the passage of the Bill through Committee if I go through the headings of the Bill in question, even though, as I say, they do not affect the principle, and are matters of procedure rather than principle.

Clauses 5 to 30 in this Bill have to do entirely with the preparation, revision and compilation of lists of electors. Here, Sir, we have followed the system which has been in vogue up to the present day, and the reason that is so is because that is the system which lends itself best to our peculiar geographic conditions. The fact that Labrador returns a member to the House has given rise to a great many problems. In the main they are geographical problems such as I believe no other province of Canada has to face. I have been told, Sir, that there are actually only about two months of the year when proper provisions can be made for elections in Labrador. I happen to know myself of a friend of mine who was going around with ballot boxes and election material during one of the Federal Elections. He was a flying officer during the war and had something like two thousand operational hours. He told me he was actually in greater peril of his life in those two months trying to distribute material than he was during his operational period overseas. The perils of fog there, ice, difficulty of landing and all that sort of thing makes it very difficult, and because of all these considerations we have gone back to our own system, which has been in vogue ever since the ballot boxes, of compiling the lists of electors. That is shown here under clause 5. "Subject to Section 30, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall before an election is commenced cause lists of electors for the province to be prepared, revised and compiled in accordance with this Act. That list which is taken in accordance with the Act is valid for one year afterwards." Under the Federal system, as honourable members will know, once an election writ is issued, a certain number of days are declared and an election list is prepared and has to be taken within the period, and a certain day is set after which no names can be put on the list. But under this system the list is compiled and is revised and taken up and is valid a year afterwards in order to satisfy the things which go back to the old system of the sub-list where a man who comes in and can give proof of bona fide residence and wishing to vote can of course do so, and his name is put on a special voters list. Clauses 5 through 30, Sir, are taken up with procedures in taking this list. The compiling officers are appointed or designated by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to supervise the thing on a province-wide scale. In all cases this compiling officer afterwards becomes the Chief Electoral Officer.

In Clause 6, Sir, you will see another improvement—I suggest it is an improvement—that is that polling divisions are not to contain more than two hundred and fifty electors. That comes from a matter of practical experience. We have been informed that is as many voters as a deputy returning officer and polling booth can competently handle. Another innovation is the division into urban balloting divisions and rural polling divisions. That is purely a matter of experience, I think. Each balloting booth is designated by number. If houses are numbered in the vicinity it is to apply to sections of population over five thousand, and electors are designated numerically and a number assigned to them, and geographically, i.e. by their position. In the rural polling divisions, electors are designated alphabetically and by occupation. The compiling officer appoints revising justices who in turn appoint enumerators. These enumerators prepare the list of electors by making a house to house visitation, which is also an innovation, and the lists the enumerators make are displayed in the polling divisions under Clause 11, and the final lists are sent in to the reviewing officer who makes such amendments as he considers necessary. Clauses 18 to 30 have to do mostly with courts of revision which go around holding courts of revision in order to insure that every elector is included on the list of electors. So, Sir, as I say, from Clause 5 to Clause 30 the clauses deal absolutely and entirely with compilation and revision of lists of electors.

The next main body of the Bill, Sir, deals with the procedure under which an election is set in motion. As you can see under Clause 1 an election is commenced by a proclamation of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council where he issues a writ of election and fixes the date under which the writ will be issued. This is the same procedure as in our Act of 1913. Of course in every general election the same polling day is set for every district.

Sub-clause 4 of Clause 31 might be found interesting. It is a new departure and makes special provision for the electoral districts of St. Barbe and White Bay and Labrador, due again entirely to climatic conditions. We have had, as the House knows, during one election already to defer the election. No procedure, I think, was set up for that. This clarifies the position that in either the district of St. Barbe, White Bay or Labrador an election may be deferred. But when an election is deferred it shall be held on a date not later than twelve months from the date on which the election was deferred. That clarification is something, I think, which our geography demands.

Clause 32 provides for the Chief Electoral Officer, who of course has general supervision of elections on a province-wide scale, and in the following clauses provision is made for defining the powers of the Electoral Officer and for the appointment of his staff. Provisions are made for the appointment of returning officers under Clause 36. There is nothing particularly unusual about that, and the following three clauses have to do with purely routine matters.

Clause 41 deals with the qualifications of candidates, and is very simple.
A candidate has to be a person who is qualified as an elector in an elec­ torial district; has resided in Newfoundland for a period of twelve months; and is not in any way disqualified by this or any other Act for election to or from sitting in the House of Assembly. That is to be read in connection with Clause 3 which sets out qualifications of electors.

Clauses 42, 43 and 44 have to do with the nomination of a candidate; procedure at nominations. The only point there I would like to draw attention of the House to is the fact that it is not necessary for a candidate to appear in person on nomination day, and if he fulfils the necessary formalities he may have his nomination anytime after the writ of election is issued.

Clause No. 46 deals with the withdrawal of candidates, and is not unusual.

Clause No. 47 deals with the death of a candidate, and differs from the 1913 Act. Under the 1913 Act if a candidate died after nomination day the other candidate was elected automatically by acclamation. Now provisions are made under the sub-clause in this new section so that the new nominations shall take place not more than thirty days and not less than twenty days after the death of a candidate.

Clause 48 deals with acclamations.
The honourable member for St. John's
West is quite familiar with that procedure. Granting of a poll is provided for under Clause 49.

Clause 51 has to do with the polling stations. It is a purely routine provision except that it might be interesting to call attention to sub­ clause 5 which says: "The poll shall be opened at eight o'clock in the forenoon and kept open until the hour of eight o'clock in the evening of the same day. That applies generally all over the island. Under the new Act all votes will be counted in the booth rooms.

Clause 52 has to do with establishing polling stations outside the electoral districts. That is a well-known practice here in Newfoundland where in the Fall of the year a great number of people from other districts are in St. John's and polling stations were set up where people could vote outside their own district.

MR. BROWNE : I wonder if I could ask the Minister how often that is carried out? It is not a well-known practice?

MR. MURRAY: It is an established practice. I do know myself I have seen booths in the Institute and I have also known it to happen in Bell Island where people were working there from Harbour Main and Harbour Grace.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I could assist the Minister: In every general election from 1952 back, or back at least fifty years it has been done without a single exception on the occasion of every general election, but not in every district.
MR. MURRAY: There is nothing unusual, Sir, about Clauses 53 and 54 and merely provides for the appointment of deputy returning officers and poll clerks and other election officers.

Clause 56 covers persons not qualified to act as election officers. This is for obvious reasons listed in the Bill. Clause 57 is routine and deals with construction of ballot boxes. But in Clause 58 I see something a little new. Here we make provisions for ballot papers and their form. As I have said, under the new Act the biggest departure we have made from the old Act is in the counting of ballots in the booth rooms. The reason for this will be obvious, I think. Everyone knows that, for instance in the United States when there is an election the count is received here by midnight. Here it takes a week to count. If the American votes were counted at the same rate it would take almost a century to get the returns. So that we think, Sir, to expedite the counting, it should be done in the booths, as is done under the Federal system. Of course that being so extra precautions have to be taken, and some of these precautions have to do with the printing and composition of the ballot paper and the numbering. Each ballot paper shall have a counterfoil and a stub, which is a change from the old system which merely provided for the counterfoil and single ballot. The form of the new proposed ballot can be seen in Form 30 of the Schedule, which is identically the same as that provided under the Federal system.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I might adjourn the debate. I am about halfway through the clauses.

On motion debate adjourned until tomorrow.
Notice of Motion
None.

Notice of Questions
(103) MR. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives to lay on the table of the House the following information:
1. What was the total cost of converting for Danish seining the schooner "Kean Bros"?
2. Did this vessel operate as a Danish Seiner and for what period, and what was the cost of such operation?
3. Is the "Kean Bros." now in operation and if not why not?
4. Are the two converted long liners, the "Hubert G. Smith" and the Tucker schooner now operating as long liners, and what was the total cost of conversion and operation of these two vessels to date?

Answers to Questions
Question No. 97: Answer being prepared.

Orders of the Day
Second reading of Bill, "An Act Respecting the Franchise of Electors and the Election of Members to the House of Assembly": (Adjourned Debate).

HON. M. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): Mr. Speaker when the debate was adjourned yesterday I was trying to give a synopsis of the highlights of this Bill, and I believe I got as far as Clause 58. I was then saying, Sir, that in view of the fact that the most radical departure from the old Act as compared with this one is the counting of the ballots in the booths therefore Clauses 58 and 59 become important clauses. Under the old system, Sir, all ballots were sent in, as members will be aware, from central stations by the returning officer and the ballots then were only handled and counted by the returning officer. Under the new system which this bill proposes to set up, ballots of course are counted in the booths themselves and they are subject to scrutiny not alone by the deputy returning officer and poll clerk but also they are scrutinized both as to back and front by the agents of each candidate in the booths, and consequently much greater precautions have to be taken with the new form of ballot than with the old. Under the Federal system once a ballot goes into the ballot box it is lost forever to scrutiny and no one thereafter can ever tell how that person voted once the ballot is dropped in the box. That is the reason, Sir, for the over-elaborate precautions, I may say, of the formation of the new ballot, the type of paper is laid down by statute, the number of the counterfoil and the name of the printer, and great detail is gone into, as I say, as to the set-up of the ballot for this particular reason.

Clause 59, Sir, is a penalty clause which sets up penalties for anyone who tries to interfere illegally with the ballots themselves, and each one of these provisions arises as a result of previous experience, and they are designed, Sir, to prevent an illegal practice known in earlier years as the "Tasmania Dodge." This was a method whereby a conspirer who had hired voters to vote for his candidate could insure he was getting a return for his money.
MR. W. J. BROWNE: Has anyone tried that here?

MR. MURRAY: Perish the thought, Sir, that any thing like that could happen here. Mr. Speaker, in the light of these few observations I think clauses 58 and 59 may perhaps take on new meaning. Clause 60 is merely administrative and has to do with the supplying of election material to the deputy returning officer, and there is nothing there worthy of comment. Clause 61 is also administrative designating who may be present at the poll. In view of the fact that the votes are to be counted in the booth room this clause becomes of some considerable importance, and it is established that each candidate may have one agent acting for him while the poll is being taken on polling day, and also to be present at the count. Then of course, under sub-clause 3, an agent may be appointed, a written authority given to the returning officer. Under sub-clause 4 a deputy-returning officer, a poll clerk or agent may vote at the polling station where he is actually engaged during polling day. Under the old Act they must all vote in their own polling booths.

Then Clause 64 may be of interest.

"(1) Before the opening of the poll, on polling day, the deputy returning officer shall, at the polling station and in full view of the candidate or their agents, affix uniformly his initial in the space provided for that purpose on the back of every ballot paper supplied to him by the returning officer, and the initials of the deputy returning officer shall be affixed with a blacklead pencil but the ballot papers shall not then be detached from the books in which such ballot papers have been bound or stitched."

"Uniformly," Sir, and "blacklead" are the words of importance there. It is actually laid down that they must be initialled uniformly in blacklead, rather than in ink, to assure secrecy.

Under Clause 65, I don't think there is anything noteworthy there except under sub-clause 4 which defines with more preciseness the rule as to residence obtaining in the old Act of 1913. The rules here are laid down under sub-clause 4 with some considerable preciseness. Sub-clause 5 covers where polling stations are set up outside the electoral district, and of course it offers provision that only electors from particular districts may vote there and any plural voting is made an offence.

I don't think there is anything worth discussing under Clauses 66 and 67. That can be discussed in Committee of the Whole. Clause 68 has to do with secrecy, provisions which, I would say, are common to every ballot Act, and merely provide that deputies, poll clerks and any persons in the polling booths shall be bound to secrecy. Under Clause 69 we find the manner of voting, and these are routine provisions. Sub-clause 5 of Clause 69 makes provisions for second voters, that is where a voter having the same name as some other voter who voted previously, so common in our outports, may be entitled to vote on taking an oath. Sub-clause 8 makes provision for a blind voter, who may be accompanied by his wife or a friend who may be permitted to go into the booth with him, and record his vote for him. Sub-clause 12 is one that has arisen in the light of experience:

"If at the hour of the closing of the poll there are electors in the polling station who are qualified to vote and have not been able to do so since their arrival at the polling station, the poll shall be kept open a sufficient time to enable them to vote but no one not actually present on or inside the outer door of the polling station at the hour of closing shall be allowed to vote even if the poll is still open when he arrives. In several places particularly here in St. John's this was a subject of controversy. Sub-clause 13 is also another point of interest, that is to establish polling booths in hospitals and sanitoria and during the taking of the poll the ballot boxes may be taken from place to place, which is a provision with which every one should fall in line.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, while on that subject I wonder if there are any qualifications of electors in a sanitorium, say.

MR. MURRAY: Yes. They retain the right to vote for their own district. Suppose a patient from a hospital from Ferryland is in the Sanitorium on election day, a polling booth can be set up there and the patient may vote as a resident of Ferryland District.

MR. BROWNE: There is more to it than that. We will go into it in committee.

MR. MURRAY: Clause 70 merely defines the duties of a poll clerk, and is purely routine. Clause 71 covers time to employees for voting. That means that the booths close at 8:00 o'clock, and a person normally gets off at 6:00 o'clock, but may be allowed off at 5:00 so that he can have three consecutive hours for voting. There are other provisions whereby the employer may stagger the time at which employees may vote. I don't think this clause will be controversial at all.

Clauses 72 and 73 have to do with peace and good order at elections and the ordinary provisions which, I think, every election Act contains.

Clause 73 (3) forbids the use of loud speakers, bunting, ensigns, banners, standard or set of colours or any other flag to any person with intent that it shall be carried, worn or used on automobiles trucks or other vehicles, as political propaganda on the day immediately preceding polling at an election, or before the closing of the polls on polling day."

I don't know, Sir, but future legislation may cut out the use of powder on election day and elections may become very pale; but these provisions are taken from the English Act, and the English are inclined to take their pleasures rather sadly.

Counting and reporting the vote, Sir, is one of the most outstanding features of this Bill, and the provisions made for the counting of the votes in the booth room and under this Clause 74 is the clause under which it is actually set up. You will see in sub-clause (f) Sir, that the deputy returning officer, having gone through a certain routine will then open a ballot box and empty the contents thereof on a table and count the number of votes cast for each candidate on one of the tally sheets supplied, giving full opportunity to those present to examine each ballot paper, and the poll clerk and at least three witnesses shall each be supplied with a tally sheet upon which he may keep his own score as each vote is called out by the deputy returning officer. That is the manner in which the vote is recorded in the booth.
Sub-clause 2 (d), Sir, if that clause had been in the old 1913 Act I might have looked ten years younger at the present time, and have more hair on my head. It has to do with the rejection of ballots and says: A ballot shall be rejected—upon which there is any writing or mark by which the elector could be identified, but no ballot shall be rejected on account of any such writing, number or mark placed thereon by the deputy returning officer. That is a provision straight out of the Federal Act.

Sub-clause (3) deals with counterfoils not detached from ballots and sub-clause (4) the omission of the deputy returning officer to affix his initials. I may say each of these have been covered by cases which came before the Court, and the ruling was established by cases before the Court and we are now giving it statutory form.

Mr. Speaker, I don’t think there is anything else worthy of comment until we come to sub-clause 12 which gives the procedure during the actual count in the booth room: “A statement of the count from time to time during the counting of the votes as prescribed by the chief electoral officer where it is possible to do so and the chief electoral officer so directs; and a preliminary statement of the poll as soon as available after the votes have been counted. And the returning officer shall by any such method of communication and as soon as possible after they are received forward all such statements received by him to the chief electoral officer.

The results are telephoned from the various booths, and then of course, all the election documents and statements of the poll are put in bolted boxes and mailed in to the returning officer who in turn, and in due course, makes the actual final return, under Sub-clause (2) of Clause 75:

“After all the ballot boxes have been received, the returning officer at the place, day and hour fixed in the Public Notice posted up in accordance with Section 58 of the official addition of the votes, and in the presence of the election clerk and of the candidates or their agents who are present, shall open the ballot boxes, and from the official statements of the poll therein contained, add together the number of votes given for each candidate.” The returning officer, of course, has previously advised by telephone or telegraphic communications the returns from the various booths.

I don’t think Sir, there is anything I need comment on under Clause 76. Even though the country at large is fully aware of the result of an election by telephone or telegraph days before the final return is made, on the 12th day afterwards the returning officer makes his official return. It is left over for twelve days afterwards in order to give people opportunity to apply for a recount. You will see under Clause 80: Ten days afterwards provision is made for a recount. Clauses 78 and 90 have to do with recounts and is completely procedural, and lays down recount procedure and the procedure of the Judge.

The next clauses on which I should comment are Clause 97 and 98: Clause 98 says: “The Chief electoral officer shall deliver to the Deputy Minister of Provincial Affairs all of the documents transmitted to him by returning officers in accordance with Section 78, and Clause 97 puts a limitation on actions, which must be brought up within one year after the course of action arises.

Clause 98 has to do with the custody of the ballot boxes and election documents within one year after the elections, after which period, of course, they are burned. Under this section the Deputy Minister of Provincial Affairs is set up as the responsible individual, whereas formerly it was the Minister. Perhaps that is to take it altogether away from the area of politics. Clause 99 has to do merely with the fees of election officials, which may be set from time to time by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I think Clause 100 is self-explanatory. Executory Contracts Void. The next sections from 101 to 106 have to do with offenses under the Act, bribery, treating undue influence etc. They are identical with such provisions in the Act of 1913 and are common to all Election Acts that I have any knowledge of.

Clauses 107 and 108 give power to the Deputy Returning Officer to administer oaths where necessary, and 108 is contained in every election Act and is called a safeguard clause which says: An election shall not be declared invalid by reason of any irregularity on the part of the returning officer, or any irregularity in any of the proceedings preliminary to the poll; lack of qualification in an election officer; lack of qualification in any person signing a nomination paper received by the returning officer under this Act; a failure to hold a poll at any place appointed for holding a poll; non-compliance with the provisions of this Act as to the taking of the poll or the counting of the votes or as to the limitations of time; failure to open or close a poll on the hour prescribed in this Act; or any mistake in the use of the forms contained in the Schedule, if it is shown to the satisfaction of the tribunal having cognizance of the question that the election was conducted in accordance with the principles laid down in this Act and that such irregularity, failure, non-compliance or mistake did not materially affect the result of the election.

Clause 115 will be of interest to all members of the House, I think, Mr. Speaker, as it has to do with the hiring of conveyances on polling day. It says here: Every candidate who himself or by any other person on his behalf and every other person who hires or promises to pay or pays for a conveyance to carry a voter to or near or from or on the way to or from a polling place, or pays the travelling or other expenses of a voter in going to or returning from a polling place, and every person who for valuable consideration provides or furnishes a conveyance knowing that it is to be used to carry a voter other than the hirer, to or near or from or on the way to or from a polling place is guilty of a corrupt practice. Then (2) for the purposes of this section, "conveyance" includes an automobile, a horse, team, carriage, cab, vehicle, boat or vessel.

I think that is a measure which most members or candidates in a campaign will be in fear of. I remember the Premier saying last year, that especially since Confederation the number of vehicles have decreased from twenty per person to five per person. Where there was only one vehicle at one time per twenty persons now there is one for every five persons. So on polling day it seems, Sir, that there are five hired for every one person by the unfortunate candidate.
The next clause I would comment on is Clause 119. This is permissive and a candidate may or may not appoint an agent to handle his bills and expenditures. Under the Federal Act, I think it is compulsory. Here a candidate may or may not, or he may be his own agent if he wishes. Clauses 120 to 126 have to do with controverted elections and these too are merely procedural, and show how actions may be set up by way of petition and such petition tried by the Judge of the Supreme Court.

Advance polls are a new provision in this Province: The Lieutenant Governor in Council may order that an advance poll shall be held in any election for the purpose of receiving the votes of members of the Armed Forces of Canada, fishermen, sailors, persons employed on a railway, vessel, airplane or other means of transportation, and travellers, whose employment is such as to necessitate their absence from time to time from their ordinary place or residence, or who have reasons to believe that they will be absent upon the day fixed for polling at such election, and the Lieutenant Governor in Council may fix the number of advanced polls to be held in any electoral district, the places at and, subject to this section, the days upon and the hours during which the advance polls shall be held, and where an advance poll is so ordered to be held, it shall be held in accordance with this section.

(2) Advance polls may be held on any or all of the seven working days immediately preceding the ordinary polling day.

That was in the Act under which the referendum was held, but it was not in our old Act of 1913. It is again permissive and says it may or may not be put into use by the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Clauses 158 down to Clause 165 are merely miscellaneous provisions having mostly to do with the powers of the chief electoral officer. And of course the final section in the Act repeals the old Act of 1913 and the List of Electors Act, 1958.

Mr. Speaker, I have tried to give the House a synopsis of the Bill, to give its highlights. I know the Bill itself will be of interest to every member of the House, and of course every member will want to know these measures as thoroughly as possible. It is a Bill, Sir, that has taken a great deal of time and thought in its drafting, and a real endeavour is being made now, aided by the wealth of experience obtained by other provinces as well as in the national field, and we have endeavoured, Sir, to incorporate the best we have found in all the various Acts, having regard to our own peculiar geographic and climatic conditions. I do not think there is much controversial matter in the Bill, it is merely to insure secrecy, good order and decorum at elections. These, I would say, are the main principles of the Bill. I have no doubt the House will want to discuss it thoroughly, and I would suggest, as the matter of principle is not at stake, the best place to discuss it would be in the Committee of the Whole stage.

I have much pleasure, Sir, in moving second reading of this Bill.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the last observation of the honourable Minister that there is no occasion to make any prolonged address on this motion. I believe the introduction of this measure gives the House an opportunity to speak generally on the whole business of elections of members to the House of Assembly, because that is what the Bill is.

Now, Sir, before I deal with a few remarks I have to make, I would like to refer to some observations made by the Minister who just sat down. He did not tell us about the things that were dropped from the old Act of 1913. He did not tell us that the residents in the Home for the Aged and Infirm are now given power to vote again. And he did not tell us of certain changes to which I will refer later. It seems to me that this Bill, or any Bill of this kind, should have been introduced in the first session after 1949, and here we are at the end of May 1954, and this Government of the Premier has been in office since April 1949.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: The honourable gentleman has committed, I suggest, an atrocious breach of good manners in referring to this Government as the "Premier's Government." This is the Premier's Administration of the Queen's Government, but this is not the Premier's Government. It is the Queen's Government.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I must thank the honourable and learned gentleman for correcting me on a very important point that I was dealing with. I am sure glad to know this is Her Majesty's Government. I am sure she should be proud of it if she could be here and see the things that go on.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, the honourable and learned gentleman is now compounding a most atrocious offense against Her Majesty the Queen in an expression of Her Majesty's Opinion of Her Majesty's Government—a highly offensive, particularly offensive comment to people of any patriotic sentiment, people who hold great reverence for the person of the Queen.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to have mentioned the name of Her Majesty at the same time as I mentioned the name of the Government.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I ask the honourable gentleman to take that back. If he is to speak I ask that he observe the rules of this House thoroughly or not utter one word—let him take it back before he proceeds.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. BROWNE: I have nothing to apologize for.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I demand—

MR. SPEAKER: If both honourable gentlemen continue the argument the Chair is in a difficult position and cannot rule on any remark. The honourable member ought not to have made that remark. That is, the remark of the honourable gentleman in which he said; he was sorry for mentioning Her Majesty's name in connection with the Government of this province.

MR. SMALLWOOD: For that, Mr. Speaker—

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I don't choose to give any apology. I refuse to give any apology.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I move in that case that the honourable member be expelled from the House until he does offer an apology.

MR. SPEAKER: I cannot accept that motion. The honourable member ought not to have made the reference he did make to Her Majesty in a debate and he ought not to have made the remark he did about Her Majesty and Her Majesty’s Government in this province. I must uphold that point.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Apologize!

MR. BROWNE: I refuse to apologize.

MR. SPEAKER: Order. I am only concerned with the reference to Her Majesty. Anything else that has been said is of no importance—I must insist on that.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, if by mentioning the Name of Her Majesty this afternoon I was out of order I regret that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Apologize—never mind regretting it—

MR. HOLLETT: Shut up.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Apologize!

MR. BROWNE: I will have to say something to the Premier that he might want me to apologize for—but I regret, if it was out of order, having mentioned the Name of Her Majesty.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not satisfactory. Mr. Speaker, the honourable gentleman made an offensive reference by linking the name of Her Majesty to this Government in a way offensive to both.

MR. SPEAKER: If the honourable the Premier will allow! The Chair has ears and can hear without prejudice—please do not confuse the issue any more. Let us begin again: I said, and I say to the honourable member—forgetting anything else—any reference made to Her Majesty in debate is sadly out of order. That is point No. 1. Next, the honourable member mentioned Her Majesty’s Name in derogatory connection with the Government of this province to influence debate. That is out of order. The remarks ought not to have been made, and must be withdrawn. There is nothing personal in that.

MR. BROWNE: All right Mr. Speaker, I bow to your ruling.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: He bows to your ruling, but—does the honourable gentleman withdraw his remarks, and retract?

MR. SPEAKER: I assume the remarks are withdrawn.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, has given his ruling, and I must accept his ruling in this matter.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: I am sorry! I am sorry! Suppose the House closes—suppose Your Honour has to leave the Chair. I am sorry, but I am not satisfied. The honourable gentleman has calmly announced that he must accept Your Honour’s ruling. That does not satisfy me—of course he must bow to Your Honour’s ruling. But what I ask is that he retract that statement.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I took it that Your Honour’s ruling was that I should not have mentioned the name of Her Majesty in connection with the Government of this Province—whatever the form necessary to satisfy Your Honour's ruling I fulfill it.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member is again offending—I have no words for that—it is tantamount to saying that the Chair echoes the sentiments expressed by the honourable member. I did not say that, I can have Hansard to bear out my ruling. I said; "the remarks which the honourable member made in connection with Her Majesty and the Government of this Province, the remarks which he made, ought not to have been made and must be withdrawn." That is what I said.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the remarks. I trust that is satisfactory to everybody. Now, Mr. Speaker, I said that this Bill, or a Bill of this kind, should have been introduced five years ago, at the first opportunity, because there was no voter's list taken since 1947, and it was provided in the Terms of Union that the Voter's Lists which were taken in 1947 were to serve until another voter's list had been taken by the Government—but the Government never even took any voter's list since that time. In the meantime there was the election to the National Convention, two referenda, the general election of 1949, the general election of 1951 and two by-elections. The Government in all that time used the same voter's list taken in 1947; and the situation—

MR. MURRAY: Excuse me! Is the honourable member trying to imply that because of that any voter was defranchised in either of the two referendums or in either of the two general elections?

MR. BROWNE: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would say hundreds were defranchised.

MR. CURTIS: I don't think you can prove it.

MR. BROWNE: Just a moment—allow me to develop this. It is really important. There is the same provision in this Bill now before the House that a voter's list be taken under this Bill, and that it be good for five years. I don't know if that was what the honourable member said yesterday—it is not what I understood him to say—so that a voter's list taken under this Bill, prior to another general election is good for another five years. I want to tell my honourable friend that in portions of my district I compared the list of living people, or the list of residents, with the voter's list and I found that fifty per cent had either died or left the district. Now if anybody in this House can tell me it is good enough to have an election with half the names on the list not residents of the settlement in which the voting is taking place, and another goodly portion has become of age to vote since the list had previously been taken, if he thinks that is good enough, I think reasonable people will not agree with that.

MR. MURRAY: Surprises me! Of course the honourable member is well aware all such people actually could vote by having their names put on a supplementary list?

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, in the City of St. John's I know that there were many people unable to vote because of the terrible amount of time which was taken up by clearing voters to put them on such a supplementary list. Two hundred and fifty
I would say was the average, but sometimes there were more than that. The City of St. John's had changed considerably in the intervening time between 1947 and 1951. Considerable people had moved in from different sections. I remember very well in 1952 going into a booth in the Gaiety Theatre and hearing one of the deputy returning officers saying to the voter: Hold up your right hand and answer these questions. That was in the 1952 by-election when my honourable friend was elected. "Where were you living in 1917?" That was the question asked. Now if he had to ask everyone who came in that particular question to find out if he were eligible to vote in that particular booth you can see how time would be occupied, and as a result a great many people were disfranchised. It is true, to my own knowledge, that they were not able to get through the people, as many of them left it rather late before they went to vote. There is a provision in this Bill which stated that if people come to the booths in time, but are in a queue and not able to get into the booths they cannot vote at all if the time has passed. I think the provision in the law previously was that the lists were only good for one year. That is a very much better provision than the one in here today. We should expect this Bill to be an improvement on the 1913 Act, but it certainly is not an improvement in that respect. I don't know if that is an oversight on the Minister's part, but yesterday when he referred to the improvements in this Bill he gave a little historical summary of the development of the election Act, and he stated that it had been static since 1913, or for forty years. He seemed to have forgotten the provision in 1925 whereby women became entitled for the first time to vote. That was introduced by the Monroe Government. In that year women over twenty-five were permitted to vote, and the provision was incorporated in the Terms of Union that women over the age of twenty-one were entitled to vote, although that was over-looked when the revised statutes were presented last year.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, might I just correct my honourable friend, because it possibly was overlooked, because the committee was appointed to consolidate the Newfoundland Statutes, and they might, I agree, have included that.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, I think it would have been proper to do that. Now my honourable friend also referred to the continuing provision of taking sub-lists of voters, and if I understood him correctly, he said that was not in the Federal Act—that is what I understood him to say—it is in the Federal Act for rural divisions. In the rural divisions a person whose name is not on the list of voters can be sworn in in the same manner.

Then another point he referred to was the point of deferred elections. Now the only deferred election that I can remember in this country was the election in Labrador, in the general election of 1951, and there was a provision in the Terms of Union that the election might be deferred there. But I have never heard of an election requiring to be deferred in the District of St. Barbe nor in the District of White Bay, and I see no reason why it should be included here. I think it would be generally admitted that in an election or in a by-election which takes place after a general election the scales are generally weighed in favour of the Government. It would be, I think, certainly unfair, and would not give the best results, if several districts may have the elections deferred. Under the provisions here three elections in three districts may be deferred.

Now I also note some change in the qualifications for electors and in the qualifications for candidates. The Minister says that any one can become a candidate who is over the age of twenty-one years and is a Canadian citizen residing here for twelve months. But it is not a very surprising thing how few people in this country are interested in becoming candidates, and I think we all ought to consider why it is that so few people venture into the political field. If we look around the House today, I think, we will agree that there is one important section of the community of Newfoundland that is not represented here today— I hold no brief for that important section of the community, but I feel that a House of Assembly which is representative of Newfoundland should certainly have in it some representation of trade and industry and commerce. This country is a trading country, we depend upon trade. Before Confederation we were regarded as one of the greatest trading countries of the world, because we depended so much on the sale of goods abroad to purchase so many of our needs. This House is a representative body, and it should represent as far as possible every important section of the community. Of course I am not overlooking my honourable friend, the Minister of Education here who has been held up to us as a very worthy representative of industry—nevertheless, I feel that this House, which is concerned with legislation dealing with the imposition of taxation and the spending of large amounts of money, is the poorer and the loser because it has not got within its walls men with wide business experience.

MR. MURRAY: I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if the honourable gentleman would excuse me a moment? That point he has just raised under clause 41 of the Bill—he is talking about qualifications—is the honourable member going to suggest an amendment that anyone who is a qualified elector may be a candidate, but that ten or twelve merchants shall be nominated?

MR. BROWNE: My honourable friend knows very well I am not suggesting that, if my honourable friend has the intelligence for which I have always given him credit—and I did intend to say at the beginning Sir, but due to the little storm that arose I was unable to praise him for this Bill. I was afraid by so doing I might arouse the enmity of other members of the Government were I to praise him for any part in either preparing or producing this measure here.

I certainly am not speaking of some clause which ought to be included in the Bill whereby any particular section of the community should be represented, but I think it goes a little deeper. Why is it that people of that kind are so few in the House of Assembly today? Why is it there are so few candidates of that kind? Why is it that men with experience who have taken such a prominent part in social activities outside won't come forward and venture themselves to serve in the House of Assembly, which is the highest form of service, apart from the military, that a man can give to his country?
MR. SMALLWOOD: They are too busy becoming millionaires.

MR. BROWNE: My honourable friend, the Premier, is always ready with an answer. I thank him very much for his information, but I would venture to give my opinion now that he has given his: I venture to say that the abuse poured upon the heads of these people, and some of them innocent enough, some of them venerable and mellowed with age, men who have given service to this country in many forms, this abuse deters men of that kind from venturing into the political arena. You need to have not only a thick hide and stout heart, but you need to have, I think, a sense of dedication, to face what members of the House of Assembly, especially in Opposition, have to face today. I have never known of any other House, or of this House of Assembly at any other time in its history, where men had to face the same things they have to face today.

MR. SPEAKER: I must interject that this line of argument is not at all pertinent to the Bill. The honourable member is now criticizing the House.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is dealing with the granting of franchise of electors—

MR. J. R. COURAGE: It is not dealing with abuse when a member comes forward and says we ought not to be here, but somebody else, because we don't have any sense of dedication. Is that what the honourable member meant?

MR. BROWNE: I don't know if that is a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

MR. COURAGE: It is a point of order. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is casting reflections on us over here by the way he is talking.

MR. BROWNE: Not on the honourable gentleman. I will give the honourable member due credit for although he may not know a potato is a plant, I certainly think he is a man who would not give vulgar abuse to anybody.

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order: That last remark was unworthy of the honourable gentleman. In the first place he refers to a debate long since gone and in the second place the honourable gentleman now speaking never at any time said a potato was not a plant. He did doubt at one time that a potato was a hothouse plant, or, I forget what it was now, a nursery plant. I don't think that should have come into this debate at all, and I think the debate is degenerating.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, is the honourable gentleman, who is the deputy-speaker of the House, entitled to get up and give his opinion? He can rise to a point of order but not certainly—

MR. SPEAKER: It was the honourable member who raised the potatoes.

MR. BROWNE: It is degenerating into a debate on agriculture. However, Mr. Speaker, the point is that public life is degenerating. That is my opinion. And I make the statement here today, that I am sure it must be the wish of every one who has the welfare of this country at heart to see men come forward with a sense of dedication to public service to serve in this House of Assembly. This is, as I have said, the highest civic duty that a man can perform in this country. We have now a movement towards the development and the increase of municipal government, and that should be a training ground to bring people into this House of Assembly, where their previous experience would be of great advantage to us.

Will this Bill, or the climate in which this Bill is put into effect, bring about the result that more people will take more interest in public life? Will more people go to the polls? Will more people wish to become candidates? I put these questions because we have had so many elections in recent years that voting has fallen off. There is no doubt about it that voting has fallen off. We had a very high percentage of people voting in the referenda but that number has fallen off and in the recent Federal Election in some places only 33% of the people voted.

MR. MURRAY: Too one-sided.

MR. BROWNE: Well, I don't know whether that is the explanation. But you don't have to go outside the District of St. John's. I know of a place in the District of St. John's West where only forty people out of one hundred and eighty had voted. I met a group of men and asked them how the voting went. They said they did not know. They did not take any interest in it, and they did not vote. I asked them why. They told me they did not think there was anyone good enough to vote for on one side or the other. Only about 25% of the people had voted, and that was a place where it was very easy for them to go to the polls in the Federal Election. It was not due to the fact that many were away, and the fact that the election took place in the summertime made no difference. I was talking to the actual men who did not vote and did not take any interest in the voting at that particular time. I think that is worthwhile giving some thought to at this time. It is the only opportunity we have. It seems to me that while they do not vote in the federal elections there is very much more time given to informing the electors about issues than there is in a provincial election. This Bill makes no change in the time between the issue of the writ for the election and the date of the election, twenty-one days minimum, and I believe that was the time which was taken in 1951. I am not sure about that, but I believe it was a snap election called by the Government, and within 21 days the elections had to be held. Now I submit that is not sufficient time for a candidate on either side to get around and visit all the settlements in the district which he hopes to represent. I think there should be plenty of time given for a candidate to get around and be able to visit as many people as he can, and also to be able to speak to all the people without having to hold three or four meetings a day, as sometimes he has had to do. I think, therefore, the time should be extended, if not to six weeks then certainly to five weeks.

The ordinary members perhaps listening to the Minister might be inclined to think that this Bill is only a matter of form. I think it is more than that. We ought, I think, to appreciate that this question of voting is a great privilege, and it is only within the last hundred years that men and women have received this privilege in all the history of mankind. In the races from which we came, they have only received that privilege on such a wide scale in recent years. In Australia the government thought so much about the matter that they compelled people to vote. There a person is liable to a fine if he does not vote. I believe some other countries have also adopted that principle.

Now, there is another section of the Bill which I think is not so fully set out as in the original Bill, and that is the question of undue influence and corrupt practices. I don't think it is as fully set out as in the original Act. I spent some time last night comparing them, and it seems to me there were some important provisions which were omitted. But I am going to say something now which perhaps might anger some honourable members. I am going to speak about the undue influence, and it is a silent undue influence that is exercised, and I am going to refer to a section of the Act which has been omitted, deliberately as far as I can see, Section 151 of the Old Act—no person in the employee of any Department of the Government or employed on any Public Works shall be eligible to hold office in connection with any election nor to act as a candidate's agent.

Now what have we found? In this country we have found civil servants acting as agents for government candidates both in the Federal and the Provincial elections, and I brought that matter here before, and now I think is the time it should be dealt with, and I think the Premier should take notice of this observation; if he is anxious to see elections conducted fairly he must be just as fair to one side as he is to the other. Now I am going to tell him, and I may have told him before, I was walking along down Duckworth Street one day during the Federal Elections and I met a friend, and went to shake hands with him. He said; all right I have two for you, but I don't want to be seen talking to you, because there are people watching me. Now, why should a friend of mine whom I have known all my life be ashamed to be seen speaking to me in front of a public building? Because he was afraid the employees might report it to the Government, or some influential person in the Government. Why should he have this fear? I don't know.

MR. SPENCER: Neither do I.

MR. BROWNE: Civil servants should take an interest in public affairs as well as anybody else, should be encouraged to talk and go to public meetings for both sides without feeling they were in fear of being penalized. But I think we must draw the line when public servants are allowed to go out and speak in favour of one candidate or another. Of course there is only one he can speak in favour of and that is the government candidate; or to go into the booth—and members in the employee of the Department of Public Works have done that. I will give the names if anybody wants them. They have done that, and employees in other government departments, government employees, have gone into the booths and brought candidates around and went around to the different polls acting as agents of candidates contrary to the law in this country. I think we should have some official pronouncement from the Premier on so important a matter. It is unfair. The government of the country is the government for everybody, and I deserve just as much justice from the government as any one else.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before I conclude I would just like to make one observation, probably not a practical one, but at the same time it seems to me, while we might talk generally about the provisions of this Bill, the Bill itself is a technical Bill, and as the Minister said, it can be best dealt with in committee. I know we have no such committees here in this House but it is really a matter for a small committee to sit around a table and talk about the various clauses and go through it in that fashion, because there is a great deal of detail, and there is a certain amount of detail it is going to be very difficult to examine when the matter is being considered in a larger committee.

I think, Mr. Speaker, I have covered all the points that I have to make on this matter. There is only one further observation I will make before I sit down, and it is this: I think we should recommend that the position which the House of Assembly is going to take in the history of Newfoundland will largely depend upon the fair manner in which the law is carried out. It is not sufficient just to have the mere performance, we must also have the spirit that is embodied in that Act. It is desirable to have as many people as possible to record their votes, and do so without any influence whatsoever being brought to bear upon them. It is desirable that people should hear both sides of the questions, and then, according to their conscience, just the same as if they were on a jury, go into the booth and mark their ballot according to their conscience. Now very often I am sure honourable members on the other side as well as on this side have said that from public platforms but perhaps not altogether thinking or imagining that the voter would vote against them, but I feel that looking at the thing in the long run it is certainly desirable that a person should be defeated rather than that he should take any illegal or corrupt steps to procure his election. All of us, if we are called upon to face an election should try to carry out the spirit which is behind this Act and not merely see that the forms are fulfilled.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I have enjoyed very much listening to my honourable friend, the honourable and learned member for St. John’s West, and I am surprised that in a Bill of this magnitude which has taken so long to prepare, it has taken so long for people otherwise busy to draft, I am surprised that there are so few things in it that he has been able to criticize. Why, Mr. Speaker, I think I could criticize more things in this Bill myself, and I have had some hand in preparing it. He had referred to a clause that has been omitted and said he did not believe that it had been omitted intentionally or by any instructions from any member of the Government. It was done in the due course of preparing the Bill and if it was omitted it was not intentional or on instructions from anyone in the Government. It was omitted it was just through an oversight or because it was not considered necessary. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I will not say it was not omitted, but frankly I cannot find it now.

My honourable friend talked about the list of electors. You would think to hear him talking that hundreds and hundreds of people were disfranchised during the past number of elections because we did not have a new list of electors. Taking, Sir, a list of electors is not at all as important in a provincial election as it is in a Federal Election because we have the supplementary list of voters and we are retaining them. It is true it takes time, but I doubt if my honourable and learned friend can put his hand on one hundred people in the whole country who lost their vote because the returning officer did not have time to ask and register their name and permit them to vote. I might say in these elections the returning officers opened additional booths in such places so as to facilitate the elections, and as I say, I doubt very much he can show in very considerable numbers where people have lost their vote because of their being no list or from the fact that half the people on the list were dead. What harm did that do? Unless my honourable friend can show they voted. Perhaps half of them were dead, but that did not spoil the other half from voting and did not spoil the new electors, those who had become twenty-one since the list was compiled, and thereby lose their franchise. I think if you were to have an election today on the present voters list, provided you had sufficient booths, you would get a fair election.

MR. BROWNE: You could not do it.

MR. CURTIS: I suppose my honourable friend thinks that every time we have an election we should take a list of voters. If he thinks that this Government is going to take a list of electors every time there is to be an election he has got another think coming, and he will have to wait until he gets on this side of the House, because it is not our intention to waste public money by having lists of electors taken every time an election comes up. How many lists of electors would we have had in St. John’s West since 1949? We had two provincial elections and three by-elections. Why we would be doing nothing else in St. John’s West but taking lists of electors. If my honourable friend thinks a list of electors a year old is out of date, I think, he is exaggerating. What happens is you have provisions for a revised list and that fills up your vacancies, and that gives you an opportunity to take in those who have moved into the district and those who became twenty-one since the last election. Surely, he is not serious in suggesting that we should have a new list of electors every time there is an election.

MR. BROWNE: That is the law.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, that may have been the law, as my honourable friend says, but every government every particular time there was an election, passed a special Act saying: that for the purpose of the election being held this year the old election list shall be valid. My honourable friend probably passed an Act like that himself during the Monroe Government when a list of electors was used that was invalid in Port de Grave and also kept the booths open until 8:00 o’clock in the night although the Act said they had to be closed at four o’clock. They had to come back after the election and pass a special Act validating the election because it used a list not allowed and kept the booths open longer than they were supposed to be open. That was all right. That was Toryism. That was bringing one of the merchants into the House. That was all right.

I don’t suggest this Bill before the House will bring forward one more voter than those who voted before this. It is simply an attempt to bring our election Act up to date. It comprises all the good features of our old election Act. Some of it is taken from the Federal Act and some of it is new and some features are from other provincial Acts. It is a good Act and I think it is a sensible Act. I commend it to the House. It will not get one more voter, as I said, and it will not get the Water Street merchants to run, as my honourable colleague says, those who are selling waffle irons are not going to leave that and go looking for votes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They can do it but won't.

MR. CURTIS: I can remember the "City Club Government." They could get a government all right, an executive, but could not get one of them to go to the country.

MR. BROWNE: I was never a member of the City Club. Were you?

MR. CURTIS: No, I was not. My colleague called them lounge lizards. But Mr. Speaker, this Bill will not bring merchants from Water Street into the House. If I thought it would I would not vote for it. They got in the House in the old days, sure. They sat over opposite where they got a little old age pension of two hundred a year, which was more than the old age pensioners got in these days, and were just able to block anything that did not suit them. They are welcome to come. They are welcome to come on this side of the House. And remember those of us on this side of the House get just as much abuse as those on the other side. If my honourable friend had been here during the past four years and heard what we had to hear on this side of the House he would not envy us the position. The predecessor of the present Honourable Leader of the Opposition—what he did not say about us individually and collectively both inside and outside the House? We had to put up with it and a lot more than the honourable members on the other side had to put up with this year.

MR. HOLLETT: We don't do that now.

MR. CURTIS: Perhaps they have lost their pep—but they are beginning to get it back. Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend suggested this will not get more votes. It will not. It is not to compel electors to vote, I admit that. I don't know if the honourable gentleman would like to write into this Bill a clause saying that any man who does not exercise his franchise should go to jail. He would not. I may say this; the Government will be happy to consider any reasonable amendments to this Bill.

My honourable friend says that the twenty-one days should be increased. Twenty-one days is enough. It was enough in the 1913 Act, enough in 1919, 1923 and 1924. It was enough until now, and yet, although everything else has speeded up, although we have—

MR. BROWNE: May I point out to my honourable friend that was a minimum provision, as he knows, and was not used in that way except, as far as I know, in 1951.

MR. CURTIS: I am not prepared, Sir, to go back and count up the days between the nominations and the polls in the past. But I will say that the Act called for twenty-one days. It is a minimum and we may grant more, but surely in these days of speed when we have planes, when we have speedier communications we are not going to extend the time—what next?
My honourable friend said he had difficulty because some of his best friends were afraid to speak to him during the campaign. Those friends must have had a guilty conscience, because there has been no government since I have heard of politics, and that memory goes back forty-five or fifty years, there has been no government since my day that treated its opponents who were civil servants with such consideration as this Government has treated them. We have not fired one man since we were elected because of his political views, and some of them had many nasty ones. We have not fired one of them. Some of them who knew they were Tories, knew they were not fit to stay in their jobs, came to the Premier asking that they not be fired, because they knew they should have been fired.

MR. BROWNE: What about the men working now for your party in elections?

MR. CURTIS: They have not been fired either. We give both a free hand. We fire nobody. We came back and found men opposing us in our own offices, and we have not used the axe on one of them, but my honourable friend remembers when his government came in they fired five or six civil servants and appointed other fellows.

MR. BROWNE: I must say I don't recall that.

MR. CURTIS: Perhaps my honourable friend remembers Halfyard—they fired five or six one year.

MR. BROWNE: Previous governments had done the same thing.

MR. CURTIS: This Government has not. This Government has tried to be honest and fair with the civil servants and have not penalized one that I know of because of politics.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And we are the first such Government in Newfoundland's history.

MR. CURTIS: Now, Sir, there is nothing else that my honourable friend said to which I need to reply, and if he has I have forgotten it, and he will perhaps refer to it in the committee stage. All I can say is that I think this Bill before us is a good Bill, a fair Bill based largely on our present Act which has worked for the last fifty years. I have great satisfaction in supporting this Bill.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say three or four words on this Bill.

MR. SPEAKER: May I suggest first, if the honourable member is going to make a somewhat lengthy speech I 1 1

MR. SMALLWOOD: I won't speak more than a few minutes. I should like first of all to express a word of commendation to Mr. Short, the Deputy Minister of Economic Development, who is responsible in the first instance in drafting the Bill that is now before us. Mr. Short has been the Chief Electoral Officer in connection with the election of members to the National Convention. He was then the Chief Electoral Officer in each of the two referenda that took place in Newfoundland. He was the Chief Electoral Officer or whatever is the title under the 1913 Act for the provincial general election and he was the same in the second provincial election. He, therefore, has had more experience with conducting the official side of elections in Newfoundland than any other man in Newfoundland.
For that reason I invited him to make the first draft of a new election Act some three to four years ago. He made a particular study of the Canadian Elections Act. He had many personal conferences with the Chief Electoral Officer of Canada. He also brought into Newfoundland copies of the provincial Acts all across Canada. Having done that he then asked the Attorney General to invite Mr. Myles P. Murray, who was then in the practice of law, to take over the rather tremendous job of putting all these ideas into legal shape. The Bill as it stands is principally the handiwork of the present Solicitor-General and Minister of Provincial Affairs, than whom no man is more capable of explaining every section and every clause and every word of the present Bill. I felt that in connection with this very ponderous Bill and this very important one that the House should know that the credit lies primarily with Mr. Short and the present Solicitor General and Minister of Provincial Affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with two points only raised by the honourable and learned member for St. John's West. One was in connection with his touching appeal, the somewhat elegant appeal, for more merchants in this Chamber. He is, of course, as entitled to his views as I am to mine or as any other member of the House is to his. If he feels that there should be more merchants here he has a right so to feel. If I feel that we have had far too many merchants in the Chamber, then I am entitled to that view, and that happens to be my view. Newfoundland in the last five years, with a House of Assembly that contained not even one fish merchant, has made more progress than she ever did in any twenty-five years before. If we had today a few fish merchants occupying seats in this House we would not have gone ahead. I will even go a step further and say this, with all due deference to my honourable and learned friend the member for St. John's West, and to my honourable and learned friend the Attorney General, and to my honourable and learned friend the member for Harbour Main-Bell Island, and my honourable and learned friend, the Deputy-Speaker, and my honourable and learned friend, the member for Port de Grave, with all due deference to them; we have made the progress we did during the last five years largely because we have had fewer lawyers in the House in the last five years than perhaps in any five years in the history of the House of Assembly. Why for the first three years the only lawyers we had were the Attorney General and the then Leader of the Opposition, Mr. J. G. Higgins, one on each side of the House. I always felt somehow that was a comfortable and happy state of affairs. But I noticed that since we have a section of lawyers in this House things have gone right for scarcely one day since that happened.

There is another point raised by the honourable and learned member for St. John's West, i.e. about the twenty-one day period not being long enough between the calling of an election, the issue of the official proclamation and the polling day. Twenty-one days is not time enough, he says, and it should be at least five weeks, and then he went on to give his reasons. The reasons were good but they were not good reasons for extending the period beyond twenty-one days, but they were good reasons for something else altogether. His reasons were that a candidate ought to have the opportunity to canvas his district, to make a speech in every part of his district, and instead of having to make two, three or four speeches a day, to do it somewhat more comfortably and make say one or two a day. Now that is not a good argument for increasing the number of constituencies physically and geographically speaking. I do not desire to anticipate legislation that will come before the House later in the year—although this present Bill does not deal with the matter. I think we may well anticipate legislation which will deal with the matter of the size and number of constituencies, and the way to make it more feasible, more practical, for candidates to be able, within the time at their disposal, to cover their constituencies. It is not necessary to increase the time but rather to decrease the size of the constituencies. The honourable member for Labrador, the Minister of Mines and Resources, represents a constituency of a hundred and ten thousand square miles, almost three times the size of the whole Island of Newfoundland, and with a coastline of sixteen or seventeen hundred miles. How is it possible for one man, if you gave him three months from the proclamation to the polling day or if you gave him four months or if you gave him five months of the year, what five months of the year could he pick during which he could go to every nook and corner of that hundred and ten thousand square miles where people live, and hold a meeting and conduct a proper canvass and make himself personally known to all the voters and the voters personally well known to him? How many months would be required or how many weeks to do that? Take the District of White Bay, how long would be necessary for a man to canvass all of White Bay? How long would be necessary to canvass Your Honour's own district, the great Coast of St. Barbe? The cure would lie rather in increasing the number of constituencies and thereby decreasing their size and increasing the number of members of this House, always with the powerful hope that that won't involve us in having present a number of fish merchants in this Chamber. We are getting along very well indeed without them. I can understand the yearnings of my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West for a few fish merchants or other merchants in here. I can understand that there is a sort of fellow-feeling. The Tory Party was always the party of Water Street, always the Merchants' Party, the Mercantile Party from the dawn of our history in Newfoundland. The Mercantile Party were always Tories, and the Tories always were the Mercantile Party. Most of the premiers they produced were Water Street Merchants, most of the cabinet ministers they produced were Water Street Merchants. I am not going to say there was never a merchant in the Liberal Party, there were too many of them. But by and large, on the average, over a period of our history it is the simple truth and historical fact that the Liberal Party were the party of the masses and the Tory Party were the party of the classes, and there was always that wide gulf, the gulf was there—it was there, the gulf between the masses and the classes. Toryism was the party of the classes, Liberalism was the party of the masses. That is Newfoundland's history from the birth of the Tory Party and the birth of the Liberal Party in 1831. So that I can well understand my honourable friends opposite. I hope that when the Leader of the Tory Party speaks that he will not repudiate the sentiments of his newly acquired follower, and say the party is really not anxious to have some merchants in here in this House of Assembly, unless this is an effort to hurt the Liberal Party. Maybe what they want to do is to get some merchants in here on the Liberal side. Maybe they don’t mean getting some merchants in on their side of the House. There is one final point, Mr. Speaker, and then I am through. The honourable member for St. John’s West made the statement that he is as much entitled as any member of the House or any person, I think he said, in Newfoundland to be treated justly and fairly. I think that is what he said. I think he said something like this: “I am as much entitled to be treated fairly and justly as any other member.” Now I doubt that anyone is going to deny that. I think we must admit the truth of that. That is true. But I hope by the same token that he is not going to suggest that he is not receiving it. When the honourable member lost his seat in the House of Commons last fall it was this side of the House that made it possible for him to find a new seat, the one he has now. We did not deal with him unfairly then.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I think the honourable member will remember the point was civil servants canvassing and taking part in elections.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am not talking about civil servants. The honourable gentleman is not a civil servant. When the honourable gentleman claimed that he was entitled to be treated as fairly as any other member I don’t think he was talking about civil servants.

MR. SPEAKER: May I interrupt the honourable the Premier? Will the police officer remove from the gallery the person on his right carrying on a conversation. Please continue the speech.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I say he has no reason to grumble. He has his seat. He was defeated in the three provincial districts that constitute the federal district. He was defeated in St. John’s West by a substantial majority. He was defeated in Ferryland by a substantial majority. He was defeated in the District of Placentia-St. Mary’s and in the riding on the whole he was defeated by around a thousand votes.

MR. BROWNE: I don’t think the Premier is stating facts now.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, of course, he was defeated in the riding at large by a majority of a thousand votes—having been defeated we then virtually invited him in to this House. The Leader of the Opposition is going to deal with that, and perhaps try to show that that is not so. Perhaps the Honourable Leader of the Opposition after recess is going to chew me up and spit me out on the floor, chew me alive, and show that is not the truth.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. HOLLETT: What a mouthful to put under my tongue.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Some tongue.

MR. HOLLETT: Some mouthful.

MR. SPEAKER: Such exchange of pleasantries is not amusing.
MR. SMALLWOOD: Perhaps he believe he was there then. I have had is going to show the Government were afraid to contest the honourable gentleman whom we had gone out and defeated a few weeks before in all three of the districts that made up the riding. Maybe he thinks we were afraid of them. They are not big enough yet to have caught on to why we brought him into the House, and not bright enough to understand why. Time will tell them. It is not for nothing that we always win. We win because two and three and four and five years earlier, we plan to win. That is why the honourable gentleman is over on the other side now. Mr. Speaker might we have a recess now?

MR. HOLLETT: After that?

MR. SPEAKER: If honourable members are willing the House will recess for ten minutes.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to prolong the debate. I would like at the outset to congratulate the Honourable Minister who introduced this Bill on the capable manner in which he introduced it, and indeed for the Bill itself. I consider it, on the whole, a very excellent Bill. It has cut out considerable redundancy in the old 1913 Act. And when I say 1913 I am reminded that the Honourable Minister must have been a very small boy, if he was a boy at all at that time. That is a long time ago, 41 years ago. I would say, therefore, it is an honour to be put in the position of introducing this Bill to this Honourable House. I would also like to couple with the remarks of the Premier my personal appreciation of the way in which ex-magistrate Short has handled all the elections down through the years since 1949 and including 1949–7 be-

Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Honourable Minister that probably the best place to discuss this Bill is in Committee of the Whole. As a matter of fact I am not sure that a Bill of this kind should not be brought in through Committee of the Whole where it would give everybody ample opportunity in the first instance to discuss the various sections. But I do agree that in Committee of the Whole is the proper time to bring up the various sections which are very important, every one of them. Each one of these sections concerns the franchise of people who have to make up their minds every once in a while, and quite often since 1949, as to what they are going to do with regard to certain candidates who come before them. I do not intend to say very much on this Bill but will bring up certain points in Committee of the Whole. The principle of course in this Bill is the new method of counting the ballots, and a very excellent one, that is to say, when the polling and necessary formalities are gone through, the deputy in the presence of the candidates or their agents or two or three citizens opens the ballot boxes, counts the ballot for John Jones and Bill Smith and immediately takes down the telephone or wires, as the case might be, the electoral officer and says, "Hollett had ten thousand votes and Browne ten thousand five hundred," I think it was, and that the Liberal candidates in St. John’s West had a little less than that, and the electoral officer immediately knows the whole thing. But it applies to the count from the deputy to the returning officer particularly in the outports where it is going to be a great aid, and we are going to know probably on the same day just what this country is going to have to put up with from the point of view of parties for the next five years. I hope it is five years and not three as is the custom of the present Government. I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, if we are going to last through three years on our previous election. We have had various threats of closing the House, and I think even members of the Government have been threatened with suspension and a new crowd gathered in to go to the country. I believe someone said that here one day.

We may be able to get on with this business and get this Act passed, at any rate, before the election. We know the election is coming pretty soon, therefore, we think we ought to get the Act passed as soon as possible. I know the election has to take place this year. The Premier said so. Therefore I say we ought not to waste too much time in discussing the various sections at this time, probably when we get into Committee of the Whole the Honourable Premier will tell us just what date we are going to have this election, and then we will hasten the thing. I understand the Honourable the Premier told a Liberal Party last night that not one single soul in the world but himself knows when we are going to have this election. Is not that strange? Nobody except the Premier himself knows when we are going to have an election this year, but he knows. He knows. He is so mysterious now. The Premier knows. The Premier and he alone knows what date we are going to have that election. I do hope in the magnificent spirit that he has for us in Opposition that he will some day inform us when he is to have an election.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I will tell you now. Start getting ready.

MR. HOLLETT: We are getting ready fast. I knew the Premier would bite to that one. Well we are getting ready. We only go slow on this side of the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is the trouble and why you only have three over there.

MR. HOLLETT: Because, Mr. Speaker, the affairs of the country should be handled, I think, with caution, let us not be too fast. Not “Develop or Perish.” We should think things over, think before we decide, even when we are going to have another election.

This a good Act, there is no question about it. It is an excellent Act. There are certain things I shall have to say in Committee of the Whole, which it is not necessary to enlarge upon at the present time. I made a few notes but I believe I will scrap all these. But I want to get back to something I said about elections in St. John’s West. Supposedly there was to be a by-election this year or last year. The Honourable the Premier said here a few moments ago that they gave us a gift on this side of the House when they allowed my honourable and learned friend on my right to come into this House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not “allowed.”

MR. HOLLETT: Oh yes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Expedites.

MR. HOLLETT: That was the word which aroused my temporary ire. Why? Imagine, Mr. Speaker, the foolhardiness of the Premier or the Government in inviting my honourable and learned friend here to become a member of this House on the opposite side—it is rather silly I should say.

MR. CURTIS: Should we have said “condoled,” Mr. Speaker?

MR. HOLLETT: Should have said “condoled.” As to what the Premier said, Mr. Speaker, far from inviting my honourable and learned friend into this House, I want to tell you now, Sir, as we are about to bring up this Election Act, far from inviting my honourable and learned friend, the members and the cabinet members of the Government did their utmost, Sir, to see that there would be no by-election—that there would be no election.

MR. SMALLWOOD: How come?

MR. HOLLETT: And if there is any member on the Opposite side of the House who wishes me to tell him the truth about that I may be disposed to do it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I for one would like to hear it. Let us have it. Tell us, and shame the Devil.

MR. HOLLETT: I should hate to have the opposite side more split up than it is at the moment. The Devil is not here—he is out this afternoon.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. HOLLETT: I say, Sir, and can prove it, that an attempt was made to induce this side of the House to consent that there would be no election in St. John’s West to fill the vacancy which existed there. I say that I can prove it. So that the Honourable the Premier, when he states that they invited my honourable and learned friend to the Opposition in the House, he is all wet. He simply did not know what went on in his party. Imagine the honourable the Premier not knowing what goes on in his party.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I even know what is going on in that party let alone this one.

MR. HOLLETT: The honourable the Premier thinks he knows.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is that nothing goes on but—

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, the honourable the Premier is in very great danger. I wish he would not forget the fact that he is just human and come down to earth occasionally with us poor humans and talk a language which we could understand on the Opposition.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That would be imbecile.

MR. HOLLETT: We are only Newfoundlanders. But I repeat Sir, and repeat emphatically that the Government did its best to see that no by-election took place last fall in St. John’s West, and I could go further, but Sir there are certain things which we must respect. But if it comes to the point I can always prove what I have said. So far from inviting the honourable and learned member on my right to come into this House they did their utmost, I say, Sir, to keep him out.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We did our utmost to keep him out—sure—we did not even contest it.

MR. HOLLETT: Surely, Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Premier does not want me to tell him why he did not contest it, why he did not want a candidate or a contest up there.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, I would like to know that.

MR. HOLLETT: Well, Mr. Speaker, he is not going to know it this evening. But I can tell him why he did not contest it, there were certain things that happened since, Sir, not so long ago, which would indicate not only to the House but to the whole country at large why the Government did not want an election.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does the honourable gentleman want me to tell him now, as one friend to another—since the honourable gentleman came in, whatever else he is or is not, he has put some life in that side of the House, and at last we have two parties. We did not have two parties before. That is a good reason for bringing him in. Think up an answer, don't always be promising. He is going to get mad one of these days because he is being prompted by the gentleman on his right.

MR. SPEAKER: Order.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Do your own thinking.

MR. SPEAKER: I would suggest, although it is in a spirit of levity that the House ought not to get too personal. I would remind honourable members on both sides that might tend to generate heat.

MR. HOLLETT: It is not very hot here this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I might say, as I was saying a moment or so ago, when the honourable the Premier was telling me something he did not actually tell me anything whatsoever. I was about to tell him why they allowed our honourable friend to come into this House. According to them why they did not have any by-election is rather silly, and the whole world knows why they did not want an election, the whole world knows why. And the honourable the Premier need not try to bluff out of it by getting up and saying that he allowed the honourable gentleman on my right to come in here to help us poor souls out. It is a great errand they have given him, Sir. I hope he lives up to it, that he helps us and makes this side of the House very interesting for the Government. After all they must have somebody at which to swear and curse and call all sorts of things.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Swearing and cursing.

MR. HOLLETT: We reply occasionally, with regard to the merchants, the lovely merchants the Honourable the Premier loves to talk about. He spoke about lawyers too. I see four at the moment. And I would say now every one of these last year represented at least a dozen merchants, and some of them five and six fish merchants in St. John's. Sure they represent fish merchants. I would say to them—you have not the fish merchants but you have their lawyers which is better still. Some of these fish merchants, Sir, have received from this Government loans amounting to millions of dollars, and some of the lawyers on the opposite side represent some of these merchants—does that answer it?

MR. CURTIS: Would my honourable friend, Mr. Speaker, allow me to suggest that the lawyers on his side of the House are representing their clients too.

MR. HOLLETT: I am talking about the other side of the House. I don't know that they represent any fish merchants, but I do know that the lawyers on the opposite side do.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If they represent fish merchants in this House do they represent their clients, the two lawyers on his side?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, is that a point of order? I would say the lawyers on the opposite side represent practically every fish merchant in St. John's, particularly those who got loans from the Government. Deny it if they can.

MR. SPEAKER: If I may suggest to the honourable member, the debate was on the Election Act.

MR. HOLLETT: Yes, I realize that very well, but there were some fishy smells brought in here this evening under the Election Act, and fish merchants and lawyers were talked about by the Honourable the Premier. They not only represent the fish merchants but practically every new industry that was brought in here. Now I don't know the difference between a merchant and a lawyer who has a plant or a merchant, if you like, who has a beer parlour. There are lawyers on the opposite side Sir, who are merchants although it might not be a fish. They are in companies selling other things, liquor, and there are lawyers on the other side of the House who represent them, and if you are to despise the fish merchants then you despise every merchant in the country. What is a fish merchant any more than any other merchant? And if my honourable friend did say that trade and commerce should be better represented in this House I see nothing wrong with it. He probably forgot that every merchant in St. John's is represented here in the House by a lawyer, and perhaps he represents some of them himself, I don't know.

MR. BROWNE: No.

MR. HOLLETT: I am glad you said that, that answers the Attorney General. But to get on with the fish merchants—the honourable the Premier said that the Tory Governments in the past were made up of fish merchants all down through the ages. It is a wonder this House of Assembly does not smell to high heaven of bad fish, lots of bad fish here at the moment, bad fish—they are here—and fish is the word, "fish." They make me sick, turning class against class, creed against creed, some of the members on the opposite side of the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, to a point of order—the honourable gentleman will retract that statement, or name the member on this side of the House who has set creed against creed. Name him or retract the statement.

MR. SPEAKER: That is an accusation. I don't think those words should have been used. I ask the honourable member to retract them.
I don't think they should have been used.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, I surely do not have to name any member?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Retract—we have all been accused.

MR. SPEAKER: To say "Put creed against creed" does not seem to be—

MR. HOLLETT: I probably should not have said that. I should have said keel against keel, i.e., a fishing keel. I retract that statement.

MR. SPEAKER: The honourable member will proceed with the debate. I might suggest that the debate might follow the Bill rather more closely.

MR. HOLLETT: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I shall endeavour to do that. But I do detest the tactics of certain individuals of the Government who continually want to make politics out of every piece of legislation which is brought into this House this year. This is an election Act, and they want to make politics out of that. They want to unload the merchants on us, and I will ask the Honourable the Premier, where are our merchants? The Government, Sir, has every merchant in the country; every merchant in the country comes under the thumb of the Government, and yet they go out and cry to High Heaven to poor people about these damned merchants. Yet when they come in here they set up beer parlours, do this and that, and cater to the merchants all along Water Street, and all outside and every where else, and then they go on the air and say they detest these merchants—politics, detestable to me, Sir.

This Election Act, Sir, should not be made an article of political argument. I don't see why the Government needs to make any politics out of this thing, anyway they don't go to the country before November. They meant to go in June, I think, but that is off.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Don't be too sure. Twenty-one days it says in the Act. Don't be too sure.

MR. HOLLETT: Be prepared! It is possible they might have to put it off until late November on account of the section there which allows a deferred election in Labrador, St. Barbe and White Bay. It is rather strange, I did hear the Premier state he was going to boat around the Island this summer.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That may be just propaganda.

MR. HOLLETT: I hope he does not get off his course, that is the only thing.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I hope the honourable gentleman does not.

MR. HOLLETT: I get back again though. He has that lovely fashion of interrupting. Mr. Speaker, that was one thing in the Bill I was going to refer to. I do not see, like my honourable friend on my right, why there should be any reason for deferring an election in St. Barbe and in White Bay. If they can do so in White Bay, why not in Green Bay, and why not in Fogo, what is the difference? Certainly if the election can be held in Green Bay and Fogo it could be held in White Bay or held in St. Barbe District. As my honourable friend has pointed out, Sir, the results of the election will now be known the night of the poll and the voters in White Bay, Labra-and St. Barbe will therefore go to the polls knowing the exact situation of the Government at that particular time. I don't see any reason why that it is right and proper to defer an election, as a matter of law. There could be something, things arise, the death of a returning officer or something whereby the election should be deferred, but as a general thing I don't think it is the right thing to do.

Now, Sir, I don't wish to say very much at this point. There are certain sections, which need some comment, but I do wish to say that this is a Bill which is well thought out in many ways—now something else comes to my mind—I think you will find it on Form 30, the ballot paper. John Jones, Bonavista, fisherman—I believe in the old Act (the Minister might correct me if I am wrong) that the surname of the candidate was there in big block letters, and under that was the name of the candidate in full. I don't see why the change is being made now. Perhaps the Minister might be able to tell us later. For instance on that one you will see Joseph R. Smallwood, possibly in big block letters, and underneath "Joseph R. Smallwood"—

MR. SMALLWOOD: "Winner."

MR. HOLLETT: He could do it under the Act. It could be a motion. He has done a lot of things. I know. I think that is one thing that might be corrected. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is a good Bill. With a few faults we will point out later, and I want again to congratulate the Honourable Minister who brought in the Bill. I have nothing further to say.

MR. F. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one or two observations. First I would like to say I am entirely in accord with the Honourable the Premier in his remarks in respect to Mr. Short who conducted the elections on several occasions. I wish to say that in that connection I found him very fair, very just and always prepared to help the candidate on any problem that might arise at that time. I would like to take this opportunity too, Sir, to say something in respect to the returning officer for St. John's East in the 1951 elections in the person of Mr. Proudfoot who now occupies the Chair at the Table. I found him the same kind of gentleman as Mr. Short and he conducted the election in a very fair and just manner, particularly in regard to the ballots. It was all done very fair.

Now the old Election Act is forty years old or thereabouts. And it is possible that it may be a long time before another Election Act will be brought into this House. At any time perhaps none of us will be here. Meanwhile we consider it a privilege to have the opportunity today to make some remarks in connection with an Act which provides for the election of representatives to this House under a free and secret ballot. Because, Sir, when we realize that there are so many people in this world who have not the privilege that we have—in fact, Sir, I believe there are over one-third of the world's population today who cannot elect a government as we do. There are over seven million people, occupying over twelve million square miles of this earth's surface who have not the right to do what we are doing today. That is one reason why I appreciate all the more the privilege of having this opportunity this afternoon to make these short observations on what we are about to do. This Act possibly may not be classed as one of the most... important Acts brought into this House—we have had certain Bills brought in here which have become law, and they have been hailed with great gusto and with words of superlative adjectives—"The best one," "The greatest in Newfoundland's History" etc. But this Act, I believe, in its own right is the most important we shall ever bring into this Assembly because it provides the means by which we come here ourselves. And in saying that Sir, when we do come here, the Legislature meets and passes the laws of the land. I would like also to make this observation, Mr. Speaker—this House is not above the law. Whatever law is made in this House we must abide by it ourselves. And I don't like to hear at any time any suggestion from any one in this House or outside that this Assembly is far above the law.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Nobody ever said that.

MR. FOGWILL: I don't know, Sir, if anybody said that. I read a quotation in one of the newspapers that somebody in this House said it. I am not going into details and cause another argument this afternoon, and I have no intention of doing it. I would suggest, Sir, that this Bill is not a party measure, it is not a part of government policy, and when the members go into committee I would suggest to all members that they will not find it necessary to toe the party line or be governed by party discipline, and that every member in committee deal with the several clauses as they come before the committee and express his own opinion without any fear of any discipline on party lines. Now, Sir, with these few remarks I have said all I have to say. In respect to the next election, I don't know when it is going to come, next month, the month after next, next year or the year after next, and I am not particularly interested when it does come, because I believe the good people of this Island can be counted upon to go to the polls and freely and secretly express their opinions and elect the members for this House of Assembly. This is what this Act purports to do, and I think, under this, all the people concerned with elections have all the protection, and I mean the electoral officers and returning officers, election clerks and poll clerks, I believe everyone has protection, as well as all the rest of the citizens, and I believe the good sense of the Newfoundland people can be counted upon to do what in their opinion they think is right when the time comes to do it.

I support the Bill, Mr. Speaker. In Committee we can deal with the various clauses, as there are a few there with which the Opposition are not in accord, but as members of the Committee we will object to them. Thank you very much.

MR. MURRAY: Mr. Speaker, if no other member wishes to speak in this debate I would like to say a few words by way of closing up the debate. First of all I would like to thank the Leader of the Opposition for the personal praise he has given me, which I am afraid is largely undeserved. This Bill is a good Bill and we think it is largely due to the tremendous practical knowledge of Mr. Short who did make the first rough draft, as the Premier has announced. It is due in a very large measure to the terrifically tremendous amount of work which has been done on it by the law officers of the Crown, particularly Mr. Greene and Mr. McCarthy. Both to my knowledge have been down there night after night, and as all members can see, this Bill contains a tremendous amount of detail, and yet when it goes into Committee of the Whole, in spite of the fact it has been done and redone, I am sure other things will come to light. I am glad, Sir, that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition thinks it is a good Bill. We welcome his practical suggestions, and he has already brought our attention to a point which I believe has some merit, and we can discuss it further when we go into Committee of the Whole, when I assure him it will be given consideration.

The same idea, I think, was expressed by the honourable member for St. John's East. While we think to a certain extent it is a party measure, we are all very anxious to get the benefit of the experience of the members opposite and will appreciate it very much in Committee of the Whole.

The points made, Sir, by the honourable and learned member for St. John's West, I think, have been fully covered by the Honourable the Attorney General, and by the Honourable the Premier. I think they have been pretty thoroughly covered. The fact that a list of electors has not been taken for such a long period certainly had no bearing whatsoever on the two referenda because they were held immediately after the list was taken. I cannot imagine, Sir, I do not think it is possible, that many people at any rate, and I doubt if any, were defranchised in view of the fact that so many polling stations were set up, and in view of the fact that the old system permitted the taking of supplementary lists. I am sorry if the honourable and learned member for St. John's West misunderstood me, but I thought I made it quite clear in dealing with Clause 30, that the list of electors presently prepared and printed may be used as an official list of electors at any election held before the expiration of twelve months from the date. What I thought I said was that the main provision in the clause there provides that the Lieutenant Governor in Council may from time to time, if he sees fit, order otherwise. Obviously such a provision is expedient—by-elections may be held from time to time, and I doubt if any great hardship could be experienced by anyone, and possibly a great deal of money could be saved by permitting the Lieutenant Governor in Council to keep the list of electors valid.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask the honourable gentleman a question? If a list is taken, say for a general election, according to this Act it is good for five years?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, if necessary.

MR. BROWNE: Then it may be good for ten. You may not order another election for five years after.

MR. MURRAY: Now dealing with Clause 31 (4), Sir, I can assure the honourable members opposite that there is nothing sinister in this provision. It is a provision put in the Bill by Mr. Short in the light of practical experience. Mr. Short has time and time again pointed out there are only two months of the year, July and August, when it is really a practical matter to hold elections in Labrador, and unless this provision were put in it would be tantamount to having no elections held in Newfoundland except in July and August. In the light of his experience also the same provision has been made applicable also to White Bay and St. Barbe District, as he pointed out that during long periods in the year it would be impossible to get election material around either by boat or plane, as it would have been during the last two months in the Districts of White Bay and St. Barbe.

MR. BROWNE: Yet that is where we are going to put the fish plants, in that District of White Bay.

MR. SMALLWOOD: A salt fish plant.

MR. MURRAY: The honourable member for St. John's West also has deplored the fact that more members from trade and commerce are not in the House at the present time. He brought that up apropos of the qualifications of electors. I don't know why, Sir? I don't know if he has any amendment to propose that perhaps we should make it obligatory or compulsory that certain people should be members of the House of Assembly. I don't know if that is what he had in mind. I ask the rhetorical question, why are not more of these people coming forward? I am certainly unable to answer that question. Perhaps the Premier has given the explanation when he said they were too busily engaged otherwise making money. Possibly one way to induce them in, would be to raise the monetary returns—apart from that I would say the point is completely irrelevant.

There is just one other point, Sir, that the honourable and learned member for St. John's West made. He stated that he noticed some omissions from the old Election Act, and that people who are residents of a home for the Aged and Infirm are no longer disfranchised. That is quite correct. I did not mention it specifically, and I did not think it necessary to do so. Our view on this side of the House in such matters is quite well known. They were expressed here very ably by the Minister who brought in the Social Assistance Act and by the Premier in support of it. Our social views are expressed in this clause here on qualifications, which says, only persons who are inmates committed to hospitals for Mental Diseases or people actually in jail are debarred from voting. It is not the Liberal Policy to disfranchise people because they are poor and barred up until the end of their days. As I said it was omitted deliberately and designedly, in line with our well known principles in this party.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Hear, hear!

On motion Bill read a second time—ordered to a Committee of the Whole House on tomorrow.

Second Reading of a Bill, "An Act Further to Amend the City of St. John's Act."

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill entitled "An Act Further to Amend the City of St. John's Act," and I do so at the request of the St. John's City Council and for my part on behalf of the Government.

There are three or four amendments which the St. John's Municipal Council feels it is desirable to have enacted in order that they might take action under the sections.

The first amendment aims at reducing the cost of improvements to owners whose property abuts on two streets. Under the present Act a person may be liable for any improvements which are effected upon both, and the proposed amendment here is that the property would be liable for any improvements made on one frontage plus a proportion of the other and that portion being limited to eighty feet.

The second amendment deals with the enforcement of regulations dealing with electrical installations and water installation within the buildings adjacent to the St. John’s City Limits. As the House is aware this limit is one mile outside, where there is some sort of nominal control, and this Act would allow them to enforce any regulations in that extra mile.

The House is also aware that the stadium building is in the course of erection, and that that building is on property which has been granted to it by the Municipal Council of St. John’s. This amendment section (5) makes provision for the Council’s action in granting that particular property for a stadium site.

It also makes provision for the imposition of a poll tax in order that it might in the course of time defray and pay off the bond issue of seven hundred thousand dollars, which was authorized here only a few days ago.

Another amendment in the proposed Bill, Sir, gives the Municipal Council authority to collect a water tax based upon rental values and allows them to do so without the necessity of having to appeal to the Public Utilities Board to determine their charges.

Another section allows the Municipal Council to levy a license fee upon certain forms of entertainment, over and above those being done at the present time, for instance, Juke Boxes. It also authorizes the Municipal Council to increase the poll tax under the present Act to twenty dollars and change the date when such taxation power was to be put into effect by the Council of St. John’s.

Another provision allows the St. John’s Municipal Council to lay additional water pipes for protection against fire, and also for supplying water supplies to ships at various premises.

There is another amendment, a matter of procedure really. The House is aware that at the present time the audited accounts of the Municipality must be presented to the Legislature before it can be published in the papers. The Council has pointed out that it is quite possible the House might not be in session, and closed before the accounts of the previous year were fully audited, and consequently there could be no publication until the next session of the House. The amendment asks that when the accounts are audited publication may be given with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. These are the amendments, Sir, except that there is one other, and that is one which enables the Council to recover from lesors or leasees any cost incurred by the demolition of buildings that have been condemned more or less for the purpose of security.

Mr. Speaker, I move the second reading of this Bill.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, as we did not get the Bill until this afternoon, would the honourable minister allow a postponement?

On motion debate on second reading adjourned.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I move that all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, before the motion to adjourn if, on behalf of the Minister of Finance I give notice that he will on tomorrow, Monday, ask leave to move the Committee into Supply and to give notice that he will on tomorrow ask leave to move the House into a Committee on Ways and Means for the purpose of the Budget.

I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House on its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Monday at 3:00 of the clock. I do so at this hour, sir, because I understand Mr. Speaker would like to have a short session of the Parliamentary Association in his office.

House adjourned until tomorrow, Monday, at 3:00 of the clock.

May 31, 1954

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. SPEAKER: A certain sentence appearing in the Saturday edition of the "Daily News" of this city compels me to take an unusual step:

I will first of all ask the Clerk to read the sentence to which I refer:

MR. CLERK: Quotation taken from the "Daily News", May 29, 1954: "However the Speaker ruled it out of order to use Her Majesty's Name in connection with the Premier's Government."

MR. SPEAKER: I want to say that this scandalous statement compels me to take this step. I must ask the House to do what it can to regain the loss of dignity this House and Province must have suffered by this misquotation of a ruling given by me.

I will say this: if I or any other speaker made a statement like that the only defense could be an appeal of insanity. I ask the House and all intelligent people to ponder this—What opinion must a foreign reader of that newspaper have formed of this province when he reads that the Speaker of the Legislative Assembly utters such a stupid and thoroughly insulting ruling—insulting both to the House and to the Province and to all intelligent persons.

The damage to my personal reputation I pass over, and I ask the House to do so also. But, the damage done to this Province of Newfoundland is one which disturbs me greatly. When I speak from this Chair I do not speak to the galleries nor to the press but only to the honourable members. I am not desirous of being quoted in the newspapers, and I view with displeasure any comment about me, whether favourable or otherwise.

I will ask honourable members not to refer to the debate which gave rise to this unfortunate occurrence as no good purpose can be served by it. I will tell the honourable members the exact words I used, and I have here Hansard of that day, and I quote: "The remark which the honourable member made in connection with Her Majesty and the Government of this Province ought not to have been made." Three times I repeated these words.

Of course, the alleged ruling as it appeared in the press must have been accidental. I cannot conceive of anybody letting it pass other than as an accident. But I do think the House ought to ask the paper concerned to correct that terrible misquotation, which brings discredit on the entire Province.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to express my agreement with the point which Your Honour has made on this particular occasion of which Your Honour is the victim. On other occasions other members of this House, on both sides, have been victims. A quite recent case occurred, I think it was on the same date—on Friday the Honourable Member for St. John’s East made an allusion to someone having claimed to be above the law. I asked him who had made such a claim. But the honourable member did not see fit to say who had claimed to be above the law. Yet that did not prevent a radio station from stating that the Premier had said that the Government was above the law.

If I had said that the Government is above the law I would have been a madman or a fool or a criminal—a madman, a fool or a criminal—yes, thousands of my fellow countrymen are today under the impression, because they heard it on the radio, through twisted and incompetent reporting of a speech which an honourable member made. I ended up the victim of being thought by thousands and perhaps scores of thousands of my fellow countrymen of having made the mad claim in this House that the Government is above the law. I never said anything like it. I never said anything that all the powers on earth could stretch into meaning anything like that—that the Government is above the law.

There seems to be getting abroad in Newfoundland in recent weeks a feeling that you have no liberty, you have no freedom if you can’t in a newspaper or on a radio station say what you like about anybody on anything, including the lawmakers of the land—that if you can’t malign and slander and misrepresent them, say they said this and that, and that they said things quite different from what they actually said—if you can’t do that, then you have no freedom, and if anybody complains, he is making an attack upon the freedom of the press.

Mr. Speaker, I say deliberately: it might be far better (I say it might—the matter is arguable) if never a word appeared in print or was spoken on the radio about any of the proceedings of this Chamber if the remarks of honourable members continue to be misquoted, misrepresented, wrongly reported or erroneously reported so as to make black white and white black, so as to attribute to one man the thing for which somebody else altogether was to blame. It might be far better if there were no reporting whatsoever of the proceedings of this House in future—and if newspaper men and radio men by any chance feel that we are such publicity hunters that we must have the publicity that they are able to give us—if by any chance any radio man or newspaper man has any such feeling—I say, speaking for myself alone, personally, if my name never again appeared in print or is heard on the radio—never again—I will shed no tears. That is how interested I am in publicity.

But I would suggest to Your Honour this thought: If the newspapers and radio stations continue to misreport, not continuously because nobody will be silly enough to say that it is continuous or even that it is deliberate, but the fact that it is not continuous, the fact that it is not intentional does not make it any better for the man who is misreported, when he is misreported. I say, if that continues it might become desirable for this House to exclude newspapers and radio stations both from the House unless they will broadcast exactly verbatim, word for word, what is said—that might become necessary—far better that no report go out than that a false report go out.

Now I say that as a man who has spent his entire life, up to five or six years ago, his entire life at newspaper and radio work—his entire life—there are very few men alive in Newfoundland today who have worked as long and as long ago as a newspaperman and as a radio man. I have, to say the least, as much regard, as much appreciation of the almost sacred character of freedom of the press as any man. But, freedom of the press I suggest, does not carry with it the right to misreport a member of this Legislature, nor the right to let the political prejudices of the writer dictate what he or she writes. It does not carry that right with it because the public has a clear right to get an objective report, and when a man turns on his radio in the privacy of his own home he has the right to feel he is getting an objective and not a slanted, not a loaded, report. I am afraid that more than once that is exactly what he is getting in the reports of this House.

MR. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I feel that I ought to say just one word, sir, in connection with the statement which you yourself made relative to the misquotation in the Daily News on Saturday, I believe it was. I do agree with you that it was most unfortunate that error was made by the reporter. Any of us here who sat in the House, or any member, would know immediately that it was a mistake, that no Speaker in the British Commonwealth of Nations could ever make such a ruling. I remember seeing it myself and just laughed at it, and I remember turning to the person who was with me when I read it and saying—I suspect that there will be something said about that—that was the remark I made. It was unfortunate, Sir. I do say however that I think at that time when your ruling was given there was a bit of a turmoil in this House, and some excuse at least can be made for any reporters who did not get the correct ruling. I say that not in defense of the press and radio because I myself have been misquoted as often as anybody else in this House—but I do believe it is not done deliberately. It is done purely accidentally. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, if you would give that same forbearance, which I know you will, to the press and radio as you have oftentimes given to us here on this side of the House, and also to the Members of the Government.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Notice of Motions and Questions
None.

Answers to Questions
Question No. 103—Stand.

Orders of the Day

MR. SPEAKER: Item 20, Honourable Minister of Finance to move the House into Committee of Ways and Means:

HON. G. POWER (Minister of Finance): In the year that ended on March 31st, the excess of revenue over expenditure was two and three-quarter million dollars. The precise figure was $2,740,512. This was the fourth consecutive year of budget surpluses since Confederation.

Revenue for the year was just over $36 million—$36,091,888. Expenditure amounted to just over $33\frac{1}{4}$ million—$33,351,376.

Newfoundland’s record in surplus budgeting has been quite remarkable for the past fourteen years. In these fourteen years—nine of them before Confederation, five of them since—we had a surplus twelve times, a deficit only twice. The figures, in thousands of dollars, are as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Surplus</th>
<th>Deficit</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1940-41</td>
<td>$394,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1941-42</td>
<td>$7,216,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1942-43</td>
<td>$3,690,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1943-44</td>
<td>$5,660,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1944-45</td>
<td>$7,033,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1945-46</td>
<td>$4,330,000</td>
<td>$311,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1946-47</td>
<td>$108,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1947-48</td>
<td>$1,167,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1948-49</td>
<td></td>
<td>$311,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total pre-Confederation: $29,598,000

1949-50: $3,786,000

1950-51: $649,000

1951-52: $1,698,000

1952-53: $6,745,000

1953-54: $2,741,000

Total: $11,831,000

Deficit: $3,786,000

Total for 14 years: $41,429,000.

This means that within this period of fourteen years there has been a nett surplus on current account of $37,382,000. It is as impressive a showing as that of almost any Province of Canada for the same period.

In our first year as a Province of Canada we suffered a deficit in our current account financing. This was due to the fact that literally overnight (on the night of March 31st, 1949) we lost the great bulk of our traditional sources of revenue; all our customs import duties, excise duties, excise taxes, personal and corporation income taxes and the like; and the fact that it had to be almost a year after the fact of Union with Canada before we were able to institute new taxes in conformity with the taxing powers of a Province under the British North America Act.

I am happy to invite attention to a fact that is well known to the House and to the whole Province, namely, the continuation of the phenomenal prosperity that began to sweep across the face of Newfoundland some three or four years ago. This is prosperity the like of which was never known in Newfoundland before. It has brought our people to a level of well-being that we have not known in the past. I estimate that our people will pocket, in 1954, from all sources, the satisfactory sum of two hundred and thirty million dollars. This is over twenty million dollars more than I estimated they would pocket in 1953. It is forty-six million dollars more than they received in 1952, and it is seventy-five million dollars more than they pocketed in 1951. In short, our people will have advanced, in four short years, from a total income of $155 million in 1951 to $230 million in 1954.

I give now a table showing the various sources of this income, broken down into classifications of industry or employment. The table covers the years 1951, 1952, 1953 and the present year, 1954. I shall read the details for the present year only:
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Source</th>
<th>1951</th>
<th>1952</th>
<th>1953</th>
<th>1954</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Paper, pulp, wood</td>
<td>$28,100,000</td>
<td>$34,500,000</td>
<td>$39,661,000</td>
<td>$43,850,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Defence</td>
<td>16,000,000</td>
<td>21,898,000</td>
<td>24,533,000</td>
<td>25,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Transportation</td>
<td>12,000,000</td>
<td>15,423,000</td>
<td>15,500,000</td>
<td>16,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Government of Canada</td>
<td>9,800,000</td>
<td>11,000,000</td>
<td>13,000,000</td>
<td>15,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Government of Nfld.</td>
<td>9,871,000</td>
<td>10,700,000</td>
<td>12,000,000</td>
<td>14,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mining</td>
<td>9,000,000</td>
<td>9,986,000</td>
<td>12,168,000</td>
<td>13,865,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shops and Offices</td>
<td>9,500,000</td>
<td>10,500,000</td>
<td>12,000,000</td>
<td>12,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fisheries</td>
<td>10,105,000</td>
<td>10,614,000</td>
<td>11,200,000</td>
<td>12,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Family Allowances</td>
<td>10,224,000</td>
<td>10,614,000</td>
<td>11,200,000</td>
<td>12,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manufacturing</td>
<td>4,976,000</td>
<td>6,586,000</td>
<td>7,486,000</td>
<td>8,800,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Old Age Pensions</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
<td>7,000,000</td>
<td>8,377,000</td>
<td>7,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Construction, general</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
<td>7,000,000</td>
<td>8,000,000</td>
<td>6,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frozen Fish Ind.</td>
<td>2,760,000</td>
<td>3,590,000</td>
<td>5,556,000</td>
<td>6,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dividends, Interest, etc.</td>
<td>2,500,000</td>
<td>3,500,000</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unemployment Insurance</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
<td>1,500,000</td>
<td>1,000,000</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aviation</td>
<td>8,210,000</td>
<td>3,578,000</td>
<td>4,104,000</td>
<td>4,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motor Vehicle Trade</td>
<td>1,914,000</td>
<td>2,049,000</td>
<td>2,922,000</td>
<td>3,401,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stevedoring</td>
<td>2,400,000</td>
<td>2,500,000</td>
<td>2,700,000</td>
<td>2,700,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Municipalities, Broadcasting,</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Private Hospitals</td>
<td>1,829,000</td>
<td>2,173,000</td>
<td>2,597,000</td>
<td>2,650,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mothers' and Dependents'</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Allowances</td>
<td>3,011,000</td>
<td>2,400,000</td>
<td>2,400,000</td>
<td>2,400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Road Work</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Veterans' Dept.</td>
<td>1,363,000</td>
<td>1,084,000</td>
<td>1,903,000</td>
<td>2,074,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Old Age Assistance</td>
<td>2,000,000</td>
<td>1,860,000</td>
<td>1,860,000</td>
<td>1,860,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous</td>
<td>3,000,000</td>
<td>4,000,000</td>
<td>5,000,000</td>
<td>6,000,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

There are a few observations that need to be made about some of the items that make up this table. The eighth item from the top is Fisheries, $12 million. This item excludes all forms of frozen fish, which is shown separately. Unemployment Insurance is shown at $5 million, which appears to be an increase of $4 over last year. In actual fact, last year's estimate of $1 million was far too low. The amount actually paid out for the year was $4,300,000. Paradoxical as it may seem, these are encouraging figures. They do not indicate great unemployment, but rather a high degree of employment. Very large numbers of men obtained enough seasonal employment in the summer months to qualify themselves for employment insurance in the winter and early spring. If the figure had been much lower it would have meant large numbers of men remaining idle throughout most of the busy season of the year. My forecast shows that I expect an even larger number of men obtaining employment of an insurable character this year, with the certainty of drawing unemployment payments resulting from this seasonal employment.

I invite attention to the figures for the paper, pulp and wood industry of our Province. They have risen. from $28 million four years ago to $43 million this year. Another very encouraging figure is that for mining. In the same four years it has risen from $9 million to $13 million. Again, manufacturing shows a most encouraging growth, from $5 million to nearly $9 this year.

If we take the paper, pulp and wood industry, together with mining, manufacturing, and fisheries both salted and frozen, we get figures that cannot help but impress us:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Paper, Pulp, Wood</th>
<th>Mining</th>
<th>Total</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1951</td>
<td>$54,941,000</td>
<td></td>
<td>$54,941,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1952</td>
<td>$64,466,000</td>
<td></td>
<td>$64,466,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1953</td>
<td>$74,315,000</td>
<td></td>
<td>$74,315,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1954</td>
<td>$83,515,000</td>
<td></td>
<td>$83,515,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From $55 million to $85 million in four years is striking progress indeed in our basic industries.

As I have been dealing in figures that touch on the economic position of our Province it might be useful if I gave here a brief description of this Government’s policy in the whole matter of Newfoundland’s economy. Opponents of the Government have been successful in at least one of their efforts: they have succeeded in distorting that policy into a totally unrecognizable caricature of the reality. It is to the eternal credit of this Government that from the moment it came into power five years ago it was able to evade entanglement in the age-old romanticism and economic nonsense that had passed for economic policy in government circles. It is to their eternal credit that they were able to go straight as an arrow to the vital truths of economic common-sense.

This Government adopted a policy of development. This was not a policy of industrialism, although it included industrialism. It was not a policy of agricultural development, although this also was included. The Government’s belief, to which it has adhered with utter tenacity, is that development must proceed along every economic front: it must include development of our minerals, of our water-powers, of our timber, of our soil, of our fisheries. It must include the building of factories. It must include the building of roads and bridges to enable people and goods to move quickly and economically. It must include the building of schools to give the Province a well-educated people and vocational schools to give us skilled tradesmen. It must include the building of hospitals and clinics and hospital boats and air ambulances to raise the standard of physical health.

Development must advance on all fronts in a grand assault upon the ramparts of poverty.

The problem was an economic one, and the solution had to be economic too.

Here is the impressive record of this Government from the first day of Confederation five years ago:

1. We instituted the greatest program of economic survey Newfoundland has ever seen. This included the retention of great companies to make water-power surveys, timber surveys and mineral surveys. This whole program was conducted on a far-flung scale, and has cost over a million dollars up to this time.

2. We organized the Newfoundland and Labrador Corporation, popularly known as NALCO. This is a quite unique organization in North America, combining in its shareholders a number of private enterprise interests together with the Government of the Province. NALCO was formed to promote an energetic campaign of prospecting and survey over large areas of the Province entrusted to the Corporation, and to bring private enterprise groups into the Province to engage in such prospecting. NALCO has already spent, and procured the spending of many hundreds of thousands of dollars on these purposes in the past three years, and some very promising finds have resulted. The biggest of these is the great iron-ore discovery in the Lake Wabush section of Labrador.

3. We instigated the organization of the great British Newfoundland Corporation, popularly known as BRINCO. This new body is in the direct line of the great development bodies of the British Colonial Empire of great days now, for the most part, no more. It is the brain-child of the Premier of Newfoundland, it enlisted the enthusiastic personal intervention of the Prime Minister of England, Sir Winston Churchill, and its birth was brought about by the historic House of Rothschild. It is made up of more than twenty great and famous companies whose names are household words in the United Kingdom and many other parts of the world. Newfoundland was greatly impressed when the directors of this great Company announced a few weeks ago their decision to spend up to one million dollars in a preliminary survey of the Hamilton River watershed in Labrador. I am persuaded that one of the great hydroelectric developments of the world is likely to result from this survey. BRINCO has already, after only one summer's work in the field, found encouraging indications of mineralization within its concession area, and I know that all Newfoundlanders will join with me in wishing this great British development corporation the maximum good fortune in their explorations and surveys in this Province. I have heard the formation of the British Newfoundland Corporation described as the greatest single achievement of this or any Government in Newfoundland's history. Whether or not this is literally so, I do not hesitate to describe it as one of the greatest in our history.

4. We were successful in inducing the Government of Canada to join with us in the creation of the Fisheries Development Committee. Working for nearly two years under the chairmanship of the Chief Justice of Newfoundland, Sir Albert Walsh, this committee conducted the most painstakingly thorough survey of the fishing industry, of the fishery potential, and of the needs of the industry that ever was accomplished in the history of British North America. We have been busy in this present session of the House enacting legislation to launch our great fishery development program. This will be by far, indeed it will be incomparably, the greatest development program ever known in the fisheries of the northern half of this continent. The Government of Canada have agreed to participate with us in bearing the costs of this great development, which, I expect, is likely to cost as much as $100,000,000 on all counts over a period of twelve or fifteen years. It is our ambition, as a Government, to make our fisheries thoroughly modern, thoroughly efficient, and thoroughly prosperous.

Even before embarking upon this great fishery development program we had followed consistently a policy of assisting the fishing industry with loans to enable them to expand and improve their facilities. We have extended financial assistance in excess of $7,000,000 to some fourteen Newfoundland fishery companies, while loans to two other companies, totalling the best part of another $3,000,000, are pending and are more than likely to be approved.

We believe that no loans or investments that the Government can make will produce sounder results than those made in the fisheries. In the calendar year 1953, for instance, the plants to which we had lent the $7 million, employed some 3,100 workers and paid them $3½ million in wages. They bought fish from 439 dragger fishermen to the value of $1¼ million, and from 290 other fishermen to the value of $1.3 million. Thus these plants paid out in cash, in 1953, in wages and in fish prices to fishermen the handsome sum of $6¼ million.

Nor is that all; these same loans will this year create nine additional fishery plants that will employ 750 more workers at $1 million in wages, and will buy fish from another 1200 inshore fishermen for at least another $1 million.

Thus we find that by lending $7 million to a number of private companies operating in the fishing industry we have caused expansion and improvement that employs 4000 workers and buys fish from 4000 fishermen. The total of the wages and the amount paid out for fish will be a little over $8 million a year. This appears to us to be very sound business indeed for the Government. The money has been loaned at interest. It will return to the Treasury but it will have lubricated the ways for launching a great new earning-power for some 8,000 of our people.

These, Mr. Speaker, are truly great results. I think it is the simple truth to say that this Government, in the past five years, has done more for the development of our fisheries than any Government in our history; and this even before we came to the launching of our present great joint Federal-Provincial fishery development program.

5. We have directly brought about the creation of fifteen entirely new industries in Newfoundland. I refer here, of course, to the new industrial plants.

Three of these—the cement mill, the gypsum wallboard mill, and the birch veneer, plywood, flooring and door mill—were built by the Government at the Government’s expense. The cement mill has since been sold, the birch plant has been leased to a private company, and the gypsum wallboard plant is being operated by a Crown company until a satisfactory purchaser is found for it.

The other twelve plants have been launched by European companies by means of cash loans made to them by us. These loans, all of which bear interest, are for periods which vary between ten and fifteen years.

Of the fifteen new plants three are in full production, eleven are in part production, and one has not yet finished construction of its plant. Most of the eleven that are in part production began to produce within the past few weeks or months, and can scarcely be said to have commenced operations as yet.
In all of these plants our cash outlay was about $17 million.

I am sure the House will be glad to hear that although as yet only three of the fifteen plants are in full production, over 2000 workers are already employed. Of this number over 1800 are native-born Newfoundlanders, while fewer than 200 of them are European settlers. These settlers are the key technicians of the industries, and they are for the most part men and women of skills that are rare for Newfoundland. They are excellent citizens, and they will make good Canadians.

Already these new industries are paying out $4 million in wages, and in 1955 the figure will go beyond $5 million.

I am sure that the great majority of our people, indeed the overwhelming majority, have nothing but goodwill for these new industries. Most people realize that it would be highly unusual if all of them were able to go into smooth production without difficulty or obstacle. They have experienced, and doubtless will for some time continue to experience, difficulties in their way. This is pretty much the experience of new industries wherever they may start, and it would be rather silly to expect Newfoundland to be radically different in this regard.

Cement, gypsum, plasterboard, fibreboard, veneer, plywood, hardwood flooring, hardwood doors, storage batteries, rubber boots, woolen clothing, leather footwear, fancy leathergoods, leather itself, leather clothing—these are the new commodities that must now be added to the fish and the newsprint paper and the minerals that have constituted the mainstay of Newfoundland’s industrial production before the present Government came into power five years ago. It is a distinguished and valuable contribution that the Government have made to the strengthening of our Island economy.

6. We have appointed a Royal Commission on Forestry. This is headed by the distinguished Canadian forestry expert, General Kennedy, whose report in Ontario now forms the basis of forestry policy for the Government of that Province. We are confident that this Royal Commission will give us a sound and dependable policy for all forestry matters, and that our economy will be further strengthened by our implementation of the Commission’s recommendations.

7. We have appointed still another Royal Commission, to investigate and report on the whole question of agriculture in Newfoundland. We have been fortunate in persuading Dean Shaw, a great Canadian agronomist, to accept the leadership of this Commission, and we are confident that we shall be able to follow safely the policy and program that they will lay down for us.

Our accomplishments in the past five years constitute, it seems to me, a great and noble contribution to the upbuilding of this new Province of Canada. It is doubtless true that this Government have had a greater opportunity to serve Newfoundland in this direction than did any of our predecessors, but then it is equally true that we have lived up to that greater opportunity.

Every proud and sensitive Newfoundlander shrinks from the thought of having his Province regarded elsewhere in Canada as a burden on the nation as a whole. Our intense desire is that Newfoundland should be self-supporting, that she should not lean on Canada as a whole but should instead contribute to the growing greatness of Canada. This, in this Government's view, is possible only if we strengthen and develop our own Newfoundland economy.

We have not the slightest desire or intention of ceasing to be Newfoundlanders. We shall become good Canadians all the more readily as we become better Newfoundlanders. We shall be all the prouder of Canada as we have more reason to be proud of Newfoundland.

Having dealt at sufficient length, as I think, with the purely economic side of our affairs, I turn now at once to the less interesting though admittedly important financial side, I shall give a quick review of the financial year just past, and a somewhat longer forecast of the year upon which we have recently entered.

There were, in the year just past, the usual variations between the estimates of revenue and expenditure made a year in advance compared with the actual out-turn for the year. In total, however the forecast was remarkably close to the actual results. I estimated an expenditure of $32.1 million, whereas the actual expenditure was $32.4 millions, a difference of a mere $300,000. A year ago I estimated a revenue of $36,091,000; the actual revenue was $36,095,000 a difference of $4,000. (It should be understood that these figures are subject to variation following upon final audit).

I give now my forecast for the year 1954-55.

I estimate that our revenue and expenditure will be as follows:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Revenue</th>
<th>$39,200,300</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Expenditure</td>
<td>$35,540,200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surplus</td>
<td>$3,660,100</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

I shall deal in some little detail with the expenditure side first. There is an increase in Consolidated Fund Services vote of $722,400. Of this amount, $420,000 is for interest and the sinking fund on a new $12,000,000 issue of Newfoundland bonds. I propose to ask this House for the necessary authorization to float this issue in the immediate future. Most of the remainder of this three-quarter million increase is to liquidate certain Treasury bills issued to the various Loan Boards in respect of temporary borrowings made by us to assist in financing the $900,000 advance which we made to the fishermen in connection with their 1953 fish production.

There is an increase of $128,000 in the Department of Finance. Of this, an amount of $50,000 is allocated to meet the costs of the Commission of Enquiry into our financial position. This is the committee of distinguished Newfoundlanders who have assumed the great responsibility of preparing Newfoundland's case for presentation to the Royal Commission that will review the financial impact of Confederation as forecast in the Terms of Union.

Four departments, namely, Education, Public Works, Health and Public Welfare between them account for $2,847,000 of the total net increase of $3,430,400 shown in the estimates as compared with last year. The Department of Education shows the heaviest individual increase, namely, $1,434,400 over the estimate of a year ago. Of this large sum no less an amount than $1,308,000 has been provided under denominational school grants, inclusive of rather more than a million dollars inserted to cover the recent increase in the salaries of our teachers.

I am sure that the House will be interested to know that in the year 1940-41 the expenditure on Education was $1½ millions out of a total of $15½ millions, or about 10%. In the year 1944-45 the total for Education was $2.8 millions or approximately 11% of the total. In 1949-50 Education cost $4 millions or some 14% of the total expenditure of that year.
In the year for which I am now forecasting, our educational expenditure on current account will be about $7.3 millions out of a grand total expenditure of $35.5 millions, or approximately 20%.

We have thus seen the annual expenditure of Education grow from $1.5 millions in 1940-41 to $4 millions in 1949-50, and to $7.3 millions in the present year; and, as I have just said, the proportion has grown from 10% in 1940-41 to approximately 20% in the current year. This Government glories in the contribution it is making to the cause of education in Newfoundland. We hold that all other progress is mere mockery until we have a soundly educated people.

In the Department of Health there is an increase of $970,000. Over a half million dollars of this arises from a change in the method of re-munerating the staffs of the institutions. In previous years it was customary to pay net salaries only, leaving the cost of board and lodging to be supplied out of the appropriate sub-heads of the vote of each individual institution. This has been altered so that gross salaries are not paid and deductions made therefrom in accordance with the type of lodging provided and with the number of meals supplied daily. Deductions in this regard are reflected under the revenue estimates where collections of some $500,000 are anticipated on this account in the current year. Expansion of existing health services (which is self balancing through receipts from the Canadian Government) shows an increase of $100,000. The balance is made up of anticipated small additions throughout the entire department.

The Department of Public Works shows an increase of $331,500 and the roads provisions account for the greater part of this growth. The balance is to be found under maintenance of public buildings.

A net increase of $111,000 under Public Welfare is due, in the main, to the transfer of $90,000 from Health in connection with provision for board and lodging of patients and attendants.

I have stated that our current account expenditure for 1954-55 is estimated at $35,540,200. Let us now look at the Revenue Estimates for the year, which I estimate in a grand total of $39,200,300. Of this total $27,898,800, or an increase of $1.4 millions, will be brought into the Exchequer Account through the agency of the Department of Finance.

Of this $27.8 million, an amount of $17,919,100 is recorded under the sub-heading "Dominion of Canada" and compares exactly with the same estimate of one year ago, the third annual decrease of $850,000 under Transitional Grant being balanced by the increase in the estimated yield (according to figures supplied by Ottawa) under the Tax Rental Payments.

The increase of $1.4 millions under this Head of Revenue is due as to $370,000 of it to Gasoline Taxation. The rate of tax is to be increased from the existing fourteen cents to fifteen cents a gallon and legislation to implement this increase will be introduced; the $370,000 is made up of $170,000 from the augmented rate of tax plus a further $200,000 which appears to be warranted by the growth in motor vehicle registrations.

The major portion of the increase under Finance is anticipated to arise under the Social Security Assessment which reveals a better improvement of $1 million over the 1953-54 estimate owing, largely, to an improvement and general tightening up of our methods of ensuring that proper returns are made with all promptness.

The anticipated increase by $154,000 under Public Works is due, in the main, to the growth in receipts from license fees for motor vehicles and drivers.

Of anticipated collections under Health at an $878,100 improvement over 1953-54, $511,000 is to be derived from a new source of revenue (collections in respect of board and lodging in institutions) to which I made some reference when dealing with the Health expenditure estimates. Apart from this factor and an increase by nearly a hundred thousand dollars by way of Federal Health Grants, the main increase is $250,000 under the Cancer Control Tax. This increase is contingent upon the passing of amending legislation, which will be introduced in due course, to widen the field of application of the tax upon admissions to entertainments.

Fisheries and Co-operatives exhibits an increase of $470,000 which is entirely due to the anticipated recoveries (at the rate of a dollar and twelve cents a quintal) in respect of advances, made during late 1953 and early 1954 on account of landings of fish of 1953 catch.

Finally, there is but one Head which reveals collections at a lower level than that anticipated for the previous year. Mines and Resources shows an anticipated decline of $266,000 of which $150,000 is attributable to the disappearance of the item Sale of Beaver Pelts (there will be no trapping in 1954); $45,000 is due to the discontinuation of recoveries from Nalco on account of services rendered on Field and Geophysical Surveys; and an anticipated decline by $60,000 is recorded under Timber Royalties consequent upon the downward revision of rates established in 1953.

I would direct the attention of this House to a revision, a great improvement in my opinion, in the form of recording revenue which is used for the first time in the 1954-55 Estimates. With this system, which shows types of revenue under subheadings common to all Departments, it is a comparatively easy matter to extract information in the form used by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics for treating with the revenue of all Provinces. On this basis, our total current account revenue shows up as follows:
It is of interest to note that the recorded or estimated receipts, as the \begin{table}[h]
\centering
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|c|}
\hline
\textbf{Source of Funds} & \textbf{1954-55} & \textbf{1953-54} \\
\hline
Taxation & $9,820,000 & 25.1 \% & 22.7 \% \\
Interest & 855,400 & 2.2 \% & 2.2 \% \\
Privileges, Licenses, Permits & 1,888,300 & 4.9 \% & 5.2 \% \\
Contributions, other Governments & 2,922,300 & 5.8 \% & 6.0 \% \\
Other Income & 291,000 & 0.8 \% & 0.7 \% \\
Sales and Services & 5,181,700 & 13.2 \% & 12.4 \% \\
Fines and Forfeitures & 99,000 & 0.2 \% & 0.2 \% \\
Non-Revenue Receipts & 821,200 & 2.1 \% & 1.0 \% \\
\hline
Sub-total & 21,275,900 & 54.3 \% & 50.4 \% \\
Canada, Subsidies & 17,924,400 & 45.7 \% & 49.6 \% \\
\hline
\textbf{Grand Total} & $39,200,300 & 100.0 \% & 100.0 \% \\
\hline
\end{tabular} \end{table}

recorded or estimated receipts, as the case may be, from 1949/50 to 1954/55 reveal that the proportion of our receipts derived from our own resources have been 35\%, 45.6\%, 48.1\%, 48.9\%, 50.4\%, and 54.3\% while subsidies from the Government of Canada during the same period have been 65\%, 54.4\%, 51.9\%, 51.1\%, 49.6\%, and 45.7\% of our total revenue.

Capital expenditure is estimated in a grand total of $17,492,500 which shows an increase of nearly six millions of dollars over the corresponding total for the previous year.

Broadly speaking, this rather large sum may be set out by services in the following manner:

\begin{table}[h]
\centering
\begin{tabular}{|c|c|c|}
\hline
\textbf{Source of Funds} & \textbf{1954-55} & \textbf{1953-54} \\
\hline
Roads & $7,430,000 & 42.5 \% & 38.9 \% \\
Fisheries Development & 3,405,000 & 19.5 \% & 13.0 \% \\
Manufacturing Development & 2,763,100 & 15.8 \% & 22.3 \% \\
Buildings, Educational & 1,110,000 & 6.3 \% & 8.8 \% \\
\textbf{Public} & 883,800 & 5.1 \% & 9.7 \% \\
\textbf{Other} & 848,100 & 4.8 \% & 5.6 \% \\
Ferries & 500,000 & 2.9 \% & 0.9 \% \\
Sundry Services & 441,500 & 2.5 \% & 0.9 \% \\
Sundry Development & 111,000 & 0.6 \% & 0.5 \% \\
\hline
\textbf{Grand Total} & $17,492,500 & 100.0 \% & 100.0 \% \\
\hline
\end{tabular}
\end{table}

Of the increase by nearly six millions of dollars, $3,186,700 has been provided under the Department of Public Works. The major increase is under Roads ($3 millions) and the balance is attributable to provisions for Ferry Landings at Bell Island-Portugal Cove and Placentia; the in-increased provision under Roads springs from our determination to press forward as fast as possible with Trans-Canada Highway and other highway construction.

An increase of $1,909,000 is exhibited under the Fisheries and Co-operatives where the provisions for Loans to the Fishing Industry and advances to the Fisheries Development Authority show at sums of approximately $300,000 and $1,600,000 in excess of last year’s provisions.

The only other increase of major proportions will be found under Municipal Affairs and Supply in a sum of $490,000 of which $400,000 is due to provisions for Co-operative Housing.

Having applied offsetting revenue on Capital Account—in the main, Ottawa’s payments in respect of shared services such as the Trans-Canada Highway item—estimated at $3,053,900, we are left with a net Capital expenditure for the year of $14,438,600, or, following the application of the Current Account surplus of $3,660,100, to $10,778,500 as exhibited on page 3 of the printed Estimates.

I feel that it would be useful if I gave an account of our cash surplus account to the end of March past, which brings us to the end of the first five years of Confederation.

The House will remember that on the date of Confederation the Government of Newfoundland was in possession of a very considerable surplus. This was in two forms. First there was the amount that existed in cash, and then there was an amount that was the total of a number of assets that did not exist in cash. These non-cash assets consisted of such things as the fleet of Clarenville boats, arrears of income tax due the Treasury, and other items. After the date of Confederation some of these non-cash assets were turned into cash from time to time, a process which goes on to this day.

We began as a Province of Canada with a cash surplus of $41,232,659. To this the following amounts have been added since 1949-50:

By turning the non-cash surplus into cash:
- 1950-51: $1,798,358
- 1951-52: 862,949
- 1952-53: 225,777
- 1953-54: 184,566: $3,071,650

By excesses of current revenue over expenditure:
- 1950-51: $649,490
- 1951-52: 1,698,399
- 1952-53: 6,742,708
- 1953-54: 2,740,512: $11,831,109

By the sale of the $10 million issue, 1952:

Making a total surplus for five years of: $65,985,428

Including the excess earnings on current account, and the proceeds of the loan of the year before last, we thus find that to the end of the first five years of Confederation we have taken in a grand total of almost exactly $66 million under the Financial Surplus Account.

From this total we have withdrawn the following for expenditure as shown:

1949-50:
- Current account deficit: $3,735,875
1949-50 to 1953-54 inclusive:

Economic development and extensions to the public services: $51,418,209

Liquidation of pre-union liabilities: $252,374

$55,406,458

Having taken in a total of $66 million, and spent $55\frac{1}{2} million of it, we have still an amount of approximately $10\frac{1}{2} million. This amount lies on deposit with the Government of Canada to our credit, and draws interest at the rate of 2\%.

MR. SMALLWOOD: To a point of order. Mr. Speaker—I am sorry to interrupt my colleague. I have never seen, Sir, such discourtesy in my life, and have never heard it—from the moment my honourable colleague commenced his speech at least three and sometimes four of the members of the Opposition have kept up a conversation quite audible to this side of the House. It is scandalous and disgraceful.

MR. POWER: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I don’t mind it at all.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well I do. It is scandalous.

MR. POWER: We are permitted by the Terms of Union to withdraw it only for the purpose of meeting any deficits we may incur on current account revenue but it will become a free balance on the first of April, 1957.

Having given the House this general outline of the surplus, I think it would be equally useful if I now gave an accounting of the sum of $51\frac{1}{2} million noted in the foregoing table. I refer to the amount we have spent in the past five years on economic development, and on extensions to the public services.

This amount was expended in the extension and improvement of the physical assets or properties of the public service and on economic development as follows:

Public Services

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Grants and Loans to Town Councils</td>
<td>$808,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Public Housing and Slum Clearance</td>
<td>1,676,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>School Buildings and Equipment</td>
<td>2,732,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Construction of Public Buildings</td>
<td>574,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Construction and Equipment of Hospitals</td>
<td>5,824,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Roads, Bridges and Ferries</td>
<td>15,838,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>$27,472,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Economic Development

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Advanced to Loan Boards</td>
<td>$772,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Surveys of Natural Resources</td>
<td>605,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Invested in NALCO Shares</td>
<td>900,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loaned to Fish Companies, etc.</td>
<td>2,419,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Invested in Crown Industrial Plants</td>
<td>11,161,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Loaned to New Industrial Plants</td>
<td>6,500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>$22,355,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Miscellaneous

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td>1,591,000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

| Total                                             | $51,418,000|
I would not wish to leave the House under the impression that the amounts I have shown represent the total of what the Government have expended on all the items in the foregoing table. They represent only what we have spent on capital account, and do not include large sums spent on current account.

This observation applies to Town Councils, hospitals, schools, roads and such services. Indeed, much more has been spent on these services on ordinary or current account than on capital account.

I should also remind the House that the sum shown as loaned to fish companies represents actual cash that passed from the Treasury. Much more than this sum was made available to assist the fishing industry to expand and improve by means of our guarantee of bank loans to fishing companies.

The amount shown as having been spent on surveys of natural resources represents only what came from the surplus for this purpose. Very much more was spent on current account during the same period.

I am confident that it will come as a surprise to some of our people to learn once again that the whole of the surplus was not expended on economic development. Opponents of the Government have harped so much, in recent years, on the loans made to private industrial companies to help them establish new factories, that many people imagine that virtually the whole of the surplus was spent for this purpose.

It will probably come as an even greater surprise to some people to learn that $23 million of the amount expended is recoverable and will return to the Treasury, most of it paying interest to the Exchequer in the meantime. This figure is made up as follows:

Invested
- Housing $1,676,000
- Loan Boards 772,000
- Nalco Shares 900,000
- Crown Plants 11,161,000 - $14,509,000

Loaned
- Fish Companies $2,419,000
- New Industrial Plants 6,500,000 $8,919,000

$23,428,000

Bearing in mind the $10½ millions in cash deposited in Ottawa, this means, therefore, that we still have an amount of approximately $34 millions remaining of the $66 millions which were available to us.

This, then, is the story of the year that is past and my forecast of the year that is upon us. It is a picture of which we need feel no foreboding whatsoever; it is, on the contrary, one which inspires confidence in Newfoundland and in ourselves. Newfoundland is moving surely ahead; we have emerged from the obscurity of our old isolation and entered boldly into the stream of North American living.

Newfoundland has great and valuable natural resources of fish and minerals and timber and water power and soil. She has stout-hearted people of unsurpassed racial and national origins. She has joined in union with a great British nation. She has a Government that is moved by unshakeable faith in Newfoundland’s destiny.

The combination is irresistible.
Greatness is her due, as surely as the sparks fly upward.

MR. POWER : Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the Chair.

MR. SPEAKER : The motion is that I do now leave the Chair, and the House go into committee of ways and means.

MR. SMALLWOOD : I move, Mr. Speaker, that the debate be adjourned until tomorrow.

On motion debate adjourned until tomorrow.

MR. POWER : Mr. Speaker, I beg to inform you I have a message from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

Message read by Mr. Speaker.
Government House, St. John's, Newfoundland.

The Honourable
the Minister of Finance:

I, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Newfoundland, transmit estimates of sums required for the Province for the year ending 31st March, 1955, and in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act of 1867, as amended, I recommend the estimates to the House of Assembly.

(Sgd.) LEONARD OUTERBRIDGE, Lieutenant-Governor.
31st May, 1954.

MR. W. J. BROWNE : Mr. Speaker, I understand that the House is to go into Committee of Supply at the present time. If it is the intention to move the House into committee of Supply I would like to raise a matter at this time. I believe it is the practice in all Legislatures in Canada that at this time it is open to any member of the House to raise a grievance. The reason I wish to raise it is that the Hansard for the Newfoundland Legislature has not been published since 1949 and it is extremely difficult for any one who was not present to know what has gone on during the several past sessions since 1954 and find what has been done on several matters. I feel this is a matter to which the Government should give attention very soon, because we have no way of finding out what speeches have been made, and figures have been tabled and answers given which need not have been asked but however had to be asked again this year.

On motion the House moved into a Committee of Supply:

MR. POWER : Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to table a copy of the estimates.

On motion the Committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again tomorrow.

Report received. Committee of Supply ordered to sit again tomorrow.

MR. SMALLWOOD : Mr. Speaker, I move all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred.

MR. HOLLETT : Mr. Speaker, before you put that motion may I be permitted to ask the Honourable the Premier if it is the intention to go on with this debate on tomorrow or on Wednesday?

MR. SMALLWOOD : I thought I would speak on that on the motion to adjourn.

Motion that all further orders of the day do stand deferred, carried.
MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Tuesday, at 3:00 of the clock. In so doing Mr. Speaker, may I say that we hope that the business of the House will proceed as usual tomorrow at 3:00 of the clock. I can’t say at the moment what orders will be called at that time. I would rather doubt that the Committee of Ways and Means or the Committee of Supply will be called at the early part of the sitting tomorrow at least; it might be at a later stage. There is no desire that they should not have all the time they need to discuss and consider these matters before they begin to debate them. In the meantime we have a lot of other business which can be proceeded with. No occasions exist, that I know of, for rushing the commencement of the actual debate on the Budget Speech or rushing the going into Committee of the Whole to discuss the estimates.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Honourable the Premier what they propose to go ahead with—there are several important measures—we would like to be prepared.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have already said, Mr. Speaker, I don’t know. All the orders on the order paper are of importance, and have been on the order paper quite some time, and all members on both sides ought to be ready to discuss all the matters that are on the order paper. It is not at all the practice of this House to announce the day before what orders will be called on the following day. It is the practice in certain Houses, but not in this one. All I can say is that any of the current orders may be called, but these two, Committee of the Whole on Ways and Means, and Committee of the Whole on Supply will not be called in the early part of the day and possibly not at all during tomorrow.

On motion the House at its rising adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 1, at 3:00 of the clock.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions

None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees

None.

Notice of Motion

None.

Notice of Questions

None.
HON. G. POWER (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answers to Questions No. 99, 100 and 101.

QUESTION NO. 99:

1. Will the honourable member be good enough to restate this part of the Question? What does he mean by "the total amount of interest paid as of 1/4/52"? Does he mean the total amount of interest paid in respect of each loan since its inception, or does he mean the total of interest payments in respect of Sinking Fund investments, the aggregate being subdivided between the loans involved?

2. 7/1/54 $3\frac{1}{4}\%$ $96.55.

3. Amount Borrowed

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Board</th>
<th>Interest Rate</th>
<th>Interest Paid to 31/3/54</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(i) Industrial Loan $45,000</td>
<td>1%</td>
<td>Nil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(ii) Fisheries Loan $225,000</td>
<td>1%</td>
<td>Nil</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(iii) Co-operative Loan $30,000</td>
<td>1%</td>
<td>Nil</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

QUESTION NO. 100:

(i) His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor

To thirty nights' subsistence in London for His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Outerbridge while attending the Coronation @ $50 per night $1,500.00

Railway transportation, St. John's to Gander and return $167.63

Total $1,667.63

(ii) The Hon. the Premier

To Sea Subsistence enroute to United Kingdom for Mr. and Mrs. Smallwood 6 days @ £1 per diem £6.00

Nine nights' subsistence in London for Mr. and Mrs. Smallwood @ £21 per night 189.00

Sundry entertainment 10.00

Seventeen nights' subsistence in London for Mrs. Smallwood @ £10 per night 170.00

Sea Subsistence enroute to Newfoundland for Mrs. Smallwood, 6 days @ 10s. 3.00

Total £378 @ $2.81 = $1,062.18 £378.00
(iii) The Hon. the Minister of Education
To Sea Subsistence enroute to United Kingdom for Mr. and Mrs. Chalker, 6 days @ £1 per diem £ 6/0/0
Twenty-five nights' subsistence in London and environs for Mr. and Mrs. Chalker @ £21 per night 525/0/0
Official entertainment 147/0/0
Sea Subsistence enroute to Newfoundland for Mr. and Mrs. Chalker, 6 days @ £1 per diem 6/0/0
£684 @ $2.81 = $1,922.04

(iv) The Hon. the Minister of Provincial Affairs
(on behalf of Nfld. Division of Canadian Legion—seven members)
To advance for transportation and subsistence $6,500.00
Tickets to Spithead Revue and transportation to and from Revue 275.88
London to Beaumont Hamel and stop-over of five days and return to London 629.44
$7,404.82

(v) Transportation for Newfoundland Government Party
To Furness Withy & Co. Ltd—Transportation to and from United Kingdom $2,254.00
Furness Withy & Co. Ltd.—Transportation to London 41.79
Trans-Canada Air Lines—Fare to United Kingdom and Return (His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and Lady Outerbridge) 725.40
$3,021.19

QUESTION NO. 101:

1. Inspection Staff
(i) Permanent Inspectors
   Walter Chambers 2/7/53 Corner Brook Area
   K. M. White 3/8/53 Grand Falls Area
   S. F. Foley 17/2/54 Corner Brook Area
   A. Gallant 1/3/54 Bonavista South—Trinity North Area
   F. Mercer 1/3/54 Avalon Peninsula
(ii) Temporary Inspectors
   M. Andrews 2/7/53 Burin Peninsula
   P. M. Maloney 7/7/53 Bonavista North Area
   G. Hicks 24/2/54 Fogo Area
   R. P. Healey 8/3/54 St. John's Area
   P. F. Linehan 3/5/54 Branch—Cape Shore Area
(iii) On Secondment
   F. Maher July, 1953 General
2. Prosecutions

(i) Sixty-seven prosecutions were instituted.

(ii) Twenty-one convictions have been registered; the balance of forty-six prosecutions were withdrawn because the defendant in each case had filed his delinquent returns and paid all assessments due between the time of the issue of the Writ and the Court hearing and as all these were first offences, it was decided to withdraw them.

(iii) (a) Forty-three prosecutions were taken before Magistrate H. O'Neill at St. John's;

(b) eight prosecutions were taken before Magistrate B. White at Bell Island;

(c) twelve prosecutions were taken before Magistrate Abbott at Grand Falls;

(d) three prosecutions were taken before Magistrate Strong at Corner Brook; and

(e) one prosecution was taken before Magistrate C. Sheppard at Brigus.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to hand down the answer to Question No. 84, Order Paper of May 14.

QUESTION NO. 84:

(1), (2) and (3). The documents requested by the honourable member are available in the Department of Finance in microfilmed and original form, in respect of the period from 1st December, 1950, to date. They are now being gathered together and may, in due course, be examined at that Department during normal working hours. The Department will inform the honourable member when all relevant items have been assembled.

(4). The statement requested by the honourable member is now being prepared but it should be noted that its preparation may take some time. For the period 1st April, 1949, to 30th November, 1950 (i.e. prior to the setting up of the Government's central accounting system), the required information is available only from the various Departments. For the period 1st December, 1950, to 31st March, 1952, it will be necessary to check a large number of Vote Ledger Cards in order to extract therefrom references to payments to W. J. Lundrigan, Ltd. From 1st April, 1952, the information is more or less readily available.

MR. F. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, before you enter upon the Orders of the Day, there are two questions on the Order Paper of May 26, No. 98 and 99.

MR. SPEAKER: I have notice to the effect that answers were being prepared.

Orders of the Day

Third reading of Bill "An Act Further to Amend the Slum Clearance Act."

Bill read a third time, ordered passed and title be as on the order paper.
Committee of the Whole on sundry Bills—Items 3 to 11 inclusive.

On motion Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act Respecting the Prevention of Fire."

Clauses 1 through 3 read and carried. Clause 4 read:

MR. W. J. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, if I read this clause correctly it means that the Minister may appoint a chief fire deputy to assist the fire commissioner in a municipal area. Now the fire commissioner has already been appointed, and we know who he is. He is not a professional fire fighter and there are men in the fire department who are, men who have served for many years and some for as high as twenty years, dealing with fires every day, and dealing with very serious fires, and are very experienced men. Who is to take control if the chief of the fire department is subordinated to the fire commissioner, this new appointee, who, as far as I know, has no qualifications which make him superior to the chief of the fire department which we have in the City of St. John's. There are no experienced men of the same calibre as the men who maintain the fire department in the City of St. John's. But it seems to me it is not right and not sensible that the fire commissioner should have higher authority when there is a fire brigade such as we have in this city. Now we ought to have a statement from the Attorney General on that point. As it reads at the present time the fire commissioner seems to be the person in charge, and if a fire takes place, a serious fire who is going to give the commands? Two can't do it, one must be superior to the other. I think it should be stated in the Bill that this does not apply to the City of St. John's. I notice by the definition of municipality it is an area where a council exists, and includes the St. John's Municipality, and there seems no doubt, in this section, that it places the fire commissioner before the fire department.

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Chairman, in reply to that I can only say that the present fire commissioner is not the inexperienced party the honourable member suggests. The present appointee has been for many years studying fire prevention provisions, and, I think, theoretically he knows much more about it even than the practical men to whom he is referring. Within the last few days I have read a letter from the Dominion Fire Commissioner in which he praises and speaks very highly of our new appointee who is there now taking a course.

It must be remembered, Mr. Chairman, that the position of Fire Commissioner is not to put out fires. It is to have the general overall supervision of fire protection, fire prevention. The party to whom he refers is a specialist at putting out fires, but that is not the job of the fire commissioner. If there is a fire tomorrow the fire commissioner won't go to it. It is his job to investigate conditions which would entail a risk from fire, and somebody must be in charge. Now obviously he cannot be in charge in some of the outlying districts and not be in charge in St. John's. And we can't have a position in St. John's where it is subordinate to the local fire brigade and at the same time in charge of the fire brigade in Corner Brook, for instance. In any event his job is not to fight fires, his job is to find out what can be done to eliminate fires, such as wiring, which will come under him. Now the local fire brigade has no experience at all in wiring and other hazards which perhaps are not within the knowledge of the local fire brigade, but will be dealt with by him. I don't see any inconsistency or anything in this section, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, there is just one point which the Attorney General made when he said it would be inconsistent to have the fire commissioner to have jurisdiction over the fire brigade of Corner Brook, say, and not over the City of St. John's. I notice in the Ontario Statutes which I have been looking up, I believe it does not apply where there is a fire brigade such as we have in the City but applies mostly to places outside a metropolitan area.

MR. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, we are all a little bit concerned by this clause. We know we have here, particularly in St. John's a very efficient fire fighting service, and a very efficient fire chief. It almost looks as though he were being demoted when the Minister appoints him as assistant to the fire commissioner under this Act. I notice also in sub-clause 2 that the local, that would be the present fire chief in St. John's, serves without any remuneration whatsoever by reason of his dual capacity and also that the mayor of any town could be appointed as an assistant to the fire chief and would also have to serve without any remuneration. I don't know if I am sure you could expect the best results under these conditions. I am not sure how any mayor in any municipality is going to take the matter of being appointed by the Minister as deputy to the fire commissioner. After all, the mayor of a town has been elected by the people.

MR. CURTIS: It is purely an enabling clause, Mr. Chairman. Obviously we are not going to appoint the mayor, but there should be some person on the spot to decide to investigate fires and to keep a little check on fires, and to keep statistics with regard to fires and to notify the commissioner when there is a fire, and things like that. We do not expect these local assistants to be able to take over his duties, if so he would not be appointed.

MR. HOLLETT: Does that eliminate the R.C.M.P. There were a number of instances, I remember, in the old days when the police in any area certainly took upon themselves to report on any fires, and that sort of thing, and hazards were reported to the police and through the police to the Justice Department. Is that now the right of the R.C.M.P.?

MR. CURTIS: No. Their report now, Mr. Chairman, will go to this man, the fire commissioner. It may be that in cases where the fire commissioner holds an investigation into a fire we may dispense with the magisterial investigation except in cases where that is deemed necessary.

Clause 4 carried. Clauses 5 through 10 read and carried.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this is a very wide jurisdiction over a large number of things. I would especially refer to the recommendations to the municipal councils in respect to fire brigades and the necessary organization and equipment for such brigades and the installation and maintenance of fire alarm systems, storage, use and disposal of combustibles, explosives or other inflammable material, the construction and maintenance of fire escapes and other exit facilities in the event of fire or the alarm of fire, etc. Now I don't think that it can be argued that the newly appointed fire commissioner has practical experience—he may have theoretical knowledge, but in a large number of things like that practical experience is what counts. He cannot have experience comparable at all to the experience of the chief of the fire brigade. Now who is to be the one to recommend to the Minister the kind of apparatus or equipment necessary in fire prevention or fire fighting? Will it be the fire commissioner or the chief of the fire brigade? It seems to me it is going to generate unnecessary hard feelings between officials in a place where there is a large brigade such as here in the City of St. John's where we have three brigades, the west end, central and east end, and where they are all experienced men, otherwise they would not be in the job. To expect the fire commissioner to be able to do all these things that are set out here I think is expecting something that is not realistic—he is not able to do it. Take the question of investigations and inquiries; unless you are going to give him a very large staff how is he going to carry on these investigations? The present system of having the magistrates make the inquiry seems to me to be the most suitable for our circumstances in this country and the cheapest. If the fire commissioner has to go around the country and conduct inquiries and keep records and make reports I think that he will need to have a very large staff at his disposal. I believe it would be very unwise to give the fire commissioner such powers as are set out here especially in the City of St. John's.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, it reads: He shall, under the direction of the Minister investigate and make recommendations—there is nothing to say the Minister has to accept them. The Minister will naturally go to everybody he has under his control to get any advice necessary, and Mr. Chairman, the Minister will not only continue to get advice from his present advisers but will in addition get advice from the fire commissioner. This is clearly a case of one more additional person who can assist in the very great problem that we are facing. You must remember, Mr. Chairman, that St. John's is only one part of Newfoundland—my honourable friend thinks St. John's is the only place. Because we have a fire department in St. John's paid for by the rest of the country, largely by the three hundred thousand other people who don't live in St. John's, because of that he thinks that everything must be looked at from the angle of St. John's. There is a very serious situation in Corner Brook, Mr. Chairman, a situation the fire department is incapable of handling because they have their jobs here. One of the very first jobs the fire commissioner did after his appointment was, at my request, to go to Corner Brook and investigate the situation there. He was there some time. This is just one more additional method, Mr. Chairman, of trying to put our entire fire prevention on a sound basis. I don't think there is anything in this sub-paragraph (6) to be objected to. We are very fortunate in this country in one respect, it is true we have to pay the local fire brigade, but the government has the advantage of their assistance at all times. It is not as though they were a municipal organization and not under any department, but the fire commissioner, the fire chief, the fire superintendent are all under the same department, and there is no conflict at all, and there is nothing here to suggest that we have not confidence in the fire superintendent. We have every confidence in him. But his job is in St. John's. In so far as the overriding power of the commissioner is concerned it is purely limited to investigating for the Minister who will take advice from both.

Mr. Browne: We are now in the position where the municipal councils frequently have applications for construction of certain buildings, warehouses and storage of certain materials. To whom then, will they look for opinions and advice as to construction and storage, to the commissioner or to the fire superintendent?

Mr. Curtis: Up to now, Mr. Chairman, these people have been making application to the Chief of Police. They may still do that, or they may go direct, or even the Chief of Police may relay them to the commissioner, and the commissioner will, in collaboration with the superintendent of the fire department and others give an opinion as to what is to be done.

Clause 5 carried. Clause 6 read.

Mr. Browne: Mr. Chairman, in reference to Clause 7 (2)—I would like to ask the Attorney General—I think he stated that the fire commissioner is at present away taking a course—I notice that a very serious fire took place in the past few days. During the absence of the commissioner, who has undertaken the investigation there?

Mr. Curtis: I presume that in this case the local R.C.M.P. will make an investigation. This Act has not been yet passed, and although the commissioner has been appointed, it is purely pending the passing of this Act. The department is not as yet set up. So that I presume the same procedure will be followed as if this Bill had never come up.

Clause 7 carried, clause 8 read, carried. Clause 9 carried. Clause 10, 11 carried. Clause 12 read.

Mr. Fogwill: Mr. Chairman, under sub-section 2, would the Attorney General inform the Committee whether or not it is the intention that there be a number of local or special assistants to deal with sub-section (2). I would like to ask the Attorney General also whether local or special assistants are employed to carry out the work under sub-section 2, and I presume they would be fully qualified electrical workers with a journeyman's license?

Mr. Curtis: As I have said, Mr. Chairman, we have not as yet set up the department. It is our intention to feel our way first, and find out what is necessary and the best things to be done. My own feeling is that this commissioner would be able to call upon the entire setup of the fire department, and pick out these individuals there. I, myself, was with the fire commissioner when looking at a fire some time ago, supposed to have started by an electric short circuit or something. We at that time discussed the question of having a full-fledged line man attached to the fire department or something like that. I will say however, Mr. Chairman, although that has been in mind we have no final decision yet. It seems to me we should have in the fire department of St. John's, available to go anywhere else, a thoroughly trained electrician. Because sometimes when we go to a fire I think we should have someone on our staff who knows sufficient about electricity to cut off the mains and render conditions safe for the firemen. That is a matter very much in our minds. And it is quite obvious that when we get down to the organization of this work we will in all probability have trained men.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, the reason I raised that point is that the municipal council here in St. John's have, I understand, a fully qualified electrician and inspector, and I believe an assistant. At one time the Government did have inspectors also. The point I want to raise, Mr. Chairman, in respect to this section, is that during the past twenty-five years, many of the homes which were wired with electricity under the old standards are not suitable for the greatly expanded use of electrical appliances today. We find that many of the homes and buildings have overloaded circuits now, and the electrical installations in that sense would be called faulty, or the people themselves are overloading the circuits in many instances. In regard to that I would like to point out that this building is not up to the standard in many cases.

MR. CURTIS: I might say I had an experience of that myself in one of the houses I had, when I had to send for the electrician to repair a light in the front hall and it cost about three hundred and fifty dollars before I got through. The electricians are now as good businessmen and better than doctors, and want to rewire the whole house. I have no doubt if half of the houses in St. John's were examined tomorrow the entire electrical wiring would be condemned. I have no doubt—

HON. E. S. SPENCER (Minister of Public Works): More than that.

MR. CURTIS: I know I paid the price, and know what it is like. I know my honourable friend will feel that that matter is fully within the hands of the Government, and we don't want to jump all at once and make conditions disagreeable, but we want to crawl before we start walking and walk before we run, and to keep this fire commissioner busy checking up and whatever necessary help he feels he needs he will have it.

Clauses 12, 13 read, carried. Clause 14 read, carried. Clause 15 read.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, that Fire Protection Association there—does that include all countries? I take it, it includes England, is that right, or the United States of America, it does not mean that even outside of Canada the manufacturer is debarred?

MR. CURTIS: No, I think it is probably a North American Organization. I don't know myself.

MR. HOLLETT: Do you know whether English Applicants will be debarred under that section?

MR. CURTIS: No.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, Section 15 (1)—I believe some years ago the Commission of Government did adopt, I think it was, the Canadian National Electrical Code, and the Municipal Council of St. John's also adopted the same—I was wondering if it is any different from this code?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is the same thing.
Clause 15 carried. Clause 16 carried. Clauses 17 through 20 carried. Clause 21 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I know this section is an enabling section, and I take it, as the Attorney General’s answer to me was, that he is going to proceed slowly before taking away from the magistrates the duties they now have of holding inquiries.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, certainly in the immediate future the magistrates will continue to hold inquiries.

MR. BROWNE: And probably outside the City of St. John’s continue to hold them for much longer than here?

MR. CURTIS: I think so.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, may I ask as a matter of form—police are defined here as the R.C.M.P., or are there any others?

MR. CURTIS: I think that term includes both.

Clause 21 carried. Clauses 22 through 24 carried. Clause 25 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, in regard to that clause does that apply where there is a conflict between the fire commissioner and the chief of the fire brigade in St. John’s? It says here—where there is a conflict between the authority of the Fire Commissioner and that of an official of any municipal area the authority of the Fire Commissioner shall prevail—this might mean an interference by the fire commissioner when the chief of the fire department is fighting a fire?

MR. CURTIS: I don’t know, Mr. Chairman, whether the Act implies that or not.

MR. BROWNE: I notice in the Acts that the chief of the fire department in places like Toronto and such large cities are excluded from the Act.

MR. CURTIS: Of course, Mr. Chairman, the situation is rather different here in St. John’s. As I have already said both organizations are coming under the Attorney General, and frankly if there is any disagreement between the two he will have to settle. But somebody must in the first instance have the overriding authority and in this case, in view of the fact that the commissioner is the provincial commissioner, obviously, he is the man to have it.

Clause 25 carried.

Motion is that the committee report having passed this Bill without amendment.

Committee of the Whole on Bill; “An Act to Amend the Provincial Parks Act”:

Clause 1 carried. Clause 2 read.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, while we are on this section I wonder if I could ask the Minister whether the Government has been responsible for the improvement noticeable at Signal Hill. It has been improved considerably, and will be a great attraction, I think, to anybody who comes to the City, as a place to visit.

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Mr. Chairman, the answer is that the Government is, I understand, responsible for that, and that it was done through the Department of Public Works.

MR. BROWNE: It does not come under you?

DR. ROWE: No. It has never officially been declared a park.
MR. BROWNE: I see.

DR. ROWE: Within the near future the Government will be claiming certain areas but what will happen in respect to that I cannot predict. At the present time Signal Hill is not a park within the meaning of the Act, and never has been proclaimed as such, therefore it does not come under our department as yet.

MR. BROWNE: I remember the Minister mentioning Big Falls and the abuse of fishing in that area, have any steps been taken to prevent future abuse?

DR. ROWE: That is under consideration, Mr. Chairman, right now.

Clause 2 carried. Clause 3 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister tell us whether any officials have been appointed under this section?

DR. ROWE: No officials have been appointed whatsoever, and I think I should elaborate to say that we are doing that. So far we have been able to do it within the framework of our present departmental structure, we have a committee within the department made up of a number of responsible officers, the Crown Lands Director, Director of Wild Life and other responsible men there, chiefly directors. They have been considering a number of matters including, for example, a number of sites for our picnic fireplaces, etc. So far we have been administratively able to handle it within the department, and my feeling is that we shall be able to do so for some time in the future. But when he refers to the question of wardens within a large section, let us say Big Falls, that is a fairly large area of six square miles, and contains the most valuable scenic and other assets we have. We will obviously have to make special provisions for control of that especially in view of vulnerability to the public. I use that word advisedly due to the fact that thousands of cars can be parked near the falls and people can go down there, and of course, commit a great deal of vandalism. I might also add we have now upward of a hundred picnic sites. In the spare time the forest fire patrol are doing that, and on wet days, I don't know if any of the honourable members saw trucks distributing these tables and fire places around the coast. Days like today for example there is no work for them to do as there will obviously be no fires, and we do try to find work for them to do, and they have been able to do a very good job in the preparation of these fire places, the clearing of the sites and making the tables and installing these things in the areas. Here again we have been able to economize in the matter, and have not had to take on any new staff whatever, in spite of the fact that we have upwards of one hundred of these picnic sites now in operation.

MR. BROWNE: I can appreciate the point the honourable Minister has made. But I would like to ask him if there are any so called provincial parks apart from Big Falls?

DR. ROWE: The answer to that is; that at this moment there are no provincial parks.

MR. BROWNE: There will be?

DR. ROWE: I hope so. This is designed to bring these picnic sites within our control.

Clause carried.

Moved and seconded that the committee report having passed this Bill without amendment.
Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act Further to Amend the Corrections Act, 1958":

Moved and seconded that the committee report having passed this Bill without amendments.

Committee of the Whole, on Bill, "An Act Further to Amend the Crown Lands (Mines and Quarries) Act":

Clause 1 carried. Clause 2 read.

MR. BROWNE: Does not that certain part there give the Minister very wide powers.

DR. ROWE: On the surface it does, Mr. Chairman, but if the parent Act is read through from beginning to end it will be seen it is not too serious as it looks right here. After all the person has not a mining license but only a development license, on which he is to do a certain amount of work, incur expenses etc., and he would not hold on to his license unless he got some benefit from it, it would cost him too much money. Mr. Chairman, I think I pointed out in second reading the license holders were prevented from doing all they wished to do, and this would give us some discretionary powers.

Clause 2 carried. Clause 3 read:

Clause 3 carried, clause 4 read:

MR. BROWNE: Could the Minister tell us why that is retroactive to 1951?

DR. ROWE: That is to cover the situation where people conformed to the spirit of the Act, but where the company technically did an invalid amount of work. If it were interpreted strictly any person holding a block of land to be developed in forty acre blocks would have spent so much time and money on every forty acres, which is just a ridiculous situation, as it might even be bog or pond or something like that. That is interpreted by using the preposition "On." It has been made retroactive so as not to invalidate anything that has been done in the past.

Clause 4 carried.

Motion is the committee rise, report having passed the Bill without amendment.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act to Amend the Welfare of Children Act":

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if this would be an opportune time to ask the Minister of Public Welfare if he could lay on the Table of the House here the report of the welfare officer, where the welfare officer reported there was a certain locality in Newfoundland where the parents were not fit to live with their children and 95% of them should have their children removed?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, we decline to table any such report on the grounds that these reports do not belong to the House of Assembly but are confidential reports from civil servants to the Government and private documents. In the second place this would not be the occasion for tabling it, in the Committee on a Bill.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, the Minister has cited from it. I wonder if he would be good enough to tell us the locality now, because it must be a very serious situation to be as bad as reported.

HON. DR. H. L. POTTLE (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to say anything—
Mr. Chairman, I think the indelicacy of the remark, Mr. Chairman, is condemnation enough of the speaker.

MR. J. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, that is the provision for the repeal of paragraph (l) of sub-section (l)—reasonable compensation in a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars to a party injured: award reasonable compensation in a sum not exceeding two hundred dollars to a party injured in his person or by loss of goods, with the consent or on motion of such party.

Now if I recall section 57 correctly, that is where a child is judged delinquent and has committed some offense and people receive thereby compensation. The present allowable, I think, is fifty dollars, and this increase is certainly justified. But my feeling is that we should give some consideration to increasing that amount still further, because the damage that can be done, and frequently is done, by children under circumstances that this Act governs, quite often is a very much more substantial amount than the maximum presently contemplated. Now I realize that the Minister in presenting this draft has perhaps examined the matter, but I do suggest that five hundred dollars might perhaps be a more satisfactory figure. There is the consideration, of course, that one does not want to penalize the parents, on the other hand the rights of the injured parties should not be neglected. I quite often do have cases where the damage might run into thousands and the recovery even of five hundred dollars would be purely a nominal restitution. I have in mind a certain actual case I know of myself, and which I have mentioned to the honourable Minister previously. I do feel sure that we ought to give some consideration to the alteration of that figure of two hundred dollars as compensation and change it to five hundred dollars.

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Chairman, I thank the honourable and learned gentleman for having raised the point earlier, and thus having given some advanced notice of his feelings on this point. I think I speak for this side of the House quite fully when I say that we have no objections to having that amount raised. If the committee would agree to have it stand, as the honourable and learned member suggests, at five hundred dollars, I think that would be agreeable to us.

There is one point I have in mind, and it is a point I am sure he himself will agree with: The further up we raise the ceiling the more latitude it does give the court, and probably might give a court too much latitude. But we must at the same time provide sufficient protection for a person who has been aggrieved to a very considerable extent. We might, I suggest, Sir, let this clause stand and return to it later.

Clause 2 stand, Clauses 3 through 5 read and carried.

DR. POTTLE: I move the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Motion is the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again. Carried.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act Further to Amend the Community Councils Act":

Clauses 1 through 4 read and carried. Clause 5 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister who is in charge of this Bill could tell us how far communities have taken advantage of this Bill to become community councils?

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Supply): As to the exact number I am unable to reply. But there has been some five or six or seven since the passing of the Act who have taken advantage of it, and we have some three or four under consideration at the present time, and some interest has been shown by two or three others.

Clauses 5 through 7 carried. Clause 8 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could tell us if any community organizations have already submitted accounts in accordance with this sub-section?

MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Chairman, accounts are always submitted every year.

MR. BROWNE: Could you give us the names of places taking advantage of this?

MR. HEFFERTON: I am sorry I cannot now recall the names, I remember we had one from St. Albans, and I believe we have had one from Steady Brook. I know there are others which came in last year, but were not in time for the report.

Clause 8 carried. Clause 9 read:

MR. BROWNE: Under sub-clause 4—that seems to have been a very important provision in the original Act. Has the auditor yet been appointed? Is there anybody doing that service? It seems to me very important that a community should get off on the right foot, and get all the advice they can get at the beginning of their existence in regard to finances.

MR. HEFFERTON: I might say, that one of our officials helps to set up a council giving instructions in the procedure that should be adopted, and they assist the new organization as to official information. The audit is carried out by officials of the Department of the Auditor General.

MR. BROWNE: I see.

Clause 9 carried. Clause 10 carried. Clause 11 read:

MR. BROWNE: Is there any reason for that?

MR. HEFFERTON: I recall that when I introduced the Bill at second reading, I pointed out that the councils were given power to make resolutions subject to approval, but there was no provision in the parent Act for control, and all the change brought about here is by inserting the word "Control."

Clause 11 carried, clause 12 read:

MR. BROWNE: It seems to me a better position if it does not specify what the business would be.

MR. HEFFERTON: We are attempting to try and get clear of the arbitrary and get down to a more systematic assessment.

MR. BROWNE: It seems very good.

Clauses 12 through 14 carried.

Moved and seconded the committee report having passed the Bill.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act to Authorize the Lieutenant Governor-in-Council to enter into an Agreement with Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, Limited, Dominion Wabana Ore, Limited, and Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company, Limited":
Clause 1 read—carried. Clause 2 read:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I am under the impression that the amount of money has already been spent in connection with the endeavour to increase the output of the mine. Am I correct in that, or is that a new six million dollars?

MR. CURTIS: This whole agreement, Mr. Chairman, is really retroactively worded. The money has been spent, but we want to get the tax.

Clause 2 carried. Clause 3 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would tell us whether the provision here is very different from the provision in regard to the Iron Ore Company of Canada, who I learned will be producing this year, and expect to get out their first million tons this year—is there any difference in the principle there?

MR. CURTIS: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is a different principle altogether. In the original agreement made with the Iron Ore Company of Canada they would pay a royalty of ten cents a ton, but apparently that was abandoned afterwards, and during the term of the Commission of Government, changed to a royalty of five per cent on the profits. We could easily put a royalty on this, we believe, to get the tonnage.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, in regard to that, I wonder have the Government gone into the matter with the company with regard to the imposition of such a tax. Have discussions been entered into relative to that, and have the company considered it, and are they prepared to sign this?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, they are very anxious to sign it.

MR. HOLLETT: Very anxious to sign it? I wonder if the honourable Minister could tell us why? It is the first time I ever heard of any company ever anxious to sign an agreement for taxation.

MR. CURTIS: Because of the security it gives them for the future. At least they will know where they are now for the next twelve years.

MR. HOLLETT: Could any change of government have any effect on it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Pigs could fly!

MR. HOLLETT: On that point, I wonder if the Government thinks it is proper for them to mortgage the future—I don't know if mortgage is the word. I don't think it is quite the right thing for them to do. On the other hand I do think it is a grand thing if the Government can get some money out of this company or any other company. As I have pointed out, I can't quite understand their being over-anxious to pay ten cents a ton, but if the Minister says so I shall accept his word.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask one question—is their production now up to two million tons?

MR. SPENCER: Over two. They are aiming at three, eventually.

Clauses 3 and 4 carried. Clause 5 read:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I regret I did not know that clause 4 was being put. If I may I would like to revert back for a moment and ask the honourable Minister if that matter has been discussed with the town council of Bell Island or not?
MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Chairman, clause 4 does not refer to the town council at all.

MR. CURTIS: To public roads.

MR. HOLLETT: Oh, I see.

Clauses 5 through 8 carried. Clause 9 read:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I revert back to clause 5—that is the one I was thinking of when I asked permission to revert back to clause 4. What I am anxious to find out is, if the Government has been in consultation with the town council of Bell Island or at least the people of Bell Island through their town council to ascertain whether or not they are agreeable to that particular clause which states; the taxation imposed upon the company shall not exceed the aggregate of ten thousand dollars in any one year—I wonder if the Minister would like to make a remark on that?

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, I don't think it was discussed with the town council. As a matter of fact the town council on Bell Island has not been very active lately, and frankly that clause was taken in its entirety from the similar clause in the previous Act, which Bell Island did not take advantage of by reason of their not being incorporated before and therefore never being able to take advantage of the section.

MR. HOLLETT: That is the reason why I raised the point, Mr. Chairman. I think it would be a good idea if the Government did take it up with the council. As the Minister has pointed out there was such a section in the old Act. But I do think the town council on Bell Island should at least be consulted in the matter, as in all probability they do hope to get a certain amount of money from the company operating over there. I am wondering how much they pay the council, and Heaven knows they need a good surplus, to get the town council operating properly. They need a good town council on Bell Island. I know—I lived there six years and I know the necessity for incorporation and the active co-operation of any new industry in an area such as that.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, supplementary to that question, may I ask if this amount of four thousand under section 4 and ten thousand under section 5 are accumulative, because under clause 9 here it means a backlog of four years for which these amounts were due.

MR. CURTIS: I believe, Mr. Speaker, we shall have to have their signature to the agreement before we discuss that.

Clause 9 carried. Clause 10 read:

MR. BROWNE: I presume the Government will try and get this agreement signed, and if not, an agreement to the best of their ability?

MR. CURTIS: We can't, Mr. Chairman, sign any agreement other than that. It is either that or none. I don't think our legislation authorizes it as it does not go beyond that. We would have to come back for ratification if there is an amendment. It says in Clause 10—This amendment subject to ratification—this section ten should be stricken out obviously. I ask that that clause be stricken out, and I thank my honourable friend for drawing my attention to that.

Motion is that clause 10 be deleted—motion carried.
Motion that this Bill be passed with some amendment—carried.

Motion is that the committee report having passed this Bill with some amendments.

Carried.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, “An Act Respecting the Policies of Fire Insurance”:

Clause 1 through 9 read and carried. Clause 10 read:

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder if the Minister would tell us why that section is there?

MR. CURTIS: The point is this, Mr. Chairman, the red ink is to be limited to certain expressed provisions of the policy, for instance the particular terms to which they want to draw attention. Auditors do not want anyone else to use green ink. They want everybody to know it is their mark. It is to protect the insured. It is not to be used in any other place except as provided herein. If my honourable friend will refer back now to clause 8—that is a clause we read when my honourable friend was asleep.

MR. HOLLETT: No, I am not.

MR. CURTIS: No not now, but when you were.

MR. HOLLETT: I am asking about this one, the red ink—shall not be used on the face of the policy—

Clauses 10 through 13 carried. Clause 14 read:

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, I don’t know whether the committee would want to have this read or not. These are normal statutory conditions actually put on all policies. At any rate the Government would not agree to any amendments so perhaps we might accept these regulations.

MR. BROWNE: As a matter of fact it is exactly the same as provisions on policies, except in Clause 4 the word endorsed is spelled indorsed. On page 11, I believe clause (c) in the event of there being any other insurance on property herein destroyed, (c) is in there because there may be several kinds included in the insurance policy. I think it is usual to leave that out in the event of having any other insurance.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, if the honourable member would let these stay in I could get them confirmed.

Clause 11 carried.

MR. BROWNE: I may say I referred this to an insurance agent and he supplied me with these changes, but I looked it over generally.

MR. CURTIS: That is funny, Mr. Chairman, I also referred it to an agent since it was printed, and got no criticisms.

MR. BROWNE: On just that change.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The motion is the committee report having passed this Bill without amendment.

Carried.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, “An Act to Amend the Automobile Insurance Act”:

Clause 1 carried. Clause 2 read:

MR. BROWNE: Does the Minister know what that means—could he explain that?

MR. CURTIS: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I made a point of finding out what it meant and the answer is very interesting, at least I found it so. The automobile policy insures the owner and those driving his car with his permission. The holder of insurance is also protected under his policy when he drives the car of another person especially if the value of the second owner is not insured. In other words: I am insured to drive my car, but if the honourable member lends me his car and I drive it even if it is not insured yet it is insured when I am driving it. I am insured against accident of a third party liability—I am covered.

To establish what insurance is liable when two or more insurances are all entered in the same vehicle involved in the claim, legislation was enacted two or three years ago to the effect that the insurer of the driver of the vehicle responsible for the accident should pay off first. If his insurance were not sufficient to meet all claims then the insurer or the owner of the vehicle primarily responsible became liable for loss under the first insurance.

The proposed section 3 of the Bill revises the original order in which insurers are required to meet claims, making the insurer of the owner first liable for losses in excess of the limits of the owner's policy of the driver shall be called upon to pay. This is a much more important section than I realized when I was introducing the Bill to the House. This change is recommended for practical purposes:

In many cases of claims applicable to third parties there are also damages to the vehicle causing the damage. As the law now stands the third party claim is investigated and adjusted by the insurer of the driver, but that insurer has no interest in the damage to the car. Thus the owner insurer has to make an investigation and adjustment separately of that claim. As amended, the owner's policy will also cover the collision loss, and the insurer investigating the third party claim will also be able to take care of the collision claim. The driver's insurer is only interested in the third party claim in excess of the limits of the owner's policy, and can accept the investigation and adjustment made for the other insurer, thus saving time and money.

MR. HOLLETT: Quite clear.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, if not, I have it here in writing, and would be glad to give it to the honourable member. It is just a matter, in a judgment claim, of who pays first.

MR. HOLLETT: That applies to all automobile insurance in this country?

MR. CURTIS: Even to the Tories.

Clause carried. Bill passed without amendment.

On motion the Committee rose, and reported having passed this Bill without amendment.

Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole have considered the matters to them referred, and have passed the Bill, An Act Respecting the Prevention of Fire without amendments.

Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

(2) A Bill, An Act to Amend the Provincial Parks Act, without amendment.
Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

(3) An Act Further to Amend the Corrections Act; passed without amendment.

Report received. Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

(4) An Act Respecting the Welfare of Children Act—made some progress and asks leave to sit again tomorrow.

Report received. Ordered sit again tomorrow.

(5) An Act Further to Amend the Community Councils Act. Passed without amendment.

Report received. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

Report received. Ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole have considered the matter to them referred and have passed the Bill, "An Act to Amend the Crown Lands (Mines and Quarries) Act, without amendments.

Report received. On motion Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Committee of the Whole on Sundry Bill, Item 12 to 15 inclusive:

Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority";

Clause 1 and 2 read and carried.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, if you would be willing to call it 6:00 of the clock we could adjourn and resume at 8:00 of the clock.

MR. CHAIRMAN: It being now 6:00 of the clock I will now leave the Chair until 8:00 of the clock.

NIGHT SESSION

June 1, 1954.

The House met at 8:00 of the clock.

Committee of the Whole on Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority."

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, now we are dealing with that clause which provides for the establishment of a Crown Corporation called the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority, I feel the Minister will feel it is opportune to let the House know what are the terms on which this authority is being set up, what is the contract being made individually with these three men who have been selected on account of their talents and experiences to organize and direct such an important establishment as has been announced here in this House. We should be informed as to what the salaries are and what the terms are and what conditions. There have been rumors around the city that these men are to receive $25,000 a year each and a pension after ten years of ten thousand dollars, which may also go to their widows. The Premier has said the same sort of thing now that the Government is definitely committed to this highly speculative venture.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, to a point of order—the honourable gentleman is just not going to get away with it. He is not going to debate it. It is out of order. I will not have this debate all over again.

MR. BROWNE: We had five days from the honourable the Premier.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable member had an opportunity to speak too, but he was too slow to do so. He is not now going to debate the principle of this Bill.

MR. BROWNE: I am not going to. I said, now that the Government—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I asked for a ruling on a point of order.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The honourable member knows he cannot debate the principle of the Bill. The fact that the Government undertook to set up the authority is the principle of the Bill.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am only making the observation now that the Government is committed to the venture I feel we ought to know what are the terms and what are the conditions, and I hope the Minister will give us that information now.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): Well, Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether this is exactly the time when I should supply the House with the exact information which the honourable member has asked me already, and in answering that question put here earlier in the session I said that I would supply the House with the information with regard to the salaries and the terms upon which it is proposed to conclude a contract with the personnel of the Fisheries Development Authority when the estimates were before the House. I can say, for the information of the House, as of this moment the Government has not concluded any specific contract with the Fisheries Development Authority, but of course the Government has given them certain undertakings which it would propose to implement if the House sees fit to authorize the Government to set up a Crown Corporation, and to anticipate what is in Section 45, to make a contract with the personnel of the Fisheries Development Authority on such terms and conditions as the Lieutenant Governor in Council sees fit to make. That is what the House is being asked to do at this time.

The House is not being asked to authorize at the moment the specific estimate of salaries and terms.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the honourable Minister that I asked a question relative to that recently.
MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, to a point of order. If there is any purpose in asking for this information it would not be in this particular clause, it would rather be on a clause occurring later in this Bill. The honourable gentleman is therefore completely out of order in dealing with the matter at this stage.

MR. HOLLETT: The answer the Minister gave me was that he would reveal this information when the Bill came before the House. The Bill has been before the House several days, and the honourable the Premier the Premier spoke on it for a week, and so far we have not been able to get any information whatsoever. The reply was that when the Bill, An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority, was introduced to the Legislature—

MR. SMALLWOOD: It was when the estimates were introduced.

MR. HOLLETT: I have the answer the honourable Minister gave, if you would like to have it. Am I right or wrong, Mr. Chairman? I am not going to be called out by anyone on the other side.

MR. CHAIRMAN: If the committee would like to hear the answer: When the Bill, An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority, is introduced into Committee.

MR. HOLLETT: And for that reason, Mr. Chairman, I would support the request of my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West, that we not only be given the names of this Fisheries Authority, and if they are not given now I shall again repeat the request under the new clause which comes up, but also the terms and conditions under which they are being hired.

On the other point, Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to sub-clause 4 of that section now, which states that the Authority was an agency of Her Majesty and may enter into contract with, hire, negotiate and appoint agents to act on its behalf for any purpose and on any conditions it deems necessary. In one way I suppose that is all right, in another I don't believe it is essential to give them all that authority, and if I go back further, Sir, to sub-clause 2 of 12, the Authority for all purposes of the Act is an agent of Her Majesty in right of Newfoundland and may exercise its powers under the Act only as an agent of Her Majesty. Now in my opinion, humble as it may be, Her Majesty to me means the Government, and I don't think it is quite the right thing for the Government to delegate its authority to any agent in this particular instance where we have been told some one hundred million dollars may have to be expended by this Authority. I object strongly to the delegation of such powers to an agent of the Government. I think the Government should exercise supervision over this particular Authority at all times. That is the point I wish to make there, Mr. Chairman.

MR. KEOUGH: Well, Mr. Chairman, the honourable Leader of the Opposition is entitled to his opinion and to his objections. The Government has seen fit to propose to the House that it shall set up a Crown Corporation to handle fisheries development. That Crown Corporation will exercise only such powers as are delegated to it by the House and specifically from time to time only such powers as the Lieutenant Governor in Council may authorize it to put into effect.
In connection with the objection that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition raised with regard to Section 4—the Fisheries Development Authority is to be an agent of Her Majesty. Normally an agent can't delegate its powers to another agent. That section here will simply provide for its agent to delegate power to some other agent in specific instances, where one may want a specific piece of work carried out.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words, may appoint an agent to enter into contract with Her Majesty on account of the Government who is also an agent for Her Majesty. The Authority is an agent of Her Majesty. It may enter into contract with Her Majesty and appoint agents to act on its behalf for any purpose. There are no limitations upon the powers of that Authority—to act on its behalf for any purpose or any conditions that it deemed necessary—that seems to give them unlimited power. Is that the interpretation?

HON. M. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): Surely, Mr. Chairman, no one can give what they have not got. Precisely for that reason a delegate, in the ordinary course of law, is not permitted to delegate authority. That has to come under that principle, Sir. Surely then the Authority cannot delegate more authority than it has. That would be the limitation on its powers.

Clause 3 carried. Clause 4 read: Clause 5 carried.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, may I repeat the request I made a few moments ago, under Clause 3. I would like to know the terms and conditions under which the Lieutenant Governor in Council is going to appoint, or in fact has appointed, this Authority, because we understand that it has been in effect for a year today, and we want to know when they were appointed, what salaries they receive and what are the conditions. According, I believe, to the speech made by the Premier, not only the members of the Authority but their families are being provided for. I would like to have the Minister give the information to the House now.

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, first of all, after having seen the reply to the question that I gave the Honourable Leader of the Opposition it is quite obvious that I said I would give the Information when the Bill is being debated in the House, but I am afraid that I am going to have to withdraw from that position. Right now this section before the House is to authorize the Government to appoint the members of the authority upon such terms and conditions as it sees fit. No contract has as yet been signed with the Authority at this stage. With no contract signed I don't feel that I should be obligated to divulge the terms and conditions to the House. If the House so orders me I will, but if it does not I must, Mr. Chairman, refuse.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, the three members of the Authority, I presume, have been working with the Government for a year, and it is quite possible, Mr. Chairman, that these three gentlemen would want to know before they accepted the employment of any one what would be the terms and conditions of their employment, and especially so if there is to be an agreement, as set forth here, either before or after the passing of the Act. Goodness, gracious, as if anybody were going to work anywhere with anyone without knowing the wages to be received, and I presume the gentlemen are receiving wages since the time of their appointment. I would like to know the wages and terms based upon their yearly salary.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, we directed this question to the Minister of Fisheries, and he made a definite promise. Now he sees fit to withdraw his promise to give the information to the House when the Bill is being debated. Why is he doing it? Because the Premier wishes him to do it. That seems to be the answer why the House is not given the information, although these gentlemen have been under pay by the Government for a considerable period of time, and no money has as yet been voted for them, but they are under pay. I don't think even they would complain about that, because as I understand it, they were told to write their own valuation, what they wanted, and to name their own figures in advance, and it was accepted. Surely the House does not have to or the members of the Opposition do not have to go upon their knees and beg the dear Premier to give us the information. They have been in the position long enough and these men are getting paid, so let us know.

MR. MURRAY: Mr. Chairman, I would submit that the point is well taken. Here this Bill is to set up an Authority, Sir, and until this Bill passes this House this Authority is not in existence. The clause now is to appoint members to this authority and if, as, and when the Authority is set up then the question of the salaries can be brought out, and will be in the estimates.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, a very simple answer was given to that today when we debated a contract which is coming in Bell Island. We discussed it but the contract has not been signed, and we discussed all the terms and the Attorney General told us that we could not make any change as that was what they wanted to do. Now here are three gentlemen under some kind of contract with the Government at the present time. Will the Government tell us how much they have been receiving since last June, the first of June? Is the House, the public, entitled to have that information? It is the public money, and I suppose we are entitled to ask about it.

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, I have to repeat here that, what the House is being asked to do is to delegate the powers to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make a contract with the members of the Fisheries Development Authority on such terms and conditions as it sees fit. Now I am withdrawing from the position that I put myself into by giving the answer that I did to the question put to me by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, because actually I should not have given that answer. The answer I should have given was the one I thought I had given, i.e., that I would reveal the terms and conditions of the employment of the Fisheries Development Authority when the estimates were before the House, and until the specific authority is either given the Authority or not, I still stand by my position that I should not divulge the terms and conditions of the employment of the Fisheries Development Authority when the estimates were before the House, and until the specific authority is either given the Authority or not, I still stand by my position that I should not divulge the terms and conditions of the Fisheries Development Authority, and I am not divulging them, unless the House so orders.

MR. FOGWILL: I understand that, Mr. Chairman, there is no contract as yet. But when there is it will be retroactive to June 1953, so I would like to ask the Minister this question: Are the gentlemen in question employed by the Government at the present time?

MR. MURRAY: What gentlemen?

MR. FOGWILL: The three men, Mr. Dunstan, Mr. Young and Mr. Winsor reputedly appointed in fact to some fishery development authority, are these three gentlemen employed by the Government or by a department of the Government?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, if I am here all night it won't worry me. If I have to stay on my feet here all night, I don't think it is fair. I don't think it is right nor just. On the 31st of March I received an answer to a question by an honourable Minister of the Crown in the person of the Honourable Minister of Fisheries—Give the names of the recently appointed Fisheries Development Authority. The answer to that question was: The information will be made available when the Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority" is introduced to the Legislature. It has been introduced for the second time. The second question was: State the amount of salaries being paid to (a) the chairman (b) the members or committee, and state what if any contract has been entered into with these individuals by the Government. Table copies of said contract of agreement. The same answer was given: The information will be made available when the Bill is introduced into the Legislature. That bill, Mr. Chairman, has been introduced for some time, and has been discussed and nearly everybody on the Government side discussed it, told us all about the Bill, all about the duties of the Authority, all the money they were to spend on the northeast coast and all over the country, told us about the three men they have appointed to exercise the authority given to the Authority under this Act, and what wonderful fellows they were. They gave us their characters and history etc. I am not disputing anything about that. We realize that men have been delegated to exercise the authority given to them under this Act, who can expend a huge amount of money, make loans, borrow money to purchase boats, to purchase gear, to get people away from the land which they own—if they want to, they can do almost anything—and we are asked now here to pass this Act and the Government will not grant us the courtesy of telling us what agreement they have entered into with these three men.

We find under Sub-section 3 that the Government may make regulations to provide for the establishment of a pension scheme for members of the Authority who have served as such for a period of not less than ten years, or for their dependents or widows or for both, and yet we are not to be told what is the agreement which the Government has with these three men, nor how much salary they have been paid since June last year. Yet we are to be asked in a day or two to vote millions of dollars for fisheries. I don't see how, on the face of it, the honourable Minister can refuse to give us the answer, and I don't see how the Government can. We hold they have consented to give us the answer. After all it is not a hanging matter. The people have to pay it. It is the people's money that goes to that Authority, Mr. Chairman, and the people have a right to know that. We have raised the question and want to know just what money they have to find to pay this Fisheries Authority. I repeat, Sir, it is absolutely essential not only that the Minister will live up to his promise to us, to this side of the House in this particular answer to a question, and that the Government will consent to his telling us now, just where we are heading in this particular Authority. We have been told on very good authority, and if I were to tell you, Sir, on what authority I have been told you might be surprised, that they are to get a salary of $25,000 a year each for ten years, and that at the end of that period, if they want to retire, then they can get a pension of five or ten thousand dollars a year, the exact amount I do not know, nobody knows, the people do not know, and apparently the members of the Government do not know. Well, we want to know. We want to know what manner of men these are—that we have been told, we were told how lucky Newfoundland was to get these men. And mind you, Sir, we have been told how fortunate we were to get other men in this country, we have been told of men who were worth their weight in gold to us. We are told now these men are worth their weight in gold, pretty nearly that in ten years at any rate at $25,000 a year, $250,000 in ten years for one man, and a total of three-quarters of a million for three men—and we are asked to vote here with a blindfold over our faces to give authority to set this up. I think the whole idea is ridiculous. We know the Government has the power to refuse it, but I see no reason why they should, Sir. Surely it is not such a deep, dark secret after all. They have paid men $25,000 a year before, particularly in one case. They have paid men $15,000 a year and have paid them $8,000. Now here are three for $25,000 a year, so we are told, but the Government won't tell us. Why not clear up the mystery? It is necessary that the country should know from the point of view of these three men, because surely it is doing them a terrific amount of damage, if we are going to be allowed to talk like this of the salaries to be paid to them. Personally, I don't want to do it. Personally it is none of my business, but it is the business of the people to know, Sir, just what we are going to vote this night for these three men. I repeat, Sir, I want the honourable Minister to honour the pledge which he gave me and the Opposition in the answer to that particular question.

MR. KEOUGH : Mr. Chairman, since the honourable Leader of the Opposition puts it that way, I am inclined to concur with his request. I must say that I really did think the answer that I gave, and I insist the answer I should have given was that I would divulge this information when the House was considering the estimates. That is the proper time for it. The House in not being asked tonight to vote the salaries of the Fishery Development Authority. It is not being asked to vote on the terms and conditions of their employment. It is being asked to delegate powers to the Lieutenant Governor in Council to name these salaries and the conditions under which they will be employed. However, since I did give the quite definite undertaking to the Leader of the Opposition in reply to that question that the information would be made available when the Bill, "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Development Authority," should be introduced to the Legislature, I did say that, and since I certainly do not want to be placed in the position or to have the Government placed in the position of a Minister of the Crown going back upon a quite definite undertaking upon being called upon from the Opposition to give the information required, I will release the information now:

First of all the members of the Fisheries Development Authority have not been employed for a year. If my memory serves me correctly, it is since September. There has been no contract signed with the members of the Authority as yet, and there will not be until such time as this Bill may pass the House. Members of the Authority quite understand that condition, and it was acceptable to them. The contract could not be signed until such time as this Legislature gave the authority. However, they naturally have had an undertaking from the Government, subject to the approval of the Legislature, that their salaries and terms of employment would be of this order.

Each member of the Authority is to receive a salary of exactly what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition heard, $25,000 a year, subject to the further condition that the Chairman is to receive an extra $500 a year, which leaves the salary of the Chairman at $25,500 a year. The other two members of the Authority to receive $25,000 a year.

The other conditions of their employment are these:

The members of the Authority are to be eligible to receive a pension at the end of ten years' service in the amount of five thousand dollars per annum. That is in the event that their services should be terminated at the end of ten years. Their employment may be continued at the end of ten years, but in any event their pension rights in this regard are to be effective at the age of sixty. And generally the pension rights of the Authority are to be extended, in the event of their death, to their widows, along the lines of the pension policy adopted by the Government of Canada, which is, I believe off hand, that the widow gets half the pension that the deceased would have been entitled to.

That generally covers it. As I have said, what the Honourable the Leader of the Opposition heard was quite correct. The members of the Authority are getting $25,000 a year, and it is also true that they vote their own ticket. They were asked what they would be prepared to come for—the Government was anxious that they should receive a figure of remuneration that would make them completely independent of all other loyalties except their loyalties to the Government via the Fisheries Development Authority, for the rest of their days.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am very glad that the honourable Minister has seen fit to honour his undertaking to give us this information. As the House knows the only new feature in the information which we did not hear before, was the fact that the Chairman is to receive an extra five hundred dollars as chairman. Now the Minister made an observation here that he may have made before, that these high salaries are being paid for the purpose of making them completely independent and completely loyal to the undertaking. Can we infer from that that nobody else in the service is loyal to his obligations as a civil servant? Has the Government got to bribe people to be loyal and to be independent when it is their duty to perform the functions for which they have been appointed? I don't see that it was necessary to give such large salaries as are mentioned here.

Then, since the Premier has told us that this has a fifty-fifty chance, I don't know how far the Premier was thinking when he was talking in terms of the chance of success, whether he meant the whole scheme or the scheme—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, to a point of order—is it in order for the honourable gentleman in Committee of the Whole to bring up or repeat or deal with anything said in the debate on second reading? If he is then I suggest that he can take up any point now in Committee of the Whole, any point that was made in second reading or in the debate on second reading and thereby continue the debate on second reading all over again. Is it in order for the honourable gentleman or any honourable gentleman in this present session to refer to anything that was said in any debate in this present session once that debate has concluded? Is that in order?

MR. BROWNE: May I speak to that point of order, Mr. Chairman?

MR. CHAIRMAN: I don't think that this debate has concluded yet. I don't think the honourable member is out of order in referring to what was said in second reading. I think he might refer briefly to what was said there.

MR. BROWNE: I am referring to this particular clause. What I was speaking about is this: I am not being harshly critical at the moment—if the scheme only has a fifty-fifty chance of succeeding then there is a possibility that it may fail—there is a fifty-fifty chance that it will fail. Will the Government then be obligated for the balance of the term if it should prove so expensive and so un sound that it would not be worth-while proceeding? Would we still be obligated under the contract to pay these men seventy-five thousand dollars a year until the termination of the ten years and give them a pension after that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is yes, obviously.

MR. KEOUGH: The members of the Authority will have a contract in these specific amounts, which the Government will have to honour.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in respect to the answer given by the Honourable the Premier; in relation to pensions am I to understand that the members of the Authority could retire voluntarily after ten years' service and receive that pension, or be pensionable at the age of sixty-five.

MR. KEOUGH: No. The option would rest with the Government. The contract would be for ten years but with the option to renew it at the Government's discretion.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, would the Honourable Minister consider telling us the ages of the three gentlemen appointed. When will they be sixty-five years of age? Will they be sixty-five years of age by the time the ten years elapse?

MR. KEOUGH: Quite candidly I do not know their ages off-hand. I am under the impression that all of them are under fifty. I can probably supply that information for tomorrow. I could inquire personally.

MR. BROWNE: Now I have another question to ask: The Minister has referred to the similarity between the pensions they will receive and pensions received in the civil service of the Federal Government. Supposing—God forbid—any member of the authority should die before the termination of the ten years, will his dependents be provided for with a pension?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I think I ought perhaps to add a word on this point of the salaries and pensions and the rates of pensions and pension rights of these three men. I will put it this way: The Government for about twelve months or perhaps something between twelve months and eighteen months on very many occasions discussed this whole question of fishery development and came at first to one major conclusion; that there would be no fishery development if it were left to civil servants to carry it out. A second major conclusion was that the only hope of success in fishery development was to take the ablest men that Water Street had produced away from Water Street and put them to work, not becoming millionaires, not working for dividends but working for the people of Newfoundland in fisheries development. We asked them to name their own figure, name their own ticket, state their own salaries for which they would be completely satisfied and completely independent; and they named their own salaries. Mr. Young was a director of Crosbie and Company known to everyone up and down Water Street. I challenge any one to say that is not so—everyone up and down Water Street knows that Ross Young is perhaps the ablest young merchant from Maggoty Cove to Riverhead, and that he was, next to Chesley A. Crosbie himself, the ablest member of the firm of Crosbie and Company. What we had to do was steal him away right from under Ches Crosbie's nose. That is what we had to do. To be frank about it that is what we had to do. And we had to offer him more, far more than he was getting or was likely to get from Crosbie and Company. That is the brutal truth of the matter. Ross Young had to disrupt his whole life's career. He had to wrench himself away from the one firm he had ever worked with in his life, with the exception of when he left school first he did work for two or three years in the Royal Stores Office, and except for that work his entire life he was with Crosbie and Company.

He was the first member who does not belong to the Crosbie Family to become a director of that firm, the first outsider ever to become a director of any wholly owned Crosbie firm. Ross Young was many weeks considering whether he would accept the position or not. He knew that an unscrupulous Opposition, if ever there were such a thing—

MR. FOGWILL: Of course not.

MR. SMALLWOOD: He knew that an unscrupulous Opposition could make hell on earth. Yes, it could indeed go into his family, antecedents, rake up every member of his family who ever lived—an unscrupulous Opposition would do that. And if it did happen it would not be the first time in the history of Newfoundland. He was virtually going into politics without the glory and advantage of being in politics. From the obscurity of a mercantile office, where he was a respected member of the company, he had to go into a field in which the world and his uncle would regard themselves as his boss, quite free and privileged to say what they liked about him. So that it was a very serious decision that Ross Young had to make. He was quite frank about it—if you are going to get me you are going to pay and pay plenty. Before I break away from Crosbie & Company you are going to pay and pay plenty. I was the one negotiating with him and I said; Ross, name your ticket—I have known Ross Young for a good many years.

Well, one man was not enough. We had to have a banker. Now we could have gone to the Bank of Montreal or either of the others, go to them and offer their bank managers the same salaries, for which, no doubt, they would have left their banks. But there was a bank manager in St. John’s who had spent his life as a bank manager and then spent two or three years as top man and managing director of a very large fish concern; Northlantic Fisheries—Job’s—i.e., Mr. Dunstan. He was a man with a lifetime of orthodox banking experience. For part of that lifetime, some four years of it, I think, manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia here in St. John’s. As such he was the man who arranged the financing of a considerable amount of the fishery development for Fishery Products Limited, and because of that fact, he, as manager of that bank at that time, became thoroughly familiar with the last intimate details of the business of Fishery Products Limited, who are our biggest firm in the frozen fish industry in Newfoundland, by far the biggest of them—as manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia he was the man who was primarily responsible for financing Northlantic Fisheries, and as such, again he became intimately, most intimately acquainted with every last detail of the financial history and structure of that company as well.

Then there were other fish firms as well over that period of four years with whom and with whose affairs he became intimately acquainted, as only the manager of a bank doing the financing of a company is probably able to become aware, at least apart from the actual manager of the business himself—then, having spent those four years manager of a bank which did an enormous business in the fish trade, he became himself managing-director of the second largest frozen fish industry in Newfoundland, i.e., Northlantic, Job Brothers—

Having here in Newfoundland a man with that great amount of experience, not theoretical but practical, hard-bitten, hard-fisted business experience in Newfoundland as well as outside it, and in addition to that his experience as managing-director of the second largest frozen fish firm, we were delighted and we are delighted that we got him as Chairman of this Authority.

Now the third man is Harry Winsor, an oldtime official of the Newfoundland Fisheries Board, and a representative of the Newfoundland Government at Washington for a number of years. I think during the war and then later he was attached to the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations, specializing in fish, because the FAO includes fisheries for the whole world in its interests. He was special personal assistant to the Head of the FAO stationed in Rome, where, in fact, I first made his acquaintance on the occasion of my visit to Rome with the Minister of Finance a couple of years ago.

Now, these are the three—we may be mistaken in this, but we believe by offering them twenty-five thousand dollars a year, and a five thou-and dollar a year pension when they have served for at least ten years, or when they reach the age of sixty-five, we believe, and we may be mistaken in this, that they are completely independent, once they get the contract signed, if the House passes it, and the Government signs the agreement with these three men, then they will be so completely independent of every fish merchant in Newfoundland, of every fisherman in Newfoundland, of the Government, of the Opposition, in so far as their own personal positions are concerned (not in so far as their work is concerned) they will be absolutely independent as long as they live on the earth, to their dying day. That is something that cannot be said of very many people; that to their dying day they are absolutely independent—until they draw their last breath on this earth they are completely independent. Because if they have served for ten years at twenty-five thousand dollars a year, and then retire on five thousand dollars a year pension, knowing that if they die their widows will get twenty-five hundred dollars a year as long as they live; that is absolute financial independence, as absolute as money can make it. If that were money in the bank it could not mean the same independence. So long as there is a Government in Newfoundland they are sure of that money. Now that is absolute financial independence.

Their loyalty, apart from the loyalty they owe to their God and to their families, their only loyalty is to the Government of Newfoundland. Now maybe we are mistaken.

MR. HOLLETT: You could be.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We could be mistaken. Maybe you don't get absolute loyalty by paying those great salaries, maybe you don't. I have known cases in history, and not necessarily ancient history, where great salaries did not in fact produce absolute loyalty from those who received the salaries; I have known cases like that in history. We may be wrong, all of us on this side, we may be wrong in believing, as we do, that absolute financial independence for these three men will produce loyalty, absolute loyalty to what they believe to be in the best interest of Newfoundland. We may be wrong in that belief, but that is what we believe—we believe that. Now I will admit quite frankly, and I am not saying it tonight for the first time, and the Opposition will believe and I hope credit me with enough common sense to admit that I probably thought of this before tonight. This is not a thought that is coming to me now for the first time—I.e., when it is announced on the air tonight and tomorrow that we are asking authority to pay these men twenty-five thousand dollars each there will be thousands of fishermen who will say; Well, Glory be to God! What is going on? Glory be to God! You don't mean to say you are paying them twenty-five thousand dollars a year each? I know, and I knew last year when we were discussing this matter—but I am in this position, I have said it here in this House before, and I am going to say it again now—I have served Newfoundland this past seven or eight years and I am prepared to go on for quite a number of years, but if I don't go on, if the people retire me, I will go out of office without shedding one tear, and I hope my colleagues feel the same way about it, but at least that is how I feel. If the fishermen of Newfoundland have any doubt about the wisdom of what we have done then, in the next election, they have the right, and the remedy is very simple, the right to kick us out?

MR. HOLLETT: When is that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: My honourable friend said early November. He did not tell me what date. I heard him on the radio Saturday night when he announced this election would be in early November. I listened with great interest and indeed great curiosity, as I was hoping he could say the date.

HON. P. S. FORSEY (Minister of Health): Bonfire night.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well my honourable friend, the Leader of the Opposition said that—he seemed to know when the next election is to be. He said he knows it is to be early in November. But I think he might go a step further and tell us what date.

MR. HOLLETT: What section is that under?

MR. SMALLWOOD: But whatever the date is, I will say this, the fishermen of Newfoundland, if they think that we have done wrong in paying these three men about the same kind of salaries that Bowaters and the A.N.D. Company pay to their top executives—

DR. ROWE: Less.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't mean their tip-top executives, but their general managers—if the fishermen of Newfoundland think that the Government have done wrong in paying these three top executives in the fishery Development Authority at about the same rate as Bowaters pay their top directors, then the fishermen have their remedy, they will vote us out, kick us out—and I for one at least will go out without a murmur, without the shedding of a single tear. I say this now; I do not believe it is possible, and I will go further and say, in their hearts the Opposition do not believe it is possible. I don't think that even the Opposition members believe in their hearts that it would be possible to go down on Water Street and pick three able men from the fishery industry and get them for less than twenty-five thousand dollars a year. Now, for political reasons, especially if they are convinced that there is an election this year, for political reasons they won't admit that. They will say it is scandalous, that it is disgraceful, that is is outrageous, ridiculous, foolish, stupid, everything but right, that we should pay top rates of pay, almost as much as Cabinet Ministers get in Ottawa, that we should pay such salaries to those who are to introduce the greatest programme of fishery development in the history of North America. Now that may be wrong, but that is what we are doing, and if that means that we are going to be defeated in the coming election whether it be in November or in October or July or August or September or in early December, whether it be in 1954 or 1955 or 1956, whenever it is, if it means we are going to be defeated because we picked the best men we could find and paid them such high salaries, okay, well and good, we will go out and the new Government will then try to remedy the situation and try to get cheap men to do a big job for cheap wages, and succeed where we failed.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Honourable the Premier won't rise to a point of order if I should happen to wander from this particular section. I am sure I have very great difficulty in locating that point of order, in view of what he said, he has taken everything, political mostly, and said the things that he thought we ought to say in the Opposition. He did not say we were an unscrupulous Opposition but he went as near to it, Mr. Chairman, as he could possibly go.

Getting back to that section, Sir, I am surprised to have heard the Premier say that this was a programme which he could not trust to the civil servants to do, or words to that effect, that we have no civil servants in this country, Mr. Chairman, to take on such a job. I regret very much that the Honourable the Premier of this little Province has seen fit to state that, because, Sir, I fully remember when the Commission of Government came in here so many years ago one of the first things they set out to do was to build up the civil service to a standard which would be a credit to the country. And I have said myself here on many occasions, and the Honourable Premier has said, that we have as fine a civil service in Newfoundland as there is in any province across the whole of Canada. And I maintain, Sir, that if it had been the will and wish of the Government to obtain three men they could have gone to the civil service and gotten three men equally as good as these three men whom we have heard lauded to the skies. I regret that the Honourable the Premier saw fit to say this. I can name a civil servant we saw this morning, Mr. Chairman, who has qualifications no man in this House has, and I am not putting the qualification standard very high—no, I will not say that Sir. I take that back. Who am I to judge any man's qualifications? I merely have opinions that is all.

Now there is another thing which strikes me about the men that have been chosen. I note the Premier has said that one man, Mr. Young, I believe said: “You will have to pay me if you are to get me.” Then the Premier told him to name his price. The price was twenty-five thousand dollars a year; five thousand dollars a year pension, and if I die twenty-five hundred dollars a year to my wife. That is the price Mr. Young gave as his worth to the people of Newfoundland, twenty-five thousand dollars a year for the next ten years. That is the price, said Mr. Young, you will have to pay me if you want to get me.

Mr. Dunstan said, “I am to be chairman and I want five hundred dollars more.” I take it Mr. Winsor said the same thing. Now, Mr. Chairman, suppose we grant all that as we must, the Minister said so—it is not what these men are worth that concerns me. I have no way to estimate their value in dollars and cents whatsoever, but I do say, Sir, that this province is not in such a flourishing condition today or ever will be that it can afford to pay civil servants twenty-five thousand dollars a year—that is all these men are, civil servants—they are civil servants. And I see no reason why they should not be content to live in this little country, Sir, on as high, or as low if you like, a salary as any civil servants in this country, some of whom are getting ten thousand dollars a year. I grant you, Sir, that these may be very valuable men, Mr. Dunstan has been spoken of by the Premier as the man,
I believe who put Monroes Fishery Products on their feet, he arranged all the great financing for them and did the same for Job's. I know that Northlantic Fisheries at one time was guaranteed by this Government $675,000 and they borrowed $650,000.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I think that is a little away from this clause now. I think the honourable member is wandering.

MR. HOLLETT: Even though I bow to the ruling, I do remember the Premier referring to and coupling Mr. Dunstan with Northlantic Fisheries.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Not in detail.

MR. HOLLETT: I say there was also another company with whom he was intimately connected, but I will come to that in another section.

Mr. Young also when he was a director of Crobie and Company arranged a good bit of the financing of that company. I dare say I have some record of these here. I have them also of Northlantic Fisheries and also of the Bonavista Cold Storage in which Mr. Dunstan was very greatly interested and arranged some financial deal with the Government. Both of them I say are very brilliant men when it comes to finances. Mr. Winsor is comparatively young. I would say he is less than forty. What experience he has in handling fishery matters and financing I don't know. But I would say that these three men are undoubtedly men of integrity and they may be worth a lot of money, but I say this province cannot afford to pay such high salaries. We have already had experience of a twenty-five thousand dollars a year man in this country and that in itself should prove to the Premier and the Government that high salaries do not guarantee, I was going to say integrity, but it does not guarantee anything, Sir. And if, as the Honourable the Premier says, he thought they should name their own price and we would have them body and soul until they die, until they draw their last breath, he may be mistaken and he may be mistaken as to the value of these men. I have a feeling, Sir, that when you give a man absolute independence with no fear of an unscrupulous Opposition, no fear of the Government, as the Honourable the Premier said— I suppose they worship the Almighty—but they are absolutely independent—I fear, Sir, that sometimes when a man gets into that state of mind, that his twenty-five thousand dollars salary a year, might occasion in such people, I fear for the mental welfare of such people.

We have to remember, Sir, that last year or the year before we borrowed ten million dollars to run this country. This year we got to borrow another ten million to run this country, yet here we go out and say, "Name your price." You want twenty-five thousand dollars a year, "okay come on." I think we are a little bit too flush with our money, Sir, and we have been for quite a long time—we have been gambling on a card on a draw—Draw Poker—the Premier has admitted that is what we have been doing—"It is worth a gamble." Now, I have a great regard for the Premier in many ways, but I do say this: He is a gambler. Now gamblers do, Sir, sometimes make good, and I do sincerely hope that the Honourable the Premier will make good in this his latest gamble.

I want, Mr. Chairman, before I sit down, to thank the Honourable Minister of Fisheries for giving us the information, which we expected.
MR. SMALLWOOD: I would like to reply to my honourable friend in one regard, and that is in respect to his reference to civil servants, or his reference to my reference to civil servants. I don't recall that I said anything derogatory of our civil servants, I don't recall that at all.

MR. HOLLETT: I did not say you did.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I gathered the impression from the honourable gentleman that he rather did gather that I said something derogatory of our civil servants. I am glad to hear now he did not think I said anything derogatory, or that what I said was meant to be so.

Now, as I recall, what I said was this: We had our choice of selecting the personnel of the Fisheries Development Authority from two types of persons, the civil service or the mercantile trade, i.e., Water Street, the fish merchant class. We decided on the latter. Now I don't think that there is anything wrong with that. I don't think there is anything in that derogatory to the civil service.

MR. HOLLETT: May I correct the Honourable the Premier? What he did say was, "We knew we could not get this job done by the civil service."

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, quite so. I remember Mr. W. H. Gorvin devising a great fisheries rehabilitation scheme, which comprehended even more than the fisheries and the fishermen. I remember his asking my opinion on it, and I remember well what my reply was. My reply was to ask him the question, how did he expect his plan, which came to be known as the "Gorvin Plan," to be carried out, did he think the civil service would do it, did he think he would get it done by the civil servants? Did he think that was the way to get the plan carried out—to get the civil service to do it? He replied by asking me what I would suggest.

I told him my suggestion was that he had to go right into the camp of the enemy and pull their best captains and their best leaders that he could get, and that that took real money to do. Now he was part and parcel of a civil service government, the Commission of Government, and to him it was a horrifying thought, an unorthodox thought to suggest a government should go out and pick the ablest men they could find right on Water Street. That never did occur to him. Their dependence was in the civil service. Where now is the Gorvin Plan? It fell in the winter of 1935, that is where the Gorvin Plan is.

Now we could have looked for these able fishermen in the civil service, to whom my honourable friend referred. He himself said you can look around in the civil service and you will find very able men. Of that there is no doubt. But he did not say able men in the fishing industry, in the fish trade. I notice that he did not say that. Now if there are such they won't be long before being seconded over to the fishery development. If we have men in the civil service outstandingly able, as able as Ross Young is as a director of a big mercantile firm in the fish industry, as Harry Dunstan is in the banking and general commerce and financial industry of this island of Newfoundland, if we have such men in the civil service their place is undoubtedly with the Fisheries Development Authority. I just wanted to make that one point there clear. We have men in the civil service of Newfoundland who are outstandingly able and brilliant and who have great experience, men of great integrity, men of great ambition, there is no doubt at all. We know them, we have daily contact with them. But I don't know any of them with outstanding experience in the fishing industry, in the fish trade of Newfoundland such as to qualify them to take charge for the next ten years or fifteen years of great reorganization, a great rehabilitation, a great development programme, to be the generals, the field marshals, the chiefs-of-staff, the board of strategy, whatever you like. That is what they are, always of course, subject to the Government, because the Government whoever the personnel always are the Government. They cannot abdicate while they occupy office. They must use their power. So over the Fisheries Development Authority will be the Government. But under the Government they will be the supreme command. That is the word I was looking for, "The Supreme Command" in fisheries development in Newfoundland. I don't think, if I lose every civil service vote from here on, I must say quite candidly that I don't think you will get a great programme of fisheries development successfully carried out by civil servants. I repeat it—I don't think we will.

MR. BROWNE : Mr. Chairman, I have to make one or two observations and ask one or two questions: I think we have to be very practical about this although the Premier looks at it as war and of a supreme command under the Government. In the first place what happens if one of the gentlemen should be so unfortunate as to die within the ten years? Will his widow get a pension? The second question I would ask is this: I am not saying it is likely to happen. It is a provision that the highest officials of this or any other country, the chief justice of the Supreme Court even is removable by an address by both Houses of Parliament. Is there any authority in this country to remove one of the members of the Fisheries Development Authority should he misbehave?

MR. FORSEY : The answer to the first part of the question is contained in clause 5, sub-clause 3.

MR. KEOUGH : It did not occur to me when the honourable and learned member for St. John's West asked the first time, but as the Honourable Minister of Health says; it is contained in sub-clause 3 of Clause 5. The pension will be available only when a member of the Authority has served for a period of not less than ten years.

MR. BROWNE : Then they are not independent and their families are not.

MR. SMALLWOOD : They are getting twenty-five thousand dollars a year in the meantime.

MR. BROWNE : Mr. Chairman, the honourable the Premier speaks very highly of these men. But there is such a thing as people dying unexpectedly. Only in the last few days we had an instance of that in the death of a celebrated man famous all over the world, who died at the early age of fifty-two. If one of these men should die, is there no pension then for his widow?

MR. KEOUGH : As provided here. Not within the ten years. They have to serve for ten years before they get pension rights.

In answer to the other question I would say quite definitely that the Legislature can at any time authorize a change in or the abrogation of a contract it ordered or provided authority for in the first place.

MR. BROWNE: Then they are not independent.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the honourable member could tell us, has any agreement as yet been drawn up, and if so under what conditions and what salaries are indicated?

MR. KEOUGH: Well, as to the first part of the question, no formal agreement has yet been drawn. The members of the Authority who are employed by the Government have been given, I might say, an undertaking, whether it is in writing or not I cannot say from memory, but in any case an undertaking in the terms just outlined in regard to salaries and pension rights. That is all at the moment. As to conditions they take office under there is certainly not anything pending on that yet.

MR. BROWNE: Just one more question—if the Government makes regulations is there any provision in this Act where they should be tabled in the House?

MR. KEOUGH: That is provided by the section.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is in virtually every other Act we ever passed.

Clause 5 carried. Clause 6 read:

MR. BROWNE: Now, Mr. Chairman, is not that going too far altogether in the other extreme. There is no need of having it as drastic as all that. I understood these terms to apply to the members of the Authority and certainly not to Ministers or officials, certainly it was not necessary to do that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: How would you draw the line?

MR. BROWNE: I would say at the Authority. I don't imagine there are going to be many people with very high salaries. The intention, I understood, was to have them apply to the Authority.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If you have half a dozen men around the Island as general managers of plants under the Fisheries Development Authority, do you want these to be men with axes to grind of their own in other fishery companies, or to be as independent as you can make them?

MR. BROWNE: That is true. But this is so sweeping and far-reaching. It does not draw any line at all. It does not make any distinction between a manager and a fisherman working—

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is right. I don't see how it may be otherwise. How are you going to draw a line?

MR. BROWNE: I think you could draw one.

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder if the Honourable Minister could state definitely if these three men have severed their connections with various corporations with whom they were interested? I have in my hand here an agreement between the Government and the Bonavista Cold Storage, Hazen Russell and his associate, and I note it was signed in the presence of Mr. Clive Planta and signed by you as Minister of Fisheries; and by H. A. Dunstan, agent of H. A. Russell. I take it that is the same man. Has he vacated his position as in that agreement? If so who takes his position in that agreement?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, the members of the Authority, before they were employed were given the quite definite undertaking that they would have to sever all connections either directly or indirectly with any other fishing enterprise, and subsequently, I should say no later than a month or so ago, arising out of a question addressed to me in this House, I made a specific inquiry of the members of the Authority asking if they had severed all connections with fishing enterprises, and I was told by them that they had.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, if that is so, who takes the place of H. Dunstan in this particular agreement in which the Government is very definitely committed to the extent of one hundred thousand dollars.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Who takes the place of the Minister of Fisheries if you have a new one?

MR. HOLLETT: I take it, a new minister of fisheries. But, is there a new Mr. Dunstan, Mr. Chairman?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does the honourable gentleman think that if there is a new minister of fisheries he then has to sign that agreement? Is it not binding under the signature of the old minister who has ceased to be a minister.

MR. HOLLETT: In that case it is binding upon Mr. Dunstan.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I did not say it was binding on the old minister. I said it was binding. There is no need of substituting a new director any more than there is a need of substituting a new minister.

MR. HOLLETT: I am afraid the Honourable the Premier is mistaken. I don't need to read all that agreement, but in every agreement there has to be a certain number of signatures, and I take it that, Mr. Dunstan is no longer there or has no longer any interest under this agreement. Most agreements, Sir, do give the parties signing some benefit. In that instance Mr. Dunstan was an associate of Mr. Hazen Russell to whom incidentally this Government loaned a million dollars or thereabouts, I believe. I would like to know if he is no longer there, who has his place?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, suppose the other man died?

MR. HOLLETT: He would not get any benefit then.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not a question of benefits. But if all the persons who had signed it have since died the agreement is none the less an agreement and is no less binding. They don't have to sign a new one and get new signatures now because he was then a director and signed it, and since he has signed it, ceased to be a director. That does not follow. My honourable friend's follower on his immediate right can set him right on that.

MR. HOLLETT: No member of the Authority (that is Dunstan) shall be directly or indirectly employed or interested in any fishery enterprise—this is a fishery enterprise to which his signature is affixed.

MR. SMALLWOOD: But he has ceased to be interested in it since then.

MR. HOLLETT: How do we know?
MR. SMALLWOOD: The Minister has informed the committee—that is how.

MR. FORSEY: The benefits accruing revert to the person to whom Mr. Dunstan sold his shares.

DR. POTTLE: That is none of our business.

MR. HOLLETT: Someone must know who signed the agreement, Mr. Dunstan's name is here. Who takes his place?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Nobody takes his place. Nobody takes his place as signatory of the agreement.

MR. HOLLETT: Somebody takes his benefits. Is the honourable Minister able to inform this House that Mr. Dunstan has given up his benefits under this agreement?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, I have just given the House such an assurance.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Honourable Minister would tell us where the head office is situated at the present time?

MR. KEOUGH: The head office is on the third floor of the King George V Institute Building.

MR. BROWNE: They are not going to stay there?

MR. KEOUGH: As far as I know.

MR. HOLLETT: I suppose the Minister is not concerned by the fact that they may be contaminated by the nasty fish merchants on Water Street.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We have thought of that, but will take a chance on that.

MR. HOLLETT: That is dangerous.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, it is dangerous but there is a bodyguard around them.

MR. BROWNE: This here is an unusual oath to take. It differs somewhat from the usual oath taken by civil servants who have to give, I believe an oath of allegiance as well. It would prevent them from disclosing information to the Court if they were called as witnesses. Am I correct in thinking so?

MR. KEOUGH: In my opinion—naturally my department depended upon the Department of the Attorney General for the drafting of considerable sections of this Act, and this was one of the sections inserted by the Department of the Attorney General, and passed my department without question. I would say though, by all means if required by the Court to divulge information they would divulge it.

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder if the Honourable Minister can assure this House that this oath has been taken?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is, no, and members of the Authority and employees will not take it until the legislation is passed.

MR. HOLLETT: Before the Act as such? They have been acting for a year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They are not acting as such until this Act is law.

Clause 6 carried. Clauses 7 through 9 read—carried.

Clause 10 read.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I notice there a reference to the secretary of the Authority. Is there a secretary to the Authority?
MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, the manager of the three loan boards and the industrial development loan board, Mr. Gerald Drover, has been appointed as acting secretary. He is chairman of the loan boards.

MR. BROWNE: Has he had any improvement in his salary?

MR. KEOUGH: He does not receive any remuneration because of being acting secretary of the Authority.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I may add to that the fact that it was considered by the Government to be sound to make the gentleman who was and is chairman of the three loan boards, one of which is a fisheries loan board, secretary of the Fisheries Development Authority and the Fisheries Loan Board and its funds and purposes, and the liaison consists of Mr. Gerald Drover who is chairman of the Fisheries Development Loan Board and secretary of the Fisheries Development Authority. That was a deliberate decision on our part. It has not affected his salary.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I should have known about this. Has Mr. Drover taken the position formerly occupied by Mr. Baxter?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: At the same salary of ten thousand dollars a year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, as chairman of all three loan boards.

MR. HOLLETT: Would the Minister point out the necessity for a fisheries loan board after this Authority becomes effective?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The same need as before.

MR. HOLLETT: The Fisheries Development Authority has authority to lend money, and that constitutes also the authority of the Fisheries Loan Board.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Fisheries Development Loan Board is an institution of the Government of Newfoundland, but it is also an instrument of the Government of Canada. It has been designated by the Government of Canada as the agency in this Province through which the Government of Canada pay bonuses on certain types of fishing boats. The Newfoundland Fisheries Development Loan Board has been designated by the Government of Canada as the Government of Canada's agent in this Province through which it pays to certain fishermen, under certain conditions, a bonus on certain types of fishing boats. There is no reason that we have seen to abolish the Fisheries Development Loan Board, which is set up primarily to make loans to individual fishermen or small groups of fishermen. The need to make these loans will continue even though there is a Fisheries Development Authority, which, I suggest, is to concern itself with matters of far wider range than that only of making loans, small loans, to individual fishermen. But the liaison is needed so that there will be no conflict, no competition, no overlapping. The liaison is created by appointing the chairman of the much smaller Board to be the secretary of the much larger body.

MR. BROWNE: In describing that loan board there, the Honourable Minister used the term; "Fisheries Development Loan Board". Is that a new title given it. I understood—

MR. SMALLWOOD: I may have added the word "Development." To me it is the most beautiful word in the English language, a word I love. There is no word more beautiful. It is closest to my heart, and it occurs to me in everything I say; like "Loan" and "Lend" mean mystery to the "Tories."

MR. HOLLETT: I am glad to see the Honourable the Premier is beginning to develop. I maintain, Sir, there is no reason for this Fisheries Loan Board.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If I say there is the honourable gentleman ought to say there is not.

MR. HOLLETT: Not at all. After all you are developing or are supposed to be developing. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but the Honourable the Premier has said that the Fisheries Loan Board, apparently of Canada, or the people who pay the bonus, pay the money through our Fisheries Loan Board. Could they not just as easily pay it through the Fisheries Development Authority now being set up particularly as the chairman of one board becomes the secretary of another board, both of them having to do with fish. There is too much duplication in this business, Sir. I maintained all along that is half the trouble with our fisheries. I maintain the Federal Government and the Provincial Government are paying out enough in salaries in the various fishery setups to support quite comfortably every fisherman we have in the country today.

MR. SMALLWOOD: What kind of a statement is that?

MR. HOLLETT: That is a statement which is absolutely correct. I challenge the Premier to check the figures and see, especially on twenty-five thousand a year salaries.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not worthy of the honourable gentleman. That is not a contribution to this debate at all.

MR. HOLLETT: You are the judge?

Clause carried.

Clause 11 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I draw the attention of the Minister and the Premier to the fact that that is the only place where it says the regulations must be laid on the table, and it does not apply to the previous section I drew to the attention of the Minister, Section 5, sub-section 3 where regulations may also be made. I think the Minister should give consideration to making that a general provision instead of just applying it to that one.

MR. KEOUGH: When I replied to the honourable member before, I replied only from memory and I did think that section with regard to regulations covered all which had to be made under this Act, and the reason for the regulations here is only specifically with regard to the clause. For my own part I would have no objections.

MR. BROWNE: If we could let that clause stand then?

MR. KEOUGH: Yes, and have a general clause to cover tabling all regulations. I will take the matter up with the Attorney General.

Clause 11 stand.

Clause 12 read:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I do not like the words: "Subject to the approval of the Minister." Is there any reason why that Authority should have the approval of the Minister on everybody they employ? It might be the making of good politics you know. After all the Authority has to come to the Minister and say: "John Jones now wants a job. He is a good man. What do you think about it?" I think it puts the Minister in a position he would just as soon not be in. I would suggest that could be amended to some benefit.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I have something to say here in regard to the words: "Employ technical, professional and other personnel." I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the Premier is too much impressed by the business and technical end of this whole programme. The recommendation of the Walsh Committee was that the fishermen should be enabled to get ownership in the plants that are established in the various communities. I don't see any special reference in this Bill providing for the education of fishermen along co-operative lines. Now this Authority is going to have so much authority and so much power, yet there is no special reference made to the question of co-operatives, and that ought to be the major feature, because this is not only a business venture, in fact this is not a business venture at all. This is a rehabilitation measure that should really build from the ground up, and at the same time that the business of fishing is carried on and new plants are being erected and operated there should be infused into the whole programme an educational policy, especially along the lines of the co-operative movement, so that the fishermen, especially in places where they have not had the advantage of being instructed in the co-operative movement, may bring these ideas into play. Now the Minister is aware and the Premier is aware that the co-operative movement has been advocated before in this country, and was regarded at one time as being the means of salvation for the fishermen. I am sure that the Minister has often advocated that.

In the neighbouring province of Nova Scotia, since 1928 when the Federal Government appointed Dr. Coady to organize the fishery into co-operatives, they have made great strides, and the Maritime United Fishermen is a result. Now I thought, and I mentioned it before, when the Federation of Fishermen was formed here; it would have been a good thing to have appointed somebody like Dr. Coady and employed him all the year around to teach the co-operative idea to the fishermen. And I do not believe that this scheme will have as good a chance of success if it is kept entirely on a business basis. On a business basis, in my opinion, it is just state socialism, that is all it is. But if we educate or help to educate these fishermen along co-operative lines so that they can take over the business themselves eventually, you do something more than try to build up a business, you try to build up a people, you give them an interest in their own affairs which they won't get by being employed as servants. Now the Minister himself knows perhaps a great deal more about the co-operative movement that I do. He certainly has had direct contact with members of co-operative societies, and he knows the inspiration the co-operative movement has been to many people. Those who are not familiar with the working of the co-operative movement don't know what that inspiration means. I would like to see right from the very beginning of this work emphasis being placed upon the importance of the principles of co-operation being adopted right from the beginning.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I don't see what that has to do with this clause which says that; subject to the approval of the Minister the Authority may employ technical professional and administrative and other personnel for the proper carrying out of its work. Let us assume for the sake of argument that this whole development in the fisheries was to be a co-operative development, a development consisting in the first place of a formation of well trained and well equipped co-operatives, and in the second place of those co-operatives carrying on the actual development. Let us assume that. Is it going to be suggested that there would be no need to employ technical, professional and administrative and other personnel for the proper carrying out of the work? I am sure that is not suggested. The most successful co-operatives in the world in any country you like to take are those co-operatives who employ the best scientists, the best technicians. I sat at lunch with the top executives of the whole co-operative movement of Sweden in the City of Stockholm, one of the most beautiful cities in the world, and the great skyscraper buildings of Stockholm are undoubtedly the most beautiful skyscraper buildings in Sweden and perhaps the most beautiful in all the countries of Europe is one erected in that great city by the central co-operative movement of Sweden. On the top floor of this magnificent building, which gives you a superb view of the whole panorama of Stockholm we had lunch. That movement in Sweden is one of the greatest housing organizations in all of Europe, and one of the biggest papers in Sweden that has the largest circulation in Sweden is the co-operative paper both daily and weekly and then a monthly magazine, all three of which have the biggest circulation in their respective fields. They own cement mills, gypsum plants, they own all kinds of machinery enterprises and of course virtually every family in Sweden buys from a co-operative shop. You will find "CONSUM" in large letters painted on the front door of literally thousands of shops.

Now what do you find in Sweden? You find the government there scraping the world, going all over the earth to all nations to pick up the best men or the best women they can find with the best technical training. Because the co-operative movement, if it is truly to succeed, has to outsmart private enterprise, got to be better than private enterprise. It must not be a cheap and poor imitation of private enterprise. If it is not better it has no right to exist and its justification disappears. The great co-operative movement of the United States, the great primary producers' movement does precisely that. They maintain their own research laboratories, their own specialized merchandizing experts. Talk about salaries: They have a couple of movements in the United States that pay up to one hundred thousand dollars a year for top ranking men. And if a great co-operative movement does a hundred, two hundred, three hundred or five hundred million dollars' worth of business a year they need the very greatest technicians and the very greatest men on their administrative staff, and to get them they have to compete with private enterprise. If they do not pay the salaries to get that type of men private companies will. So to get them they have to pay these great salaries. I remember discussing the matter with Edward Fielding, the owner of Fieldings Department Stores in Boston, one of the great advocates of the co-operative movement in the United States. It is the same everywhere. If you have a co-operative movement you must have the best, I say the best, the best technical and administrative and other personnel for the proper carrying on of its work. It is not less so in the case of fisheries development, not less so. You have private enterprise—you have Arthur Monroe for example bringing in Germans, Danes, Swedes at this moment, because he is a man who is trying to make a dollar, and that is what he is in business for, not perhaps primarily with Arthur Monroe, but very largely, as most businessmen are in business to make money and pay dividends on their shares, and want to succeed. He wants the best chemists, the best technologists, the best marine experts he can get. He does not care what their nationality is, he just does not care. Similarly the Fisheries Development Authority has got to—is that not obvious, what are we wasting time about in debating that? In 1954 debating whether the Fisheries Development Authority should have the right to employ technical, administrative and other personnel. Of course they should have that right, and they should have the right to go anywhere in the world, this side of the Iron Curtain, because we don't want Communists in Newfoundland, but anywhere in the world they can go they should. Of course we will be hearing—not only are they to get these staggering salaries but can bring in all sorts of foreigners, foreign tongues—but who cares.

MR. BROWNE: I can't say I am sorry the Premier misunderstood my remark because we have had a very interesting interlude. What I was saying was that the Authority should engage someone who has a very high knowledge of the co-operative movement to work with them, who would not confine himself to the business end and the scientific end but to the educational end. I stress that it is a most important part of the work, and I am afraid—

MR. SMALLWOOD: I am not going to contradict the honourable and learned gentleman when he makes that point about the work but I do contradict him when he said that is the work for the Fisheries Development Authority to do. It is not—I used to think it was the work of the Department of Co-operatives. This Government created a Department of Co-operatives, and appointed a Minister of Co-operatives, and at least asked the Lieutenant Governor to appoint a Minister of Co-operatives which His Honour did, and we have had a Minister of Co-operatives from that day to this. We have now changed our minds, after five years, indeed after some three years we changed our minds on that, and decided that it is not properly the function of the Government to carry on a propaganda programme for the Co-operative Movement or indeed to carry on an educational movement amongst fishermen and others in favour of the co-operative movement. We decided that some two years ago.

My colleague announced at a convention in Grand Falls, a co-operative convention, at which Dr. Coady was present, he announced that quite properly we had decided in Cabinet, after careful consideration, and some three years experience, it was not in the best interest of the co-operative movement that the Government should sponsor it through the means of a Government department. My honourable colleague announced that fact. So now our policy is to have the university sponsor it in its extension department. I won't go into that. I described it in the course of my remarks in second reading. Let the university, as other universities have done all across this North American Continent north and south of the border, let the university do it (1) as a great educational effort and (2) as a great sociological effort, through its extension department, but not this. We did not take Ross Young off Water Street and Dunstan out of a bank and Harry Winsor back from Rome because the whole approach is a sociological one, perhaps Harry Winsor, but not these two businessmen out of a bank and an office to start a co-operative movement.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, I accept all the Premier has said, but the point that I think I gathered from what my honourable leader said is, accepting the position that these men are highly competent people, that they are to be given every authority, why should we have them subject to the approval of the Minister? Have we not enough confidence in these people to say—go ahead, run your own show, in your own way, hire whom you want—that is, I take it the point.

MR. HOLLETT: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is the point, and the honourable the Premier has supported that because he said that he expected these highly paid officials of this Authority to go ahead and do something absolutely apart from co-operative work. They are in full charge, twenty-five thousand dollars a year men. We cannot do it. The Department of Fisheries cannot do it. The Department of Co-operatives cannot do it. So we got the Authority to do it. Yet it says here, subject to the approval of the Minister, a mere seven thousand dollar a year man.

MR. KEOUGH: Seven.

MR. HOLLETT: I beg your pardon! These twenty-five thousand dollars a year men have to come and see the Minister, a seven thousand dollar a year man, and get his approval when they can't get John Jones to clean out the fish bins in the morning or something like that. It does not matter who they employ. Another point I should make is this: This section says, by reason of their being hired by this Authority does not automatically make them civil servants. Why then have the approval of the Minister? If of anybody they should have the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I see no reason—I would like to move, but I don't think I should—I make the motion that "Subject to the approval of the Minister" be deleted and it will then read: The Authority may employ technical, professional, administrative, and other personnel. Unless the Minister prefers to put in "subject to the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in Council." I am not sure the Government will not use political interference in any way in the hiring of technicians—that is the point I would like to make.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, there never was a government in Newfoundland's history who took so little notice of party politics in employing its important people.
Never was there a government like it. There never was before. Even the Commission of Government was not so careful to avoid politics or party politics and all considerations of party politics when it came to selecting men for really great positions. I could name them to you one after the other, at least a dozen since we have been in office. We have been complimented repeatedly, and by the Opposition more than once, for the fact that we have kept politics out of our choice of civil servants. The Auditor General is a very good case in point. I have no more notion of what the Auditor General's politics are, whether he is a Liberal or a Tory, than the man in the moon. I have not the foggiest notion. But he is a good auditor general. The papers both wrote an editorial complimenting the Government on selecting Mr. Allen to be Auditor General. We selected—

MR. BROWNE: Don't go into detail.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We selected Mr. Baxter to be the first chairman of the three loan boards. We took him clean out of the Royal Bank of Canada. He turned out not to be too successful because he continued to be the banker, and was not able after so long a lifetime operating as a banker to relax and be the type of man as chairman of the Boards, being approached daily by ordinary fishermen, should be. He did not know how to deal with ordinary fishermen. He was used to dealing with businessmen. I could name at least a dozen. On the other hand in some positions when we pick men invariably in announcing their appointment I always point to their political record. Mr. Anthony Mullowney, for instance, and before him Mr. Gregory Power, when we submitted his name to the Cabinet recommending the Cabinet to appoint him. All appointments made in Cabinet, in fact, I make known, the only ones I have the right to recommend, incidentally recommendations for appointment of deputy-ministers is my prerogative while I occupy this Office and nobody has any say in the matter. The Premier always selects the deputy-ministers as he does the ministers, and the chairman of important boards is a selection of the Premier's. And when I asked my colleagues to appoint Mr. Power, then I announced his appointment as a man who had been very active and prominent in the Confederation Campaign. assistant campaign manager to myself, editor of a newspaper, an ardent Confederate, and then, as Personal Assistant to the Premier. When I announced Mr. Mullowney's appointment to the same position, following on the retirement of Mr. Power on his entering politics. I announced that Mr. Mullowney had with me in Gander launched the Confederation Movement, and he has been an ardent and loyal Confederate from the beginning. Similarly with other appointments of that type. Now these men; do not imagine for one moment that with a change of government they would be permitted by the new government to hold their offices. They don't think so. They don't believe for a moment, because they are frankly men who have been active and prominent in political life of the Province. But when it comes to the other type, the enduring, permanent type of appointment such as the auditor general, the controller of the treasury, I don't know to this moment in all my dealings with Mr. George Allen, any more than I have heard it mentioned, I don't know, and furthermore that is only half the story, as I don't care. Similarly take the Fisheries Development Authority, one man of the three I know to be a Liberal, because as a matter of fact he was once an officer of the Laurier Club, I presume therefore he is still a Liberal but as to the other two I have not the foggiest notion. One is the nephew of the Leader of the Opposition, and for all I know he may be a Tory.

MR. HOLLETT: I would say tainted.

MR. SMALLWOOD: You say he is a tainted Liberal anyway. Now I don't think my honourable friends meant that. I don't think they are one bit afraid that the Fisheries Development Authority are themselves going to exercise political favour or that the Minister is going to ask them to. I don't believe they think that for a moment, and certainly that is not the case.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, there is just one slight inaccuracy, if the Premier would allow me. He said he took Mr. Baxter out of a bank. Is it not a fact that Mr. Baxter had been retired.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, about a year before he retired he was asked by me if he would accept the position. A year before he retired I asked him to accept the position and he agreed to accept it provided the directors of his bank agreed, and provided he could have a short vacation in British Columbia before returning to take up his duties.

DR. POTTLE: Mr. Chairman, if I might address myself to the point the Opposition has raised about the latitude that ought to be given to appointments under this clause. I think anybody looking at this clause dispassionately, and looking at the job which the Fisheries Development Authority has to do, will see the sense of the position this Government has taken in framing the clause in this fashion, i.e. that we could not agree to the Authority having carte blanche, especially in the early stages to employ such help as it deems necessary. Neither in the other extreme could we agree to having every appointment submitted for the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, which means going into a rather circuitous and devious way. This method establishes a happy medium between the two, too great latitudes in one instance and too great restrictions on the other hand.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I just raised the point because I really think, if this Government is going to employ three men at twenty-five thousand dollars a year, three such men with qualifications as described to us; and that one of them happens to be my nephew that in itself should be a recommendation, I admit; but apart from that, with twenty-five thousand dollar a year men, don't you think they ought not to have to go to a seven thousand dollar a year man to get the go-ahead to hire the underdog, sort of. I don't think there is any necessity, and I doubt if the Minister would want it that way. I think somebody should have to approve it because the Government will have to pay the bill, at least the people. I was a little bit puzzled, if I may put it that way, that the Premier when he mentioned Mr. Mulloy's appointment forgot to mention Mr. Banfield and Mr. Vincent. I take it they must be prominent Tories. Then there was one of the fisheries board who was supposed to be a Liberal because he was a Member of the Laurier Club. I might point out that all members of the Laurier Club are not Liberals all the time.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We root them out, you know, we root them out.

MR. HOLLETT: What was the name of that other political party—the Comic Union, I believe—one of the members of the Fisheries Authority was a member of that. So that I agree with the Premier that it does not make any difference about a man’s politics.

DR. ROWE: That was rather an interesting motion the Honourable Leader of the Opposition put forward, i.e., if the head of a department is getting less than the head of any organization or happens to get less than some organizer who runs that organization he cannot very well give orders to him. By the same token I happen to be one of the seven thousand dollars a year men too, and I happen to have in my department men who receive more than seven thousand dollars a year.

MR. HOLLETT: Do you like that?

DR. ROWE: It looks as if I cannot really give them orders, if you extend that argument. As it happens, every deputy-minister now gets more than seven thousand dollars a year.

MR. HOLLETT: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see a twenty-five thousand dollars a year man going to a seven thousand dollars a year man for approval to hire or fire help.

MR. KEOUGH: Nevertheless the seven thousand dollars a year man does represent the Government, and I am afraid that is the way it is going to have to be. We would not be able to accept an amendment to that clause.

It is really there to anticipate a situation arising. I don’t anticipate that the members of the Authority are going to come to me and say, we would like to have this person appointed and that person appointed or engage this type of person or the services of such and such an organization or anything else and that I will find any cause for saying, no, unless of course they should get completely out of line and want to hire some more persons at say twenty-nine thousand dollars a year.

MR. HOLLETT: In view of what the Honourable Minister says I withdraw the motion I made.

Clause 12 carried.

Clause 13 read:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact, which is well recognized, that the northeast coast is handicapped by being blocked with ice for such a large portion of the year, would it not be advisable for the Fisheries Development Authority to give consideration to the establishment of plants in other places? I have here now a map, published, I believe, in the Canadian Fisheries Annual Book, in 1952, by the Newfoundland Government, as to locations of fishing ports of Newfoundland and their location in relation to the banks. That shows that the east and south coasts have far more numerous ports which would be eligible to be fishing ports, where the Authority could be established and have all year around operations. Whereas on the northeast coast, I believe that two of the places mentioned there had to be discontinued formerly because of the fact that ice closed the ports for long periods of the year.
MR. SMALLWOOD: It was not for that reason.

MR. BROWNE: That was not the reason? Well I am not quite sure what the reason was, but I believe reference was made to it in the Report of the Walsh Committee, that these two places had to be closed down, and I know that they referred to the fact that the chief problem in the salt cod industry is on the northeast coast, but nevertheless if the Premier is right in his prediction that the utilization of fish in a frozen block form and converted into breaded sticks and fingers is the best and most profitable way for the utilization of cod, then that seems to me to be more easily carried on, on the east and on the south coasts than it would be on the northeast coast because—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does not my honourable and learned friend see that it is not only a question of where it may be most easily done, but a question of where rehabilitation is most urgently needed. What are you going to do with people on the northeast coast? Suppose it is—would it not be better for us all to go down to Jamaica and live? I am a good judge of that—or let us all go to British Columbia—I am a very good judge of that, or go to Nova Scotia. We got to take Newfoundland as it is, and the large bulk of the fishermen are on the northeast coast. Now don't blame me for that, nor this House and least of all this Government. They were there—my honourable friend said himself that it was a problem of rehabilitation, which it is. Well, whom do you rehabilitate. You rehabilitate those who need rehabilitation, and the majority of these are in fact on the northeast coast.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I can agree with the Premier. The Honourable Member for Green Bay here the other day said the figure given was the average for fishermen in Newfoundland and did not apply to his constituents, because in his opinion the fishermen in Green Bay were making on an average of about twenty-five hundred dollars a year, and that is much, very much, higher than for fishermen in other sections of the country. If you are to talk about rehabilitation, why have people left all the other places on the southwest coast? I was talking to a fisherman this morning, and asked him: "Are there many people in your place going fishing?" He told me there were none left, they had all gone to get jobs in Goose Bay, Seven Islands or in some part of Canada. He said there were vessels lying up in every port and cove in every part of the country. And I was talking to a fisherman from Fortune Bay yesterday, and that man told me that ordinarily where you would have vessels at Cape St. Mary's making it look like a city, you have nothing only the gulls coming along. Talk about rehabilitation—it is in the places along the Southern Shore, Placentia-St. Mary's and other ports where there is need of rehabilitation. It seems to me from my little knowledge of the subject that the fishermen on the northeast coast have stuck more to their calling than they have in the southern part of the island.

MR. SMALLWOOD: What gives the honourable gentleman the idea that the Fisheries Development Authority is going to operate only in connection with the northeast coast? Still the big part of the problem is on the northeast coast, but it would be quite inaccurate to say the prob-
Item is on the northeast coast. The big part of it is. The rest is not, it is in other parts of the island. As at this very moment the Fisheries Development Authority are considering a project running over a million dollars, a project for fishery development that is not on the northeast coast, but is on the east coast, in Placentia Bay. The Fisheries Development Authority is considering other projects that are envisaged not for the northeast coast and not even for the east coast, but for the south coast. The Fisheries Development Authority are considering projects for development on the west coast—although I repeat that the bulk of the problem is the problem of rehabilitating the fisheries of the northeast coast, and therefore the bulk of the fisheries development will be on the northeast coast, but only the bulk of it. There will be many many millions of dollars spent in the next twelve to fifteen years to develop the fisheries in parts of this island other than on the northeast coast. But, if my honourable friend can only take the trouble to look at the population figures, to look at the fish production figures from Cape Pine around to Cape Bauld, on that side of the triangle, and then look at the figures from Cape Race to Port aux Basques or Cape Ray on that side of the triangle, and then look at the third side of the triangle, and then if you like, look at the figures showing the fish produced in these three coasts; and then if he would take each of the three coasts and subdivide them and get the areas of density, he would not be in any doubt whatsoever as to where the real problem is now, he would not be in any doubt in the world; and if he were a member of the Government, he would insist with ordinary native patriotism that the bulk of the allocations be made in the northeast coast. He could not do otherwise. I personally have as deep a sense of gratitude to the people of the Burin Peninsula, Placentia Bay, Fortune Bay, Hermitage, Burgeo, LaPoile Districts, these areas have been very kind to me from the first referendum to this moment. I don't imagine that anybody is going to suppose that I have anything against them. Take the west coast. We have every district on the west coast, every district on the southwest coast, every district on the northwest coast. We have every district on the southwest coast. We have no better majority on the northeast coast than we have there. I hope nobody thinks it is political.

MR. BRODGE: No—no.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Then if it is not political, it must be economic and sociological—that is where the main problem is.

MR. BRODGE: The Government is proposing to move people from the smaller settlements.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, it has never been suggested.

MR. BRODGE: You spent at least one day talking about that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I never once suggested that this Government is going to remove anybody, never once—do you think I am a madman?

MR. BRODGE: Sometimes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Maybe so. I think the honourable gentleman thinks it more than just sometimes. Then I think myself that he is a very unusual gentleman. I never suggested it, never once suggested that the Government would remove anybody. I never did. And I hope the honourable gentleman will accept that. If he will stop for a moment now I think he will know what I mean. If you create a new place and people move into it, you have not moved them. Many people who are now living in St. John's came in from Bonavista Bay. Have we moved them in? Have we moved them in from Conception Bay and Trinity Bay? From my own district, since I first contested Bonavista North there are living here in St. John's now at least three or four hundred families. Have the Government moved them? They like to be living where I am, to be nearer to me, I know that, and that applies to people all over this island as my honourable friend will find in early November.

DR. ROWE: The honourable gentleman referred to what was said by my colleague from Green Bay. I listened with some interest to what the honourable member had to say on that. I don't know if it is in order to refer to it, but I had more than a passing interest in it for a well known reason. The honourable member said that in a certain part of his district last year, for a number of reasons, the earnings from the fisheries were pretty high. But it was in only a part of his district, and that was the northern part of the shore running out towards Cape John, but he also made the point that the great part or at least a large proportion had forsaken the salt codfishery altogether for more profitable employment in the lumber woods. It is rather notable that complete settlements in his district which were once fishing settlements are now almost one hundred per cent logging settlements. There are many settlements in Newfoundland today, Roberts Arm, for example, where the people have deserted the fishery in favour of logging. There is another point, even in places like Indian Bay and Shoe Cove, even if they earn from the fisheries, three or four times the provincial average or even three or four times what they were last year, I would suggest that there are many more problems that must be solved. The problems of the north side of Green Bay itself, is a problem which I submit can in part be ultimately solved by this piece of Legislation here.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I hope this piece of Legislation will solve the whole fisheries problem in Newfoundland, but I see a lot of difficulties. I hope the Government are not creating a sort of Frankenstein who will destroy the Government itself in this particular Authority they are setting up, this Authority of three men, and giving them almost unlimited power. The setting up of this Authority is the greatest intimation this Government has ever given that it is licked completely, and has not even made an attempt to solve the fishery problem in this country, and if they did they did not get to first base, so they suddenly decided to set up this Fisheries Development Authority and let them take the blame bye and bye. Surely the Government must realize that these men, even though they have received such high praises, and we are going to pay them such high salaries, surely we must remember they are human after all, they are just lower than the angels, I suppose, but they are men, and I don't see these three men performing the miracles that they are supposed to perform according to the five day speech of the Honourable the Premier.

MR. SPENCER: Are you prepared to admit they are the best men could be obtained?

MR. HOLLETT: Did I hear somebody speak? I have the floor.

MR. SPENCER: Mr. Chairman, I did not mean to interrupt, I merely asked the Honourable Leader of the Opposition if he was prepared to admit that the three gentlemen chosen were the best we could find in the country.

MR. HOLLETT: I will not.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Amongst those available?

MR. HOLLETT: It has to be qualified by the Honourable the Premier. I would say there are men in this country equally as good, I don't want to get personal on these three men. Let them enjoy their brief period of happiness. It is only to be brief, I am very much afraid, although I hope it will last a long time. But I don't see this country paying twenty-five thousand dollars a year salary to anybody for any extended period of time. When I was interrupted, not rudely, as I did not hear the first time—It is the greatest admission of defeat and absolute helplessness on the part of the Government in this fisheries problem. Mind you they are not the first government to be beaten on the fisheries. As I say they have set up this Authority, which I hope will not be a Frankenstein—for instance here: "The Authority shall carry out and enforce all agreements made before the passing of this Act between the Government of Newfoundland and any person to assist in the development, modernization or improvement of the fisheries."

I ask myself, Mr. Chairman, why can't the Government enforce these agreements themselves? The Government made them, the Government signed them, the Minister of Fisheries signed them. Why cannot the Government enforce these agreements? Why have they to appoint these men to do the job? It is an admission of failure, I say, and it is just as well for the Government to admit it first as last. I charge them with having failed in connection with the fisheries. I charge them, but they will get up and say; we have assisted the fisheries—we have given millions of dollars to—yes, to whom? To the merchants of Water Street, the despised merchants of Water Street. Somebody said it was five millions, I believe, Sir Albert Walsh said that four and a half million dollars were given out to assist the fish merchants—that is in the Fisheries Report at any rate, and I could quote from that, as a matter of fact I think I shall, Mr. Chairman. I think I may be permitted to read one or two sections from this report. They say; The implementation of the programme of development will involve—

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not in order on this section.

MR. HOLLETT: We can get it later in that case, on that section dealing with the duties of the Authority. I will read it later. It does suggest here, Mr. Chairman that in all these things which are recommended by the Walsh Report, that the interest of the Federal Government must be taken care of, the Provincial Government, the fishermen themselves, and the men living in these communities all have to be brought into this thing. Now I don't see this Fisheries Authority doing anything of that nature. They are going to borrow money up to God knows how much or how many millions, they are going to build plants, lend money to everybody, to buy schooners etc. But the point I want to make is that here I see no reason why the Authority should have handed over to it to carry out and enforce all agreements. For instance take that agreement here which I spoke of, an agreement signed by Mr. Dunstan; yet now he is being given in this Act the authority to carry out and enforce that agreement, which in company with another man he signed. In other words he is to enforce an agreement in which he was a partner. I strongly suspect Mr. Dunstan is as human as the rest of us, and I think the Government itself, the Department of Fisheries and the Lieutenant Governor in Council are the proper ones to carry out any agreement they made, and not delegate that authority to somebody else.

Then again I have read (b) and (c) of this particular section. And it seems to me that if it is the duty of the Federal Government wholly and solely to investigate, and as a matter of fact they are on it at the moment, and have already invested in making an experiment in the amount of some forty-five thousand quintals. As I said before, there is too much duplication and tripllication. The Federal Government has done a lot of that too. But I don’t believe there was any need in the first instance of setting up this Authority whatsoever, and giving them the authority which has been given. The Government itself should have been able to do it. For instance they imported a high-priced man here and gave him fifteen thousand dollars a year to do these very things.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, this is so obviously out of order—the honourable member is now debating whether there should be a Fisheries Development Authority. That was debated and the vote taken and the principle adopted, yet now he insists on debating it all over again. He argues now that Mr. Planta should be the one and there should not be a Fisheries Development Authority, although the principle of the Fisheries Development Authority has been adopted by this House.

MR. HOLLETT: I don’t want to do any such nonsense.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Order. The honourable member will please continue.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I am referring to the authority which shall be given—shall do this and shall do that—and I am saying they are given the same authority to do many things which should be done by the Federal officers and should be done by Mr. Planta, and ought to be done by the Minister of Fisheries and the Department, and that is what I am talking about. And if the Honourable Premier did not understand me I hope he does now. At any rate I say it is no part of any authority whatsoever to carry out the agreements made by the Government with some other bodies. They must be carried out and enforced by the Government themselves. I don’t wish to go up until 11:00 o’clock, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this is a very important clause and there are two or three sections there that certainly deserve more consideration. It is now nearly 11:00 and cannot be passed now, and I might suggest moving the adjournment of the debate.

MR. SMALLWOOD: If the Opposition wish to continue discussing it, perhaps we might try debating it for
MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, it is such a little time until 11:00 o'clock.

MR. FOGWILL: Yes, it is 11:00 o'clock.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The House is the master of its own rules in this matter.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, is there any rule that the committee should rise at 11:00 o'clock? We have been here all day.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Standing Order 8 reads: At 11 of the clock p.m., unless the closure rule (SO 50) be then in operation, the proceedings of any business under consideration shall be interrupted and Mr. Speaker shall adjourn the House without question put, provided that all business not disposed of at the termination of the sitting shall stand over until the next sitting day when it will be taken up at the same stage where its progress was interrupted.

The Chairman of Committee must inform the House that it is 11:00 o'clock and remind the committee to rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Motion carried.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole have considered the matter to them referred, have made progress and ask leave to sit again.

Report received.

Ordered sit again tomorrow.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move that all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred, and that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow Wednesday at 8:00 of the clock, and in so doing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is our intention to ask the House after a while to hold morning sessions as well as evening sessions. I am sure it must be the unanimous wish of the House to complete the business of the session as reasonably soon as possible, in view of the fact that we are getting into warm summer. On this side of the House there is no desire whatsoever to shorten debate. We want every member of the House to have all the time he needs or that he feels he needs to debate any measure which we have brought or may bring before the House. At the same time I believe it will be also the desire of all members of the House to devote as much time as practicable to the business of the House so that giving it all the consideration it needs we will nevertheless get through before Christmas time, or before that election in early November.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the Premier if we are to go on with the Fisheries Development Authority Bill tomorrow?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I think we might do that, depending on what we feel at the moment. We might go on with other business for two or three hours.

MR. BROWNE: You are not going on with the budget tomorrow?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Tomorrow is Wednesday, a half holiday.

MR. HOLLETT: What has that got to do with it? We don't have half holidays.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I frankly don't know. It seems to me if we keep on endlessly with one bill it may get monotonous, if not we might go right on with this Bill.

On motion the House at its rising adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 2, at 3:00 of the clock.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1954.
The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions
None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees
None.

Giving Notice of Questions

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I am asking this question although I don't know whether it is permissive.

To ask the Honourable Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:

A copy of the Agreement for the construction of the Birch Plant at Donovans, and a copy of the Agreement providing for its operation.

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Finance to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. List the names of the new industries referred to in the Budget Speech which are employing 2000 men, and the number employed in each of these said plants.

2. Give the names of plants that are in partial production, and the value of commodities manufactured in these plants to date.

3. Give the names of plants in full production, and the value of goods manufactured to date. Give dates when said plants went into full production.

4. Give probable dates when all other plants will go into production.

5. Is it expected that any more monies from Government will have to be advanced to the plants that are not yet in production, and if so, to what amount for each such plant?

MR. HOLLETT—To ask the Honourable Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. Have any ex-gratia awards been made to the following companies on account of work done and/or on account of price changes in commodities, and/or on account of advances in wage rates since the commencement of construction on the cement plant and the gypsum plant? The firm of Miag; the firm of Beno Schilde; the firm of W. J. Lundrigan & Co. Ltd?

2. If so, state the amounts involved with each Company, the date of the award, and the date of payment, and on what account.

3. Were such payments made by the Government to any of said Companies, or were they made from any one company to the other on instructions from the Government or from any Minister of the Government. Give details in all instances with dates of said instructions.

Orders of the Day

Committee of the Whole on Bill "An Act to Establish the Newfoundland Fisheries Authority":

...
MR. CHAIRMAN: When the Committee rose last evening we were considering Clause 13 of this Bill:

MR. BROWNE: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I was about to make some observations on the wording of this Bill. It will be observed that it is a mandatory clause, i.e. the Authority must do these things; receive and examine all proposals and suggestions that may be made to or by the Government of Newfoundland touching the development of the fisheries and report thereon—well I can see nothing wrong with that.

The second sub-clause is "shall undertake research and investigations of any kind that may be necessary to enable it to devise and recommend to the Government of Newfoundland projects for the development of the fisheries and undertake such projects upon their being approved by the Government." Now in regard to this particular clause I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that under the Federal Government, Newfoundland Fisheries Research Station, with fourteen scientists, established here in St. John's. And it seems to me that for the Fisheries Authority to set up another research laboratory would be tantamount to duplication.

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Laboratories are not under Clause (b). That does not necessarily mean scientific research.

MR. BROWNE: Well, no, but that is generally understood by research.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not what that clause means.

MR. BROWNE: If my honourable friend would only wait a moment until I finish my argument perhaps he could answer then. If we look across to page 9, we see that the Authority "may" direct or otherwise participate in research or investigation in any matter that concerns the fisheries. In other words there it is again, on one side they "shall" and on the other they "may" direct or otherwise participate in research or investigations.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Read the whole clause.

MR. BROWNE: I have read it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Read it again.

MR. BROWNE: Well, it is understood there is a certain amount of research and investigation to be made, I understand that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is all it says.

MR. BROWNE: Supposing these investigations are of an economic or business kind—but not attached to the Newfoundland Fisheries Research Station, I am sure there must be a gentleman with a degree in economics as well as in science or in chemistry who would be in a position to undertake research and investigations just as well, if not better, than the Authority. However, I draw that to the attention of the House—

Then on the other hand the Authority may direct or otherwise participate in research or investigation in any matter that concerns the fisheries if the Authority is satisfied that the results of such research or investigation will be of such value to the fisheries as to justify the undertaking, and the results will be available to any person engaged in the fisheries who requests information thereon.

Now it is the second clause which I suggest should be permissive rather than arbitrary. Then under Clause (c) The Authority shall investigate existing and potential markets and marketing methods for products of the fisheries and, where necessary, undertake such research and promotion as it deems desirable to enlarge, improve and increase the markets available to those products. Now it looks very nice to have that there, and it is put there as a definite duty and responsibility of the Fisheries Authority, but, at the same time, there is the Department of Trade and Commerce under the Honourable C. D. Howe, who has been mentioned by the Premier himself as the greatest trader in Canada, and I don't know but he said the greatest in the world. At any rate there is the Department of Trade and Commerce with the departments and special sub-divisions of that department dedicated to the promotion of trade and commerce, and the investigations of markets, etc. Here the Authority which centers here in St. John's, without the necessary agents abroad, are directed to conduct investigations into existing and potential markets. Now if it were a permissive thing so they could do it if circumstances arose to make it necessary I could understand it. But I cannot see that it should be a part of their duties and be an obligation.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I think on reflection the honourable gentleman will himself admit he is on a pretty sticky wicket. I think he sat down feeling that far more than when he stood up. The Authority "Shall" in Section 13, and in the section immediately following, the Authority "May": The Authority shall receive and examine all proposals and suggestions that may be made to or by the Government of Newfoundland touching the development of the fisheries and report thereon to the Government with such recommendations as the Authority may think fit and put into effect such of those proposals and suggestions as the Government approves. That is straightforward.

The Authority shall—undertake research and investigations of any kind that may be necessary to enable it to devise and recommend to the Government of Newfoundland projects for the development of the fisheries and undertake such projects upon their being approved by the Government: That also is perfectly straightforward. It is not even debatable. If we are to have an Authority these are precisely these things.

The Authority shall—investigate existing and potential markets and marketing methods for products of the fisheries and, where necessary, undertake such research and promotion as it deems desirable to enlarge, improve and increase the markets available to those products. After it has seen what NAFEL has done, what the Newfoundland Fisheries Board or anyone else has done, what it then deems essential and desirable to enlarge, improve and increase the markets available to these products. Of course—does it follow because the Government of Canada has set up a very great Department of Trade and Commerce which deals in a very great variety of the primary and manufacturing products of Canada that, therefore, there is anything wrong in a province setting up a special organization of its own under provincial jurisdiction, concentrating on the one thing in that Province that is the life and death of that one province; a matter that can never be of the same intense interest to the great Department of Trade and Commerce as it must be to the province whose very life depends upon it. Is there anything wrong in that? Won't we be blamed if we do not do it, and would we not be blameworthy?

The Authority shall—supervise and carry out an enforcement of all agreements made before the passing of this Act between the Government of Newfoundland and any person to assist in the development, modernization or improvement of the fisheries. The idea there is perfectly simple. It has been pointed out more than once in this House that the Government have lent to some fourteen fishing companies, some fourteen of them, large sums of money running into about seven millions. Before FDA was formed there were the Acts of the Government over a period of several years. We are setting up a Fisheries Development Authority and we wish to enter in that Authority all matters of fisheries development including the loans made or guaranteed by the Government before this Authority came into effect.

We want a group of businessmen, such as these men are in the FDA, to keep a sharp eye on the agreements because all these loans we have made upon guarantees have been made with conditions laid down, and we wish these conditions to be observed, and we wish these businessmen whose sole interest is fisheries development to keep a sharp eye on these former loans to see that the Government's interest is protected, that the conditions are observed and carried out by the recipients of the loans—again a very businesslike and very practical proposition. Really if the Opposition is not opposed to the setting up of a Fisheries Development Authority then I don't see how they can oppose either of these four sections of Section 13. These are the reasons for the setting up of the Fisheries Development Authority. Now it might have been good criticism if they suggested that there were other purposes not named which could be named, but surely there can be no objections to the purposes that are named, so practical, so sensible, they are the essence of the very purpose of the Fisheries Development Authority.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the Minister in relation to Clause 13: (c) in respect to the existing markets. Could the Honourable Minister inform me of the quantity in pounds of fresh fish and fresh frozen fish exported from Newfoundland to the existing markets during the past several years? I feel sure, Mr. Chairman, that would be of interest to the Committee, if he could get the approximate if not the exact figures.

HON. W. J. KEOUGH (Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives): Well, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I would have to have notice of that question. I don't have these statistics immediately available.

MR. FOGWILL: On that point, I did table the question on May 26, and it has been on the Order Paper for several days. That question was in relation to the numbers of plants in operation and production rate of the fish plants. This Bill was coming up and I thought it would be of interest to the Committee when we went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill if we did know these figures.
MR. SMALLWOOD: I think the figure runs around twenty-five million pounds.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in some years it is twenty-six and others twenty-five and then for several years it was down much below that. One year, I think it was 1927, which is quite a long time ago, I think it was down to eleven million pounds. It has increased considerably since that time. But we have not had the figures for the past several years.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The figures are in the appendix of last year's budget speech.

HON. M. P. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): I have it here.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It was in very graphic form in last year's budget speech.

MR. HOLLETT: On sub-clause (d) of this section, I am not quite sure I see the reason why the Authority should be given that authority over all agreements that have been made apparently, in the past on behalf of the Government and some fishery concerns. It is proposed now, according to these sections, to hand over the carrying out of the Government's part of the agreements to the Fisheries Development Authority and also to enforce the carrying out of these agreements by the fishery companies. For instance I have one here, I don't know the name of the company, but in the Auditor General's Report this year it says--"In paragraph 20 of my 1951-52 report I referred to the failure of this Company to pay the second and third instalments of $20,000 each of a Government loan of $280,000 made in 1949. At this date these instalments are still unpaid along with the fourth instalment of $20,000 which becomes due on 25 October 1953."

"In July 1951 Government guaranteed a bank loan of $350,000 to the Company, and in June 1953 this guarantee was increased to $400,000. Clause 3 of the related agreement required the Company to mortgage to Government such draggers as may be purchased by the Company with the funds guaranteed. To date two draggers have been completed but the required mortgages on these boats have not been executed."

There are other cases I could quote, not exactly the same but similar cases. The intention of the Government in saying to the Authority—you shall—is saying, you got to get after these people and make them pay up or else—is that the idea of that section? Has this Authority to take over all agreements made by the Government in the past and by Governments of the past and see that they are properly enforced? I wonder! Is not that the duty of the Government? Is that not rather saddling the Fisheries Authority with something which would not do them any good as far as prestige is concerned? In the first instance, I wonder if the Minister would give us an idea on that?

MR. KEOUGH: Well, the idea of this clause here is to have a competent body that would keep on top of the job of seeing that all companies who received loans fulfilled the conditions of these loans, see that the deadlines with regard to the payment of principle are met and the other conditions such as insurance and keeping the plants and other properties in shape and in the condition that they should be. If it comes to a point where some company has not fulfilled an obligation that it has undertaken, and since that undertaking is between the Minister and the company, I would think that it would be a matter for the Authority to draw that fact to the attention of the Minister, and the Minister refer it to the Government and the Government decide what action should be taken.

MR. HOLLETT: That is the point I made—"The Authority shall carry out an enforcement of all agreements"—there is no obligation there for them to come to the Minister of the Government. What do they do if John Jones owes interest on his last year's loan and has not paid? There is no obligation there that they should carry out and enforce—I am inclined to think that the Government might well consider a slight change in the wording of that. I don't know whether the Government would consider that or not?

MR. KEOUGH: I think that perhaps the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has a good point there. I will ask that this section stand, and I will have the advice of the Attorney General's Department on it.

MR. BROWNE: Before we pass from it I would like to refer back to (c) and (d). As far as (d) is concerned I think the Premier gave a good answer to the objections I raised. But in regard to section (c) I would make a motion: I seem to remember that when the Minister of Fisheries was speaking he said that was the job of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, to look after the existing and potential markets and the marketing of our products. I can understand where we have naturally a far greater interest in the marketing of our codfish whether it is salt or in the fresh frozen state, but, is there to be no co-operation then between the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Trade and Commerce, and is this matter to be left to ourselves?

MR. SMALLWOOD: There is no suggestion of no co-operation. The very means of doing this, the very means the FDA might adopt to carry out sub-section (c) could well be their collaboration with the Federal Department of Trade and Commerce.

MR. BROWNE: Putting pressure on them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Putting pressure, getting them to undertake special projects and the like, because all special interests in Canada for special commodities, special primary products, especially products that have been manufactured, all special interests put their pressure on the Department of Trade and Commerce.

MR. BROWNE: The Fisheries Department too probably?

MR. CHAIRMAN: Is it the wish of the Committee that this clause stand?

Clause 13 stand.

Clause 14 read:

14. The Authority may

(a) at the request of the Minister co-ordinate the work of the several departments of the Government of Newfoundland so far as they relate to any programme for the development of the fisheries and, on behalf of the Government and any of the said departments, collaborate or enter into agreements with the Government of Canada and any of its departments or agencies in the implementation of any programme for the development of the fisheries that the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland may agree to undertake;

(b) assist persons, directly or indirectly, with financial aid or otherwise in the establishment of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels, equipment and installations that will contribute to the development of the fisheries;

(c) assist the operation of such enterprises as are of an exploratory or experimental character or for demonstration in methods of fishing;

(d) on its own initiative or on reference to it by the Government of Newfoundland, advise and make recommendations to the Government in respect of legislation, regulations or organizations touching on the fisheries;

(e) direct or otherwise participate in research or investigation in any matter that concerns the fisheries if

(i) the Authority is satisfied that the results of such research or investigation will be of value to the fisheries as to justify the undertaking; and

(ii) the results will be available to any person engaged in the fisheries who requests information thereon;

(f) if and as it deems fit, and on such installations or equipment that it acquires for the purpose of conducting research or investigation under paragraph (e);

(g) assist directly or indirectly with financial aid or otherwise in the provision of education and training in respect of the fisheries.

MR. BROWNE: May I ask the meaning of that last sub-section—assist directly or indirectly with financial aid or otherwise in the provision of education and training in respect of the fisheries? Does it mean by grants-in-aid to universities or to schools under some other department?

MR. KEOUGH: Well the thought in adding that sub-clause, Mr. Chairman—yes, it could mean direct aid to individual students. There may be cases where the Authority might have some young persons studying in Newfoundland or elsewhere who for financial reasons may not be able to complete his studies, and they may be impressed by his record and may wish to assist him to carry on his studies. That would be one thing. I think also envisioned in this is the possibility of the provision of scholarships maybe at the Memorial University and maybe at some other university.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, before it is carried—in reference to the plants in Clause (b): ".... establishment of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels, equipment and installations that will contribute to the development of the fisheries ...." Does that mean any kind of processing plant with regard to fisheries? It may be one of the large million dollar affairs or a twenty thousand dollar affair or something like that order, or any kind of a plant?

MR. KEOUGH: I would say, Mr. Chairman, the clause does mean that any plant that in any way undertakes to process or change the shape of fish once it comes out of the water, large or small.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask again a question which I believe I asked before: Is not that the function of the Government through its own Department of Fisheries? Why hand that over to the Fisheries Development Authority? Why? I think that is a function of the Government, to assist persons directly and indirectly in the establishment of processing plants. Where is the ending with this Fisheries Authority, which further on in this Bill will be given authority again to raise various amounts of money up to twenty-five thousand dollars at any one time. Apparently they can raise up to a hundred million over the years. Are they going to be the sole authority to assist one and all in the establishment of fish plants? As I take it that is the object of the Government. I am wondering how and in what way such plants, or at least how plants owned and operated by private enterprise are going to compete with the plants set up by this Authority, unless there is some saving clause, a safeguard sort of, for private enterprise. After all we are living under a system of free enterprise, on this side of the Atlantic at any rate. This section gives the Fisheries Authority the sole power on behalf of the Government to assist any number of processing plants.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Where is it say that?

MR. HOLLETT: That is on page 9—the Authority may assist persons, directly or indirectly, with financial aid or otherwise in the establishment of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels—men described by the Government—no greater men under the sun, and men who are made completely independent, according to the Premier. I am afraid they are being built up rather high, and if they do happen to slip they are going to have a very bad fall. I hope they don’t. But I think it is up to us to argue out every section of this particular Bill. I am wondering how far they may go—they may assist people directly or indirectly with financial aid or otherwise in the establishment of processing plants and in the acquisition of vessels, equipment and installations that will contribute to the development of the fisheries. I don’t know whether the Minister would care to say anything on this particular section or not.

MR. FOGWILL: If the Minister is not going to reply, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister some questions in respect to the number of plants now producing fresh fillets, the number of plants and the maximum daily production of each plant. Could the Minister indicate to the committee the number of plants we have producing fresh frozen fish at the present time, and the maximum daily rate of each plant. I think that would be of interest to the Committee.

MR. KEOUGH: I am afraid, Mr. Chairman, my reply there has to be the same as before. I don’t have the statistics immediately to hand, and I have to have some notice of the questions to make them available.

MR. FOGWILL: In answer to the Minister, I do have a question on the Order Paper of May 26, asking these questions, which I had asked in view of the fact that this Bill was coming into Committee and I did think it would be of interest to the Committee, Mr. Chairman, if we did have this information. Because under Section 14, it seems to me, it is the intention of the Fisheries Authority to have the power to say they may or may not advance moneys for construction of plants. Therefore it would be of interest to the Committee if we had these figures. I wonder if the Minister could later in the day bring these figures in?

MR. KEOUGH: Well, Mr. Chairman, when I received that question I passed it to my department for answer. I think that procuring the answers required some consultation with the Federal Department of Fisheries, because some of the statistics asked for are naturally kept by them and not by us. I would not be able to undertake to bring the information in later in the day but could make inquiries and possibly be able to have it for tomorrow.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, what prompted me to ask the question was that five years ago, in 1949, or six years ago as a matter of fact, we had plants for the processing of frozen fillets in Newfoundland capable of producing sixty thousand pounds a day for three hundred days a year. Since that quite a number of plants have been built, some quite large, and I believe there are some more under construction at the present time. So that if our plants in 1948 were capable of producing six million pounds a year on a three hundred, eight-hour, day basis, I would like to know, and I think it would be of interest to the Committee and to every member to know just what the production rate is today, because it has got to tie in with potential markets, and our existing markets.
MR. SMALLWOOD: I can tell the honourable gentleman this—if we had in Newfoundland now, this very summer, competent facilities in existence functioning to block-freeze fish we could probably sell in the United States this year fifty or sixty million pounds of cod fillets, but the block freezing idea is quite new, and the demand for block-frozen fish by far outweighed the capacity to block freeze fish because the facilities for block-freezing have not by any means kept pace with the demand for block frozen fish. The block-frozen fish is the main raw material for fish sticks and other prepared and pre-cooked forms of fish for which nation-wide demand is sweeping across the face of all of North America and has now moved into Canada, I understand. You can go down now on Water Street and buy fish sticks consisting probably of cod fillets block-frozen somewhere in Newfoundland. They are being block-frozen, I believe, by John Penney & Sons, Ramea and by Fortune Bay Products, the new plant at Fortune and by Fishery Products plant at Burin. At least these plants are block-freezing them, and it is quite likely that the present breaded and pre-cooked fish fingers which may be bought in St. John’s are forms of fish originally produced in Newfoundland, block-frozen in Newfoundland, shipped away to the United States, there processed and then shipped back into Newfoundland for sale in such shops as are now at this moment offering them for sale.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, on that point again: That is the reason why I think the Committee should have some valid information in respect to the market which takes the block-frozen fish. What are the markets worth at the present time? What is the potential market worth as far as can be seen as to the quantity of fish required? Because, Mr. Chairman, we have quite a number of plants, and it seems to me that there may be quite a few more. Well, there has to be a safety factor in this respect, in respect to the amount of money put into these plants, government and private capital. If there is a minimum of fish which could be block-frozen and sold in respect to the safe operation of the plant where they could operate at a profit or operate at a loss, and there must be such, then I believe the Minister should give the Committee some information, solid information, not more or less guess work—we should have more than that.

MR. KEOUGH: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the implications of the honourable member’s remarks are that possibly we might find ourselves one of these days with too many fish plants on our hands. Well, one of the reasons for setting up the Fisheries Development Authority is that that sort of thing would be watched. We would depend upon them to watch that and see we are not saddled with more plants than could produce at a remunerative figure. I think that we have to depend upon them for that purpose.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, there are no conditions laid down here, and we don’t know what the terms are on which the Authority may lend money. We also have a Fisheries Loan Board. Would there be any difference in loans given by this Authority and the conditions under which the Fisheries Loan Board gives loans?
MR. KEOUGH: I would answer basically no. The Fisheries Loan Board makes loans for the most part to individuals for the development of the fisheries individually for the most part, to acquire different types of boats and gear. The Fisheries Development Authority will be making loans for development purposes but the amounts will probably be greater, but basically, no.

MR. SMALLWOOD: May I add something to that? The Fisheries Loan Board was set up—have you got the Act? The first year we were in office we passed the Act. The Fisheries Loan Board was set up by an Act of this House to create a means whereby small fishermen, individually, might obtain better boats, better engines and better gear for fishing purposes—individual fishermen or groups of fishermen, and that is defined here. The Board consisting of not fewer than five members to be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council (1) the Chairman being appointed for one year and eligible for reappointment—

MR. BROWNE: I know about that. But, are there to be two Boards from now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Let me explain it now. The Board may, but not so as to restrict the general terms of Section 7, make loans to a fisherman or a group of fishermen for the purpose of repairs or improvement of hulls or boats to be used in fishing, the purchase of any engine or motor power for new or replacement installation in hulls owned by fishermen. The purchase of fishing gear including, but not so as to restrict the generality of sub-paragraph (i) and (ii) of this paragraph, net winches, drag winches and other such gear whether mounted on ship or not and commonly used in either purse seineing, Danish seineing, long lining, deep net fishing or the dragging of fish and scallops; (b) make loans to or on behalf of societies or companies (i) for assisting in the construction of plants and the purchase of plant equipment generally and other types of capital expenditure which, in the opinion of the Board, are proper expenditures for which loans should be made by it;

(ii) to build hulls or boats under contract between the Board, company and builder;

(iii) to build hulls or boats under contract between the Board, society and builder;

(iv) for the purchase of new or old hulls or boats not built under contract with the Board;

(v) for the purchase of engines and auxiliary equipment;

(vi) for the purchase of fishing gear and equipment.

Now the whole purpose of this Act and of the Board set up under it is to provide means whereby the little fellow, the small man—

MR. BROWNE: No!

MR. SMALLWOOD: Oh it is! That is how it is being practised, that is how in fact it has acted, that is how the Board has acted. The loans made have been almost entirely if not entirely to small men or groups of small men. Now the reason for that is this: This Government have hoped from the beginning of our taking office that somehow we could help to prevent the fisheries becoming monopolies by the big aggregations of companies, of capital.
Now the fact is, it stands to reason, it takes a lot of money to build a big fish plant, a modern fish plant. It takes hundreds of thousands of dollars. It takes far more money than the average small man or the average group of small men are able to find even with government assistance, and consequently it is inevitable that these plants will be owned by pretty substantial men or groups of men, i.e. companies. Secondly, when it comes to deep sea fishing these draggers cost a quarter of a million dollars to three hundred thousand dollars each. They have to carry about three hundred thousand pounds of fish, or roughly around that amount. There may be draggers that carry less, but for the most part they carry about three hundred thousand pounds per load. Now these ships run from a quarter of a million dollars up, and clearly small men, fishermen, and small groups of small fishermen are not able to reach on such draggers as these. Now if the only thing we have is the FDA, which is designed primarily to bring about large scale development with large scale investments, with large scale moneys, if that is all we have, and if there be nothing catering to the small man, then inevitably, in its very nature, the fishing industry is changed and the fishing industry becomes more and more industrialized and the small man is simply absorbed into an industrial machine, and he becomes a propertyless proletarian, becomes merely a wage worker for a big fishing company. And this Government, since the first day it came in office in 1949 have been most anxious to help, if it could, find the way to help the small man to acquire boats and gear and engines, to make the primary producer himself, who is after all the foundation—unless there are fishermen, you can't have fish unless there are men to take it out of the water. It is that primary act, that first act of taking the fish out of the water which is the beginning of all fishery. We want that to be in the hands of men sailing their own boats, using their own gear, their own engines and owning the fish they take out of the water. In other words we would like to have an independent population of fishermen. If we must have the great capitalistic, private enterprise industrialized plants for processing the fish and for marketing it, it is even more important because marketing today has become a highly specialized field in which you cannot hope to succeed unless you have a far-flung marketing organization. Arthur Monroe for example has his own office in Cleveland and a far flung trading and marketing organization throughout the whole west and mid-western United States, and he would be completely lost without it. If the new plant at Fortune did not have the tie-in they have with perhaps the greatest of all the fish companies of the United States and their superb marketing organization; if Gaultois Fisheries did not have the tie-in they have with Boston and their big marketing organization they would be lost, and if the other firms did not have their tie-ins for marketing they would be lost. Well, as I say, it is probably inevitable that the big plants, and marketing organizations shall be in the hands of highly capitalized private companies, that is perhaps inevitable—but let us, as far as we can, keep the actual fishery as distinct as we can and in the hands of a bold yeomanry, not the peasantry—we want no peasantry in Newfoundland—but a bold and independent yeomanry.
MR. BROWNE: What is wrong with peasants?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It would take me seven days to tell you so I won't even begin. We don't want a peasantry in Newfoundland, we don't want them—nobody does—perhaps my honourable friend—and there was another honourable gentleman who wanted them, and he was the first Leader of the Opposition—he too wanted peasants in Newfoundland. He wanted them dancing around the maypole.

MR. HIGGINS: He was a reactionary.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would not suggest that my honourable and learned friend from St. John's West is a reactionary, although he has a very great fondness in his heart for the maypole. However, I do say, let us at least try to retain for Newfoundland the bold and independent fisherman, and that he will cease to be if he becomes merely a proletarian, fishing for a private industry company who owns the boat he sails and the plant in which he places his fish and the marketing organization that sells his fish. He will then become a labourer on the sea who will haul fish out of the water for another man in another man's boat for another man's plant to be marketed by another man—what is then the difference between him and a labourer who digs ditches in St. John's? What is the difference between the two? Virtually none.

So that, as I say, it is terribly important to retain the Fisheries Loan Board to deal with the small man—and perhaps, we would hope, and there is no law against hoping, for many hundreds of boats running around five, six, eight and ten thousand dollars each, built largely out of loans made by the Fisheries Loan Board assisted by the Federal Department of Fisheries which makes bonus payments and pays bounties on boats measuring not over sixty feet, in fact they must be under sixty feet in length. Most of them are built, I believe, fifty-nine feet, nine inches, just one or two inches below the sixty feet top measure, so that they may fall inside the maximum.

That is the purpose of the Fisheries Loan Board—surely my honourable friends opposite are not going to object to that. Surely they are not going to have the functions of that board absorbed by the Fisheries Development Authority, which is set up for an entirely different purpose. I appeal to them to drop any opposition right now to the continued existence of that Fisheries Loan Board. That Board is for the little man, let us not disturb it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, that is all very interesting, and I have very little to disagree with in what the Premier has said there. But you know that does not answer the question I asked. He said the Fisheries Loan Board was set up to help the little man. Then he read from the Act the purpose for which it was passed, which indicates it was not set up for the little man, but for companies requiring finances, and I don't know of any little man who got any assistance from the Fisheries Loan Board since it started.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: The Premier may know about it but I don't nor the honourable member for the District of Ferryland nor anyone else. Yes, one man got a loan of several thousand dollars, but he was not a little man, he was a big man as far as the shore fishery is concerned.

MR. MURRAY: I say, I do.

MR. BROWNE: I would like to know how much money was loaned under that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That has been tabled.

MR. BROWNE: There is nothing to indicate any division between the two—the Fisheries Development Authority have power to do the same things—where are we to draw the line between the Fisheries Development Authority and the Fisheries Loan Board?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have already said the Chairman of the Loan Board is the Secretary of the Fisheries Development Authority so that there may be some liaison there.

MR. BROWNE: In other words the Fisheries Loan Board will be a sub-division of the Fisheries Development Authority—now while we are discussing this matter, we all understand, I think, the absolute necessity of having outlets for fish. It is no use producing fish unless you have someone to buy it off your hands. We know that must be so and so does the Premier. But is the Premier in a position to say anything about the United States in regard to marketing of frozen fillets? We know the Maritime Commission made certain recommendations to the President—is there anything new on that subject?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I understand there is a considerable amount of worry about the matter—a considerable amount of worry—a considerable amount of grave concern—on the other hand I hear also that since the report was handed in, whatever that report may be, to the President, a new situation has developed, and that is that the firms, the American companies that engage in the processing of block-frozen fish into breaded and pre-cooked fish fingers and sticks, and the like, are discovering or have discovered that they are not able to supply themselves with sufficient quantities of block-frozen fish from the United States sources to enable them to keep up with the demand of the public for these products. In other words clearly the number of fish sticks and fingers and the like that may be made is limited by the number of pounds of block-frozen fish available for the purpose, and the number of pounds of block-frozen fish available for the purpose in the United States, available from United States sources, is not nearly great enough. They have the plants that are specializing in the products that are the end results of block-frozen fish, but they are up against a very great necessity for block-frozen fish, and therefore, they have revised the position they took when this inquiry was held, since then they have reversed their opinions, and now wish that any barriers that exist to the importation of block-frozen fish into the United States be lowered rather than raised so that they can get a sufficient and continuous supply of block-frozen fish for the use of their own plants for the manufacture by them of the frozen fish fingers in the United States.

Now if that is true, and I have heard that, and if that is true the end result might conceivably be enormous—now I have no inside information, or information that could be described as inside information, but if that were so the end result might be the imposition of a higher tariff on the cooked fish and not on the block frozen fish—only on the fish after it is cooked or maybe after it is breaded.
It might be one or the other, and it might be both. If it is on cooked fish then probably none or little if any of our block-frozen fish could then be cooked in Newfoundland, but if it is not on pre-breaded fish it could be pre-breaded in Newfoundland and shipped to the United States where it would be cooked and then sold. If it is on both all we can do is to ship the block-frozen fish, and even that is a very big thing for Newfoundland. If on the other hand they put a duty on or lower the quota on block-frozen or in any other way restrict the importation of block frozen fish into the United States it would be a very sad blow indeed for Newfoundland and to our whole fisheries development programme.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I might add something to what the Honourable the Premier has said. I have heard myself that protests have been sent to the President from all over the United States suggesting that the fish be allowed in as there was not sufficient fish to supply the demand.

Now there is one other question I would like to ask on this sub-clause:

"The Authority may on its own initiative or on reference to it by the Government of Newfoundland, advise and make recommendations to the Government in respect of legislation, regulations or organization touching on the fisheries."

Is the Minister in a position to tell us what is meant by organization there?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman,
I am not in a position to indicate specifically. The occasion may arise from time to time when in conjunc­tion with the trade organizations or the fishermen's organization the Authority may want to put forward some proposals to the Government that might enable them in some way to carry out the purpose they are set up for.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, while on that point; I listened very attentively to the Premier during his few remarks in relation to the Fisheries Loan Board. I would like to point out to the Committee that the Fishery Loan Board does loan money to other people, I refer to the Government loan of two hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars last year at one half per cent, and up to the end of the last fiscal year the company did not even pay their interest.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, that is not a very helpful remark—surely the honourable gentleman knows, surely he is aware, he must be, he has been in this House now for five years, and he must have learned something in those five years, and amongst the things he learned must have been this; that throughout the year his Government, like all governments in the world, finds itself in the awkward position where expenses are going on hourly, daily while revenues come in, most of them quarterly, so that there can be whole weeks when there is a great gap between what it must spend from day to day and what it takes in. Therefore the Government has to look around and say; what pockets of money have we got—fine we have something like three hundred thousand in this Board and a couple of hundred thousand in that Board, and we have a million lying in some other pocket, and we borrow back our own money, the Government's own money which we have advanced to these bodies, borrow it back temporarily, and pay them back again later on. Now what is wrong with that? Why try to make anything of that?

MR. HIGGINS: As long as you pay it back it is all right.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Suppose we don't pay it back? It is the Treasury's own money from the beginning to the end, always, there is no limit on that, to the end it is the Treasury's own money—put it from one pocket to the other, and put it back again, and take it back again. There is nothing wrong with that. It is commonplace. Every Government does that.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I was a little bit amused by the Honourable the Premier's reference to the bold and independent yeomanry in the fishery. I believe that Act and that loan fund was set up in 1950, was it not? Anyway it was sometime ago. And they were given an amount of five hundred thousand dollars to lend to fishermen. Since that time they loaned fishermen and others, not including the Government, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. I believe they loaned slightly over two hundred thousand to fishermen, and if my recollection is correct, three individuals got twenty thousand or more, which is about eighty or ninety thousand to these individuals alone, and what is left, slightly over a hundred thousand dollars, was divided, I think amongst about seventeen or eighteen or twenty others—I don't remember the exact figures, but that is what happened. That is the number of fishermen that have been helped in that way. That is not what I got up to say, Sir—I did know, but I have forgotten it now.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Perhaps it is better forgotten.

MR. HOLLETT: Maybe, Mr. Chairman, I will come across it later. But I am amused at the instantaneous manner in which the Honourable the Premier jumped to his feet and made a political speech right at the drop of the hat—it is marvellous.

MR. MURRAY: Yes, I was about to say a bold yeomanry, a country's pride must first be set up and then supplied.

MR. HOLLETT: You can even get poetry at the drop of a hat. Sir, the people of Ferryland will be glad to know they have a poet representing them here in the House. Next thing we will have a report on Provincial Affairs in poetry and it will go down in history.

We are not endeavouring to oppose, in this particular part of the discussion, this Act, and we only refer to things that we think ought to be drawn to the attention not only of the Government but of the people as well.

Clause 14 carried.

Clause 15 read and carried.

Clause 16 read:

16 (1) The Authority shall annually submit to the Minister an operating budget for the next following financial year of the Authority for the approval of the Minister.

(2) The Minister shall annually lay before the Legislature the capital budget of the Authority for its financial year approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

(3) The Treasury Board, on the joint recommendation of the Minister and the Minister of Finance, may by regulation prescribe the form in which the budget required by this section shall be prepared.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, there is no date on that budget. I suppose it would be at the time of the estimates. There is no date mentioned for placing before the Legislature the budget of the Authority.

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, the actual suggestion is that both operating and capital budget for the Authority shall be laid before the Legislature.

MR. HOLLETT: That section has brought back to my mind what I meant to say a moment ago. What I wanted to ask was—this Authority has been working since last June—have they submitted for the approval of the Minister a budget for the present financial year. I note that in the budget speech the Honourable Minister of Finance did say something about two fish plants which were likely to be set up at a cost of possibly around three million dollars—I am wondering if that is part of the budget submitted to the Honourable Minister under this section.

MR. KEOUGH: The actual suggestion is, Mr. Chairman, while these provisions do not presently apply to the Authority until such time as the Act is passed, this procedure generally has been followed—the Authority did submit to me, and I submitted to the Cabinet, both operating and capital budgets for the coming year, and it will appear in one item in the estimates, and will be broken down for the House when we come to that estimate.

Clause 16 carried.

Clause 17 read:

17 (1) The Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall, from moneys voted by the Legislature for the purpose, make available and pay to the Authority from time to time such funds as it may require for the proper carrying on of its work.

(2) The Authority may receive and accept such other sums of money as may from time to time be paid to it by way of grant, contribution or reimbursement from any source, if it receives such funds to assist it in the attainment of its objects or in the proper exercise of its functions or to reimburse it for disbursements made by it on any behalf.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman—the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall—I am wondering if that should not be “may.” Surely you are not going to make it mandatory upon the Lieutenant-Governor in Council—

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Yes, I never liked that clause.

MR. KEOUGH: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I move myself that the word “shall” be stricken out and that the word “may” be substituted therefor.

MR. BROWNE: You have to get someone else to move it.

MR. CURTIS: I make that motion.

MR. HOLLETT: Before you put the clause, Mr. Chairman, “The Authority may receive and accept such other sums of money as from time to time be paid to it by way of grants, contribution or reimbursement from any source, if it receives such funds to assist it in the attainment of its objects or in the proper exercise of its functions or to reimburse it for disbursements made by it on any behalf."

Mr. Chairman, I don’t like any Authority being set up by the Government to be in a position to accept contributions from anybody. I would just draw that to the attention of the Minister. I don’t think they should receive any contributions. I have heard too much in recent days of people receiving contributions—people have received contributions for doing such things. It might be that it is there to protect such people that might indulge in accepting contributions. I would say it would be much better to have the word taken out.

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, it is envisaged there by the granting of contributions that the Authority may have facilities for carrying out certain work in certain communities and the Authority’s work may not call for the carrying out of it at the particular moment and another body may wish the work undertaken, and this is to provide that the Authority may receive such contributions from another organization to do the work for them.

MR. FOGWILL: It would apply to the Federal Government?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes. It is the Authority and not the individuals comprising the Authority.

MR. HOLLETT: The Chairman is absolutely in control. The Chairman, I think, is the administrative head of the Authority and the Authority may receive and accept contributions. If that were just contributions from the Federal Government it would be quite in order. I still don’t like the idea of contributions from say, Arthur Monroe or Hazen Russell or someone like that.

Clause 17 carried.
Clause 18 read and carried.
Clause 19 read:

19 (1) The Auditor General shall at least once in every financial year audit and may, during the course of the year, make an interim examination of the accounts and financial transactions of the Authority and is entitled to have access at all times to all records, documents, books, accounts and vouchers of the Authority and to require from the members and employees of the Authority such information and explanations as he deems necessary.

(2) Whenever the Auditor General makes an interim examination under sub-section (1) he shall submit a report to the chairman and to the Minister.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, what is the meaning of surplus—is the Authority always to have a surplus to its credit?

MR. KEOUGH: No, I imagine that is a standard provision put in there in all requirements for statements of accounts and makes a stipulation if, and when they do have a surplus.

MR. HOLLETT: Somebody must point out to me how the Authority could have a surplus. Perhaps the Minister could answer that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It would be shorter if we just struck the word out.

MR. HOLLETT: I want to know how the Authority could have a surplus?

MR. SMALLWOOD: If they don’t it won’t be changed.
MR. CURTIS: If they have money they don't spend, is not that a surplus?

MR. HOLLETT: In that case the Government never has a surplus.

Clause 19 carried.

Clause 20 read and carried.

Clause 21 read:

21 (1) Subject to sub-section (3), the Authority shall not later than the fifteenth day of May in each year submit an annual report to the Minister in such form as he may prescribe, which shall include a report concerning the work of the Authority during the previous financial year, the annual report of the Auditor General, and the statement of accounts specified in sub-section (1) of Section 20 and the Minister shall lay the report before the Legislature within fifteen days after he receives it or, if the Legislature is not then in session, within fifteen days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

(2) The Authority shall make to the Minister such reports of its financial affairs as he requires.

(3) The first report to be submitted in accordance with sub-section (1) may, with the consent of the Minister, be submitted at any time between the fifteenth day of May and the fifteenth day of November, 1954.

MR. HOLLETT: Is that likely to be submitted this year, may I ask?

MR. KEOUGH: I think it most unlikely.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That would be just about the time of the election which the Honourable Leader of the Opposition called.

MR. HOLLETT: Anytime within fifteen days—there is ample time yet before the House closes. We do know the Minister told us some three millions are already involved, and consequently they must have something to report, having worked for one year and told the Minister—was not that giving him the plan? Why could not the House have that plan?

MR. SMALLWOOD: What has all that to do with the election?

MR. CHAIRMAN: I think the question is—what has the election got to do with all this.

MR. HOLLETT: It may have more to do with it than strikes the eye.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable gentleman is so suspicious.

MR. HOLLETT: I will say the Honourable Minister ought to submit it now; undoubtedly the report is good, and any Government or any Minister who is going to distribute three million dollars throughout the country in connection with the development of the fisheries ought to be glad to give it to the people. I know the people would be glad to know it. They have the report—and under this section the Minister may submit it to the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Minister says he has not received it.

MR. BROWNE: No—no.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Wrong again.

MR. HOLLETT: Are you on the Opposition side of this House?

Clause 21 carried.

The House recessed for ten minutes.
Mr. Chairman called the Committee to order:

Clause 22 read:

22 (1) The Auditor General shall report annually to the Minister the result of his audit or examination of the accounts and financial statements of the Authority, and the report shall state whether in his opinion

(a) the Authority has kept proper books of account;
(b) the financial statements of the Authority

(i) were prepared on a basis consistent with that of the preceding year and are in agreement with the books of account,
(ii) in the case of the balance sheet, give a true and fair view of the state of the Authority's affairs as at the end of the financial year, and
(iii) in the case of the statement of income and expenditure give a true and fair view of the income and expenditure of the Authority for the financial year; and
(c) the transactions of the Authority that have come under his notice have been within the powers of the Authority under this Act and any other Act applicable to the Authority; and the Auditor General shall call attention to any other matter falling within the scope of his examination that in his opinion should be brought to the attention of the Legislature.

(2) The Auditor General shall from time to time make to the Authority or to the Minister such other reports as he may deem necessary or as the Minister may require.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I would like to draw your attention to sub-clause 2 and sub-clause 3: In the case of the balance sheet, give a true and fair view of the state of the Authority's affairs as at the end of the financial year, and (iii) in the case of the statement of income and expenditure give a true and fair view of the income and expenditure of the Authority for the financial year;...

That is rather strange for an auditor to have to do that—a true and fair view—then you will notice if you go down to sub-clause 2: "The Auditor General shall from time to time make to the Authority or to the Minister such other reports as he may deem necessary or as the Minister may require." So that if the Minister does not want a true and fair report he is empowered under this to ask for a different one. I just brought that to the attention of the Minister as he might need it sometime.

Clause 22 carried.

Clause 23 read and carried.

Clause 24 read:

24. The Authority, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise for the purposes of paragraph (b) of Section 14, but the aggregate of the amounts borrowed under this Act and outstanding shall not at any time exceed twenty-five million dollars.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, it says here—the Authority, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money from Her Majesty or otherwise for the purpose of paragraph (b) . . . Does that mean to say that the Authority may borrow from a bank or issue some kind of debenture or bonds in order to get money? Is that the intention?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is not the intention.

MR. KEOUGH: With the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council the power is there for the Authority to borrow money.

MR. BROWNE: You don't anticipate their trying to borrow money like NALCO tried to do, for example?

MR. SMALLWOOD: NALCO's borrowing was authorized by this House.
The position is actually that the Government cannot give to the FDA any authority which the Government itself does not possess—the Government itself has no authority to borrow money except upon the authority of this House. So, as we have not got the power to do it except when we are authorized by the House we cannot give the FDA the power to do it.
If we give it it is because we have been authorized by the House to give it. So that they will, in fact, borrow only with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council can give approval only if authorized by a statute of the House to do so, and if we are there is no objection to it.

MR. BROWNE: The words "or otherwise" are the words I am objecting to. What is the purpose of this if they are not going to raise money on the bond market?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, that may be precisely the way to do it. It may be that the House may be asked sometime to authorize the corporation, FDA, to float a bond issue on the guarantee of the Province of Newfoundland. If the Legislature gives the Government that authority then the Government would be in a position, but only then, to authorize the corporation, FDA, to do so. It is all highly improbable.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, I think so too as it stands at the present time.
Does it not mean the FDA with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council may from time to time borrow money on the bond market once this Bill is passed and approved, and if a loan were to be made on the bond market the Authority may raise it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Would the honourable gentleman say that again?

MR. BROWNE: They can raise money by going to the bank and raising it with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, but not a bond issue, because a bond issue can be raised only on the authority of the House.

MR. BROWNE: Well, what does
"or otherwise" mean?

MR. SMALLWOOD: May borrow from the Government or borrow from the bank. No one can raise a sale of bonds of the province except on the authority of this House—no one—it requires a special statute.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, the Government could not borrow money without the authority of the House?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, can't sell a bond issue.

MR. HOLLETT: Then you can borrow money?
MR. SMALLWOOD: Short-time borrowing subject to ratification by the House.

MR. HOLLETT: In that case the Authority can borrow it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, but not sell bond issues.

MR. HOLLETT: Would the Minister tell me under what conditions, or how could the Authority borrow money from the Government. What I mean is, can they borrow money without some sort of security of paying it back, some guarantee or mortgage on something. Is the Authority to have the means whereby they can pay interest on loans and that sort of thing? Are they to be set up as a Crown Corporation? That is what I like to know.

MR. SMALLWOOD: How can they borrow from the Government? That is the question, is it? Well they borrow from the Government—

MR. HOLLETT: Or from anybody, if you like?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Well their ability to borrow from anyone is determined first by the lawfulness of their borrowing, and secondly on the willingness and ability of the lender to be borrowed from. Now one of the lenders might be the Government, and our willingness and ability to be borrowed from would determine what they might borrow, and the willingness and ability of a bank to lend money would determine how much they might borrow from a bank. If the Fisheries Development Authority lends a couple of million dollars to fish firms they have to get it first by borrowing it from the Treasury.

MR. HOLLETT: Can you lend money that way without a guarantee?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, we do it commonly and are indemnified at the next ensuing session of the House, when ratified by the House, and then also as provided, the House itself will legislate authority to the Government to lend money to the FDA because it will be in the estimates, it will be budgeted for anyway.

MR. HOLLETT: A couple of million at any time you want to?

MR. SMALLWOOD: First of all we can lend them money out of funds voted by the Legislature to us on the basis of the budget submitted—secondly we can lend them (1) money on a short time basis or any time, subject to ratification of the House at the next ensuing session. That is true of anyone. Since the House met last year we lent money to a number of people. We do that every year, and I suppose we will always do it and our successors will continue to do it and their successors will continue to do it. You cannot always be calling the House together. It is just not practical to do that and, (2) it is not always in the public interest to wait until the House is called together in the normal course. Occasions arise when it is in the public interest for the Government to lend a sum of money in the belief that its action in so doing will be ratified by the House when the House is asked at the next ensuing session to do so. We will come before this House in this present session and ask for ratifications of loans we have made in fact as a Government since the last session of the House. And we have done that, I think, in every session since Responsible Government was restored to Newfoundland, and I suppose we will continue doing it, and, as I say, our successors and their successors after them will do likewise.
MR. HOLLETT: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure the Government will continue to do it, but if money is voted by the Legislature in this session to be devoted to this purpose, what is the reason why the Authority has to borrow that money from the Government?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They may borrow from us to lend to someone else.

MR. HOLLETT: Almost Clarenville boats again—do you mean to tell us this Government will vote three million dollars for these said purposes in this Act now, and apparently the Government does not pay that over to the Authority?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We don't give it to them as a gift.

MR. HOLLETT: You give them twenty-five thousand dollars each a year as a gift. What else is it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is so. At the moment it has no specific significance or plan that calls for the immediate and early expenditure of twenty-five million dollars.

MR. BROWNE: Well why are there not blue-printed plans and specifications calling for a certain amount?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Because it takes time, and must be based on a geographical and topographical scale.

MR. BROWNE: In other words we go on a voyage but we don't know where we are going?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We are making ample provisions.

MR. HOLLETT: You don't exactly give it to them, ten thousand of that will have to go to the Federal Government in taxes—so that in reality this Provincial Government thereby contributes thirty thousand dollars a year to the Federal Government. That is one big slice which has to come off. What I am trying to say is that we vote three million dollars to the Authority for the purpose of the work of the Authority, and it does seem silly to me that they then have to come to the Government and borrow that money after the House has voted it for the same purpose. I can't see it. I guess I am dense on financial matters—I can't see it that way.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this sum of twenty-five dollars, I suppose, is put in for good measure, it has no special significance, it could be ten and it could be amended to fifteen or thirty or any figure at all?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is so. At the moment it has no specific significance or plan that calls for the immediate and early expenditure of twenty-five million dollars.

MR. BROWNE: Well why are there not blue-printed plans and specifications calling for a certain amount?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Because it takes time, and must be based on a geographical and topographical scale.

MR. BROWNE: In other words we go on a voyage but we don't know where we are going?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We are making ample provisions.

MR. HOLLETT: I am still not clear. We voted five hundred thousand dollars, as this House did some years ago, to be devoted to the Fisheries Loan Board. Do you mean to tell me the Loan Board has to come to this Government and borrow? No. It has been passed over to them and put to their credit in the bank. If we put it to their credit in the bank they don't have to go and borrow it. If that is so, Sir, then this Government is likely to have most of that three million gone into some other thing. That is the point I want to raise—are we to earmark three million dollars more or less for the use of this Authority, and yet not allow them to spend it. Surely it is not to be necessary for them to come back to us and ask for that fund. It won't be here. It will be gone into another birch plant or steel plant in Bay Roberts or something like that. That has happened before—money voted in this House last year for certain purposes did not go to the purposes for which it was voted, but went into some of the new industries. That is the thing I want to safeguard against now. There is not much we can do about it on this side, but I put it to the Government that there is something they can do about it. The whole idea of three men in this Fisheries Authority set up with authority to borrow money seems to me to be ridiculous.

MR. SMALLWOOD: With the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, the Honourable the Premier just said that the Government cannot borrow money without the approval of the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I did not say it. I did not say that.

MR. HOLLETT: A temporary loan you can borrow. I know—but you can't go and raise a loan.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We can't sell bonds.

MR. HOLLETT: What is the difference?

MR. SMALLWOOD: All the difference in the world.

MR. HOLLETT: Very little. These people, I say, have authority in that Authority to raise twenty-five million dollars, and that must be given by this House and not by approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, because I know that if the Lieutenant-Governor in Council gave them that authority, they would not be able to raise the money.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Would my honourable friend answer this question: Would he approve having struck out the words "With the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council?"

MR. HOLLETT: No, I—

MR. SMALLWOOD: No. He complains it is there, but he would not strike it out.

MR. HOLLETT: I would agree to the substitution of the words—"With the approval of the House of Assembly—the Legislature." That is what I am asking for.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is already the law. It is in the Audit Act.

MR. HOLLETT: Remember we raised the point. I think you will remember five years hence.

HON S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Honourable Leader of the Opposition means prior approval or subsequent approval?

MR. HOLLETT: I think it should be prior approval. I don't think any authority should be given the right to borrow twenty-five million dollars without prior approval of the House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: This is the prior approval—the passing of this Act. And the safety valve for it is that the Act states that each individual transaction must be at the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. That is why we want that in.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words, if we vote for this section we vote to give the Authority the right to borrow twenty-five million dollars?
MR. SMALLWOOD: It also insists that they shall submit to the House both a current and capital budget to be agreed on and approved by this House. They cannot spend but what is approved in the House in advance—their budget must be debated and must be approved. When their budget has been approved they then have the right to do the things they have been authorized by the House to do. I don't see what makes the honourable gentleman so dense. I don't think he wants to see.

MR. HOLLETT: It is almost unbelievable, Mr. Chairman, are they then going to get a budget from the Authority before the House closes?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, the honourable gentleman has been told so this afternoon.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't mind being told again.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is yes.

MR. BROWNE: I think the Premier has now let us see another side of this borrowing—it must be for capital account, because the borrowing, I take it, is with the intention of repaying. This is not a grant for the current expenditures of the Authority for which there shall be no definite return. This is borrowing for the purpose of investment, and there will be a return back to the Government?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Exactly.

MR. BROWNE: Now would it not be wise, rather than make the figure twenty-five million for the total outlay—

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is the total outlay at one time.

MR. BROWNE: At one time—well, this is for all time I take it—outstanding—shall not at any time—

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes at any one time.

MR. BROWNE: Would it not be wiser to have a provision of so much in any one year or not more, say, than four million dollars in any one year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, it has been intimated to us by the Honourable Minister of Finance that we are to float a bond issue, or the Government is to float a bond issue of twelve million dollars, and I note by the estimates figures in that, it is slated for the purpose of this Authority. Why then do they want extra authority to borrow money up to twenty-five million dollars?

MR. SMALLWOOD: But this clause is not for 1954, but for as long as the statute may last, and what the Authority may exercise this year may be well covered, but for next year and the year after and for ten years hence it may not be.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, why not cover it year by year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is the purpose of this.

MR. HOLLETT: Not after the Act passes. They can borrow twenty-five million with your approval.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And our approval only. If we have the right, but we must get our right from this House.

MR. HOLLETT: To raise bonds?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.
MR. BROWNE: "The Authority, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may, from time to time, borrow money"—suppose they go looking for a large loan of five million dollars, and the Lieutenant-Governor in Council gives its approval, you say they would not get it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Government itself would not get it, let alone its agent, of course. No Government of the size of this can go and borrow five million dollars in short time indebtedness, they can borrow on bonds, a long term, twelve or fifteen years issue, not for six months or eight months.

MR. BROWNE: What is the maximum there?

MR. SMALLWOOD: On two or three million maybe, depending upon how near it is to the opening of the Legislature, how soon you can tell them you think you can pay it.

Clause 24 carried.
Clause 25 read:

25 (1) The Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may from time to time

(a) make loans to the Authority out of money in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or

(b) guarantee repayment of the principal of and interest on money borrowed by the Authority but the Minister shall not make or give such loans or guarantees in any financial year except to the extent that the Legislature has authorized him to make or give such loans and guarantees in that year.

(2) Notwithstanding sub-section (1), the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may from time to time

(a) make loans to the Authority out of money in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, or

(b) guarantee repayment of the principal of and interest on money borrowed by the Authority for the purpose of repaying money that the Authority has borrowed under this Act.

(3) The Minister of Finance shall make or give a loan or guarantee under this Act only in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the Lieutenant-Governor in Council shall approve.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this is the opposite side now.

MR. SMALLWOOD: One authorizes to borrow from the Lieutenant-Governor in Council and the other authorizes the Lieutenant-Governor in Council to lend it, but it says how.

MR. BROWNE: It also says—guarantee—the Minister of Finance may from time to time guarantee repayment of the principal of and interest on money borrowed by the Authority but—the Minister shall not make or give such loans or guarantees in any financial year except to the extent that the Legislature has authorized him to make or give such loans and guarantees in that year—

Now what has the Legislature authorized the Minister to give this year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Until the estimates are passed, and when the Appropriation Bill is passed that will represent the authority of the Legislature to the Minister to lend out of the sum that the Legislature has guaranteed to him for the purpose.

MR. BROWNE: Will there be a special clause dealing with this Authority in this respect?

MR. SMALLWOOD: This is the clause.

MR. BROWNE: And the amount is in the estimates?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The amount is in the estimates.

Clause 25 carried.

Clauses 26 and 27 read and carried.

Clause 28 read:

28 (1) The Authority may by a person daily authorized by it for that purpose ascertain and delimit the land to be expropriated and for that purpose the person so authorized has the right to enter upon the land to ascertain and measure and obtain a plan and description of it.

(2) The Authority shall notify the owner in writing that the land, describing and delimiting the same, is required and will be taken for a purpose, naming the purpose, referred to in Section 27 and ten days after the service of the notice in writing on the owner or, if the owner is absent from Newfoundland or cannot be found or if for any other reason personal service cannot in the opinion of the Authority be conveniently effected, ten days after the posting up of the notice in writing in a conspicuous place upon the land, the land shall vest in the Authority and the Authority may forthwith enter upon and take possession of it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I presume under these sections 27 and 28, thinking of St. John's East at the moment—we have a large number of fishermen fishing out of this place, and they cannot find any place where they can have a wharf or storage facilities along the waterfront. I take it that under this section the Fisheries Development Authority could expropriate land somewhere along the waterfront in St. John's to set up and build—

MR. SMALLWOOD: They could under conditions defined in Section 27.

MR. HOLLETT: "Whenever the Authority deems it necessary to acquire any land for the purpose of carrying on any undertaking under this Act or for any purpose incidental or related thereto or for the purpose of assisting or encouraging the establishment or development of any fishing enterprise by any person or for any purpose incidental or related thereto and the owner of the land refused to accept the sum tendered by the Authority for the land, or if for any other reason the Authority deems it advisable to do so, the Authority, subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, may expropriate the land in accordance with Section 28"—well surely they must have refused to accept.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Before the expropriation can take place—because they go about it in a businesslike way to try and buy a piece of land, but the owner won't sell or won't accept a price, then only expropriation followed by arbitration.

MR. HOLLETT: Then under this circumstance there is a chance for fishermen in St. John's to get a wharf?

MR. SMALLWOOD: A fishermen's wharf—of course there is,
Clause 28 carried.

Clause 29 read:

29 (1) The Authority shall make compensation to the owner of any land expropriated under this Act or to the owner of any land used or injuriously affected by the expropriation for all damages necessarily resulting from the exercise of the powers given under sub-sections (1) and (2) of Section 28 and in all cases any advantage which the owner may derive or be likely to derive directly or indirectly from the contemplated work and operations shall be taken into account in reduction of the compensation.

(2) The amount of compensation to be paid shall be ascertained by a Board of Assessors which shall consist of three persons, one of whom shall be the chairman of the Board, who shall be appointed by the Authority, and the other two of whom shall be appointed, one by the Authority and the other by the owner of the land, and if the owner refuses or neglects to appoint an assessor within thirty days after being required by the Authority in writing so to do, or if the owner cannot be found or is incapable of appointing an assessor, the Authority may appoint the third assessor.

(3) Whenever it is necessary under this Act to expropriate more than one piece of land belonging to different owners in any locality and the Authority and every owner cannot agree upon the amount of compensation, the amount to be paid every owner with whom for any reason agreement cannot be reached shall be ascertained by a Board of Assessors which shall consist of three persons, one of whom shall be the chairman of the Board who shall be appointed by the Authority, and the other two of whom shall be appointed, one by the Authority and the other by a majority of the owners with whom agreement cannot be reached, and if the majority of the owners refuse or neglect to appoint or are unable to agree upon an assessor within thirty days after being required by the Authority to appoint an assessor the Authority may appoint the third assessor.

(4) In sub-section (3) "locality" means any area designated as such by the Authority.

(5) The findings of the Board of Assessors shall be in writing and shall be made within sixty days of the appointment of the Board unless that period is extended by the Authority and immediately upon being made shall be delivered to the Authority, and the amount of compensation shall be paid within six months of the date of the award but if the compensation is not paid within thirty days of the date of the award it shall thereafter bear interest at the rate of three per centum per annum until the date of payment.

(6) The assessors are deemed to be assessors and not arbitrators and their finding or the finding of any two of them shall be deemed to be the award of the Board of Assessors and is final in all cases.

(7) The Board of Assessors may award costs in respect of any hearing before them under this Act in accordance with a scale to be approved by the Registrar of the Supreme Court but the scale shall not be higher than the scale headed "Lower Scale" in Appendix N to The Judicature Act.

(8) If the sum awarded under this section in any case is greater than the sum tendered by the Authority under Section 27 the Authority shall pay the costs and expenses of the arbitration and the fees of the assessors but if the sum awarded and expenses do not exceed the sum tendered the costs, expenses and fees shall be paid by the person who refuses the tender, and such costs, expenses and fees shall in other cases where the award is in favour of the claimant be paid by the Authority in addition to the sum awarded and where the award is in favour of the Authority be paid by the claimant.

(9) The Assessors are entitled to such fees as shall, subject to the approval of the Minister of Finance, be fixed by the Authority.

(10) A register containing the particulars of all expropriations hereunder and of the notices and awards in connection therewith shall be kept by the Department of Fisheries and Co-operatives for the purpose of record.

(11) A notice of expropriation may be given under this Act where an agreement as to the compensation to be paid, subject to proof of title, has been made between the Authority and the owner of the land, but no reference shall be made to a Board of Assessors.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, there are just two aspects of this sub-section 2 which provides "that the amount of compensation to be paid shall be ascertained by a Board of Assessors which shall consist of three persons, one of whom shall be the Chairman of the Board, who shall be appointed by the Authority, and the other two of whom shall be appointed, one by the Authority and the other by the owner of the land . . ." In other words the owner of the land is going in when his property is being expropriated with the cards stacked against him—the Authority has two representatives on the Board. I question, Sir, whether that is the fairest way of dealing with the man whose property is to be taken. Ordinarily one finds that in cases like that the owner and the expropriator in the case, whoever he might be, each appoint someone and these two agree on a Chairman—it does not seem quite fair, Sir, that the Authority is to have two nominees, conceivably three and certainly two and the owner who is contesting their offer has only himself or his nominee.

Then again, Sir, sub-section 6 provides that the word or findings of any two of them shall be deemed to be the award of the Board of Assessors and is final in all cases. I submit, Sir, it does not seem to give the property owner the proper degree of protection to which he is entitled when dealing with a government constituted authority. Perhaps the Minister might explain why sub-sections 2 and 6 are worded as they are?

MR. KEOUGH: Mr. Chairman, I grant that the powers conferred there are great, but I understand that the powers are conferred in that way to avoid the possibility of the owner of the property required by the Authority hanging up the whole proceedings, hamstringing the expropriation proceedings. It is a principle that we have already established by legislation in this House in the Industries Acts, I believe, and in the Rural Planning Act and the Public Works Act—this whole expropriation section was taken from these Acts—I understand that the thought behind it is to try to prevent any owner of property from hamstringing these expropriation proceedings.

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the Honourable Minister's reply but I still cannot see why, though it is done in other Acts that we should here perpetuate what seems to be an unfair advantage over the owner of property. I am quite sure, Sir, it is not the wish of this House to lend itself arbitrarily to this possibility of abuse of power. The fact is, as I see it, a man may quite honestly believe that his property is worth more than the Authority is prepared to pay, and there is no justification for our legalizing a land-grab, which is about what it amounts to.

MR. BROWNE: I would like to support the point raised by my honourable and learned friend. As he has suggested here, probably the Authority may want a piece of land, maybe a waterside premises, it may be the most valuable location there. They send their surveyors in and find out just what they want, and they notify the owner they intend to expropriate. Now they can make an offer of say one or two thousand dollars, and say: we give you such and such a time to accept this offer, and if you don't, we are going to appoint two assessors and you can appoint one. The Authority then appoints the chairman and appoints one other and the owner may appoint one. That is obviously a two to one chance against him or of his getting what he considers to be the fair price for his property which is being taken from him. A Board of Assessors set up like that are there to examine the value of the property.

Now there is another sub-clause which says the Authority can reduce the value of the award by any advantages which the owner may derive or be likely to derive directly or indirectly from the contemplated work and operations. In other words take part of the property and leave say the store and say: "Why you are to have a store right alongside where we are going to put a wharf and there is to be a lot of business going past your store to improve your property, and as a result we are going to tax you now for it and instead of giving you compensation we are going to charge you"—it may even go as far as that, and he would get nothing at all for his property. Surely it is only fair that there should be an umpire among the three instead of having it as it is now with two appointed by the Authority and only one appointed by the man whose property is to be taken.

MR. KEOUGH: Well, Mr. Chairman, the only answer I can make to that is that the Authority must be trusted with the necessary authority and faith to appoint an assessor who will see that this person whose property is being expropriated gets a fair return for it. I am afraid, as far as this side of the House is concerned, we are going to have to insist upon that provision there for the Authority.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder would the Minister tell us why they have to insist on that? I think the remedy being offered by my honourable and learned friend, the member for St. John's East, and the member for St. John's West, that the Authority appoint a Chairman and then the Authority and the owner each appoint one and agree on another. That seems to be fair. That is being done in many cases. It means you will have to deal with fishermen's property in LaScie and the Authority will have the right to appoint two men to go in and decide just what John Jones is going to get for his property. The cards will be stacked against that property holder. It will be a problem for many people there, and I don't see any reason why a third assessor could not be appointed by the Authority and one assessor appointed by the owner of the land. I wonder would the Minister tell us why that would not work?

Clause 29 carried. (Opposition voted against this clause).

Clause 30 read:

30 (1) A copy of the notice provided for under Section 28 upon which is endorsed or to which is attached an affidavit or a certificate of oath in proof of service of the notice upon the owner or of the posting of such notice as provided in that section is deemed to be included amongst the deeds and other documents to which reference is made in Section 6 of The Registration of Deeds Act; and the copy of the notice with the affidavit or certificate attached shall, notwithstanding any provision of that Act to the contrary, be registered in accordance with the provisions of that Act without proof for registration and without payment of fees.

(2) The provisions of the said Act relating to proof for registration of an instrument shall apply to proof of service or of posting of such notice as if the person serving or posting the same were the subscribing witness to the execution of the instrument.

(3) The registration of the copy of the notice with the affidavit or certificate attached has the same effect as the registration of an instrument under the said Act and for the purposes of Section 9 of the said Act the Authority is deemed to be a purchaser for valuable consideration.

(4) Entry by the Registrar of Deeds in the index to the books of registry of the names of the person or persons or body upon whom the notice is served or upon whose land the notice is posted, if the owner is known, and of the Authority as the parties, the situation of the land to which the notice relates, a description of the document as a notice of expropriation, the date of the service or posting of the notice and the place of registration constitute compliance with the provisions of Section 27 of the said Act.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, what is the purpose of that?

MR. KEOUGH: I am afraid I would have to refer to the Attorney General for that. That is too complicated for me—we could let it stand until the Attorney General returns to the House.

Clause 30 stand.

Clause 31 read:

31 (1) The Board of Assessors may at any stage of the proceedings before it and shall if so directed by the Supreme Court or a Judge thereof state in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court any question of law arising in the course of the proceedings.

(2) Any party may apply to the Supreme Court or a Judge thereof for an order that any question of law arising in the course of the proceedings before the Board of Assessors shall be stated in the form of a special case.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Chairman, that seems to be a very sensible provision. I take it it governs sub-clause 6 of Section 29 only if there is a question of law arising?

MR. KEOUGH: Well, Mr. Chairman, I understand it is so. It is operative only if a question of law arises.

MR. HIGGINS: But, Mr. Chairman, does the Minister say that the award of the assessors as provided in sub-section 6 of Clause 29 could be held up, if there is a question of law arising for determination of the Supreme Court?

MR. KEOUGH: My understanding is that is so, yes, that is what the section is intended to mean.

Clause 31 carried.

Clause 32 read:

32. Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to require the Authority to make or arrange for the payment of compensation under this Act until such time as the owner has established his title to the reasonable satisfaction of the Authority and when any notice of expropriation is served under this Act it is the duty of the person on whom it is served to submit to the Authority his title deeds and any plans of his land, which may be available to him, and to provide the Authority with any information which it may reasonably require in connection with the title of the land;
and where the owner makes delay in furnishing title deeds or plans or in providing necessary information the period stated in this Act within which the compensation or interest is required to be paid or the finding of the Board of Assessors is otherwise required to be carried out shall be deemed to be extended by the period
of delay so made by the owner.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman,
this seems to be an unusual provision.
I did not give any particular study to it before, but as I hear it read now—
"Nothing contained in this Act shall be deemed to require the Authority to make or arrange for the payment of compensation under this Act until such time as the owner has established his title to the reasonable satisfaction of the Authority and when any notice of expropriation is served under this Act it is the duty of the person on whom it is served to submit to the Authority his title deeds and any plans of his land, which may be available to him, and to provide the Authority with any information which it may reasonably require in connection with the title of the land;
and where the owner makes delay in furnishing title deeds or plans or in providing necessary information the period stated in this Act within which the compensation or interest is required to be paid or the finding of the Board of Assessors is otherwise required to be carried out shall be deemed to be extended by the period
of delay so made by the owner."

What I mean about this is that in most of our outports our people have no grants of land but squatters titles,
I imagine, in 95 per cent of the cases.
There are no grants of land and if people have to produce title and deeds I think it is going to be pretty awkward for them. I can see the effect of the word "reasonable" but I should think that "shall submit to the Authority his title deeds and any plans of his land if any . . . ."

MR. CURTIS: Yes, there would be no objection to these words in there. After the word "land," insert the words "if any."

Clause 32 as amended carried.
Clauses 33 and 34 read and carried.

Clause 35 read:

35 (1) Where any compensation is paid to the Registrar of the Supreme Court under Section 33 or 34 the Registrar shall upon any person establishing his claim to it or any portion of it according to law and fulfilling all of the terms or conditions applying to him under either of those sections, pay him the amount of such compensation or portion thereof, as the case may be.

(2) Where any claim to the compensation referred to in sub-section (1) is not in accordance with that sub-section established before the expiration of three years from the date on which it was paid to the Registrar of the Supreme Court, the Registrar shall on the expiration of that period return the amount of the compensation to the Authority together with all interest accrued thereon; and thereafter the claim of every person against the Authority or any person acting under it in respect of the land on account of which the compensation was paid to the Registrar shall forever cease, be extinguished and become wholly inoperative.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I think we can take exception to this provision because there may be cases where a person is a minor or just an infant, and may have no property rights to the land for himself. Only yesterday I had occasion to look up the statutes of limitations and there is a provision there in cases of infants which gives them ten years over and above what is given to anybody else. So that I don't see that that would be a very fair provision to make. There could be a case where the husband and wife had died and left an orphan who may be in an institution in St. John's and would not know the Authority was taking his property and things like that have happened before. Or there may be a case of somebody being out of the country and not knowing about this three years. It seems to me to be an inadequate time, and I don't see the point of its being put in. It is an arbitrary time put in there, three years. I would suggest that six years would be much more reasonable. I suggest that it be changed to six years instead of three years.

MR. CURTIS: I see no objection to a change to six years, Mr. Chairman.

On motion the word "three" deleted and the word "six" substituted, also in the side title.

Clause as amended carried.

Clause 36 read:

36. If any land expropriated under this Act is subject to a lease or sub-lease for a term of not less than one year the Board of Assessors shall apportion the compensation fixed in respect of such land between the lessee and sub-lessee or the assigns of either in such manner as in its absolute discretion it sees fit; and if part only of the land is expropriated the Board shall, in addition, apportion the rent payable in respect of the land between the land so expropriated and the residue of the land and after the apportionment the lessee or sub-lessee or their assigns shall, as to all future accruing rent, be liable only for so much of the rent as is so apportioned in respect of the land not expropriated and in respect of the land not so expropriated and as against the lessee or sub-lessee or their assigns the lessor shall have all the same rights and remedies for the recovery of such portion of rent as previously to such apportionment he had for the recovery of the whole rent reserved by such lease, and all the covenants, conditions, and agreements of such lease, except as to the amount of rent to be paid, shall remain in force with regard to that part of the land which is not expropriated in the same manner as they would have done if such part only of the land had been included in the lease or sub-lease.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Honourable the Premier could explain that section to us on this side of the House?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have not the slightest doubt I could if I read it, but I have not since it came before Cabinet. The honourable gentleman need not doubt that I could explain it. I need only read it once and I could explain it.

MR. HOLLETT: That is the difference between the honourable gentleman and myself—I don’t understand statutes.

MR. BROWNE: The Honourable the Attorney General, I hope, has read it?

MR. CURTIS: Not yet, Mr. Chairman.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am certainly puzzled by this section, and would ask if the honourable gentleman has already put his seal of approval on it, because it is so complicated.

MR. CURTIS: I think it might stand, Mr. Chairman, while I read it. We could go on with the next one.

Clause 36 stand.

Clause 37 read and carried.

Clause 38 read and carried.

Clause 39 read:

39. This Act shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of June, 1958.

MR. BROWNE: I believe the Minister told us yesterday that the members of the Authority were not engaged until September. We thought it was the 1st of January from the perusal of the Bill when distributed—why is it retroactive until the 1st of June?

MR. KEOUGH: Well, the members of the Authority did take office on the 1st of September. It is made retroactive to cover such action as has been taken up to this time. I know of no action taken before the 1st of September as they were not appointed, and it may not be necessary to cover the three months previous anyway.

MR. CURTIS: It does not make any difference.

Clause 39 carried.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I might at this time remind the Committee that clauses 11, 13, 30 and 36 were allowed to stand.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, regarding Section 11, the point was that in addition to the recommendations in Section 11 there was a provision for resolutions under Section 5, sub-section 3, and I suggested that it would be better to have a more general regulation rather than have the one just referred to in the section.

MR. CURTIS: I think, Mr. Chairman, it looks to me on the face of it—are regulations dealing with pensions, and these pensions will be made one set of regulations not a set of regulations made every year. It seems to me that that is the kind of information that could be inquired for and tabled in the House in answer to questions, it should not be necessary to put a clause in saying that they should be tabled. These are not like regulations made from time to time, year to year, but these pension regulations will be made in the early stages, and I should think it would not be necessary to put it in the Act that they should be tabled. I think that the clause dealing with the tabling of regulations is just a way of advertising them. I really don’t think it is necessary. I see no objections to tabling it but it seems a silly thing to put in the Act.

MR. BROWNE: I don’t agree with the honourable gentleman that it is a question of advertising, when the Legislature gives authority to the Government it is only right the Legislature should be advised when regulations are made. I will agree, as pointed out yesterday, these members are not eligible for pensions until they have served for ten years, and I presume there will be no regulations made in a hurry to cover that, but I think we ought to know them as soon as they are passed.

Clause 11 carried.

Clause 13:

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, in this case the Minister has already said the Authority shall carry out and enforce all agreements made before the passing of this Act. I presume the intention of the section is that the Authority will act more or less as a watch dog who will supervise what is being done by these companies in pursuance of their agreements, and report to the Minister if there is anything not being carried out, and the Minister will then proceed to enforce the agreements. Otherwise we have to make an assignment of every agreement from the Minister to the Authority, and I don’t think that should be necessary. It is a matter that can always be dealt with subsequently if we find present arrangements not satisfactory. My feeling as to this section is that this Authority will act more or less as an agent of the Minister in supervising it, and report back and recommend to the Minister any action that they deem necessary should any company not carry out its agreement.

MR. HOLLETT: But, Mr. Chairman, the section does say that—I will agree that is the function set out there—it would be perfectly in order. But they shall, according to this, carry out and enforce all agreements made. In other words as soon as the Act is passed, they have the right to go ahead, with no consent of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council needed. I think you ought to have the consent of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

MR. CURTIS: If it would make it any clearer we might change to—“supervise the carrying out and enforcing”—I don’t know whether that would really make it any better.

MR. HOLLETT: That would indicate, of course, that the first step would come from the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, would it not?

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, that depends on how far you want the Authority to go—is that what you want them to do, supervise them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Exactly. Be a watch dog, see they are carrying out their obligations, see that the country’s interests are protected, and report to the Minister.
MR. BROWNE: Why not say that.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The amendment is to sub-clause 2—the first word to be stricken out and the words “Supervise the carrying out and enforcement,” substituted.

MR. BROWNE: There is just one question: These agreements are between the Government of Newfoundland and any persons—these are not the Loan Boards, not from any of the Fisheries Loan Boards, but directly from the Government?

MR. CURTIS: Yes.

Clause 13 carried.

Clause 30:

MR. CURTIS: It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the object of that is: As my honourable friend knows, Section 6 of the Registry of Deeds Act provides that documents must be registered at the Registrar of Deeds within a certain date, and if not registered within that period they are void.

MR. BROWNE: In other words, if not registered persons can't sell the property.

MR. CURTIS: If not registered then it operates as such.

MR. BROWNE: Have you got Section 6 there?

MR. CURTIS: Yes. This is just the normal registration clause and just provides that these things shall be registered.

Clause 30 carried.

Clause 36:

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, perhaps Clause 36 might pass, and Mr. Chairman, I will undertake to read it before third reading.

MR. MURRAY: I think it is all right. I just went through it, and it is quite simple.

Clause 36 carried.

Preamble carried. Title carried.

On motion the Committee rose and reported having passed the Bill with some amendments.

On motion amendments read a first and second time. On motion Bill ordered read a third time on tomorrow.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move that this House do not adjourn at 6:00 o'clock.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Speaker, is not that more or less a suspension of the rules of the House. I understand, according to Rule 7, the House closes at 6:00 o'clock on Wednesdays, Mr. Speaker adjourns the House without question but there is no Wednesday evening as a regular evening for a sitting of the House. I take it that means suspension of the rules?

MR. SPEAKER: No—rules do not provide the House may sit on Monday, but the House may sit on Saturday and Sunday—this motion does not interfere with any freedom of speech.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion? On a day when the House does not usually sit after six o'clock would we not have to have unanimous consent of the House to sit?

MR. SPEAKER: If it were a motion which involved freedom of speech I would not of course accept it. In this case, if not a Government motion, the House might very well decide it would not sit.

MR. BROWNE: Then, Mr. Speaker, what is the meaning of this—at the hour of six o'clock on Wednesday, Mr. Speaker adjourns the House without question—if that is to have any meaning I think the House should adjourn now, Mr. Speaker.

MR. SPEAKER: That does not prevent a motion. I would refer to another rule; the House when sitting after six o'clock, for instance, rises at 11 o'clock, but that does not prevent a motion that the House do not rise at 11:00 o'clock. Motion may be made that the House not adjourn.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, there is no time to debate this motion, and the rule as it stands now should take effect.

MR. SMALLWOOD: There are other rules which may take effect also.

MR. BROWNE: What is it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: His Honour just referred to it.

MR. SPEAKER: As I see it the motion is quite in order, for the reason I just explained.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to the motion.

MR. SPEAKER: Very well.

MR. BROWNE: I think it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and we ought to adjourn until tomorrow and debate it tomorrow.

MR. SPEAKER: I shall put the motion. The motion is quite in order.

Motion is that this House do not adjourn at 6:00 o'clock.

MR. SPEAKER: In my mind the ayes have it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say before you leave the Chair that we have no intention until possibly the last moment of moving the suspension of the Rules of the House. We have not done it since we have been in office except in the last day or two of each session.

MR. BROWNE: You don't need to do it if you can do it this way.

MR. SPEAKER: Order. It being six o'clock I shall leave the Chair until eight o'clock tonight.

The House is now recessed until 8:00 of the clock.

NIGHT SESSION
June 2, 1954

The House resumed at 8:00 of the clock.

Mr. Speaker in the Chair:

MR. SPEAKER: Committee of the Whole on Supply: Leave was given yesterday that this Committee sit again today—I do now leave the Chair.

Chairman of Committees (Mr. Courage).

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the committee that we proceed with the expenditure side on current account and then turn to the revenue side, and having examined and completed expenditures and revenue on current account, then turn to capital account, both revenue and expenditure. The beginning therefore, following that pattern, would be on page 24. Each minister will handle his own department's estimates. The practice then is to have the deputy-minister on hand, or if he be not available then the assistant deputy-minister, to assist the minister and refresh his memory and the like in answering questions any member of the House may desire to ask. I would therefore ask the committee to turn to page 24. I might add, Mr. Chairman, that some ministers follow the practice of giving a sort of introductory review of the department's estimates while other ministers don't appear to see any particular necessity to do that, and are content merely to answer all the questions that may be directed at them. I think it is a matter entirely for each minister to follow the particular style or manner which appeals most to him. But we are anxious that the committee should have all the information to which the committee is entitled, and that is saying a lot, that is saying a great lot, when we submit estimates and request that moneys be voted for supply.

Current Account: Consolidated Fund Services:

101—Public Debt Interest:

MR. BROWNE: What is the financial position on that? Would the minister give a statement now?

MR. POWER: I think I gave a pretty lengthy statement the other day—if any honourable member has any questions?

MR. BROWNE: The first question I would like to ask is on 101-02 and 101-08. These represent our pre-confederation indebtedness, is that correct? That is the total pre-confederation debt?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The total.

MR. BROWNE: I mean the loans, the public debt of the country in 1949?

MR. POWER: At what date?

MR. BROWNE: In 1949, April 1, 1949.

MR. POWER: That would be about five millions—that is what is here.

MR. BROWNE: Has any of that been paid off? How is that going to be paid off?

MR. POWER: There is a sinking fund at present, and this won't mature until 1957 and others won't mature until 1958.

MR. FOGWILL: In respect to the provincial debt as at 1949, was there not a loan at that time paid off in full?

MR. POWER: I think it was. There was a sterling debt of $150,000.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in 101-07 Fisheries and Roads Loans, I notice an estimate of $240,000. What was the cost of floating this loan? Was it sold at par or over par?

MR. POWER: This amount as closed—an interest of 4%. That $240,000 is in respect of interest.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words that is the first year's interest on the ten million dollar loan, is that it?

MR. POWER: That is it. That represents half a year's interest.

MR. HOLLETT: I see.

MR. FOGWILL: I thought the Minister of Finance expected that we would be able to float this loan at par?

MR. POWER: Well, when we raise a bond issue we don't have to sell all the bonds at one time.

MR. HOLLETT: $150—$150: Is there any reason why we are hanging on to that?

MR. POWER: That is the total amount to cover any possible overdrafts that we may have.

MR. HOLLETT: You mean from time to time during the year? You don’t mean any overdrafts at the present time.

MR. POWER: You see the amounts from Ottawa come in arrears, and practically every quarter.

MR. BROWNE: Is that $240,000 supposed to be half year’s interest?

MR. POWER: Yes at 4%.

MR. HOLLETT: On that particular item—Fisheries and Roads Loan—are we assured that that twelve million dollars in total will be earmarked for roads and for fisheries. I have a recollection of the ten million loan from last year which was earmarked for certain specific purposes, and I have recollection when looking at some of the expenditures, that the whole amount was not so applied as it was supposed to be. In this particular instance is that twelve million dollars specifically earmarked for fisheries loan alone?

MR. POWER: Well, I can hardly say so. I could not tie it down too closely as there might be an emergency sometime.

MR. HOLLETT: Why not mark it emergency loan in that case?

MR. POWER: It is a loan for development of roads and fisheries development, but every last cent of it need not be spent.

MR. BROWNE: I suppose, Mr. Chairman, we can get more detail from the Bill itself. Now on Item 101-06. The sale of the cement plant was made for four million dollars, and the management of the cement plant was to pay the interest on four million dollars. Do I understand the cement plant was sold for four millions?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Nearer five millions, and they were to take over the interest at 4¾%. That is how they were to pay it.

MR. BROWNE: Have they paid that interest?

MR. POWER: I think before the interest came due that we did defer all interest payments on the new industries loan, I think, for two years.

MR. BROWNE: I thought it was three years.

MR. POWER: For two, as far as I know.

MR. HOLLETT: That was on loans which had been made to them—incidentally on the point—who are the Canadian Machinery Holding Trust?

MR. POWER: I think that question should more properly be addressed to the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. HOLLETT: Perhaps the Minister will be able to tell us.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Minister has already answered that question in this session.

MR. HOLLETT: Who is their representative here in this country?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Dr. E. Rothe. Mr. Barforth is his assistant.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in respect to the proportionate amount of $475,000 paid by the purchaser of the cement mill, is it not a fact that they agreed to pay that in proportion to the interest in respect to the ten million dollar loan? If so did they pay their proportionate share of the sinking fund and interest?

MR. POWER: We can get you that information later. Incidentally in regard to the cement mill the people who bought it have since spent large sums of money in expanding it.

MR. HOLLETT: That is not the point. The point is, have they paid anything towards the purchase. The purchase I understand was the servicing of four million seven hundred thousand dollars of that ten million dollar loan—now we ask the question: Have they serviced as to interest and as to sinking fund their proportion of that loan?

MR. POWER: You have had the answer with regard to the interest, but not with regard to the sinking fund.

MR. HOLLETT: What is the answer?

MR. POWER: We did not accept the interest from them. After they bought the plant it seems there was a sort of cement war on in Canada, some big company had been importing cement from Europe and the price of cement was way down for six or seven months, and the company was just about breaking even. Since then things have begun to boom again, but at the time that we forgave them the interest, the situation was not as good.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Deferred, not forgiven.

MR. HOLLETT: That is the reason you have deferred interest for all the others?

MR. SMALLWOOD: At the same time.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words, if you do it for one you do it for others. Is it the general practice of the Government to defer interest payments?

MR. POWER: These companies are just getting on their feet, and it would not profit the Government nor Newfoundland anything to squeeze the last drop of blood out of them. It is better to let them carry on and develop what capital they could out of the cost of their operations.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, this company now operates or owns the cement plant. They must have been a substantial organization to buy a plant costing nearly five million dollars. Why was special consideration shown them, not having paid for the plant?

MR. POWER: The interest, you mean?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They did pay for it. They paid, I think it was, two hundred thousand dollars cash down.

MR. HOLLETT: Which you loaned them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No. And before the interest came due we deferred the amounts of interest for two years.

MR. HOLLETT: The point is, we are charged with about three hundred thousand dollars here for servicing of this loan, and three hundred thousand dollars sinking fund and four hundred and seventy-five thousand for the development loan, and this company is supposed to pay its share of nearly half of that, and has not paid it. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the decision of the Government and the Order of Council which I have in my possession here copies of it—says that the omission of interest was on account of moneys which were to be paid by companies who had borrowed money from the Government. Certainly there is nothing in that Order in Council to indicate that this particular company should have their interest deferred. It was merely to cover interest payments on loans which had been made from the Government, and that is what the Order in Council said.

MR. POWER: I could not remember now what the Order in Council said.

MR. HOLLETT: Will the Honourable Minister let that stand until tomorrow?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Let what stand?

MR. HOLLETT: That item.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Do you mean to say we decide not to pay this? This is a statutory amount—we have to pay it.

MR. HOLLETT: Sure we will pay it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Any information the honourable gentleman requires can stand over until tomorrow, but the item we have to pay, the House has no choice.

MR. HOLLETT: It is statutory that the Holding Trust pay it and not this House.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is statutory, this House pays it.

MR. HOLLETT: Nonsense.

MR. SMALLWOOD: How the House recovers it is another matter, but that it be paid is statutory.

MR. HOLLETT: Is it laid down how it is to be paid?

MR. POWER: The first of July and the first of September, as far as we know.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, the cement plant was sold for approximately four million, eight hundred thousand I understand—now they did not pay any interest up to today—I would like to know, Mr. Chairman, the amount of interest and sinking fund they owe the Government at the present time.

MR. POWER: The interest is 4½% on the amount which it costs them.

MR. FOGWILL: What is the amount?

MR. POWER: Between four and a half and five million. I think the sinking fund is around 2%. The Government has to provide a certain sinking fund on the ten million dollars. The Holding Trust has taken over about four million seven hundred thousand, which is 7½%.

MR. HOLLETT: They owe $240,000 on the interest alone.

MR. POWER: You are going to get that information.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I think I ought to explain before the item carries that there has not been a forgiveness of that amount due there, but a deferment only. They will pay before they are through exactly the same, no more no less, as they would have paid had there been no deferment. The two years are tacked on to the end, but it will still be the same amount exactly which they will pay. They have spent some hundreds of thousands of dollars on enlarging and improving the plant. They have spent that themselves. They have spent more, they tell us, enlarging and improving the plant than they would have paid to us had they paid the interest and their share of the underwriting costs and sinking fund.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, why should they be allowed to do that and not pay their interest?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We decided to allow them to do it.

MR. HOLLETT: The Government has an interest in that now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Do we have an interest in what?

MR. HOLLETT: In this cement plant?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No.

MR. HOLLETT: You have not?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Except that it interests the Government, and the public and everyone ought to have an interest in its success.

MR. BROWNE: Have we not a mortgage on the plant?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Of course—but we have no shares.

MR. BROWNE: I take it what really happened is that the payment of interest and the sinking fund have been deferred for two years, is that right?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, that is right.

MR. BROWNE: Now there is no interest charge on that deferment—you just moved the whole thing ahead two years?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. HOLLETT: With regard to the item of $200,000.

MR. POWER: What item is that?

MR. HOLLETT: The honourable the Premier referred to an amount of $200,000 which was paid for the plant. We have the Auditor General's Report here—"the Cement Mill has been sold to North Star Cement Limited for $4,340,000 and the shares in this Company, owned by the Government and having a par value of $100,000 have been sold to Canadian Machinery Holding Trust for $200,000. Funds to purchase the Cement Mill were advanced by the Government to North Star Cement Limited and this amount together with $400,000 advanced to the Company for working capital making a total of $4,740,000 is secured by a first mortgage on the fixed assets of the company in favour of the Government and bears interest at the rate of 4¾% per annum. The amount for which the Mill was sold represents approximately the sums expended by the Government in the construction and equipment of the Mill plus certain commitments amounting to $115,000 approximately, made by the Government in connection with the erection of the plant, and unpaid as of the date of sale." The Premier said that is not so.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I did not say that. It is not so. I said we did not give them the money to buy the company.

MR. HOLLETT: You advanced it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No.

MR. HOLLETT: That is what it says in the Auditor General's Report. Now they say it is the Canadian Machinery Holding Trust, and on top of that we give them back the interest.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They own it because they bought it. They bought the shares of the company.

MR. HOLLETT: Has the North Star Cement Company a mortgage now or has the Government?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Government has the mortgage on the North Star.

MR. HOLLETT: What have they got?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They own the mill.

MR. HOLLETT: What do the Holding Trust own?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They own North Star.

MR. BROWNE: They have not considered changing the name?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No.

MR. HOLLETT: It is a vicious circle, is it not?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It may appear so to an innocent gentleman like the Honourable Leader of the Opposition with no experience in these matters.

MR. HOLLETT: Thank God I have not!

MR. SMALLWOOD: And it is not likely.

MR. HOLLETT: Pray God, I hope I won't.

Item No. 101—Public Debt Interest carried.

Item 102—Sinking Funds:

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Honourable Minister could tell us now the total amount of credit to each sinking fund, i.e. war loans and victory loans.

MR. POWER: It is shown in the Appendix, page 132—the full amount is there but it is not broken down. I believe that breakdown was the subject of an answer to a question which I tabled here.

MR. FOGWILL: That is correct. The sinking funds are there. I don't think it is important to have them broken down.

MR. POWER: I think they were broken down in answer to a question.

MR. BROWNE: Under 102-04, in regard to that sinking fund—I understand that the North Star Cement was sold almost two years ago?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The period of deferment will soon be up.

MR. BROWNE: Are you going to defer it again.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not that we know. We don't think we are.

MR. BROWNE: The loan was raised somewhere in the summer of 1952. Was not the sinking fund payable every six months from the date of the sale? Well the second year period will soon be passed and it will be due this year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: This financial year, yes.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Shall this item carry?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, may we refer to that again on tomorrow—this particular one we are on now, sinking funds?

MR. POWER: Yes.

MR. HOLLETT: Thank you!
MR. CHAIRMAN: Not unless it is allowed to stand.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, we want to check on the amount of interest which has been deferred by the Government.

MR. POWER: On the cement plant?

MR. HOLLETT: Yes.

MR. POWER: That would be 4½% on the cost of the plant for two years.

MR. HOLLETT: I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the amount mentioned in the Order in Council relevant to the deferred amount of interest.

MR. POWER: I think I have already assured the honourable gentleman he shall have the information on the Order in Council.

MR. HOLLETT: Thank you!

Item 102 carried.

Item 103—Redemption of Debt:

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if the Minister would tell us what that $300,000 is for?

MR. POWER: That is to return to the Loan Board the amount we took on loan during the year.

Item 103 carried.

Item 104—Statutory Salaries:

MR. POWER: That is in connection with salaries for the Auditor General and the Deputy Minister of Finance.

MR. BROWNE: They are, in their class, both very good men, I think.

Item 104 carried.

Item 105—Issues Under Guarantees: No amount.

Legislature 201 Sessional:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I notice the chairman is to be increased. It embarrasses me, Mr. Chairman, to speak of it, he is such a nice person, but I understand that the position received an increase last year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is a typographical error. There is no increase. It is five hundred dollars too much.

MR. FOGWILL: In reference to 201-04—Printing of Hansard and Journals: I wonder could the Honourable Minister who is responsible for Hansard answer a question—when can we expect to get Hansard for the past four sessions. We have only the Hansard for 1949.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't know who the minister is, but I happen to be pretty familiar with it. The printing was well advanced at the Job Printing Office of the Evening Telegram when that office closed suddenly, and so far as we were concerned, unexpectedly, and before we could prevent it, or make an effort to prevent it, the type for the bulk of the work which had been set up was thrown out, and so we had to have it done all over again at another office. The Hansard is now being printed at another office altogether, where they had to begin from scratch again.

MR. BROWNE: Where is that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Guardian Press—to whom one of the loan boards made a loan, therefore, perhaps we should be wishing them success. At any rate we have passed Hansard to them for printing. I think before this year is over there should be one or two volumes available.

MR. BROWNE: We shall look forward to that. In the meantime getting back to 201-01; details of which has been carried into the total, says there is a typographical error, which has been carried into the total, Mr. Chairman, I suppose, under the circumstances this year where we have only one stenotypist doing a super-human task whereas in former years I remember we had many stenographers, some special consideration, I suggest, should be given to the person doing the work at the present time.

MR. POWER: That matter has not come up at this session.

MR. BROWNE: I recommend it now in consideration of the Internal Economy Committee.

Item 201 carried.

Item 202—Miscellaneous:

MR. BROWNE: All these totals are wrong because of this five hundred dollars.

MR. CHAIRMAN: It has not been the practice to pass the totals in committee. They are totalled afterwards by Finance.

MR. POWER: In any event the Minister just asked me if that might be deferred, having to do with the chairman's increase in salary.

Item 202 passed.

MR. BROWNE: You will make the change.

MR. POWER: Yes.

Item 301: Lieutenant-Governor's Establishment:

MR. BROWNE: There is an increase there of over two thousand dollars. Are these in conformity with the increases being given to officials in the civil service?

MR. POWER: Yes.

Item 301 carried.

Item 302—Premier's Office:

MR. BROWNE: Perhaps the Premier might tell us about these increases—are these similar to increases right through the civil service now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: Thirty-five hundred to four thousand three hundred dollars, Grade VII, that is a big increase.

MR. HOLLETT: It is not according to scale, is it?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: There must be two scales, at least I see another Grade VII here for forty-two hundred and another forty-two hundred to forty-five hundred. That has been an increase of $840. There must be some explanation for that, Mr. Chairman?

MR. HOLLETT: Is that officer the same as the personal assistant last year? The personal assistant of the Premier, is that the same thing?

MR. POWER: Yes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I frankly don't know these titles. I don't know what a Grade VII or a Grade I is, I don't know one from the other. All I know is the names of the people who work in my office.

MR. HOLLETT: I was not referring to the grade, if the Honourable Premier does not mind. I asked if it was the same person as in last year's estimates?
MR. SMALLWOOD: Frankly I don’t know—tell us where the man is. Surely the Controller of the Treasury would know. I don’t know any of these.

MR. POWER: That is Mrs. Templeman.

MR. BROWNE: There has been a new officer taken on there, and I presume that includes an increase of salary of the other—there are now two officials at $5640. Who is the new person now?

MR. POWER: That is the transfer of the clerk from the Legislative.

MR. BROWNE: What salary does she get?

MR. POWER: The same salary plus the increase.

MR. BROWNE: How much is the increase.

MR. POWER: The increase is approximately ten per cent.

MR. BROWNE: What is the salary now?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It says right after it—Page 88—$2700-100-3400.

MR. POWER: That is $2800 plus the cost of living bonus that was paid in addition.

MR. BROWNE: That is what I mean. That is what I want to try and understand, what is going on—I notice the cost of living bonus is being dropped—how much did that amount to on salaries?

MR. POWER: Four hundred on that salary.

MR. BROWNE: I see.

Item 302 carried.

Item 302—Executive Council Office:

MR. BROWNE: There is here an allowance to the Clerk of the Council. I take it that is Mr. Carew.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: Shorthand typist Grade V—is that accounted for there by the cost of living bonus?

MR. POWER: That would represent the inclusion of the cost of living bonus, then the raise of ten per cent added on.

Item 303 carried.

Item 304—Newfoundland Election Act:

MR. SMALLWOOD: I expect a motion now from the Honourable Leader of the Opposition to increase this.

MR. HOLLETT: That is a token vote, is it not?

MR. SMALLWOOD: But who is going to pay for the election that the Honourable Leader of the Opposition called for November?

MR. HOLLETT: The people paid for the last one, and paid through the nose, Mr. Chairman, and will pay more through the nose for the next one. I think ten thousand dollars is a very good token vote. If it had been one dollar it would have been better. There is to be no election, Mr. Chairman—the Premier says so.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Honourable Leader of the Opposition has already called it—that is his right, his privilege.

MR. HOLLETT: That is your right and prerogative. I am sure I have not done as much guessing as the Honourable the Premier did. We shall see why my guess is as good as his. In this particular instance he is only guessing at this moment. I suppose that is why it is mentioned as ten thousand dollars, which is a lot for that Election Act, a lot of money. I don't know what the forty dollars are for. It was ten thousand last year and forty dollars has been added on this year.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is because it is to be in November.

MR. POWER: The deputy-minister just informed me that the amount is put there to round off the total at the end of the page.

MR. HOLLETT: Just making a convenience out of the Election Act to round off the total.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is what will happen to my honourable friend, he will be rounded off too.

MR. HOLLETT: He will be rounded up.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, lassoed.

Item 304 carried.

Department of Finance:

401—Minister's Office:

MR. BROWNE: I take it the Deputy-Minister is the same person as the Controller of the Treasury?

MR. POWER: Yes.

MR. CHAIRMAN: If the honourable members will excuse me—we are on Item No. 401.

Item 401 carried.

MR. HOLLETT: Shorthand typist is supposed to be increased from $2360 to $3090, that includes the cost of living bonus—I see. The travelling expenses 401-01. Should not that have been more than a thousand dollars during the last year?

MR. POWER: I can assure my honourable friend it was not included in the cost of our trip to Jamaica.

MR. BROWNE: Are you sure?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Sure of what?

MR. BROWNE: The cost of the trip to Jamaica is not included.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would like to make it thoroughly clear to the House that when I go on a vacation I pay my own expenses out of my salary, out of my own pocket, and any colleague of mine in the Government who goes with me on my vacation does exactly the same thing. Our vacation to Jamaica cost the people of Newfoundland exactly not one cent. We paid it out of the salaries we earn by the sweat of our brow. That is what any man is entitled to do, and that is what we did.

MR. BROWNE: What was the actual cost of travelling expenses last year?

MR. POWER: The Minister's travelling expenses? I have already answered that question. The honourable member asked me that question and I tabled the answer. I don't remember what they were now.

Item 401 carried.

Item 402—General Office:

MR. HOLLETT: Is that the usual salary for assistant deputy-ministers?

MR. POWER: You are referring to the $7,000. That is the assistant deputy-minister of Finance. The assistant deputy-minister in the Department of the Attorney General and in the Department of Health get eight thousand dollars a year.

MR. BROWNE: There are different rates. I can see that.
MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, three for assistant deputy-ministers.

MR. BROWNE: There are two new positions, have these been filled yet?

MR. POWER: Neither has been filled yet.

MR. BROWNE: Will these be filled through the civil service or selected by the Minister, because I notice the Civil Service Commission complains they have very little work to do, and a very small number of posts pass through their hands.

MR. POWER: I assume these posts will be filled by the Civil Service Commission—that Grade IV there is a very important position.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Would you mind if I answered it? The Minister is a little uncertain as to how far he can go in discussing the matter, but the Minister himself has performed a very notable piece of work in recent months in connection with the enforcement of social security assistance. He has, as a result of his own personal work, in that very important matter, after discussions with all concerned including his able deputy, come to the conclusion that he ought to recommend to the Government the creation of two new posts in his department to serve immediately under the deputy-minister for the much more efficient carrying out of the collection of revenue on the one hand and on the other the more effective carrying out the flood of details falling into the hands of the deputy-minister and the assistant deputy-minister. These are the recommendations of the Minister, and actually they have not as yet been decided on by Cabinet, but they are pretty high positions.

MR. BROWNE: I can understand certainly the necessity of having a good staff, and I have no complaint to make on that score. I thought perhaps they had already been filled, and wondered if they had been filled through the agency of the Civil Service Commission, but I am not quite clear on that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They will be filled by Cabinet—or the second one, which is administrative will be filled by the civil service.

MR. BROWNE: I take it the social security tax gives the department a lot of work and under the cancer tax, in so far as that applies, I have asked a question about that.

MR. POWER: That is administered under the Department of Health.

MR. BROWNE: But you collect it. Can you tell us how much was collected in the past year?

MR. POWER: We will come to that in the health estimates and revenue. It is credited to the health estimates.

MR. HOLLETT: While we are on this I would like to pay a compliment to that particular department. Unfortunately I have had occasion to visit it once or twice recently, and I had occasion to note the efficiency which exists in that department, and if I may, I would like to extend to the Minister, and through him to the officials of the department my great satisfaction at finding such efficiency in that department in the files and the ability to produce the various vouchers that we need in connection with questions asked the Minister, and I would like to thank the Minister for the courtesy we received from his department.
Item 402 carried.

Item 403 Auditor General’s Department:

MR. BROWNE: Who is the Deputy Auditor General?

MR. POWER: Mr. Luscombe, Mr. John Luscombe.

MR. BROWNE: And the next official there, who is that?

MR. POWER: A Mr. Haines. I don’t know his first name.

Item 403 carried.

Item 404—Pensions and Gratuities:

MR. BROWNE: I notice a decrease in the first item there from $260,000 to $250,000, what is that?

MR. POWER: That means the vote was over-provided last year and has been brought into line.

MR. BROWNE: This item 404-08 is, I believe, the item under the Civil Service Act entitling the women in the civil service on marriage to receive a gratuity equal to one month for each year of service, and there have been several women who were in the service since 1949 who have gotten married and the Government refused to give them this gratuity, and they have made application to the Canadian Government, because the Canadian Government took over the services in the post office and customs and in certain other departments. I have been informed by the Minister of Finance at Ottawa that they can’t collect the money from the Newfoundland Government. I think that is a scandal, because these people had earned that gratuity by their service with the Newfoundland Government prior to 1949. Now I think that these people and the House too deserves some explanation of the attitude on the part of the Newfoundland Government. Why is it the Newfoundland Government refuses to honour the obligations placed upon them by the Act of 1947 which says they are entitled to one month’s gratuity for each year of service prior to 1949?

MR. POWER: I would prefer that the Premier would answer that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is that they did not get married while in the service of the Newfoundland Government. They left the Newfoundland Government Service and went into the service of the Government of Canada, for the most part at better rates of pay than they had been getting. Surely it is not contended that anyone who goes over from the Newfoundland Government Service to another government should, if she marries, then receive a gratuity from the Newfoundland Government. She should perhaps from the Canadian Government but not from the Newfoundland Government surely.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Premier probably has not studied the matter very seriously or he would not make such an absurd answer as that to my statements. A person may have worked all her life in the post office prior to 1949, put it at a normal figure say of fifteen years, and then in 1949, after Confederation, she gets married.

MR. SMALLWOOD: But what else happened?

MR. BROWNE: She has been in the Canadian Service for six months, say, and then the Newfoundland Government turns around and holds up its hands—you are in the service of another government now and you can’t expect us to give you fifteen hundred dollars; they say. If she had not married on the 31st of March she would not receive that fifteen hundred dollars from the Newfoundland Government. On the 1st of April she was disqualified. I think the Premier is sensible enough to see that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I admit that in the cases of a person who got married shortly after leaving the Newfoundland Government Service and shortly after going into the Canadian Government Service, if she had spent a good many years previously in the Newfoundland Government Service, there would be a case of hardship. But at what age would she be, to have gotten married after she had spent a good many years in the public service? What is the likelihood that there would have been many ladies who had punched in a good many years of service with the Government of Newfoundland and then in 1949 left the service of the Newfoundland Government and went into Canadian Government Service and then got married? I suppose there were about one or two. Although I will admit this, I will be frank about it, one case would be too many, one case of injustice would be one case too many.

MR. BROWNE: There have been several which have come to my notice, and I might say that I have taken them up with Ottawa, but the Newfoundland Government still insist they should not pay them now.

HON. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): Is the honourable gentleman making a distinction between those taken over automatically in 1949 and those who of their own free will left the Newfoundland Government Service?

MR. BROWNE: I am only dealing with such persons as who had been in the Newfoundland Service and were taken over by the similar Canadian Service, principally in the post office and telegraph office services. Cases have come to my notice, in the post office and telegraph service. I am glad to see the Premier recognizes the injustice of that. But the point is that under our Civil Service Act of 1947 a woman is entitled to a gratuity on marriage of one month's salary for each year of service, and that was limited to one year, i.e. she could only receive a year's salary no matter how many years she had. That would be the highest amount the Newfoundland Government would have to pay. Now the Canadian Government could hardly say we will pay it, because the service had to be with the Newfoundland Government, and the gratuity had been earned with the Newfoundland Government, therefore they would naturally expect the Newfoundland Government to pay it. Now there is an amount of $7,500 there—enough to cover it.

MR. POWER: I assure the honourable gentleman we will give that matter consideration. It is the first time it has come to my notice. Very obviously someone has slipped up because during the referendum when everybody was being warned about all the terrible things that were going to happen because of Confederation, somebody neglected to tell the postmistress she should have gotten married by the 31st of March in 1949.

MR. BROWNE: Unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, marriages don't happen that way. People could not get married because of pending Confederation no matter what else they did. But they may have gotten married without knowing what was involved here beforehand. There is a vote here, and I presume this is the vote for those in the Newfoundland Government Services at the present time who may get married. But I think that now the Minister will give this matter consideration. I am surprised when he tells me that this is the first time he has heard it.

MR. POWER: Yes, it is.

MR. BROWNE: Now the number is not very great. There are only a few which have come to my notice.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have no recollection of a case ever having come before Cabinet. I believe they died silently when they reached Mr. Marshall, the Controller of the Treasury—I don't think they are ever allowed to get as far as the Cabinet. I know it is so. In fact he has just polished them off in his office so that they never saw the light of day in Cabinet. Now that the matter has been raised we have as much horror of injustice as the next man, and we will certainly have another look, and we won't be influenced by the hard heart of the Controller of the Treasury.

MR. FOGWILL: On Item 404-04 Railway Pensions: There is quite a lot of disagreement in respect to railway pensions in relation to many of the people retired since 1949 and also in relation to those who may retire in the future. They have a claim, which they feel is just under the Terms of Union with Canada. I think the Premier himself is very familiar with that. I was wondering if the Premier at this time would care to make any statement in respect to that item, which perhaps may help clear up the doubt which still exists in the minds of many who are working at the present time.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I want to be very careful in what I do say in this matter. It is a matter with which I have concerned myself for five years, and particularly in recent months, as I know my honourable friend has. Indeed it is now, I think, about seven years since we both began to take some interest in this matter, about two years before Confederation when it became an issue of its present calibre.

My honourable friend is aware of certain developments recently about which the least said at the moment, I think, the better. He is also aware that the Government has even more recently sought advice as to what position we should take, and that we are awaiting the receipt of that advice at the moment. I won't attempt to forecast what it says except that I know this, if the one whose advice has been sought is now of the opinion that he held a couple of years or so ago, then the advice he will give us is to take a certain type of action. If that is his advice I don't want to anticipate what will be the decision of my colleagues in Cabinet, but I feel that their desire will be about the same as what I would desire myself, namely to take the action advised. My honourable friend will understand all that if the rest of the House does not. I think my honourable friend will understand what I mean. It is not a matter, frankly, I would care to discuss at this moment. At this moment the matter is not subjudice, however it is a matter about which we are awaiting advice, and I think I should leave it at that for the moment, and I hope my honourable friend will not press me. I think he will accept my word that we feel ourselves, and I feel myself personally, morally bound to stand with the railway men in that matter to the last ditch, and I hope he does not doubt that I will live up, in so far as it is humanly possible and constitutionally possible for me to do so, to my obligations.

MR. FOGWILL: Well, Mr. Chairman, on that point of discussion made by the Premier I am in entire accord with him on the statement. I am not familiar with many of the aspects of the matter, and, as he says, they were advised by a gentleman very familiar with this business, and if he is of the same opinion as he expressed several years ago I have no doubt that perhaps the matter could be solved to the complete satisfaction of those concerned. I am glad to hear the Premier say he is behind the just claims of the railway workers, and if the railway workers' claim is just he is behind them to the last ditch, even to the extent, I hope, that the Government would be prepared to perhaps vote or spend some funds in respect to the ultimate solving of this problem. Would the Premier assure the committee that he would be prepared to do that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would assure the committee that I would be prepared to recommend to my colleagues, to request my colleagues, to take certain actions along the line that the honourable gentleman has in mind. I certainly would.

MR. FOGWILL: I thank the Premier very much, Mr. Chairman.

Item 404-05—Constabulary Pensions and Cost of Living Bonus:

MR. HIGGINS: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister tell us, are the cost of living and marriage allowances included in the salaries of the constabulary as pensionable?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, we included them a couple of years ago.

MR. HIGGINS: The reason I asked is, perhaps the Attorney General may correct me, I am informed a petition was directed to his department in the fall of 1953 by a number of ex-police sergeants and constables who have been pensioned since Confederation, requesting that the cost of living and marriage allowances be included in their basic salaries as pensionable. I do believe that men who were pensioned since 1952 had the cost of living and marriage allowances included, but for those pensioned since Confederation and prior to 1952, it did not apply.

MR. CURTIS: No, Mr. Chairman, we have not as yet gone back and revised the pensions that had been given. I think it is very likely that we will, and I intend to bring it to the attention of the Government at a very early date. Actually a man who gets a pension has no comeback. He gets the pension he is entitled to, and he is clearly not entitled to have a revision. But there have been some cases of hardship where people who have served identical periods have received very uneven pensions, and I am afraid, in common justice to them, we will have to look back and review the pensions that were paid not only to 1949 but before.

MR. BROWNE: There is one class of pensions, Mr. Chairman, which I think deserves consideration perhaps more than others—these old-time policemen kept on until sixty-five, probably some of them about ten or twenty years ago, and having spent over forty years and sometimes longer in the service. In the Commission of Government days the term of service had been reduced to twenty-five years, but these old time policemen seem to me as they were pensioned with salaries very much lower than they are today they should get some consideration by having the cost of living bonus added.

Carried.

MR. CURTIS: That is what I meant when I said we might even have to go back beyond 1949.

404-06—Fire Department Pensions and Cost of Living Bonus: Carried.

MR. BROWNE: Item 404-07 is, I think, an item the Government deserves commendation for. I am glad to see the House paying this pension as the late Sir W. Horwood had many years of public service in this country, many years in the highest capacity in the country, during which time he served with distinction.

Item 404 carried.

Item 405—Social Security Assessment:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could tell us who some of these are, the first three on page 90?

MR. POWER: The Director is Mr. Frank Hue.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, might I ask the Minister if Mr. Gordon Beams is still with the Social Security?

MR. POWER: He was sent down there from the Department of Finance.

MR. HIGGINS: He did very, very able work.

MR. BROWNE: Could we know who the officer in the machine section is?

MR. POWER: That is Mr. Rowe. The other inspection officer is Mr. Gosse.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I asked the question the other day about the number of prosecutions. Then I notice the Auditor General has complained about the manner in which the inspection service in regard to the collection of this tax is carried on by an inadequate staff. Is the Minister now in a position to tell the House whether he now has sufficient staff to see that this tax is collected?

MR. POWER: I am quite certain the situation there is excellent now.

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder if the Minister would tell us how much was collected. I believe there was an announcement over the air that they were supposed to have lost many millions of dollars in collections, would that be a bit exaggerated?

MR. POWER: It should be more properly called large amounts in arrears, which we have collected.

Item 405 carried.

406—Miscellaneous:

MR. BROWNE: I wonder if the Minister could tell us how that savings campaign stands. Has there been much funds collected under that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is just general propaganda to promote thrift.

MR. HIGGINS: It is a programme on the radio.

MR. POWER: Yes. I can tell the honourable gentleman what the results have been—it runs into hundreds of thousands of dollars in stamps.

MR. BROWNE: These stamps are placed to the credit of people in the Newfoundland Savings Bank.
MR. HOLLETT: Do you mean to say, Mr. Chairman, the Government spent $9,500 last year to encourage people to save, advertising the savings bank by press and radio?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It was begun by the Commission of Government, and has just been carried on by us.

MR. HOLLETT: Does the Minister think it is advisable?

MR. POWER: Well, the only answer I can give to that is to ask whether it is advisable to save or not. If you answer that question you answer this one.

MR. HOLLETT: That is exactly what I wanted the Honourable Minister to say. But I would say to the Honourable Minister it is not advisable to pay these expenses for advertising from moneys you collect under the Social Security Act, hundreds and hundreds of dollars. That is mere nonsense from your point of view, to ask people to save—let them spend and keep the social security assessment up. So I think it is nonsense from the point of view of the Government, from a financial point of view, to have them spend.

MR. SMALLWOOD: A clever argument.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't see anything clever about it. But I don't think it is clever to continue an expenditure of $9,000 because the Commission of Government did it.

MR. POWER: Does the honourable member suggest that just because there is taxation there should be no desire on the part of the Government for the people to save?

MR. BROWNE: The more they save the more they have to pay in taxes.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't figure that out.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is getting too profound for me—too deep.

MR. HOLLETT: But, Mr. Chairman, I am just wondering if it is wise to continue a charge of $9,000.

MR. POWER: What would the honourable gentleman recommend? Telling them not to save?

MR. HOLLETT: No—don't say anything—leave them alone.

MR. POWER: Good enough.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, this amount of $101,500 is that for the purpose of financing or rather floating the proposed twelve million loan?

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, on what basis does the Minister arrive at the amount of $101,500?

MR. POWER: Well the original vote in 1953-54 was fifteen hundred and that amount added is a guess on the part of the department.

MR. HOLLETT: That is for the expenses of the public debt. My honourable friend on my left wants to know if that is to be the cost of raising the new loan—how is it broken down?

MR. POWER: As I have already said it is a guess, and I don't think anybody in the world could do anything but guess as to what the exact amount would be. I think a hundred thousand dollars is pretty good.

MR. HOLLETT: Is it for raising the loan, or managing the public debt made up of half a dozen.
MR. POWER: For the raising of the loan.

MR. HOLLETT: It does not say so here.

MR. BROWNE: The cost of floating the loan in 1952 was twice as much. Do you expect to get it for half that price this year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: 406-10—is that someone you are installing?

MR. POWER: That is Peat, Marwick and Mitchell.

MR. BROWNE: Are they going to be on this year too?

MR. POWER: Yes.

MR. HOLLETT: They have been on since 1949, have they?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, they have been on since Confederation.

MR. HOLLETT: That is about $25,000 now paid them, surely they should soon have the thing properly lined up.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is now probably more so perhaps than any other Province of Canada, but they want to make it even better than it is.

MR. HOLLETT: I believe that is so, all right.

MR. POWER: 406-12—Property Loss Reserve Fund: That is in lieu of fire insurance on Government buildings.

MR. BROWNE: What is done with that $25,000?

MR. POWER: It is deposited in the Bank of Montreal.

MR. BROWNE: What is the balance now?

MR. POWER: Around $75,000.

MR. BROWNE: Has there been any fires since payments have been made?

MR. POWER: No.

MR. BROWNE: Who is the financial adviser who receives $1,000?

MR. POWER: Mr. Thompson.

MR. BROWNE: Is that a retaining fee or does he constantly visit here?

MR. POWER: He visits us.

MR. BROWNE: He visits, but what does he do?

MR. POWER: He is a financial adviser, and whatever financial advisers do he does.

MR. BROWNE: He actually does not do anything at all?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, lots of things.

MR. BROWNE: Give us an example of what he has done this year.

MR. HOLLETT: I thought that $25,000 was for Mr. Thompson?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is his firm. That is another function altogether. One is a personal function the other is his firm. The man is our financial adviser, the Government's financial adviser. His firm is the firm which has introduced and are continuing to improve our whole central accounting, central control, central payroll control, our whole financial system. They are established here in St. John's. Mr. Thompson personally comes down once or twice a year to confer with us.
MR. HOLLETT: With all due respects to Mr. Thompson, who I suspect is a very important man, in his job, I would say if we cannot get a man who demands more than one thousand dollars as financial adviser to the Government it would be better to do without him altogether. Now I see what happens to the finances of this country. There is only a thousand dollar financial adviser to the Government. I think it is ridiculous. I think that therein lies the whole secret of the failure of this particular Government in its financial arrangements, borrowing twelve million dollars, and ten million last year.

MR. POWER: If it is wrong to borrow then all the Governments of the world are wrong and all the provinces of Canada, they borrow much more heavily than we do. So if they are all wrong we are all in the same boat.

MR. HOLLETT: They all did not have fifty million dollars four or five years ago.

MR. POWER: They spent far more, most of them.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, Quebec and Ontario.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, and Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, much more, double actually—we have the figures.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am not going to take that contradiction from the Premier, I will argue it.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Go ahead!

MR. BROWNE: I say they did borrow, and if they borrowed more it was because they were repaying loans. They did not have fifty million dollar nest egg and then another ten millions.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They did not have sixty millions.

MR. BROWNE: No.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor. Was the advice of Mr. Thompson sought in connection with the sale of the cement mill—could the Minister answer that?

MR. POWER: I could direct that to the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The answer is no.

MR. HOLLETT: There again somebody made a big mistake, a blunder. I can't talk about that very much now, but I think if you are going to get a financial adviser, Mr. Chairman, you should get somebody that would demand more than one thousand dollars.

MR. CHAIRMAN: What does the honourable member mean by "You"? I would ask the members of the committee to outlaw the words "You" and "Yours."

MR. HOLLETT: When I say "You" I say it in reference to the Government.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The honourable member is not the chief offender in that respect.

MR. HOLLETT: I am an offender, Mr. Chairman, I know that. If the Minister could tell me how much they paid Mr. Thompson during the past year—I believe I can ask that question, but I am not sure.

MR. POWER: The honourable gentleman has me a bit confused. I listened to him for a couple of days, for instance, when he had his hands.
up in the air about twenty-five thousand dollars. Now he tells me we should pay this man more. What we pay this man is not enough and what we pay the others is too much.

MR. CURTIS: You can't win.

MR. HOLLETT: Did Mr. Thompson advise the Government to pay these three fish men twenty-five thousand dollars each?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No.

MR. HOLLETT: He did not. Then what does he advise the Government on?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Financial matters.

MR. POWER: Actually that is in the nature of a retaining fee. If we require his services they are higher than that.

MR. HOLLETT: He could get $1,600 in 1952-53. How is that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Because we paid him that.

MR. HOLLETT: If the honourable the Premier wants to be stubborn

MR. SMALLWOOD: This is heavy stuff, this one thousand dollars. This is worth a couple of days debate—a thousand dollars.

MR. HOLLETT: Heavy stuff for heavy minds.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Order! The Honourable Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

MR. HOLLETT: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the Honourable the Premier would keep quiet occasionally—I for one am not going to be brow-beaten by anybody.

MR. BROWNE: 406-17—Workmen's Compensation: What does that mean?

MR. POWER: That has to do with provisions for payment for Government Departments exclusive of the Department of Public Works. It is a provision made to complete the claims of compensation boards for workers in the Government departments, exclusive of Public Works.

MR. BROWNE: Under 406-18 there is a reduction there of $20,000. That means you ultimately settled the problem of the Harbour Grace and Carbonear Water.

MR. POWER: That is a re-vote there.

MR. HIGGINS: 406-19—Financial Commission of Inquiry: Mr. Chairman, is it permissible to inquire whether most of these gentlemen are not in fact serving on this Commission of Inquiry without receiving any gratuity?

MR. POWER: I believe all of them, as I have said before.

MR. BROWNE: Are they getting paid?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They have not been paid yet.

MR. BROWNE: Are they to get paid? And at what rates?

MR. SMALLWOOD: We have not decided as of now. In addition to the members of the commission, there are officials of the commission and there are financial and economic and other types of experts whom the Commission of Inquiry desire to employ; for instance, they have already retained Mr. Thompson, they have already retained Carl Goldenberg and he has people with him to make the economic survey, and they will engage other people from time to time. The secretary is a paid man. This is only an estimate. We may have to pay more than that, we are only estimating.

MR. BROWNE: I must confess to not being aware of Carl Goldenberg. Could the Premier tell us who he is?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Certainly. I thought his name was known to the honourable and learned gentleman. He is a lawyer and economist living in Montreal. He was brought here just after Confederation; and he has just completed a very sizable job for the Government of British Columbia in the preparation of their statement of claims, very important claims connected with their railway, of which my honourable and learned friend must have heard, for presentation to the Government of Canada. He has done work for most of the governments across Canada of an economic character and made numerous economic studies. He was one of these dollar a year men during the war. He is a very great, able and clever man with very high standing in Ottawa. Now he has been retained and his associates have been retained by the Commission of Inquiry. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the Government assured the Commission of Inquiry that they could engage anyone they liked, anywhere in the world, with no limitation whatsoever, no limits. They could employ any one they liked in the world to make any inquiries they felt ought to be made. In other words the Government has given them a completely free hand to prepare Newfoundland's case for presentation to the Royal Commission next year or the year after or whenever it may come. My honourable friend and colleague, the member for Harbour Main-Bell Island is the Chairman of that Commission of Inquiry, and he can confirm the statements I have just made, that they have a completely free hand. All we ask is that they tell us whom they want and what they propose to pay, and the Government will do the rest. If my honourable colleague, the Chairman, cares to tell the committee more about it, he is at liberty to do so.

MR. POWER: I would like to assure the Honourable Leader of the Opposition that out of this fifty thousand dollars Thompson will receive quite a large sum.

MR. HOLLETT: He will receive a large sum?

MR. BROWNE: A royal sum.

MR. POWER: Yes, a large sum.

MR. HOLLETT: Will the honourable Minister tell us at the moment, if he can, whether the other commissions have been given carte blanche?

MR. SMALLWOOD: They have not. We regard this commission of inquiry as of maximum importance to Newfoundland, of maximum importance.

MR. HOLLETT: Like the fisheries.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does not my honourable friend agree?

MR. HOLLETT: Of maximum importance? Well I have heard the fishery report is one of great importance, and if this one is of maximum importance, how does he put that, in the second degree?

MR. SMALLWOOD: If my honourable friend does not see it, it is too bad.

HON. P. J. LEWIS (Minister without portfolio): Mr. Chairman, if I may I would like to qualify that one comment the Honourable the Premier has made in reference to the retaining of experts. It is true that under the Order in Council we have been authorized to recommend certain experts whom we think may be necessary and helpful to us in the work that we are asked to do, but our recommendation is subject to the ratification of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

MR. HIGGINS: I may say that is much more reasonable. I thought the honourable and learned member for Harbour Main-Bell Island would come back on that earlier statement.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don't think my honourable colleague suggested that the Government will not back the Commission to the absolute limit. Anyone they have asked us to employ has been employed, and they have been refused nothing they wanted up to this moment, and I don't think there is any indication they will be refused anything they ask for. In other words we wish this Commission of Inquiry to do for Newfoundland a very great piece of work, and we wish them to have all the help they can possibly need. All they have to do is ask for it. I think he will confirm that too.

MR. HOLLETT: I do hope that this Commission will do for Newfoundland what a certain other commission failed to do in 1949. It is a big job, and I may say, speaking for myself and for my colleagues on this side, we have every confidence in the Chairman of this Commission, and I am very glad.

MR. SMALLWOOD: And the members?

MR. HOLLETT: I am speaking at the moment about the chairman. I could not say the members off hand as I don't know who they are. I have heard one or two names. I should know them perhaps—but I have full confidence in the Chairman, and I don't believe, he would have anybody on that commission who was not of the first importance, and I am sure we in the Opposition wish him and his committee every success. And I assure him of any assistance we may be able to offer; and we won't want any thousand dollars.

Item 406 carried.

Item 407—General Contingencies: Carried.

409—Central Accounting and Pay Division:

MR. BROWNE: Would the Minister give us the name of the director of Central Accounting and is this a separate account now for the pay offices for the whole of the Government?

MR. POWER: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: In the department of Finance?

MR. POWER: Yes, and that is Mr. Gordon Beams.

MR. BROWNE: Who is the director of payrolls?

MR. POWER: That is Mr. Coombs.

MR. BROWNE: And the Director of Commitment Control?

MR. POWER: That is Mr. Rabbits.

410—Civil Service Commission:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I have already mentioned the fact they have complained of their lack of work being placed before them. There are a number of people who have been excluded from their jurisdiction, and they feel they should have wider powers in regard to the number of persons who should go before them for examination either for promotion or for appointment in the civil service. Has no consideration been given to that?

MR. POWER: As far as I remember, Sir, every civil service job goes before them.

MR. BROWNE: No there is a big list of them.

MR. POWER: They are not established civil servants then. Established and pensionable civil servants go before them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I could add this comment to what my honourable colleague has said, that the figures are small because of the fact that a really large number of public servants are not, as my colleague says, established and pensionable civil servants. Perhaps pretty close to half the civil service is made up of persons who work in the hospitals and institutions and the like who are not pensionable and are not established, but are a sort of transient public servants. But the majority of these pensionable and established civil servants are under the civil service commission. Now the civil service commission is quite new as yet, and our feeling is that before probably all civil servants are brought under them they should be in operation for a longer period of time, and should feel their way. We have had a representation from them, and we have decided quite deliberately to postpone consideration of their representation for many months to come. It is a deliberate policy to have them take their time. We don't want to have these men in complete control of the civil service until they are ready for it. And we don't think they are quite ready for it yet.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could have the names of the three men.

MR. POWER: Mr. Carter, Mr. Ashley and Mr. Taylor.

MR. HOLLETT: How long have they been appointed?

MR. POWER: Almost a year, I should say, not quite a year.

MR. HOLLETT: I think my honourable friend wanted to know about the pension fund, and he would like to make a few remarks about that when he comes back. We could let it stand, or let me continue talking until he comes back, I personally know very little about it.

MR. POWER: I suggest we should have a short recess.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would say the honourable member could discuss the matter as his colleague will be here in a moment. We are at the end of the department. After finishing this department we might have a short recess.

MR. HOLLETT: What I want to find out is why a civil service commission asking that amount, should require only one officer and one shorthand typist?

MR. POWER: The chairman's salary is personal. He was a deputy-minister and was earning, I think, almost that amount, and would be earning more after the raise given the civil servants last year, or about the same. That is the reason why that salary is up, it is a personal one.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I drew the attention of the Minister to the report of the civil service commission, page 2, paragraph 5, which spoke about a recommendation sent to the Minister of Finance and passed on to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, but in so far as the Commission is aware, no definite action has been taken in this connection. And you can see from the next page of the report that the powers of the Civil Service Commission are not as great as it might appear. Apparently they cannot deal with a number of positions. I wonder if any further consideration has been given to the recommendations of the Civil Service Commission in that respect. I might say that in my opinion it is very important that you should have good civil servants, and that all the posts which are suitable for examination by the civil service commission should be passed over to them. I don't think all of them should be considered by the Civil Service Commission, not the top positions, certainly not. But I think as far as possible they should have those who are suitable for consideration by the Commission.

MR. POWER: We hope to arrive at that happy state, Sir.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I was explaining while the honourable gentleman was absent that we did not feel, and I do not feel, that the time is ripe to put all or even the great majority of the higher civil service or in fact of the civil service under the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission. The document my honourable friend just referred to pointed out that the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission is over the same posts exactly as the jurisdiction of the late civil service selection board. Now the civil service selection board consisted of some six or seven of the deputy-ministers. The chairman was, I think, the Auditor General, and the deputy-minister of Finance was a member, and the clerk of the council the deputy-minister of Provincial Affairs. Now the Civil Service Commission has the same jurisdiction. We have not added to the authority nor have we taken from it—the same jurisdiction is there, with this difference, that the civil service selection board was made up of men who had far more experience with the civil service and its requirement for the various posts than has the Civil Service Commission. In the first place their experience was more comprehensive and in the second place one of the three is not himself an ex-civil servant. I refer to Mr. Ashley, but is a gentleman who came in from commercial life. So that only two of the men on the Civil Service Commission are themselves ex-civil servants. Therefore we do not feel justified in adding to the responsibility nor to the jurisdiction yet. We do not feel like doing it yet, but only after the Civil Service Commission from day to day and week to week gain practical experience in office, gain more practical experience in the job. As a matter of fact we never would have set up the Civil Service Commission in the first place but for the fact that the work was occupying far too much of the time of valuable and highly paid deputy-ministers. We found repeatedly that when we needed this or that from the deputy-ministers, the Auditor General, the Controller of the Treasury, the Clerk of the Council, they were working or meeting as a civil service selection board, which was a great inconvenience to the Government and to the Cabinet. It also was an inconvenience to them and they objected strongly, and it was when these deputy-ministers comprising the civil service selection board asked the Government to abolish them as such and set up a Civil Service Commission that we decided to do so, with a certain amount of misgiving.

Now this Civil Service Commission would not be worth their salt if they did not write a report such as my honourable friend just quoted from, saying that they should like to have the entire civil service brought under their jurisdiction. Perhaps that day will come, but not yet. I don't think, frankly, they are ready for it yet.

MR. BROWNE: I don't think all the posts should go under their jurisdiction.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, but far more will come under it than are under it now.

MR. HOLLETT: I understood the Premier to say here that he himself would appoint all deputy-ministers.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I did not say appoint. I select, the Lieutenant-Governor in Council appoints—I select.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words a deputy-minister is a political appointment, and can only fear to be fired as soon as there is a change of government.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is untrue and very unsound and very unfair. I am Premier and while I am Premier I act as Premier. When I act as the Leader of the Liberal Party that is another matter. When acting as Premier I select a gentleman to be a deputy-minister. That does not say the next Premier has the right to fire him. I have not the right to fire a deputy-minister except for very good cause. I would say that more than half of the deputy-ministers in the service today are Tories, but that does not mean a thing. Their jobs are just as sure as if they were the most ardent Liberals. So, if I ever live to that frosty Friday to which I referred; the people of Newfoundland won't thank him if they suspect he harbours any such intentions in his breast. They won't thank him for it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I don't think the Premier ought to select the deputies.

MR. SMALLWOOD: He is the Premier.

MR. HOLLETT: Because he is the Premier does not mean he is Almighty God—a deputy-minister is a civil servant just the same as any of them here, and works up by stages until he gets to the top, and he is well qualified then. All the departments have well qualified men and very few were selected by the Premier. It is just as well and better by reason of the fact that in these appointments the Premier does not select the deputy-ministers.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It happens to be true that I do select them.

MR. HOLLETT: It is not true—what deputy-ministers were selected by the Honourable the Premier?

MR. SMALLWOOD: All that have been selected since this Government came into office I selected. Never mind who they are. Supposing there is only one—but I selected at least four or five; and whoever is Premier in Newfoundland he will select the deputy-ministers and whoever the Prime Minister of Canada is he selects the deputy-ministers in the Government of Canada—that is so—

MR. HOLLETT: That is not so, Mr. Chairman—a deputy-minister is a civil servant and he gradually works into that class, and he remains there because he carries out the duties of his office as a civil servant. He is pensionable and the Premier does not select him.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Who does? Who selects him?

MR. HOLLETT: The Civil Service Commission.

MR. SMALLWOOD: There is no deputy-minister from one end of Canada to the other who has been selected by any civil service commission, with no exception, in all Canada.

DR. ROWE: I can add to what the Premier has said. I happen to know several deputy-ministers in Ottawa who were selected by the Prime Minister of Canada and not by any board. I can name one right now who was called into the Prime Minister's office for that purpose. What is wrong—the honourable gentleman won't ever believe the Premier of this Province has selected every deputy-minister in this Province since 1949. I have the names right here of those having been appointed since 1949; and there is another who is not now a deputy-minister who was selected by the Premier and appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That does not make it a political appointment either. If he is selected by the Premier it is not necessarily political. In addition to being the leader of his party the Premier is the Premier and while he is such any selection he makes of persons to be deputy-ministers are not political appointments. I have made no political selections of deputy-ministers since I have been in office, not one. I have selected men that I thought were the best men available in Newfoundland for the particular post, and most people have agreed with it.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, there is nobody saying the Honourable the Premier has selected anybody who was not the best man he could get. That is the history of the Honourable the Premier. For instance the Fisheries Development Authority is made up of the only three men under the sun who could possibly have served on that committee. And on the committee for the revision of financial terms the honourable member for Harbour Main-Bell Island is the best possible man—nobody is questioning the Premier's selections at all, but I am saying that it is unfortunate if every time a new Premier comes into office in this country he has to look at the deputy-ministers and see whether he likes them or not, and selects them. If he is going to select the deputy-ministers he should select the assistants and right on down the line—that would be fine.

410 Carried.

Department of Provincial Affairs:

501—Minister's Office—Carried.

502—General Office:

MR. BROWNE: I notice that there has been one officer moved from Grade III to Grade IV. I should like to know who that is and why?

MR. MURRAY: I cannot offhand. The officer in question is Mr. Christopher. He had been selected since before I went there, and is I believe,
MR. BROWNE: He is being paid by us?

MR. MURRAY: No.

Item 503—Public Relations:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, what are the duties of the officer in charge of public relations? And who is he?

MR. MURRAY: The officer in charge is Mr. McNeilly, formerly the editor of the paper called "The Newfoundland Government Bulletin" but the publication of the bulletin was suspended last year. Mr. McNeilly presently does the job of tabulating records and that sort of thing. Actually he is a very old man and we tried to fit him in somehow.

MR. BROWNE: An old newspaper man. I imagine there is great sympathy in some quarters towards him. The reason I brought up the matter is I have been often in there and notice they have a file of clippings and that sort of thing. Are these clippings available for the members of the House to see?

MR. MURRAY: Certainly—all these clippings are of public documents and anyone can come in to see them.

MR. BROWNE: And all speeches in the last three or four years are filed?

MR. MURRAY: Yes.

Item 504—Museum:

MR. BROWNE: When is the museum going to open its doors to the public again?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Perhaps I might tell the honourable gentleman something about that. The new museum was advertised by the curator, Mr. English, as about to open on a certain date. That was news to the Minister and was news to me and news to all of us in the Government. Mr. English is a man of very great enthusiasm and he has a great love for the work he is doing. His enthusiasm, I think, is beyond dispute, and I think everyone will admit it. I however felt that, as the Government as a whole was responsible for the museum, it might be better if the collective judgment of quite a number be sought rather than have the Government put in the position where it had to accept the sole judgment of one man that the museum was ready. I therefore invited some eight or ten prominent persons in the city interested in history and with some knowledge of Newfoundland history, I personally invited them to look at the new museum and report to me personally their opinions as to the suitability of the museum as it stood to be opened to the public.

I don't remember who I asked, but I remember some of them. Mr. J. Higgins and Mr. Robert S. Furlong, Mr. Albert Perlin, Mr. W. Carew, Mr. Don Jamieson, Mr. Michael Harrington, and I think Mr. Jeffery of the Evening Telegram and several others to make a personal inspection of the museum. As a result of the report of these gentlemen it seems to me that we are not ready to open the museum or rather that the museum is not ready to be opened until certain changes have been made there.

MR. BROWNE: Well, Mr. Chairman, what is being done about it now? Is it all being left to the curator? I can easily understand it has to be a very slow job, and I think it is beyond the efforts of one man to organize the great variety of exhibits. Has he any assistance?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The latest thought was that we bring—perhaps the Minister remembers this more vividly that I do although I may say this all happened within very recent weeks—

MR. MURRAY: Yes, the latest thought was that we should try to get in touch with some people trained in museum work who preferably had some Newfoundland background or were born Newfoundlanders. The latest thing that has been done is that we have written the National Museum at Ottawa to find out if they have any trained personnel with a Newfoundland background to be made available to us.

MR. BROWNE: That is a very good idea, as is, I think, the Premier’s idea of getting a group of people such as he named to form a voluntary board. Most of these men mentioned were members of the Historical Society in which they were advisers and their collective judgment was available. I think the transformation of the museum into a state where it could be opened to the public would advance more rapidly under them than if left to Mr. English or anybody else whoever he might be. And I suggest that the Government give some consideration to the formation of a museum board for history and antiques or whatever you may care to call them, but somewhat similar to the Public Libraries Board, and then you could always have their advice.

MR. MURRAY: There is the Historical Society.

MR. HOLLETT: I wonder if I may ask what was wrong? Why was it not opened? Was it on the advice of these men that it should not be?

MR. MURRAY: To put it brutally, we did not think it was fit to be opened or that it was worthy of the province.

MR. HOLLETT: There was a time when it was. There were quite a number of exhibits which people would wish to see. Have all these exhibits been preserved?

MR. MURRAY: As to what happened to the old building, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the Honourable Leader of the Opposition knows that when the Commission of Government took over the actual building used for the museum, it was taken over for office space and various exhibits were scattered—some were put in the Sanatorium for safekeeping others were put out in the laboratory then at Bay Bulls, which was later burned and a lot of them disappeared there. Some of the others just disappeared or were destroyed from neglect, others have been protected and preserved, principally the Beothic Skeleton which is still in a good state of preservation, and actually the most valuable item we have.

Item 506-Miscellaneous:

MR. BROWNE: Censorship of Moving Pictures: I take it there is no one there?

MR. MURRAY: No purely a token.

MR. BROWNE: Has the Minister given any consideration to having someone to do that. I think it is sometimes necessary.

MR. MURRAY: We would be prepared to study any suggestions put forward. That item for public records, that is an amount made available there. We have found scattered about the country and at various sales sometimes items of great historical value to the country, which were sometimes found through Mr. Nimshi Carew who had a sort of roving commission on a purely honorary basis, and he used to bring to our attention objects which he thought were worthy of being part of the public records of Newfoundland. The object of this vote is to purchase such objects if we thought they were worth it.

MR. BROWNE: How much did you spend in the past year?

MR. MURRAY: $375 for the past eight months.

MR. BROWNE: What did you buy?

MR. MURRAY: We got some documents Mr. Carew had in his possession—documents which I thought really historical, about eight of them I believe.

MR. BROWNE: For the museum?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, or to become part of the public records of the country which are kept in Provincial Affairs.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We also got one of the world’s few sets of the annual report of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. That was the body which sponsored many of the early churches in Newfoundland and many of the schools in Newfoundland. Indeed they sponsored schools in Newfoundland as recently as within my memory. Now that is a very famous body in England, and their annual reports contain references to many parts of Newfoundland. And Mr. Carew became aware of the fact that there existed in England an almost complete unbroken set of these annual reports running back to about 1720 or 1730 or some where about that order. Frankly when he told me about them I said; order them and if I cannot get the Government to pay for them I will, but order them, don’t let them out of your hand. He did, and I spoke to the Minister who gladly confirmed my statement. They have been received now, and I think Mr. Carew got us another item of very great value, a complete set of prints of the Governors of Newfoundland, with a few gaps, of course, and these are in virtually good condition. I have never seen prints in Newfoundland in such beautiful condition as these are. They are at the moment, I believe, in the possession of the Lieutenant-Governor at Government House. I believe we paid for these out of this vote or if not in the year just passed.

MR. BROWNE: What are you going to do with them?

MR. SMALLWOOD: These I think we should put in Government House. These prints of the Governors of Newfoundland, I think, suitably mounted and framed, should be displayed in Government House.

MR. BROWNE: The year before last the amount was only $6.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Anyway—perhaps they have not been paid for yet.

MR. BROWNE: You say they include virtually all of the Governors.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I don’t know if Henry Osborne, the very first, is there or not? But with the exception of certain gaps virtually all the Governors of Newfoundland down to seventy, eighty or ninety years ago, until quite recently.

MR. BROWNE: Just before your time?
DR. ROWE: I might add a few words to what the Premier has said. When I was doing some research a few years ago I naturally looked for those reports because that possibly was the first organization that had anything to do with Newfoundland, and if it did not establish certainly came to the help of the first school which was started in Newfoundland, in Bonavista, in 1723 or 1724. I could not find a complete set in Newfoundland of the annual reports of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel. I found several incomplete sets, and quite a number of them contained most enlightening information such as I have never seen elsewhere about the social conditions in Newfoundland as far back as the 1730's. When I heard a few weeks ago that Mr. Carew succeeded in obtaining or could obtain a complete set I felt that we were about to obtain one of the most valuable historical documents Newfoundland could obtain anywhere.

Item 507—Civil Defense:

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, have we a director of civil defense at the present time, and if so, who and what salary is he being paid, and also if the Minister would table the report of the director, if he has had one, and tell us what is supposed to be done here under this heading.

MR. MURRAY: Well, Mr. Chairman, as everyone knows, the condition of civil defense here in Newfoundland was rather deplorable up to a short time ago. It was, you might say, more a state of suspense, and the Government cast about to see if they could find a suitable individual to head this service. We were fortunate, Sir, in obtaining a man of great interest, great oratorial ability and a great propagandist, I think, and I have no doubt civil defense will be heard from in the future, in fact it is being heard from now twice daily. As to the salaries, Sir, they are set down in the back of the book here. The director, I think, gets $7,000.

MR. MURRAY: There is one word of explanation I should make. All these expenses and expenditures incurred by civil defense are borne on a fifty-fifty basis by the Federal Government, including salaries.

MR. BROWNE: What is our share?

MR. MURRAY: We will recover fifty per cent.

MR. BROWNE: Are there any others beside the director? Who is his assistant?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, there are several others. We propose to divide the country into an eastern and western division, and have a chief warden for the eastern division and a chief warden for the western division. We also have an office man, Mr. Rabbitts, and a stenographer.

MR. BROWNE: Who are the chief wardens?

MR. MURRAY: One is Mr. Noseworthy, ex-officer of the Newfoundland Regiment who has been appointed for the western division, and another, Mr. John Condon, who has had considerable experience, was with the R.C.M.P. and was a medical sergeant during the war, and is very competent to render first aid. He recently held a position as fire safety preventative officer with Fraser Brace. I repeat again their salaries are borne half by the provincial and half by the federal government.
MR. FOGWILL: The Minister said the director of civil defense was a great man who could be depended upon to breathe the fire of life into civil defense, but he did not say the name of the gentleman.

MR. MURRAY: The gentleman in question is Major P. J. Cashin.

MR. FOGWILL: Thank you very much.

500—Department of Provincial Affairs carried.

600—Department of Education:

MR. MURRAY: Mr. Chairman, as the Minister of Education is away from the province, I have been asked to pilot the estimates through and give what information I can.

MR. BROWNE: He is absent on departmental business?

MR. MURRAY: I am afraid I am unable to say, Sir.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Honourable Minister of Provincial Affairs is Acting Minister of Education.

Item 601—Minister's Office:

MR. BROWNE: I don't see any vote in that office for travelling expenses—oh yes, it is there. I was looking at the wrong page.

601 carried.

Item 602—General Office:

MR. BROWNE: I see there is an increase in the number of directors, officers grade VII, from three to four, what does that mean?

MR. MURRAY: That is a new post. It is being created—a Public Relations Officer—the post is graded as a director Grade VI.

MR. BROWNE: Who is the Public Relations Officer?

MR. MURRAY: There has as yet been no appointment.

MR. BROWNE: What about the representation on a petition put in a short time ago which had such support from the members of the Cabinet in regard to the appointment of a Seven Day Adventist.

MR. MURRAY: Not yet appointed.

MR. BROWNE: What happened to the petition?

MR. SMALLWOOD: There has been no appointment made yet. It was only the other day we agreed here in the House amongst us, I think, unanimously, that we ought to do what was requested. As a Government we had decided before the matter came before the House that we did agree. Now this was all printed long before that, at least it was in the printer's hands before that, and what is done will have to be done by action of the Executive.

MR. BROWNE: And where would he come in, as a director?

MR. HEFFERTON: Mr. Chairman, may I make a comment here. It does not necessarily follow that when we give recognition to a denomination that we have to appoint any executive officer for that denomination. We have given recognition to a number of amalgamated schools, but we have no superintendent for that particular branch.

MR. HOLLETT: Who is their representative?

MR. HEFFERTON: One of the other superintendents who have the job?

MR. BROWNE: What kind of officer will be appointed if there will be one appointed?
MR. SMALLWOOD: We can't say at the moment—we have not decided.

602 carried.

Item 603—Accounting Office:

MR. BROWNE: How is the accountant? Is not that a very small salary for such an enormous expenditure running into millions of dollars?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, a recommendation has been made for a promotion.

MR. BROWNE: I am very glad to hear that, and I hope the Government will give it favourable consideration.

603 carried.

604—School Supplies:

MR. HIGGINS: Under 604-03—might I ask the Minister if there is anything recoverable in that amount of $404,100?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed that approximately fifty per cent of that is recoverable from the pupils.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, on that point is that increase in that vote caused by the increased costs or would it be caused by the larger amount of units?

MR. MURRAY: One of the causes for the increase in this particular vote is the increase in the number of pupils, I am informed.

604 carried.

605—Supervisory Services:

MR. BROWNE: I notice that thirteen officials have been raised from grade V to grade VI, and the vote increased by twelve thousand dollars—what is the reason for such a large proportion of promotions?

MR. MURRAY: Recently there has been a re-classification all through the educational department. I understand, and that applies to people with grades and to those who have none and academic qualification.

MR. BROWNE: You have supervisors all over the country?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, they go all over the country.

MR. BROWNE: I notice some have been raised, what about the others?

MR. MURRAY: They were formerly all in one category, now there has been an increase for those with degrees.

MR. BROWNE: And these are thirteen degrees?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, but none of them got thirteen degrees.

Item 605 carried.

606—Library Services:

MR. BROWNE: That Library Services, Mr. Chairman, is that the Gosling?

MR. MURRAY: Yes, Mr. Newell.

MR. BROWNE: Does that include salaries?

MR. MURRAY: Yes.

Carried.

607—Correspondence Courses:

MR. BROWNE: Is the Minister in a position to say how that system is working, is it used very much?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed there are presently about thirty-five people taking advantage of it. It is mostly being used by the children of lighthouse keepers, section-men and railway men and such isolated people, and there are some in the sanatorium, about twenty-two from in there.

MR. BROWNE: Has it been long in force?

MR. MURRAY: Since 1946.

Carried.

608—Training Teachers:

MR. HOLLETT: Is there a reason for scaling the grant from $70,000 down to $60,000.

MR. MURRAY: It is based on previous experience, for the first eight months of 1953.

MR. SMALLWOOD: A more realistic appraisal of the actual amount needed.

MR. POWER: This would be a generous vote.

Carried.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, I move the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

On motion the committee rose, reported progress and asked leave to sit again.

Report received. Ordered sit again tomorrow.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move all remaining orders of the day do stand deferred.

Motion carried.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Speaker, I move that the House at its rising do adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday at 3:00 of the clock. In reply to the inevitable question—I suppose tomorrow we will continue the estimates, and we might get into the budget debate. I don't know if my honourable friends are ready for the budget debate, but let us decide tomorrow.

The House at its rising adjourned until tomorrow Thursday, June 3, at 3:00 of the clock.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1954.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Presenting Petitions None.

Presenting Reports of Standing and Select Committees None.

Giving Notice of Motion and Questions

HON. L. R. CURTIS (Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, I give notice on behalf of the Honourable Minister of Fisheries and Co-operatives that I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Inspection of Fish."

HON. M. P. MURRAY (Minister of Provincial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I give notice I will on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a Bill "An Act Respecting the Floral Emblem of Newfoundland."

MR. M. M. HOLLETT (Leader of the Opposition): To ask the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development to lay on the table of the House the following information:

1. A copy of Agreement or Contract between the Provincial Government of Newfoundland and/or the Department of Economic Development with the firm of W. J. Lundrigan Ltd. for the building and erection of (a) the Gypsum Plant, (b) the Cement Plant.

Answers to Questions

Question No. 107 addressed to the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development:

HON. J. R. SMALLWOOD (Prime Minister): Any questions addressed to me, Mr. Speaker, are in the course of preparation.

Question No. 105:

HON. G. J. POWER (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that question should have been directed to the Honourable the Minister of Economic Development.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I can answer that in part now.

105-(2) and 105-(3).

The plants that are in full production are the cement mill at Corner Brook. That is the only one in full production.

The plants that are in partial production are the gypsum plant at Corner Brook, the birch plant at St. John’s, the Atlantic Hardboards Industries plant at St. John’s, the United Cotton Mills at St. John’s, Terra Nova Textiles at St. John’s, CMIC at St. John’s, and Hanning Electric at St. John’s, Superior Rubber at Holyrood, Koch Shoes at Harbour Grace, Gold Salt Leather Goods at Harbour Grace and Atlantic Gloves and Dorn Tanneries at Carbonear. All of these are in partial production only. Only the cement mill of all the new industries is as yet in full production.

Now the industries employing the two thousand men are those I have just named. How many are employed in each of the said plants is a matter for each company concerned to answer, if they care to do so. The value of the commodities manufactured is also their own private information and they might or might not be willing to give the information if they were asked.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Speaker, may I say that the reason I directed that question to the Honourable Minister of Finance was because it referred to a statement made in the budget speech, and I took it he must have had the necessary information at hand.

MR. SMALLWOOD: He did.

MR. HOLLETT: Then why did he not answer the question?

Orders of the Day

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Honourable Minister of Finance would allow me to address a question to him—I wonder if he would tell us the source of the information, and where he got the value of the earnings for this year.

MR. POWER: That was the result of letters addressed to hundreds of firms.

Committee of the Whole on Supply:

MR. SPEAKER: This Committee was given leave yesterday to sit again today. I do now leave the Chair.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The last item passed was 608, page 92.

Item 609—Teachers’ Pensions, etc.:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we could get some information about this cost of living bonus, which seems to have been absorbed into the salaries but still remains here as a cost of living bonus—is it the intention to keep it that way, or is it the hope to have that absorbed into the pensions? Another question: is that $36,000 the cost of living bonus on the $100,000?

MR. MURRAY: The reason, I understand, for the $36,000 appearing here is because the estimates were set up before the decision of the Government to incorporate the cost of living bonus. On the second point the answer is, yes the figures shown here are the result of experience over the years.

609 carried.

610—Scholarships:

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, on that item, I remember there was some discussion about the scholarships when the new Act came in repealing the Act which set up these particular scholarships. At that time I thought that the names should be merged into the new Act, but it was passed through without the change being made. Now by what authority do we vote amounts for these various scholarships when the Act to set them up has been abolished? I wonder if the Minister could answer that question?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed, Sir, that there is actually an Act—I can't cite it to you—setting up the scholarships, but the actual amount revoted by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that creates the scholarships and the amounts are set by minutes of council.

MR. HOLLETT: My understanding was that the Act was repealed a short time ago.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, the Act has not yet been assented to, and has not yet received the Royal Assent, therefore, I presume we still work on the old basis and the money will be transferred from one vote to another when the time comes. Those estimates, I understand, were prepared long before the House was opened.

MR. HOLLETT: How are the Government prepared to go about it? Are they willing to still retain these names? That was the point I raised at that particular time.

MR. MURRAY: I understand it is the intention to retain the names of Queen Victoria, George V and Jubilee Scholarships with these first three going back to before Confederation. The Provincial and Memorial University scholarships were set up by this administration.

Carried.

Item 611—Vocational Training:

MR. BROWNE: On this vote here I would like to know if any amount here is refunded from the Department of Labour in Ottawa? Whether the vote from the Department of Labour is in addition to this, and whether the Government is taking advantage of all the facilities provided by the Department of Labour for vocational training purposes?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed, Sir, that practically full advantage is taken of the Federal Legislation, and that approximately fifty per cent of the expenditure under vocational training is refunded by the Federal Government.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I suppose there is a capital vote for capital work in reference to the department proceeding with the erection of the school adjoining Memorial University?

MR. MURRAY: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: I presume some alterations have been made in the plan since the first plans met with such general approval?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed that since the first plan was drafted very substantial alterations have been made, and the ground floor space has been just about doubled.

MR. HOLLETT: On page 92—Officers—does that refer to teachers in the vocational school?

MR. MURRAY: These are instructors in the vocational training school. There are a great many courses run off up there. There is a little pamphlet here which sets out the number actually in training, and it is comprehensive. The vocational training school, as honourable members might know, was originally a rehabilitation school for ex-servicemen, and then extended to general application, and at present gives courses in auto mechanics, diesel engineering, mechanical and electrical work, carpentry, wood work, brick laying, plumbing, pipe fitting, and I have been informed that tickets can now be obtained for first and second marine engineers. There is also a course in wireless, radio, electronics. You will see a vote there in the amount of $30,000; allowances to outport students of $30 a month.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, in respect to the answer given by the Honourable Minister, is there any relationship between the director of apprenticeship under the Department of Labour and the vocational training school over on the southside?

MR. MURRAY: There are two different departments. The Director of Apprenticeship is attached to the Honourable Minister of Labour's department, I understand, and the vocational training school gives actual training by requirements and qualifications set by the director.

MR. BROWNE: I notice the second officer in the vocational training school receives a salary marked personal—who is that person, and why is that? Page 92—Officer Grade VII, second item, marked personal.

HON. S. J. HEFFERTON (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply): If I may answer the honourable gentleman—Mr. Whitney who is the remaining one of the English personnel brought out in the original office was given a certain salary somewhat higher than that in agreement with the scale adopted by us.

MR. MURRAY: These men were brought out here on contract.

MR. BROWNE: I take it the Director Grade III is in charge of the whole school?

MR. MURRAY: That is the principal of the school, Mr. Frank Templeman.

MR. BROWNE: Has the report of the Department of Education been circulated? I have not a copy.

MR. MURRAY: I am informed it has been laid on the table of the House.

MR. HOLLETT: May I ask if these teachers will share in that million dollar increase?

MR. MURRAY: No, they don't share in the increase to the teachers. Carried.
Item 613—Adult Education:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if there has been any report of the work of the handicrafts and the Jubilee Guild? That report should be circulated amongst the members so that they could get an idea whether this movement is progressing or otherwise.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I may say that in connection with this vote, this matter raised by it is one that has caused the Government very considerable thought and concern. When we came into office five years ago we discovered that there were three completely different and separate organizations in receipt of public moneys and engaged on virtually the same work. There was first, a division of the Government itself known as the Handicrafts Division, with headquarters at that time in the Seamen's Institute or King George V Institute. That handicraft division taught handicrafts and domestic science and home cooking, and did a certain amount of work which you could perhaps best describe as vocational training work. They had a number of field workers, I think, some seven or eight, who travelled in the Province. The total cost of this handicrafts division of the Department of Education was a very substantial amount of money. I forget what the amount was, but it ran to forty or fifty thousand dollars or something of that order or perhaps even more.

Then secondly there was the organization known as the Jubilee Guilds. The Jubilee Guilds was a voluntary organization receiving only from the Government a vote that ran, I believe, to twelve thousand dollars a year. They had been receiving twelve thousand dollars a year for a good many years from the Government. Now, they carried on much the same kind of work as the Handicrafts Division although they had no wood-work activity, and there were certain other activities of that type which existed in the handicrafts division that they did not carry out. But this organization also had some seven or eight field workers who travelled around Newfoundland giving lessons and holding classes for teaching home crafts; domestic science, home cooking, home preserving of foods by means of bottling and canning and the like. They came to see the Government shortly after we came into office, and put up a very convincing argument that the Government ought to help them by more than we had been doing. I questioned them closely on just what it was they did, and what exactly was the nature of their work. I mentioned during the course of the conversation that night in my office some five years ago that I imagined they were doing virtually the same work as was being done by the handicrafts division of the Department of Education. It occurred to me at that time that there was here a distinct duplication of effort, and it further occurred to me that a voluntary body made up of ladies to whom this work was a labour of love would get better results and more economic results than would ever be gotten by a division of handicrafts of a department of government.

I held a conference again in my office consisting of several Ministers of the Crown; the Minister of Education of that day, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Supply, the Minister of Welfare, and one or two other Ministers. We discussed the matter, and as a result, we agreed to ask Cabinet to approve a project. Cabinet approved, and the project was that we should ask the Jubilee Guilds if they would take over the work of the handicrafts division of the Department of Education, less those features of the work of the division which really did not belong to the handicrafts division, but such work might well be passed over to the vocational training school on the southside. This was done. The woodwork and other activities of the handicrafts division was passed over to the vocational training school on the southside, and all the rest of the handicrafts division were passed over to the Jubilee Guilds. The Government, at the same time, increased the grant to the Jubilee Guilds from twelve thousand to thirty thousand dollars a year, and have maintained the grant at that figure from that day to this.

Now that having been done—and I for one personally felt a sense of self-congratulation upon having welded two conflicting and rather rival activities of the same character into one organization, and in so doing having saved the Treasury a little money—but I suddenly had my satisfaction deflated very considerably when I discovered that there was a third activity that was carrying on the same work as well, and that was the Adult Education Branch of the Department of Education. This branch also had some seven or eight field workers who were travelling about the Province holding classes and giving lessons on domestic science, household work, cooking, knitting and sewing and home cooking and canning. I said: "In Heaven’s name, where does this stop? How many more?" I was afraid to look too closely for fear I would discover another two or three activities carrying on the same work. Well at that point I gave up because just around then we became pretty occupied with our plans to create the new University, and we began to consult carefully with a number of people, and we came to the conclusion that all of these activities ought properly to form part of the extension department of the University. And it is our hope that all expenditures of the Government on such things will be made solely by making a contribution annually to the Newfoundland Memorial University, who then, through their extension department would take care of all the activities or virtually all of the activities that once were carried on by (a) the Handicrafts Division of the Department of Education (b) the Jubilee Guilds and (c) the Adult Education Branch of the Department of Education.

Now if that were done the Adult Education Branch could either be absorbed completely with its fine personnel, specialized personnel particularly in the person of its director, Dr. Florence O’Neill; either the whole of the division with its director and such of its staff as cared to continue in that work would be absorbed into the extension department of the University or else the division itself could remain as an activity of the Department of Education but confining itself entirely to the academic side of its present work, so that the sociological side could then be carried on by the extension division of the University and the academic side by the Division of Adult Education.

Now no decision has been taken on this matter. It is still very much under study. To begin with the University itself has not got its extension department and until it does it would be quite impossible to pass over to the University the activities which are presently carried on by the Jubilee Guilds and by the Adult Education Division of the Department of Education.

I am delighted to see the interest of the honourable member for St. John's West in this question of the Jubilee Guilds. I wonder if he would bear with me for a moment while I make a statement of my personal credo in these matters.

I feel that the Jubilee Guilds that presently function or the Adult Education Branch of the Department of Education or preferably the Extension Division of the University, as and when it comes into being, that this activity should and could become next to the work of the churches, and one need not ever make that qualification, because it is always understood in Newfoundland that next to the work of the churches this work in this island, with its peculiar and distinctive character, should and could become the most fundamentally important work possible to be done in Newfoundland. Because when the schools have done their work, and the Government have done their work and all the churches and societies and clubs have done their work, this business of moving out and bringing together young men and young women and older men and older women into social groups to harness and train their intelligence and their social interests in the direction of building a better and a sounder Newfoundland, that is fundamentally the most important thing that can be done. It is so important as to make the work of a government look trifling over a period of time, but that would take time, two or three generations.

I think of the work of the land grant colleges of the United States. I will say this, I think that the present greatness of the United States would be yet unimagined had there not existed the land grant colleges, and had there not existed the extension departments of the great universities and the small universities of the United States, had there not existed the extension work of the United States Department of Agriculture. If that fantastic work which has embraced scores of millions of young men and young women with the 4-H Clubs and a dozen such organizations, all the outcome of this extension movement of the United States Department of Agriculture and the Land Grant Colleges—what these movements have done to shape American industry, to shape American agriculture, to shape the very character of the American economy, what they have done to make Americans eternally anxious to improve with an insatiable appetite, always to make it a little more efficient, what they have done there—and what could be done here in Newfoundland to reshape, harness great sections of our Newfoundland character, is enough to challenge the patriotism and creativeness of any thoughtful Newfoundlander. If I were ten or fifteen years younger, and knew what I know now, I would never go into politics; I would go into university extension work. If I were young enough I would be trying to work for the junior red cross or the 4-H Clubs; these things that we grown-up, sober-sided men of affairs only despise, but these things which can change Newfoundland more truly than laws and legislation and we serious-minded men meeting here and talking and spouting—that is what young Newfoundlanders should
I am delighted to see the honourable and learned gentleman for St. John's West show such interest in this question of the Jubilee Guilds.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I won't try to imitate the Premier by adulation of the work of the Jubilee Guilds and similar movements, but I think the Premier knows I too am just as keenly interested and have just as much admiration of the work of the adult education movement in other countries as he has. But from a practical standpoint, after listening to that, he will grant we are brought face to face with this question of what is to be done now. Nothing?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not too encouraging.

MR. BROWNE: The co-operative movement stopped about two years ago, stopped short. When is it going to get started again. While I think I agree a hundred per cent we should get the adult education movement into an extension department of Memorial University—we have a model right alongside us here in Cape Breton and Antigonish and we knew that all along. I have been closely allied with the progress of that work since 1936 when Mr. Richardson came down here as a result of a conversation one of the commissioners then had with Dr. Coady; and I know exactly the technique in this country that has been followed. I don't know why we were so slow about getting it going, or who was responsible for the fold up. In regard to the University of course I can understand. It is a young University trying to get on its feet, but this is important work, and as the Premier said, is fundamental. In my opinion it is more important than the fisheries scheme he has praised so highly. And if he thinks it is so important as he said today, well then I think his government deserves some censure for not being more active in bringing it into greater activity and giving it unity under the administration.

Now I did not realize that there were three separate and distinct organizations doing similar work. I believe they had some sort of work such as wood carving carried on, and I believe they had a very able man, almost a genius, a chap by the name of Ismil Humber. I don't know if he is still associated with vocational training. But he was a genius as far as wood carving was concerned, and he was teaching in that department.

I must thank the Premier for giving us such an enlightening talk, and I hope that the ideas which he has expressed here this afternoon will soon be put into action.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I must say I listened with close attention to the excellent but brief address of the Premier on the various social organizations mentioned. I regret that he finds the years beginning to lean so heavily upon his broad shoulders.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable gentleman should have a chance yet.

MR. HOLLETT: And that he anticipates a 4-H Club after November. I assure him I shall do my best to get him a job in a 4-H Club.

Apart from that, Mr. Speaker, I think this is an excellent idea of the Premier's, very fine and very excellent and I agree with him. Perhaps a lot of us even as we grow older and find grey hairs in our heads and some of us with no hair, might still think of these things, and perhaps do a lot by way of voluntary assistance for these various organizations which have to do with the social welfare of the country in which we live. I do think the Premier's remarks were very well taken, but we must get back to the facts. I think, as I remember, he said it was several years ago since he gave that $30,000 to this work, and I think the Government must have been asked for an increase in that grant and if so I would like the Minister to tell us why it has not been given some consideration?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed, Sir, a request has actually been made and is under consideration.

MR. HOLLETT: In that case I might again ask the Minister if it is the intention to make that recommendation to the Lieutenant-Governor in Council. I mean, after the address of the Honourable the Premier, I don't see how any of us could object to the recommendation.

Mr. Morgan in the Chair:

MR. COURAGE: Mr. Chairman, arising out of some remarks made a few moments ago I should like to tell the committee something about the work being done in adult education. I know something about the work being done in adult education because I have many times visited the adult education centre, and I don't believe the Committee is aware that we have here in St. John's one of the finest adult education centres to be found in the world. I would like the honourable member for St. John's West to pay special attention to that, and I hope he will be in a position to go up and see the adult education centre here in St. John's working every night. I know the Honourable Minister of Education attends the special night, when diplomas and certificates are given out. I know he was there on that night last fall, and he was very much surprised to see what was going on there. If my good friend, the Deputy-Minister of Education, had a voice here I know he would bear me out in what I am going to say. I repeat; there is here one of the finest adult education centres to be found. The work being done there under the capable directorship of Mr. Wilfred Dicker is outstanding. Honourable members might be surprised to know that there are in attendance this year more than 750 students at that adult centre. Honourable members may be even more surprised to know the adult education centre of St. John's headed all the schools in the number of Grade XI students taking examinations. There are more students taking Grade XI examinations this year at the adult education centre than at any other school in St. John's or in Newfoundland which includes the colleges here in St. John's. Most of these, Mr. Chairman, are students who have come in here from the outports to finish their Grade XI, some of them people who had left school in Grade II and Grade III or in some cases with no formal education at all. They came in here and went up to the adult education centre and there continued year after year until they finally got up to Grade XI and Grade XI Commercial. I have a personal recollection of a young man who attended first in Grade II and today has his Grade XI diploma and his Grade XI Commercial diploma. I know of young ladies who attended that school while working here as maids and started in Grade IV or V and today are registered nurses. The adult education centre has turned out scores of teachers from St. John's and from the outports who came in here and worked at various jobs, and I don't know how many hundreds have passed their Grade XI at that centre.

The centre was begun here in 1945, when I had the honour of starting it with nineteen students. When I left it in 1949 there were at that time some six hundred or so attending, and it was grown every year, slowly but steadily. Not only are people there taking Grade XI and learning to read and write, but there are classes in other things as well. There was for example a class given in oral French, in Spanish, in discussion techniques, in speech and in various other phases of educational work. They not only teach geography and history but the social side of living as well. On the last night of the term there was a very successful barn dance held at the adult education centre. Now it might strike honourable members as strange that a barn dance should be considered as part of education, but it is. Many people in my experience came to the centre who did not know much about mixing with other students and who were a little shy and backward, but it was amazing how soon they blossomed out and became leaders.

I might say that the adult education centre in St. John's is filling a need, and one can hardly visit any government department or any school or for that matter any shop or business where one won't find some person who has either attended the adult education centre or who is presently attending. I would like here now to pay tribute to Dr. Florence O'Neill, Mr. Wilfred Dicker and to the other teachers of the adult education centre in St. John's who are doing such a very fine job.

There are too, I understand, six adult education centres of that nature being carried on at Buchans, Corner Brook and other centres around the country. Now I am not so familiar with the rural part of adult education, but I do know that we have reason to be proud of what is being done. I don't mean to say we should stop here. I know that the job will go ahead. There is a great deal to be done yet. Still I would like to tell honourable members that it would be wrong to say there is nothing done or very little being done.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the honourable member for his further reference to the work of the adult education centre. I was familiar with it but I did not have the honour of attending the closing last year. If the Honourable Minister would give invitations to these functions such as barn dances and closing nights, I think we would perhaps learn to appreciate more the work that is being done. Now we must remember that this adult education movement, such as it is, is not enough in itself. It must be for some purpose. What is the purpose? That is where the Antigonish movement has it over most of the other educational movements. As the Premier knows better than anybody else the work itself was designed principally for the training of workingmen to take the leadership in trade union organizations. In Antigonish the Adult Education Department of St. Francis Xavier University was formed for the purpose of training people for social action so that they would become leaders, not merely to get better jobs, not merely to qualify to become nurses or stenographers or anything of that kind, but to become leaders in their communities. They harnessed up the educational work to a practical object, and that is how they built up the great credit union movement and the co-operative organizations of the province, I might say now, of the three maritime provinces. It is the harnessing of educational work for some definite purpose such as the co-operative movement that is extremely important. It is good in itself to have students get their Grade XI and Grade XI Commercial, but I think we must go a step further, follow these people on, and help them to develop their thinking and take part in things that are going to improve not only themselves but the communities in which they are going to reside.

Now I have mentioned here before the great lack of co-operative credit unions, as they call them. These are people that could be led so easily to this credit society idea. We could not have enough of them. I would say this country needs ten times as many at least of these co-operative organizations to help people, and that must come through study, come in connection with the adult education movement. There should always be kept in mind that idea when training them, to think along co-operative lines and help them to be able to form these co-operative units.

Now there is another point here in connection with 4-H Clubs to which Mr. Premier referred. Now I was surprised recently when I first heard of the organization. I am certainly very glad to know that they are in existence here. I can see they have only just begun, and are not doing very much at the present time. I would like to hear from the Acting Minister of Education if he has any information to give us on this point; just exactly what they have been doing. I know the value of the work in the United States, and I presume in Canada, but we don't have any exhibitions on our agricultural products and cattle products where these young people, boys and girls, can come in and let us see the animals they have raised. Let us see the kind of work they do. That gives them confidence in their work and pride and sometimes lasting interest in the breeding of animals and raising of animals. And that type of organization should be promoted and fostered amongst the people in that way. I would like to hear if the Minister has any information to give us on that?

MR. COURAGE: I must thank the honourable member who has just spoken for rounding out what I had just said. I should have gone a little further. The idea behind the adult education movement here is exactly the idea that is behind the adult education movement everywhere. It is not enough to give a student Grade XI alone. The bread and butter idea is not enough. I might say that the aim of adult education is to promote thinking. It is a pleasure to teach in such centres, and the aim is to produce leaders, and as the honourable member said, to produce thinking men and women, and better Newfoundlanders, you may say.

MR. MURRAY: Now, Sir, in answer to the question asked by the honourable and learned member for St. John's West the 4-H Clubs, as I understand, the position is to provide training for young people. I am informed by the Deputy-Minister it is on the basis on which all future adult education must be laid. It has taken on, Sir, I am informed, fairly well in this Province and at the present time there are ten clubs in existence, with a total membership of 191 boys and girls. They held 38 meetings with a total attendance of 587 during the past year. The organization, I am informed, is part of the Dominion Organization, and the centres in this Province sent representatives to the Dominion Conference. The last one was held at Toronto and a representative went from this Province. There is a 4-H week. There was one such held last year, and it is proposed to hold another this year. You will note there is an item there dealing with the 4-H Clubs—$2,000, which is partly to cover the expenses of bringing the young people in to St. John's for a conference. Also it will be noted there is an increase in the salaries there to $7,200. Part of that increase is for a normal increase of scale, but there are provisions also made for an extra post of 4-H Organizer.

613 Carried.

Item 614 Grants:

Item 614-01—Salaries of Teachers—Carried.

MR. MURRAY: Now, Sir, I am informed that there is an error there. Instead of four millions it should read $3,450,000 and to that should be added the cost of living bonus. That is $3,450,000 made up of the basic salaries of teachers and added to this the cost of living bonus and consequently you get an amount of $4,237,000 for 1954-55. Recently, Sir, a decision was taken to add a million dollars to that amount. The million dollars was passed over to the Department of Education and the scale is set within that framework of these separate grants to which a million dollars is to be added, and a different scale set up.

MR. BROWNE: It has been done already?

MR. MURRAY: But it is not shown here. The estimate for this item therefore should be $5,237,000.

MR. HOLLETT: On that point, Sir, I think we would be remiss in our duty as an Opposition if we did not say a word, and I say a word of commendation to the Legislature for acceding to the request of the teachers for an increase in their salaries. I think that the teachers are basically at the top as well as at the bottom of our society. We must have good teachers and if we are to have good teachers we must endeavour to pay them something better than they have been paid in the past. After all with the knowledge which today is made available in every country it is most important we have teachers who are real teachers, and to do that I think, when there are so many other callings offering so much higher salaries, we have year by year to increase the amount which has to be paid to our teachers.

I would, on behalf of the Opposition, say to the Government that we are glad that they have seen fit to make that one million dollars increase. What is a million? To a Liberal it does not mean a thing. But in this case it means a lot to many teachers—I congratulate the Government.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable gentleman, with his flippant reference to a million dollars, reminds me of the cartoon of two United States Senators walking down the sidewalk in Washington, with the national capital in the background. The two walking along with their brief cases and wearing big black sombreros and one saying to the other; "a billion for
Mr. Courage in the Chair.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I think we might let that item stand and iron it out and come back to it. Suppose we let 614-01, 614-03 and 614-08 stand—Items stand.

614-04, 614-06 and 614-07 carried.

MR. BROWNE: But I wonder if the Honourable Acting-Minister could tell us what that industrial education is?

MR. HEFFERTON: Manual training.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Grants distributed on a denominational basis for city schools for manual training.

MR. BROWNE: How many schools?

MR. SMALLWOOD: All the colleges, Bishop Feild, St. Bon's, Prince of Wales and in the case of an over vote it goes to Mount Cashel.

614-08 carried.

614-09—No vote.

614-10—Transportation of School Children:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, that is a new vote. May I have an explanation as to how that is to be used?

MR. MURRAY: Yes—as the honourable and learned member has pointed out, this is entirely a new vote, and it is to come in with the setting up of regional high schools. With the regional high schools set up it is proposed to provide transportation for children in the areas. The department asked for $50,000, but as it is a new vote we thought that amount too high to start off with so early in the scheme, so we provided $10,000 to see how the scheme works out.

MR. BROWNE: How many regional high schools have been established?

MR. MURRAY: One definitely and there are two or three planned. There has been one already established at Manuels, and there are two or three others about to be set up.

MR. BROWNE: What is the method by which the transportation may be provided—is there a school bus to be operated, or what is the scheme?

MR. SMALLWOOD: If I may say something on that—the Cabinet considered this matter very carefully, very carefully indeed. We are quite convinced that there will be, there must be, a very strong drift in the direction of regional high schools. That must come, that is coming. Then there arises inevitably the question of getting the students to the schools, where a regional high school is to serve the children of a certain number of places, one school is to serve a number of settlements, getting the children to that school is a problem. Now, God forbid, that the Government, that the Treasury should have to bear the cost of bringing all Newfoundland children to school and back and forth to and from school. When this matter came up in Cabinet, frankly our first inclination was to say, no, we won't get into that field. But the more we thought of it the more we felt that ultimately we must get into it, up to a point. We can at least visualize a situation in which the drain on the Treasury, the cost, the burden on the Treasury will be less, if you have a regional high school serving a number of places, and that regional high school is served by a bus system, than there would be on the Treasury having different schools with students from Kindergarten going right up to Grade XI. Now that would be particularly true, of course, in cases where a regional high school is put up in a place where virtually all of the people are of one denomination, or where, for instance, they are all Protestants, and are willing to attend the one regional high school, or where the people are all Catholics and there is no question about their being willing to attend the one school. If the committee would consider it, I think, the members will see it is a very thorny, exceedingly thorny problem.
It is not one which you could flippantly decide, because we don't want to find ourselves responsible for carrying children back and forth from their homes to their schools. New­foundland can't afford that. But we are testing it out. This is in the nature of a test to see what happens. I don't say we are going to spend that ten thousand dollars.

MR. BROWNE: It is a lot of money.

MR. SMALLWOOD: But then possibly before the House meets again there may be a couple or three regional high schools, and it may be money-saving to have the transportation system. That may be preferable to building a lot of additional schools scattered about, here and there. It may be better to put up a good high school and have it served by a bus system.

MR. BROWNE: I understand there is only to be one built this year?

MR. MURRAY: One has already been built.

MR. SMALLWOOD: One has been definitely decided upon. The Church of England people out around Manuels and Upper Gullies have decided on one. In addition to that, I believe, there is definite talk of one at Corner Brook. I believe the bishop out there is talking of putting up a regional high school. Then again there is definite talk of one at Grand Falls.

MR. BROWNE: I don't see that the same problem arises at Corner Brook and Grand Falls. Well it might—I am going to ask, at Trepasseys, where my honourable friend is the member, there is a high school at present while four and a half miles away there is a small one-room school or it may have two rooms, but it is a very small school which teaches perhaps up to Grade VIII. Now I have had requests from people there to see if I could get some assistance. The department knows about this. There is no assistance for them there to get their children to the convent four and a half miles away. How do they come in under this?

MR. MURRAY: I understand that is another matter also under consideration, and transportation would be provided if shown it would be cheaper to transport them into the main con­ vend school rather than support a small school and teacher.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Obviously we have to proceed very cautiously.
We don't want to wake up some morning and find the Newfoundland Government responsible for the transportation of children between their homes and schools. The expenditure in the department is heavy enough, it is up now to seven or eight million dollars a year for education. We don't want another two or three million for transportation, as a matter of fact we can't do it.
614-13—Memorial University:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, would the Premier like to say if any progress has been made in the development of that extension idea of the University?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes. It is very much in hand on the part of the President and Vice-Chancellor of the University. I believe the Board of Regents is intensely interested in the matter, and they are all fully appreciative of the importance of the question and all are following it up very carefully, and I believe some progress is being made.

MR. BROWNE: Sundry Associations: What are the Sundry Associations? Are not these all under 614?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is the Canadian Educational group. As a matter of fact, I believe, the Deputy-Minister of Education of Newfoundland is President of the Canadian Educational Organization, a fact which constitutes, I think we all agree, a great compliment to Newfoundland, that Newfoundland should have an educator actively engaged in education, big enough and able enough to be considered by the Canadian Educational Association as being capable of being President of the whole national organization.

MR. BROWNE: I suppose 614-19 is for the Boy Scouts and Girl Guides?

MR. MURRAY: Yes and the Kiwanis Boys' Camp and the Catholic Boys' Club, the CLB, etc.

MR. BROWNE: What is the individual amount of each organization?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I have the total here. The CLB $1,500; Girl Guides $1,500; Boy Scouts $1,500; Catholic Boys' Club $2,500; Kiwanis Boys' Camp $2,500. There is a note here which says that the $2,500 to the Catholic Boys' Club is probably more than they will draw. They have never yet drawn the amount to which they are entitled.

MR. BROWNE: How much did they draw last year?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It does not say. But they have never drawn up to the maximum.

MR. BROWNE: Does that depend on larger membership?

MR. HEFFERTON: No, on what they raise themselves.

MR. SMALLWOOD: It must be a matching grant, I suppose.

MR. HOLLETT: Under 614-19—I remember some time ago one of the honourable members asked a question about the International Grenfell Association. This is not in connection with that. This is along educational lines. There is another grant, I believe, under Capital Account for them.

Item 614—carried.

615—Audio Visual Education:

MR. BROWNE: On that director, is that Mr. Kendall?

MR. MURRAY: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: There is no increase in staff here. There is one less Grade III?

MR. MURRAY: He has been upgraded to Grade IV.

MR. BROWNE: There is an item there where the stocks of film strips...
MR. SMALLWOOD: They don't need to spend so much this year, we have the stock.

MR. BROWNE: Is that the reason?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I think so.

MR. BROWNE: Are you sure? I am wondering if that is the reason. Are you getting the material from somewhere else in another vote. Another vote last year was $148,000.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The radio education vote is up because of the greater activity planned and more radio sets to be sold on a fifty-fifty per cent of cost basis.

MR. BROWNE: The expenditure in 1952-53 was $123,000 out of a vote of $148,000. Have the purchases been cut to $12,000 a year on this vote?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes.

MR. BROWNE: I think you must have a very big stock on hand.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We have.

MR. HOLLETT: Where do these films come from, the United States or Ottawa?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Both.

MR. HOLLETT: Is it the intention to have some film made here for that purpose?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, Atlantic Films are making them all the time.

MR. HOLLETT: Would that be the reason for the cut made there in this vote?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No. The reason why is, as I have said, we don't need to go on buying a large amount year by year.

MR. HOLLETT: You formerly did not buy from Atlantic Films?

MR. SMALLWOOD: For two entirely different purposes.

MR. HOLLETT: Both educational?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, but not both for schools.

MR. HOLLETT: One is to educate the general public.

MR. BROWNE: What is this vote for radio education?

MR. SMALLWOOD: For radio sets.

MR. BROWNE: Where are these placed?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The schools buy them and pay one half the cost. The Government pays the other half.

MR. BROWNE: Is that generally known?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, Mr. Kennedy has made that fact very well known. I might say in connection with that: Until recently the only school radio receiving sets that were manufactured anywhere in Canada were those manufactured in British Columbia, and every school radio in all parts of Canada and in this province came from British Columbia. Now Atlantic Films are manufacturing a very fine, much improved standard of radio receiver set, much improved over the British Columbia one. It has a bigger speaker and its quality is better. It has additional wave lengths and the cabinet is a better quality. It is a better radio all through. It has a two speed turntable for records.
It is a very much improved radio set. Now of course any radio set we buy for school purposes we buy from Atlantic Films because they are made here. In addition to that I think Atlantic Films sell their school radios in various other provinces. There are now two provinces making school radios, British Columbia and Newfoundland, and certainly Atlantic Films will sell these radios on this side of the Rockies or on this side of the Great Lakes.

MR. BROWNE: I am very interested in that because I felt years ago that that should be done. But, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would say to what extent these radio receiving sets have been purchased by the schools, the one which the Premier spoke of, how many of them have been bought?

MR. MURRAY: The Deputy-Minister informs me there are about three hundred and fifty radios in schools all over the island. How many have been bought under this scheme or bought otherwise I do not know.

MR. BROWNE: But do you know the cost of the local ones?

MR. MURRAY: Fifty dollars to the Board.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Which is a magnificent bargain. The Honourable Leader of the Opposition examined one, the first one put on display. It is superb, out of this world, worth seeing.

MR. BROWNE: Is it from material imported from Germany?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not Germany, I think it is Holland. Their birthplace is Holland and they manufacture in Holland and in England and other countries. They get quite a bit of their material from them and some from the United States, the best of this, that or the other thing depending on what countries manufacture them.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I had the privilege of seeing one of them myself. They are very serviceable and I think the proper receiver sets for schools. Sometimes they do get something interesting, and the reception on the one which I saw was perfect. I think they are very excellent, and I do hope the Atlantic Films will be able to sell a lot of them throughout Canada.

MR. BROWNE: This radio script preparation, etc. to whom is this to be paid?

MR. MURRAY: I see a note here that thirty scripts have been prepared at $30 each, $900.

MR. BROWNE: By whom?

MR. MURRAY: Including payments to actors—to different people.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Thirty scripts for $30 each and the actors $30 each.

MR. BROWNE: Was that for rebroadcast or what?

MR. SMALLWOOD: For broadcasts to schools here, to schools tuned in on these radio sets, who hear the broadcast.

MR. HEFFERTON: Sometimes courses are prepared by the teachers themselves. We may go to somebody and ask them to prepare a set of lessons, four, five and six upwards to ten and within a certain field.

MR. BROWNE: This is in connection with radio education, so that the thing works together? I see.
MR. MURRAY: The matter is fully covered in the report of the Minister; page 125 of the report.

616—Public Examinations—Carried.
618—Physical Fitness and Recreation:

MR. BROWNE: What is that?

MR. MURRAY: I am informed it is a new service. The post has been set up but it has not been filled yet.

MR. BROWNE: Have you anybody in mind?

MR. MURRAY: An agreement has to be signed with the Federal Government as to 50% of the cost.

619—Curriculum Services:

MR. BROWNE: Who is the director of Curriculum?

MR. MURRAY: Mr. Gough, a former Supervisor of Education.

MR. BROWNE: I take it this is a new post. What are the duties?

MR. MURRAY: I am told it is to look after all matters pertaining to curriculum, all the matters in connection with the courses of study for the various grades. The curriculum of each particular grade is under the supervision of this officer who is responsible to the superintendent.

MR. BROWNE: He got a big increase in salary this year.

MR. MURRAY: The normal reclassification.

MR. HEFFERTON: Going back a little further you will recall that the older members, the Council of Higher Education, did a certain amount of preparation work for the setting of the work to be carried out in the schools and the books to be studied during the course. They went out and we set up instead “the Council of Education.” Now during the last four or five years we had certain revisions due to the change in the books and methods of teaching and what not, and we have been also forced to do a certain amount in order to keep in touch with methods and tendencies on the Mainland. Now we found from our experience that the supervisors were not able to carry on that work. We found it was desirable and necessary that some man should be appointed who would coordinate all the various activities and more than that, keep in touch with things, watch developments and bring about the necessary revision where it was deemed desirable. For that purpose we have called on the help of the senior teachers in the Province and there are various sub-committees either appointed or in the process of being appointed who act as collaborators in trying to revise the curriculum where necessary and advisable.

MR. BROWNE: Has there been any great improvement since?

MR. HEFFERTON: He has only been appointed less than a year, consequently there has not been very much change. It is bound to have an improved effect on the course of studies in our various schools.

620—Temperance Education:

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Honourable Minister how the vote here is distributed, the number of temperance societies in the province etc.?

MR. MURRAY: The vote is passed over entirely to the Newfoundland Temperance Federation.

MR. HOLLETT: Who are they, and where is their headquarters?
MR. MURRAY: It would be difficult to say—I know certain members of the body.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They are on Water Street.

MR. BROWNE: Members of the House?

MR. SMALLWOOD: I know a little about it and perhaps I could answer that.

The Newfoundland Temperance Association is what its name says, a central, unofficial body for a number of other bodies that are affiliated and those other bodies are churches and church groups of one kind and another. They have opened an office on Water Street. They have brought in from Manitoba a gentleman who is a native born Scotchman, who has, I think, lived on the Mainland of Canada for a number of years, a man named Neaves. Mr. Neaves has special training in educational work directed to the discouragement of excessive drinking and educational work in favour of temperance in drinking. He is an exceedingly practical-minded man, not at all fanatical, but a man who advocates temperance. He does not advocate prohibition but advocates temperance. His educational efforts take the form of showing pictures, plays, acted out for the purpose of illustrating the point that excessive drinking can be pretty dangerous. In addition to motion pictures he has still pictures that are projected on the screen, and printed literature of one kind and another. But mainly, I believe, his work is the work of going into such schools as permit him to go, and to lecture to school children and also to go into churches, not while the church services are on, but church halls, basements, parish halls, to address actual bodies of such churches as will permit him to do so, always carrying on an educational effort in favour of temperance, especially by way of pointing out to young men and women who are not aware of the dangers of excessive drinking, the actual facts. I would like the Committee to understand clearly that this is not a prohibition movement, that it is not a movement that advocates prohibition of liquor, but rather one that advocates temperance in the use of liquor.

The Government had a standing offer for several years of up to twenty-five thousand dollars a year to any organization or movement that might form itself and wished to avail itself of any amount up to that maximum for the purpose of helping to defray the costs of temperance propaganda in the world today and certainly in this Province. It is this Province that we are responsible for in this House. There is a considerable amount of drinking, and I don't think it will be denied that all young men and all young women are entitled to know, entitled to be informed, that there are dangers in excessive drinking. There is a tremendous propaganda today that goes on endlessly. You can't go into a house but the first thing you are asked is what do you want to drink. We think we do right in voting from the Treasury this amount or even a larger amount which should be needed to assist in that temperance propaganda. Now I do honestly feel it is primarily the work of the churches. I have an uneasy feeling about this whole business, that we may not be doing wrong, but I wonder if we are doing right in trying to take the place of the churches in this propaganda for temperance. Such propaganda, it seems to me, ought to be carried out by the churches, not that it is my business to tell them what they ought to do, I don't presume to do so, but somehow I have always thought, always assumed, that temperance propaganda ought to emanate from religious bodies. If they don't and somebody says; give me the money and I will carry on a temperance propaganda programme, and if that person is reputable, sensible, then we will say all right, here is your ten thousand dollars a year and more, up to twenty-five thousand, if you need it—that is the explanation of that amount.

Now it may be argued, Mr. Chairman, that the Government are the ones that are selling it. That is true. We are vendors of it all, the beer and liquors in the first instance sold in Newfoundland, and I don't know of any other way of doing it. But the fact that we are the principal vendors of liquors and beer, the fact is that we make huge profits, tremendous rates of profit—there is nothing so profitable as the beer and liquor that this Government sells. We would make it even more profitable if we thought we would not thereby drive people to bootlegging and moonshine, if we thought that thereby we would not just drive people to lawlessness we would take even a bigger profit out of it. We are not at all ashamed of the fact that we make an enormous profit out of liquor, and we will continue to do so.

MR. HOLLETT: Mr. Chairman, I would like first to ask whom is the ten thousand dollars paid over to?

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Newfoundland Temperance Federation.

MR. HOLLETT: The chairman is this man Neaves?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No he is the employed director. I could get the names from W. R. Dawe of St. John's, who is the president, I believe, Reverend L. A. Curtis is secretary and there are other clergymen and prominent citizens, very reputable and prominent citizens.

MR. HOLLETT: I realize, Mr. Chairman, the difficulty of this liquor question. I do think it is right and proper of course that the Government should control the sale of it, and naturally that they should get revenue from the sale of it. Either that or abolish the sale altogether, and that was tried with terrible effects by our people and not only by our people but all over the world experience has proven that that is not the way. If the Government is to engage in the business which they have and which they always shall, I do deem it essential that the Government ought to be careful about the various regulations they make in reference to the sale of it. I am not now going to make any political speech about the fact that this one has a beer parlour and that one, I am not going to talk about the hypocrisy of the thing, but I want to tell you a story which only happened two or three years ago. A poor frantic mother called me on the telephone and wanted to know was it legal for the Newfoundland Hotel to sell alcoholic drinks on the Sabbath Day. I did not ask her her name, because I did not want to get involved too much, but I told her I believed it was. I said I believed it was more than that, I believed it was legal to sell alcoholic liquors in the various clubs. She told me she believed it too, because she had a son and on Sunday he was home to lunch and after lunch he went to the Newfoundland Hotel and got loaded up. Invariably he goes to the Newfoundland Hotel or to one or other of these clubs and, well he becomes intemperate.

The point, therefore, that I want to raise is this: Does the Government think it is justified in allowing the sale of alcoholic beverages on the Sabbath Day? I think most of us were brought up in an atmosphere where to drink alcoholic liquors meant you were, well, heading right straight for hell, but to drink it on the Sabbath Day was something which would put you away down in the basement of that establishment. Here we have today in Newfoundland a set-up whereby the Government allows these places, the hotels and the various clubs around the city and out of it, I suppose, to open their doors, I think it is, around 12:00 o'clock on Sunday, as soon as people come out of church, where they have those places open for the convenience of these people who want to go and get a drink. I tell you of that telephone conversation simply to show the danger existing in allowing these places to be open on Sunday. On weekdays we are all working, as that boy is working, and he does not go to church on weekdays and he does not get a chance to go to the Newfoundland Hotel at 12:00 o'clock and he has to work and has to turn up again in the afternoon to his job. But Sunday seems to be a day of license for everybody everywhere particularly here in St. John's, where a man can jump in his car and go to a club and drink to his heart's content, and then come out and get aboard his car and drive madly through the streets. I don't know whether any of you have been watching carefully the accident day, as I may call it, the motor car accident day. I think if you have you will note that the most of these occur on the week-ends and particularly on the Sabbath, and usually in broad daylight on the Sabbath, in the afternoon. Even now I wonder if the Government considers it has any responsibility in that regard. I know it has to sell alcoholic liquors, but I do know they have to control also the sale of them, and I think something ought to be done about the opening of these taverns on Sunday, at 12:00 o'clock at any rate.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Will the honourable gentleman explain a little more about what he meant by that qualification?

MR. HOLLETT: What I mean by 12:00 o'clock? Well, I think 12:00 o'clock is or any time on the Sabbath Day—

MR. SMALLWOOD: I would like the honourable gentleman to explain the qualification he had on Sunday, particularly at 12:00 o'clock.

MR. HOLLETT: Immediately after people come out of church a lot of them, good men and good women in a good many cases who go to church regularly, feel they want to go to the hotel or some club or other and have a drink or two and in some cases at least, as I know, when they take one or two they are going to take a load. Now I know you can't close all the beer parlours and all the taverns and hotels just because there are a few alcoholics. On the other hand I do think we could do without the amount of revenue gained by the Government by reason of the fact that these places are open on the Sabbath Day. There was a period when we had the open saloon, but I don't think they were allowed to be open on Sunday then.

MR. BROWNE: No.

MR. HOLLETT: I don't think
MR. POWER: Would the honourable gentleman allow me? I would like to say that this business of drinking on Sunday and having the taverns open on Sunday is something this Government inherited. We did not create this system. All through the Commission of Government's time the taverns were open on Sunday from 1:00 o'clock to 3:00 o'clock and from 5:00 o'clock to 8:00 o'clock, and we just continued that system which we inherited.

MR. HOLLETT: I did not accuse the Government of doing that. Sometimes we inherit things we are not very proud of and ought to do something about.

MR. POWER: You were implying it was something we introduced.

MR. HOLLETT: Did I? If I did I regret that. I am not implying that anybody has done it. I know somebody must have done it. I do state now you are allowing it to exist, and you have the power to bring in an amendment, you have the power to make a regulation which would prohibit the sale of alcoholic liquors on Sunday. I think it is something you ought to consider, and the Government ought to consider, and I think you will find the majority of the people, even those who drink, will probably agree you are doing the right thing.

Mind, Mr. Chairman, I don't want to make any political credo out of this. I just want to say that in my opinion (and I know as much about alcoholic liquor, I suspect, as any man in this House) moderate or temperate or alcoholic or what not, the time has come when in this country one thing we ought to see to is that if a man wants a drink on Sunday he should buy it on Saturday and have it in his house like everything else, and these places should not be open on the Sabbath Day. That is my opinion.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Mr. Chairman, in supporting what the Honourable Leader of the Opposition has said I have here a letter addressed to me from the Women's Christian Temperance Union. It is under the date of May 25th. I have had it on my desk here in front of me for several days, thinking about it and mulling it over in my mind, and wondering what was the best thing to do. It is not always easy to know the best thing to do. But this letter says:

"We the officers and women of the Women's Christian Temperance Union humbly beg a portion of your time and interest in a problem in our midst which seems to be a very serious one in our estimation.

"Whereas it has come to our notice on several occasions that certain taverns and clubs are open in our City and suburbs for the sale of alcoholic beverages on the Lord's Day..." (By the way, I think there are no taverns open—there are clubs but no taverns. I think the Women's Temperance Union is mistaken here when they say they understand that taverns are open—at least that is highly unlawful).

MR. POWER: Taverns are not open on Sunday.

MR. SMALLWOOD: "Whereas we consider this to be a disgrace to our Christian principles and standards as well as breaking the Fourth Commandment 'Remember the Sabbath Day and keep it holy,' and whereas it has recently come to the hearing of one of our members from a telephone conversation from a heart-broken wife whose husband visits these places not only on days of the week but on Sundays also finds a way to obtain the alcoholic beverage and is fast destroying the peace of their home (to quote this woman) ‘Is it not possible the union can do something for such cases as mine?’ and whereas we feel as a temperance organization that it behooves us to appeal to the powers that be to do something about this terrible situation, and whereas we understand Quebec and Newfoundland are the only two provinces where this law is allowed, we contend we are too small and yet too Christian a province to have such a law existing. Be it resolved therefore that we, the Christian Women’s Temperance Union in this Province go on record as hereby asking you and your Government that you preserve our heritage in this respect, and at least try to keep God’s Commandments and keep such places closed on His Day and so try to raise the morals of our older citizens and preserve our youths from temptation.

“Hoping this will receive prompt attention we are, Sir, very expectantly yours, The Women’s Christian Temperance Union, per Mrs. H. K. Windsor, Secretary.”

This, of course, bears out the point made by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, because this letter deals with an objection to the opening of clubs on Sunday. Now I don’t know frankly—I don’t drink myself, and it is difficult for a man who does not drink to be able to appreciate the feelings of a man who does. I don’t want to be fanatic about it and condemn everybody who takes a drink. I suppose if a man is used to taking a drink, I suppose he wants to take one on Sunday as well as on Saturday. If a man has a habit of taking a drink or two or three every day I suppose he wants to take it on Sunday as well as on any other day, I don’t know. But I imagine that is the case. I wonder what would happen if all means of getting a drink on Sundays stopped? Would there be the same number of alcoholics? I wonder—

MR. HOLLETT: Yes.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The honourable gentleman thinks there would. Would there be the same number of broken homes?

MR. HOLLETT: I would not be surprised.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Alcoholics would get it anyway whether they were open or not.

MR. BROWNE: A lot of other people who are not exactly alcoholics would not get it and would not have the trouble in their homes.

MR. HOLLETT: That is true.

MR. SMALLWOOD: On the other hand would such a man not get it on Saturday and bring it home or get it in his office or in some friend’s home. It is obviously difficult. The suggestion seems to be clubs which are now opened from 1:00 o’clock to 3:00 p.m. and from 5:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. should be opened instead, if at all, from 2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. on Sunday and from 8:00 p.m. to 11:00 p.m.

MR. HOLLETT: Who suggested that?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is suggested to me. Now if they were not open until 2:00 p.m. which would be after lunch, it certainly would not interfere with anyone going to church. It would be after lunch, from 2:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m., and then close until 8:00 p.m. and close again at 11:00 p.m. Frankly I don't know. I confess it frankly. I used to be secretary of the Vigilance Committee in St. John's many years ago.

MR. HOLLETT: What was their responsibility?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It was a committee of clergymen and others who formed up a huge public meeting for the purpose of trying to see a prohibition law was enforced. God help me! I was the secretary of the committee trying to enforce prohibition in St. John's.

MR. HOLLETT: How far the mighty have fallen.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We were attempting a quite impossible task, I see that now, I did not then. I had the fire and enthusiasm of a young man and was the secretary of this organization. I wonder, suppose you allow every grocer who wants to do so to sell beer?

MR. HOLLETT: They won't be open on Sunday.

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, but suppose you did on six days a week—if every grocery store everywhere stocked beer to sell it as they do flour or sugar, as they do, for instance, in Quebec where it is as easy to get and as commonplace as water. There is less drunkenness in Quebec than there is in Newfoundland, far less, and there is much less drunkenness in New York where there is not a block you can walk hardly in Manhattan where you won't see a shop simply stocked to the ceiling with every kind of drink ever seen or heard of but you never see a person drunk. The only place you see a man drunk is here in St. John's—you don't even see them around the outports. I don't know why. What is the answer? Mr. Chairman, I frankly don't know the answer. I confess I don't know.

HON. DR. F. W. ROWE (Minister of Mines and Resources): A question has just come into my mind—I understand the British Columbia Government has instituted a Royal Commission or some sort of commission to go into the whole liquor question, last year, and I am just wondering whether that commission finished its report and if so where is the report. I don’t know the answer to this, but I do remember reading some account of it from time to time, but they seemed to be getting nowhere the last time I heard.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The Royal Commission in British Columbia completed their work and now a new one is working in Manitoba. It is an eternal problem. I have heard more common sense from the Honourable Leader of the Opposition this afternoon on this question than I have heard from anyone in the House on this question, and at the same time more common sense from the Honourable Leader of the Opposition than I ever heard from him on anything in what he gave use here this afternoon, and it was a pleasure to hear him.

MR. FOGWILL: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one or two words. I agree of course that the problems of drinking and drunkenness are big problems and very difficult to solve. The Government, of course, has the control of the sale of alcoholic liquors and beer, and they sell, I think, up to and around a million bottles of spirits a year, a million bottles of beer, but because of the fact they do control, have the sole control of selling, you don't blame them for that. Now it was suggested by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I believe, in 1949-50, that there be a no-treating clause, but that was turned down by the Government at that time. But I do think the no-treating clause if it was in the Act would help to stop excessive drinking at times.

I also support the Honourable Leader of the Opposition in respect to the Sunday-closing. I agree with the Premier about the saloons in New York. I was there on a couple of occasions and the saloons there are open practically all night and all day Sunday. But I suggest that perhaps he did not visit a part of New York where he might meet some people under the influence, down on the Bowery.

MR. SMALLWOOD: You can get it there day or night all the year around.

MR. FOGWILL: I don't say it is a pleasure to visit that section, but I did, and I saw quite a number of people. But I did visit another place, Kansas, Miss., where they have a no Sunday open clause. But they do open from 12:00 to 2:00 a.m. Monday morning and anybody who really wants a drink can get it at 1:00 o'clock on Sunday night.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Does the honourable member know where the prohibition movement began?

MR. FOGWILL: Kansas, Missouri. In Kansas, Kansas they were open on Sunday but in Kansas, Missouri they were closed on Sunday. They are two different cities entirely.

I think the Government could possibly do something in respect to excessive drinking, and I do compliment them on the fact they have voted ten thousand dollars to a temperance union. Perhaps they can put it to good use, but we have not seen any particulars on this union. I will say this; I am not a prohibitionist. I do not believe in entire prohibition, but in temperance drinking. Perhaps much of the fault of the excessive drinking of today was caused by the fact we had prohibition. I believe it was in the first days of the first world war when people interested in temperance at that time laid down and thought the battle was won. If they had continued what they were doing prior to that perhaps the situation today would be much different than we find it.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask if there is any report from any organization or any account of how they are getting on or spending their money?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Yes, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Neaves came up to my office the other night and I am pretty sure he submitted their annual report. The position is that when he came first they had half their capital account spent, they had to set up offices, buy typewriters, desks, chairs, filing cabinets, then after that they would be ready to function. Mr. Neaves impressed me very much as a very practical-minded fellow, not going to be rushed off his feet. He is not a prohibitionist. He is not advocating prohibition and he is not going to be rushed or pushed. He is a Scot and pretty stubborn and has his feet pretty flat on the ground. He hopes to get all the churches, all of them without exception, to back him in their temperance, purely temperance work. He knows, and none better, it is impossible to get all the churches in any movement connected with liquor except just a temperance movement. He would not get all the churches to support prohibition for instance.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, there is one organization in the city which was established a long time ago, I refer to the Total Abstinence Benefit Society, where Father Pat Kennedy has been advocating total abstinence as a solution. For many years when I was a small boy I was a member of the juvenile branch of that society, and many boys when they get to be about twelve or thirteen join and take a pledge to keep total abstinence until they are twenty-one. Today I think the effects of drink are to be found amongst teenagers because the regulations are not strict enough or are not strictly enough enforced, and there are not enough inspectors of the premises. There have been times that I have been impressed by the very great crowd of young people there, and by the hilarity going on which certainly does not speak for people who are temperate in their drinking, and sometimes you see people weaving back and forth in the room, which indicates they have taken too much, and should not be served with any further alcohol. I don’t believe that the regulations, if there are any regulations about serving lunches or serving beer to people who are under the influence of liquor, are carried out at all. I think the department is falling down in that respect. The Government has created a great many outlets, one recently, and the people of that neighbourhood have asked that they might be allowed to decide whether it might stay there or not, and can’t get any answer whether the Government is going to do anything about it. If the Government is serious about temperance, at least where the people of such an area are concerned, where that club is established, their wishes should be considered, and if they are opposed, and the Government is interested in temperance at least they will encourage that much temperance in that particular area where that outlet is.

MR. POWER: I should like to say in answer to the honourable gentleman; the only inspection ever having been carried on in Newfoundland on liquor premises was introduced by the Board of Liquor Control and that system is still continued in every liquor establishment. Every liquor establishment in St. John’s is visited both day time and night time by our inspectors, every one.

MR. BROWNE: Every day?

MR. POWER: That is right.

MR. BROWNE: How many inspectors?

MR. POWER: Three, I think, anyway, when I took over the Department of Liquor Control I will say this, if the honourable gentleman finds something wrong with the way the premises are being controlled he must have been horrified at what I found in 1949. They were the worst dives in North America without exception, a hang-out for bums, alcoholics and every kind of disreputable people. Then very good regulations were laid down, I think these were taken from the most of the liquor regulations acts of Canada, and I fail to see that it is not a hundred per cent better than it used to be.

When I went into the Board of Liquor Control I could not find in the files of that department any complaints worthwhile from anybody around St. John's about the conditions of these premises, still everyone must have known they existed and that they were terrible places. Well, we cleaned up these—and we did not introduce Sunday openings—I fail to see where the liquor situation has not improved at least a hundred per cent. I, for one, do not believe that drinking is such a problem in Newfoundland. I will say this, if you meet a man weaving down the street he gets more publicity than the ten thousand quite, sober people. I believe that as far as the Provinces of Canada go that next to Quebec, Newfoundland is best off in that respect. In the outports of Newfoundland drinking is not such a big problem. Here in St. John's, I say, a few isolated cases may be picked out and a lot made of them. But state control of liquor has proven to be successful all over Canada, and I think that it has been successful here in Newfoundland, at least I think it is a lot better than it was when we took over.

DR. ROWE: Mr. Chairman, without wishing to prolong this debate indefinitely I would like to say that from time to time I hear about all the drinking that goes on amongst teenagers of St. John's. I believe the honourable member for St. John's West referred to teenagers drinking in St. John's. I feel sure there must be some drinking amongst teenagers here in St. John's but on the other hand, I believe I can boast that I know as many teenagers personally as anybody in this House. I have never to my knowledge ever met or spoken to a teenager under the influence of liquor or to one who smelled of having had a drink. Now let us take into practical consideration what is meant by teenagers, who are, I presume, somewhere in the bracket between sixteen and nineteen to twenty years of age. The average age for Grade XI boys in St. John's is probably between sixteen and seventeen years of age, I think it is 16.8 or something like that. So that how many of the Grade XI's who go to the city schools would be found who had ever been in a beer parlour? I would be willing to bet that of the hundreds of teenagers I know personally not one, and certainly not five have ever been in a beer parlour. I believe that what the Honourable Minister of Finance has just said applies to teenagers too. Some young chap goes off and gets a few drinks somewhere and puts on an exhibition. In this world there are people who must be exhibiting themselves one way or another before the public. But immediately someone writes this up, and then everyone starts to wring their hands and ask what is the world coming to. I don't believe there is any more drinking among our teenagers today than there was fifty years ago, and I don't know what it was then. But as a matter of fact I do recall now that one of the reasons why Bishop Field insisted on separating the boys and girls in St. John's who went to the same school one hundred and twenty years ago, in 1824 I believe it was, was the fact that many of the boys used to come to school smelling of rum. Now I don't want to be misunderstood in this matter. We are in perfect agreement at this moment, I think, and I hope we will be when I am finished.

MR. HOLLETT: But the point that I raised is the Sunday opening of clubs and hotels for the selling of alcoholic liquor. You close your taverns and don't let poor John Brown or Bill Smith who worked around all week go into a tavern and get a drink on Sunday but you let the man who has a car drive from the church door to the hotel or Bella Vista—I am going to ask the Honourable the Premier to do something now—some Sunday this summer, and he might take the Minister along with him, the Minister of Finance, and come in from Roache’s Line and go to church—that would not hurt them either. Then after church go and visit every one of these clubs in St. John’s and every hotel between half past twelve and two o’clock. Then they can make up their minds whether it would be wise to close these places on the Sabbath. That is the only point I raised. I am not talking temperance. I am not talking prohibition. I don’t believe in prohibition, and temperance is something over which this Government has no control whatsoever, but they can control the opening of liquor clubs on the Sabbath Day. They have that in their hands. You have ten thousand dollars here voted for the cause of temperance, and I am not so much interested in that, but I do think Sunday should not be a day when we can all go to a hotel and purchase drinks whether we are teenagers or bald-headed people or what not. As for the alcoholics they will get liquor anyway, and the alcoholic is not going to a club or the hotel nine times out of ten. I am saying this having some experience of alcoholics. They are usually fairly intelligent people until they get a drink, then they are no longer intelligent except in one thing and that is as to the wherewithal to get the liquor and how. They know how to do that, and they won’t go to these places to get it because they know they are not wanted there. They have sense enough for that. But I was talking about the young fellow whose mother phoned me, and I know lots of other young fellows and lots of old fellows too. And I think, if that woman, whoever she might be, had gone to the B. of L. department and purchased a little bottle of whiskey or something and have it in her home and let the boy get a drink that might be the best thing. But I don’t know. I am no judge of that. I was brought up in an atmosphere of absolute temperance and prohibition in the family and taught that if I took a drink I would go to hell. That is not right. I know that now but I did not know it then. I could tell a lot of stories about drinking but I am not going to do that now. All I want is that the Government should consider whether or not they might find it possible to make a regulation to that end for a trial at any rate. I could point out the dangers of motor car accidents and things like that. If you look at the statistics you will find that most of these accidents happen over the weekend.

MR. POWER: There is more traffic then.

MR. HOLLETT: Probably there is, but you will find there are more accidents, and you will find there are more people arrested for drunken driving over the weekends than at any other time. If you will look up the police records you will find that is so.

I don’t think you will lose any revenue by doing that because the man who goes in there on Sunday would buy it on Saturday and bring it to his home. I ask the Honourable the Premier to consider that.

MR. SMALLWOOD: I will certainly do that, and I will also consider the idea of changing the hours.
I will give the whole matter very careful thought. To be quite honest
I am worried about it—I am worried about it—I don't want any home to be broken up by me nor any woman's heart to be broken by any bungling around here.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Speaker, I should just like to say one thing in connection with the Newfoundland Hotel. I understand from the Act that the lounge in the Hotel is not allowed to be open. The only sale of liquor in the Hotel on Sunday is to guests in their rooms or at meals at specified hours. The Hotel Lounge is definitely closed on Sunday.

MR. HOLLETT: They get it there nevertheless.

MR. SMALLWOOD: They must get it from some guest.

MR. HOLLETT: I know that.

Mr. 620 carried.

MR. MURRAY: I wonder, Mr.
Chairman, if we might reverts back to 614-01. I am informed now by the Deputy Minister that this $6,050,000 includes the million recently voted.

Item 614-01 carried.

MR. MURRAY: If we could turn now, Mr. Chairman, to page 75 to deal with capital expenditure.

MR. CHAIRMAN: The rest of that item was not carried on 614?

MR. MURRAY: They are all right as they stand.

MR. SMALLWOOD: We are not now on capital but current expenditure.

MR. CHAIRMAN: This completes the Department of Education.

Department of Attorney General:
MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should just run through the whole grant and not jump up and down every few minutes. If honourable members would agree I might consider pages 36 through 38 first and deal with all the salaries as a bracket rather than keep turning back and forth to salaries all the time.

Item 701-01—That is the normal
Minister's salary and the travelling expenses and office expenses which are the same as last year except that there is $20 additional for office, which is purely nominal.

Under 702—Salaries are up a bit.
That will be explained when we come to salaries.

Travelling is up. We have asked for the extra $1,100 because we hope to send two representatives to the Uniformity of Legislation Conference in Quebec and there is to be a conference in Ottawa later in the year on the Companies' Law, and we are making provision so that it may be possible for officials of my department to attend these meetings.

The office expenses are the same.
Law books are down by $500, but if honourable members will refer to the very last item under 716 they will find provisions there for law books for the new district courts, and for that reason we are allowing the grant for law books here to drop from $2,000 to $1,500.

703—Supreme Court—salaries will be dealt with later. Office expenses are the same as last year practically.
There is not quite as much put in this year for the Circuit Court, but we may be able to get through with that. We are trying to manage to have two sessions, one in the spring and one in the fall. Of course the costs of the circuit courts vary from year to year and it is impossible to tell in advance just how long a court will have to remain, but if we can't get along with $3,500 we will have countervailing savings, I hope, from somewhere. The contribution to the Law Librarian's pension—I think honourable members will remember that was Mr. Summers pensioned some years ago.

704—St. John's Magistrate's Court: (Salaries to be dealt with later) Office expenses are the same as last year. Travelling is up a bit because we have four vacancies in the magistracy which we hope to be filled and that means there will be travelling expenses. There is a token vote for a convention. I think we will have to have a convention of magistrates some time after the new criminal code is adopted in Ottawa. Houses and Rent Allowances, the House will allow an item whereby magistrates who have no homes provided and have to pay rent—we allow them any rent they have to pay in excess of $30 a month. All magistrates pay $30 a month for Government houses they occupy. If a magistrate has no Government house and has to pay rent we pay it only in excess of $30 a month. Operation of Vessels. That is "visitations" and the expenses are the same as last year except for the normal increase to the crew members.

706—Deeds and Companies: the same as last year.

707—Constabulary. The increase in salaries will be dealt with when we get to them. For travelling expenses we are asking for the same as last year, and we are trying to cut down on office expenses from $4,000 to $3,000. Equipment and supplies the same as last year. We are asking for an increase of $500 for motor vehicles, supplies and gasoline. I think that will be normal. On the other hand we are not asking for quite as much in the case of motor vehicles. We got two new patrol cars last year, and we may have to replace some of these prow cars. I think it is cheaper to turn them in every year and buy new ones rather than carry the old ones over. That is really commonplace.

708 is the same as last year (Royal Canadian Mounted Police).

709—Fire Department: The salaries will be explained later. The other items are practically the same. Under vehicles, etc. Maintenance and Gasoline we are asking for an increase of ten thousand dollars there for maintenance of equipm ent. We have a lot of very valuable equipment and it means we would have to make very substantial repairs should those repairs be found to be necessary. The increase in the vote for uniforms, Mr. Chairman, is due to the fact that we have increased our staff so as to make it possible to give them the eight hour day. The vote has been increased from $9,000 to $10,000. For the purchase of apparatus etc. we are trying to get along this year with $14,500. I think we could very well use some additional money, but at the moment we are content with that. The other items are the same. There is a small increase in the maintenance of horses and harness due to additional expenses.

710—H. M. Penitentiary and Goals: I am very happy about the penitentiary and the prison camps which are an outstanding success, and Superintendent Case and all his staff are doing a wonderful job. We are not so proud of the women's wing of the penitentiary and we have been negotiating for a new place on the Bay Bulls Road which we have been able to get from the Federal Government. We have made provisions in our vote for salaries for some extra staff for that institution.
The item for provisions is down, you will note, Mr. Chairman, largely due to the fact of the increased production taking place on prison farms. They are supplying meat, vegetables, milk and eggs and we can save five thousand dollars on that item.

Furnishing and equipment—that is a necessary increase due to the higher cost of items.

The other items are pretty well the same. Farm Industry is $12,000 instead of $10,000—that is because we are increasing the number of cattle.

I think, Mr. Chairman, we might rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

MR. CHAIRMAN: I might inform the Committee I was out of order myself the other evening. I find in the Standing Regulations that I should not recess the Committee, but the Chairman should report progress to the House.

On motion the committee rose and reported having passed these items and asked leave to sit again.

Report received—Items 100 to 600 Legislature, Executive Council, Department of Finance, Department of Provincial Affairs, Department of Education.

Committee ordered sit again at a later hour this day.

MR. SPEAKER: It being now 6:00 of the clock I will leave the Chair until 8:00 of the clock.

NIGHT SESSION
June 3, 1954.

The House resumed at 8:00 of the clock.

The speaker (Mr. Courage) in the Chair.

MR. SPEAKER: Committee of Supply—leave has already been given for this Committee, I do now leave the Chair.

MR. CURTIS: Mr. Chairman, just before we recessed I was on Item 710, and I was saying how very pleased I am with the conduct of the penitentiary and the prison camps. I was also saying we were not very happy about the women's portion of the penitentiary. That is a section of the penitentiary which is not very often fully occupied, for which we are thankful.

But there have been times during the past year when I have felt something should be done or had to be done, and we have arranged, as I said, to get from the Federal Government a building on Bay Bulls Road.

Item 710-02-04 is a pickup for transportation to the prison camp. Then under 710-03 there is a decrease of $5,000 in supplies or provisions, due to production at the prison camp. Under 07 there is an Item of $12,000, an increase of $2,000. We are increasing and improving our cattle every year. The other items, Mr. Chairman, are all the same.

711—Miscellaneous: Prosecutions are the same as last year and investigations are the same. We have not asked for as much for civil actions this year. I am sorry for that now for since these estimates were prepared and printed we have had summary proceedings which may cause us substantially more than $1,500. The next two items are the same as last year. But conveyance of witnesses is another item that is going to have a very heavy expense this year because of the Labrador manslaughter case which will necessitate a lot of witnesses being brought down from Labrador. Registration of Jurors is the same except for a little increase in the vote last year.

Under 712 we are asking nothing for the Consolidation of Statutes, although I am aware we have no index.
as yet, and we are trying to make arrangements for a form of index which will be of some help in locating the Acts, but there will not be a full fledged index such as in the past. I may say we found to have the index would be very expensive, $6,000, but then of course we would have a professional job. But I may say the amount startled me and I have not yet summoned enough courage to ask the Cabinet for that much money, which is a very large amount for that.

713—Transportation: That is our annual fee to the Maritime Board of Trade. Board of Transport $15,000. About half that is a retaining fee we pay a traffic consultant, Mr. Gerald Murphy of Montreal. He gets roughly half. Then of course, we have expenses of one kind and another. We find that transportation is fast becoming a very important thing, and we are sparing no expense to try to get the traffic rates between here and the Mainland such that our industries can compete.

715—Fire Commissioner: That is new.

716—District Courts: This is a new item not there last year. We may need four district courts. The judges, Mr. Chairman, are paid by the Federal Government. We have the amount of $14,600 for staff and $1,200 put in for travelling expenses. There is an allowance of $2,000 for law books.

I think, Mr. Chairman, I have made all that clear. We could now glance quickly through the salary items. I wish to say at the start that I want to make a sort of apology: Between the times these items left our office and reached the printers some change was made in the titles of these people, and therefore I would be glad if honourable members would check their volumes and I will explain what is actually meant by some of the silly titles here. Actually all civil servants are graded, all deputy ministers have a standard, and assistant deputies a certain standard, then administrative assistants have a certain standard, the directors and after that they are officers. All officials in my department were classified under one or other of these headings, but unfortunately in a number of places they put down the classification and did not put the rank. Under the Minister's Office you will see the Attorney General $7,000. I hope you will vote my salary, and shorthand-typist Grade V $8,000. All the secretaries are put on the same bracket. Director Grade VIII should read Director of Public Prosecutions—Mr. Carter. Then next, Assistant Deputy Attorney General. That is now Mr. Cyril Greene. Then we have three directors. Actually the official terms for these gentlemen is Legal Assistants.

Now I would like to pay here, Mr. Chairman, a tribute to the officials of my department, Mr. Carter, Mr. Greene, Mr. McCarthy, Mr. Mahoney and Mr. Soper. These men are doing a very excellent job. When we were talking about the Election Act the other day I should have mentioned that Mr. Greene and Mr. McCarthy have put in many, many hours on that, and have done a really painstaking job. There are two officers Grade V, one is Miss Bartlett, Office Manager, and the other Mr. Gerald Whitty, Accountant. The officer Grade IV is Miss Croak and the officer Grade III Mr. Edward Murphy, assistant to the accountant.

Supreme Court: The officer Grade VI is the Chief Clerk and Registrar. He was originally getting $5,210 and we gave him $7,000 by including the cost of living and gave him the classification which we felt was in keeping with that office. Officer Grade V, that is the Chief Clerk and Registrar’s Assistant, Mr. Kent, who is deputy-registrar. The two officers Grade IV are Mr. Stirling and Miss Page. The officer Grade III has just been appointed, and then the shorthand-typist Grade IV who are really the court reporters, Miss Thomas and Miss Corbett, and the shorthand-typist Grade I is just temporary. The officer Grade V is the Sheriff. To outport Deputy Sheriffs we give a sort of standing fee. The officer Grade III is the Bailiff and Deputy Sheriff, Noseworthy, and the messengers, Grade II. As you know, the Law Librarian is Mrs. Pinsent, and there is a messenger there too.

Then we move on to the St. John’s Magistrate’s Court: This describes Magistrate O’Neill as a director, Grade V. Actually that should be stipendiary Magistrate and Clerk of the Peace, Grade IV; Richards, shorthand-typist Grade I, etc.

705—Magistrates: District Magistrates are in there as directors Grade I. Someone had a sense of humour, Mr. Chairman. These are stipendiary magistrates. We have at the moment provisions for 19 but we actually have at the moment 14 in the outports and one in St. John’s, fifteen altogether. We have provided for four additional appointments. We will need one in St. George’s, one in Springdale, one in St. Anthony and one in Holyrood. I think we shall have to divide that Conception Bay area as it is too large for one man. So that there are four appointments which have to be made. We have the applications at my office, and are about ready to make the appointments, but I think we may have to do some switching around. The magistrates that are there in the various places have been there quite some time, and it is usual to promote and move them around. I think we will have to do that. The shorthand-typist at Grand Falls, I understand, is about to retire. The other shorthand-typists are one at Bell Island, one at Corner Brook, one at Placentia and one at Harbour Grace.

Deeds and Companies: The Registrar is described as a Director Grade I, which is a good one. He is getting his cost of living bonus and general increase of about ten per cent and perhaps a little more.

Constabulary: The Chief of Police is put in here in brackets, which should have been done all through. The police force, Mr. Chairman, at the moment is in very good condition, and we are trying to keep everybody there happy. They are all on an eight-hour day and have leave periods, and I am glad to hear that everybody is happy. Now I think all these are self-explanatory. We have incorporated the rent and marriage allowances in the basic salary and there is no longer any allowances. Manual Grade III is a carpenter and the police surgeon—as you know, we pay Dr. Anderson $1,500. Special service vote $200. That is a little vote the CID can use sometimes to good advantage, and the detectives also have an amount of $1,600 allowing us to pay the CID $3 a week for special hours they have to work.

Fire Department: The Superintendent there is listed as a Director Grade I. I don’t think there is anything there that needs an explanation.

H.M. Penitentiary and Gaols: We have the Superintendent of the Penitentiary, Mr. Case and the Chief Warden, Kelland. We have increased the number of sergeant wardens by one, and decreased the number of wardens by one, which brings the total the same. But you will notice when we come to Assistant Matrons we have allowed for the appointment of four, in case we have to staff the women's penitentiary. Everything else, I think, is perfectly clear.

Fire Commissioner: Mr. Frank Ryan gets $5,000 and an allowance of $1,500 for a typist. The District Court is allowed two shorthand-typists and two officers Grade IV. We have allowed a vote of $5,400 for an additional staff.

Mr. Chairman, I have just gone through this briefly so as to give honourable members a brief picture of the operations of my department, and I move section 700.

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I must thank the Attorney General for the explanation which he has given of the votes for his department. There are some of them, however, on which I have to make some observations now, following the method that he followed.

MR. CHAIRMAN: If the honourable member will allow me—I wonder if it would not be better to pass and discuss each one as called. That might be more in order.

Item 701—Carried.

Item 702:

MR. BROWNE: Now, Mr. Chairman, these are votes for the staff in the general office. I notice there is the Deputy Attorney General, his assistant and three legal assistants, that is six legal officers. That is certainly a sufficient staff to carry on and I should think we might even get some of them to attend to the indexing of the Statutes. I don't see why that should be too big a burden. They can't be busy all the time, certainly not always with prosecutions—during the summer months there are no prosecutions. It seems to me that they could at least make a start on that and I would suggest it to the Attorney General, that at any rate there should be an index of the different statutes, describing the statutes.

MR. CURTIS: That will be in this year's statutes, I have already said that.

MR. BROWNE: Now he has told us that it is the intention to send two representatives to the Committee on Uniformity of Legislation at Winnipeg. I don't understand why there should be two representatives from a small province like Newfoundland. Why is it necessary to send two? The City of Winnipeg has a population equal to the whole population of Newfoundland and I am sure they won't be sending two representatives although it is being held in their own city. One should be sufficient to take in these matters. Therefore I think there would be some money wasted if that is done. There were two conventions to which he said he was sending representatives, one at Winnipeg and at Ottawa. I would suggest to him that he send one to each instead of sending two.

MR. MURRAY: There was some mention of indexing the Statutes. I wonder, as a matter of information could I ask what is being done there? There was a proposal that it be farmed out. Was that adopted?

MR. CURTIS: We discussed it, as I said. There is a firm of professional indexers in Toronto, I think it was the CCHM who do a lot of that work for the other provinces, and they offered to do ours, but when I got the price I was frightened and am still looking around. I did get in touch with one university and thought they perhaps might have facilities for handling it.

In connection with the other items I mentioned, the conference in Winnipeg and in Ottawa, they will be meeting at the same time.

MR. BROWNE: One man could cover them both?

MR. CURTIS: Perhaps so.

MR. BROWNE: Did the Attorney General try our own university. They might be able to undertake the responsibility for this indexing of the statutes. I am quite sure the Librarian is quite accustomed to indexing thousands of books, and should have sufficient training to make an index for four volumes—has that been tried, and could it be considered?

Item carried.

Item 703—Supreme Court:

MR. BROWNE: Did I understand the Attorney General to say there was a new Grade III Officer there?

MR. CURTIS: Yes, he is replacing Mr. Stirling who has been promoted.

MR. BROWNE: Yes, but the new officer is put in at the top of the scale?

MR. CURTIS: I think that must be a mistake, I will check on that.

MR. BROWNE: There are two Grade IV Officers. Miss Page has been there many years, I suppose, I would not like to say how long she has been there, but she has been there most of her life, and at that rate, two officers Grade IV getting $5,500 between them—is the new officer who has just come in and does not know his way around the office given the same rate? Now there is no comparison in the value of the two people. While I like to see a man get good wages I think we ought to consider the services of the people who have been there so long.

MR. CURTIS: I think we might let that stand.

Item 703 stand.

704—St. John's Magistrate's Court:

MR. BROWNE: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make an observation about the salary paid the magistrate in the Magistrate's Court, Magistrate O'Neill. I think I should draw to the attention of the House the fact that Magistrate O'Neill is a man with over twenty years experience, and the gentleman who has been recently appointed to the Justice Department is receiving a salary which we just discussed; directors, are getting an average of $6,000 a year, and the Assistant Deputy Attorney General $8,000 a year. Magistrate O'Neill is a man of experience in the busiest court in the country, and he is rated at a lower rate than the Assistant Deputy Attorney General. It seems to me that never in the history of that court has the person in charge received a salary less than three or four other officials in the Department of Justice, or in the Department of the Attorney General. It is quite a difficult job there, in fact much more difficult now, I am sure the Attorney General will admit it is more difficult today than ever because, although the Premier talked about how high the magistrate and the judge of the central district courts were, there is no question about how high the magistrate is today. Under the Criminal Code he has power to send people to gaol for years. That is a very great responsibility. Then the law is more complicated. There has been a change-over, as the Attorney General knows, to the Criminal Code and it is an especially difficult one to follow and to apply. Therefore, since it is such a busy court great responsibility falls under it, and I would like to ask consideration from the Attorney General in the matter of increasing this salary, and at least put him as high as the Assistant Deputy Attorney General.

Now there is one other item in connection with the Magistrate's Court which I feel I should draw to the attention of the Attorney General. Again he knows very well this is a very congested place, the office over there has been a disgrace for twenty years. It is just a single room with a stenographer and another small room off that with a stenographer and two clerks, and a little tiny room for members of the police, and sometimes members of the legal profession come in and it is extremely difficult to do any work. I don't see how you can expect any efficiency from the Magistrate's Court while it is carried on in that congested manner. I presume that Magistrate O'Neill comes under the Magistrate's vote. Could the Attorney General tell me what his salary is?

MR. CURTIS: I don't know, Mr. Chairman, the individual salaries of the magistrates. The salaries of the magistrates are voted in a block sum, I don't know what each individual one is.

MR. BROWNE: Well again I am sure the Attorney General must know that the matter of giving more space for the magistrates' court was under consideration, certainly ten years ago, if not longer, and was dropped for some reason or other. Part of the offices there were taken by the Department of Public Works, which, in my opinion, should never have been done, and these offices should have been given to the court.

MR. HOLLETT: In that matter, Mr. Chairman, of Magistrate O'Neill: He has been there quite a long time, I believe. This matter came up for consideration last year, if I remember correctly, and the year before. I notice under Director Grade V an employee is given an increase year by year, but how does he get to Grade VI and so on up to Grade X?

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is a decision of the Cabinet. It is a matter for the Cabinet to decide.

MR. HOLLETT: There is no incentive, it is up to the Cabinet.

MR. SMALLWOOD: That is how it is with all directors.

MR. HOLLETT: You take a lot of these who are, for instance, Grade IV. There are five or six hundred of them and they go up by yearly increases, and they have a chance of advancement as far as salary is concerned. I was wondering if there is any chance for a man in the position such as Magistrate O'Neill to improve his conditions financially?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is a decision of the Cabinet, confirmed subsequently by the Legislature.
MR. HOLLETT: Is that the way it was always in connection with that appointment?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Certainly. Judges to the Supreme Court and all magisterial salaries are decided by Cabinet. Since entering Confederation the salaries of Supreme Court Judges, and County Court Judges are decided by parliament.

MR. HOLLETT: Magistrates are increased by yearly increments?

MR. SMALLWOOD: No, none increases automatically. But unless there is some black mark against him he gets the increase.

MR. HOLLETT: There is no black mark nor white mark against Magistrate O'Neill, yet he does not go up or down?

MR. SMALLWOOD: Not automatically no.

MR. CURTIS: Magistrate O'Neill is getting seventeen hundred dollars a year more than any other magistrate in the country.

MR. BROWNE: The Attorney General must admit he does a lot more work. His is a busy court, and is at times extremely busy, and far more difficult cases go before Magistrate O'Neill than before the other magistrates.

MR. CURTIS: We have done more, as honourable members know, for Magistrate O'Neill in the past five years than any other government did in ten years.

MR. BROWNE: I don't agree with you. What he is getting now is no better than in 1949.

MR. CURTIS: I believe he was getting $4,500.

MR. BROWNE: Even so the value in money has certainly brought down the value.

MR. HOLLETT: I think it is not a matter of Magistrate O'Neill or anybody else. We all know that the position of Magistrate in the Magistrate's Court in St. John's is very important, where a man has to work morning, noon and night. I know that to be a fact, and I think there should be some provision for the enhancement of the salary to compensate for conduct and hard work in every walk of life.

MR. BROWNE: Is the Attorney General able to give the amount of fines collected in the Magistrate's Court last year?

MR. CURTIS: No, I only know the amount throughout the whole country.

MR. BROWNE: Could the Attorney General make any statement regarding the congestion in the Magistrate's Court, and whether there is any intention to remedy the situation?

MR. CURTIS: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have had the matter under active consideration. I might say we had plans prepared but I was not prepared to accept them because they chopped it up too much. I may say the improvement of facilities is a very active matter before the Government.

MR. BROWNE: There has been some talk of removing traffic cases?

MR. CURTIS: Yes, it is being done.

MR. BROWNE: How will it be done—would the Attorney General be able to tell us?

MR. CURTIS: We have a Traffic Court, Mr. Chairman, all ready to open at Fort Townshend, and why it has not yet been opened I do not know. It should have been opened months and months ago. I gave instructions it was to be opened, and one of the two magistrates is supposed to go up so many days a week. Up there there is lots of parking ground and everything is quiet and ordinary. Criminal cases will not be heard there. I don't know just why they have not done it. The last I heard of it the court definitely was ready, but they are putting in the bar and facilities, and I would expect to see it open any day.

Item 704 carried.

705—Magistrates:

MR. HOLLETT: On that item, Mr. Chairman, the Attorney General said there were four people they were quite ready to appoint. Who are the appointees to the magistracy, who have been just about approved?

MR. CURTIS: We are making provisions for four.

MR. HOLLETT: What I want to inquire about is, have these applications been considered by the Civil Service Commission?

MR. CURTIS: No, they don't come under the Civil Service Commission. They are supposed to know more than the Civil Service Commission. Magistrates are always recommended to the Cabinet by an inter-office committee of lawyers.

MR. SMALLWOOD: Of the Department of the Attorney General.

MR. HOLLETT: Do you mean to tell me the old Civil Service Commission never had anything to do with magistrates? I was a magistrate myself for twenty years. I am beginning to wonder what this Civil Service Commission is for anyway?

MR. SMALLWOOD: It is not in force at the moment.

MR. HOLLETT: These are civil servants and I am certainly entitled to ask questions as to whether they are supposed to come before the commission. The House is voting, I believe, eight thousand dollars for civil service commissioners, and as far as I can find out thus far, I don't know what category they do take care of. I don't think they take care of any at all, it is just a matter of setting up two or three people in a job, as far as I can see. There are some three or four thousand civil servants, and as far as I can see, only about seven hundred come before them, when they do come before them.

MR. SMALLWOOD: The vote under debate is 705.

MR. HOLLETT: In other words, magistrates do not come under that Civil Service Commission and deputy ministers do not come under it. Could the Honourable Minister tell us what classifications come under it?

MR. CHAIRMAN: Perhaps the honourable member might turn around the other way, and discuss the magistrates.

Item 705 carried.

706—Deeds and Companies:

MR. BROWNE: Under 706, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that that also is a very congested place. I suppose we have probably one of the ablest men in Canada today in charge of that division, and I believe that it was the most efficient department up to a certain time ago, but today it is unable to cope with the work and the volume of deeds being prepared has increased, the number of companies has increased and they are about a
