PROCEEDINGS

OF THE

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY

During the First Session of the Twenty-Fourth General Assembly of Newfoundland

UNION PUBLISHING COMPANY, LTD.

Proceedings

OF THE

House of Assembly of Newfoundland

SESSION 1920

WEDNESDAY, April 20, 1920.

Upon the twentieth day of April, A.D. 1920, the members returned for the several districts, with the exception of Archibald Targett, Esq., assembled between the hours of two and three of the clock in the afternoon in the Council Chamber and took and subscribed the oath of allegiance before the Honourables Robert K. Bishop, James D. Ryan, and Marmaduke G. Winter, the commissioners of His Excellency the Governor thereto appointed.

At three of the clock the members being assembled in the Assembly room, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod delivered a message from His Excellency the Governor requesting the attendance of the members in the Council Chamber where His Excellency's commission having been read by the Clerk, the Commissioners signified that the members should forthwith return to their own chamber and elect a proper person to be their Speaker and present such person to His Excellency on to-morrow in the Council Chamber at three of the clock.

Whereupon the members having returned to the Assembly Room, the Prime Minister, the Honourable Richard A. Squires, K.C., moved that the Member for the District of Carbonear, William F. Penney, Esquire, do take the chair as Speaker, and it was seconded by the Honourable William R. Warren, K.C., Member for the District of Fortune; and no other person being proposed, Mr. Penney was unanimously called to the Chair by the House, and was conducted to the Chair by the members who proposed and seconded him.

Whereupon the Speaker, standing on the steps addressed the House, expressing his gratitude to the Honourable Members for the high honor unanimously conferred on him.

The House then adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, at half-past two of the clock in the afternoon.

WEDNESDAY, April 21st, 1920.

The House met at half-past two of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

At three o'clock a message from His Excellency the Governor was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, commanding the immediate attendance of Mr. Speaker and the House in the Council Chamber.

Whereupon Mr. Speaker and the House attended His Excellency in the Council Chamber and being returned to the Assembly Room, Mr. Speaker informed the House that when in attendance upon His Excellency in the Council Chamber, His Excellency had been pleased to approve of his election as Speaker of this House and that in the name and on behalf of the House of Assembly he had by humble petition to His Excellency laid claim to all their ancient rights and privileges, which His Excellency had confirmed to them in as full and ample a manner as they have been heretofore granted or allowed by His Excellency or any of his predecessors. Mr. Speaker also expressed his respectful acknowledgements for the high honor which the House had unanimously conferred upon him.

The following Resolution was proposed by Sir Michael Cashin and seconded by Mr. Bennett:

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this early opportunity of congratulating you upon the high office you hold in this House. I think it is the first time in the memory of this House that a full-blooded fisherman has occupied the Chair. I congratulate you, Sir, on behalf of the fishermen of the Colony, and I believe it to be a move in the right direction, that the fishermen of the Colony are coming into their own. I have implicit confidence in you, and not only have I this confidence but I extend it out to you from the members of the Opposition in this House. Now, Sir, before any business is transacted in this House, I ask your permission to move this Resolution:

WHEREAS, the Prime Minister, the Leader of this House, has been accused upon the oath of a former member of this House, of crimnial misconduct in relation to the election of a Member hereof;

AND WHEREAS, the Governor in Council has announced an intention to appoint a Commission under the public Inquiries Act to take evidence upon oath and to report its findings therein, in relation to the truth or otherwise of the said charge;

RESOLVED, that in the opinion of this House it should not proceed to the transaction of public business under the leadership of an accused person awaiting trial;

AND THEREFORE, that this House should now adjourn for one week to give opportunity for the said inquiry and report.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I don't think that the Resolution should be received or debated until the Speaker has reported himself as having been approved of by His Excellency the Governor.

MR. HIGGINS:—The position is that when the Address from the Throne is read to both Houses the Legislature is then open, you taking the Chair; incidentally, Sir, I wish to congratulate you sincerely and trust that, under your guidance there will be carried on the highest traditions of all those who preceded you. I think it is a great tribute to the mass of our people that one from amongst the fishermen of the country has been selected for the position of Speaker.

With regard to the point of order ruled by the learned Minister of Justice I wish to refer him to Rule No. 19 of the House:

That rule is really the practice in England and the reason of it is that the moment that the Speaker occupies the Chair Parliament is open and the House is in session. I might also refer my learned friend to the eleventh edition of Mays' Parliamentary Rules, page 174.

Might I say with all respect to the Honourable Minister of Justice that it will be found upon reflection that that is the constitutional practice and that the House is now in session. I, therefore, move that the motion of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is in order.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—

Mr. Speaker, I do not quite agree with the hon. member for St. John's East. What he has said would apply if this were not a new session. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition is entitled to make his motion before the Speech from the Throne is read, but after having returned to this Chamber the Speaker has to report what transpired in the Legislative Council. I wish to refer to rule 11 and rule 12 which direct the procedure:

Those rules must be carried out before a motion is made and before the carrying on of any other business. The Speaker has to report that the House has been in attendance upon His Excellency the Governor and that the privileges of the House have been conserved, and then takes his seat. My honourable friend would then be quite in order to make his motion in the ordinary course.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—I take the position that I have not been confirmed in this House as Speaker until I had reported that His Excellency the Governor had approved of my election and I rule that the motion made by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition is out of order. After I have announced that His Excellency approved of my election and the House of Assembly is in session, the Leader of the Opposition or any other member is perfectly at liberty to put forward any resolution or any motion he likes. I shall now proceed.

I have to inform the House that when in attendance upon His Excellency the Governor in the Council Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to approve of my election as Speaker of this House; and that in the name and on behalf of the House of Assembly I, by humble petition to His Excellency, laid claim to all its rights and privileges, which His Excellency had confirmed in as full and ample a manner as they have been heretofore granted or allowed by His Excellency or any of his predecessors. I beg to repeat my respectful acknowledgments to this House, for the high honor which it has unanimously conferred upon me.

I further announce that whist in the Council Chamber, His Excellency was pleased to make a gracious speech to both branches of the Legislature, a copy of which, for purposes of greater accuracy I have obtained, and will now read to the House.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

I deem it my first duty on this occasion to greet the new members who have been appointed to the Legislative Council in the place of some whose loss we deplore I also welcome all those who have been elected to to serve in the new House of Assembly.

When in April of last year I addressed the Legislature on the opening of the Eight and last session of the 23rd General Assembly, I expressed my feelings of pride and thankfulness at the wonderful success of the Allies armies in the great world war, and thankfulness at the termination of the conflict which had cost such untold miseries to the greater portion of the human race; and in greeting you today, while I recognize that the ratification of the first of the Treaties of Peace in January last holds out high hope that the nations of the world have indeed embarked upon a period of reoganization and reconstruction, I cannot avoid impression upon you the lesson of all history, that a great convulsion is followed by much unrest, and that all our patience and sympathy will be required before we can realize under the guidance of Divine Providence a permanent peace upon earth and goodwill amongst formerly warring nations

My Ministers appreciate the donation by the British Admiralty to Newfoundland of two ships hitherto used for naval purposes. These two ships, together with a third ship purchased from the British Admiralty by the Government, are now being prepared at Chatham for their voyage to Newfoundland. It is probable that one of these ships will be used as a coastal boat; another as a supply ship in connection with the Lighthouse Department, and the third for emergency and rescue purposes.

For many years a dispute has been pending between the Provinces of Quebec and this Colony in relation to the boundary between Newfoundland and Quebec on the Labrador Peninsula. An agreement has been arrived at as to the submission of the dispute to the adjudication of His Majesty's Privy Council, and it is thought probable that some substantial progress towards a final settlement of this longstanding controversy may be made during this year.

Promptly after its assumption of office the Government established regulations to protect the fishing interests of Newfoundland in their foreign markets, and it is pleasing to know that the establishment of the regulations has been attended with much success and substantial benefit to our codfish industry. The fishermen of Newfoundland will be invited to co-operate earnestly with the Government in its effort to improve the cure of codfish. It can reasonably be anticipated that if the cure of fish be improved so that a prime article is produced, the price of Newfoundland codfish will continue at firm values.

An effort is being made by the Government to wind up the Department of Militia and the Department of Shipping at the earliest possible moment. The Newfoundland Pay and Record Office in London has already been closed. The work of the Civil Re-Establishment Committee will ,it is hoped, during this year be brought practically to an end, and the matter of medical treatment of returned soldiers and sailors will be concentrated in one hospital building so as to give greater efficiency of service at a very greatly reduced expenditure of public funds. If the burden of expenditure resulting from the war may seem a heavy one let us remember that it represents the least that we can do for those who enabled Newfoundland to take her stand in the forefront of humanity's great battle.

The Rev. (Major) Nangle has been placed in charge of matters connected with the concentration and registration of the graves of our heroic dead in Europe. Suitable War Memorials are being erected on sites purchased by the Newfoundland Government. The battlefield of Beaumont Hamel, the name of which will ever be a tragic memory amongst us, has been secured, and here, within enclosures dedicated to the cause of liberty and justice by Newfoundland's heroic sacrifices, will be concentrated the graves of all members of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment who fell in the advance of July 1st, 1916.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly:

The revenue for the last fiscal year showed a substantial surplus over expenditure. On the other hand, there have been large expenditures not included within the scope of last year's Estimates which it will be necessary to legalize. In spite of these large disbursements the revenue was more than sufficient to meet current expenditure. It must be remembered, however, that practically the whole of the very large expense incurred in connection with the Department of Militia and in the matter of pensions for soldiers and sailors and their hospital treatment and civil re-establishment was borne on Capital Account.

The Estimates have been subject to considerable revision, and have been based upon the report of the Civil Service Commission appointed by my late Ministers. My Ministers propose to submit to you for your careful consideration a bona fide statement of the moneys which are estimated to be necessary to cover the expense of the public service of the Colony for the coming fiscal year. They are of the opinion that the practice which has grown up during recent years of submitting Estimates far below the actual anticipated expenditure, trusting to provision being made under the head of "Supplemental Supply" at a subsequent session of the Legislature for the authorization of over-expenditure, should be discontinued as far as practicable.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly:

The Department of Marine and Fisheries, which may be considered one of the most important Departments of the Administration, will be reorganized; an Information Bureau and Scientific Research Department will be established; a commission will be appointed to put into operation laws for the standardization of fish and the improvement of the cure thereof. Trade Commissioners and other agents will be appointed from time to time until Newfoundland is suitably represented in all its principal fish markets. Legislation will be introduced to provide for the enforcement of such regulations as my Ministers may consider necessary to protect the interests in foreign countries of those who ship fish to the foreign market.

Legislation will be introduced to establish a proper survey of ships built in Newfoundland and of all vessels engaged in the foreign trade of the Island. This legislation will include provision for the protection of the lives of those employed on foreign-going vessels.

You will be invited to consider bills for the creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs and the creation of a Department of Education. A reorganization of the Department of Agriculture and Mines is being undertaken with a view to the curtailment of expenditures which past practice has indicated to be unfruitful and the development of a new policy which my Ministers confidently believe will tend to make agriculture a very much more important factor in the Colony's prosperity than it has been in the past.

The problem of both Coastal and Inland transportation, which are of the first importance to the industrial welfare of the Colony, are receiving most careful consideration at the hands of my Ministers, who hope to be in a position to submit for consideration at this session of the Legislature some practical proposals for more efficient service.

Quite recently a company has been incorporated for the purpose of the erection of a large number of workingmen's homes. The company hopes that as many as thirty houses at a cost not exceeding $2,000 each will be constructed during the present year, and my Ministers anticipate that application will be made by the Company to the Legislature for certain concessions to assist them in their philanthropic activities.

I express the hope that your deliberations may, under the guidance of Divine Providence, tend to the further welfare and prosperity of this ancient Colony.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN: — Mr. Speaker, I move these Resolutions.

In moving these Resolutions I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that in them I am not making any charge of wrong-doing. It has been brought to the notice of the Government that certain irregularities have taken place and certain definite charges have been made against the Leader of the Government by an exMinister of the Crown and an ex-member of this House, and until that affidavit and these charges are closed up, I do not think it is out of place to move an adjournment and ask that the Leader of the Gevernment withdraw from this House until a proper enquiry establishes his innocence.

Let us go back to 1894. In that year charges were made against eighteen members of the House led by the late Sir William Whiteway Charges were laid against them in the Supreme Court of this Colony for bribery and corruption. What happened was that this House was called together and when theSupreme Court pronounced upon the first two cases tried before it, unseating two of its members, Messrs Moore and Woods, members for Bay de Verde District, the remaining members of that party refused to occupy their seats. That was right and proper, and according to moral law and usages they should not hold their seats in this House with a cloud hanging over them.

Today a similar thing has happened The Leader of this House has been charged with serious irregularities, as has already been stated. And this charge is not of yesterday or of a few days ago. It has been in existence for a month and it is up to the Leader of the Government now to rebut that charge now before a proper tribunal. Is it not the duty of members of this House, I ask, to satisfy themselves as to whether or not the Prime Minister is innocent and is it not only decent and right that we should adjourn this House so that the Commission appointed by the Government within the past forty-eight hours could take evidence and report to this House or to His Excellency the Governor. It has always been the practice and traditions of this House to jealously guard its independence, integrity and honesty. Why deviate from it now?

Ihave been a member of this House for twenty-eight years and during that period period charges were laid against me here. One man at present occupying a seat in this Chamber—I refer now to the Leader of the F.P.U.—made a charge against me. What happened My colleagues, one of whom is Prime Minister today, appointed a Commission over my head and without giving me notice, inquired into the charges. I kept clear of any executive meetings while that charge hung over my head until the Commission reported and vindicated me. Now what I am saying is perfectly correct, and in making this statement this evening ı hope that you gentlemen on the other side of the House will take action and see that justice is done to the Leader of the Government and to this House.

As previously mentioned by me, in '94 Sir William Whiteway, Sir Robert Bond, Sir Edward Morris, and fifteen others, members of the Government and of the House of Assembly, were unseated and disqualified for corrupt and illegal practices. That is now ancient history. Immediately the House was called together, an adjournment was taken to wait for the pronouncement of the Supreme Court where each and every case was tried. Sir William Whiteway could have come in here as you are today and gone on with the business of the House, but he took the position that a cloud hung over the heads of eighteen members of his Government, including himself, and for that reason he was not prepared to come here to transact the business of the house or pass any legislation whatever.

I have presented a resolution that is right and proper. I am asking nothing which cannot be granted by the other side of the House. Nothing at all. When I present this resolution I am not blaming the Prime Minister, but I think it is right that we should await the result of the Commission. Why should we not leave this House until such time as there is an enquiry into this matter. Why should any legislation be passed while such a condition of affairs exists.

I think the Prime Minister ought to withdraw from the House, Sir, until this matter is cleared up. Why need any bills be passed? It is not necessary and we therefore ought to adjourn for one week. I can assure him, Sir, that as Leader of the Opposition and on their behalf that we will help the Government to pass all legislation that is necessary and beneficial for this Dominion. I think, Sir, that the Leader of the Government, the Prime Minister, ought not to come in here and keep his seat until such time that his innocence is established, and I serve notice that otherwise no business will go through this House. I make that stand on behalf of the Opposition. And I think this resolution ought to be shown every consideration and that before the result of the inquiry is known, nothing should be done. Why should the Prime Minister place himself in that position? We can leave the business of this House for the present. The Prime Minister ought to withdraw from this Chamber. All necessary legislation can be gone through when we come back to this Chamber. This is the position taken, Sir, and I have much pleasure, Sir, in moving this resolution.

MR. BENNETT:—In rising to second and support the resolution just submitted by the Leader of the Opposition, Sir Michael Cashin, I wish to avail of this early opportunity of extending my personal congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, on the high honor that the House has conferred upon you, that of the highest Commoner in the land. You have been called therefor to fill a very important office, an office occupied by many able and eminent legislators, and I feel sure that the traditions that surround the Speaker's chair will be well maintained by you and that the impartiality that ever marked the office of your predecessors will still be continued and prove an incentive to you to follow in their footsteps.

The extraordinary circumstances at present existing in the House necessitate extraordinary procedure on His Majestys' loyal opposition.

The resolution just submitted is such as upon reflection, I feel sure that members on both sides of the House will consider most reasonable and desirable. It cannot be denied that at the present time the Leader of this House is in the unfortunate position that, until such time as he clears himself of the charges made against him through a sworn affidavit of an ex-Minister of the Crown, he can neither expect or deserve the confidence so essential to his office in the conduction of the business of this Assembly.

Mr. Squires stands charged with a serious offence and personally I regret to see him in that position and I feel that in order to absolutely vindicate his character and reputation he will agree to an adjournment of the House for a few days or until such time as the commission that is to be appointed can investigate and report on such investigation. This enquiry should begin forthwith and continue until the matter is entirely cleared up. If the Prime Minister will agree to this and come back to the House vindicated and exonerated from any wrongdoing or misconduct I can assure him that at least some on this side of the House will extend a warm welcome to him, and facilitate him and the Government in every possible way to expedite the business of the session.

These resolutions are in keeping with resolutions that were presented to His Excellency the Governor a few days ago by the citizens of St. John's. These resolutions were passed at a large public meeting called together to consider the situation, and, as a representative of the citizens of St. John's, I protest against the holding of a spring election and certain papers made derogatory comments on their actions, and although those papers were supporting the Government of which I was a member, I then protested as I considered it was quite within the rights of the people to protest if they contended that the holding of an election in the spring would disfranchise a large proportion of the electorate. Subsequent events proved that they were right in their attitude as the spring election was abandoned and held at the usual time. This may have been the means of putting our friends on that side of the House and putting us over here. As we are content to abide by the will of the people and let right and justice prevail, a similar motion actuates us now. We have no desire to do an injustice to the Prime Minister, but we are as much concerned about the dignity and purity of his high office as he is, and are merely asking that he take such steps as are proper, either by adjourning the House for a few days or withdrawing himself, handing over the leadership for the time being to one of his associates, until he is vindicated and the cloud that hangs over him is passed away.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in seconding the Resolution proposed by the Leader of the Opposition and trust that the Prime Minister and honourable members on the other side of the House will see the desirability of accepting the same and put into effect such measure as will speedily clear up a situation that, as I said at the outset, was most extraordinary in the history of the Legislature of the Dominion.

MR. WALSH:—First, I must with the other members of the House congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on the high honor that has been conferred upon you, as the first from among the fishermen of the country to hold this high position. With regard to the resolution regarding the conduct of the Prime Minister I do not think that any lengthy speech is needed to convince the members of the House that the purpose of the resolution should be carried out. I want to assure the Honourable, the Leader of the Government, that I have no desire to injure him or any member of the Government. If this resolution is put into effect and he comes back vindicated by the commission I want to be one of the first to extend the hand of congratulation.

A serious blow is felt at the very foundation of the British constitution. I believe the Leader of the Government will welcome this resolution. The business of the country cannot be seriously interfered with for the short period that he may be absent from the House. I will give my support to every measure that is brought forward that is for the benefit of the country. As I have said before, I do not think that it is necessary to make any lengthy observation, and I hope this House will, in its wisdom, accept this opportunity to vindicate the conduct of the Leader of the Government.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the members who have already spoken in congratulating you on the honor that has been conferred upon you. Regarding the resolution, certain matters should be taken into consideration. I have no personal animosity towards the Prime Minister. I think we should all make an attempt to drive all consideration of politics from this resolution. The resolution is directed at the office, rather than at the Prime Minister himself. I am of opinion that the Prime Minister himself will be glad that this resolution is introduced.

It may not be easy to consider the question in its abstract form, but it is in this way that it must be considered. The whole civilized world is in a state of unrest, and we shall not escape it through all time. When the unrest affects this country, it will be difficult enough to safeguard the interests of the people. This House should not consider any business until this matter is cleared up. Besides safeguarding the interests of the citizens we must also remember above everything else that the respect for the laws passed should be beyond reproach. A certain latitude is allowed to members of this House, but when a man comes into this House he comes into a place sanctified by the rights and privileges of a free people.

This resolution is directed to clear up a charge made against the Leader of the Government. I make no charge as to whether this is true or false. I want to warn this House that I will give no support to any legislation until this matter is cleared up.

Politically I fought the Prime Minister as vigorously as I knew how, but I can say with truth that I did it fairly, and I say with all sincerity that if he comes back to this Chamber vindicated and cleared of the charges now hanging over him, I shall be one of the first to welcome him. In the meantime I wish to place on record my contention that it is in the best interests of the Prime Minister himself that the resolution now before the chair should be carried.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, without wishing to take any prominent part in this debate I desire to say that the moving of these resolutions gives me an opportunity to make a statement with regard to part of the matter referred to which Ithink will be of interest to this Chamber and to the public generally. I do not think that any member of this House or anybody else for that matter, is unacquainted with the charges to which this resolution has reference, for anyone who has read the papers, or, perhaps, I should say, some of the papers, cannot be unaware of the details of the charges that have been brought against the Prime Minister. With these details I have nothing to do, but I will say that I for one am content to wait till the commission appointed to enquire into these charges has made known its findings before condemning those against whom the charges are made.

The Honourable Member for St. George's has spoken of the traditions of this House, and I agree with him that these traditions should be regarded as sacred by us. There is one which more than any other we should be careful to follow, and that is that a man should not be regarded as other than innocent till he is proven guilty. I cannot see why the business of this House should be held up merely because it is the wish of some that this tradition be broken. I have no doubt that the Prime Minister will make a statement as to his position with regard to the charge of which we have heard so much, and meantime I content myself with making the statement to which I have already referred.

I have been called upon to put in motion the machinery of the law against the gentleman concerned in these charges and I have refrained from doing so because I am convinced that even if they were proven guilty of the action alleged against them there is nothing criminal in that action and therefore nothing of which I, as Attorney General, was called upon to take notice. I have moreover fortified myself with another opinion. I cabled the solicitor of the Government in London asking him to consult eminent legal authority on the point and his reply was that counsel advised that there was nothing criminal in the action charged against the Prime Minister, and consequently no foundation for any action by the Department of Justice.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, permit me first of all to extend to you, Sir, my hearty congratulations on your elevation to the distinguished rank of first commoner of the land. For many years the electoral District of Carbonear, for which you are now the sitting member, has been honored by having its representative occupying the Speaker's chair, and in congratulating you I am congratulating your constituency in that the honor which has been conferred upon you by the members of this House is an honor to the constituency which you represent.

I am particularly pleased that Sir Michael Patrick Cashin, the Leader of the Opposition, has given me the very earliest possible opportunity to refer to an affidavit which is now known throughout the length and breadth of the country as the St. Patrick's Day affidavit of William Woodford. The allegation made by Mr. Woodford that on St. Patrick's Day I entered into an agreement with him to purchase his resignation from the House of Assembly in consideration of a Government job, has been used by Sir Michael Cashin and his associates, William J. Higgins, one of Woodford's solicitors; William J. O'Neill, editor of The Plaindealer, and a number of their personal associates and friends for the purpose of personal vilification of myself, and during the past weeks bitter, false and offensive personal attacks have been made upon me by members of the Opposition and in the Opposition press.

These attacks have not, however, been more bitter, falser, more vindictive or abusive than has been the persistent personal campaign against myself by these men for months past. This vindictive personal pursuit is not unexpected to me. It is the sort of opposition which I must naturally expect from the class of people who have identified themselves with these attacks. These men were prepared to take any step, no matter how despicable, and to go to any lengths, no matter how dishonorable and disgusting, if perchance they could succeed in injuring myself as a public man, and as a citizen of the community.

Coming from the quarter from which these attacks come, I welcome them; coming from the minds and characters by which these attacks are produced, I also welcome them, and feel thankful that out of the party which it is my distinguished honor to lead in this House. there is not one man who would condescend to reply in kind to attacks of such infamy and their friends; for weeks I have patiently submitted to the personal abuse of members of the Opposition and their friends; for weeks I have patiently submitted to the infamy and vindictive attacks of a scurrilous Opposition press, but finally the Opposition officially adopted the attack, associated themselves with the St. Patrick's Day affidavit to which I have referred, and forwarded officially a memorial, with copy of the affidavit attached, to His Excellency the Governor.

The memorial was to the effect that, "We, Sir Michael P. Cashin, William J. Higgins, William J. Walsh, Michael S. Sullivan, Nicholas J. Vinnicombe, Cyril J. Fox, James MacDonnell, Philip F. Moore, and Sir John Crosbie, have ever been free from trafficking in office, and being the custodians of public morality, demand that the entire public business of the Colony be delayed and that the Prime Minister be not permitted to open the Legislature because one of our associates, William Woodford, says that he sold himself politically to the Prime Minister for a Government job."

The names appended to that memorial are those of the gentlemen whom I have named. I gather that Mr. J. R. Bennett, Sir Michael Cashin's seconder on the motion now before the House, desires me to understand that he is in full accord with the memorial, and now formally identifies himself with it. Is that not so, Mr. Bennett?

MR. BENNETT:—Yes, it is.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Thank you.

I fully appreciate the political tactics of the Opposition in trying to draw me into a newspaper controversy with William Woodford. At such a spectacle they would feel the same malicious glee as if they could find me debating the straightness of a telegraph pole with a drinker of substitutes. I waited patiently until the official Opposition officially identified themselves with the action of their former colleague, Mr. Woodford. This they did by the memorial to which I have already referred. Immediately they took that step they brought the matter out of the realm of such observations as Messrs. Higgins and Howley, the solicitors for Mr. Woodford, might be pleased to make in the interests of their client; they took it out of the sphere of abusive political newspapers and put it upon the basis of a position officially adopted by the official Opposition for the purpose of a political attack upon myself as Prime Minister.

The fact of Mr. William Woodford's making a statement concerning me is a matter which I regard no more than the barking of some others. For that I have such remedy as the law of Newfoundland may give me through the courts, but the official adoption of the Woodford attack by the Opposition under the leadership of Sir Michael P. Cashin brought the matter into the realm of politics. I no longer felt that I was dealing personally with the attacks of a Woodford or a Cashin, but that I, as Prime Minister, was dealing with the official act of the official Opposition, and I at once asked His Excellency the Governor to consider the appointment of a Royal Commission to inquire into the whole circumstances, and a Royal Commission will be appointed. This will give the honorable members opposite further full opportunities of straining every nerve and resorting to every device to injure me as a public man, as a professional man, and as a citizen.

I am very happy that Sir Michael Cashin has given me an opportunity of dealing with this at the earliest possible moment, but I am particularly happy that Sir Michael Cashin and his associates, constituting the entire Opposition, were pleased to identify themselves personally and as the official Opposition with this infamous political plot, which as a St. Patrick's Day affidavit attack upon myself will have no more effect upon myself personally nor upon the stability of this administration than the Guy Fawkes plot, memoralized on "Bonfire Day," November 5th, had upon the British Parliament.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Like my friend on this side of the House and my friends on the opposite side, I heartily concur with the congratulations tended you on the high honor which has been conferred upon you.

The Prime Minister stated in his address that the members on the Opposition side have been denouncing him for the last month or two. I can assure him that I have not gone out of my way to denounce him, and I am sure that there are several members on this side of the House who have not even mentioned his name.

We are forced to take this stand we have taken as what has happened is a reflection on the morality of the House. I sincerely trust that when this charge is investigated, the Prime Minister will be exonerated; it will be a great blow to this House if he is not exonerated. Mr. Warren told us that there is nothing criminal in the offence. He says he cabled across, and received a reply assuring him that there is nothing criminal in it. I think that the least he should do is to hand us this reply, which he received from the other side. I do not doubt Mr. Warren's word for a moment, but he should table the correspondence, so that he will know on what grounds the answer he received was received.

It is rather late now in the day for the Prime Minister to come out with such a statement. He has had a considerable while to think it over, and I doubt now if he would make a statement at all only he was forced to do so. He said every effort was being made by certain people and nothing would be stopped at to keep him from meeting this House as Prime Minister. I am at a loss to understand his insinuation and would be pleased if he would explain what he means.

The reason that I am supporting this resolution is because I believe in all sincerity that the members of this House will endorse this resolution which was carried at the public meeting the other night practically unanimously, and I that it should have been quite easy for the Prime Minister to have made a statement, when this happened first. If Mr. Squires is prepared to take an affidavit that there is nothing in this charge then I will be one of the first to say that he is welcome here, and I hope he will be here a long time.

SIR J. C. CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Leader of the Opposition in the resolution which he has moved for the adjournment of the House for one week. I also wish to take this opportunity of congratulating the Speaker upon the high honor conferred upon him, and personally I feel sure that the Speaker will so conduct himself in his position as to reflect credit upon himself and the House.

I regret exceedingly that the Prime Minister should take such an attitude toward the members on this side of the chair. I do not think it was necessary for Mr. Squires to get off what he did this afternoon. I think Mr. Squires would have acquitted himself much better this afternoon if he had left unsaid a lot of things that he said. These charges have been in the air ever since the election.

Auditors were brought here from New York and Boston to prove charges against me. If I ever did anything wrong when I was a Minister of the Crown I did it without And in my innocence (and you know I am not very innocent), I would like to say to the Prime Minister "Let him who is without sin cast the first stone," and I don't think there are any stones around this House. I have been in this House when charges were made against members and things said in the heat of debate that were better unsaid. I am now occupying a chair that was once filled by a late Leader of the Opposition. He and I had many spats and crossed swords several times, but I will say this for him that while I was associated with him in the National Government I found him to be correct and above board. I found nothing wrong with him.

I feel that the leader of the F.P.U. will see that justice is done in this matter though the heavens may fall. I would like to say to the prime minister this afternoon that charges have been made in the Daily Star newspaper that could have been left out. I am manly enough to bring this matter up, not that I feel it; but rather because I should like for the prime minister to know it. Last night my head was likened to a billiard ball in the "Star." Now I do not think this is etiquette. I do not think that a man who is looking to keep up a high standard of politics and who hopes to get good clean government should tolerate this sort of thing. Now I am not going to be hypocritical, but the one who sets himself up to teach the man underneath him to do what is right is like a preacher and if he does not do what is right himself, he should expect to be judged by his own standards.

I really believe this afternoon that the prime minister is considering an adjournment of this house until Monday next. If either he or Mr. Coaker have anything to bring in that will be good for the colony I will support it, but if it turns out like the Fish Regulations I will oppose it. I would like for Mr. Squires to act squarely and manly in this matter before the chair. I do not ask him to get Mr. Warren or Mr. Coaker, to act in his place during his absence. When he has cleared himself of the Woodford charges I think he will stand on a higher pedestal in the eyes of his fellow-countrymen. I trust that Mr. Squires's explanation will be satisfactory to himself and that the Royal Commission gives their decision that he will be honorably acquitted. Personally I have nothing against any individual on any side of the house; I have nothing against the F.P.U. or any member thereof. You beat us last fall at the polls, but I was never beaten and I do not think that any Britisher yet was ever beaten. If I was going to be down and say I was beaten my fellow-countrymen would say I was no good. Messrs. Small and LeGrow would not be with us to-day if the British had to say they were beaten two, three or four years ago.

In concluding my remarks I appeal to my friend Mr. Coaker, leader of the F.P.U. and his associates and I appeal to you, Mr. Squires, to adjourn this house until Monday next. I ask you personally to quit this personal abuse as it is not good enough. It is all very well to circulate charges and stories for the purpose of exciting people, but when these stories are put in cold-blooded print, there is where you will find the cure I appeal to you to try and get the papers to be more clean and wholesome and I will be one of the first to give you assistance.

I concur with the Resolutions moved by the leader of the opposition as I believe that they are right and decent and just as the citizens who appealed to His Excellency the Governor a few nights ago believed and I feel justified in again asking the prime minister to adjourn this house until Monday next.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, just a word or two and for obvious reasons I shall be careful to talk strictly on the principle involved in the resolutions. In fact what prompted me to talk at all is what our friend the prime minister said when he presented his forceful gaze on me and dubbed the affidavit of Mr. William Woodford the "St. Patrick's Day affidavit," and in view of the fact that I happened to be featured with a considerable amount of things pertaining to that day.

According to the spirit in which he has spoken regarding me there were apparent deliberate threats of imprisonment. He announced to the house that he welcomed that all this matter be enquired into thoroughly, so likewise, as a brother professional, do I approach this matter with a cleanliness of heart and a purity of purpose, as all the opposition want is "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." I think that one will see upon reflection this evening that the manner in which these resolutions were introduced by the leader of the opposition, the manner in which they have been spoken to by those of our side, the matter of the resolutions themselves, and the temperament of the different speakers that there was an absence of any desire to be personal. There has been nothing at all unkind to the prime minister mentioned, whatever we may do in the future, perhaps, to save ourselves from going to the penitentiary or from being put upon the rack. There has been nothing said in the resolutions unkind about the prime minister, no charge or insinuation of any kind was made and the opposition are discussing them purely on principle as decent men should. Ithink that the prime minister will see that the resolutions presented by the leader of the opposition, not alone impute nothing or suggest nothing, but merely deal with the principle so well recognized in constitutional practice.

We ask that all business of the house be postponed until the commission appointed to investigate has had an opportunity to arrive at a decision. This is not a matter of party politics, no question as to who should make the motion, it is not question as to the exchange of personal reflections. What happened in the past may be right or it may be wrong. This is no place to discuss just now past history, or who should or should not be in the penitentiary. Many a man I have seen sent down to jail who did not get half the justice which many of us deserved. We are only mortals and do not pose to be anything more than ordinary men, and we are not expecting the prime minister to be anything more than an ordinary man. The members of the opposition however, you may find are not so green as you may expect them, or as they have been painted. What happened about the Lornina enquiry is easily dealt with. I may be able to tell a story about enquiries, and perhaps I shall some day. The Lornina enquiry started when Sir Michael Cashin was out of town, and it was only started because of his absence and for personal purposes. He was a strong man in politics and so could come back and see he got a fair trial. The enquiry proved his absolute innocence of the allegations made against him. The result revealed that some one was only trying to stab him in the back.

I take this opportunity of drawing the attention of the house to its duty to itself, and would ask the members on the other side of the house to keep secure its dignity and privilege. We will for our part see that the dignity and integrity of the house are carried out and respected. It is not a matter of merely pure party politics. If any members on the other side wish to vote against the motion, well, they are not upholding the traditions of this house. If they want to break these down by voting against this resolution, well it is their own business, but I fear they will some day regret it.

I should like to see the cable and the reply. I have a good opinion of the attorney general. He is too good a lawyer, and so is the premier himself, not to know that there are other aspects in the way or criminal law application to this country aside from the English election act. I merely suggest to the Honourable the Minister of Justice in the interests of the house to consider the resolution before the house and ought not the honourable the prime minister in consideration of this Resolution before the house and public opinion vacate his seat for the time being and not make himself unworthy of the position which he fills in this house. The prime minister as the leader of the house should set the example by doing what is right in matter of the privileges and honour of this chamber. It is not a matter of party interests, but is a matter for the consideration of the house as a house, because the rights of the house belong only to itself. We should not talk of the criminal laws. Parliament is beyond and above the laws. What could have happened if no Royal Commission had been appointed to investigate the misconduct of the prime minister stands accused of? The prime minister would come in here and debate this matter under privilege. Yes, I might sincerely say to the prime minister if there was no commission to deal with the matter I believe he himself would move the house into privilege for the consideration of this matter.

I respectfully and sincerely submit that the resolution does not discredit the leader of the house, nor does it suggest anything underhand, it merely asks that the business of this house be deferred, and for that reason I think the motion is worthy of being carried whether it came from the other side or not and in that case I should and shall support in and even if it concerned the leader of the Opposition.

Whereupon the House divided and these appeared for the resolution:—Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir J. C. Crosbie, Messrs. Bennett, Higgins, Fox, Vinnicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Moore, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. MacDonnell—(12); and against it—Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, Minister of Finance, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Minster of Education, Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, Hon. Mr. Foote, Minister of Public Works, Acting Minister of Shipping, Mr. LeGrow, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Winsor, Mr. Small, Mr. Cheeseman, Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Gosse, Mr. Archibald, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Targett, Mr. Guppy, Mr. Jones, Mr. Samson—(22); so it passed the the negative and was ordered accordingly.

Mr. Speaker further announced that whilst in the Council Chamber His Excellency had been pleased to make a speech to both branches.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted at this stage of the proceedings to occupy the attention of the House for a moment with the consideration of a resolution of sympathy to the relatives of the three deceased gentlemen who since last session have vacated their seat in the Legislative Council of Newfoundland to undertake the activities of the broader and fuller life for which many of us conceive this life to be but a training school.

In January last the Hon. Dr. Skelton passed away at the age of 93 years. He was a Bonavista lad and had the advantage of a professional training which in his student days was regarded splendid. He returned to Bonavista and practised there for some considerable time. He afterwards moved to Greenspond, where he practised for some years. When only forty-nine years of age he retired from active practice, his reason being that he was not physically able to undertake the arduous work of a medical practitioner in an outport. In spite, however, of physical frailities of the forties he was active, both mentally and physically, up to January last, at the age of 93. Dr. Skelton was a representative in the Newfoundland Legislature for the District of Bonavista for two terms, and for the District of Fogo for one term. In his younger days he was regarded as a surgeon of very high repute. He was a prominent member of the Church of England denomination and a citizen who has left a life record of long and faithful service.

The Hon. A. F. Goodridge, who was at one time Prime Minister of Newfoundland, has also vacated his seat in the Legislative Council. Mr. Goodridge was a Devonshire man and a gentleman. He came to Newfoundland when about fourteen years of age and entered the establishment of his father at Renews, in the District of Ferryland. In 1880 he was elected representative for Ferryland in the House of Assembly, and again in 1882, on both occasions being elected without opposition. During 1884 he was the Leader of the Opposition. In '85 he contested the electoral District of Twillingate, and for four years thereafter was a member of the Executive administration of the day. In 1889 he was defeated. From 1890 to 1893 he was not actively engaged in public affairs. In 1893 he was again elected for the District of Twillingate. On the resignation of the Whiteway administration of '94, he was called upon to form a cabinet, which he did, and for some time was Prime Minister. His appointment to the Legislative Council dates from the year 1913. In spite of his maturity of years he showed an active interest in public affairs, and frequently took part in the debates of the Council. Mr. Goodridge gave one noble boy as his family's offering on the altar of liberty during the late war. His son, Mr. R. F. Goodridge, is the popular well-known Lieutenant-Colonel of the Church Lads' Brigade, and Mr. Fred Goodridge is manager of the Goodridge business at Ferryland. Mr. Wm. Goodridge, another son, is a manager of the Goodridge firm, St. John's.

These two senior members of the Legislative Council, Hon. Dr. Skelton, and Hon. A. F. Goodridge, passed out of life, having as public-spirited citizens given their many years of life's effort to the upbuilding of the industrial, commercial and professional interests, and social welfare of the community. They leave behind them sorrowing friends and acquaintances, but there is not poignant sorrow at the departure of two elderly gentlemen who have lived long lives and pass out in due course of time, having each passed the eightieth milestone in life's journey as we human beings count time. All the friends and acquaintances of their early days had gone before them.

"The mossy marbles rest
On the lips that they had pressed
In their bloom;
And the names they loved to hear
Have been carved for many a year
On the tomb."

Not so, however, was the case of the Hon. John Harvey, who in the fullness of life's activities was called from the Legislative Council chamber and his large business interests, his many social and philanthropic activities, to other fields of labor. In his departure we all feel the cutting short ere its time of a noble life.

"Yet once more, O ye laurels, and once more,
Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sere,
I come, to pluck your berries harsh and crude;
And, with forced fingers rude,
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year."

In the case of the Hon. Dr. Skelton and the Hon. A. F. Goodridge, the mellowing year had come and almost passed. In the case of the Hon. John Harvey, his earthly life ceased before full fruition. As a prominent member of the firm of Messrs. Harvey & Co., the Hon. John Harvey was vitally interested in the commerce of the Colony. As a business man he was successful, and the firm of which he was the senior member has the highest reputation for honour and efficiency in business matters. In spite of the pressure of his business responsibilities Mr. Harvey was ever ready to devote time and effort to public and philanthropic matters. His work in connection with the campaign against the ravages of tuberculosis which extended from the year 1907 to the year 1913, when the work was taken over by the Government, is a memorial to the self-sacrificing industry of this public-spirited gentleman. It is generally understood that the summer training school for teachers could not have become an accomplished fact had it not been for the large private donations of Mr. Harvey. During the war he was ever ready with any effort which lay within his power in the interests of Newfoundland reciting, and the first Newfoundlander to lay down his life for the Empire was the Hon. John Harvey's bother, Bernard, who was a commander in the Royal Navy. The passing of Mr. Harvey means a loss to Newfoundland of a citizen who easily bore his own large burdens as an outstanding business man in the community and a man who was ever ready to help to bear the burdens of others also.

These three legislative councillors stand out as an object lesson of faithful service. In the case of the Hon. Dr. Skelton and Hon. Mr. Goodridge there was fullness of life rounded out by a plenitude of years; in the Hon. Mr. Harvey an intensity of life cut short at early maturity.

"Now the laborer's task is o'er;
Now the battle-day is past;
Now upon the farther shore
Lands the voyager at last.

"There the tears of life are dried;
There its hidden things are clear;
There the work of life is tried
By a juster Judge than here.

"Father, in Thy gracious keeping,
Leave we now Thy servant sleeping."

I move, Mr. Speaker, that this resolution do now pass:

RESOLVED—That this house desires to record the expression of its deep regret at the death of the Honorable George Skelton, the Honorable Augustus F. Goodridge and the Honorable John Harvey; sometime members of the Honorable Legislative Council.

RESOLVED—That a copy of this resolution be forwarded to the relatives of the deceased honorable gentlemen.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I join with the leader of the government in the motion of condolence before the chair. Dr. Skelton lived a life of usefulness, and did noble work in the interest of Newfoundland. He was an active figure in all public matters. In the legislature he was always first in his place, and always last to leave the place. I often discussed with him mornings when we met of the conditions of his health and congratulated him on his remarkable vitality. He was one of the old land marks who did his duty quietly, fearlessly, and without ostentation. He was unassuming but earnest in his political duties as he was kind and courteous in his private life. A gentleman of the old school who bore no ill-feeling, who by his example and conduct strove to make things run smoothly and to appease bitterness and strife. We shall meet him no more here, but we can feel with an assurance strengthened by our strong faith in Divine justice, that he is now enjoying the reward of a well spent life and the happiness which is due to one who in this life bent his energies and exercised his will to make our conduct harmonize with what is good, generous, and charitable.

Next to him who has passed to the great beyond since this legislature last met, is the Hon. A. F. Goodridge, who was known to me better than any honourable member of this house. He came to Ferryland district 67 years ago to engage in the fishery business under the tuition of his father. He grew up in Ferryland and he trained in the business of the fishery there and his name in the district was ever an honored one, and his memory will long be cherished in the hearts of the people. The Goodridge firm, as you all well know, was one of the foremost, if not the foremost, of the business houses in Newfoundland, and it occupied that place because of the industry and integrity of its members, and the Hon. A. F. Goodridge was loved in the district of Ferryland and esteemed beyond the ordinary man. True the Goodridge firm made money in Ferryland as they did elsewhere, but it was ever their aim to deal fairly and generously with all; and I venture to say, sir, that when the announcement of Hon. A. F. Goodridge's death was made there were more prayers offered for him in that district than in any other part of the country. The proof of the high place which he held in the esteem of the people amongst whom he labored, is to be found in the fact that when he stood as a candidate for Ferryland district he was unanimously elected to this assembly without any opposition whatever, and I now make the statement without fear of successful contradiction that had he desired to remain the representative of that district up to the time of his death, he could have done so. An outstanding characteristic of the Goodridges was that they never saw a poor man go without assistance, and it was never known of them to turn a man away unprovided for. If, as it often happened, they were forced to cease doing business with anyone because he had got on the wrong side of the books, they sent for him and gave him the wherewithal to carry him through the winter, and it is with the deepest regret for his death that I second these resolutions. though we must not forget that his life was run. He was four score years of age, but he stuck to his business to the very last. He was not the kind that rusted out, but rather was he one who, in the truest sense, wore out, and he was just as anxious to further the business interests of the country at the last as he was in the days of his greatest activity.

And now sir, I come to the third of these honored men whom death has removed from the upper chamber, the Hon. John Harvey. I did not have as close relations with the Hon. Mr. Harvey as I did with Mr. Goodridge, but I knew him sufficiently well to know that there was no more respected man in this country than he was, and many homes are the poorer for his passing. To help was one of his weaknesses, and I say weadnesses advisedly because in not a few cases the help which he so freely gave was abused. I look upon Mr. Harvey as a national loss, for it was his object to advance every interest of the colony, and for that reason, as well as for others equally obvious, his death came as a shock to every one who knew him.

In rising, Mr. Speaker, to second these resolutions I do so, I think I may say, as one who has more experience than any other member of this chamber, and in my time of twenty-eight years there has not been an occasion when this house met but the leader of the government had to rise in his place and submit resolutions of condolence on the death of some honorable member of either one or the other branches of the legislature. It was only a few days ago that I had occasion to look up some old records, and I found there that no less than seventy-seven members have passed away since I first entered this house. After all, in spite of the excitement of political strife, we have to come here and consider resolutions of this kind. There is no member within sound of my voice who was here when I first came here. I am the oldest sitting member to-day, and I was the youngest sitting member when I first took my seat in the assembly. I second these resolutions with the greatest sincerity, and in doing so I would ask the house, and I consider it fitting that they should do so, to rise while I repeat the De Profundus for the repose of the souls of those honorable gentlemen who have gone before.

De Profundis clamavi ad te Domine, exaudi vocem meam.
Fiant aures tuae intendentes in vocem deprecationis meae
Si iniquitates observaveris, Domine; Domine, quis susinebit?
Quia apud te propitiatia esta; et propter legem tuam sustinui te, Domine.
Sustinuit anima mea in verbo ejus; speravit anima mea in Domino.
A custodia matutina usquo ad noctem speret Israel in Domino.
Quia apud Dominum misericordia: et copiosa apud eum redemptio.
Eet ipse redimet Israel ex omnibus iniquitatibus ejus.
Requiem aeternam dona eis, Domine.
Et lux perpetua luceat eis.
A porta inferi.
Erue, Domine, animas corum.
Requiescant in pace. Amen.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that a committee be appointed to draft an Address in Reply to the gracious Speech with which His Excellency has been pleased to open the present session of the Legislature.

His Excellency most appropriately opens his speech by reference to the great world war and the satisfaction which Great Britain and her allies naturally feel because of its glorious termination. Every great war has an aftermath of unrest. It is gratifying to every student of history to note that the world disturbance in matters of business, finance and general conditions are comparatively insignificant today, as compared with the turmoil which followed previous great wars.

The strength of the race which we call British has been displayed, and the loyal enthusiasm of Britishers, scattered though they may have been to the four corners of the world, throbbed in response to the Empire's call for heroic sacrifices. The strength of our Empire is not found in its territory, vast as that is, not on the number of its peoples, enormous as that is, but rather in the sturdy character of the men who call themselves Britishers. Great Britain has given to the world great men and great institutions, and the homeland as a monarchy is more democratic in the actual working out of its policy for public uplift, than many of the states who describe their form of government in more democratic language.

I have the privilege of having associated with me as the seconder of this motion Mr. F. P. LeGrow, one of the members for the District of Bay de Verde. Mr. LeGrow and I were two of the first five hundred Newfoundlanders who volunteered in response to the call to arms, and gives me, as I am sure it also gives him, very great pleasure today to be identified with the governing part of the Colony for which we fought and from whose shores we sailed on the fourth day of October, 1914, to take our part on behalf of our homeland and Empire in the fight against the foreign foe.

The war has destroyed many of the fossilized ideas of past centuries, and as a result of it the world has been forced to embark upon an era of reorganization and reconstruction. I am satisfied that the government of which I am a member is firm in its resolve to undertake a reorganization of Newfoundland conditions.

It will be noted that His Excellency states that it is the intention of the government to bring before the House a bill for the creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs. Newfoundland is years behind the times in its postal and telegraph system. Party politics has during recent years played such a prominent part in the appointment of officials that good service and efficiency has often been sacrificed, and it is my hope as one of the younger members of the government to see this remedied. In the acting Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, Mr. Halfyard, the government has made a wise selection. Mr. Halfyard has an intimate knowledge of Newfoundland affairs, and has had some considerable training in public life. He brings to his office energy and the spirit for efficient reorganization and good management.

The creation of a Department of Education is also referred to in the Speech from the Throne. Those of us who were members of the Royal Newfoundland Royal Naval Reserve realize the difficulties which we Newfoundlanders had to face because of the backwardness of our educational facilities. The creation of a Department of Education is the putting in the keystone in the educational arch of today, and will I am sure render efficient the educational system which has already accomplished so much for Newfoundland in spite of the paucity of its grants and the scattered nature of our population. Dr. Arthur Barnes, who holds the portfolio of acting minister of education, has for years been an educationist. For some time a teacher he has the practical knowledge necessary for such an important post. With Dr. Barnes' experience, special knowledge and ability, I feel sure that a new energy will be put into our educational work.

Reference is also made in the speech to the reorganization of the agricultural department. For many years past the Department of Agriculture and Mines has been of importance only in that it has absorbed large amounts of public moneys. There has been no constructive ability directed to the department; money has been spent more on the basis of political expediency than with regard to the efficient administration of an agricultural department. True it is that Newfoundland can never be expected to be a great agricultural country; a very large portion of its soil is unsuited to agricultural pursuits! the climate of many sections of the country is also adverse, but it is a crying shame that Newfoundland should have to import from the nearby provinces of Canada the ordinary vegetables, which grow so wonderfully in the soil of all sections of the country. I feel confident that under the guidance of Dr. Alexander Campbell, who is himself an agricultural enthusiast, the Department of Agriculture will be greatly improved.

The Department of Public Works is being reorganized, and an effort is being made to put the matter of government contracts upon a business-like basis. Graft is eliminated from the program of the new administration. Some people undoubtedly regard the new government as a stingy government, but the people of the country who pay the bills will appreciate honest, earnest effort on behalf of the Department of Public Works to secure reasonable value for money expended.

The Department of Marine and Fish eries has at its head one who has achieved great success as an organizer of the fishermen of the country and as head of an important fishermen's co-operative enterprise. Mr. Coaker has the confidence of the fishermen of the North particularly, and though I am not a fisherman yet I am satisfied that measures will be brought forward by the Government on his recommendation as Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the improvement of the working out of matters in connection with his Department, the development of our fisheries, the standardization of the cull and the improvement of the cure. The appointment of trade agents in Newfoundland's principal foreign fish markets will be measures of incalculable benefit to this our stable industry.

I am proud of the opportunity which has been given me of moving that this committee be appointed; I am proud of the opportunity which the electorate has given me of identifying myself with the government party, feeling confident as I do that the Prime Minister and those who are his associates in the council chamber have one ambition and one ambition only, and that is to serve our Island Home honestly, honourably and to the best of their ability as statesmen. I take this opportunity to congratulate you on the great honor conferred on you. I beg, Mr. Speaker, to move that this committee be appointed.

SERGT. F. LeGROW—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of seconding the motion so ably put before the House by the Hon. and gallant Member for Burgeo—Lieut. Small. I am sure the House has listened with a great deal of attention to the splendid speech with which Mr. Small has made.

I would first of all take this opportunity to extend to you, Mr. Speaker, my sincere congratulations on the high honor which has been conferred upon you. I feel sure, Sir, you will uphold the honor and dignity of the high position you now hold and that the best traditions of the House will be safeguarded by you in your discharge of your high official duties.

The country will, I feel sure, be pleased to learn from the Speech from the Throne that the Government, on the representation of the Prime Minister, has succeeded in securing from the British Government three ships, a full description of which has already been published in the city press. One of these steamers is a sloop of considerable merit and will no doubt be used by the Department of Marine and Fisheries in the interests of our fisherfolk. The need of such a ship has been felt for years. The fishermen making St. John's in the fall of the year have experienced very many dangers which, we hope, will now be reduced to a minimum by the use of this steamer. Just what the exact nature of the work she will be employed in I am not in a position to say. I hope the Government will be able to see its way clear to have the vessel employed as a tug boat and salving ship for rescue work around the coast. Had we such a vessel here in years gone by, many a one now missing would today be with us.

The general trade of the Colony will, I fell sure, appreciate the efforts of the Government in the business-like manner in which it has handled our coastwise transportation problem. The service has grown so of late years that the present two steamers, "Portia" and "Prospero," are inadequate to cope with the demands. The purchase of new steamers for these routes will greatly facilitate trade matters, and as far as the western section of the Colony is concerned, will I hope be the means of our getting a large share of that trade which today goes to Canadian ports by reason of the shipping facilities afforded by Canadian steamers plying on that coast. Newfoundland is inthe making, and the efforts of the Government to improve transportation is one, Sir, that I am sure will have the heartiest support of all sections of the Colony.

In connection with this matter I sincerely hope the Government will be able to improve shipping matters. It is a great annoyance and unnecessary expense to both the trade and the consignees at present. Teams laden with freight for Northern and Western ports are delayed hours and in some cases a whole day, awaiting their turn to the coastal wharf. No fault can be found with Messrs. Bowring Bros. They are doing, and I think it will be readily admitted, have always done their best in this connection. The same can be said of the officials of the Newfoundland Produce Co. I hope, Sir, ways and means will be devised whereby a quicker and better service will be given the trade in the matter of shipping goods by our coastal steamers.

As one who represents a fishing constituency, I feel it my duty to congratulate the Government on the manner in which it grappled with and handled our staple industry immediately on its assumption to power. The fisheries of this Colony will for years to come, maybe for ever, be the main staple export of Newfoundland, and anything the Government can do to improve both the cure and the marketing of our fish, should receive the heartiest and sincere co-operation of all those who have the best interests of our people and common country at heart.

I will admit a great deal of misunderstanding was caused when the Government's new fish regulations were first promulgated, but I think it will be admitted by even the bitterest enemies of these regulations that Newfoundland has gained a good deal from them, and in this respect I submit, Sir, that a deal of credit is due to the good work done on behalf of the Colony and the great interest taken in the welfare of our fishermen by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These regulations have given Newfoundland fisheries a good and new name in the European markets. They have been the means of bringing more forcibly to the notice of our foreign buyers that Newfoundland is determined to improve her cure of codfish and that in the future those who buy our fishery products will get the best value for the money they pay.

We have both heard and read quite a lot about the Italian Consorzio and the alleged Hawés-Coaker combine. I take it, Sir, that there are not a hundred intelligent persons in Newfoundland who ever took seriously the claims of those who for purely partisan political purposes were prepared to jeopardize the fishing industry of this Colony. I have had faith in these regulations from the first, and I am firmly convinced that in the very near future the wisdom of the Government's action in the matter will be so apparent to all that there will be no room whatever for even a difference of opinion as to their usefulness, not to speak of the benefits that will accrue to Newfoundland and her hardy sons who wrest from the bosom of the Atlantic the cod that makes this country self-supporting.

Party politics have played a big part in these regulations. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries asked for unity from all in what he and his fishery advisory board thought would be for the general good of the country, but he was forced to face unnecessary abuse and a deal of ridicule in doing his duty.

At the time these regulations were put in force the foreign markets were in a bad shape financially as a result of the war. Financial credits were in a tangled skein, and it required boldness, courage and faithfulness of purpose to meet the situation. The Government met all three and did its duty to the country, and I feel sure the fishermen who lives by the fisheries will appreciate and give due credit to the Prime Minister and his party associates for their work in their behalf.

There is another paragraph in the Speech from the Throne to which I would refer, and that is the provision for the construction of workingmen's houses. We will all admit that there never was such a pressing need for houses as there is to-day. The world over governments are confronted with the same difficulty. In England there is a countrywide movement on foot to cope with the situation. Municipal and state authorities are taking the matter up and the people themselves are helping in every way to improve the present deplorable conditions that exist. Here in our own city Hon. John Anderson, assisted by Hon. M. P. Gibbs and Mr. Jas. McGrath, until recently President of the L. S. P. U., have done yeomen work in this particular, and the people of St. John's will be pleased to observe in the Speech from the Throne that the newly incorporated company are pushing ahead in this matter and that they hope to construct 30 houses this year.

This is a matter that deserves the closest attention of this legislature and I am pleased to observe that the government anticipate being able to assist the company in their laudable undertaking.

The conditions under which a large portion of our city laborers are living is indeed appalling and nothing should be left undone by the government and the citizens generally to help in the improving of present conditions.

The new company is one which should command the respect and confidence of all investors and I am sure that the investing public will, when the call is made, be only too willing to invest in such a proposition. The government may not be able to do all that it may be asked to do in this matter, but it is pleasing to learn from his excellency's speech that the matter is being recognized and that the government is prepared to deal with the question. The question is a big one, and for that reason deserves to be handled in a national spirit.

The present day living conditions are none too pleasant for many famlies. Houses are at a premium and whilst the preposed erection of 30 new dwellings will not altogether fill the want, it will be encouragement to the public to know that the matter is being dealth with on sound safe lines and that an honest attempt is being made to improve this pressing necesssity.

I feel sure that the city residents will apreciate the manner in which this matter is being dealt with by the Government, and I also feel sure that all will co-operate with the Dominion Building Association in their great undertaking.

We owe it to the younger generation of today to provide them with comforts of a decent home, and we owe it to the wage-earner to see that he gets the opportunity to give his family a decent, comfortable home. The home is the cradle of the country and whatever is done for the younger generation is the country's gain in the future.

And now, Mr. Speaker, allow me to refer to that paragraph in His Excellency's speech which touches the heart of the country. I refer to the heroic part of Newfoundland's sons in the world war. Having served in the ranks myself, and having fought on the field of battle, I may be pardoned in speaking of the matter to some extent. I am mindful that Lieut. Small, Lieut.-Col. Sullivan and myself are the first soldier representatives to sit in the Newfoundland Legislature, and I regard it as a great personal honor to be privileged to second that motion so ably moved by my soldier comrade. We have seen the sorrowful and the humorous side of the war. We have seen men fall before us, and we have faced death as did many a brave fellow in that fight for which millions gave their lives. We stand today, soldier representatives in the Newfoundland House of Assembly, and I trust that in the years to come those who regard us as their spokesmen in their claims for recognition will be able to say that we have fulfilled our duty both to the living and to the dead.

The members of the Honourable House of Assembly, in common with the people of Newfoundland, will be gratified to learn that the Dominion has acquired the site of Beaumont Hamel—the battlefield where our Regiment won imperishable fame on July 1st, 1916. It is, perhaps, a great privilege, as one who has served with them in their bright moments and dark hours to pay tribute to the excellent esprit de corps which was characteristic of our brothers in arms overseas.

"None shall eclipse them;
The day grows old, but with the setting of the sun
New visions arise;
They were our brothers;
Britons all they lived until they died."

The most glorious dream of our Canadian cousins was that some day —when the war guns had been silenced and the sun had risen on a peaceful world—they would erect on the indulating ground of Vimy and Messines, and on the far-flung areas of their battlefront suitable memorials to their gallant dead. How much more inspiring — how much more thrilling—is the realization of our dream—the purchase by Newfoundland of the very ground where our men advanced and paid the price of Empire, leaving behind a place sanctified and hallowed by the young blood of Great Britain's oldest possession. Today many of our noblest and best sleep quietly in the silent places where the scarlet poppies grow in rich profusion—to their sacred memory the purchase of the site of Beaumont Hamel is the graceful tribute of a grateful country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think I could not do better than quote the words of the immortal Lincoln in his never-to-be-forgotten Gettysburg speech. We have secured Beaumont Hamel as a last resting place for those who gave their lives that the nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this. But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men living and dead who struggled there, have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note or long remember what we do here; but it can never forget what they did. It is for us the living, rather, to dedicate here to the unfinished work which they who fought for have so nobly advanced.

It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us, that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave that last full measure of devotion; and that we highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, and that this country, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that a Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth.

I think, Sir, I have covered the most important parts contained in the Speech from the Throne, and have therefore much pleasure in seconding the motion so ably and logically moved by Lieut. Small, that a select committee be appointed by this House to draft a reply to the Speech from the Throne, with which His Excellency has been pleased to open this first session of the 24th General Assembly of the Newfoundland Legislature.

It was moved by Mr. Small and seconded by Mr. LeGrow that an address of thanks be presented to his excellency the governor, in reply to the gracious speech with which he had been pleased to open the present session of the legislature, and that a select committee be appointed to adopt such address in reply, the committee to consist of Mr. Small, Mr. LeGrow, Hon. Minister of Justice, Mr. Fox and Mr. Sullivan.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—I rise for the purpose of congratulating the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to His Excellency's Speech. As has been stated they are the first of the soldier representatives in the House of Assembly. I congratulate them on the manner in which they have praised the Speech from the Throne. Mr. Speaker, out of respect for those two gentlemen, I have decided to reserve my remarks till the next sitting of the House. Both these gentlemen are Blue Puttee men; both those are two of the first who rallied to the call in 1914. I remember quite well the day they left on the ill-fated Florizel. I was one of the members of the Government, and when that call came Newfoundland wasn't in the position financially that she is in today. It seemed impossible, I may tell you, to the government of the day, that five hundred men could be rallied from Newfoundland, to go and fight our unteered in the first of the war than we can ever repay. All that the battles. Some went at it diligently, not with much hope, but what do they find? Men like the mover and seconder rallied to the call. They were the men who led the way, and that is the reason I reserve my remarks till the next sitting of this House. I have much pleasure in congratulating the mover and seconder.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with the Leader of the Opposition in congratulating the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to His Excellency's Speech. It is with more than mere formal courtesy. We owe a great deal more to those who vol- Board of Pensions and Civil Re-Establishment Committee can do is not too much for the boys who took their chance in face of fearful odds, to do honor to the Empire.

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act respecting the effect and application of certain Acts subsequent to Consolidated Statutes (Third Series)."

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled. "An Act to amend the Industrial Societies Act, 1919."

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act to amend Cap. 41 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled: 'Of the Newfoundland Medical Board.' "

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Codfish."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act to amend the Food Control Act, 1917."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act respecting the Department of Public Works."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that on tomorrow he would ask leave to introduce a bill entitled: "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs."

Sir M. P. Cashin gave Notice of Question.

Sir J. C. Crosbie gave Notice of Question.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled the following documents:

Report of Newfoundland Savings Bank, 1919.

Report of Harbor Grace Industrial Society, 1919.

Report of Newfoundland War Contingent Association.

Report of Department of Militia up to March 31st, 1919.

Thanks of House of Lords and Commons for the services of Newfoundland Soldiers and Sailors in the Great War.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until tomorrow, Thursday, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, April 22, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from several of the inhabitants of Rushoon, Placentia Bay, asking that that place be made a port of call of the s.s. Argyle. Those people over there are laboring under great disadvantages; and while I am on this matter I would like to ask my hon. friend, Mr. Foote, member for Burin, to support this petition, as Rushoon divides the two districts in two, and it would be a great benefit to his district as well as to the District of Placentia and

St. Mary's. Under present conditions the people of Rushoon have to go to Oderin and Flat Island for freight and it is a great hardship in winter time. The same applies regarding the mail. People have to travel to Baine Harbor and probably have to wait there for hours, and besides, it is difficult to get a place to stay.

I am sure that the Hon. Mr. Foote will be very pleased to support my colleagues and myself in having this matter attended to. It only means a delay of half an hour to have the Argyle call at Rushoon. I have great pleasure in presenting this petition, and ask that it be passed over to the department to which it relates.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I have very great pleasure in giving my unqualified support to this very reasonable request coming from the people of Rushoon. Rushoon has the unique distinction, if I may use the word, at the present moment, of being represented by five members of this House, by the Hons. Messrs. Foote and Cheeseman, members for Burin as well as by the representatives for Placentia and St. Mary's. This very reasonable request coming before the House, therefore, I am sure, and in fact I have every confidence will be granted.

I may say that coastal facilities generally on the West Coast, not only on the west side of Placentia Bay, but right in the bay and up to Burin District, are very unsatisfactory. This matter of coastal service has frequently come before the House in previous years and I feel that with one steamer plying on Placentia Bay that it is utterly impossible to improve the service. We should not have to wait for the next session of this Legislature to have this matter adjusted. Each and every member of any side should combine and throw party politics to the wind and try to inaugurate a service giving these people what they request. Every member of this House who has had occasion to travel knows that practically the same condition of affairs exists in other districts. The only way we can overcome this great obstacle is by giving the people better and more adequate coastal service and this can only be done by putting an extra steamer in Placentia Bay. There are a number of places in Placentia Bay where the people have no communication with the outside world at all. The people are so situated that they are absolutely isolated and the main reason is because the Argyle is called upon to do more work than she can perform.

Now I hope that the Government will give this matter their serious consideration, not as in the past when petitioners asked for a resonable request refer the matter to the department of the government to which it related and neglect to give it any further attention.

MR. SINNOTT:—I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition presented by my colleague.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—It affords me great pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition presented by the hon. member for Placentia and St. Mary's, Mr. Walsh. The coastal service generally requires a thorough improvement and the incoming Government intends making improvements, and I am sure will take the coastal service proposition in hand and give it the attention it so deservedly requires. The Government will make improvements around that part of the coast touching the District of Placentia Bay. I have approached the Government on the matter and they will give it the serious and careful consideration that it requires. As I have said, it has contemplated making improvements to the coastal service during the coming year.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition and endorse all that has been said about it. As Mr. Walsh has said it is utterly impossible for one boat to give satisfactory service in Placentia Bay. On this section of the coast, business is very great and demands greater attention in the steamship service. I shall sincerely do all in my power to have this done and believe the Government will do something and do it properly to bring about a better state of affairs in the steamship service of Placentia Bay. There is no bay in the country whose needs are more pressing than this one and I sincerely trust that before long there will be more than one boat plying in Placentia Bay.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present petition which has been presented to me from the inhabitants of Haystack, Placentia Bay. This House, no doubt, is fully aware that in last November, terrific storms swept this part of the bay, and from the storm of the 9th of November past the people of Haystack suffered considerably. This place is built on a flat piece of land which is a narrow neck and from the above storm great havoc resulted to the people of this settlement. The petition is signed by thirty-five electors and they ask that a breakwater be built so that any grea damage in the future will be prevented. Should any great storm take place it is likely that several houses will be washed away. Considering the great damage that the petitioners have suffered I think that something should be done. They ask for the sum of five thousand dollars to build this breakwater. Owing to the gravity and the g rave nature of the damage that may occur at any time, I think it is advisable to send out the outport inspector or the Government Engineer to Haystack and make a report on this matter. I trust that the Government will see its way clear to meet the prayer of this petition after receiving the report of the engineer or the ma n whom they may send. I have much pleasure, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in giving this petition my hearty support.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I beg leave, Mr. Speaker, to present a petition from the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland. I think there could not be anything more important to this House than a petition from the executive body of this association. The hon. member for Placentia, Mr. Walsh, in presenting the petition from the people of Rushoon said that the petitioners occupied the unique position of having five representatives in this House, and that the petition ought to have their support, and in the same way I feel sure that every member of the House will support this petition and particularly the three honorable gentlemen of His Majesty's forces which are represented here. The petition prays that an act be passed incorporating the association, and this is asked because the liberality and generosity of the people of Newfoundland has enabled them to have a surplus of money on their hands left over from their patriotic exertions. They desire that they be able to devote the same to some purpose. The women of Newfoundland through their executive committee, decided to ask this House to pass an act incorporating the association, so that they will be at liberty to spend the money in any way they desire. I may say to the honorable members of the House that this is a little out of the ordinary, and so that the members may understand what is asked I will read the first paragraph. (Reads 1st. para.) I feel sure that as far as this House is concerned it will give effect to the prayer of this petition, and I hope that in a very short time to present to the House an act or bill embodying the request of the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland, when every member will be enabled to give expression of their admiration and sincere gratitude to the women of this dominion who did so much for the comfort of the soldiers and sailors of this country during the war.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in giving my hearty support to this petition.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition.

MR. LeGROW:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting this petition.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I have much pleasure in joining with the Attorney General who has presented and the honorable and gallant gentlemen who have supported the prayer of the executive committee of the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland, asking that the association be incorporated for patriotic and philanthropic purposes. The work of the association during the years of war was of incalculable value to Newfoundland's fighting forces and meant a very great deal of work for the ladies of the association and much self-sacrifice on their part. This organization represents the leaders of patriotic and philanthropic work not merely in St. John's, but throughout the entire country and did much to stimulate recruiting and provide comforts for our soldiers and sailors while overseas. I feel sure that the house will gladly accord unanimous passage to the act of incorporation which will at a later date be introduced on behalf of the executive committee of the Women's Patriotic Association by the Attorney General.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I am glad to extend to Sir Michael Cashin, the Leader of the Opposition, the courtesy of such delay as he may desire for preparation for the debate on this motion.

HON. SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that the adoption of the report to the Address and Reply to His Excellency's speech be deferred till to-morrow. Sufficient time has not been given to the members on this side of the House to consider the Speech from the Throne.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—If it is the desire of the Leader of the Opposition that the report as to the Address and Reply to the Speech from the Throne be deferred till to-morrow it shall be done.

Mr. Small, on behalf of the Select Committee appointed to draft a reply to His Excellency's speech, presented the report of the Select Committee as follows:

To His Excellency Sir Charles Alexander Harris, K.C.M.G., C.B., C.V.O., Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the Dominion of Newfoundland and its Dependencies:

May it please Your Excellency—

We, the Commons of Newfoundland, in Legislative Session assembled, beg to thank Your Excellency for the Gracious Speech Your Excellency has addressed to both houses of the Legislature.

(Signed) H. H. SMALL,
F. P. LeGROW,
W. R. WARREN.

Sir J. C. Crosbie asked the Acting Minister of Shipping to lay on the table of the House a copy of all cables and correspondence between his department and the United States Shipping Board with reference to the importation of a cargo of coal in the month of March.

Mr. Sullivan gave notice of question.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow, Friday, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, April 23, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. MacDONNELL—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Codroy and Grand River in respect to the ferry service at the mouth of Grand River. This matter is of great importance and the people there have looked for an improvement so long and the pressing needs of a ferry boat has not been brought before the attention of the House. The freight to the settlement of Codroy and the road between Codroy and Grand River was brought across from the mouth of Grand River in a ferry and the conditions there are these: There is a large scow aboard which the teams are driven and then it is towed across to the opposite side by a punt. When there is a strong current on this part of the river the whole ferry service is tied up. Some years ago a petition was presented on this point asking that a motor boat be used instead. This matter was referred to the Department of Public Works but nothing became of it. This petition which I now present is signed by about one hundred people, in fact by everybody in that section. The signatures to it include the ones of the clerymen of the district and all those of the representative people. I am sure, Sir, that being a matter of great consequence it will receive the attention which it deserves. I hope, Sir, that this petition will not be overlooked as the previous ones were and ask that it be referred to the department to which it belongs.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the inhabitants of Pass Island, Hermitage Bay, in the District of Fortune Bay. It asks that the island be connected with the telegraph system of the country. Like the petition presented by my friend the member for St. George's, this matter has been before the House already and I trust that this petition will not be treated in the same manner as the previous ones on this point. Pass Island is of course an island and requires a cable to be connected with the telegraph system. Pass Island is quite an industrious place in Fortune Bay and I ask that the prayer of the petition be acceded to. I take this opportunity of presenting it before the Estimates come on before the House so that I may impress the House and my colleagues in the Executive Council of the necessity of the approval of this petition, and I ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Northern Arm, Exploits Bay. This place is about four miles from Botwood, the nearest telegraph office. They ask that telephone and telegraph system be extended there. There are poles extending to this place and it would only mean an expenditure of placing the wires. I hope that the prayer of this petition will be granted and ask that it be referred to the Department of Postal Telegraphs.

MR. JONES:—I beg to support the prayer of this petition as presented by my colleague, Mr. Jennings. This is a very necessary facility to the inhabitants of Northern Arm and I trust that it will receive careful attion.

MR. SAMSON:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support this petition of my colleague from the people of Northern Arm, Exploits Bay, ande hope that it will receive the attention which it deserves.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. the Prime Minister to lay on the table of the House copies of all correspondence respecting the engaging of the two auditors from the United States who have been in the city for the past two months, also a statement showing when they came under pay, the amount of their daily remuneration, and when it is anticipated their work will be completed.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Hon. the Minister of Education to report what work, if any, in the nature of organization of his department has been done since his assumption of office; also what staff, if any, is therein employed; and what is the nature of the work of such staff.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my colleagues in congratulation to the mover and seconder of this address and to say that they have acquitted themselves in a manner that reflects great credit on them as debators and proves that they have the qualifications which are needed to make them successful and creditable members of the Legislature. It is fortunate that the Government selected for this work men who by their addresses put some force and earnestness into the proceedings, as in my opinion the speech itself is flat and in a great measure meaningless, requiring the vivifying enthusiasm which men of well-known gallantry and ability displayed by the gentlemen who moved and seconded this Speech from the Throne.

I join with the expression of pride contained in the Speech from the Throne at the marvellous success of the Allied armies and thankfulness at the successful termination of the great conflict, and in doing this would wish to put on record my very high appreciation of the services rendered this cause by the men from this Dominion, who in the Army and Navy displayed such exceptional valor and bravery. Newfoundland has reason to be proud of the part played by our heroes in this conflict which has placed us before the world in such a light that we could never otherwise attain and proved that for daring and exceptional bravery our soldiers and sailors take equal place with the best in the British Empire. We owe a debt of gratitude to these men which I trust will never be forgotten and it is the duty of the Government to see that proper provision is made for dependents and for those who have suffered disability which prevents them from taking up the civilian duties which they occupied previous to the conflict.

The action of the Government with regard to the regulations governing the export of fish does not meet with popular approval. I think we all admit that some kind of export regulations are absolutely necessary in the best interests of this great big fishing industry; evidently the present regulations are far from satisfactory and there is great diversity of opinion as to the results that have been attained by their enforcement. Opponents of the regulations contend that owing to the fish regulations this country has lost millions of dollars this year on the sale of codfish. In the other hand supporters of the fish regulations insist that if it had not been for the fish regulations fish would have been very much lower than it is at the present time. It would be a very great pity if the fish regulations was made a party politics discussion. Newfoundland interests can best be served by consolidating the very best talent we have in formulating legislation that will have for its object, the best interest of the country.

For many years the men engaged in the export of fish have been trying to adopt measures to control prices abroad, but unless you can have the loyal support of all the exporters, no control is possible. In the past it has been found that there was always some person ready to undersell his competitors and break the market; naturally then the only solution, as far as I can see, is some form of government control. Government control is objectional in a way and party politicsislikely to creep in. There must be some way out, and I would suggeset as a solution that in the event of an advisory board being formed it would be to the best interests of the fishing industry to cut out politics and place members or supporters of the Opposition as well as members or supporters of the Government on the advisory board.

We have now on record in connection with the present regulations protests from men who have been actively engaged in this industry and who from the knowledge of the circumstances are qualified to pronounce intelligently on the matter. Those men contend that the regulations are destructive to the best interests of the Dominion. We have seen that some of those who, in the early stages of the fish regulations were loud in support of the system to be adopted, are now vehemently denouncing the regulations and pleading for their cancellation. Only a week ago a prominent merchant naw in London cabled his firm as follows: "My opinion regulations now in force are detrimental to trade interests; if continued, curtail supplies to minimum." A message like I have referred to coming from a man like Mr. Monroe compels one to think. If the regulations as they stand are not perfect, then let us all get together and give the best that is in us and try and form some satisfactory and workable policy that will be acceptable to the great majority of the trade. I have been informed that since the regulations were put in force fish has dropped from 10 to 30 shillings a quintal, and that while the regulations kept the merchants from selling and making a fair profit our competitors came in and sold their fish.

It is agreed by many who are in accord with the regulations now in force that if there had been no regulations fish would be now down to 40 shillings a quintal. Opponents of the fish regulations on the other hand ask if the regulations kept the price of fish up, how is it that we today cannot sell our fish. From what one can learn it seems to be a case now of every one who has fish to sell getting under cover and trying to get out of the mess the best way they possibly can.

If the present regulations are detrimental to the trade of the country and especially injurious to the fishermen of the country, who will be hampered by not receiving supplies from the merchants who are curtailing their business on account of the regulations, then it is up to us all to unite and try to re-establish confidence amongst the trade and fishermen and be prepared to meet competition with other countries. Let us insist on a better cure, have a strict cull and make our fish a good marketable food commodity. Let us endeavour to get new markets and we should at once start in with propaganda work in South America; there must be great possibilities in the Argentine, Paraquay, Uruguay and other South American Republics.

I desire to express my congratulations to the Rev. Major Nangle who has been placed in charge of matters connected with the concentration and registration of the graves of our heroic dead in Europe. With Major Nangle this is a labor of love as well as duty. He as chaplain of the forces worked for their welfare, spiritual and temporal. The soldiers loved and venerated him for his faithful services as he admired and loved them for their bravery and loyalty, and it is fitting that he should now search the battlefield for the remains of those sacred dead whose memory will live as long as this Dominion lasts. The purchase of Beaumont Hamel battlefield which is associated in the minds of all of us with so many tragic memories commends itself to me as I am sure it does to all who have at heart the interests of those gallant boys of ours who fought there and who reverence the memory of those who laid down their lives there, and I greatly regret that the lady collectors who undertook to raise the funds for the purchase of that historic field did not meet with a greater measure of success. I trust, however, that they will meet with more ready response during their present efforts.

Reference is made in the Speech from the Throne to the increased surplus of the past year. This must be extremely gratifying to the Leader of the Opposition, Sir M. P. Cashin, to whose exceptional qualifications as a financier as well as to his unquestioned ability as an executive worker this condition of affairs is solely due, and I trust that the present holder of the office of Minister of Finance, Hon. H. J. Brownrigg, will be able to boast of the splendid surpluses which characterised the regime of the late Minister, and that he will be able to measure up to the high standard followed by his predecessor.

I am glad to note that the establishment of an improved survey of ships is contemplated, as the necessity for this cannot be exaggerated. It must be clear to all seafaring men as well as to others who are competent to judge, that up to the present time the buildings of ships in this country has not been attended with that care which is necessary for the safeguarding of life. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, the introduction of a strict and impartial survey will meet with general approval.

The creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs does not impress me as being by any means necessary. I think, Sir, that this is rather a retrograde step than otherwise, and I am sure that confidence in the Government will not be strengthened by the addition of another departmental head. He will not be independent in any sense because he will have to vote according to the dictation of his leader. The manner in which the Postmaster General was treated is to be deplored. In him the country had an able man, a man of impeachable character and whose work of re-construction in the departments of the Post Office and Telegraphs reflects the highest credit upon him. It is apparent that in the creation of this department the Government has been actuated by political expediency rather than by any thought of the best interests of the country. I see my hon. friend the Minister of Justice taking notes and I know by the smile on his face that he intends to tell us that the Government did not dismiss the Postmaster General, and perhaps it is true that they did not dismiss him, but nevertheless, they made things so obnoxious for him that there was nothing left for him compatible with dignity but to resign.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to another matter of Coastal and Inland Transportation. This is a matter in connection with which I hope the Government will take immediate steps towards improvement. The Reid Newfoundland Co. have been subjected to much abuse both in the press and on the platform in spite of the fact they have done all that could be done under the circumstances. I hold no brief for the Reid Newfoundland Co.. I owe them nothing and they owe me nothing, but we must be fair and admit that they have done exceptionally well under exceptionally adverse circumstances, and it would be indeed regrettable if they were forced to suspend the operations of the system because of the antagonistic tactics of the Government. The Government and the Reid Nfld. Co. should, in my opinion, pull together, and it will serve no purpose for the Government and the Government press to continue as they have been doing for some time past.

Now, Sir, I regret that I have searched the Speech from the Throne for reference to the many rosy promises contained in the manifesto issued by the Leader of the Government last October. I have failed to see anything with reference to the promised increase in the Poor Relief Grant which was used during the election campaign with such vigor, and indeed it is difficult to see how the poor widows and orphans find it possible to exist on the pittance they now get in face of the present high cost of living. Old Age Pensions was another catch-cry used by our opponents, and one which proved good bait. Old age pensions were to be increased to meet all cases of the aged poor and these promises even went to the extent of including women as well as men, but still I see no mention of that now in the Speech from the Throne, nor do I see any provision whatever for our poor old worn-out fishermen. Nevertheless there seems to be no scarcity of money. Apparently there is money to burn. We are able to bring auditors from the United States to go over the public accounts because we do not consider our own auditor general competent, but Mr. Speaker, when the accounts of these men are finished we will find that the cost of bringing them here has been astounding, and it will be seen that the amount expended for this purpose will have been sufficient to meet the demands of several more old age pensioners. Is this the way in which Mr. Squires is going to carry out his promises as to the saving the peoples money. What have these men found out that would justify their having been brought here. I say, Sir, that it is not fair to the auditor general.

Then there is the matter of Education. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, there are places in this Island home of ours where there are from thirty of forty children who could go to school if they had a school to go to, but we find nothing to indicate that there is any intention of doing anything to improve the matter in this regard. This is not what people had expected. The same may be said of the high cost of living. I have yet to see what the government has done to lower prices or in any way make things easy for the people to whom they promised so much. We have flour up to eighteen dollars a barrel, molasses two dollors a gallon, and coal nineteen dollars, when we can get it, and it is rationed out to you in very small lots at that.

Prohibition, I would like to ask if it is the intention of the Prime Minister to bring in a bill to amend the present prohibition law as promised by him in his manifesto; the law as it now stands is not impartial, the man with the money and the pull can get all the liquor he requires, but the poor man must be content with Essence of Vanilla, Wood Alcohol, concoctions of Tanlac, Copper Paint and two in one Shoe Polish; would it not be much better to give the people an opportunity of drinking decent beer, good whiskey, rum, or gin, than drinking the dope as they are now doing. I hope to deal more extensively with this matter at a later date on the floor of this house.

I notice that an attempt is being made to settle the Labrador boundary. I hope our interests will be well looked after and that everything will be done to see that there is no territory taken from Newfoundland and handed over to Canada.

I am glad to note that it is the intention of the Government to wind up the Department of Militia and the Department of Shipping at an early date, it should be quite feasable now to let the Pay Office and Pensions Board handle everything in connection with the Militia Department, the sooner the the Department of Militia is wound up the more money will be saved by the taxpayers. The reorganization of the Department of Marine and Fisheries will have the support of all who have the best interests of the country at heart. The creation of an Information Bureau and Scientific Research Department should, if properly organized, be of financial benefit to the country.

With reference to the problems of Coastal Service, this is a matter of great importance to the whole country. Traffic has increased so tremendously the last ten years that the facilities offered the public are not half able to meet the requirements. I trust the Government will see its way clear to put on a boat from Trepassey to Placentia, and an extra steamer on Placentia Bay. The Argyle is not large enough to meet the requirements of Placentia Bay and Burin District. A large number of the people of Placentia Bay reside on the islands and it is most important that much better coastal service than they have at the present time should be provided. I trust that when arrangements are being made for additional coastal service boats, that Placentia, St. Mary's and Trepassey Bays will not be overlooked.

Another matter which needs immediate attention and which is mentioned in the Speech is the re-organization of the Department of Agriculture and Mines. We are not getting half the revenue that we should from this department, owing to the fact that hundreds of square miles of our timber resources are held up by speculators and not being developed in accordance with the conditions in the Crown Lands Act. I trust that at an early date that the Prime Minister who is representing the Minister of Agriculture and Mines in this House, will introduce a bill that will have for its object the cancellation of all timber grants now held by speculators, and when cancelled should be handed back to the Crown and sold by public auction, and a further revenue could be derived when the lands are developed by charging a stumpage of so much per thousand feet, F. B.M. There is another very important matter which comes under the Department of Agriculture and Mines, that is the question of reafforestation. I have discussed this matter with the Hon. Dr. Campbell and explained the great financial benefits that could be obtained by scientific re-afforestation. England and Scotland have been working on scientific lines for a number of years, and since the war all the Dominions, with the exception of Newfoundland, are having men trained so that they can go in for re-afforestation on scientific lines. The Hon. Dr. Campbell seems to be in accord with the idea of conservation of our forest areas, and I trust that his sound judgment will prevail on the Government and induce them to make a handsome vote for the establishment of garden nurseries, with a view to re-afforestation in the years to come. A grant of $100,000 now and an annual grant of $20,000 a year for the next twenty or thirty years would give a national asset that in fifty years would be worth at least $30,-000,000.

I was no believer in re-afforestation until I went overseas and saw what had been done in Scotland. One small plot of land only three-quarters of a square mile in area was purchased by the British Government for £45,000. This timber was planted one hundred years ago, but had reached maturity at eighty years. In addition to the amount of £45,000 paid by the government for the standing timber at that time, the former owners had already sold several thousand pounds worth of timber from the same plot. The results obtained in Scotland could, I feel confident, be duplicated here, and in my opinion, any money spent on re-afforestation would yield handsome returns.

MR. MOORE:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to engage the attention of the House while I refer to some of the important matters that do not appear in the Speech from the Throne, but before doing so let me tender to you my heartiest congratulations upon your election as Speaker of this House. I assure you that you will receive no trouble from the junior member for Ferryland. I must also extend my sincere congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to His Excellency's Speech. These gentlemen, I feel sure, ought to be proud of the position they occupy in this Assembly on its opening, and those who were associated with them overseas must also feel delighted with the able and creditable manner in which they have acquitted themselves today.

Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne, to my mind, and I have had an experience of twelve years in this House, is the most inflated balloon that ever went up in this House. It was manufactured in the Executive Council and brought up and handed to the Governor to be read on opening day. In his speech there is a paragraph that has appeared in every speech during my time in the Assembly. That paragraph has reference to the boundary line at Labrador. In other respects, it differs from any Speech read in this House, as it is "much ado about nothing."

In the first paragraph of the Speech His Excellency says that he is very thankful that the great war is over and the Government is about to do something for those who took part in it; but, Mr. Speaker, when we look around the House, we can see for ourselves the positions that have been filled in the past few weeks, and will show you what they intend to do for the soldiers and sailors who participated in the great war.

The sergeant-at-arms, who is a personal friend of mine, and who is a pensioner, has taken the place of a man who sent three sons overseas. Why not increase his pension and give this position to a returned soldier, many of whom, though maimed, could fill this position, and who, on coming into this House, would remind us of the great sacrifices that were made. Take the position of Mr. Winter, the solicitor of this House. There was an application made to the Government from a man who served three years in the war, but it was turned down. This man was rejected because Mr. Winter had a pull with the Minister of Justice and therefore got the position. Mr. Carter, another particular friend of mine, was one whom we all realize went overseas with the Blue Puttees and for this reason got the position which he deserves. The supervisor of debates in this House and the supervisor in the Upper House, were appointed because of their great war services, and yet we are told that the Government is working in the interest of returned soldiers and sailors. You might say, why did not your government do it when they were in? I will say, in all sincerity, that any position that came before the Government for a position to be filled by a returned soldier, was acceded to as far as possible. Take the position today in the Custom House, a position made vacant by an old friend of mine, the late H. Broderick. That position was also filled by a returned soldier who was defeated in St. John's West. There is another gentleman who met his Waterloo in that District, who, as a prominent supporter of the Government, received every consideration and recognition of his services. The Government used every means, legitimate and illegitimate, to provide him with a seat, but failed, and, as a last resort, placed him in the Legislative Council, where today he holds the position of Minister of Agriculture and Mines. We were expecting that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who, in his public career, has claimed to be consistent, would have raised an objection to the holding of this position by a member of the Upper House. I would ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to look back over the last eight years; I would ask him to look to the time when he defeated Mr. Blandford in the good old District of Bonavista. My friends, Mr. Winsor and Mr. Abbott, will remember that he held forth from this side of the House with all the intensity that he could muster, and we are all aware of his ability as speaker. He condemned the illegality of Mr. Blandford holding the position of Minister of Agriculture and Mines while occupying a seat in the Upper House, after he had been defeated by the electors of Bonavista Bay.

If the position that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries then took is sound, I think you will admit that the arguments he then used against Mr. Blandford would in like measure apply to the case of Dr. Campbell. I think the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will be fair enough to admit that this argument is sound. Dr. Campbell has never been elected in St. John's West, and probably never will be elected for a constituency in this country.

We are told in the Speech from the Throne that we are to have three or four warships come over here, and that through the instrumentality of certain members of the Government, those warships were being made a present to us by the Imperial Government. Both Leaders of the Government have claimed credit for his success in providing those ships. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries proclaimed in The Advocate after his arrival that he had secured this great boon from the Imperial Government, and after it, we are informed that the matter was brought about through the instrumentality of the Prime Minister. It looks as if these gentlemen might yet quarrel over this very trifling matter as to whom the real credit belongs. In my opinion, the late government should claim the credit for the securing of those ships, as the matter was brought to the attention of the Imperial Government long before their resignation. If the members of the present Executive Council had been down on the Labrador and never saw the House of Assembly, those ships would come over. In my opinion, those who really deserve the credit for the consideration given us by the Imperial Government in providing those ships for public service in this Colony, are those boys in blue who fought for me, for Mr. Archibald and other gentlemen like him who donned the khaki of the cloth of those who moved for a select committee. These are the men who deserve really the credit of bringing those warships to Newfoundland, and not those who constitute the Executive Government.

Mr. Speaker, with your permission I beg to refer for a few minutes to an incident that happened in this House on opening day. I have always been an admirer of the Prime Minister in this House, as I sat with him on the Government side for four years when he was member for Trinity. I have always admired his debating power, his fluency and great ability, but I am sorry that he saw fit on the occasion I refer to, to use language which may be characterized as rough-house stuff, in this chamber, which neither does credit to himself or the standing of Parliament. I will not refer to his utterance, but will leave it to more able hands than mine, beyond telling him that he has lost cast and has lost friends by the way he replied to the Leader of the Opposition. The conduct of the Prime Minister with regard to the charge made against him by a prominent public man, does not meet with the confidence or approval of this House. It may meet with the approval of those on the Government side, who are anxious to retain him in the position which he now occupies, but the dignity and independence of the Legislature has been seriously sullied and interferred with by the Prime Minister, who refuses to explain away the charge that has been made against him, or absent himself from the House until such time as he has been vindicated by a public tribunal. A public meeting of citizens of St. John's was convened in this city to represent to His Excellency the Governor the serious irregularity of permitting a Prime Minister to be present in the House whilst this cloud was hanging over him. This petition did not receive that consideration from His Excellency which its importance demanded. They had a right to be heard and their petition should, in a measure, have been acceded to. But I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that their petition to this House will be respected when presented, and will receive the hearty support of the twelve apostles who sit on this side.

MR. VINICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words in connection tion with the Speech from the Throne, but before proceeding, Sir, allow me to congratulate you on the high position you have been appointed to and I hope and trust that when your duties will have been performed that you will have done justice to us and we to you in this House.

This Speech from the Throne is remarkable for what it does not contain. As you know, Sir, the Prime Minister on last November promised faithfully, among other things, that he would reduce the high cost of living and I have a faint rememberance that the three Squires representatives used this same vote-catching process in St. John's East last fall. They appealed to the people and told them that they would reduce the high cost of living and said that the high prices of coal, flour, molasses, boots, etc., were attributed to the late administration, but, Sir, I am proud to be able to say that the St. John's East people were not caught in the trap and did not believe the flapdoodle handed out to them.

I find that since the present Government assumed power, some five months ago, and as a previous speaked has said, that flour is now $16.50. One of the largest flour importers in the country informed me within the past twenty-four hours that the next shipment of flour that reaches here will cost $17 wholesale, which will mean that the consumer will have to pay $18. I understand also that next week molasses will be $1.80 a gallon, sugar 28 cents a pound, while the price of boots has increased beyond all proportions. Now this latter commodity was the chief stock in trade of the Squires representatives in St. John's East. They used hold up the boots to the people and tell them that such and such a price was that the Cashin party were charging for boots. Today if you go on Water Street to buy a pair of boots you will have to get on your high heel boots to reach the price.

The Leader of the Government wiil tell us that he intended to organize a consumer's league or food control board. Unfortunately there is a food control board, but what have they done? Nothing. Have that board done anything to put down the high cost of living? Prices are continuing to soar daily, with coal at $19 a ton. We have been told by the Premier that he was going to do a lot of wonderful things for the people. Well, then, if he can do these things he should act and act quickly, because I can assure him that the people are not going to allow themselves to be so heavily burdened with the high cost of living much longer and an uprising will likely be the result. When people were earning three or four shillings a day years ago, they were better off than they are today.

The Prime Minister, in his manifesto, blamed Sir P. T. McGrath, chairman of the food control board, for the high cost of living, and stated that Sir M. P. Cashin was the friend of the profiteers. If that was the case then it is only logical that the present Premier is the friend of the profiteers now. Things generally and particularly the ordinary necessities of life have soared higher within the past few months than ever before.

There is a paragraph in His Excellency's Speech which reads as follows:

"My Ministers appreciate the dona"tion by the British Admiralty to "Newfoundland of two ships hitherto "used for naval purposes. These two "ships, together with a third ship
"purchased from the British Admir"alty by the Government are now "being prepared at Chatham for their "voyage to Newfoundland. It is pos"sible that one of these ships will be "used as a coastal boat: another as "a supply ship in conection with the "lighthouse department, and the third
"for emergency and rescue purposes."

It is all very fine, as a previous speaker has said, to feel elated over the idea that any man representing the Government in this Colony were responsible for the securing of those ships. However, there seems to be a diversity of opinion as to which man got them. When the Hon. Mr. Coaker arrived here from his trip abroad, and I hope that his trip will bear fruit for this Colony, The Evening Advocate sounded the praises of Mr. Coaker and said that he had secured two ships and bought one. The next night The Daily Star retaliated and said that the Prime Minister had got them. I contend that these two men are likely to fall out over the matter and that the Prime Minister will appeal to the Minister of Justice and he will be "warrin."

Another paragraph in the Speech from the Throne reads:

"An effort is being made by the "Government to wind up the Depart"ment of Militia and the Department "of Shipping at the earliest possible
"moment. The Newfoundland. Pay
"and Record Office in London has al"ready been closed. The work of the "Civil Re-Establishment Committee "will, it is hoped, during the year, be "brought practically to an end, and
"the matter of medical treatment of "returned soldiers and sailors will be "concentrated in one hospital build"ing so as to give greater efficiency of "service at a very greater reduced ex"penditure of public funds. If the "burden of expenditure resulting from "the war may seem a heavy one let "us remember that it represents the "least that we can do for those who "enabled Newfoundland to take her "stand in the forefront of humanity's
"great battle."

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that paragraph is downright hypocrisy, especially when we remember that a Government paper, controlled by the Prime Minister, put into print the records of some of those young men who went out on the battlefields and did their bit for their country. Furthermore I think it is a disgrace and a crying shame that the records and characters of these young heroes were besmeared and blackened as they were by the newspaper referred to, and scattered broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the country. I did not see anything about this in the Speech from the Throne.

Sir Michael Cashin had a son who played a prominent part in the great war, Mr. Bennett had three sons, Mr. MacDonnell had a brother who went overseas at the beginning with Lieut. Small and was killed, Mr. Moore had three nephews who took part in it, Mr. Higgins lost his only brother, Mr. Sinnott had a son, Sir J. C. Crosbie a nephew, and Major Sullivan. We all remember the good work at recruiting Mr. Fox did, and as for myself I had three nephews and a cousin who engaged against the Hun, and the cousin died of wounds. I am not surprised, therefore, that the last speaker was so pronounced in condemning the present Government for ignoring the returned soldiers.

The next paragraph of His Excellency's Speech deals with Beaumont Hamel battlefield. For this I must congratulate the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as I understand that it was through his activities and his energy that this was secured. I am sorry to hear that the ladies who were collecting for this purpose did not meet with as much success as they anticipated. However, they ought not to have much trouble in making up the $10,000 if the Government would help them.

The Prime Minister referred in his manifesto to prohibition and promised to have adjusted this much vexed question. I want to say right here that something should be done to alter the state of affairs that exist in Newfoundland today. When the hon. member for Placentia spoke on this topic this afternoon he did not paint it any worse than what it really is. There are a number of old men all over the country who have been in the habit of drinking rum moderately all their lifetime are now deprived of this little luxury, and there are many old worn out fishermen who need liquor as a stimulant. If they go to a doctor and not bosom friends of his it is no use in their asking for a script because they will be refused, though the same doctor will give it to other and younger men who are in their perfect health.

Now when the Prime Minister brings it before the House I don't know whether I will support it, as I do not know in what form it will be. I shall wait and see.

Then there is another paragraph taken from the Speech, but while it is last it is not least, and I think should have received an important place in the Speech from the Throne. As Mr. Anderson, who is the organizer of this company for the erection of workingmen's homes, was going around the town yesterday delighted that it was placed in the Speech, I think it was only through Mr. Anderson's political influence that it got a place there at all. Well, Sir, I agree with the movement, and I think that the Government and the Opposition will do all in their power to help the movement along. Mr. Anderson, I am sorry to have, has realized that the houses could not be built for one thousand dollars. The day is gone when houses could be erected for eight hundred, one thousand twelve hundred dollars. The cost today well exceeds two thousand dollars. My friend, Mr. Anderson, has a hobby for facts and figures, as my friend Mr. Brownrigg well knows, nevertheless the movement will receive my hearty support. The housing problem today is a disgrace to this Dominion, to the people and to the good name they bear. You will find sympathy, but none when it touches their pockets. Today the rents asked are exorbitant, and something should be done. I understand that a law was passed last year whereby no person could raise the rent, which they are doing today, but the tenants cannot complain as they will be put on the street. Mr. Anderson is going to build twenty or thirty houses, but before the next session is over I hope there will be one hundred houses built.

Now, Sir, on Wednesday some of my colleagues who addressed the chair said it was the first time that they spoke from this side of the House. I can assure you, Sir, it is also my first time, but I hope and trust the day will come when I shall make an address from the other side of the House. I assure you, Sir, that while you occupy the position you now hold you will find that I will cause you no trouble, and that you will not have to order me out of the House.

I read in last night's Star that Councillor Nix did not speak on Wednesday, but that I was wise. That is no news for the public, for the public well known that all wise people come from the East, and it was wise men that elected us here, and I hope and trust will do credit to our constituency, and when we go back to our District we will be able to say we fought your battles well. I will leave other remarks for a future time.

DR. JONES:—Mr. Speaker, in rising to address the House for the first time, I ask your permission to preface my remarks with a few words of congratulation and of explanation.

When I entered this House a few days ago, it was with some reluctance as to the propriety of my doing so, but the proceedings on that day have convinced me I am in pretty good surroundings. I stand here tonight like the Prime Minister, under a charge of bribery, but in my case no person has been able to swear that I have attempted to bribe him, but the same cannot be said for him. The fact that this House has endorsed his action in coming here ,has given me the right to stand here tonight apart from my personalinclinations in the matter.

I offer you sincere congratulations on your elevation to the position of first commoner. While I do not pose as a authority in such matter I am sure the older members of this Assembly will agree that your calmness and dignity on taking up your position indicate that you will maintain the highest traditions of the office, with myself and the other juniors who will unwillingly trangress the rules I am sure you will deal gently with the erring. I also take this opportunity to tender my congratulations to the historic town of Carbonear which has given to many of her sons to high positions in both church and state in the honour done her by your appointment, while I have not had the good fortune to have been born in that town, associations of kindred and otherwise make it pleasing to me to pay this small tribute.

Recent events have thrown a nasty black cloud over Harbor Main, and the citizens of that District have been pilloried and held up to the country as the greatest set of grafters that ever exisfed. They have been abused and vilified in the newspapers as well as in the platform. While I am here as its sole representative I shall do my best to prove that these charges were unfounded and I hope that the Prime Minister will come out of the Royal Commission with as clean a record as the District of Hr. Main.

The subject of the Speech from the Throne is one that in the main affects us outport members probably more than it does the city. All the members of outport districts will agree with me when I say that a great deal more attention is paid to the Speech when it appears in the newspapers and read in the outports than you can imagine. Reading matter is scarce in the outports and every letter and advertisement that appears in the city press is eagerly read by our outport people. It is customary to outline in the Speech from the Throne any new legislation that is to be introduced by the Government and as a rule when a Government has been in power for some years the Speech from the Throne is somewhat uninteresting, but when a new Government comes into power we expect something interesting and something new, and watch the papers for its first announcement. Disappointment is unnecessary because after scanning the Speech from top to bottom I fail to see anything in it that would appeal to our people at home.

Regarding that paragraph of His Excellency'c speech dealing with the gift of the two ships by the British Excellency's Speech dealing with the preciate the generous donation, as a small recognition of Newfoundland's participation in the great war.

As to the Labrador boundry, I may say that that question has been in abeyance for many years. No doubt it is being given great consideration and I hope that it will be set tled to the satisfaction of the country.

I am glad to know that the department of militia is to be wound up. As far as the outports are concerned they were under the impression that the war was over two years ago, tho' in the city to day one can see many soldiers still going about in khaki.

It is very satisfactory to know that the revenue last year exceeded the estimates, due no doubt to the high costs of goods on which we levied an advalorem duty. But, after all the time has come when we must make our clothes according to the cloth and make our expenditure fit the revenue; and we must prepare for the falling off in revenue which must come later when a fall takes place in the cost of goods imported and make conditions correspond with these changes.

Regarding the department of agriculture, I may say that this is a department in which I take particular interest. Hr. Main is more or less an agricultural district and its people are interested in everything that tends to improve the state of agriculture. The new minister, Hon. Dr. Campbell is a man full of energy, there is no disproving that fact, I hope that he will display that energy in reorganizing that department and that he will introduce some new ideas so that good results will accrue. At the same time the question of reorganization is a matter that ought to receive great consideration and no doubt, it will when the mattercomes up at a later date in detail. We have been dickering with this agricultural problem for years and years but with very little results . To-day it is impossible to get a barrel of good potatoes or a ton of hay anything after the rate in the country. That is really a reproach to the country. If there is any produce that can be raised in Newfoundland, certainly it should be hay and potatoes.

As far as the department of marine and fisheries is concerned it is not for me to say very much further than to make a commentary on the fish regulations that were enforced last year. They have practically paralized fishing activities in my district and alarming reports of the curtailment of supplies and the falling off of prices of fish have scared the wits out of those who supply and who prosecute the fishery. The result is, that hundreds of our fishermen have gone away out of the country perhaps never to return. Thirty years ago there were from fifteen to twenty schooners prosecuting the Labrador fishery and many western schooners from every harbor in the head of the bay. To-day there are not five schooners in the head of the bay, and none of them for the western fishery. Within the last few years owing to the high cost of outfitting the fleet has dwindled down and it has been Labrador fishermen mainly that have been keeping up the reputation of the place as a fishing district, but this year I regret to say, there is no interest taken at all, as prospects are so gloomy and the cost of salt, lines and provisions necessary for the prosecution of the voyage are so high. Whether or not conditions will improve by the proposed reorganization of the Marine and Fisheries Department remains to be seen.

I particularly noticed that the Address from the Throne did not contain anything about the pre-election promises of the Prime Minister. I do not suppose there is any man who comes into any more daily contact with the poor all over the country with the exception of the clergymen than does the doctor. No one knows better than he their wants or how difficult it is for them to live. The pauper relief that they get, which is at the rate that they were paid thirty years ago, it is utterly impossible for them to live on. The small increase that they were given during all that period has been practically negligible. There was an increase in old age pensions promised by the Prime Minister, and I had hoped to see some reference to it in the Governor's speech, but unfortunately it was not mentioned. There are also many old men who were qualified to receive the pension, and who have now their application in for some time but have not received it as the grant is so small. Quite recently I was forcibly struck in a couple of instances where I came across a few old age pensioners who had been in receipt of this pension for a year or two then died, and their wives were left with no provision at all for them. And it was only after the greatest difficulty that these old aged widows got any assistance, miserable pittance that it is, from the Poor Department. Everybody realises what a great hardship it must be on these poor people to live. After the wife of a pensioner has enjoyed the pension for a short time her husband dies and the pension ceases, and she is left on the verge of starvation. It is only those who come into daily contact with these cases who can properly appreciate what they are like.

With regard to prohibition. . This subject affects the whole Island and is one which I have a personal knowledge of. There are many ways of looking at the prohibition question and some of them are in a manner prejudicial. There are men anxious to get liquor selling back again, and there are those who do not want it. In my district I find that the present prohibition act is a farce and nothing better. By depriving our people of the use of liquor it has driven them to drink concoctions of all sorts that are not fit for human consumption, and which are destroying the constitution of men.

Some years ago we had the license system in our district and there was undoubtedly excessive drinking. Then through the exertions of the clergymen a local option act was put in force by the voice of the people. Conditions greatly improved as the boys grew up with little or no acquaintance with liquor.

Unless somebody brought liquor from St. John's the boys never saw it. Then when the prohibition came in force the older people who could not adopt themselves to the circumstances took to the making of moonshine. In the district of Harbor Main there is no monopoly of this manufacture but it is made all over Newfoundland. It is not hard to get or even to make it. The boys are again learning to drink and are being destroyed by this preparation. This much I will say that I do not believe in going back to the open saloons. But I believ e that the prohibition law should be so regulated that there would be no hardship in procuring liquor and that it could be got in an limited quantity for drinking purposes and I think it would better matters all round. As a medical practitioner I know of the hardships created under the present law when a person only wishes to get a small quantity for medical purposes. The ordinary poor person who is sick does not want to buy an eight or ten oz. bottle. In my district to send for a small quantity to St. John's and get it takes a long time and with a probability of being lost in transit. Tho I never drink myself I am not a crank on temperance and take this occasion to state that I would not be the man to withhold spirits from any person who needed them for a medicine. There is no provision in the prohibition act as to supply spirits at local centres. While our district is in actual contract with St. John's when liquor is required for medicine valuable time is often lost in the case of an emergency in obtaining it, but what must it be in the remote parts of the country. There should be some provision made so that large or small quantities could be procured as desired.

On the train a few days ago I met a man who belonged to the bottom of Bonavista Bay and he said it is almost impossible to get liquor as even when a prescription is secured to get it, it may not reach him over the railroad as liquor shipments disappear en route or the person who needed it may be dead before it arrived. I would like to see something done to alleviate the present situation and have the prohibition question discussed here. There are many important issues involved and it would require careful consideration and pains to provide a system whereby the necessary medicine could be provided conveniently. I call it medicine for I use it always as medicine.

We of the District of Harbor Main are of course interested in the country's transportation facilities and the problems confronting the country generally. The people of Harbor Main built the railroad in the old days and they regret to see its condition today. But it is a problem which requires the consideration of the House fully and when the matter comes up everybody should give it serious thought, as to how its condition is to be bettered. As we all know the war threw new burdens on the railway and some people thought now that the war is over, these tremendous burdens would be removed and the road be expected to carry out its pre-war traffic; but the road is worn out and the burden is increased instead of diminished. The pulp mills and other industries as well as the branch lines have given it a traffic for which it was never intended. The supply of shipping along the coast would lessen the load of the railroad, but we are short of ships and are no nearer getting them than two years ago. We depend on the railroad to do that for which it was never intended. Today we find the branch roads in actual distress because of the excessive demands (partly on account of the fortunes of war) thrown upon them and if we go back to ten years ago we find they were in far superior condition.

The matter of communication is of serious moment and we should take it up and give it very great consideration, and when the subject comes up before the House I trust it will be dealt with adequately.

The question of creating a new department of education is one bristling with difficulties. Such a department ought to receive from every member a careful consideration and he ought to do what he thinks is best with due regard to the interests of everybody and avoid anything that may be disadvantageous or of a dangerous character, and when it really comes round I hope every member will give it the intensity and earnestness which the subject deserves.

I am particularly anxious to see something done to improve the postal telegraph system. Tde department of telegraphs at the same time ought to be modernized and I may say that since my hon. friend Mr. Halfyard has taken charge I have not seen any remarkable improvement. I take an interest in most matters, but especially communication by way of mail or telegraph, and I may say that I receive as large a mail as any outport doctor. From experience during the past winter I find that both the telegraph and the mail service are bad. Letters go astray and cannot be located. During the first part of March I had several letters go astray between Avondale and St. John's and though I wrote the acting Minister of Posts and Telegraphs I have to date not had the courtesy of a reply. The telegraph service is also poor and there have been unnecessary delays in forwarding messages. I do not s ay that there is any slackness in the ma nagement but that there is not that efficient service that one should expect, in the handling of business.

As to other matters referred to in the Speech I shall defer comment until legislation concerning them shall come before the House.

Through some arrangements, the particulars of which I do not now intend to go into, the District of Harbor Main has been short of one half of its representation, and the whole burden of representing that district on the floors of this House falls on my shoulders and until some higher authority decides otherwise I intend to do so to the best of my ability.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of this Address and Reply to the Speech from the Throne I will occupy the attention of the House for a little wdile. I notice that in paragraph one it is the intention of the Government to introduce a bill for the creation of a Department of Education. I tried yesterday by directing a question to the Minister of Education to secure some information as to the work done by this department up to date. I regret that he did not see fit today to give me the information but informed me that he would do so when the Bill was introduced. In doing this the Hon. Dr. Barnes is still living up to the traditions of this department. For what reason I know not, but there has been a wonderful air of secrecy with reference to everything appertaining to the Department of Education; and the Minister even informed me today in a somewhat mysterious manner that I could not get the information. And further I am glad to see that he is living up to the traditions connected with the department up to the present in that he keeps us in the dark. To my mind, Sir, no bill should be introduced during this session about which there is no information and what bill is more important and deserving of consideration than a bill to create a Department of Education. For that reason, Sir, I think the conduct of the Government in its withholding to this date all information as to its intention in this matter, all information as to the scope of he bill, all information as to the duties of the Minister of Education is nothing short of criminal. A bill to create a Deartment of Education may effect the education of the whole country. The educational principles therein involved require a thorough investigation and consideration. I presume the House will be asked to rush through this bill without giving it the consideration which it ought to receive and such consideration I hope it will receive from every member of the House. I have had some connection, Sir, with this matter both as a teacher for seven years in this country and for four years with the Department of Education, Roman Catholic Schools. And I know there will be grave problems to be adjusted. And I feel that the Government long ago should have given us that data which may be necessary for us to consider if this bill is to be considered in an intelligent and reasonable manner. I presume, Sir, that the work of this department will be more than than which is now done by the clerk at the Colonial Secretary's Department. I presume something in the nature of the reorganization of the education of the country will be effected. And, Sir, with all respect to the members on the other side of the House, and particularly those of the Cabinet, that while giving them all the credit which is their due and that we give them credit for their ability which is theirs, I say that there are those of us who are much interested in all that appertains to education and I think that the House should take notice for future reference that up to the present we have all been kept in the dark despite the protests of the press and the platform and the requests of those in authority, for information on this point. And that when the time comes and when this bill is attempted to be rushed thru the House the blame for an imperfect bill and its workings will be placed upon the right shoulders. The responsibility of this measure will be placed upon the members of the Government in particular. Those on this side of the House will, as I think I speak their mind along with myself, give every assistance in such a matter of grave importance, but I wish to intimate that we will not be rushed and we will not allow as far as we can a bill of this nature to be rushed through the House without having thoroly and carefully considered and thrashed out every particular of it. I shall have more to say on this matter as regards this point in the Speech from the Throne when I get my information from the Minister of Education on the day when the Bill is introduced.

And I also notice that another Department which will be remodeled is the Deartment of Agriculture and Mines. I take it that the first step in remodelling this department is that the head of this department should not be a member of this House. I do not know what sin the members of this House are responsible for that the Minister of Agriculture and Mines cannot sit among us. It is rather a round about way to get information when one has to depend upon some other member to transmit it to him.

The Minister may, because of his absence, be able to pursue his way far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife. We will all await with anxiety for the good tidings from the absent departmental head.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak of another matter, it is the Department of Posts and Telegraphs. Whether the creation of such a department is wise or unwise, I would not like to say just now, but this much is true that since the Hon. W. W. Halfyard has taken charge of this department, there have been many things which the public generally have not approved of. Nobody expects him to work wonders in a short time, but I will call attention to the fact that the delivery of mails in this country has never been worse. There are obstacles, nobody will deny that. I would point out that until such time as proper inspectors are appointed for the far removed sections of the country we will have trouble. All is not well merely because a head is appointed.

We must consider other parts than St. John's. The various needs must be met in their own peculiar way. It is not enough to pattern the service of the country after the system in St. John's. There is something wrong with the system here in St. John's. Charges have been made that eveu registered letters have not been delivered.

The Minister of Posts and Telegraphs has many serious duties and all possible assistance should be given him.

There is another matter Mr. Speaker to which I would like to refer, namely transportation. It should have been given more consideration in the Speech from the Throne. Branch railroads are not mentioned at all. Those of us who live in the remote sections of the country would like to see it given its just consideration. Communication is like the blood in the arteries of the body. I am going to speak from the standpoint of the district which I represent. Governments of the past have had an excellent policy for the construction of branch railroads. The people all over the country have been taxed to build them. They have had to stand their share of taxation.

St. George's has had to bear its part of the burden, although we have been utterly ignored. Perhaps it is because there is a story about St. George's that has not been told. Take the Peninsula of Port au Port, and the only communication the people have with the railway is over a delapidated road built badly about twenty years ago. While other districts have had branch railways, we could not even get a decent highway. A branch line is absolutely necessary, starting at Stephenville Crossing and right round thru Stephenville and right round the Port au Port Peninsula. The population in this area is about 3,000 and these people have absolutely no communication by rail. The people have been compelled to bring the necessities of life over a road eighteen miles, badly built in the beginning, and which has never received adequate repairs. Special grants are an unknown quantity in the district of St. George's.

The coastal service has become worse instead of better. There is now no port of call in Bay St. George. There were two ports of call, but the wise men, usually taken from this city, decided that it wasn't necessary to have Sandy Point and Port au Port ports of call. We were told we had a daily train service. There is a story in connection with this, and I am going to tell it. I can remember in this connection a good story of one time when the returning officer for the district during a certain campaign submitted his expense account in connection with the carrying of the ballot boxes in from the various settlements. An official of the Government took exception to the amount expended for this purpose and wanted to know why, when he had a daily train, the men could not call at the stations and put the boxes on board the train. Imagine men walking thirty miles to the train but this man did not know but the train stopped at every hamlet in the district. When we have men like this in responsible positions, and I might say that this man still holds a Government appointment, what can we expect!

I confidently look to the Government to take some steps to make up in the future for the negligence that the district of Bay St. George has suffered from in the past because of absolute ignorance of this kind. Now, Sir, as I believe that any mention of branch lines would have not been omitted from the Speech from the Throne if the Government really intended doing anything. I would ask that if a railway line cannot be considered, these important settlements of Port au Port and Sandy Point be at least made ports of call for the coastal steamers so that they can be connected up with the regular bay service. The manner in which the contract for the bay service was made bears out my statement as to the ignorance of those responsible for that contract of the conditions as they exist in the district of St. George. We have a steamer on that run and a time table was drawn up for her to run by. She was to arrive at a fixed time and leave at a fixed time. The schedule was for the boat to leave St. George on Monday and get back there on Friday, and if this was not done the reason for such failure could not be understood.

What was the result? On the whole of the peninsula of Port au Port there is not a harbor where a vessel can put up during stormy weather from the time she leaves St. George's till she gets back there again. Perhaps by the time the steamer was ready to get away a north west gale would have sprung up making it impossible for her to call at many of the nearest ports, and the same thing applied on the outside shore in a southerly breeze. If the people who drew up the contract knew anything about the conditions to be contended with, they would have left it to the captain to regulate his own schedule. If he found he could not do this work on the south side of the peninsula he could go to the north side and attend to the ports of call there. This contract, I understand is still running. I do not know if the government has the power to re-model it, but if they have I would respectfully submit that they get together and reconstruct the whole thing, and I should be glad to do anything in my power to assist them. The matters I have referred to are of very grave consequence, although my remarks may not have been interesting to many of the honorable members of the House. I will show in a very few moments why this matter is of importance when I tell this House that the result of the neglect of government after government for the interests of the district of St. George's has been to drive the trade of the section toHalifax, Sydney and other Canadian centres, and not alone the trade but the sympathies of the people tending towards Canada.

If the present Government desires to have this continue, they have only to follow in the steps of previous administrations. This, Mr. Speaker, is not the story of my district alone. There are at least two other members of this Assembly whose districts have suffered in the same way and particularly is this so of the member for St. Barbe, the western section of which is similarly situated. This condition of affairs, to my mind, demands that something be done immediately to remedy it, and I am prepared in all these matters to give every support and my best advice to the Government in removing the existing evils.

When you consider, Sir, that in the various sections of that district there are settlements only three miles distant from each other and still absolutely unconnected by even an attempt at a road, you must admit that conditions are pretty serious. There are dozens of places in the Bay of Islands section, around the arms, that are only four or five miles apart without either roads or schools. It is impossible to place schools there under present conditions but if there were roads the problem could be solved by putting one school where it would serve two or three places.

I think, Sir, and I am sure that every member of this House will agree with me, that every man, no matter what his standing, has the same right to participate in the benefits and advantages of civilization as any other man, and I feel sure that when all these matters are placed before the House in the form of petitions, some of which I now have here, I am confident that the House will look them squarely in the face and give the people of St. George's their fair share of the revenue which they so largely contribute to, for expenditure in the public improvements.

There is another grant of which my district should get a larger portion than it has in the past. I refer now to the marine grant. The western side of the island has never received the share of this that it is entitled to. There is the thriving settlement of Codroy where on many occasions last year the Captain of the Portia absolutely refused to call because there was no light on Codroy Island. He held that it was not safe to call there except in fair weather. Now, Sir, if this was a small village I could understand this neglect, altho I should not attempt to justify it, but Codroy is a busy town and in being cut off entirely from any connedtion with any adequate service, is up against difficulties which in its case should not exist.

The only communication Codroy has with the railway is by means of ten or twelve miles from Little River station and this road is cut in two by the mouth of Grand River. In connection with the ferry service across this river I presented a petition today which I trust will receive the attentiton its urgency demands.

Now, Sir, I am sure honorable members will see that when all supplies needed by the people of this busy town who are perhaps the largest exporters of frsh ,fish on the west coast, for the carrying on of their business are ferried across from one side to another and then brought five or six miles on horses and carts; when all these supplies are carried five miles by cart, then by water, and another five by cart to a settlement, a remedy must be found and found at once. In this connection, Sir, if the conditions are known to members of the Government, the Speech from the Throne should contain some remedies for inland transportation.

Ample time was given. The House could have met and business been done long ago. The Speech from the Throne seems to have been caused by other things which have more seriously affected certain members of the Government. The Speech from the Throne was forgotten altogether, and that may account for the patchy way it was put together. I hope, Sir, that this is not an indication of the way work shall be done in this Assembly.

We have been promised some very wonderful things; I myself, have promised some very wonderful things and therefore I regret that the Speech from the Throne has been so clumsily put together.

I am glad to see the Department of Marine and Fisheries is going to receive some remodelling. I presume that the famous or infamous fish regulations (just as you please) will come up for consideration, and in connection with this I should like to speak of some of the phases of the regulations, and how they will effect some of the people in my district. Year after year we have been drifting into business with Canada and the States. Fish merchants buy their fish on behalf of Canadian and American firms. They buy and sell direct or on commission. I wonder if the business of the people on the west coast is to be hung up until a permit can be obtained from St. John's to export their fish.

Supposing, as it is quite likely to happen, the buyers of fish will not give them the information, which they must give in order tc secure permits. I can quite understand Canadian or other firms having very serious objections to giving away their trade secrets, and apparently they must give away some of them before they can buy.

For the west coast this means that some of the men in the fish business will have to change their business or get out of it altogether if the regulations continue, and consequently I can see that the number of actual fishermen will greatly decrease. Already a great number of them have gone to Canada and the United States. It may be that we have too many men in the country. I hope that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will consider the peculiar methods of those connected with the fish business on the west coast in comparison with those on this side of the Island.

While I am on this matter of regulations regarding fish there is another matter pertaining to this debate. I refer to the war tax put on the export of fish from this country. Why the tax continued, I don't know. There is no excuse for it. One of the first things that should be done by the new government is the cancellation of this export duty.

I expected also, sir, in the speech from the throne something sensible in regard to the high cost of living which is a most pressing one in regard to this country. Men, women and children would be more interested to hear that something had been done in this particular than to hear that a certain department had been created or remodelled. The creation of departments absolutely means new taxation. perhaps some ingenious method may be dis covered by which taxation may be increased and the cost of living reduced. I am sure that not only the members but the whole country expected that some policy in connection with the high cost of living would be outlined. Read the history, sir, of any country that you will and you will find that it was always the question of food and the question of livelihood that drove people to desperation. I hope sir, that this omission if it is an omission, will be remedied, and if it is the studed pollcy of the government to ignore this question, then, Sir, I respectfully suggest that they think well and give great consideration to this matter before they decide upon such a question. The future generation of this country will not soon forget the men who comprising the Government of that day, so ignored the interests of the people to take the settlement of such questions into their own hands. That there is likelihood that such action will be taken, I say, because I believe it. It does not matter what part of this country you go to the grievance is that prices are going up and nothing is being done to stop it. Don't you think there is a breaking point? We, all of us, see that there is a point to which the people will be driven, but no further. We all of us, Sir, would regret that any such state of affairs might occur, but should it occur, I would not like to be one of those responsible for precipitating such a crisis. It was a question of bread; a question of the means of a livelihood, that precipitated the French revolution. The time came in that country when the people decided they would get the food necessary to live, and the fact that to get it they had to cut off the head of a kind and a queen was a mere circumstance, a mere detail. There are those in power in this country to-day who do not consider the position of the people. Do they think, sir, that their position is so exalted that they are to be immune from the just condemnation of the people? Do they think, Sir, they are in some way sacrosanct. If so I would suggest, Sir, that they are living in a fool's paradise. I say that the people of this country are as the people of other countries, no better, no worse, just ordinary men, women and children. I know that at the present moment if something is not done, that the breaking point may come sooner than we anticipate. It is very easy to start this avalanche, for it will be an avalanche when the people resort to mob rule to rectify the evils that now exist in this country. It is easy to start this but it will be a difficult thing to control when it is started. This matter is one which is not likely to be passed over or brushed aside as something that one says, because one must say something.

I say, Sir, that those in authority if they do not soon do that which the people expect them to do, with regard to remedying conditions in this country, will be held responsible by the generations to come in this country, for having driven the people to do that which under other conditions they would never have done. The time may come, Sir, when owing to the conditions which daily become more severe, when the people of our country, than which I submit there is no people more law-abiding, the time may come when they may outdo those who at the present moment in certain parts of the continent of Europe are running things by mob rule. It is the most easy-going man who is often the most terrible when roused, and it may prove so with the people as well as with the Government, and in particular to the members of His Majesty's cabinet, that immediate steps be taken to deal in a fair way with those men who are responsible for the prevailing conditions.

There are, Sir, some points in connection with the Speech from the Throne that I would like to deal with, but I have already taken the time of this House too long. My excuse is that the matters which I have touched upon are essential matters which I must touch on if I am to do my duty to my constituents, and to the people of this country who elected me a member of this House. I must touch upon these and give my opinion of what I think the consequences of neglect may be.

I hope, Sir, that this promise, this pledge of the Prime Minister that immediately on resuming office he would deal with profiteers and profiteering is not one of these pre-election promises which nearly all of us make, and some of us have no intention of keeping. If the Government intend to remain inactive in this matter, I want to point out that when it comes to a question of its bread and butter this country will stand for no neglect.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I first of all would like to tender my hearty congratulations to the mover and the seconder of the Reply to the Speech from the Throne. As I sat in my place on the opening day and looked across at the gentlemen in uniform. my mind drifted back to 1916 when I had the honor of moving the Address in Reply to the Speech with which the Assembly was then opened. If the debates were here you would find that in the last paragraph I expressed the wish that when the Assembly was next called the war would be terminated and that some of the men who had enlisted would be here with us. What I wished for or predicted has come to pass. Both of these gentlemen are well worthy of any honor that may be conferred upon them by this or any House, and I want to congratulate them upon their splendid speeches.

I must say that so far as I am concerned the Speech from the Throne is a great disappointment to me and I feel that I am voicing sentiments of the great majority of the people when I say that it will be a disappointment to find in it nothing of the important matters referred to in the manifesto of the leader of the government. I presume the Speech from the Throne in a forecast of the olicy of the Government and if we are only to have these matters referred to in speech as the programe of the Govern ment's legislation while those which occupied such a prominent place in the manifesto of the Premier are to be now completely ignored than the people of this country will be betterly disappointed indeed.

The first matter referred to in His Excellency's speech is that of the ships given to this country by the Brit ish Admiralty and one would think from reading speech and from previous speakers a free gift made to us by Admiralty. This, sirs, is a false impression for these ships are the mose expensive that ever came to our shores. They were bought and paid for, not in dollars and cents it is true, but in the blood of the country's noble st and best and, I am sorry sir, if this is all the compensation we are to expect in a meterial way for the part our gallent men played in that awful conflict I do hope, however and confidently expect that when these ships come here and are put into commission that those gallant men of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment and Royal Naval Reserve will not be forgotten. There are many men I know who are fully qualified to take any or every position on these ships from captain to cabin boy and all of these are men who have gone through the great world war now so happily end ed.

In my own district of Placentia and St. Mary's alone I know several who are fully capable of navigating these steamers not alone in local but in foreign waters and it is only necessary for me to mention one of them, Capt. Sergt. Whelan, who has just arrived here from a foreign trip. He was one of the Blue Putties who went overseas in the early stages of the war and since coming back he has taken up navigation, fitted himself for a command and now he has return ed safely from a voyage acress the Atlantic. I just mentioned Capt. Whel an as an example of the men I refer to. I could name others and I hope the Government will see to it through the Marine and Fisheries Department or Shipping Department if that is still in existence at that time that these men are given a fair show.

The next item in the speech is the Labrador Boundary question which has been brought up and discussed in this Assembly for the past twenty years. It is a very vaxed question and if the Government in the interest of the Dominion can bring about a settlement of it they will be doing a very good thing but I trust that it will not merely become a means for some professional supporter of the Government or some lawyer to get a fat slice in the form of a cheque. I am also glad to notice that the winding up of the Militia Department is in contemplation, but I am sorry to say that at least I am not convinced that sufficient provision has been made for the dependents of the noble boys who laid down their lives. Of course this matter has been under the jurisdiction of the Pension Board, but the Government should see to it that in not a single case is the widow or mother of our dead soldier lads left unprovided for. Numerous cases have come to my notice where the dependents of dead soldiers were treated with scandalous neglect, not only during this administration but in previous ones, and the principal reason why conscription became necessary in this country was the neglect of the dependents of those men who made it possible for us to have a Nfld. Regiment, and I believe that in this statement my honorable friends on the other side of the House who went across with the first five hundred will bear me out.

I am glad to notice in the Speech from the Throne the reference to Rev. Major Nangle already referred to by colleague, Mr. Sullivan and, like him I want to offer thanks on behalf of the people of my district to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the interest displayed by him in the purchase of that sacred ground consecrated by the blood of so many of Newfoundland's brave sons and I regret that the respect for the necessary funds for this purpose did not meet with a more ready response. I do not believe that this was due to lack of interest or to the indifference of the people for I am sure that all will be too glad to contribute towards this splendid memorial.

The next item referred to in His Excellency's speech is our surplus revenue and right here I want to offer my hearty congradulations to the leader of the opposition, Sir M.P. Cashin who was in charge of our finances during the most trying period that ever was or ever will be experienced in this country, and I think, sir, that it reflects great credit on his ability that the Dominion, having accomplished what it did and paying for the many public services, was able to show such a substantial credit balance as that which was handed over to Hon. Mr. Brownrigg by Sir Michael last November.

Let me express the hope that his successor, Mr. Brownrigg, will meet with the same success; and if he has the luck or the misfortune to hold his office for a number of years, he may be able to leave it on the same sound financial basis as he found it.

The Department of Marine and Fisheries is to be reorganized I notice from the Speech from the Throne. This I greet with delight as I believe the time has now come for such action. This department is one of the most important in the colony. The staple has always been and will remain, the fishery. For the past fifty years we have been plodding along the same old rut, and perhaps the ordeal we are now going through for the marketing and sale of our fish may be a blessing in disguise. I am glad to see that it is the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to inaugurate some scientific methods for this important demartment. We are falling behind in this branch of our industries.

America, Scotland Norway, Canada and France have seen the value of their fisheries and have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to promote them. Believe me you will find the people of this country ready to cooperate with the government for the betterment of conditions in relation to our fisheries.

Referring to the reorganization of the Marine and Fisheries Department, I express the hope that the Hon. Minister and I know that he has an honest desire t obenefit conditions generally for the fishermen he interested in, and I hope ample provision will be made for lights and alarms, so that we may be able to safeguard the lives of our men who "go down to the sea in ships."

If either of you members would go to the Atlantic seaboard, or to Europe you would be ashamed to say that you are a member or a legislator for Newfoundland. Valuable lives are lost yearly. Every week newspapers print a tale of some vessel or punt or dory having gone on the rocks. If it were only the loss of the boat it would not matter so much. Up in my district many lives have been lost for lack of means to navigate. It is not my first time speaking in this house on this particular matter, but each time it has been passed over and other matters which seemed of more importance to the revenue have taken its place.

And now that the Hon. Mr. Coaker is consolidated into the important position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries let us hope that he will see that no more lives are lost through neglect I am glad also to notice in the Speech from the Throne that a proper survey of local vessels will be held. This is a move in the right direction. Had we proper surveys held in the past many valuable lives would have been saved. One particular case I intend to mention, which happened a few years ago. It is the case of the "Beverly" brought down here by some people. An old delapidated river boat. She was purchased in the United States, put on dock here, and had some repairs made. She was chartered by the firm of W. A. Munn to take a cargo of fish from Harbor Grace to Europe. I remember some of the men, one at least who was a constituent of mine, having thought the ship unseaworthy, left her and returned to St. John's. The men were arrested, brought to Harbor Grace and put on board the ship; but since she steamed out of that port she has been unheard of, and these valuable 23 or 24 lives have been sacrificed because we had no stringent examination.

There are, today, in this Dominion, orphans, because of the loss of this ship, which to my mind and to every honest member of this House and to the people of Newfoundland was criminal and scandalous neglect on the part of some person. I hope when this bill comes up it will be considered of utmost importance. I am also glad to know that the coastal boats will also be taken in on this survey.

(Copy missing here—8.45 to 9.00)

That before they would reach American coast so many would have met with watery graves. When the tragedy occurred the newspapers of every country were filled with accounts of the dreadful tragedy. Life saving aparatus that was caused to be put in use in every country, but it only lasted a short time. People soon forgot. Now I want to make the statement here tonight and I make it in all sincerity, I make it in the interests of the public, that if you were to go aboard any of the coastal boats tonight and asked to have the life boats tested, that they would not be twenty minutes in the water before they would sink, and the life buoys, if used, would only serve to drag a man down instead of keeping him up. We have no official whose duty it is to go aboard those boats and see that the lives of our people are being safeguarded.

Now this is a matter that I suggest the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will take up and inquire into, and he will find that what I say tonight is correct. He may not find it correct in a week or a fortnight, for those people as soon as they hear the matter is up for discussion will have their boats made tight, and their life buoys thrown away and good ones put in their places. It is not that I am anxious to have anyone prosecuted. My sole desire is that some morning we will take up the paper and read that a sad drowning accident has taken place in some part of the Island, and that even one life has been lost through neglect of this matter.

I notice also reference made in the Speech from the Throne to the Department of Postal Telegraphs, and another new Department of Education. With regard to the intention of the Government to re-organize the first named department I do not intend to deal tonight. I am prepared to give the new holder of that office a working chance. I know that the gentleman who occupied that office in the past was labouring under great difficulties for the prevailing conditions with regard to that important office he was not altogether to blame. I have no doubt that he did the best he possibly could under the circumstances and I don't know anything done in connection with that department that he could be held responsible for.

However, I do know, and do say without fear of contradiction that that department had been and is now to some extent rotten to the core, if I may be permitted to use the term. I know myself of cases of some o f my own constituents have had occasion to send large amounts of money from Placentia Bay, and I know of one particular case where the amount was very large was lost, and the registered letter, which was composed of cheques and bank bills, was traced from the west side of Placentia Bay to the General Post Office, and was then lost track of, and the only compensation the sender was offered was a ten dollar bill. We have from time immorial been recording great robberies, both in the city and in different parts of the outports, in connection with our registered letter and money order department. If the person who commits the crime has sufficient pull, the matter is winked out of sight, but if the crime is committed by some poor unfortunate, who has not any influential friends in church or state, we put him in jail. The only way to overcome that evil is to inaugurate a new system, and if you want to get honest service, give an honest wage, and make conditions such that the temptation to steal will be removed from these people, and this is the only way in public life and in business that anyone can get honest efficient help.

I notice, and I am glad to notice, that the Speech from the Throne states that the Government intends to grapple with the transportation trouble. Transportation by sea is one of the most important matters confronting the country at the present moment. Many parts of the coast line have not been served at all, and the coast line of our country in most cases is far removed from the railway.

There has been nothing done to increase the facilities for getting freight and mails from one place to another, and a number of places have been neglected where the inhabitants are paying their proportionate part towards the railways, and any other thing that is within their means. Some have the advantages of the railroad but no attempt is being made to give these people the service.

This is a matter that on more than one occasion I have done the best I could to convince this House should be rectified, and it is one of the matters that my colleagues and myself pledged ourselves to support, not only for our own district, but for all the districts in the Island. I am prepared, and I think I can speak for my colleagues, to give a hearty support to any member of this House, who is making an honest attempt to better conditions for the people who send him here, and I expect to get that same measure of support, for the district which I have the honour to represent.

As far back as 1913 when I first entered public life, I was then the junior candidate, on the authority of our leader promised the people of St. Mary's Bay, that a railway would be undertaken and completed, but no attempt has been made to carry out that promise. I want to exonerate the then leader who is now Lord Morris, and his associates in the council of that day, because we all remember in 1914 that horrible European war broke out, and no reasonable man, or no people of any district would be unreasonable enough to make a demand during the years of the war, that a large amount of money be spent on improvements at home. All the money available was required for more urgent necessities, and for this reason I myself, and those men who were associated with me at that time did not try to force the fulfilment of that contract, and though the hon. leader of this House did not pledge himself to his candidates, to build a railway in that section of the country.

I have confidence that if the matter of railway extension is brought before this House that sufficient support and sufficient sympathy will be given to the measure from the honourable gentlemen upon the other side. So far as the important Bay of St. Mary's is concerned, which from an agricultural standpoint is second to none in this Dominion, I would point out that by the building of a branch line up to this district you will open up an immense quantity of agricultural land, and at the present moment we have ample proof that agriculture must continue to receive all the support that this House can give it.

It may be judicious to depart from the present method but we cannot afford to shelve, and I do not say that it is the intention of the government to shelve, altogether this important department of agriculture. Right here in this city of St. John's to-day poor people are called upon to pay forty cents a gallon for half rotten potatoes. Now I consider that this is not good enough and I will refer to this matter a little later on.

As I said in the beginning of my effort, I am very, very sorry to notice the absence from this important document of so many proposed important measures, measures that were part and parcel of the manifesto as presented to the country last autumn by the hon. leader of the government, and, I might say, that I intended to refer to one or two of these items.

I consider, Mr. Speaker, that these items were of great importance and should have been embodied in this document, and the electorate of this country thought them of sufficient importance to vote for the men who promised them this very attractive change—reduction of taxation. This was one of the principal planks in the platform of the present government. There is no indication in the Speech from the Throne, no intimation given to this House and the country that this pledge is about to be carried out and there is no indication that any seriousness or any honesty was displayed by the gentlemen who made this promise.

I say, Mr. Speaker, it is not good enough to wait for the next session of the House or the following session or the final session before another general election to carry out that pledge. The people expect it now and if it is not forthcoming the people of this country will become so disgusted with all politicians that the only safe attitude will be to lock these doors and send home the keys. The people are getting fed up with men going around this country through the several districts making all kinds of rash promises.

No doubt there are lots of promises made that the party who made them never intend even to attempt to carry out. I contend that a man who makes a promise and is not of honest desire and honest intention when he makes and does not intend to carry out his pledge is a criminal and should not be allowed a seat in this House to represent any constituency be he Prime Minister or any other man on any side of the House. Such men, sir, should be driven out of public life and I hope that when the driving out takes place that I will not be one of the ones to go.

This matter of reduction of taxation is a very serious matter and people are seriously expecting a reduction of taxation. When a barrel of flour is $16 or $20, as the case may be, and the man who wants one knows the store where he can get it and have the price everything is alright, but what if that barrel is more that the man can get or if he has not the money to purchase it and not a friend to lend him the money and he has a wife and several little children at home waiting for bread what is going to be the result?

The time is coming when such conditions may exist here. As has been so well stated here this evening by the hon. member of St. George's, bread has caused the massacre and destruction of many lives in Europe as well as those who died of starvation, and I shudder to think of what the result would be in this country if our people cannot get money to buy bread or buy the other commodities and necessaries of life that are required for their families. I know what I am talking about from personal experience and I know what it is to be without bread from personal experience though, thank God, it was not through poverty.

I remember the time, and perhaps my hon. friend, Capt. Jones, also remembers the occasion, that I intend to speak of. It happened some twenty-two years ago. At the time I was a resident of Little Bay, not many miles from Little Bay Islands, where Capt. Jones resides. On this particular occasion we had a very late Spring and the great number of people were employed in those days at the mines in Little Bay and people ran short of food. I do not say that we had money in abundance but we could manage to scrape enough to buy a stone of flour, but there was none to be had and we had to resort to eating peas and became as a substitute for bread. I remember that North of Tilt Cove and South to Twillingate and through all that large and important section of Notre Dame Bay that people were short of food. I shall never forget that memorable Sunday morning, June 22, when the S. S. Leopard arrived at Little Bay with relief. That picture is printed indelibly on my memory. I remember the clergymen and other prominent men at Little Bay who had lots of money and who were honourable enough to take ashore their bag of hard tack on the wharf and eat it there. You can picture it then what conditions were like in the homes of these poor people. Just picture the homes of some poor men and women of labour who were unable to buy a barrel of pork when first the shortage took place, whereas those who were blessed with the world's goods were in the position to pay the big prices. This was a case not brought about by the extraordinary high prices that were asked. I think flour at that time was $5.00 and the best could be had at that figure before the shortage came on.

Now if we are not careful and if the present administration do not take hold and grapple with the high cost of living a serious condition of affairs is going to be brought about in this country. Any sane, sound and reasonable man must realize that some people are called upon to pay the enormous prices that are being exacted by those in business in the country at the present time. The climax must be reached some time and I am afraid that that some time is coming upon us. This matter may not appeal very strongly to some honourable members of this House because they have never been placed in the position similar to the one I have just now referred to and because a great number of them do not know what conditions are like in the houses and homes of the poor. There are people to-day in authority in this country who have been far remote all their lives from the humble sphere that I moved in and always liked to be in, and having moved in that sphere and having sprung from the common herd and the ranks of the workingman I think I am fully justified to express the condition of affairs that I know to exist, not alone in this city of St. John's, but in every harbor, settlement and cove both in the interior and along our coastline.

I notice that some time ago a commission was appointed to enquire into the High Cost of Living. It is absolutely nonsensical to appoint a commission; there's no necessity of making an enquiry. No reasonable or sensible man can see the need to enquire the high prices existing throughout the country is enough. There is commission enough. There is a class of man doing business in this country to-day who ought not be allowed to continue on in business. The increases, the unwarranted increases in numerous cases that have taken place with regard to provisions and groceries is enough in this great profiteering place and I hope my friend, the Honourable Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not forget the great work that he inaugurated which is of such great importance and that he won't forget the work that he started to do from the first session at which he sat of this House. And I hope he will not allow the circumstance of his being in business to interfere with the discharge of what I consider and of what he considers and what this House considers to be the duty of each and every individual of the House, and to see to it immediately. see that this scandalous profiteering be stopped. I saw a scale the other day sent out by some of the merchants telling what the working man should get. And what next will the merchant do when he comes to order how much the working man is going to pay for suits of clothers or a pair of boots and when he attempts to order what class of butter the working man shall bring to his table. If this is going to pass a serious condition of affairs will arise. I notice by the notice that the merchants say that twenty-six dollars will buy a suit of clothes for a man.

Now in all fairness, Mr. Speaker, is there a man in this House who would attempt to offer to his son or brother or some member of his family a suit of clothes for his best suit for which he paid twenty-six dollars? I do not consider myself to be one of the swells of the city but I am not able to purchase a suit which I would consider fit to put on for less than sixty-five dollars to-day. Some pay as much as eighty or one hundred dollars for a suit and no doubt some of the honourable gentlemen here to-night are wearing suits which cost seventy or eighty dollars. That is the case.

Can any sensible man expect that the working man or fisherman is going to be satisfied with a suit of overalls for Sunday and that is all you can buy for twenty-six dollars. I do not mean to say that if the people got their just rights they would not be able to get a suit for twenty-six or thirty dollars.

Profiteering is already flourishing; men are fat and the more money they accumulate the more haughty they get in some cases. And they have fortified themselves so strongly against any interference and judging from the acquiescence of the people or at least the Government they are not going to be interfered with and they are allowed to go indefinitely until the people will rise in their might and instead of paytng twenty-six dollars for clothes or ten dollars for boots they will take them and then I suppose the machinery of the the law will be put into effect.

I submit Mr. Speaker, with all seriousness, that this matter is no joke and the people of the country will not consider it a joke, and while I have my voice I intend to use it on every occasion as much as I possibly can until those men who are committing scandalous crime of grinding down the poor on innumerable occasions and making enormous profits are justly punished. It reminds me of a story of a travelling man from St. John's some years ago who went to some part of the outports and he got in conversation with a business man of the outports where he was and he said "well skipper John what profits do you make upon your goods?" and John answered "sometimes I make one per cent," and he asked the travelling man:

"What do you make in St. John's?" and the travelling man answered: "Well, we would not think ourselves doing very much unless we made ten per cent. profit," and the travelling man said: "What, do you mean to tell me that you bring goods down here from St. John's, and then only make one per cent. profit; why, that would not pay for your telegrams or even the postage." So it transpired that some of these city merchants make one hundred per cent. An article that costs them fifty cents they sell for one dollar. And there are firms in this town to-day who are not satisfied with making one per cent. Articles are sold in this town for one hundred per cent. profit. And here we find a commission being appointed but only to make a farce of it. Surely there are some honest men in the country who have not sunk into the mire that they cannot rise to the defence of the poor working man who is being ground down to death. This is an important matter and should be gone into without a moment's delay. I intend to again speak on this matter of the High Cost of Living until I am absolutely satisfied that the Government is going to make a serious attempt to safeguard the interests of the people of Newfoundland. What difference does it make if it affects some party heeler or interferes with some financier. If you lose one friend you will make ten for the one you have lost.

If there were an approaching election I would forfeit my seat if necessary to see that the rights of the people were considered. I am not using this matter as a political weapon. And I pledge you my word of honor that I would not only forfeit my seat, but would also give my wholehearted support to any honest effect that was being made to give just punishment to and lay the guilt upon those villianous and scandalous profiteers. On making this statement I do not know but when I arrive home on to-morrow that there will be a bill awaiting me at the house covering some money that I may owe and may be a case of "money up or shut up." I will not run away and prepare to go down to the lakeside if I have to do so for having fought in the defence of the people with whom I have lived all my life, and with whom I shall live the remainder, if it is short or long. Just one or two words more as there are a number of speakers to follow, and I do not intend to occupy the House more than a few minutes. I am sorry that no provision has been made for hospitable extention. This is a very grave matter and with which I have had experience during the last six years. And I am sure that other gentlemen who have been in the House for the past six or more years will also view the same way as I do.

It is a well known fact that the hospital accommodation is quite inadequate. I hoped that some reference would be made in the Speech from the Throne to outport hospitals. This is a very important matter, and cannot be given too much consideration.

During the term that I have been in the House, I have had as many as twenty people, patients for the hospital, some of extremely delicate health who had travelled several miles and on arrival here no bed could be found in the hospital for them. Sometimes these people have been placed in boarding houses, in some cases unfit for occupation by robust men, with food unfit for human consumption, and with rooms unventilated. This is no exaggeration. It is as true as gospel. Because of people being unable to get into the hospital valuable lives have been lost to this Dominion, and if by the expenditure of sufficient money to make an addition to the General Hospital or to build outport hospitals one life can be saved to the country, no matter how much money is spent, the taxpayers of the country will be glad to be taxed a small amount to provide this necessary accommodation.

There is another matter, Mr. Speaker, that I want to speak of, I want to call attention to the needs of the sick, and poor. This matter has come before this House before, has been brought to the attention of the members on other occasions. People coming in for operations have been put in a part of the baggage car, and have to undertake long journeys in agony and pain. This situation should be remedied by the co-operation of some person in charge of these matters. I understand that a new department in connection with the Department of Public Health is to be inaugurated. I hope it will be well thought out, and it comes before this House that it will be supported by every honourable member.

We know these conditions to exist, and should do everything in our power to overcome them. All of these matters only touch the fringe of what I would like to refer to. Many things I have had for the present to ignore. I do not mean to harshly criticise the present administration. I mean to be fair. I want to give a reasonable time to inaugurate the various matters to which I have referred. The time has not yet come. A new administration cannot do the things it would like to do in a few short months. But I want to serve notice on the Government that when the time come I will have no hesitation to call a spade a spade, to place the blame on the right shoulders. I will not hesitate to place any member in this House the charge of criminal neglect, if by his misconduct a human life is lost to the country. I did not mean to speak so long when I got up, and as you will recognize, Mr. Speaker, my voice is not in very good trim. On some future date I will deal at greater length with these matters.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, allow me to avail of this opportunity to first of all to congratulate the two honourable gentlemen who have in such an excellent manner moved and seconded the address and in reply to the Speech from the Throne. When these gentlemen arose I anticipated that this Assembly was about to be favored with speeches of a very high order, and in nowise have my expectations not been fulfilled. I sincerely congratulate the hon. members for Burgeo and LaPoile and Bay de Verde. In every particular I think they are entitled to the highest commendation, and in tendering them my personal congratulations I am not unmindful of the fact that this is the first opportunity they have had of addressing this House.

In one sense I suppose I should voice an objection to the Speech from the Throne in these well known opposition words that for years have expressed the disapprobation which every Opposition feels more or less constrained to give expression to in regard to the first sessional utterances of the Government, namely, "that it is more remarkable for what it does not contain than for what it does contain." To be frank I might with much justification adapt these words, but in many respects I think the Speech from the Throne has much to commend it.

Dealing with the second paragraph I find there an expression that to my mind is pregnant with much meaning and bears a significance peculiarly its own, particularly in the light of the circumstances that have to a certain extent disturbed this country during the past few weeks. The words to which I refer are "I cannot avoid impressing upon you the lesson of all history that a great convulsion is followed by much unrest and that all our patience and sympathy will be required to realize under the guidance of Divine Providence a permanent peace upon earth and goodwill to all formerly warring nations."

Appreciating the wisdom that lies behind these words I realize that they have application to this country as well as to the larger countries of the world and that we should never forget their import when we realize that a first duty is incumbent upon us of cultivating in the best possible manner a spirit of patience and sympathy in our people that will aid us to prevent Newfoundland from being visited with that condition of unrest which may perhaps enter amongst our people during the period that we are now entering upon. But may I ask how far does the policy of the Government thus far justify the pious sentiments expressed in the words that I have quoted? How far has the attitude of the Government been to sooth our people and allay fears and suspicions on their part and make them realize that the Government whom they elected to office last November has a thorough realization of its responsibilities to its people not alone from the view point of administrators of the public trust, protectors of our commonwealth and national interests but as the formulaters of public thought and the sponsors of public morals. I have in mind now the circumstances under which the Leader of this House has allowed himself to be publicly charged with the commission of a grave offence and for the past few weeks has made no attempt to clear himself of the allegations that have been made against him. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman implicated in this matter has not realized that not alone does he owe a duty to himself to see that his name is cleared from the stigma that must of necessity attach to it if the charges against him are not contradicted, but as the Prime Minister of this Dominion he symbolizes in his person and in his actions the ideals of a people; and has incumbent upon him the responsibility of seeing that not alone does he not bring discredit upon the high office to which he has been elected, but that he rests under no suspicion of doing anything that would tend to lower him in the estimation of the people or give room for doubt that his endeavours are centred on his protecting to the fullest extent public honour and public trust and the preservation of these standards of public decency of which he is the symbol as well as the custodian. Unfortunately he has seen well to remain silent under the charges that have been made against him and so long did he continue in this course that it remained for the public of this city at a public meeting to pass a resolution petitioning H. E. the Governor to institute enquiries into all the circumstances of the charges that have been made against the hon. gentleman concerned. In that case I think it is particularly regretable that the public was forced in their own interest to take this stand but I regard it as most reprehensible that if the Prime Minister did not regard it as a duty on his part to immediately clear himself from the allegations that have been laid against him that the Government as a whole did not see the necessity for prompt investigation of a matter of such importance and gravity; and further I regard it as most reprehensible that despite earnest appeals, despite public protests, despite all the public attempts that have been made to have this matter thoroughly investigated that no attempt has been made to do anything. Complete indifference on the part of the Government has been shown towards the feelings of the people in this respect. In my opinion this is not the way to inculcate that spirit of patience and sympathy to which the Speech from the Throne refers, nor is it in this manner that the Government can hope to convince the people of the sincerity of such pious, but I fear unctuous, sentiments. My remarks, be it clearly understood are not directed towards any particular department of the Government. I offer my honourable friend, the Minister of Justice, no fulsome flattery when I say that there is none I would trust more implicity than himself to see that so far as in him lies no public rights are left unprotected. He has told us that he took an early opportunity to go into these charges and this, Sir, I am sure, reflects great credit upon him.

He has also told us of his having conferred with eminent legal authority in England upon the matter of the charges contained in what the Hon. Prime Minister has seen fit to designate as the "St. Patrick's Day Affidavit" and that the advice derived from this source confirmed him in the conclusion that even if these charges were proven true there was nothing criminal in them, and for that reason the Hon. Minister has seen fit not to put the machinery of the law in force. It is understood a Royal Commission has now, however, been appointed, not alone to inquire into the immediate charges of this affidavit but to cover a period of years and we have it from the Hon. the Leader of the Government himself that this inquiry will be a grand inquest of the Colony. It will go back, we are told, ten or fifteen years and take into review all the commissions and omissions of public men thruout that period. Now, Sir, I ask you if that is what the people have demanded. We all know that it is not. The public meeting the other night was to the effect that certain specific charges be investigated and now we are informed that the Commission appointed will extend its activities and bring within its scope the supposed misdoings of public men for many years past. In any case the position is this that altho these charges are contained in the sworn statement of a former Minister of the Crown, no action whatever has been taken except as the Minister of Justice has told us to endeavour to determine whether or not the offence involved is criminal, but Sir, the matter of criminality or uncriminality is of absolutely no moment and the opinion English legal authority, average or eminent is but a mere obiter dictum and has no effect as far as the main issue is concerned. We have under Responsible Government, a judiciary of our own and if there are allegations of this nature to be dealt with the way to do it is to institute the proper proceedings and have the matter adjudicated upon by our own courts. I understand much has been made of the contention that the allegations, even if true, made against the Hon. the Leader of the Government, do not consititute any criminal charges against him. That is a matter of very little moment. It may be a moot point as to whether or not the English Act which constitutes it an offence to be parties to an unlawful agreement for the withdrawal of an election petition has application in this country, but on the assumption that it is not a criminal act, in the ordinary acceptation of the word I think that an act such as that charged against the Hon. Leader of the Government is one against public morals and public decency, and in that respect is one the serious consequences of which we cannot pay too much attention to.

Now let me paint the other side of the shield. A few days ago information was laid against certain sealers of the crew of one of our local sealing vessels. The facts of the case being as follows: The men left port to prosecute the voyage in the knowledge that the voyage was to terminate on the 15th April. They fitted themselves out for that length of time, and the ship's stores and supplies were regulated accordingly. The sealing venture was a failure and on or about the 7th April a suggestion was made to the men that they continue the voyage beyond the prescribed date in the hope that the voyage would not altogether prove unremunerative. The men realizing the loss they had met up to that date and the apparent futility of continuing any further, the necessity for getting back to their avocations at home in the hope of doing something to compensate them for the severe loss which had been occasioned them, knowing that the ship was not fitted out for a longer voyage ,and for other reasons all valid and substantial, declined to coincide with the suggestion,—informed the captain to this effect and accordingly on the 15th day of April refused to further continue the voyage and notified the captain accordingly. There was no attempt at mutiny or disorder of any kind. It was merely a peaceful but firm insistance on the part of the men that their rights be protected; and in the light of the facts of the case one could not come to any other conclusion than that the men were well within their rights. No trouble of any kind was occasioned the captain or officers. The men worked the ship to port and in all respects properly conducted themselves, as the captain himself admitted. Upon their arrival in port proceedings were commenced against them under the "Merchant Shipping Act." I had the privilege of defending the men. They were acquitted of the charges against them and the information dismissed, whereupon fresh proceedings were taken against them under another Statute the Master and Servants Act, but in this case, not content with the ordinary process by way of summons, the prosecution saw well to have the men arrested and taken from their homes and lodged in jail. Thanks to the good offices of certain of the authorities the freedom of the men was obtained after a short period of detention and the following day the case was heard with the result that they were again acquitted and the information dismissed.

Now look at the contrast between these cases and the case of the Hon. the Prime Minister. In the former the men were proceeded against under an Act that clearly did not apply to them and when the court before whom they were tried decided to this effect proceedings were laid against them and they were arrested under another Act, the application of which—to say the least—was in grave doubt . What precautions were taken on behalf of these men to see that their liberties were not interfered with unnecessarily or unjustly? What precaution was taken in the case of these men to see that they were not proceeded against under an Act which had no application to their alleged offences? What precautions were taken to place beyond all doubt the criminality or absence of criminality of the acts before a prosecution was commenced against them. Did the law officers of the Crown do everything possible to satisfy themselves that these men were being properly proceeded against? Was the opinion of eminent counsel in England first obtained before a prosecution was allowed to be instituted against them? We know that all this was done in the case of the Prime Minister, but was it done in the case of these ordinary men —men whom politicians are wont to describe as the bone and sinew of our country on the eve of an election, but men whose liberties and rights seem to be of the most trifling importance when their political usefulness for the time being is over.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—May I ask, Mr. Speaker, do I understand my hon. friend to say that the Dept. of Justice had anything to do with the arrest of these men?

MR. FOX:—I am coming to that. We know that the same precautions taken by the Dept. of Justice in regard to the charges alleged against the Hon. the Prime Minister were not taken in regard to the charges against these sealers to whom I am referring. It is true the prosecution was not conducted by the Hon. Minister of Justice, nor his Department, nor were these men arrested by his behest in the actual sense, although technically his department was supposed to have entire cognizance of the matter, and must take responsibility for what the officials under his charge did in the premises. He may very well reply that precautions of the nature that I have referred to were unnecessary and that these proceedings were and had a right to be allowed to be carried out in the ordinary normal unfettered fashion, but then may I ask him why were such extraordinary measures of protection and precaution undertaken on behalf of the Hon. the Prime Minister and not taken in the case of these sealers. Why allow any such difference to exist in the administration of justice. Is it any wonder that the idea is abroad that there is one law for the rich and one for the poor? Is there no room for the conclusion that the difference between the treatment accorded these men and the treatment accorded the Hon. Leader of the Government exists because of the difference that exists in the social and political status of the parties concerned. I say Sir that if those in authority are to retain the respect and confidence of the people such conditions cannot be permitted to continue. We shall never be able to inculcate the spirit of patience and sympathy referred to in the Speech from the Throne unless we realize that all the citizens of this country are entitled to the same protection, and the rights of no class are to be preferred to the rights of another, but the same sacred regard for their liberties and their privileges must be accorded each and all on the great principle of justice and equality that should underly the administration of the public affairs of this or any other Dominion of the Crown.

I am sure the people generally will appreciate the donation by the British Admiralty to Newfoundland of two ships heretofore used for naval purposes, and that the action of the Government in purchasing a third ship from the Admiralty for coast protection purposes will be amply justified. I am glad to note that these ships will be utilized in connection with such services as the light house department and general emergency and rescue purposes. I have long considered it absolutely necessary that the Government should have at its immediate disposal a fast boat that could render effective rescue service at any time required. Lessons of recent years should be all too well impressed upon us; and surely it is time for us to learn that valuable lives may be saved and valuable property protected in this manner. I am hopeful that these boats will be used in connection with a more perfect coastal protection service around Cape Race, St. Shotts and vicinity, the necessity for which I will refer to later on in my remarks. I understand that the gift of these two vessels was made possible by the activities of the late Government and plans for the purchase of the third ship were concluded before the present Government came in office. I feel sure the present administration will not withhold from its predecessors in office due credit for their activities in these directions.

I am glad to note that at last something definite has been done in connection with the Newfoundland boundary dispute. The finalization of this matter unfortunately has been delayed all too long and one of the results has been that Newfoundland has lost the benefit of the development of its forest resources on the Labrador Peninsula, because capitalists would not seriously consider developing these areas while the title of the Newfoundland Government was enshrouded in any doubt. Competent authorities have passed upon the potential earning powers of these areas and I think the statement goes unchallenged that in its possession of this peninsula Newfoundland has mineral and forest resources and water powers of inestimable value. I think the greatest attention should be paid to the protection of this very valuable portion of Newfoundland's territory; and I am glad to think that Newfoundland's case will have the advantage of the attention and care of my learned and honourable friend, the Minister of Justice, than whom none could be found more capable or efficient to protect in every respect the rights of this dominion.

I note that the Government intends to wind up the Dept. of Militia and the Dept. of Shipping at the earliest possible moment and steps are being taken to inaugurate a more efficient service for the benefit of our disabled soldiers and sailors. Reference has been made to the work of the Civil Re-establishment Committee and I am sure that the public generally will acknowledge the deep debt of gratitude Newfoundland is under to these gentlemen for their voluntary and extremely valuable services performed in the interest of these brave men in our Dominion who sacrificed so much and suffered so greatly in our common cause. Looking back upon the record of the Department of Militia we should always remember that this branch of our service was inaugurated at a time when the stress of war demanded that everything be done with the utmost expedition; that Newfoundland had no precedent of her own to follow; and if in the beginning mistakes were made that criticism on that account should not be levelled against any individual or against the administration then in charge of the affairs of the Colony, because mistakes were inevitable. When we think of the great work this department undertook and carried out so well we have to admit that the greatest credit is due my honourable associate Mr. Bennett and his colleagues for the capable, efficient and praiseworthy work they did in this department. They were pioneers in a service of this character and their record from beginning to end reflects the very highest credit upon them.

I come now to that paragraph in the Speech from the Throne upon which may well be focused all our attention and which cannot be read without awakening thoughts and stiring up memories of the proudest, if saddest, episode in the history of our country. The paragraph I refer to is that one which deals with the concentration and registration of the graves of our heroic dead in Europe and the erection of suitable war memorials on sites purchased by the Newfoundland Government. It is gratifying to think that that valorous and Christian gentleman Rev. Major Nangle has charge of this work. Apart from his intimate knowledge of the various battle fronts over which the Newfoundland Regiment fought and the fund of information that he has at his disposal in reference to the resting places of our dead soldiers in France and Belgium, it is very fitting in my opinion that he should be appointed to take charge of this undertaking, because he symbolizes in the fullest possible sense the sentiments of patriotism, chivalry, devotion to duty and unselfish heroism that have signalized the record of the Newfoundland Regiment and have been epitomized in that title which they so deservedly won of "Better than the Best."

And when I speak on that subject and think of the glorious record our soldiers left behind them and the honour they brought their country, and think of the unselfish and devoted labours of this zealous Padre who with his confreres in arms the Rev. (Capt.) Clayton and the Rev. (Capt.) Stenlake and of the praiseworthy manner in which these gentlemen professing different creeds led the men of our famous regiment along the paths of Christian charity and brotherly love, and in devotion to our common cause sunk all differences of religion in their magnificently successful endeavor to unify the men whose moral guardians they were into a brotherhood that knows not class nor creed nor race, but only the common purpose that binds them together, I am reminded of the terrible evil that is doing so much to embitter feelings in Nfld. to-day and destroy that spirit of harmony, peace and goodfellowship that should exist amongst us. I refer now to that scourge of sectarianism beginning at the eve of the general elections last fall and assuming such proportions as are a menace, as well as a disgrace, to any decent country possessing a decent minded citizenry. When the glorious, if tragic, story of Newfoundland's record in the war was being told it was imagined that example of our soldiers would never be lost sight of. It was felt that the ideals they were fighting for—and fighting for so well—would ever remain a proud possession of Newfoundland, to be looked up to, treasured and followed through all the succeeding years. These men on the battle fields of France and Flanders fought as one and considered not class nor creed. They fought with a common aim—the success of the great cause they were espousing—and registered their blows regardless of the colour or religion of the men who fought side by side with them. They were united and under no circumstances did the question of religious difference ever arise amongst them. The duty laid upon their shoulders was a noble one and under Providence they fought and won as men inspired with such noble sentiments such as they were, were bound to fight and win. They looked to their religion and found therein not a source of dissension and discord, but a fountain of solace and comfort. Their record is an example to us, but how far have we followed it? How far have we as public men allowed ourselves to lose sight of it? I consider the time is now opportune when we should seriously and honestly take cognizance of this dread evil sectarianism which, so contrary to the example set us by these men who went overseas and sacrificed so much for us, we are allowing to go unchecked throughout this country, inoculating every section of this Dominion wits its deadly virus. I have given serious attention to this matter, particularly in view of the unabated vigour with which it is allowed to pursue its evil course, and I have come to the conclusion that there is only one way of ridding this country of it, and that is to appeal to all sections of the community to come together and see that this vicious Thing is no longer allowed to hold sway over the people of Newfoundland, but that we rid ourselves of it promptly and forever. In this spirit I have conceived it my duty to speak to-night and to appeal to the gentlemen of this honorable Assembly who are in a great measure the leaders of their people, the guardians of their morals, formulators of their truths and the conservators of the peace and harmony that should exist amongst them to join with me in the attempt to which I am now directing my attention. A general election unfortunately is always prolific of injurious sentiments that tend to embitter public and private feelings, but rarely as a consequence have we had to face such a lamentable state of affairs as that which is all too present in this country to-day. It has never been my misfortune to have heard and seen religion and the holiest and most sacred thoughts connected with it brazenly flaunted before the people in an attempt to inflame their feelings and give life to their prejudices, as I have seen and heard since the early days of last Autumn. We know the result,—that the most sacred ideals of an otherwise loveable people,—because even amongst ourselves we must admit that Newfoundlanders as a whole are loveable, law-abiding people with a strong sense of Christianity and neighborly feelings amongst them, and who if left alone would continue to live in harmony and goodfellowship, but as things are to-day are separated and deliberately kept separated because of the evil of certain evil-minded politicians—are being prostituted by men whose ambition prompts them to utilize every means available to place themselves and retain themselves in power, and whose disordered senses prompt them to go as far as to drag down to the most sordid depths the most precious sentiments of a people whom they are doing so much to ruin. We as representatives of our people must always remember that when we come upon the floors of this chamber we do not come as representatives of any particular denomination, but as representatives of the people; when we subscribe to the oath of allegiance and take our places here we have to put even the interests of our own respective constituencies behind us, if these interests conflict with the interests of the general public of Newfoundland; that a solemn duty is incumbent upon us of not alone enacting laws for the better material government of this country, but of so comporting ourselves and conforming to high ideals of decent citizenship that the moral standards of our people will never be lowered and that the precepts that we are wont to preach of brotherly love and Christian charity are exemplified in our own public conduct. Newfoundland can never hope to prosper if it continues to be divided on sectarian lines. We all know the old adage that "a house divided falls." No government can possibly hope to attain real success unless as a result of its governing all classes and sections of the country are welded as one and recognition and representation given to the wishes and feelings of even the most isolated portion of the community. Government must be government of the people, by the people and for the people, and the governing authorities of a country who allow a condition of affairs to obtain which cannot result in the advancement of that principle, and who tolerate a pro paganda which has for its object the religious disememberment of the country they seek to govern, must realize that they face failure, either immediately or eventually, it matters not, for failure must come. In my opinion the man who would descend to the disgraceful tactics and the unholy propaganda practised and utilized by certain of our public men in this Dominion, particularly for the past eight or ten months ought be hounded out of public life. If we are content to allow this unholy and highly disgraceful state of affairs to continue we must be prepared to take full responsibility and face the condemnation of all proper thinking people, with its consequent disaster to us when the day comes for us to render an account of our stewardship. Newfoundland's progress is being stopped because of the unrest and the dissension that are being engendered by the spirit of sectarianism which is rampant in Newfoundland to-day; and we cannot hope to prosper or hope to have our country advance or ourselves succeed in our public trust, if the evil influences of this insidious propaganda are not immediately counteracted. I say that it is a sacrilege for any man to play upon the religious feelings of another to further his own end. I appeal to this House, I appeal to the public to save Newfoundland, because I regard the conditions prevailing to-day as highly demoralizing. I do not blame the people as a whole, but I certainly blame the individual who goes amongst these people and deliberately rises their passions and prejudices in the way I have indicated.

It is pleasing to note that the revenue for the last year showed a substantial surplus over expenditure. The credit for this must, of course, be given to my leader Sir Michael Cashin, who in his position as Finance Minister so capably and efficiently carried out the duties of that high office and achieved the finest record that any Finance Minister of this country has ever reached. Newfoundland's finances were never in such a satisfactory condition as during his administration and the greatest possible praise should be accorded him for the wisdom and efficiency with which he administered the financial affairs of this colony during his long tenure of office.

I notice that the estimates will be subject to considerable revision. I trust that any revision decided upon will be in accordance with the pre-election promises of the Government and be the complement of the manifesto of the honourable the Leader of this House. It will be interesting to watch and note affairs in this direction, and whether, now that the time has come for proof, the Government will give evi dence of the sincerity of its protesta_ tion of reform and reduction of taxa- tion upon which it went to the country last fall.

Dealing with the Dept. of Marine and Fisheries, I am glad that serious consideration will be given to placing that department upon a scientific basis. It has long surprised me that Newfoundland with such immense fishery resources and such potential earning power never considered the scientific investigation and development of this industry. Perhaps no other country in the world can claim such little knowledge of its staple industry as Newfoundland. When we consider that we are in main absolutely dependent upon the success of our fisheries, what excuse can we offer if our conduct shows that we are indifferent to their proper development and scientific treatment? Every other fishing country of the world has set itself seriously to the task of placing this important matter upon a thoroughly efficient basis and I am glad to think that Newfoundland is about to follow suit. I believe that if this movement is carried out as it should be it will result in a marked improvement in our staple industry and Newfoundland will gain immeasurably through this assistance unfortunately so long delayed.

The next paragraph of the Speech from the Throne says that Legislation will be introduced to establish a proper survey of ships in Newfoundland and of all vessels engaged in the foreign trade of the island. This legislation will include provision for the protection of the lives of all those employed on foreign going vessels. There can be no question as to the wisdom of this course. Our maritime laws have for all too long a period been disregarded and it is time that some such step be taken. In this connection let me refer to the comment that was made by an honourable member of this Assembly in reference to the loss o fthe S.S. "Beverley." Merely as a matter of inference it might appear that his speech contained some criticism of the owner of that vessel Mr. W. A. Munn. In justice to Mr. Munn I would like to clear up the situation and emphazise the fact that no censure of any sort can be laid on him or blame of any description accorded him. He was not the original owner of the vessel in question, but purchased it from a local firm who had bought the ship outside the country and brought it here and spent considerable money in effecting repairs. In addition to the work of renovation and reconstruction carried out by the original owners in this country Mr. Munn went further and gave carte blanche to the naval architects in charge to do everything necessary to render that vessel seaworthy and in all respects fit to take up trans_Atlantic cargo work. He spent money lavishly on her reconstruction and repair. He gave the widest authority to the men responsibile for the work and the most explicit instructions to leave nothing undone to put her in proper condition and safeguard every possible contingency. From the time he became owner of that vessel up to the time she left Newfoundland no effort was spared by Mr. Munn in a conscientious endeavour to perform his obligation as owner. Every precaution possible was taken, every safeguard availed of, and Mr. Munn can in nowise be blamed for the loss that overtook this ship. When the news of her loss reached this country no one in the country felt more deeply the loss of the lives on board that vessel than Mr. Munn; and it is most unjust and most unfair to blame him even in the slightest fashion for the marine tragedy known as "the loss of the S.S. 'Beverley.'" I say this in justice to this gentleman, and I feel sure that every person who knows the circumsfances surrounding the purchase, reconstruction and loss of this steamer will save Mr. Munn harmless of any responsibility for this heart-rending fatality.

I regard the legislative enactment dealing with our coastal services as both very wise and very essential. We know from actual knowledge that it is only the mercy of Providence that has averted many disasters in the past on the South Coast of Newfoundland. In the spring and fall of every year vessels go to and from Labrador and the Straits overloaded and overcrowded, and it is not due to the care and protection of the authorities or those responsible for the carrying out of the laws on the subject that tragedies have not overtaken the voyages of these vessels. I know that small schooners unsound and unseaworthy have been employed to convey men from the Labrador to Newfoundland. I fear that many of the rules and regulations dealing with survey of ships, coastal and otherwise, and the scrutiny of life-saving appliances, and generally the protection of those who go on board these vessels have been carried out in a very lax fashion. The captain and officers of these vessels cannot be held blameworthy. I have spoken to several of them and they themselves have decried the intolerable conditions under which they are forced to carry out these services. Idoubt very much if ever, supposing these vessels carry life boats or other life_saving appliances, this apparatus is tested, or whether it is ever demonstrated that in time of accident it might be depended upon to safeguard the lives of passengers and crews. I consider that the circumstances surrounding these services are nothing short of monstrous, and it is incumbent upon the authorities to immediately take remedial measures and to see that this intolerable state of affairs is not allowed to continue any longer. Dealing with this question I would also like to refer to the revision of the sealing laws.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, as the hour is now late and as I have some rather lengthy observations to make on the Speech from the Throne, I shall reserve them for the next sitting, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was adjourned until to-morrow.

Second reading of bill entitled "An Act respecting the effect and application of certain act subsequent to Consolidated Statutes (Third Series).

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the effect and application of certain acts subsequent to Consolidated Statutes (Third Series)" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill I wish to say that it is of more interest to the legal than the lay section of the House. The idea of the bill is to legalize certain acts passed since the compilation of the Consolidated Statutes, (Third Series) in 1916.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Industrial Societies Act, 1919" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a Committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUS-

TICE:—Mr. Speaker, this is another bill of a purely technical nature, and deals with co-operative concerns and industrial societies providing for the Department of Justice to be empowered to make rules and regualtions instead of the Registrar of Deeds and Companies whose duty this was under the act as it formerly existed.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 41, of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Newfoundland Medical Board" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house to-morrow.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, perhaps if my friend the honorable member for Hr. Main had been in the House before he would have had charge of this bill. The present Act provides that practitioners seeking to take out a license must take an examination for which a fee of twenty-five dollars is charged. I understand that the doctors now desire to raise this fee to forty dollars.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Food Control Act, 1917" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. THE PREMIER:—In moving the second reading of this bill, Mr. Speaker, I may say that in 1917 an Act was passed providing for the control of certain import trade. Under this the Board was composed of three members and this amendment is for the purpose of increasing the personel to six. The second section of this bill deals with Sec. 6, of the 1917 Act, which is amended to read.

MR. HIGGINS:—May I ask Mr. Speaker, if the members of the Food Control Board are paid?

HON. THE PREMIER:—No provision for payment has been made for the present members of the Board who have up to the present given their services gratis though I understand the late members were paid. These were Sir Patrick McGrath, chairman, Mr. H. W. LeMessurier and Mr. George Grimes. The present personnel is Hon. A. W. Mews, chairman, Mr. LeMessurier, the late President of the Board of Trade, the President of the L.S.P.U., the President of the N.I.W.A.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Public Works" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house to-morrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 176 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series), entitled "Of the encouragement of Ship Building."

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

HON. THE PREMIER:—Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question asked on Wednesday, I beg to say that one of the ships secured by this Colony from the British Admiralty was purchased for 15,000 pounds sterling. The others are a donation from the British Government, only whatever fittings might be necessary and the cost of bringing the ships out here to be paid for by our Government.

The House then adjourned till Monday at 3 p.m.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises, it adjourn until Monday next at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, April 26th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Sullivan gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Walsh gave Notice of Question.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 176 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Encouragement of Shipbuilding" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

The debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

PETITIONS

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Patrick's Cove on the Cape Shore asking for telephone or telegraph communication. The petition is signed by George McGrath and all the other residents of this settlement. This is not the first time that this important matter has come before this House in the form of petitions nor is it the first time that I have tried to have this boon granted to the people who now ask for it. Patrick's Cove is situated about mid way between Placentia and Branch or about twenty miles from each place and under present conditions the people suffer great hardship because of their isolated condition. It would be an easy matter for the Government to establish telephone communication there and as there is no coastal service or no railway connection the people are fully entitled to this consideration. The fishery is usually good there and there are splendid agricultural possibilities but the lack of facilities nullifies the good effects of all this. The time has now come when we must look these matters straight in the face and I am sure that the Government will do their best to see that the request of this petititon is granted. The telegraph line now runs along the shore for a distance of forty miles, and if the telegraph were cut out altogether and a telephone system installed, the cost would not be as great as at present. I may say that the late Government made recommendations to the colonial secretary's department on the matter of telephone connection in this section and Patrick's Cove was one of the places that were to be considered. Some of the offices were built and tenders were asked for for the others. I have no doubt mut that the present government will continue the good work. I feel sure that the minister of posts and telegraphs will see that this petioion will be given the consideration that its importance demands. I have much pleasure, sir, in presenting the petition and asking that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in giving this petition my hearty support. We had arrangements practically complete for the opening of this office, and I know that the Government will see that the work is carried out. It would be in the best interests of the majority of the people of this section if the telegraph was cut out and a telephone system submitted for it, as then every little hamlet could be connected up at very little cost, and in this way many lives could be saved.

MR. SINNOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to also give this petition my hearty support.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, just one other petition this afternoon. This is a very lengthy one as you can see, and it is signed by some two hundred people. It is from the residents of Colinet Island, asking for the sum of $15,000 to open up a canal and build a breakwater. These people have no good harbor and suffer unnecessary hardships in carrying on their work. The request is a reasonable one, and I am sure that it will receive the best support of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. These people do not participate in the many other public services which they help to pay for. They have no coastal service although it is true that a steamer calls at Salmonier, but this is a long distance away. I think that this petition should receive sympathy and practical sympathy, and I have much pleasure in referring it to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in giving this petition my full support. Those people are isolated in the middle of St. Mary's Bay and the improvements they ask for would be a great advantage to them. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I trust that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give the petition his hearty support.

MR. SINNOTT:—It gives me much pleasure, Sir, to give this petition my full support.

MR. TARGETT—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of the south side of Trinity Bay, asking that Magistrate J. W. Janes be transferred to the south side or the bay. In consideration of the part this man played in the great war I think that he should be the man chosen if anybody for this important appointment. He gave three sons and a daughter to the forces, one of whom made the supreme sacrifice. As regards the needs of a magistrate on the south side of Trinity Bay, I cannot too greatly urge upon this house the importance of the request of this petition. For a magistrate to come from Broad Cove to Hant's Harbor means that he has to travel 23 miles, and it is not every day or every month or every two months that he is able to make the journey. It seems a strange thing to me that all the magistrates should be situated in Conception Bay, but I suppose that politics is accountable for it. There is a settlement be- Heart's Content called Winterton, and when the magistrate comes from Carbonear to Heart's Content the people, whether male or female, who have any business to be settled, must travel to Heart's Content in all kinds of we ather. I trust that this house and the department of justice will take these facts into consideration and that the prayer of this petition will be granted.

MR. GUPPY—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in giving this petition my hearty support.

Mr. HIGGINS—Mr. Speaker, somehow or other I have, during the past two or three sessions had occasion to support a petition of this kind. I have personal knowledge of the difficulties with which these people have to contend in magisterial matters, and I support the petition for the reason that the gentleman referred to should, on account of his splendid war record, be given every consideration. I feel sure that the Department of Justice will give this matter serious consideration, and I have much pleasure, Sir, in giving the petition my hearty support.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition on behalf of the people of Flatrock on the matter of a concrete road. As its name implies, Flatrock was intended by nature to have a concrete road. The launchway built there by the late government was found to give great satisfaction, but this has been washed away. The public wharf has also been washed away. I think it will be found when inquired into by the Marine and Fisheries Department that this is a very urgent need. By reason of the importance of this settlement and the amount of fish it brings in yearly, I feel satisfied that the results of any investigation of the Marine Department will justify the building of this concrete road. I support this petition most heartily, Mr. Speaker.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to support my hon. colleague in this petition. I know the value of concrete works of a similar nature in other settlements, and the necessity of this road in Flatrock. I therefore beg leave to support this petition.

MR. VINICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting this petition of my hon. colleague, Mr. Higgins. I think the late government put some concrete on the road there and it stood the wear and tear of time for the past few years. The present Government will find no better men than the fishermen of Flatrock, and no doubt they deserve this concrete road. Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting this petition.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Shoe Cove,a small settlement near Pouch Cove, for a way house where the mail may be dropped. The request asks that the mail be left at tne house of Thomas Power. This does not require anything more than the halting of the mail team on its way to Pouch Cove. This will save the people of Shoe Cove a two mile walk and the expenditure will be nominal. I will ask the Hon. Prime Minister as Colonial Secretary to give this petition his serious consideration.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I should like to support the petition and I feel sure that the prayer of this petition will be granted. I ask the Hon. Prime Minister that this petition receive his consideration.

MR. VINICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to support this petition from the people of Shoe Cove, as I realize the necessity for such a way house.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Notice of Questions.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I have read the Governor's Speech from the Throne with considerable interest. It is not what is in the Speech that is interesting; it is what is left out. One part of the Speech I am fully in accord with, and that is we are all proud the great world war is over and we are settling down to peace. I am proud to welcome Lieut. Small and Sergt. LeGrow to the House and fully realize the great work they have done, and the noble boys who laid down their lives for the greatest nation in the world, upon which the sun never sets. The only Crosbie who was fit to volunteer did so—my nephew, at 16 years of age—and was killed in the great drive of July, in which so many of Newfoundland's sons laid down their lives. We are proud of them one and all. When reading the Speech I came to one of the most important things which, in my judgment, even this House of Assembly ever attempted to handle—fish regulations—and after careful thought decided I would not interfere, in fact decided it was useless. But after a moment's further thought felt that I would be avoiding my duty to my constituents and my country, who had sent me here to represent them, and I immediately decided that I would do my duty. In the Speech from the Throne it has been said that considerable money has been saved by these regulations. I, for one, cannot see it, nor can any other man acquainted with the full facts. It's really a dream, it's not a reality. I would be glad if it were true, but I know it is not. Now, on or about the 6th day of February I made a speech to the Board of Trade. I tried to be moderate and fair, as I was anxious that any attempt to assist the fishermen in obtaining better prices for their products shoud not be bocked. But, Mr. Speaker, I contended that these regulations, in the way of fixing prices, were dangerous, mischievous and troublesome, and the only way prices would ever be fixed was by supply and demand, and I said at that meeting, using the words of one of England's Prime Ministers, "Just wait and see," and now results are beginning to prove that I was correct. Fish is troublesome produce to handle; it is a perishable article, it is similar to the fruit trade, not quite as perishable, but nearly as bad in a warm climate. It has been said that under my time as Minister of Shipping, I tried to rule the prices, etc. That is not correct. It was an arrangement made by the merchants themselves, in which I acted as chairman, and it only covered a term of a month, to be cancelled at any time if they so decided.

We did not interfere with prices anywhere, except in Brazil, where we tried to maintain prices, but had nothing whatever to do with payment, etc. That was entirely for the merchant himself on the other side. We tried to regulate cargoes for different markets, but this was mostly with Labrador fish—that is practically what I did. Associated with me were Hon. W. B. Grieve, late Hon. J. Harvey and Hon. A. E. Hickman, and as soon as markets brightened we dropped it again. During my visit last May and June I learned certain things in connection with exchange, and I called a meeting of the Board of Trade and told the exporters exchange would likely go very low, and I was prepared to give every assistance I could in helping to arrange for the coming season's catch. The merchants wanted the Government which I was associated with to lay down some rules and regulations re shipments, etc., but they declined to interfere—that, Mr. Speaker, is the history of anything I did with fish.

Some time last December I attended a meeting with several exporters and discussed with Mr. Hawes the handling of our fish in Italy, and what could be done with the Consorzio. We had a considerable number of meetings, and I pointed out to Mr. Hawes all I did through the Governor, the British Government, etc., yet we could do nothing with the Consorzio, and I feared he would have the same result. Yet Mr. Hawes started in to work with the Consorzio, and some time late in October I got a note saying he had made sales and hastened to give me the good news, but alas the sales fell through. On November 3rd, as you gentlemen are fully aware, we were beaten at the polls, and as soon as the result was known, I understand Messrs. Hawes and Job proceeded to Port Union, and, presumably, some arrangement was made with the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which was never discussed with me; and the next I knew was that regulations were issued from the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, regulations laying down prices, etc., and appointing Mr. Hawes agent.

After reading these regulations carefully, I decided to sell my holdings of fish locally, and did so, as I saw trouble ahead. Now, Mr. Speaker, begins the real trouble. I claim, and nobody to the contrary can prove different, that the fixing of prices, etc. has brought about a change of affairs that really may be very serious, indeed more serious than most people can imagine. Just imagine, if you can, our country with a population of 250,000, a small sized city, dictating to millions what they must pay for codfish. One would imagine we were the only country in the world who catch fish, but we are facing all kinds of competition now that the world war is over, and if we are not very careful we may lose our markets altogether.

I can well remember our Black Monday in 1894. Be careful, then, gentlemen, that history does not repeat itself. Remember the financial position of the world to-day is unsound, and these countries we sell our fish to are seriously handicapped by this great difference in exchange. Remember that to-day it is not hastily we must act, but with serious and careful judgment. One mistake may ruin the whole trade of the country. Diplomacy is required. Standardize your fish, and give your customer the article you profess to sell. Never mind fixing prices. Supply and demand with quality will remedy that, and let everybody sell to whom he pleases. Apparently someone has found light in his darkness. Take Mr. Walter Monroe's message of warning in a cable sent here the other day:

"My opinion is regulations now detrimental to trade interests. If continued, curtail supplies to a minimum. Give publicity."

What does it mean? Mr. Monroe is on the other side and has seen what has happened, and he is now a big enough man to admit his mistake and I feel before very long, gentlemen, that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will do the same. Just wait and see. We do not realize at all what the loss has been to us through these regulations. I will here compare figures as to shipments to Brazil:

Sir John Crosbie presented statistics. Amongst them he showed that from Oct. to Dec. 31, 1918, 69,457 drums were sent to Brazilian consignees. For the same period of 1919, the number of drums was 111,885, showing a shortage of about 43,000 drums.

Shipments during the six months ending on March 31st last, compared with shipments of the corresponding months of 1918-1919, show a decrease of 70,000 drums. Figure up the loss.

70,000 drums would mean a loss on:—

Packages	$105,000
Labor on same	42,000
Less Freight at 2½	175,000
	$322,000

Look at the loss to coopers and to people who have been making drums in Conception Bay, also to laborers, and the loss on freight, etc. Where is this money gone? It is easily answered. I will read to you a clipping from The Maritime Merchant:

"From the importers' standpoint things to-day are looking pretty good, except in the consignment markets. Port Rico and Barbados are overloaded with supplies, but Cuba is a ready purchaser, with prospects that she will continue such for some months to come. North Brazil, too, has begun to buy quite freely, after showing extreme bashfulness for some time, and it is expected that she will be a good customer until after the Lenten season; she is not, however, willing to pay the high prices of last year. One of the most interesting bits of news in the dried fish trade at present is what comes to us from Newfoundland. The Government down there are attempting to regulate the export price of fish; that is, to set a minimum below which nothing can be sold. Permits to make shipments have to be secured from the Government who also stipulate the terms which may be given to foreign purchasers. The effect of this effort will not be felt directly in our market, the West Indies, but it should have a tendency to strengthen prices in a general way, and so it is that we find local exporters much more satisfied with the business outlook than they were a year ago. They think they can now see quite clearly how it will be possible for them to clean up everything they have without much effort; they feel that they should have the minimum of worry from this time forward. Some enquiries locally are reported from Italy, but stocks held here which would suite for that market are unfortunately light; what there is that would suit is needed, so it is said, for 'order' trade with Brazil."

How delighted these Nova Scotians must have been. Halifax got the coopers making packages, Halifax laborers got the labor, and Canadian ships likely get the freights, and poor old Newfoundland must suffer. Isn't it awful. All through an error in judgment, making rules and regulations to suit some people. Brazil regulations call for practically 90 per cent. payment before the cargo sails; in the old way they used to pay on 60 or 90 day bills, which, apparently, most people were satisfied. But, now you cannot do this any more; you must pay cash, and buyers fight shy and do business with other countries on reasonable terms. Yet, they turn around and force us to do business with Mr. Hawes, and draw at 60 or 90 days at Mr. Hawe's pleasure, when often and often we could sell cargoes outright. In other words, they change things at Brazil and turn around and change the conditions and practically go back to Brazil conditions in Europe. It is a funny state of affairs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, Spain has gone to pieces, just as I expected, and predicted. Hawes practically throws up the sponge and sends his ultimatum, and I will read you his cable:

"Situation Spain serious. Our total stocks 58,000, besides 25,000 on the way. Spain average total sales 2,000 weekly. Alicante advise has ample proof Lazo offering Alicante really good quality large and medium 71|6, small 68|—. In interests of consignments already received and next season, protest must refuse anything more whatever even without advances."

If what Hawes says is right, there is forty weeks' stock there, and he now refuses anything whatever without advances. Oh, what a change to the wonderful things these regulations were going to do. I wonder what about these hundreds of thousands of dollars they saved. Wait a bit, we are not through with Mr. Hawes. He is a clever man, although he could not handle the Consorzio like he handles the merchants here. He is clever, and somebody may find Mr. Hawes is not through yet. There is going to be lots of trouble before these regulations of the past winter are finished.

What is the position in Oporto today? On April 7th, 1919, the stocks were 5,405 quintals, consumption 7,285 qtls.; April 14th, 1919, the stocks were 15,275 qtls.; consumption, 5,698 qtls.; April 28th, 1919, the stocks were 6,939 qtls. consumption, 4,053 qtls.

Compare the position, same dates, for 1920:

April 3rd the stocks were 68,557 qtls.; consumption, 7,743 qtls. April 8th, the stocks were 75,200 qtls.; con?-sumption, 5,000 qtls.; April 15th, the stocks were 60,000 qtls.; consumption 4,057 qtls.; April 19th the stocks were 55,715 qtls.; consumption 5,200 qtls.

And with six cargoes outside to enter. I will now read a message received from Oporto, which surely speaks for itself:

"Owing regulations, unless shippers avail of their consignees and sell at best prices obtainable, result ruinous. Six cargoes waiting instructions here."

Is this not enough to make one sit and wonder what's to happen next? If something is not done, fishermen who have fish to come in here this spring will realize to their sorrow something has happened, as it will be practically unsaleable. What are we going to do with large and medium that is in the country now if these markets are unable to handle it? It is really serious, more serious than we think.

Last November no shipper was allowed to ship fish unless he could name the price and destination, not even to Halifax, yet when the Hon Minister of Marine and Fisheries returns from his trip his advice is to sell all you can to Halifax, rush all the fish you can there—what a change! Consorzio and Hawes—nobody seems to understand just what happened there. Some say Hawes sold 200,000 quintals and all kinds of great things were done; yet I know when some people get their account sales and final adjustments they won't be very happy. I know of a cargo sold to them which is now returning. I feel confident that things in Italy are much more serious than some people think. Yet, 1920 catch will never realize the prices of 1919, just as sure as the chickens come home to roost, and that's pretty sure. Yes, regulations may be required, standardization of quality is a move in the right direction. Have proper inspection to see the qualities are shipped as sold. This, in my mind, is a move in the right direction, but don't interfere with price. Let a man sell to the best advantage; some men may be satisfied with reasonable profit, while others are not. Why should be not be allowed to sell at a small profit? Again, if these regulations of prices remain, no young man can ever step up the ladder; he is down and out, the big man will be the man. It is difficult to know just what to do, but one must not act too hastily, it requires great thought and consideration. Remember to-day we have all the competition we want coming along from Norway, Iceland, France and England, which will all be competing with us. How can we then fix prices Utterly impossible. Get the quality up to a good standard and supply and demand will cover the rest. Buyers? Yes, the more the merrier; it makes competition in our local markets keener; it helps finance, and it will help the fishermen to obtain the very best prices for their fish.

I appeal to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to be very, very careful. Fish is our chief product; any false move may possibly change the financial position of Newfoundland in more way than he or I ever dreamt of,—he, who was sent by the fishermen to the House to protect their interests. I again appeal to him, don't act too hastily, get the best brains the country can produce and give everything great and careful consideration, and, after all, good may come out of evil.

Finance,—the world to-day is topsy-turvy. Yes, I believe Newfoundland fishermen and merchants all did well the past five years; but they enlarged their business, increased their trade, and to-day they find themselves with vessels, traps, etc., which they cannot sell, and after all, is this not what has always happened in Newfoundland?

London brokers who have helped so many young men to become exporters to-day are essential to this trade, they are not perfect in everything, but they have been of great assistance, in fact they practically acted as a medium between buyer and seller, made finance easy to handle, and were a great assistance in helping to finance the season's catch, but to-day this way of doing business no longer exists. They refuse to advance or handle our fish under these regulations. The result means that the whole fish trade may go into six or seven merchants' hands and then see what will happen. Competition is the life of trade. Take it away and it means disaster—sure. In closing my remarks on the fish regulations I reserve other information and further remarks until the legislation is brought in.

MR. SINNOTT:—Mr. Speaker, in rising for the first time to address the House, I have great pleasure in congratulating you on your appointment as Speaker for the House.

In considering the Speech from the Throne, it occurred to me there are several important things which have not been considered in the speech 't-self. To my mind, Sir, the most notable and the most culpable omission is that the Government have taken no move to make any reduction in the high cost of living. This is all the more remarkable and all the more deserving of condemnation when we remember that the Hon. Prime Minister in his manifesto, which he submitted to the electors of Newfoundland, dealt at great length with this question. To his utterances on this point, both he and his party pledged themselves. The Prime Minister promised that if he and his party were returned, that they would at once deal with the question. Since then nothing has been done. We all thought, Sir, that the delay was caused by the late opening of the House ,but here we were all disappointed. There has been no mention in the policy of the Government of profiteers or profiteering. There is no doubt that profiteering is now carried on in this country. Nobody will deny this, and surely, Sir, there is no more urgent question than this, and the first and chief consideration of this House should be to secure a remedy for this evil. There is no question which so greatly affects the people of this country, and I regret very much that no consideration has been given it as yet. I would suggest, Sir, through you, that the Prime Minister and his colleagues should remember their pre-election promises in this regard and take immediate steps to deal with this matter.

MR. J. R. BENNETT:—Mr. Speaker, in rising to express my views on the Speech from the Throne, I would first like to take the opportunity of offering my congratulations to the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply. We all listened with pride and gratification to the speeches made by Lieut. Small and Sergt. Major LeGrow, and we all felt gratification that in this the first election after the great war, that representatives of our regiment found a place and seat in this House. It is truly fitting that those who have done so much, those who have fought and died for the country in the country's day of peril, should have some recognition from the people of the country when formulating the governing body of the country. In those two gentlemen we have representatives who will carry out the traditions of the regiment in which they played so prominent and creditable a part. They will continue to fight for the country, not on the battle field, but on the floors of the legislating house of the country, and I feel sure that at all times they wil be ready to stand up, and champion everything that is for the interest of their native land. It is a regrettable feature that we have not a representative or a couple of representatives of the other branch of the service. It would have been fitting if the men of the Royal Naval Reserve, had some representative on the floors of the Assembly, and in that desire, we on this side of the House can claim that we made an honest attempt to meet the situation, and endeavoured to bring home to the people of one of the most important districts of the Island, the claims of one man who at the time of the war acquitted himself in such a manner that he was entitled to the gratitude of his countrymen. I refer to the gentleman who contested the district of Trinity Bay, Mr. Matthews, Royal Naval Reservist. Mr. Matthews, after his return from his duties in His Majesty's navy, took a very prominent part, and played a very creditable role in the organization of the G.W.V.A. I can look back with pride and gratification to several interviews I had with Mr. Matthews, and his associates in connection with affairs appertaining to the welfare of our soldiers and sailors. I can vouch, and would state here this evening, that no more fitting representative of those men who played such an important part in the war, men who came from all parts of the Island, to participate in the great events of the North Sea, and other parts of the Empire, than Mr. Matthews who was defeated in Trinity Bay. He was the victim of circumstances.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—He was on the wrong side.

MR. BENNETT:—If you think so, well very good, but the time may come to prove that he is on the right side.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—I mean the antipathy for you and those associated with him.

MR. BENNETT:—The antipathy towards me was not the question. I was not the individual and I was not the cloth that they had antipathy for. Isn't that what you mean.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—No.

MR. BENNETT:—The antipathy towards Mr. Matthews was not on account of himself and it is a deplorable condition in this country when men are judged not according to themselves or their work or what they stand for. Circumstances arose in the election last fall that were deplorable and as a free people we ought to be ashamed of the attitude of certain sections of the press as regards the issues before the country during the last election. The issues before the country were lost sight of absolutely and the whole country was swayed on prejudice that was never before equalled.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—It came from your side.

MR. BENNETT:—I ask you to keep quiet, and you will have an opportunity later. I was leading up to my argument about Mr. Matthews when I was indecently interrupted by several members of the Government who ought to know better. I evidently trod on somebody's corn because their conscience immediately came to the surface and they had to say something in self-defence.

Mr. Matthew's character was clean, honest and above board, and I say that he deserved better treatment from his countrymen and his townsmen. It's deplorable that we have not a representative in this House from His Majesty's Navy and the Royal Naval Reserve, and, if Mr. Matthews was given his rights he would have been granted a seat and his seat should not have been contested as a compliment to the work done by him during the four years of war.

Passing from that I would like, as one of the senior members of the House, to extend a welcome to those members who sit here for the first time. It is a matter of pride that there are so many young men amongst us. The day is gone past when a man has to live to get old before given a position of trust and responsibility. This is the young men's age, and it is the young men who fought our battles and gained our victories. The young men to-day are taking their places as leaders in church and state and commerce such as they never did before. I feel sure that we have here from the younger generations representatives who will so enhance the value of the debates of this Assembly that the country will receive a benefit that at the present time we have no means of measuring.

We all listened to an address the other evening from Mr. Fox, member for St. John's East, an address that, judging by the attention given him from both sides of the House, he must have impressed the House to such a degree as would have done credit to mature members thereof.

Mr. Fox's reputation as a public speaker preceded him in this House, but we had no idea before he made that excellent address that we had one amongst us with such qualifications, and, who, without any previous experience in this Chamber, handled the subject in such a polished, clear and fearless manner as the Hon. Member for St. John's East did on that occasion. I am sure every one of us will express the wish that he will have many years of assembling in this Chamber and we hope to see him rise to a position of eminence.

In looking over the Speech from the Throne, Mr. Speaker, one cannot help being struck or cannot help expressing regret, that, after all, there does not appear any of the large and extensive programme of promises during the last election and since. We were hoping to see some large policy outlined, as the Government has been only recently returned from the polls.

The second paragraph refers to the termination of the war. I am sure we all feel with His Excellency and join in the expression of gratification that the great war which has terminated has brought such a victory to the forces of our Empire and our allies; a victory that will go down in history as the greatest achievement that ever the British Empire, in common with her ally France, who bore the brunt and heat and burden of the day, was more responsible in the bringing out of that victory than any other combination of forces. They defeated those who tried to tear down the free institutions of the civilized world.

The Great German Emperor, who in his desire for gain and place and power, has been put in his place where civilization decided he should be put, and it is a matter of thankfulness and gratification to us all that that conflict has terminated in such a manner that has brought honour and glory to our flags and our noble boys. But, Mr. Speaker, the after effects of that conflict are with us now, and we have in common with every other part of the world to face conditions that are extraordinary and unusual; conditions brought about through the strenuous work that had been performed and con ditions that tested the very life blood and the very foundation of our great Empire. And not alone of our Empire but of almost every civilized country in the world. Most of those countries to-day are practically in a state of financial collapse. We have seen in our old beloved Mother country a currency depreciated in the markets of the world, such as has never occurred before. We have had in this country a feeling of unrest, a feeling of dissatisfaction and a feeling that will require a great deal of effort on the part of those whose duty it is to look after the affairs of the people of the country for many days to come.

When the war was over it was expected that extraordinary conditions would have to be faced that would require extraordinary ability, experience and determination, and require knowledge as to what is best to be done under such circumstances. We had extraordinary conditions to face during the war and extraordinary conditions require extraordinary efforts on the part of the public men of this country, as they require the same on the part of the public men in every other country. It was essential for the successful carrying on of the war to sink all differences, political, religious and otherwise until after the armistice was established so that one solid phalanx was created to face the issues confronting us and in common with every other part of the empire to, enable us to bring this country out triumphant from the great struggle in which we have been engaged.

That can be accomplished in the ordinary course of events. Some saw fit before the work was attempted, some saw well to disassociate themselves with future governments and with future policies. And it is a fact that during the last two or three years that men who have been in public matters and who have directed them and those who were responsible for the bringing together of different elements have every reason to be satisfied with their action taken with regard to every moment and every action has more than justified itself in the way the country's affairs have been handled during these trying times. The problems that are presenting themselves to us in common with every other part of the world require the best that is in us and require a united front and at least it is desirable that we understand each other in the solution of them.

In the United States of America though they have not had any serious financial position to concern them they are practically in a state of revolution, of industrial unrest and general dissatisfaction pervades the whole land and if that can be taken as a sign of the times serious trouble is in store for that country, in spite of their wonderful resources and their splendid financial position.

We have heard a great deal since the House opened with regard to the high cost of living. I am not going to attempt to blame the government for the present high prices that are asked for the necessaries of life. I do not say that the government as a government is responsible to do something that will require from those who are supposed to be profiteering an explanation that will satisfy the people of the country whether undue profiteering is taking place. The man in the street is practically living in a fog with regard to the situation. It might be all right enough in the case of the wholesale grocer, the retail grocer, the dry goods merchant or any other business man dealing with the markets.

The man in the street must be satisfied that the right is being done. Whereas the others have every reason to know whether the proper prices are being charged. But the man in the street, the man with a family of nine or ten children, whose mouths have to be fed, is compelled to go out and demand extra wages for work which were never demanded before and these demands are considered exorbitant and excessive when one considers how much food he can buy for a five dollar bill as compared with the amount bought with a one dallar bill four years ago and when one considers that we have reached a period of unprecedented problems, I think we ought to think the demands of the workman only reasonable.

Everybody knows that the money that he earns by the sweat of his brow is no good to him. He cannot get decent returns for it. I do not say the government is responsible but it is the government's duty to see and find out and declare to this dissatisfied country to those who have to purchase the necessaries of life whether or not unjust prices are being required and when the government does this they are only doing what is their duty and doing what is right by the people. Of course the war carried with it extraordinary conditions. And now that the war is over we are looking forward to a reduction to a letting up of the conditions that existed all through the war. But instead of there being on improvement in matters these matters are getting worse and worse and we have a spectacle as already pointed out of the labouring man and the mechanic and every other man earns his bread by the sweat of his brow unable to get a decent living no matter what wages he earns because of the existing conditions. I say Mr. Speaker, that the government has a solemn duty to the people of this country.

The people of St. John's have not the advantages of the outport men. The man in the outport has many advantages which the man in St. John's has not. In the outports he has his own home and plot of ground, his sheep or his pig and his cow or goat to help him to make things easy. He catches his food right at his door and grows his own vegetables and raises his own meats, but the poor unfortunate man in St. John's who has to live in the back street and got to pay his hard earned money for everything he requires.

He will be in such a position that I may say he eventually when the last straw is thrown on him he will rise and demand to know whether or not all these things are justifiable and right. I therefore wish, Mr. Speaker, desire to impress upon the Prime Minister and the honourable members of the House the pressing necessity for some effort to be made to give to the people a true statement of affairs and let the people know that when they pay nineteen dollars per ton for coal it is either justifiable or not; whether it is right and proper that the people should be charged twenty dollars per barrel for flour; whether the price of fifty cents for a pound of butter, margarine, is justifiable; whether the necessaries of life have been increased beyond that which the market requires. I say that if this information is given under the due and proper authority it may obviate a serious condition of affairs.

Surely we are interested to the extent to satisfy the people that the situation before us just as we see it, just as it was pointed out by Sir John C. Crosbie, that it is only a matter of supply and demand. I do hope that this will be explained to the people and that the government will make an effort to stop any undue profiteering if any such profiteering exists in the country to-day.

The second part of the second paragraph of the speech from th throne which His Excellency the Governor was made to express referred to the effect of war and suggests that sympathy be extended to the people, (reads para. 2.) The question of good will and peace among the warring nations is one I suppose that is occupying the minds of great men and even the greatest minds in the world to-day.

Peace and good will among the warring nations we'll hope and pray will come and that a permanent peace will ensue and this world will be restored to it's former condition of happiness and prosperity. If everything goes as they are now going I am afraid it will be long before that happy condition of things will be accomplished. It will be some time before the period of reconstruction will be successfully passed, some time before we will be back to our former status. Peace and good will as comes from the mouth of His Excellency the Governor on the advice of the Government is an expression of insincerity.

What is the use to shout "peace, peace" when there is no peace? This House cannot be looked upon with confidence at present. The constitution of this House was not sown in peace nor yet in good will. During the last election men were not judged according to their light, not according to their records, not according to their qualifications, not according to their ability to carry on the Government or business of the country. I made a remark this afternoon about a man who had gone to fight for his native country and who had offered himself as a candidate. He was refused. It is a sorry spectacle to see a man so well deserving turned down by the people. Vital issues were lost sight of. The vileness of the political campaign has no parallel in the history of Newfoundland. Things that transpired in the last election will never be blotted out. Each side blames the other for conducting a sectarian campaign. I am here this evening to state my reasons for fighting the campaign under the leadership of Sir Michael Cashin. In 1908, when Sir Edward Morris fought an election campaign he came back with 18 to 18, and subsequently in 1909 when he came back to the country was returned with a substantial majority. In 1913 he was again returned with the Government. In the election of 1909 Mr. Squires, the leader of the present Government, was elected as a member of Sir Edward Morris' Government, In 1913 he went back to his district and was defeated, but with the consent of a number of us who are today on the opposition he was given a seat in legislature and the portfolio of Minister of Justice. During my term I was closely associated with Sir Edward Morris, and I may say that no man ever occupied the Prime Minister's chair who was stronger, more determined, less prejudiced than he was. Never did he descriminate against a man. On the contrary, I to assist and help men whose religious convictions were not his. Right down through that Government the utmost harmony existed under Sir Edward Morris' leadership. After he retired from public life and went to a sphere of greater usefulness for the empire, where he would have a broader field of activity. When the dissolution of the national government took place last spring I was a member of that section of the Government that was called upon to form a new government. For the purpose of forming that Government and being its leader the man with the greatest experience and financial ability was called upon. Every denomination has its proper representation. In the course of events an election was called. I would not have gone to the country under the leadership of Sir Michael Cashin if I did not have faith in him, his integrity and ability, and that he would succeed if elected as Prime Minister. When he went to the country he had to look for candidates for the various districts, some of which he knew would just go by default. Some of the districts the minister of marine and fisheries has in his pocket, but the men were found who were willing to go to these districts. There was no effort made to choke any man out from opposing us. The result of the election was in some respect a surprise.

Mr. Speaker, as the House closed for recess I was drawing your attention to certain incidents that have happened in the general elections of the past ten or twelve years. I refer to the fact that in 1908 Sir Edward Morris formed a party and went to the country as leader of that party. Associated with him on this occasion were some hon. members who are sitting here tonight on the Government and Opposition sides of the House. Included in these gentlemen was the Hon. Leader of the Government, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition Sir Michael Cashin.

It will be remembered that the result of the election of 1908 was a tie, each party coming back leading the same number of men. A historical deadlock ensued and after some difficulty His Excellency the Governor McGregor, gave Sir Edward Morris a dissolution and he again went to the country for the Government in 1909. The result of the election proved that the country expressed a very strong endorsation of the policy of the Morris Government as shown by the ballots. In 1913 we again went to the country and although my hon. friend maintained his seat in the pre-election this was not so in 1913. He came back a badly defeated candidate and with the consent of the government and the approval of the people he was given a seat in the Legislative Council. Similar treatment was meted out to Mr. S. Blandford, who was given the port folio of Minister of Agriculture and mines and a seat in the Legislative Council.

When Sir Edward Morris again led his party to the country a very strong feeling of antagonism to him prevailed because of the denomination of which he was a member and when his government was installed in office, it was found he had amongst his followers some of the strongest members of other denominations possible to secure in public life And, for my knowledge, and I was in very close contact, and in a position to observe every action of Sir Edward Morris during his administration. I state here without fear of contradiction that on no occasion did he show any prejudice against any member who might be looking to him for favours, or for any of his people. It was always his policy to do what he could and in fact put himself out to give every possible concession to those who were on different persuasion religiously than he was himself.

The fact of a member being a Roman Catholic has no bearing on the religious aspect of a government. It has been stated that there is a Protestant majority in this country. That is quite true. But Sir Edward Morris was senior to all except Sir Robert Bond and it is only fit, and only proper and common justice would expect that he should be selected and that he would make a desirable Prime Minister and one whom the people would like to have represent them.

When the National Government, under the leadership of Dr. Lloyd, was defeated in the House by a vote of confidence, he as the Premier placed his resignation in the hands of the Governor.

When the Governor asked him (Dr. Lloyd) who he would recommend, he told him to send for Sir Michael Cashin, because Sir Michael was the senior member of the Assembly, a man who had twenty-seven years of experience in this House, a man who through all these years represented one district, his native district, and the district his father lived in before him and I don't know but his grandfather also, and in the twenty-seven years he represented the people of that district in the Assembly, naturally he gained a large experience, and through all the vicissitudes that occurred in that time, Sir M. P. Cashin sailed gallantly on in his career, and maintained and upheld his position and dignity through all these years.

Sir Michael Cashin saw His Excellency the Governor and was asked if he would form a Government. He promised he would endeavour to do so. He came down and he did form a government from the then sitting members of his chamber, a government of men who were not easily to be swayed or influenced or controlled or directed, but a government of strong men. In this I don't want to be egotistical, but the men had large and lengthy experience in public affairs, men that had the experience during the war, when the most extraordinary situations arose and had to be dealt with; men who were successful in private life, and men who understood the responsibilities of legislature.

He formed his government and appointed his Executive Council and departmental heads. It was the intention to hold an election in the spring, but I objected to it and myself and Mr. Higgins were accused of having cold feet over the matter. I say now as I said then I did not think the spring of the year was a proper time to hold an election. It did not matter to St. John's East and West because here the election could be held without difficulty. But some of the northern districts such as St. arbe, Twillingate and Fogo would be ice bound, and it would be impossible for the men to get to the ballot boxes to exercise their franchise.

If that election had taken place in the spring of the year, those men who would have been elected in some distrcts would be elected by a declamation unfair that the people should be disfranchised in that manner. I was acting in the interest of the people in objecting to an election being held in the spring. Some of the honorable members on the other side of the House were in accordance with that project, more of them were in favor of the election and wanted it to take elace. The election was held in the usual month of October, or November. It may be said this fact put us out of office, and put others in, that being so I am quite satisfied to bow to the will of the people I would rather be defeated under such conditions than be elected if the peoplt would have to be disfranchised, and unable to cast their vote.

As I said before Sir Michael Cashin formed his party, and we went to the country as a party, and put candidates in every district. There is no district but there was a candidate for the Liberal Progressive Party, and though we felt in many cases is was a forlorn hope, still we wanted them to say to the country that we wanted a free fight, a free expression of public opinion on the merits of the parties that were then contesting for the votes and favours of the electors. The election should have been a credit to ourselves and to the country because I recognize in many of the honorable members who sit on the other side of the House that they would be incapable of trying to ask improper means to gain the favours of the voters, and I am sure that the majority of them were not favourable to the scurrilous campaign that was carried on in St. John's and I refer to the newspapers in particular.

There is no reason in the world why we cannot disagree or agree to disagree on matters of a public nature. It would be unfortunate if we were all of the one mind politically. We would sink into a state of indifference that would be deplorable. We must have the Government on one side to carry on the affairs of the country and an Opposition on the other side whose duty it is to criticise, and to see that the interests of the people are looked after. Unfortunately for all of us a bitterness arose during that election that has never been equalled in the history of the country. It is ridiculous to say that if you follow Sir Edward Morris who is a Roman Catholic, that you should not follow Sir Michael Cashin because he is a Roman Catholic. I did not follow him because he was a Catholic. I do not recognize denominations when it comes to a point of government. I would be unworthy of the trust that has been reposed in me by the people, if I turned my back on Sir Michael Cashin who in an emergency was asked to come forward and form a government to carry on the affairs of the country. I would be unworthy of myself and the country if I turned my back on a man because he did not belong to the same church as myself. I went to the district with Sir Michael Cashin, because I thought he was the best man in sight to take the position of Prime Minister.

Unfortunately for the country, for the people of the country and for this House that issues arose in connection with the election that had nothing whatever to do with the vital question or the future prosperiy of the land.

A man was not judged according to what his duties were or according to his record, or according to the amount of work he had put in in the country, but rather was an estimate made of him, based on the opinions and writings of those who saw fit in their effort to gain power and place and pay, by a campaign of villification, lying representation and personal abuse. The vital question before the country was hidden altogether. I claim that this last election was not fought on any policy. It was not fought on the issues that were at stake. It was not fought as reasonable and proper as British subjects should fight it, but it was fought with a serpent that ran throughout the whole land. The dragon raised his head amongst us, and was so well referred to by my friend the hon. member for St. John's East the other evening. A man was not judged according to his ability, but he was judged by the altar that he worshipped at. I say that it was a most deplorable, a most unworthy and a most unreasonable attitude for any person or persons, individual or combination to take.

I referred this afternoon to the fact that two soldiers representatives are in this House, and we gladly welcome them. We are all proud to know that the regiment has representation in this Assembly, but deplore the fact that the senior branch of the service, the Royal Naval Reserve, is not represented here; and deplore the fact that a representative of that gallant body of men went down to Trinity, his own native district; who for four long years had fought their battles and ours, who had no stain upon his character, and hardly saves his nomination fee because he had been on one side or the other, a graceful act indeed, and one worthy of any leader of any party. I think it would have been more in keeping with dignity if a vacant seat had been left for Mr. Matthews and that he had come in here unopposed, as a mark of apprecition for the services he had rendered his King and country.

It is deplorable that this House is not more united, and that it is divided on lines that may lead to terrible consequences. Problems have to be solved in this country, caused by war conditions, and which are occupying the attention of the best minds of the whole world. The responsibilities of office that the gentlemen on the other side have taken up were never greater and never called for more ability and honest endeavor than they will be called upon to perform during the next two or three years, and it is unfortunate that this House should be divided amongst itself, so to speak. And if we see no indication that this sort of thing is not going to let up, it is going to put man against man and creed against creed. We see daily exhibitions in the press of vile attempts of the abuse that was used during the elections and since.

Every member on this side of the House is abused and his actions and words misrepresented. If because the Hon. Mr. Fox got up the other night and in that straight-forward and honest attempt denied the efforts that had been made and were still being made to introduce in this Legislature a feeling of distrust and separation, that he is subjected to abuse and villification, then I say God help this country. It is quite true that this Legislature, and very rightly so, is generally made up on denominational lines. Ever since I have been in this House the three leading denominations namely, Roman Catholic, Church of England and Methodist have had practically equal representation on these floors, and generally these denominations were intermingled. there was never an sect or body on one side or the other. Unfortunately this does not exist to-day. If this House and the Government of the country is to be represented denominationally, if that is the practice there must be some basis to go on. The Executive Council is composed of nine members, three of each denomination. This House is composed of thirty-six members, usually twelve of each denomination. We were all satisfied with the representation in the years past. What was good enough for our fathers before us in this respect ought to be good enough for us to-day. But I want to point out that what exists in this chamber should also exist in the other chambers as well. The upper house of this Legislature is also laid down on denomination representation. There are twenty-four members when that house is full, eight of each denomination. Precisely the same position and the same principle as is laid down here and in the executive Government is laid down in the Legislative Council.

But the Prime Minister and his associates in the Government have seen fit to disorganize that principle in the upper chamber. They have seen fit to upset the denominational representation there. We had three vacancies up there caused by the deaths of Honourables Dr. Skeleton, John Harvey and A. F. Goodridge. There was three Church of England seats left vacant in that chamber. Two other seats were vacated by my hon. and learned friend, the Prime Minister, and Hon. Jesse Whiteway. The three Church of England seats were taken from that chamber and two of them given to Roman Catholics.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER,—That is not so. The Hon. Mr. Harvey's seat was given to Hon. Mr. Shea, my own seat to the Hon. Dr. Campbell and one of my own denomination went to a Church of England gentleman.

MR. BENNETT—Why were two of the Church of England seats given to two Roman Catholics?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—To show you that I am not guilty of bigoted sectarianism that you have been throwing across the floors.

MR. BENNETT—I am a member of the Church of England denomination and I protest against it. You are not the whole Protestant denomination if you think you are.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—For the information of the hon. member, I may say that I submitted the proposition to the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland before doing so.

MR. BENNETT:—That does not matter who you submitted it to. You usurped the rights of one denomination and gave it to another. Political expediency was the reason. You had to find a seat for Dr. Campbell otherwise he would have to vacate the Agriculture and Mines Department.

I have no objection to that, but he should have found a seat for his friend in a proper way and along the lines of denomination representation. I am surprised that the Church of England representatives in the Executive Council were a party to it. The Church of England throughout the whole island will resent it. I am no sectarian firebug. No one can tell me that whether he is Greek, Jew or Gentile. But I want to see the right thing done, want every interest safeguarded and no interest sacrificed. Everything has been done for political expediency. And I hope the next appointment made up there an effort will be made to remedy the state of affairs you have brought about. We are not here as champions of Protestants and with regard to this I take second place to no one. Yes, on that score I am second to none. even the honourable leader of the government. I never used my religion for political expedience or for any other purpose. But I am true to it and will stand for it every time, no matter what comes or goes. I have a broad mind and see the good points in any man no matter what church he belongs to and I can also see the good points in my enemies. I trust and expect the same consideration from those on the other side of the house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have already referred to the second paragraph of the speech from the throne and now I am lead to the third paragraph, which gives us the astounding intelligence that His Majesty's Government has devoted two ships to our government. When I was in the Colonial Secretary's Department they offered us one hundred airplanes. They wanted to send out one airplane to Newfoundland. And with clear knowledge of our requirements would not send us that offer. It does not follow that the mention of the British Government or British Admiralty mentions that a lot of people living on pinacles can do no wrong. There are as many blunderers in the British Government and in the British Admiralty as there are on the opposition side or the government side of the house even granting that we are incapable of being a Government. We are not any Simon Pures and that we will admit. We are human beings and have no supernatural power, but we claim to be natural men who carry our sins on our foreheads so that the world may see them.

But when the British Government or the British Admiralty offered us one hundred airplanes we flatly turned down their offer, telling them we had no earthly need for them. But they ought to have the common sense to know that we would appreciate the gift of a seafaring tug capable of going to sea and going to wrecks and such a gift would be to the utmost value to us and I suppose they were so busy over there they forgot to use their judgment until the honourable leader of the Fishermen's Union woke them up and asked them what they were going to do about it, and the answer was they will give us two vessels, and the probability is that neither of them will be of any use to us. We have purchased one for fifteen thousand pounds as informed by the Prime Minister. Maybe the costly one will be useless to us and then what will be the advantage of one got for nothing. Wait and see until the ships arrive. I hope the Government get their expectations fulfilled. The next part of the speech is that which comes forth from the lips of every Governor for the last twenty years and this is in reference to this question, I mean the Quebec-Labrador Boundary question. His Excellency informs us that an agreement has been arrived at for submission and adjudication to His Majesty's Government. Unless I am mistaken that agreement had been arrived at one or two years before the war. The late Mr. Furlong had the case and I think the Quebec government had arrived at the terms of submission or that case before the Privy Council. But I trust that the announcement is correct and I have every confidence in the Minister of Justice in this particular department and the men associated with him will be capable of looking after the case in the best interest of the colony. There is very much importance and much value in the settlement of this question. The world is starving for pulp and paper and those who have knowledge of the move of the Canadian and American markets will appreciate this fact that these prices in the pulp stocks and paper stocks are going up in leaps and bounds selling at four hundred per cent. premium. This shows the great value involved in the settlement of this dispute.

The Quebec legislature with the whole Dominion behind it will fight hard to acquire these areas. They will leave no stone unturned to pin us down to the post and I am sure my honourable frined sees that the winning of this case is more important and has more far reaching effect on the industrial life of this Colony than can be imagined. Only last year for the first time in the history of such an undertaking there was survey of the Labrador areas by two aeroplanes. Everyone knows it is impossible to survey these areas without such a facility in less than twenty years. And from reports from those who are in a position to know the wealth of the pulp areas on Labrador is beyond conceptiоn. It is true our our fishery rights are undisputed and we are looking to the near future for a satisfactory settlement of this all important question of the Labrador boundary. It is no use pretending our rights are secure. There is no end to the revenue that can be derived from this source. It would be an unlimited benefit to the country. If no exportation can be brought to Newfoundland, but if it is the intention of the Government to allow it to be exported then a heavy export duty can be imposed and it would mean millions of dollars to the country. I hope the matter will be taken up by the Hon. member for Fortune Bay, Mr. Warren, and if he has to go to the other side he will go there armed with every document necessary and with every particle of evidence necessary to gain our case. If he does win our case he will have done enough for his country, if he does nothing else.

Sir John Crosbie this afternoon gave us an idea of the fish situation. and I am sorry there were not more here to hear him. This is a subject with which Sir John Crosbie is thoroughly conversant. and upon which every member of the House this afternoon must have received some wonderful information. Sir John Crosbie is probably the best authority in the country on this subject. I was struck with the large amount of money lost, the labor and means of livelihood lost to the people of this city and other parts of the country.

He informed us that $105,000 had been lost to the coopers alone. The snatching away of this large sum of money from the mechanics of the city is a most deplorable piece of work. There is no more deserving class of people in this town than the coopers. Unfortunately their income has been reduced by this very large sum by the unpardonable blunder which marked the first step of the government. One hundred and forty thousand dollars lost to the laborers of this town by the enforcement of the fish regulations. Sir John Crosbie is to be congratulated on the masterly way in which he handled this big subject and we are indebted to him for the vast amount of information which he gave us. I believe that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was sincere in making the fish regulations, but surely he must by this time have realised his blunder. It is a serious situation when we have 80,000 quintals of fish on the other side not disposed of, and which there is no market for. Gentlemen, what is going to happen. What will be done with next season's catch? Is this not a most serious outlook for our fish industry. A fish merchant told me a few days ago that he feared that fish would be so low that it would not be worth handling. The fishermen won't be able to pay for the bread box. I hope that the Minister of Marine and fisheries will see the seriousness of the situation, and will do his best to avert a total collapse. If the fish situation becomes any worse than it is Newfoundland will be down and out and those who are responsible will have to take the blame.

There is another question, namely the question of the survey of foreign-going ships. We heard the other evening reference made to the deplorable disaster in the loss of the s.s. Beverley. I am not in a position to state who is responsible for this disaster. Mr. Fox stated that the case of Mr. Munn, the owner of the cargo, and that he was sorry as to what had happened to it. I do not believe that Mr. Munn would any more send that ship to sea with a cargo of fish knowing that she was unseaworthy than he would drown his own son. That old tub was brought down here from Canada, was altered and presented as seaworthy. I know nothing of ships, but I saw that ship in Placentia, and I would no more go on board here than I would attempt to cross the Atlantic in an open dory. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is to be congratulated on taking this matter in hands. Sir John Crosbie stated that 100 ships that left our shores last year had gone to the bottom. Were our ships subject to worse storms than other ships or were they able to stand the strain required of them? How many of the fleet now in the harbor might have the same fate. Are we to sit idly by and see our able young men lost in that way? I hope that when that Bill is introduced that it will cover the situation and prevent further disasters that may be due to the unseaworthiness of the ships engaged in the foreign trade.

The speech says that an effort is being made to wind up the Department of Militia. That would seem to be the ordinary course of events.

I also notice, Mr. Speaker, that the winding up of the Militia Department is in contemplation. I myself have not seen the necessity of having this Department running for some time, for when the London office was closed the work of the Militia Department here was practically concluded and there is no necessity to continue it further. I was going to ask the Colonial Secretary if anything had been done for the dependents of those brave lads who laid down their lives in the war. I do not mean those dependents who came under the provisions of the Pensions Act originally, but those who were not altogether dependent on those of their sons who went to the front, but who since have not been able to maintain themselves as they did before such as laborers who have grown old. They have made application time and again for badly needed assistance. I am sure that the Leader of the Government will appreciate that when these boys went overseas in 1914 they may have left brothers at home who since they have ceased to be a support to the parents or other assistance which the dependents might have had has since been lost to them. They did not come under the pensions because they had help when their boys went away, but afterwards the Pensions Board was instructed by the Government of the day to take the case of people of this class into consideration and do their best for them. I knew of many cases where men lost their health and were not in position to help themselves. They looked forward to the return of their sons, but they never came.

The cost of the maintenance of the Militia Department, as the Speech from the Throne points out, has run into a very large amount. Our war expenses, at a conservative estimate. amounted to about $15,000,000 which will have to be consolidated with our national debt. Then there will be another $750,000 of $800,000 for pensions which mean a capitalisation of 15 to 16 millions more which, with other war expenditures, will be a total cost to the Colony of 31 to 32 million dollars. This is a very large debt and a large price for our part in the war, and it is a debt to the Colony for all time.

It was hoped, and perhaps it is still hoped, that in the adjustment of Germany's war indemnity that this Colony would receive recognition for her claims on account of the war and I trust that when our claims are put forward that the Minister of Finance will bring to the notice of the authorities on the other side the heavy cost our part in the war has been to the Colony.

I wish to offer my congratulations to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the acquirement of that sacred ground, Beaumont Hamel. I think, Sir, that this was a graceful act on the part of the Government to hold sacred the spot where so many of our brave lads offered up their lives. No better man could be in charge of the work of looking after the resting place of those boys than Rev. Major Nangle, and I am sure that with him it is a labor or love. I noticed that when Mr. Coaker published his notes some time ago he made reference to the matter of a memorial and how it was treated, and he said he would have an investigation made into the matter. I can say with truth that nothing like this happened while I was in the Militia Department and I trust that when he finishes his investigation he will let us know to whom he referred.

I congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the steps he is about to take towards the reorganisation of his Department and the establishment of an information bureau and a research department. I am not in a position to know just what can be done in this direction, but I know that our ignorance on matters pertaining to our fisheries is deplorable and that some effort should be made to familiarise ourselves with the details of our principal industry. I don't know of any man who could tell you what are the habits of the seal, or where our herring go when they leave this coast. Again, Sir, there are many kinds of fish to be found around our coast that the people use as manure and which are in reality a most delicate food article and what can be done with these auxiliary fisheries, if I may use the word, is, I trust, under consideration by the Minister.

Most people in this country, Mr. Speaker, have grave concern as to our transport problem, foreign, inland and coastal and indeed business people might well be concerned. The railway as has been pointed out, time and again, is in a deplorable condition and what is to be done with it? I presume the Government has under consideration for one of our greatest problems is the railway question. The Reids are under certain contracts to the country and whether or not they have carried out these contracts is a matter for investigation. The coastal traffic has outgrown the capacity of the boats engaged on the work, and an effort should be made to improve the service. I presume that one of the ships coming here shortly from the old country will help out in this respect, and while on that subject I would also express the hope that the government will endeavour to secure suitable premises for the handling of freight as there is at present very unsuitable and inadequate means for this purpose.

I looked with a great deal of interest at the speech from the throne for some reference to workingmen's homes in St. John's and as to what is intended in this connection. It merely states that a corporation has been started having as its object the erection of some houses for the workingmen. This is not news. It is estimated that the cost of each will not exceed $2,000 and that 30 houses will be built this year. Well, of course the statement itself is very vague and the whole paragraph savors of smallness and lack of appreciation of the situation. Thirty houses is only a drop in the bucket. Is the Government going to contribute $60,000 or guarantee a loan, or admit material for building free of duty, or what is the policy? Of course when the application which is foreshadowed comes before the house we will be in a better position to discuss the question.

Let me point out, Mr. Speaker, that this Legislature is the only body which can solve this problem. People won't subscribe a lot of money unless good returns are guaranteed. They may give two or three thousand dollars, but not twenty thousand unless reasonable returns are guaranteed. Sixty thousand dollars is not sufficient to handle this question. It will probably require six hundred thousand. As it is mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, it is only fooling people. What about the 300 families who require homes? Are they to live on in the same condition? Isn't it the duty of this Legislature to come to their assistance, leaky and inadequate homes . . . . the people cry out daily, and this is the answer . . . . we are going to build thirty houses. It is only a mockery. When this country requires coastal service or lighthouses this Legislature finds a remedy for both, and rightly so. When such matters come up for discussion, I say that I have no direct interest in this matter, but I give it my support to preserve and protect and facilitate the interest of our fishermen. But, the fisherman has his cow, his sheep, his farm. He can grow his vegetables and live happy and contented, but as a general rule the same cannot be said of the working man of St. John's. The outport man has his home but the city man, in many cases cannot pay the rental, much less build a house for himself. A great many outport people come to St. John's and build a house because they have a chance to save the money.

It is only a short time ago that the working man in the city was receiving sixty cents to one dollar per day. What chance had he to pay any money out of such a paltry salary? Although wages have increased two and three hundred per cent. he is no better off. Something should be done for these people and I think the Government will show their British fair play in dealing with the subject. We build hospitals, asylums and sanitariums and take in the sick and cure them of their diseases, but we neglect the cause that leads up to the condition which makes is necessary to build these institutions and allow people to live in houses that are not fit for human habitation. I hope the members of the Government and other men associated and concerned in this matter will formulate a scheme to alleviate this condition of affairs.

I know that my friend Mr. Anderson would like to see 100 houses started this year if he had the means, but he cannot get it without the aid of Legislature. If Legislature will advance, say one quarter of a million at 5% to enable him to put up these homes, I do not think it would be unreasonable, and charge the people a fair rent according to the houses they occupy, and if the Legislature is called upon to contribute each year five, ten, fifteen or twenty thousand dollars, it will be money well spent. I think, Mr. Speaner, my honorable friends of the Government side, and my honorable colleagues, will welcome any such proposition, and honourable leader of the F.P.U. is too generous a man to block any such movement, and I am sure everybody will see that it is only fair to the town, because it is the capital of the country, and as such it is entitled to every consideration. I hope this matter will receive the most earnest consideration of the government, when it is brought before the house.

The question of prohibition has been discussed a lot in this house, and from the tenor of remarks of those who have spoken, the house and the country are united in the opinion, that something must be done to relieve the present intolerant situation. The carrying out of the prohibition act has become a delusion and a snare. this question is occupying the minds of every nation in the world. The United States has gone absolutely dry, but like ourselves they have experienced some disconcerting incidents in connection with the carrying out of the Act, and the use of substitutes for the ordinary alcoholic beverages has brought a condition of things, that is more degrading than has ever existed before.

My colleague Mr. Sullivan has made a special hobby of this question, but I fear what he said in his remarks the other day will not come to pass. Instead of saying a bottle a week he said a bottle a day. There is no member of this House wants to see the bar rooms back again, but I think a system should be installed that will be more protective to our certain amount of alcoholic beverages for his own use, so as to prevent the drinking of dope and other alcoholic substitutes for liquor, which is endangering the lives of the people. I say it is up to us to bring in an act that will be more protective to ourselves and will have the interests of the people at heart.

The situation is becoming more difficult in New York, where the consumption of wood alcohol reached alarming proportions, about the end of the year, and the story I heard in this connection may not be out of place here. When New Year's Eve was being celebrated in the city of New York, the police and magistrates noticed that a lot of wood alcohol was consumed, and accordingly they were down to the magistrate's court early next day, but to their great surprise very few cases were brought in, and one magistrate said to the policeman, "How is it that there are so few cases this morning, after the proceedings of last night?" "Oh," the policeman said, "there is a change come over us here, we don't bring them to the court now, we bring them to the morgue."

The question now is with us the morgue or the penitentiary. I must ask your pardon for delaying the House so long on this matter, but the many questions that arise out of the Speech from the Throne, require from the members on this side of the House the fullest expression of opinion and our desire is to ventilate our opinions on all matters that come before you and the House. I cannot congratulate the Government on the speech, which I consider bald and devoid of many matters requiring fuller attention, but taking everything into consideration it is quite as good as one would expect from the source from which it emanated.

MR. HIGGINS:—It is not my intention to delay the House, but I do feel as has been suggested by the hon. member who just sat down, that the Speech from the Throne is not what we had reason to expect it would be. Before I speak of this, however, might I assure the honourable and ballant gentlemen, Lieut. Small and Sergt.-Major LeGrow that they are welcome to this House, if for no other reason than that they are the first to take seats in this House in uniform, because they are two of the boys who made such a name for themselves in the recent war, and because they have justified their right to be here by the able way in which they conducted themselves on opening day, and may I also say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I think you yourself have particular reason to be proud of the position you occupy to-day in this House, in that you are not only the first fisherman who ever occupied the chair, but also the first Speaker, I believe, to preside over an assembly containing members in His Majesty's uniform. This is a session, no matter what transpires, which will go down in the history of the country, as remarkable in these two points. Now I wish to assure the House that any remarks I make will be made in the spirit I think the Address in Reply merits.

The Address in Reply so far has been remarkable as to its debate in one outstanding feature, and that is, that I think rarely has there been a great number of speakers desiring to deal with matters in a broad way, and I do feel I represent the general sentiment, when I say that we are all proud of some of the speeches made here. I am proud to feel that Mr. Fox is my colleague, and I say that in his speech the other night he did credit to himself and to the House, and Mr. Bennett was also in line with the effort made by Mr. Fox, and I feel we are indebted to Sir John Crosbie for his fine contribution to the debate.

Whatever our opinions may be as to the wisdom or otherwise of the fish regulations, I think we can, as members of this House, feel that he has at least thrown in the discussion that which reflects both on his experience and his intelligence.

Having cleared away some of the brushwood, as it were, I should like to say that my conception of the debate on the Address in Reply is that it should partake of two divisions. The speech from the throne is the occasion upon which the government of the day proclaims, through the medium of the king's representative, its policy for the session upon which we are about to embark, and so in the case of the opening of a new parliament it might properly be termed an "after-election manifesto." Consequently it is proper and right for members of the opposition side to criticize and pronounce fairly upon it, and in review ing it they should draw attention to what the speech foreshadows. Then having done that they should discuss, as representatives, what they expected the speech to contain and what was expected of the government of the day. Accordingly, anything I have got to say, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, will not be said in any other spirit. The speech, in my humble judgement, has fallen short of what I expected to find there. It is a most remarkable, a most wonderful address, and the hon. gentlemen opposite need have no fear of our remarks on criticizing it. There is an absolute absence of any fault to find, and so there is an absolute lack of any suggestion on our part that we have anything in the way of complaint about anything that is in the address, for the simple reason that there is so very little in it. In other words, it would be like "flogging a dead horse," to go to work and say anything bad about it. The only thing I fear, Mr. Speaker, is that the people throughout the country who only a few short month ago rallied to the support of our new government, will get a rude awakening on reading the speech.

They were told by this great Liberal Reform Party that things were going to be revolutionized. But how quickly our honourable friends opposite have fallen in the same old rut, quicker than anything that happened yet. Perhaps, after all, it is to the credit of the prime minister and his associates that they have not attempted to put anything extraordinary in the speech from the throne. They still leave us hope for the future. Perhaps it is a new precedent and something in line with the policy that the government went to the country on. We are told that wonderful changes were going to take place, changes that would go down in history. Perhaps they thought it was the right course to take, that, having obtained power, they would see what they could do for the people at the next session. I have no fault to find with that attitude, but am candid enough to say that I support it, because it shows the honesty of purpose of the Government if they did promise any outlandish things before the election that they now come in at the earliest opportunity and admit they were not serious.

Now just a word or two as to what is in the Speech anyhow. If I recollect aright attention was drawn to the matter to which I am going to refer by my colleague, Mr. Fox, though rather in a different vein. The second pagaraph concludes:

"I cannot avoid impressing upon you the lesson of all history that a great convulsion is followed by much unrest and that all our patience and sympathy will be required before we can realize under the guidance of Divine Providence a permanent peace upon earth and goodwill amongst formerly warring nations."

Mr. Speaker, that is the sentiment that truly expresses the condition of the country to-day, and I accept it as the basis of the reason why the Government ought be careful and ought attempt to do something in the direction I propose to indicate later on. That has been the history of the world after all previous wars of any kind, unrest. And if that be the condition after wars in the past, how much more unrest must follow the great world war. Unrest means dissatisfaction, and the people are dissatisfied with the conditions about them. Right here in the city of St. John's today we are feeling the after-war effects. I venture to assert to-night that never in the history of the town, at least not in my recollection, despite the apparent prosperity about us, were our people sailing closer to the wind than as at the present time. With the exception of a limited few, the ordinary man such as the clerk, mechanic and laborer was never as hard pushed as he is today, owing to the high cost of living. In that respect I do not blame the government, nor do I charge the government with it. I say while that condition of affairs is about us we must forget this little pettiness and those cheap things and take criticism in the right spirit. In all sincerity the second paragraph in the speech from the throne befor us fittingly describes the situation. Whatever may be the outcome of our deliberations we are living in abnormal times and there is a state of unrest existing, and after all, let us not forget that we are here with responsibilities.

However much we may disagree with each other on either side, we should not tolerate the abuse and scurrility of the newspaper thugs whose foul minds seek for every opportunity afforded by the liberty of the press to stir up discord.

Regarding the steamers mentioned in the speech, I understand that the gift of the steamers is not altogether the result of this Government's work but the outcome of a promise to the late administration, which was brought to completion by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. So far as I am concerned I only trust the ships will prove satisfactory for our trade. I do not profess to know much about steamers and I would not match my opinion against that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or that of Sir John C. Crosbie, but I do know this, that it has been the history of those who have taken steamers from the British government that they have not always proved suitable for commercial purposes. In Dover they even went so far as to refuse some vessels which it was found unsuitable even to fill with concrete and sink as breakwaters, they being too narrow. I trust that we shall not be disappointed and that whatever ships we get through the courtesy of the Admiralty will coincide with the expectations of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. But it must be borne in mind that ships built for war purposes, built to be gun-equipped may not prove so profitable in trade as ships ordinarily used in commerce. But I do hope and trust that the ships are the best, and that we shall not be disappointed. I say this in consideration of those who are responsible for their being brought out here. The Government have made a statement to the effect that they have purchased one ship which costs seventy-five thousand dollars. Well, for the sake of the seventy-five thousand dollars, which the country will be called upon to pay, I hope and trust the ship will be of some use to the Dominion, and that she will not prove too expensive as regards her coal consumption. I repeat that the matter of the acceptance of the Admiralty ships, although we naturally are sensible of the British Government's kindness, is one which we ought not to boost or comment too favorably upon until we have them on this side of the water and tried them in our service. It is unnecessary to delay the hon. gentlemen of the House on a further elaboration of the Quebec boundary dispute. I hope that this shall be settled with every satisfaction to Newfoundland. But I do not set too much confidence in matters that go before the Privy Council being disposed of in a hurry. They are busy people and have a lot of matters to occupy their attention. I am satisfied that the Minister of Justice and those associated with him will do their best for a solution that will be beneficial to this Dominion. I am satisfied that he will, as leader of the bar by reason of his position, give the matter his most serious attention, that he will honestly endeavour and see to it that Newfoundland's inerests get their best possible maintenance. I know the honorable gentleman well enough to say that we shall get from him his most careful and honest assistance in the matter. It would not be right to make too much comment on the question. It is in the hands of his Department, and I think we can rest assured that it will be looked after in a proper way.

Regarding the Fish Regulations, the first thing the Government did when it came into office was to creat these regulations, which have been the subject of much comment in the local press. They have been discussed on the political platform in St. John's West and have been the subject of comment abroad. Those who oppose and cry down the fish regulations simply from some biased motive, should not be endorsed, as they concern the very industry on which our very existence depends. If the fish regulations are profitable to the country, then we should all undoubtedly support them. I say that with all seriousness. I do not profess to speak with much authority, and so my opinion is rather by way of an abstract principle. I object to them mainly on the ground that the country's destinies should not be placed in the hands of one man, that we should not take the chance, the long chance of confiding the country's future welfare in the brains of one. It is too big a risk to take even if the man be Mr. George Hawes. Since the regulations have started the price of fish has gone down lower than it had been. On the face of it this argues with me somewhat against the regulations. I also object to the regulations because the small man, the man other than the merchant is hit. He is handicapped, he has not the same freedom to sell his fish as he did before the creation of the regulations, and on principle again where the small man is hit I oppose them. May be you say I am following the doctrine laid down by others, that I am imbibing too much from Sir Michael Cashin or Sir John Crosbie. No, freedom of trade generally works out best when one remembers the unalterable law of supply and demand. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may say, "Boys, hold your fish till the prices are higher." But time passes and if I do not eat a fish on Friday I will not on that account only eat two fish on the following Friday.

We have to try to place our fish in a market where it is wanted. We had a situation not long ago where the people could not pay for our fish. We have the reverse situation to-day. What the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has done is against his own interests. In Nova Scotia they applaud our regulations. They applaud them because they have benefited by them. If they are pleased with what Newfoundland has done, and in this particular they are in competition with us, then it would seem that we have done something that is not good for ourselves. We all feel that the Hon. Ministetr of Marine and Fisheries is competent enough to handle his own business. But if reputable and reliable men have come forward and say that they decline to do business under the fish regulations, then there is something wrong. The fact that we have started on this bad piece of business is no reason why we should continue, and we hope that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not feel that he must carry on, but, on the contrary, will be big enough to say: "We have tried it, and made a mess of it, and will discontinue the regulations." I sincerely hope that he is big enough to handle George Hawes. I will back him to the last ditch. But I would like to say to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that I am satisfied that his own connection with the fishermen of the country is large enough to make him do what is right. I feel sure that he will knuckle down to it after a while, though he will find it hard at first.

Reference is made in the Speech from the Throne to the securing of Beaumont Hamel as an assembling place of those who died on July 1, 1916. To some of us this reference comes with especial interest. I speak for those who cannot speak for themselves. However much we may differ from each other on other parts of the speech, I feel I voice the thoughts that would be expressed by those whose mortal remains will be gathered together there when I say that they are grateful to feel that their memory is being cherished. There are here to talk for them two of their own. We meet and commune with the dear departed ones to-night. It is a sacred part of the Governor's speech which makes reference to them. I compliment the Government, and especially the member who is responsible for the securing the field of Beaumont Hamel, for this very important and thoughtful action. The field will ever be held sacred to all Newfoundland. Over there there was no distinction. They were all padres, and the nearest padre whispered the last words of consolation to the departing soul, irrespective of the altar at which they worshipped, and I am confident that those who have learned the lesson will do the necessary missionary work and instill in us that spirit of "over there." We are too close to it yet to begin to get the fine results which must follow the noble sacrifices that were made.

The Speech from the Throne always has a financial paragraph. The present Government is satisfied to take to itself the credit for the happy financial condition. I join with those who have said that the credit belongs to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition. But listen to the paragraph:

"The estimates have been subject to considerable revision, and have been based upon the report of the civil service commission appointed by my late ministers. My ministers propose to submit to you for your careful consideration a bona fide statement of the moneys which are estimated to be necessary to cover the expense of the public service of the Colony for the coming fiscal year. They are of the opinion that the practice which has grown up during recent years of submitting estimates far below the actual anticipated expenditure, trusting to provision being made under the head of "Supplemental Supply" at a subsequent session of the Legislature for the authorization of over expenditure, should be discontinued as far as practicable."

Now what a delightful ending,—"as far as practicable."

The practice will go on, Mr. Speaker, we may rest assured of that. Charity, we are told, is the greatest of virtues, and it is more prominent in the Newfoundlande than in anyone else, but surely our charity was never appealed to more strongly than it is here. Of course the gentlemen on the other side of the House are too intelligent to imagine for a moment that anyone will be fooled by that paragraph, and we can sympathize with their attempt to make this paragraph read as if it meant something. The Government has made so many rosy promises that something had to be said that would at least look as if these promised reforms were indeed to be carried out, and we can only compliment them on the beautiful camouflage employed by them.

One point strikes me when hearing the next paragraph read. That is the paragraph with reference to the Department of Marine and Fisheries which speaks of a re-organization and the establishment of an information bureau and scientific research department.

However much the Department of Education may be shrouded in mystery I am confident that if given a chance the Minister of that Department has the wilingness and capability to perform good work, and I invite his attention to a matter which is now receiving much attention in Canada, that of fishery colleges. Might I say, Sir, that this is a matter we could also consider with a great deal of advantage. It may not be practical, but ours is a fishing country first of all, and it is due to the importance of the industry that some thought should be given to proper training. In Nova Scotia they are taking the matter up with a great deal of enthusiasm as the results from this training in the western provinces have made it well worthy of consideration.

With regard to the new department, the only thing we can hope for is that some steps of the kind I have mentioned will be attempted. And now, Sir, just another word before I come to the main part of my speech which I have not touched yet. In connection with the introduction of a survey of shipping, might I invite the attention of the Minister of Shipping to the matter of the tickle between Bell Island and the main land. There is ever present there a fear that a great tragedy will occur from the overcrowding of motor boats plying on this tickle, and I think the circumstances in this instance are not unknown to the honorable members of Harbor Grace and other nearby districts. No limit is observed in the carrying of passengers on these boats, they are crowded on board indiscriminately and without any regard for the safety of life, and I do think, Sir, that this is a matter which should receive the earliest attention.

As to the creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs I say that in the late Postmaster General we have lost a man that was capable, competent and highly trustworthy as an official and as a citizen cultured and creditable to the community. But I do say that in the man who has gone into this department we have one who as those who have met him in a previous official capacity will testify is courteous and kindly and ever ready to respond to any reasonable request made upon him, thorough and highly competent. I was going to congratulate Dr. Barnes, but there is so much mystery still clinging about his department that it is too soon for that. As to the work which it is said he will have to do I think that he is too good a man to be contented with work which Mr. Butt of the Colonial Secretary's Department does now—issuing cheques. We are honestly afraid that for a man of his capabilities he will not be given enough to do and in the meantime I might say to Dr. Barnes that if his department is as harmless as the facts at present appear to indicate, he may stay there as long as he likes so far as anybody on this side of the House is concerned.

The reorganization of the Department of Mines is a step which I think has long been necessary, and the pity is that the new Minister is not in this House. However, I feel sure that Dr. Campbell will give this work his best attention and if he is not a member of this House that is more his misfortune than his fault. Time there was when the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries stood on this side of the House hammering the desk and denouncing in a voice much louder than mine and with eloquence more stirring than mine the fates which permitted a defeated candidate to occupy the office of Minister of this Department, but now the positions are reversed. Like myself he brought the Government to task for permitting such an injustice to be perpetrated. It was the same old story, the same old desk, the same old House, and he sits and laughs at me as I sat and laughed at him, but he has fallen from his high ideals, and might I say that there never was a man in the seriousness of whose intent, in the unchangableness of whose high aims I had greater faith, but alas all that was in the days when he occupied a seat on this side of the House.

There is a paragraph in the Speech pertaining to a matter that if I were to make reference to it once upon a time I would be denounced as Reid's lawyer, and that alleged $10,000 salary would be thrown up to me, but now that I have cleared myself of that entanglement and am free to express an opinion, I will say as one who knows something of what he is talking about, as an old railwayman if you will, that a railway in this country can never pay, do what you will with it. You can make it wide guage or narrow guage or anything else you please, but it will be all the same. The thing that makes a railway pay is short hauls, places where there are many town and close together, but here where you have to haul a man or a barrel hundreds of miles without perhaps stopping at all to take on anyone or anything else you cannot do it. You've got to make up your minds to the fact that a railway in this country is like a lighthouse or a fog alarm. These things don't pay, but they are nevertheless a necessity.

I recognize that the Government will have a hard proposition to handle in our railway. It is the worse curse that could be wished upon the present Government that they should come into power just at this time, because of this burden alone. We must be prepared to make up our minds to spend a lot of money on the railroad. The people of the country expect too much out of this railroad. It is like a man going down town and buying a baby carriage and expecting to cart home a half ton of coal. We built a little cheap railway for small traffic and we now expect after all these years to handle abnormal traffic, a traffic which the wildest enthusiast never expected it would be called upon to cope with. Today I am in a position to say that the Government have a very big problem ahead of them, because if you advertised that this railway was being handed out as a gift to anybody who choose to take it and work it, men would be writing in and asking what size of cheque the Government would be prepared to hand them at the end of each year in return. I say again that this Government have a serious problem to handle, and I wish them luck, because of the importance of this method of transportation to our country.

The Speech from the Throne makes reference to the fact that the Government will assist in the erection of workingmen's homes. It reads like a joke to see this in the Speech, which itself states that a company has been incorporated to deal with this matter. This is a private company and has not been organized by the Government, and the Government should not by reference take credit for anything the company may do.

Mr. Speaker, a few of the many things I was looking forward to in the Speech from the Throne, and the many glowing promises made by the Hon. Prime Minister with his facile pen, were not there. It mentions nothing of these glowing promises that were outlined in the manifesto. Here is a copy of the manifesto, a yard long. Now look at the Speech from the Throne and compare it with this. When I read the manifesto of the Hon. Prime Minister, I was convinced that the people would surely return him and his party on reading this paragraph that I am about to read.

(Here Mr. Higgins reads the paragraph in the manifesto of Mr. Squires promising a reduction in the high cost of living.)

Now isn't that a delightful paragraph. He has made more promises than he is able to deliver. "Things that are different from things that were."

Another item in the manifesto worth reading is the Hon. Minister's intentions as to profiteers. Listen to this.

(Here Mr. Higgins reads the paragraph in Mr. Squires' manifesto undertaking to take steps against profiteers and profiteering.)

In the light of this statement I did expect to see some frightful treatment meted out to profiteers, especially, to use the words of his manifesto, to "certain profiteers belonging to the wealthy dominant government class." I wonder if some of them have not been made hon. members of the Government for life. I am sorely grieved over the silence of the Government in this matter because I represent many people who thought conditions were going to improve. Its the same old story. The Government is not long enough in yet to be as fleshy as the grafters on this side. Give them a few more sessions and they will be as fine healthy looking grafters as ourselves.

In reference to the prohibition act which is a matter that will probably come up for some very important discussion, I have something to say. In his manifesto, the Hon. Prime Minister wrote a most artistic conglomeration of words without promising anything, and I must say that he hasn't fallen short of his promises.

He told about the script the Leader fo the Opposition gave, and having done this he goes on to say, (Mr. Higgins reads paragraph from Premier's manifesto regarding prohibition.) If that is not a charming way of letting a man feel he is promised something, and have him find after all he is promised nothing, then I don't know English. I will make my attitude perfectly clear. I stand for some modification of the prohibition act, for this reason that I agree and accept in its entirely the principle that prohibition has done good work. But I do say this, and I speak from personal knowledge, that things are happening every day that show the prohibition act to be a farce. It is worse than a farce. A farce is something that makes you laugh. It is more in the nature of a tragedy than a farce. You are training young men to be liars; you are training them to be perjurers, and I state as a result of observation in court that men rather than be called informers have perjured their souls, and destroyed the last vestige of manhood, the one thing that separates a man from a savage. It is as easy to change the moral nature of the people by law as to stop the sea from flowing in, and because you make a prohibition law it is foolish to sit idly by and expect perfection. There are many men today as a result of this act who do not require liquor; they have become dope fiends. Only recently some people from outside have been endeavouring to introduce opium into Newfoundland. We will have to realize that we have to deal with a difficult situation. Take an ordinary man. He feels he has as much right to a drink as anyone else In order to get a drink you make him do a thing he would not otherwise do. He gets a doctor, feigns sickness and gets a "script" for liquor. You make that man a hypocrite, or you tempt the doctor to be one in pronouncing him sick.

It is a question upon which you have all sorts of extremists. You can divide intemperates into two classes, the men who drink to excess, and the men who don't drink at all. I will give you a case showing how the present side of it appears to me. To-day a woman came to me from Bell Island, who has nine children. Her husband was caught selling "moon-shine," and was sentenced to a fine of two hundred dollars, or jail. Of course he had not two hundred dollars and he went to jail, and that woman is waiting until tomorrow to see whether the hon. minister of justice in the goodness of his heart will not do something. Does not that woman feel the spirit of "unrest" when she thinks of the class that can go out and get a bottle of liquor, and that her husband is in jail for dealing in a drop of moonshine. By the way, Mr. Speaker, moonshine is becoming so common now that they have dropped the "moon" out of it. and the question now is will you have a drop of "shine."

There was a department of public health about to be instituted a couple of months ago, but nothing has been heard of it since. The more one thinks of this department which we looked forward to, the more one thinks something has happened. I assume that that department, like the depart-ment of trade and commerce, was not begun because of conditions altering. The honorable gentleman in the upper house, the minister of agriculture and mines, was to be the driving force in the great health organization. Today we find there is no public health organization, because he is otherwise engaged. I assume that the leader of the government cannot produce the goods, that certain of the profiteers now "belong to the wealthy domi-nant class of the government." I am afraid that the hand of the profiteer has been laid upon him, and that he has to remain content. He may do something, but I must say it comes to me as a general surprise that nothing has been indicated as yet. It is not so much that I blame him of putting this high sounding promise of dire vengeance on the manifesto, but I wish to draw the attention of the people that it is so easy to make promises, and so difficult to carry them out.

There is a part in the manifesto that says that we are going to have a reconstruction of the tariff. The taxes were going to be laid more heavily upon the shoulders of the people who could bear them.

But it is the same old story; the cry of the oppressed finds a ready ear before the election and high sounding reforms are promised, but the opening of parliament finds a sudden realization on the part of those who are looked to with such hope by the distressed and burdened people that things promised before voting day are not easily granted.

I repeat that this after election manifesto foreshadows nothing. The promised, wonderful, and uplifting are still dreams of the future, and I fear that our friends opposite in due time develop into the same fleshy "grafters" as those about whom they talked so much last fall.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that it is about time that we, as mem-bers of the House of Assembly on both sides, opened our eyes to the abuse that is handed out daily in the news-papers by a crowd of literary thugs and assassins, those contemptible, low down curs, who assail everything that is holy and sacred and who stop at nothing to satisfy their diseased minds. I want to say that I reserved this statement deliberately. I am in the happy position to say that I have neither written nor inspired to be written anything that reflected upon the character of any honourable gen-tleman in this House, and I am equally happy to say that the people of St. John's East, whom I represent, were too intelligent to be appealed to by that sort of stuff. Certain things appeared in "The Daily Star" on Saturday night last, and if the man who wrote them had his name behind them he would be lying in hospital to-day. This filthy cur wants to brand the Opposition as a Catholic Opposition. I wish to make it clear to hon. members of this House, particularly to non-Catholics on the opposite side, that if any man can find that either myself or my colleagues in St. John's East did ourselves or authorize others to utter a single word on a platform or in private against the private character of creed of any man during the election campaign, and with our knowledge, then I shall be pleased to place my resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister.

With regard to the Hon. Minister of Mar ne and Fisheries in the general and bye-elections, I may say that he was discussed openly and honestly on his fish regulations. But anything of the kind of stuff so much prated about in the papers was never mentioned. It is up to ourselves to clear ourselves of this atmosphere. We have to make up our minds that we in th s Assembly should mould public opinion and get the people to the level that we want them.

I trust that the Government will appreciate the position that I find myself in, and that whilst I have not been in any way abusive towards the Speech from the Throne, there is at least nothing in it that I can congratulate them on. In words that are applicable "let us forgive them for they know not what they promised."

On motion the debate on the address in reply was adjourned till next session.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the hon. the minister of justice the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to considef the bill entitled, "An Act respecting the effect and application of certain acts subsequent to the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series)."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled, "An Act to Provide for the Better Obtaining of Information Respecting the Cod Fishery."

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until half past ten of the clock this morning.

Mr. Higgins raised a point of order, contending that the rule of order respecting meeting hours may not be changed except by a unanimous vote of the House.

Mr. Speaker ruled otherwise.

Whereupon Mr. Higgins moved and Sir M.P. Cashin seconded, that Mr. Speaker's ruling be not sustained.

Whereupon the house divided, and there appeared for the motion, Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir John Crosbie, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Fox, Mr. Vinicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Moore, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Sullivan—12; and against it, the prime minister, minister of justice, minister of finance, minister of fisheries, minister of education, minister of posts, Hon. Mr. Foote, minister of public works, acting minister of shipping, Messrs. LeGrow, Winsor, Small, Cheeseman, Hibbs, Gosse, Archibald, Scammell, Targett, Guppy, Jones, Samson—21; so it passed in the negative and was ordered accordingly.

The house then adjourned until ten thirty of the clock this morning.

TUESDAY, April 27th, 1920.

The house met at ten of the clock in the forenoon pursuant to adjournment.

NOTICE OF QUESTION

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—As the order paper has at this hour only been received, it being 11 a.m. only, there has been no opportunity for the questions to be forwarded to the Departments to which they relate, much less secure the information sought. These questions may be considered to be asked and will receive consideration to-morrow.

There is one question, however, which I am in a position to answer at onc, as the facts are within my own personal knowledge. I refer to the last question on the order sheet, the question of Sir M. P. Cashin concerning the Royal Commission which I advised His Excellency the Governor to appoint to enquire into the resignation and affidavit of William Woodford, one of the Opposition members for Harbor Main.

In answer to that question I have to say that I am informed by His Excellency the Governor that the Honourable Sir Wm. H. Horwood, Kt., Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, has accepted His Excellency's nomination as chairman of the Commission, and that the Honorable Mr. Justice Kent and the Honorable R. K. Bishop have accepted His Excellency's nomination as the other two members of the Commission.

I can not at this moment give the exact words of the reference, but the scope of the enquiry includes the whole matter of the Woodford resignation, his affidavit and the statement therein contained.

The conduct of the enquiry will be entirely a matter for the Commission itself. It will be asked to begin the enquiry promptly and to report as soon as it is possible for them to do so.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to presnet a petition from the inhabitants of Codroy asking that a light be erected in the dwelling house of the Lighthouse keeper at Codroy Island. This light is wanted as soon as possible, as the only means of communication that these people have, except over the road, is by the Portia, and last year the captain of the Portia refused absolutely to call there because there was no light on Codroy Island. The low lying nature of the land on that shore always presents a great difficulty to mariners, as it is an easy matter to run down Cape Anguille. The petition is signed by almost everybody in that settlement. Last year a pole was erected and a lantern was hoisted on this on fine nights, but not on rough nights, as when it was rough it was impossible for men to get out from the main land. In the words of the petitioners this did more harm than good. There was some correspondence on this matter with the Prime Minister last fall and he expressed himself as sympathetic with the idea that a light should be erected on Codroy Island. I ask that the petition be referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries and ask that the Executive Government give this matter their earnest consideration.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the inhabitants of Job's Cove, signed by Rev. Fr. O'Brien and Rev. Petrie and eighty or ninety inhabitante of that place, asking that a grant be given for the repair of a road. I may say that these repairs are of vital importance not only to the people of Job's Cove but also to Burnt Point and Lower Island Cove, as in certain seasons of the year, especially in the caplin school, this road is used by a large majority of the people living around that section. Up to a few years ago the peoplec ontented themselves in carrying on their occupations by travelling over a perpendicular cliff to and from their fishing rooms, as it is the only accessible way that they can get to their fishing rooms during the fishing season. This cliff is known as a foot path and the people, with a progressive spirit and without any assistance from the government, banded themselves together and blasted out the cliff for the use of their horses and teams. The past winter was very severe with huge snow piles on the cliff so that the breaking up of spring caused floods and avalanches of snow, taking quantities of debris with it, so that at the present time it is in a practically impassible condition. In order to carry on their season's work they ask that the small sum of $300 to make repairs to the road. I quite understand the difficulties these people have to contend with in order to try and get their livelihood from the sea. I humbly trust that this petition will find its way to the department to which it belongs and that the prayer of the petition will not go unanswered.

MR. LeGROW:—I beg to support the prayer of the petition.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, I also wish to present another petition from the inhabitants of Western Bay North on the subject of repairs to a road; also that a small sum of money be granted for the buying of a piece of land for a dock. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, you are familiar with that part of the coast and readily understand the great necessity there is for a dock there. In the fall of the year when storms are prevalent, people, for the protection of their property, have to haul their boats a quarter of a mile away from the sea-shore. The people ask for a small grant of $150 to buy a few yards of land to use it as a public utility. I also have great pleasure in referring this petition to the department to which it relates.

MR. LeGROW:—I have also very great pleasure in supporting the prayer of this petition.

MR. ARCHIBALD:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of the district of Hr. Grace. It is a very important petition not alone for the district of Hr. Grace, but for all on this side of the Island. I will read the petition, which is signed by Mr. R. Munn and numerous others. I have seen men on the wharf at Hr. Grace ready to go to the Labrador coast and had to remain ashore, as they were unable to get passage by steamer. I say that these people who are anxious enough and energetic enough to be early on hand to go and get a berth for the fishery should not be debarred because there is no room on the Labrador steamer the first and consequently they would have to wait for the second trip before they could get away. The petition speaks for itself and I have no doubt whaever but that the department of shipping will give it that consideration which it amply merits.

THE HON. DR. BARNES:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the petition presented by my colleague, Mr. Archibald.

MR. GOSSE:—Mr. Speaker, I also beg to support this petition.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the inhabitants of Channel. They ask for the grant of one thousand dollars to build a wharf there. I may say that the storm that swept this locality the last few years have washed away the wharves that have been used for the purposes of landing coal and other things and I feel satisfied that in presenting this petition because I know it is an absolute necessity and trust that it will be referred to the department to which it relates and that it will be a great benefit to the people of Channel.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. the Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of the House all copies of correspondence, memoranda and other data whatsoever in reference to or in connection with directly or indirectly any proposal, scheme or undertaking of a public nature in Newfoundland in which Harry J. Crowe either personally or in a representative capacity is interested and upon which he is or has been in communication with the present or past administration or any department thereof, particularly in reference to the acquisition of any rights, privileges or undertakings heretofore enjoyed or carried out or proposed to be enjoyed or carried out by the Reid Newfoundland Co.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. the Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of this House:

(1) All correspondence between the Reid Newfoundland Co., and the Government, and between the Reid Newfoundland Co. and the Government engineer in reference to the condition of the railway and all proposals for the improvement of the inland transportation facilities generally.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon the Prime Minister, who owing to the absence from this Hose of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, represents the Agriculture and Mines department:

(1) What steps if any have been taken with regard to cancellation of lumber grants which are held by speculators and not developed.

(2) Is it the intention of the Government to take steps to cancel grants that are held by parties who are not fulfilling the conditions as laid down by the Crown Lands Act.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to lay on the table of this House:

(1) Any correspondence he may have in connection with the establishing of life saving station between Cape Race and St. Mary's.

(2) If it is the intention of the Government to establish life saving station and further aids to navigation in this dangerous coast between Renews and Cape St. Mary's.

(3) What moneys, if any, have been sent to the district of Placentia and St. Mary's since November 30th, 1919, from the Marine and Fisheries Department.

(4) Where and to whom the money was sent?

(5) For what purpose the money was required?

(6) At whose request the money was allocated?

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Finance to lay on the table of the House a statement:

(1) Showing the amounts received as profit tax from the Dominion Iron and Steel Co., and the Nova Scotia Steel Co., operating at Wabana.

(2) If both Companies have paid the profit tax? And if not, why?

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs:

(1) To table all correspondence between the Marconi Co. or any other wireless telegraph or telephone companies in connection with the introduction of further wireless telephone stations in this country.

(2) Also any correspondence in connection with the closing down of the Directional Wireless Station at Cape Race.

(3) If it is the intention of the Government to vote sums of money for the erection of at least two more directional wireless stations, one to be erected at Cape Ray and one at Cape Chapeau Rouge at the entrance of Placentia Bay, as further aids to navigation.

(4) If any provision is being made for the erection of a small wireless telegraph or telephone plant at Oderin, Placentia Bay, or if the Government has decided to connect Oderin with Flat Islands or Baine Harbor by cable.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs to lay on the table of the House all correspondence in connection with the dismissal of Miss Best, as telegraph operatoress at Come-by-Chance, and why a man from Trinity Bay was given the position as operator at Come-by-Chance?

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs:

(1) To lay on the table of the House a statement showing the number of uncomplete extensions of the telegraph system which were commenced in 1919 in the District of Placentia and St. Mary's, and when the work will be completed?

(2) What provision, if any, is being made to connect Cape Pine lighthouse with St. Shott's or Trepassey by telephone or telegraph?

(3) What work has been done on the extension of the telegraph line from Peter's River to St. Shott's?

(4) What work has been done on the extension of the telegraph line to Long Harbor, Placentia Bay?

(5) When the telegraph office is to be opened in North Harbor, Placentia Bay, the line now being built to that important settlement?

(6) What provision is being made to connect up Mall Bay, Colinet, Patrick's Cove, Arnold's Cove, North West St. Joseph's, Placentia Bay with telegraph or telephone system? (

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. Minister of Finance, if it is the intention of the Government to increase the vote for old age pensions sufficiently so as every application for this pension can Clattice Harbor, Little Paradise and be granted?

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Colonial Secretary to table all correspondence between his Department and the Reid Newfoundland Co., in connection with the closing lown of the Trepassey railway in December last.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. the Prime Minister if the Commission to enquire into matters arising out of the Woodford affidavit has been yet appointed? If so, who are the members thereof? Whne will the Commission begin its enquiries? Within what time has it to report? And what will be the scope of its enquiries?

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled the annual returns of the Reid Newfoundland Co.

Also the Rules and Regulations under the Inspection of Foods Act.

Mr. Sulivan—(1) Notice of question, (2) Notice of question.

Mr. MacDonnell—Notice of question.

Mr. Walsh—(1) Notice of question; (2) Notice of question.

Mr. Jones—(1) Notice of question; (2) Notice of question.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—The questions asked have been given during the last few minutes, and it has been impossible to get them to the Department to elicit the information. But as to the las question asked by Sir Michael Cashin I can answer that from my personal knowledge. It is in connection to the appointment of the Royal Commission. I may say that Sir William H. Horwood has accepted nomination as chairman of the Commission and Mr. Kent and Mr Bishop have been appointed, making a total of three. I cannot give the exact words of His Excellency the Governor, but the appointments are in reference to the enquiry into the Woodford affidavit and the statements herein contained.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Is that the extent of the enquiry?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I think so, but I do not know the exact words of His Excellency. The conduct of the matter has been handed over to the commission itself and it will begin as soon as possible. I suggest that the other questions be struck off the order paper as they will be sent forthwith to the departmens.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—That report seems satisfactory.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN: — Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of adding a few words to the debate of the adoption of the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. In doing so, Sir, I wish first to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply. I congratulate them on their able speeches. I congratulate them as members of this House, and I hope that I will be able to congratulate them on the work they will do in this House, as I have already congratulated them for the splendid services they have performed in the past in defence of the Colony and Empire. It is regrettable that in the general election, as pointed out by the honorable gentlemen, the other men of their class had not been elected to this House. It strikes me, Mr. Speaker, that such men as the two honorable gentlemen who sit on the other side of the House, returned soldiers who sought the electorate at the last general elections, were not treated right. It appears to me that those who did their duty by this Dominion in the war have not been treated as generously as they deserveed when seeking the suffrages of the people.

A navy man offered himself for election in the District of Trinty. He answered the call of his King and Country. He came back full of honors. He then went to his native District and was turned down.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—I would like to call the hon. member's attention to the fact that there was a candidate for this side of the House who was a navy man who was also turned down.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—We were told here yesterday that Mr. Matthews was turned down because he was on the wrong side. What did he mean by saying that the candidate was on the wrong side? Did the man who had served his countrty so nobly have no right to choose his politics? When the war broke out in 1914 this House was differently constituted than it is today. What has happened since 1914? This country is in a state of depression. The world was in a state of depression. I was a member of the Government with the present Leader of the Government. I would like to bring him in memory back to that night when the message came informing us of the United Kingdom's entry into the great war, and that all the Colonies would be expected to send men. What was the financial situation then? It was an entirely new situation to us. We didn't realize what war meant, but we rose to the occasion. The gentleman who sits on my right was instrumental in getting that meeting in the C. L. B. Armoury together. After the meeting we went back to the Executive rooms. We never thought we would get 500 men, but we kept on. We had no money, not a cent. We got the men, and made arrangements with the Home Government to finance us for a short while. After a few months we were called on to send more men, and as the months went on still more, but we kept on all down those years. We financed the soldiers and sailors that went across, and looked after their dependents that they left behind, but not without some difficulty. The first loan was raised by Sir Edward Morris, I think, in 1916. Sir Edward first went across to England and satisfied himself that the Mother Country was not at all anxious to lend us any money. Sir Edward then went to the United States and raised a loan of $5,000,000, on a short term basis, three years, at 5 per cent. $3,000,000 was for the purpose of carrying on the war, and $2,000,000 to meet our railroad bill. He never dreamt that the Colony would be called on to raise another loan. He thought that the war would be over before it would be necessary for us to raise another loan; but in 1917, after the war had been going on for three years, another loan had to be raised. Meanwhile an amalgamation was brought about with the opposition of the House, and after the amalgamation was brought about Sir Edward thought it was time for him to withdraw from politics in this country. He made arrangements with opposition and with members of his own party. There is a long story to be told in connection with that, and I will tell it before this House closes. Before leaving he found that we were financially stranded, and as Finance Minister I took the matter up with him.

I was commissioned to go to Canada and the States and find out if a loan could be negotiated there. I took time by the forelock and before we actually needed the money I moved out and when I reached the United States I found that it was impossible to raise a loan there, although Sir Edward Morris had succeeded in raising two and a half millions there the year before. An embargo was on there and no outsiders were allowed to come in and raise money. I came back to Canada and found that 5½ to 6 per cent. would have to be paid on any money we could get in that market, so I returned and laid the information I had gathered before my executive colleagues and advised them to raise part of that loan here in Newfoundland and the balance in Canada at 6½ per cent. My advice was taken and when we placed that loan on the local market we found it over-subscribed in very short order, and the Government thereupon decided to increase it. The other part of the loan had already been contracted for in Canada. The money was placed to your credit in the Bank of Montreal in this city after the amounts required for our war expenditures had been handed over to the militia department and the record office in London, and the bank paid the very fair interest of 3½ per cent. Down through these two years I sat on the other side of this House with the gentleman who is now the Leader of the Government and with the gentleman who is leader of the F.P.U. wing of the Government, while Mr. Halfyard was for part of the time Colonial Secretary. I was in close contact with these gentlemen up to the last of May or at least with some of them. When we had raised 7½ or 8 million dollars we thought we were on easy street but our troubles did not end there, for by that time we found that the short term loan raised by Sir Edward Morris was due and I had to pack my bag again and start for the United States to try and raise another loan to offset this. I felt the pulse of the United States financiers and soon found that there was nothing doing there, and as six million dollars was too much to expect our people to take up we decided to again approach Canada, and I must say that the Canadians treated us white. Hon. A. McLean, who was acting in the absence of Minister of Finance White, went out of his way to put me on the right track to raise this loan. I am sorry that the Minister of Finance is out of the House. he evidently knew I was coming to this and quietly slipped away, but I wanted to tell him how this loan was raised. This is the loan there was so much talk about and in connection with which I have been so much abused. I remained silent under this abuse, but now I will tell the story of that loan. The five million dollars was raised in Canada, the loan being advertised in the American and Canadian financial papers as well as in the local papers. Tenders were called for and were submitted by four of the leading financial Houses in Canada. Mr. Conroy was my solicitor in the matter and attended to all the legal work. The tenders were opened by him in the finance office in the presence of the agents of the tenderers and myself. Each tenderer took a copy of all the tenders and the loan was placed with lowest which was Wood, Gundy & Co., of Toronto, one of the best Houses in Canada. They arranged the loan through the Royal Bank of Canada and gave us a guarantee that the amount to take up the short term loan on July 1st would be in the Bank of Montreal in New York by that date. That whole transaction, in spite of the high rate of exchange and all the other difficulties, was put through with a total cost to the Colony of only $125,000.

Arrangements were made to have that money in the Bank of Montreal to meet our liabilities falling due on July 1st. The finance department lost only $125,000 or $130,000 on this loan. I was a colleague with some of the Government members of today for the past 10 or 11 years, and if all that was said in the papers is correct, there is only one question for me to ask, and that is, why did those gentlemen remain and sit side by side with us. The only reason I know of for all this propaganda was to throw dust in the eyes of the public for political purposes. I have been vilified by my political opponents, but I may say here that all their vilification had the same effect on me as water on a duck's back. You have nothing to your credit, gentlemen, for the shameful, dirty, low, and despicable manner in which you fought your election. I care not whether I was elected, but I do and did object to the dirty low tactics of my opponents.

I have had some experience in the past, having been elected eight or nine times, and I have always found that it has been the custom of all parties that when the election was finished the campaign of abuse would cease But in this case the campaign of abuse did not cease, and each and every department of the government has been prostituted to find out if the previous government has done anything crooked. Even at the by-election recently held the Prime Minister in a public speech stated that Cashin's daughter had a gift of $1500 from the treasury. I have never heard such stuff before. Why was this material handed out to me?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you the story of that $1500. The first local loan ever launched in this country being for three and a half million dollars was in 1915 or 1916, and at a meeting of the executive it was decided that when the loan was put upon the colony it would sell at 98 and that 2 per cent. would go to pay the drummers and agents, etc., to sell the loan, and so it happened this loan was sold in a very short period. The finance department sent out agents and drummers and sold over four millions to the people of Newfoundland. All these agents were paid the 2 per cent. as decided upon by the executive consisting of the present prime ministers and others.

Now I will show you the state that politics has reached to-day when that Prime Minister would get up and point out my child as having received $1,500 as a gift from the Finance Department.

Oh, the Minister of Finance is back in his seat. He left the House when I was about to speak of the loan. Have I got to go over this thing again? I have been telling your party how I have been vilified and I have been telling them how this loan was raised. Here's how it was raised. Tenders were called for . . . I am now going over the same grounds again. Tenders were called for and applied for by four big financial firms in Canada. The tenders were received and opened in my office and the loan was accepted from Wood Gundy & Co., to meet the loan raised in New York.

Now I have been held up to ridicule for the past twelve months, in reference to this loan, and my child was connected with it. When this loan was first put on the market, it was decided by Mr. Squires, that 2 per cent. would be given to those who bought it up. A. S. Rendell & Co., Parker, Bradshaw, and others spread this about, and some of their friends sold some of this loan, and when my daughter came to me and asked permission to try to sell some, I gave it because I felt there was no harm in it. I didn't think there was any harm in it then, and I am still of the same opinion, but it was taken as matter for the Prime Minister's speech, and the Finance Minister to drag that child in to their debates and point out how Cashin became rich. It does not become you to conduct your political campaign in that manner, and I am here to defend that child and to defend myself, and I fear nothing from you. It has been my reputation in this House to be open and above board in debate. As I have told you the Finance Minister went out of his way to prostitute that Department to get at me. But I assure you, Sir, you will not live long enough to get at me, and I take this opportunity to sling back in your faces the dirt which has been served out to me in the past two months. What has been in your mind is not to put men against me, but religion against religion. I may say, Sir, my best friend is a Protestant, and if I were dying tomorrow and had anything to leave my family, that I would make that man my executor. That is how I feel towards the other denominations, and I fear no contradiction of that in this House of outside. But when men become base enough to bring religion into this House and use it outside as a means to gain votes, then I never want to enter the portals of this House again. I have lived thirty years in politics in this country, and I never heard from Sir Wm. Whiteway, Sir James Winter, or the Hon. A. F. Goodridge, and why should I hear it now.

I can boast that I represent a thoroughly Catholic district, from end to end, and they elected a man who was a member of the Church of England, and in reference to that gentleman I would say, that judging by the respect the people had for him, my opinion is that he could retain his seat until he died, but he saw fit to change his views and go elsewhere. I have been a member of this House a number of years, and during those years I have served many Prime Ministers, and I have never heard it fall from my lips, when debating a question, whether it was Catholic or Protestant that was going to benefit by it. That is the school I was brought up in, and that is the school I hope to die in, and all the insinuations you have fired out at us, I throw back in your face, and I prophecy this much, that if that is going to be your conduct in the future, then it will be an easy matter to judge your end.

Now, Sir, I wish to take the first paragraph in the Speech from the Throne, but before going any further I wish to congratulate the gentlemen on this side of the House who preceded me in the debate. I must first congratulate Mr. Fox, who addressed himself so eloquently to the House on Friday night last. It strikes me that he is one of the young men, who if it is not too late will raise the dignity of the House to the position it held in the old days. I hope and trust that the future will bring forth many men of his stamp, and that the serpent that is peeping over the bar of this House will be crushed for ever, and we will hear no more of it.

I must also congratulate Mr. Bennett. He reviewed the work of the late Government down through the last seven years, and he reviewed it in a manner that did him credit. He simply called a spade a spade and nothing more. Mr. Bennett for a part of that time was Minister of Militia, and I might say Mr. Speaker, that the Department was looked after thoroughly by Mr. Bennett. That Department was a new Department, and one that men of Mr. Bennett's class had no experience in, and I think it is wonderful to take a man out of civilian life and put him in that Department, and have him handle it successfully. In other countries, such as Britain, Departments of this kind are run by old experienced trained men. Mr. Bennett was not one of those, but he did credit to that Department. What is there against him in that Department? Has there been anything done since that Department was taken from him? That Department was handed over to the Government in November past, and I say that that Department also has been prostituted. That place was broken into, and the records of men who fought for us were laid open to the eyes of the public. When we find men in this House who are base enough to go in there and hand out the record of any individual amongst our soldiers or sailors, am I not right in saying that that Department has been prostituted, and only for public sentiment came to the rescue, the record of every soldier or sailor, who was an opponent of the present Government would be handed out to the public of this Colony, but public sentiment came to the rescue and prevented that. Now I am not prepared to say who is chief of that Department, but the Prime Minister is chief of all Departments, and he must know who handed out these records to the public. The like of this was never done before in any country, that the record of any soldier should be handed out and made public matter of, but I mention this as a sample of the low, despicable means used by the present Government to get here, and I wish to say that if I could get in in no other way than that, that I would rather stay out.

The House then rose until 3 p.m.

At three of the clock the House resumed.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the Leader of the Opposition, I beg to lay upon the Table of the House the annual returns of the Reid Newfoundland Co., for period July 1918 to June 1919, also the rules and regulations under the Inspection of Foods Act of 1914. Under section 9 of the Act these regulations must be tabled in the Legislature during the first week of the session.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, when recess was called I was dealing with the first paragraph of the Speech from the Throne. I was pointing out to the House how the publis departments have been prostituted, and while we may forgive many of the prostitutions there is no excuse for the prostitution of the Militia Department. I happened to be out of the Colony when this attack was made on the department. I pointed out this morning that the attack was made on the Government of the day. The department is today under the Prime Minister; he is looking after it and it is under his protection that this prostitution took place. I call it prostitution. Now this matter has drawn my attention. It is an article in The Daily Star this evening under the heading: "Let the Public Judge." Now I understand this was caused by some controversy in the papers over certain treatment handed out to returned soldiers. The returned soldiers mentioned did not see eye to eye with the present Government. They put forward their claims and they were turned down and a discussion arose. The Star is owned and controlled by the Prime Minister and nothing can appear in it without his permission. I am going to read the article but I am not going to read the record. I would not debase myself to read it. (Reads article.)

Now here is the letter of Private Doran and Private Tracey. (Reads article.) Now these two soldiers or sailors, as the case may be, have this treatment handed out to them although they have, according to this communication (letter) given nearly five years' service for their King and Country. Now they have been basely treated by The Star as you can read between the lines.

This was printed in large type and handed out to the whole world. These two men enlisted, and were prepared to lay down their lives for their King and Country. They have had some faults. We are not all saints. How many of us, if we wore our skins on our sleeves, could throw a stone at the other. I say no more on this matter now, gentlemen; public sentiment has turned down this kind of thing. But I would ask the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to give warning to any individual or department that is going to treat their brother soldiers in this way. Why try to debase and pull down those men in the mire? That is the thing that is being done, so I serve notice on you to keep this matter in mind and see that a repetition of this thing does not occur.

The second paragraph of the Speech from the Throne makes reference to the donations to this Government by the Admiralty of three ships that are to be used in the various services of the country. I appreciate the donations from the British Admiralty to this Colony. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that this matter had the attention of the late Government. Mr. Piccott, through the late Government, put this matter before the Admiralty. He was anxious to have a seagoing tug on hand at all times. Mr. Piccott, who backed this movement and I think had several interviews with the Governor, also placed the matter before Sir Edgar Bowring, who promised him that he would put the matter before the Admiralty. The present Government should take no credit for this thing because the present Government were members of the late Government. I recognize that it is necessary to have a good sea-going tug. The cost of maintaining such a boat will be heavy, but we should be prepared to stand it because in one night she might do service that would be many times her value. Take the Florizel disaster. There was nothing in the harbor with steam up that could be of any assistance. This, Mr. Speaker, is a step in the right direction. We should have a boat here ready at any moment to go to sea and rescue lives. Take the case of the Kristianiford. There were some 500 lives on board. Fortunately she was fitted with wireless, and could send out the S. O. S. call, and the Sable I. on her way from Nova Scotia went to her rescue and succeeded in saving all the lives. The action of the Government in this matter has ample justification. It is possible, says the Speech, that one of these boats will be used as a coastal boat. That may or may not be so. A coastal boat and a warship are two different things. The Admiralty have several of these boats on their hands that are no good for coastal boats. The boats are very narrow and shallow, and for this reason they would be of no value as coastal boats. This I presume is the reason Dover turned the offer of two of them down.

It is not much of a gift after all. Newfoundland did her part in the war and if we do get a few old depleted warships it is not so much. Moreover, Sir, I understand that ships of this class burn from 30 to 50 tons of coal a day, and if this is so, in the case of those we are getting they will be found to be a liability rather than an asset to the Colony.

The third paragraph of the Speech from the Throne reminds me of the French Shore question, although it refers to the Labrador boundary.

For many years a dispute has been pending between the Porvince of Quebec and this Colony in relation to the boundary between Newfoundland and Quebec on the Labrador Peninsula. An agreement has been arrived at as to the submission of the dispute to the adjudication of His Majesty's Privy Council, and it is thought probable that some settlement of this long outstanding controversy may be made during this year.

Do I understand, Mr. Minister of Justice, that this case is now before the English courts?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—It won't come on this year, but the two governments are in conference on the matter and it will be proceeded with as early as possible.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—What counsel has been engaged to represent this colony?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The government's solicitors are engaged and I understand they have retained Sir John Simon.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—I take it some local men will be sent to represent us also?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I propose to go myself.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—I congratulate you.

The fourth section of the speech deals with the fish regulations. Shortly after the present Government came into power these regulations were sprung on the country. The minister of marine and fisheries apparently took the matter into his own hands and the regulations published by him were expected to become law. In this matter I am with him upto a certain point. I remember last fall when the export trade was at a stand and the whole of Water Street stood aghast, but Mr. Coaker made a mistake by not taking the trade into his confidence before launching his regulations. I take it that he took it into his head that he should stop the export of fish until the markets were prepared to pay the price asked for it with cash against documents and instead of calling the Board of Trade together he gave it out that he was the Minister of Fisheries and that he was backed by the Government and was prepared to put these regulations into effect whether the exporters liked it or not. If he was independent I would not mind it so much, but he was an exporter himself and took upon himself to enter into a contract with two or three others without saying "I beg your pardon." It was marvellous we did as well as he did. He took out a couple of men who knew nothing about such matters and called them an advisory board and turned the back of his hand to those who did, with the result that he put the country and himself on Queer Street. He simply took it upon himself to make a big fish deal with Hawes, and if he thus laid himself open to suspicion he has only himself to blame for the discreditable stories that were circulated about him.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Tell us what the story was?

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Yes I will. It was that you feathered your own nest and sold your own fish first. While many cargoes were rejected there were no F. P. U. cargoes amongst them.

When I was in Montreal a few weeks ago I could have sold a cargo of fish at $14.00 a quintal f.o.b. I wired a firm here but they replied that the buyers would have to comply with the terms of Mr. Coaker's regulations and when I submitted these terms to the prospective buyer he wouldn't look at the fish.

Where are you now, Mr. Coaker: You have thrown up the sponge, according to the speech of Sir J. C. Crosbie and the messages received in town. We are in a very humble position to-day if you ask me, when 250,000 people have to bow to you to get your permission to ship their fish. Mr. Cheeseman could tell you all about it if he only had pluck enough to stand up. What is the history of Sam Harris, a poor fisherman 30 or 40 years ago, who went to sea in a "bully boat." Do you know what that is. He gradually grew to the position he is to-day, but he couldn't have done it if the existing fish regulations were then in force. Thirty years ago every fish was marketed to St. John's to be sold for shipment across, but you don't find this situation to-day, yet we will soon drift back to the days of one man dictation, if things go on as they are going. Has a man not the right to catch his fish and sell it in any market of the world and get any price he can for it? But, what is the position to-day? You have to wire in to the Marine and Fisheries Department and beg for a permit to be allowed to ship your fish. Mr. Hutchings (a capable and obliging official) wires back perhaps that Mr. Coaker is at Port Union and that he cannot grant permission.

This is one man rule. I find that you have put on the restrictions, not through the house but by the authority of an old rusty war measures act. Let us bring it into this legistalure and let us discuss it. Water Street men are back in the same old rut. They can't ship fish against documents. Your policy of shipping fish in this manner will drive trade out of the country. Fish is a perishable article. We have got to wait until it arrives before we get any money. If it is up to the standard we get full price for it, but if it is inferior we must give a rebate. Now you want to change all that and you put a shipment of fish on the same level as you would a shipment of flour from New York. And then you say legislation must be passed compelling the fisherman to make his fish properly. Why, it is enough to make a fish laugh. It is harder to make bad fish than it is to make good fish.

I have no hesitation in saying that it is easier to make good fish than bad fish. It requires 300 per cent. more labor to make bad fish than good.

MR. CHEESEMAN—I agree with you.

SIR M.P. CASHIN—I thank Mr. Cheeseman for his honest expression of opinion. I am sure the house appreciates it and that the people of the gallery appreciate it. Mr. Cheeseman is a practical man and I am glad that he coincides with me.

I agree that the exporter is the man that should be got after, and I want to tell the minister that if he wishes to standardlze the fish it is the exporter that he should get after, Take you and I. We buy the fish just as it comes, and it is up to Mr. Brown or Mr. Jones who purchases it as an exporter to see that the standard is kept up. When the fish is brought to St. John's it is culled and assorted, the merchantable in one bulk, the maderia in another bulk, and West Indies in another, and the slimey in another, and it should be exported accordingly. The merchant is the man to get after, if you get after him you are doing something, but you have no right to come here to legislate according to your present ideas, and it is ridiculous to put such a paragraph in the speech from the throne.

I would like to ask the minister of marine and fisheries what has happened to our herring industry. I see no mention of it at all in this document. Fish regulations are all very well, but codfish is not herring, and caplin in not squid. Now we had a herring fishery in the colony a few years ago, and what has happened to it. If you were to provide regulations regarding the herring in the same way as you planned with regard to codfish, than I am with you. Our herring fishery a few years ago was worth nearly a million dollars, but to day it is gone, and who is to blame for it? When I was in New York last yearI went down to one of the piers there and saw a consignment of herring from this colony. I was invited down by a merchant belonging to this city who was in the herring business, and when I was brought her I recognized on arrival a thousand berrals of herring that were stored there, and which had not been cleaned of the Newfound land mud; the barrels had been rolled through the mud and the mud still stuck to them. Then they were mark ed No. 1 herring but that they were not No. 1 you might judge from the fact that in three barrels which were opened for inspection the top tier only was large, the next tier smaller, and the next tier smaller still, and in some cases they were packed without even the gut having been taken out. This is the kind of thing which is going to New York as No.1 Scotch Cured Herring from Newfoundland. That kind of thing may have been all rightwhile the war was one, when there was a premium on this class of food, but to day we cannot sell herring which are in that condition. In New York there has been a great sounding of trumpets about what we are going to do with regard to regulating the class of fish which we are exporting, but it strikes me that this is about the very first matter that should be tackled. It is one of the things that is not mention-in the speech from the throne, and that it is a very important one I am sure all the hon. members of the House will agree.

With regards to the fifth paragraph in the speech from the throne regarding the closing of the militia department, I agree with this to a certain extent. I agree that it is high time to close the militia department, if the conduct of those in charge is been closed. This office has done cord office in London has already very good work in its day. I do not to continue as it has been. I note that the Newfoundland pay and re-agree with the position which refers to the civil re-estabuishment committee. I believe these gentlemen are doing their very best in the interest of the returned soldier, and while there are returned soldiers at large as at the present time, I think it is the duty of this government and every other government to see that these men are taken care of and given every atteneion. Nothing that can be done for them is too much. They went over there and laid down their lives for our security, and so far as I am concerned I am prepared to add another million or two millions to the debt of the Colony if it would serve their interests and enable them to get a square show. I have noticed in an advertisement in one of the daily papers saying that the Government intends to give to each soldier a small plot of land which he can cultivate. Well, eighty per cent. of the soldiers and sailors who went across must have been fishermen, and I take it that you can never make a farmer out of a fishermen, that is the history of Newfoundland. The fisherman is prepared to have his little plot of land and to cultivate it as far as he can, but when the fishery comes round he is sure to give up the farming; that is my experience. The very minute the caplin strike he is gone, therefore I regard this advertisement and this promise as a mere camouflage. Such a proclamation in such a Colony as this is only a joke.

If we live to come back here next year, which I hope we will, we will see that not two per cent., no, not even one per cent. of the returned soldiers will be following up farming. Would you expect a man to farm the South Side Hills or the Blockhouse? Well, these places are better than many places up the country, where these men will be asked to farm the land, and apart from that I am sure that the men from Bonavista Bay or Trinity Bay or St. John's are not going to move to Bay of Islands in order to take up farming.

I think I may say that while the Morris government was in power, and while the Lloyd government was in power, they each did as much as possible for the returned soldiers. Their pay was increased among other things, and we went as far as to promise that with regard to pay, Newfoundland would place itself upon the same level as Canada. We did all we could for the returned soldier and his dependents. Mention is made here of building a hospital, but I do not know if this is necessary except for tubercular patients, and that institution was started last year when the soldiers started to come home. The proposition was put up to the government that is was absolutely necessary to take care of these men on arrival and so we bought the premises in the east end and fitted it up for a temporary hospital, with cots and everything else necessary, and when it was found that additional accommodation was wanted for those afflicted with tuberculosis, had the ground surveyed out around Bowcock's Farm.

We took care of the returned soldiers in every way that was available, that is what the Hon. Mr. Halfyard and I did. Mr. Halfyard was a member and a Minister of the Crown in the late Government. Now the present Government, of which Mr. Halfyard is a member, tells us what provision they are making for the returned soldiers, although Cashin and Halfyard went to the last ditch to get this building, in fact we gave the contract to a man to do the work.

There is another paragraph in the Speech from the Throne which says that "The Rev. (Major) Nangle has been placed in charge of matters connected with the concentration and registration of the graves of our heroic dead in Europe." This paragraph was referred to last night by the late Minister of Militia, the Hon. Mr. Bennett, and also by the Hon. Mr. Higgins and other gentlemen. And I agree with them that the Rev. (Major) Nangle is the right man in the right place. He is young, energetic and enthusiastic for that work. We have implicit confidence in him and know that his work will be accomplished to the satisfaction of all, especially to the relatives of our deceased soldiers.

Here is another paragraph which I think is as old as the House itself.

The revenue for the last fiscal year showed a substantial surplus over expenditure. On the other hand, there have been large expenditures not included within the scope of last year's estimates which it will be necessary to legalize. In spite of these large disbursements the revenue was more than sufficient to meet current expenditure. It must be remembered, however, that practically the whole of the very large expense incurred in connection with the Department of Militia and in the matter of pensions for soldiers and sailors and their hospital treatment and civil re-establishment was borne on capital account.

Here is another statement: "The estimates have been subject to considerable revision and have been based upon the report of the civil service commission appointed by my late ministers." That is correct. The late Government appointed Inspector O'Rielly and two other gentlemen to go into the whole civil service and adjust all the salaries and take evidence, if necesasry, to put the civil servants on a right and proper basis, and to recommend a living wage to all. That commission has not reported yet. I hope when they do report that the civil servants of this Colony will be granted sufficient to keep them properly and independent as they should be kept. Did you ever hear a lot of words like this meaning nothing, but simply handed out to the ordinary man to swallow. My ministers propose to submit to you for your careful consideration a bona fide statement of the moneys which are estimated to be necessary to cover the expense of the public services of the Colony for the coming fiscal year. They are of the opinion that the practice which has grown up during recent years of submitting estimates far below the actual anticipated expenditure, trusting to provisions being made under the head of "supplemental supply" at a subsequent session of the Legislature for the authorization of over-expenditure, should be discontinued as far as practicable.

The whole thing is spoiled by the four words "as far as practicable." We are told that supplemental supply is going to be done away with and that the spending of monies in future, according to this paragraph, will be all done in this Assembly. There will be no salaries raised or increased until such time as voted by this House. At the end of that paragraph you will notice the words "should be discontinued." Here's what that amounts to. At the first meeting of the executive council on Water Street, after they are through with this House, a member of the Executive, on behalf of a constituent or friend, asking for an increase of salary. May be there will be concessions asked that will involve anywhere from ten to twenty thousand dollars. They will be discussed and pronounced upon and an Order-in-Council taken to Government House, through the Colonial Secretary. The Governor signs the order and the Finance Department will pay this expenditure authorized by the Executive. Such cases will happen at ninety per cent of the meetings held by the Executive during the next twelve months. When the House meets next year there will be a much larger supplemental supply than is being brought down this year. Yet we are told in a paragraph of the Speech from the Throne that supplemental supply is going to be done away with.

The Speech from the Throne also says that the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which may be considered one of the most important departments of the administration, will be re-organized; an information bureau and scientific research department will be established; a commission will be appointed to put into operation laws for the standardization of fish and the improvement of the cure thereof. Trade commissioners and other agents will be appointed from time to time until Newfoundland is suitably represented in all its principal fish markets. Legislation will be introduced to provide for the enforcement of such regulations as my ministers may consider necessary to protect the interests in foreign countries of those who ship fish to the foreign market.

Does this mean that this Department is going to be conducted as in the past? A fishery report collected around the Island through the aid of wireless and telegraph stations? I take it that that is the meaning of the words "Information Bureau." As to the words "Scientific Research." Well, they are as old as the Department itself. Some scientific man from some other part of the world, I suppose, will be imported here as in the past and be attached to the Department, or does it mean that a staff of men will be sent around the island on a steamer taking temperatures, soundings, etc., like they do in Norway and Sweden. Anyway, I suppose it will come out in the bill that the minister intends to bring down. In the past a Mr. Nielsen was brought here. He was a good man but he did not fill the bill. A Mr. Flett was also brought here to reorganize the herring fishery. You know what hapepned? It was during election time and this visitor was used as a catch cry. He was going herring fishery was going to be prosecuted scientifically and systematically. Dr. Barnes was a member of the House at the time. He helped to get him here. We were told that Flett was going to introduce into the North and West the system in vogue in Scotland and Norway. This man Flett arrived after certain opposition in this Assembly. He was here a considerable time before he pitched his tent in Green and Bonne Bays. What did we find for steam drifters? Two western boats sailing up in Bay of Islands and Bonne Bay with a foresail and mainsil jogging along towing nets behind them. This isthe great industry we were told at election time was going to be reorganized by the Government if returned to power. The net result of it all was that the herring fishery was seriously hampered.

Purchasers protested against the quality of herring marketed and I can give an explanation because I was in New York when something of this kind happened. I am glad to see from the speech from the throne this matter is going to be taken up again and I hope that when it is taken up again and I hope that when it is taken up this time something beneficial will be done, and that he will not be long in the position we are in to-day in which we find the country with none of the herring markets controlled by us during the war, practically ruined through our own fault. Perhaps I will be also blamed as I was one of the government of the time. Well I am prepared to accept responsibility. It is a good idea to see that a step is to be taken to have Newfoundland suitably represented in the fish markets by a commissioner or an agent. A man should be sent as an agent to Europe, Canada, South America, and the United States. I take it, it is the right thing to do. It is a step in the right direction. I think it was about thirty years ago that Messrs. Goodridge and Perez were sent to South America and after they handed in their report nothing further was done in the matter. According to the speech from the throne something is going to be done to protect our interests in the foreign markets and the fish that is shipped there. I hope that when the minister hands down this bill he will outline how he proposes to put it into effect. I take it that it is going to cost a lot of money to send men, but I say this, that we will get value for our money if we get the right men to send and they do their duty. Capt. John Lewis was sent to Gibraltar and did great service and saved a lot of money fro the country while the department was under the charge of Sir John Crosbie. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were saved to this colony. Having proof that he had accomplished his mission, there is no reason why we should not have an agent and representative in each and every fish centre on the other side of the water, as well as Canada, the United States, and South America. The United States would be a great market for our fish, but we cannot get it while the present system of curing fish is continued, and while that continues we are not going to get a market there for our dry codfish in the manner in which it is shipped. The old members of this house know the history of the Mackinson codfish process. These dry fish have to go through a certain process before they are fit for consumption. You have got to take it and wash it and then change the water on it quickly, and unless this is done, it will get in a stench which is objectionable, but if you water the fish and change the water, then, in about thirty or forty hours, it ought to be sufficiently fresh for food. In America, if you get some of this fish and put it in water and then place it in the hands of inexperienced persons, the authorities would come round and have the party arrested. This is correct, and it is no joke. When I was in America in the basement of a hotel I put some of the dry cod in some water and the manager came along and said "that stinks." This fish was perfect. Now when the American fishermen catch their fish they shovel it over with salt. The fish absorbs all the salt possible. Putting it in boats and turning water on it does not take the salt out of it. It is prepared by being allowed to compress itself by its own weight and is then laid on a flake and later put in three or four pound boxes and sent throughout the States. This fish is not attractive to a Newfoundlander at first trial, but after a few meals you will like it just as well as our shore fish. It must be recognized that under the present system we can never get our fish on the American market. When our fish reaches Brazil it is all cemented together. Do we intend to have at the end of the present year a fishery as successful as before. On this point I was talking before noon. We are going to have a number of Frenchmen competing. While the war was on everything on the other side was closed down as far as fish was concerned. Take the Frenchmen who are going to be our great competitors. Quite a lot of them are, or, at least, will be fishing on the Grand Banks this year. I learned from Frenchmen from St. Pierre, when I met at Halifax, that France is sending out here this year sixty-five or seventy new trawlers. This fishery we know nothing about. Some years ago a trawler was brought to Bowring Bros. from Grimsby. She was a lovely boat. about five hundred tons, and was placed in the command of Captain Jackman, although she had a first class man with her. She had all the necessary equipment. She was used in the fish business, but she no fish as the net was down near the bottom and, of course, the fish were afloat. Later she was in the command of Captain Kennedy, of Conception Bay, and she had no better success. He fished up along the Gulf and other shores but got no fish. Still they are getting fish by the same method on the other side. The French fished down near St. Pierre after this happened, and during the months of July and August they got no fish, until in the later months they discovered what was wrong. When the caplin are in the fish are afloat. The fish do not swim low when caplin are around.

When this trawler of Bowrings came out here they knew nothing about this. She set a contrivance for July and August the same as for the other months of the year. They did nothing, but this year the French are sending 65 or 70 trawlers. Their coaling station will probably be Sydney. Last year one of the trawlers was ready to go across to France, but the captain thought he would have a try at the banks before going. He went out on Sunday and the following Saturday night he returned to St. Pierre with 4000 quintals of fish, filled to the hatches. Canada and the United States will have steam trawlers. If the French are going to be our competitors, as they have been our competitors in the past, and they are going to have steam trawlers, where are we going to be. We are always behind time. Mr. Speaker, we have to go very cautiously with those regulations which have been manufactured by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for his own benefit. We have now on our hands a quarter of a million quintals of fish with the market blocked. We will have the new fish going to the market before half the old is disposed of. The Western fishery this year has been a failure, but last year all the bankers had from 1000 to 1200 quintals each. If the messages which have been read to this House are correct, what is going to happen to our stock of fish? How is the whole situation going to be solved. The price on everything that is imported into the country is going up and the price of our chief product is going down, and may be considerably reduced in price next season. Where are the people going to get the money to buy the necessities of life? The only suggestion we can make to the fishermen of the country is to pack their bags and get out of the country. Why don't the Government put something in the speech that you had in your manifesto last fall. What is your program for the fishermen. I saw the other day by one of the papers that 100 young men were leaving for Canada and the United States by one boat and there were many more leaving shortly. They are leaving because they can get nothing to do in their native country. These men are full of energy and the spirit of progress, and should be given something to do in their own country.

There is a reference in the speech to the survey of ships. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that it is the outside vessels that are being brought in here that are being lost and that are causing so much trouble. Several hundred ships are being brought in here from Lunenburg and Halifax. Now the life of a Lunenburg vessel is from seven to twelve years, but they are generally brought into Newfoundland when they are over that age.

I can ask you, Mr. Speaker, a seafaring man yourself, what in your opinion is the life of the Lunenburg vessel. You know, Sir, it is from seven to ten years. The Newfoundland trade bought up everything they could lay hands on in Lunenburg and Halifax, brought them here and put them into their foreign trade. They were nice looking vessels, but what happened to them. They left here and one by one they went down. They were never as good as the Newfoundland built vessels. It was the Lunenburg vessels that sold the most fish to Lloyd's. I hope Sir, we will see more about this matter than the mere mention of it in the speech, as it demands immediate consideration.

In the creation of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs, the Government found it necessary to remove the Hon. Dr. Robinson, a man who had the confidence of the people of the Colony, and who has it today. When he took hold of that department he put it on a sound basis. He was a man politicians could not easily influence; that was his only crime, and it was for that reason alone the present Government found him out of office. At the same time, Sir, I have implicit confidence in the present occupant of that office. I sat with him for some time on the executive of the National Government, and I know him to be a man worthy of admiration.

The formation of a Department of Education is the next paragraph of the Speech. This is so far shrouded in mystery, but I presume the present Government has taken the heads of the different denominations, who are the present recognized heads of the educational departments, into its confidence and it will be time enough to discuss this when the bill is brought in.

Another paragraph in the Speech is devoted to the reorganization of the Department of Agriculture and Mines, but there is nothing with reference to the industries which come under the direction of this department, namely, mines and minerals, and pulp and paper. I contend, Sir, that here is room in this country for three or four concerns like the Harmsworth Co., and if this is so, why does not the Government get busy and try to get them established here. Look what it would mean to the country. It would give employment to those hundreds of men who cannot make a full living out of the fishery and keep them in the country whilst they now have to go outside in search of employment. If the Government is to do nothing but insert a paragraph of this kind in the Speech from the Throne and sit idly here and then go back to the country after four years, they will not be doing their duty and have no business here at all. We shall be in a position to judge this in time. The same thing applies to our mines and minerals. It is the duty of the Government to supply the ways and means for doing something in this direction, but evidently they do not intend to do anything in the way of explaining those very important resources. The following paragraph relates to our coastal services and railway connection, and reads as follows:

The problem of both coastal and inland transportation, which are of the first importance to the industrial welfare of the country, are receiving most careful consideration at the hands of my ministers, who hope to be in a position to submit for consideration at this session of this Legislature some practical proposals for more efficient service.

This paragraph was written for a purpose and the man who wrote that was scared to come out and say what he intended. Did it strie you before, Mr. Speaker, that this paragraph was put there for a purpose to camouflage the issue. It was a god-send to have railroads when the ice blocked our shores and prevented our ships from getting in with the necessities of life. This railway has done much good, now what is the history of it? I have seen much in the press of what has been happening on the line, but there it is, it's ours, what are you going to do about it?

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—Go to it.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN—Oh, carry on with your Dutch courage.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—British courage.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN—British, not, you. You are a slacker, I'd take off my hat to you if you had British courage. British courage over there (pointing to Small and LeGrow.) But not you.

Now to get back to the railway. What are you going to do about it? That road has been in existence for 2 years. It is a 50 lb. rail and you are running 70 and 880 ton engines over it. It has been scheduled that this railroad would last 20 years with 30 ton engines and it takes a very small sum to tell how long an 80 ton engine will take to wear a 50 lb. rail. Something must be done, we mustn't let the people go across country in cars and come back in boxes, or perhaps be burned and not come back at all. Don't camouflage the issue because you can't, if you are going to tax the people to the tune of several million dollars. The rails, in places, have been worn as flat as an iron hoop, and you can stand a mile away from a moving train and feel the rails moving under your feet from the force of the approaching train. This railway was built under schedule at a time when people had no idea of the conditions of to-day, they knew nothing of war, or the conditions which were imposed upon the company by increased traffic due to it. That railway should be fenced off and you should get busy, as Prime Minister of this country, to put that road in a condition for traffic. You are taking your life in your hands when you cross the country on this line. I will go further and say that many of the bridges now existing were built for 30 or 35 ton engines and to-day we are running 70 and 80 ton engines their cars over them. Now gentlemen, don't talk here for six weeks and close this House without moving in this matter, but a railroad we cannot do without, and it will cost the Government in my estimation ten million dollars, and then you won't have a first class railroad. Some people say now is the time to build a wide guage railroad but to do it would take forty million dollars, and you cannot touch it, but you must remodel the old one. The people are demanding it. Now that we have not the steamers we had a few years ago, and it will take some years to replace them, there is only one answer, and that is, we must have a railroad. When this matter comes up for dissay about it. I don't care who fixes cussion I am going to have further to the railroad. I am going to support what is right and just for the people of the country, and the sooner you get some competent man or corporation to do it, the better. For the accidents that have happened in the past we were blessed, and we were accused of neglecting our duty, which is untrue, now it is in your hands and it is your duty to remedy conditions. I appeal to the leader of the F.P.U. is what I have said is not true. Is it not the duty of the Government to do something quickly? If it is Reid's duty to repair the railway make him do it, and if not, take it and do it yourselves. Get a loan of seven or eight million dollars. That railroad has to be handled by the Government of the day, and if they do not do it, they are not going justice to the people who sent them here. Every industry is held up. You will meet a man and he will say: Have you any pull with Mr. Reid? You say I don't know whether I have or not. Why? And he will tell you he is a month waiting for a car from the Reid Nfld. Co. This is as true as the Gospel which was read on Sunday.

Take the coastal service . The coastal service today is demoralized. I say it is demoralized and I will prove it, and I want to say a word on behalf of the government that has gone out. As members on the other side of the house will remember (because it was part of the proposition when their contract expired), in 1919 Bowring Brothers asked for 100% on passenger rates and freight rates. After some consideration it was decided to make them an offer for the two coastal boats, and Sir John Crosbie as Minister of Shipping asked them their figure. They wanted a fifteen year contract, and when things get back to their normal condition 100% on freight and passenger rates If Bowring Brothers made money out of that coastal contract, and we know they did, how much money would they make under those increases if conditions got back to normal in two or three years. As is known by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries we made an offer of 50% which they refused. We had messages from all the northern districts to give Bowring Brothers the contract as the handling of it by them had been satisfactory, and it was the general sentiment that Bowring Brothers should get thecontract. We sent messages in reply and pointed out to them that Bowring Bros, required 100% on passenger and freight rates, and the response was that we should not tolerate it. We felt the same way, so after some deliberation we decided to make them an offer for the two coastal boats, and Bowring Brothers were approached on the matter, and Sir Edgar Bowring, who was here at the time, offered the two coastal boats for two hundred thousand dollars, which was very reasonable. The Government bought them and they were put under the management of the shipping department, under Sir John Crosbie, and we gave it a trial. We put on the 50% on the old rate, and after some time we found we could make money with only a 50% increase, and right up to the time Sir John Crosbie left that department these boats were in credit at 50%. It was sufficient satisfaction for us to know that we did the right thing by the people of the colony. I make that statement, and the Minister of Shipping can contradict it if he will. And today we find that those two boats, running under the present management will require over 100% to square their deficit. If that is correct I am sorry for the head of that department. There is no reason why he should not do as much in that department as any other man. I don't expect as much from him as from Sir John Crosbie, but Sir John Crosbie was well in credit when he left that department. Now. than, where are we today on coastal boats.

Take the Reid Nfld. Co., there are two of them gone. Take the Portia. She is up at the dock with the bottom out of her. Take the Prospero. I don't know how she is now, but I know she had an accident some time ago at Lewisburg. I understand there is another coastal service in vogue at the present time that we know nothing about; that there is a boat running from St. John's to Grand Bank. How much is being paid for this service I don't know or what the arrangements are.

MINISTER OF SHIPPING—She is paid a small subsidy for the freight and passengers .

SIR M. P. CASHIN—What subsidy is she receiving.

MINISTER OF SHIPPING—I don't just remember, but I will get the information for you.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—There are other parts of this Island just as deserving as Grand Bank and Fortune. There are parts of Placentia Bay and the Southern Shore which are just as much entitled to this service. When this matter comes before the house I will have more to say on it. I don't think it is fair that a steamer should be taken and paid for out of the public funds of the colony, and sent direct to any one port. The position of the coastal service of today is different altogether. It appears to me it is going backward instead of forward.

Now what is the coal situation in this city today. It is that several industries are held up and steamers are held up here with not a lump of coal in town to give them. No such thing happened in this colony during the five years of the war. There was no shortage in the provisions or any other line, much less coal. While we were fighting the bye-election last fall we saw what was coming and we told the people of St. John's West that coal would be $18 a ton by the end of March. We were laughed at and ridiculed. There must be an answer to it. There is lots of coal in Sydney and lots of tonnage to bring it here. What has the minister in charge to say about this matter? Coal advanced in price in thec ity because of the shortage. And then if you did get coal after paying $19 a ton for it, one wouldn't mind, but you can shovel out the ashes as fast as you can shovel in the coal. Everybody is complaining. Even if we were dishonest, as alleged, we gave the warning to the people of St. John's. There is not a lump of coal in the city today with the ice in as far as Cape St. Francis. I would like to ask the minister of shipping what coal is now en route to this country?

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—No grave fears need be felt.

SIR M..P. CASHIN:—Is it not your duty to find out if there is any coming and if you do not know how you should ask some other member of the government to show you. If you had consulted Sir John Crosbie he could have chartered you a vessel inside of 48 hours. You were fooling with the Jobs in New York for a cargo of coal that fizzled out. You have no confidence in those who run against you for a seat in this house, and that is why you would not consult any of those gentlemen. What a lovely spectacle we have in this house tonight as minister of Shipping? The Shipping Department has neither steamer coming with coal nor do they know where to get a steamer. If all the other Departments are being conducted as well as that one, it would have been better for the people of this country to realize that "the devils they knew were better than the devils that they didn't know." But when we were there they had a right to keep us there. What a lovely position to be in; not a lump of coal for any industry or for household purposes, or for any strange steamer that might happen to drop in here to-morrow. The sealing steamers, after burning all their coal, are all back. Why not secure some of them?

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—The firemen refused to go.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Why not pay the firemen. Why not the Government take the steamers from the owners, and you pay the firemen; we want the coal. That is what we did. The position is ridiculous with regard to the firemen and that cannot be defended by any individual member in this House. In New York there are thousands of tons of coal that could be bought at $9.40 a ton, but you were not big enough to rise to the occasion to get this coal. That is one of the things that accounts for Water Street looking so despondent to-day. From one end to the other you can see marked depression on every man's face. Every broker will tell you that there is no business doing, whereas last year there was plenty. There must be a reason for it. The people on this or the other side of the water were not unanimous last year in opposition to fish regulations, now the position is the reverse. Messages have been received by Sir John Crosbie and other messages have been received within the past twenty-four hours that these regulations have ruined us. Regarding the coal problem again, why does not the Minister of Shipping go to Canada or the United States to get steamers to try and relieve the present shortage. When I was in Halifax recently there were 15 wooden ships there and several of them could be chartered for St. John's And at Sydney I was told by Mr. Dickie, one of the members of the Dominion Iron & Steel Company, that it was not impossible to get a steamer. t appears that nobody seems to care .bout the coal shortage in the colony. Take up the government papers in the afternoons and you will not find a word in them about the coal shortage, but you will find plenty of political abuse and about how Cashin is trying to deceive the people. I repeat that the minister of shipping is not doing his duty, instead of being here listening to me he should be getting a coal cargo. I hope I am not too harsh on the minister, but harsh measures require hard remedies, and I am appealing to him on behalf of the people of St. John's and those represented by the twelve members who are backing me in this house. There is a certain portion of the people of the Island backing us and if we cannot do anything ourselves, we have to send out our message of warning through the reporter's box. Now listen to this from the speech from the throne:

Quite recently a company has been incorporated for the purpose of the erection of a large number of working men's homes. The company hopes that as many as thirty houses at a cost not exceeding $2,000 each will be constructed during the present year, and my ministers anticipate that application will be made by the company to the legislature for certain concessions to assist them in their philanthropic activities."

Can you get anything funnier than that for comic opera? Thirty houses are going to be built in St. John's for $2,000 each. The other day one house was purchased in the city for $60,000, and here in the speech from the throne we are told that the government are in touch with a company incorporated to relieve the workingman in St. John's

What is the state of affairs in St. John's to-day? You all can see it as well as I can. Take St. John's West near the Cross Roads; on your way entering the city cast your left eye and you will see Galagay's Range and then when you arrive in town pick up the speech from the throne and see what the government of the day is going to do, and then sit down and think it over. To take this in earnest, Sir, the part of the Speech from the Throne dealing with the housing problem I would call a hoax. What does it mean? A guarantee of $60,000 to build houses for the poor of St. John's. The Government should come in here and ask to raise a half million dollars so that the people might have decent homes. During the general election last year I was asked by two prominent gentlemen of St. John's West to go into a couple of houses, and I can say that I did not expect to see such dire poverty. I never had any idea that people lived in such hovels in St. John's West. The sight just turned me right about, and I am in a position that if the Minister of Finance came in here and asked authority to raise half million dollars to help out the poor people of St. John's we would give the matter unanimous support. If the Government do not see fit to introduce such a measure so that they can raise thirty thousand dollars in interest to relieve the poor people of St. John's they are not awake to their responsibility. Why not remodel the whole city? In other cities what do we find? The people are not allowed to live in hovels like those in which the people of St. John's West are existing in today. To take up the Speech from the Throne and find a paragraph written by the Prime Minister of the day, representative for St. John's West, (maybe misrepresents it), telling us that a company is to be incorporated to raise $60,000 to build houses for the poor of St. John's West. Can we conceive anything more ridiculous? I am sure the Member for Bonavista did not consent to that. I have more confidence in him. I know he has more sense than to endorse a paragraph like that to be handed down in the Speech from the Throne. $60,000. What can be meant to do? The ordinary planter, why Mr. Cheeseman is handing out in supplies to the men on the West Coast practically $60,000, and we are asked by the Government through the Speech from the Throne to come in here and consider the vote of $60,000 for the erection of workingmen's homes in St. John's West. $60,000 asked for the erection of thirty houses, any one not exceeding two thousand dollars in cost, and some other concessions to help them to carry out their philanthropic effort. It is hard to bring down the house in laughter when that sentence cannot do so. Then when this matter comes up before the House I am going to ask the House to reconsider the bill. And I know that I would be backed by every man on this side of the House when I would ask that at least $500,000 be guaranteed by this Government. I may be told that the interest on this loan would come out of the general revenue of the Colony. Well I admit it, and let every one from coast to coast pay their proportion of it. I am prepared to say that the people will be satisfied to pay the interest on $1,000,000. And we will get our returns for it. We do not know what these returns will be. They will be indirect. We are not experts in that direction, but if we receive our returns by saving hundreds of lives of children that go to an early grave are we not receiving our returns for that money and the general public of the Colony will be doing a philanthropic work in relieving the poor people of St. John's West from the existing conditions as we have them at the present time. It is up to the Government to get busy and relieve the depression that is among us at the present time. Laborers of St. John's are walking the streets. Why not get them to work of this kind? These measures should be taken immediately and gone right into if the Government of the day are earnest in carrying out their obligations to the voters of the country, but it looks as if it is not in earnest, and I know there are men on the other side of the House who would today be on this side of the House if I had accepted their terms.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—I would not be on that side under any condition.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN: — Mr. Brownrigg ought to procure a book of the rules and regulations of the house and peruse them, and conduct himself in accordance with the same, and not in jumping up like a jack-in-the-box.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—The Prime Minister will please sit down and not be interfering with the authority and prestige of the first commoner of the land. Conduct yourself, sir, and do not be rising up here and showing your impertinence for which you are characterized. You have quite a lot of gall. How dare you dictate to the chair and tell me I am out of order. You can take all the applause you can get. I never play to the galleries.

Mr. Speaker, I was going on to say when the hour was called for recess that some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House would be sitting on the Opposition benches on this side of the House if they had their own way. I referred to the Minister of Finance and Customs as being a victim of circumstances. It is no secret. I give it to the public for what it is worth, because some of my friends assured me the allegiance of the Hon. Minister of Finance if I would promise him the job he now holds. I met him and he said he was prepared to come to the country with my party and support my policy with my party if I would pledge myself to give him the position he now holds. I simply told him that I was not prepared to make any promises. So much for the sincerity of the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House.

I was one of the rank and file when the Hon. Prime Minister was defeated as a member for Trinity Bay District and he sat in the Executive with me under Sir E. P. Morris in 1908. He was defeated in 1913 and came back and that gentleman, the reformer of to-day, was taken by the hand and placed in the Upper Chamber, and until the summer of 1917 was a member of the Executive Government with the office of Minister of Justice, later becoming Colonial Secretary under the National Government which he retained until the formation of the Lloyd Administration in 1918. What I want to impress on the House to-night is that I was only a member of that amalgamation since 1917. Previous to that time some of the gentlemen on the other side of the House to-night were members of the original Government. But the amalgamation was done for a purpose. The argument was that opposition and government should unite and eliminate all difference of opinion, that the welfare of the Empire was at stake and that the best possible should be done to uphold the honor and patriotic principles of the colony. We had confidence in Sir Edward Morris and we realized that what he was saying was correct. We came together and worked side by side right down until the finish of the war. We did everything possible, tackling propositions day after day and month after month until we finally won out.

Throughout all that amalgamated period and up to the time Sir Edward Morris left Newfoundland we have had many changes, but I want to impress upon the House to-night that this same Prime Minister to-night was a Member of the Executive Government all down through those years. After he was defeated in Trinity in 1913 he was put in the Upper House as Minister of Justice and he was denounced by his then opponents who are now his colleagues, that it was not constitutional that he should be allowed to retain his seat in the Upper House. We retained him as Minister of Justice until Sir Edward Morris bargained with the Opposition Party. Then Sir William Lloyd claimed the Minister of Justice post and the Colonial Secretaryship went to the present Prime Minister. Now I want to draw your attention to-night to the statements and charges made in the press within the past twelve months by this individual against Crosbie, Cashin, Bennett, Higgins and others, charges not from an opponent, not from a sincere man who is prepared to come before the Colony for a clean purpose. This man ratted from us after eight or ten years and that is one of the principal reasons why he is not sincere. He ratted from us when Morris left and Sir William Lloyd was called upon to form a ministry. The hon. gentleman who is seeking to be Prime Minister and thinks he is, had he been straight would have met with more success and accomplished more than he has. After Morris's retirement I remember the day the present Prime Minister called at my house and asked my support to place him in the position that he is in to-day. My answer was, and I fear no contradiction: "Squires you played me false and dirty and I am not prepared to support you."

He took his hat and flew from my house. Since then he saw fit to come before the people of this Colony for the position of Prime Minister. I submit and bow to their judgment. When that gentleman was Minister of Justice and Colonial Secretary he was intimately acquainted with the affairs of the Finance Department, why did he not paint me as black then as he did within the past six months? If he saw anything wrong in connection with my Department then why did he not report me to the Prime Minister of the day that I was playing wrong and that I was dishonest and crooked? As Minister of Justice he stabbed me in the back and I was not prepared to support a man of that calibre. He owns and controls The Daily Star paper, which has held me up to the country during the past six months by its base, low and contemptible utterances. If I was the crook that he represented me to be, why did he not report me to the Government long ago. I know that he tries to take advantage of a forgetful people and spring it upon them that he is something new in politics. The reason I am making these statements to-night is that I owe it to myself and to the people of Ferryland District who have implicit confidence in me. I fear no enquiry into my record as a public man. Charges have also been made against other members on this side. Keep on, and if you can find anything I am prepared to take my medicine, but I will take nothing lying down from anyone in this House or outside of it.

Again after the amalgamated party was formed we took particular care to safeguard the soldiers and sailors who were fighting our battles overseas. We were never found wanting when just claims were to be paid them. And now, while we were in charge and the present Prime Minister was associated with us, a claim for 3 or 4 hundred thousand dollars due the Reid Company, on account of branch railroads, came before us. These railroads were started ten years ago. The hon. leader of the F.P.U. was a member of that Government. A committee was appointed and certain correspondence was exchanged between the contractor and the Government.

The Governor knows the whole story, but there is nothing on record. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, do you think it is fair? Now, we don't want you to come back in your papers tomorrow and villify us for making this statement. It will be interesting to hear you both give a satisfactory explanation of how this came to be. I don't want to hang on to this matter all night. I have other matters of sufficient importance to warrant my attention, but I just want to jog your memory. It is not on record but it is my duty, being the oldest politician in this House to-night. I have committed many sins during the past 28 years of my public life and I am now carrying the political sins of my party upon my shoulders.

Just one or two other items I want to refer to, Mr. Speaker, before I take my seat. To-day I have dealt with the coal situation, the food situation, and the fishery, but there's one or two other minor incidents in connection with the promises made by the Government of the present day that I see no mention of in the Speech from the Throne.

Now what move, Mr. Speaker, has been made in the question of accommodation. The hospitals to-day are overcrowded. The asylums are overcrowded. People are living in boarding houses when they should be in hospital receiving medical treatment. We made a move in this direction about 18 months ago and built a sanitarium. Twelve months ago our attention was called to the condition of the asylum for the insane. I went in there and I saw that the report sent in was not a bit exaggerated. I came out and acquainted my colleagues of the terrible conditions under which the inmates of that institution were existing, 4 and 5 persons living in one room with dimensions of probably eight feet by twelve. It is a crying shame to have those poor unfortunates who were afflicted by God living under such conditions. Inside of 48 hours we got busy and ordered that an addition be built to the institution to accommodate 100 persons.

If I was able to-night to get back to review the many things we have to our credit during our term of office it would take me a long time. Now, gentlemen, take a car and go into the asylum. I will put one or two cars at your disposal, and have a look at it. I ask you one and all to take a look at that institution and when you come back I want you to implore your Government to put it back on a sound decent basis. The Poor House is just the same. The inmates there are tumbling over themselves ilke so many sardines in a tin. You will pull them out and use their votes and put them back again. How many poor miserable remnants of humanity up there at the present time that you have not visited except when you wanted their votes?

Thre are many other things, gentlemen that I want to draw your attention to-night. I would like to know what is being done about the Commercial Cable Company to recover that $200,000 they still owe the Colony. We brought a case against them in the Supreme Court here and we won, they appealed and we won it, and now they have sent their case to the Privy Council in England. Now what are you doing about that. I should think there is upwards of $250,000 now due us from the Commercial Cable Co. If we lose that case we lose the $250,000 and we lose also the taxes in the future. The Anglo-American Co. refused to pay their taxes, but when proceedings were taken against the Commercial Co. the Anglo came across with the goods and paid $97,000. Now if we lose that case there are ten chances to one that we will also have to pay back to the Anglo that $97,000. In the meantime we are spending money in bringing down auditors and lying down to the fact that the best lawyer in the country is at the present time needed in England to fight our case against the Commercial Cable Co. You will not have done justice to the Colony or to the people of this Colony if you don't move in the matter.

I think I have fairly well reviewed the Speech from the Throne and have come to the same conclusion as my colleagues, that it is the baldest document of its sort ever handed down in this House. Not one section of it is worthy of the Government of the day. There is nothing here about railroads. The clause with reference to housing the poor is nothing else but a burlesque. This is another of the promises made by the Prime Minister and his colleague in St. John's West in the bye-election. It does not give a guarantee that the Government are going to pay the interest on the money. It is the duty of the Government to take hold of this matter and guarantee the interest on a loan of say a million dollars. In this city from one end of it to the other there are families of five, six and seven existing in one room and what are you going to do about it. In what other part of the Island is this thing going on to-night I ask? Here in the capital city we have a shocking condition of affairs in the direction mentioned although we are surrounded by many people who are interested in the advancement of humanity. Tomorrow if an epidemic breaks out how much money will be spent on it. Why are you not big enough to go and get a loan of this money to build proper houses for the poor to live in. Hundreds of men are going around the city idle and they will be leaving here altogether to look for employment if things go on as they are much longer. Why not get a loan of a half million dollars, which at five per cent would only mean an interest of $25,000 a year. We are very sorry also that there is nothing foreshadowed in the Speech from the Throne to deal with the high cost of living.

Before taking my seat I move the following amendment that the following words be added to the Address in Reply:

"We are sorry in view of the conditions prevailing throughout the country as regards the high cost of living that His Excellency's speech foreshadowed no action on the part of the Government with reference to the prices of the necessaries of life."

MR. SINNOTT:—I beg leave to second the amendment.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. member for Placentia has spoken and he cannot speak a second time.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that the hon. member for Placentia is in order. Every member who has taken part in the debate spoke on the original motion and can now speak on the amendment. I will refer you to May's Parliamentary Practice.

For my first reference look at page 320 Mays Parliamentary Practice, 11th edition. For my other point see page 296. (Reads.) Mr. Speaker, you may look in your book while I am looking in mine. Any member may speak to the same question or to the amendment provided it is being proposed by a member other than himself. It is a very definite pronouncement and I want to put it on record. A member may speak to a new question. A member who has spoken on the original question may speak to the amendment. He can propose the amendment before he has taken his seat. A man who has spoken on the original question cannot get up and move an amendment as he has forfeited his right of speaking again. In this particular case the Leader of the Opposition has introduced a new question and he has made an amendment to that and so every member in the House can speak to the amendment. No one can move an amendment having already spoken. I have a recollection on that point is laid down clearer in Bourmot. I shall submit it to my learned friend.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, in reference to the quotations made by my learned friend, the member for St. John's East, I would like to make some quotation in support of my point of order and in opposition to his. In the first place I quite agree that the hon. member for Placentia and St. Mary's may speak to an amendment before the House although he had spoken to the original question. But the amendment must be before the House. Now an amendment is not before the House until it has been moved and seconded. I may refer my learned friend to rules 74 and 76. Now then a member who has already spoken cannot move another amendment which is the meaning of the quotation given by the other side of the House. A member who has already spoken to the original question has no right to rise again to propose an amendment or an adjournment of the House or of debate, though he can rise to speak to new questions made by other members. As I said before the moving of a motion does not bring it before the House and any man who has already spoken cannot speak again.

MR. HIGGINS:—What about the accepted principle that the mover and seconder are not parties to the question?

Mr. Speaker ruled that the amendment not being seconded was not before the chair.

HON. THE MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I hope that I will not take up too much of the time of the House in dealing with the few matters to which I wish to refer. During the past few days, references have been made to matters concerning my Department, and I now wish to inform the House as to the true positions with regard to these.

First of all, Sir, however, I wish to offer my hearty congratulations to you upon the honour that has been done you by your election to the high position you now occupy, and I trust, Sir, that during our four years stay here you will always show that fairness which your decisions thus far show you possess. I also wish to congratulate the Mover and Seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I feel sure that the whole country when they read their able addresses will fully approve of the force of their remarks, and I am confident that in future years when other members are tired of performing this duty, that we shall be able to call on them again.

My Hon. Friend Sir Michael Cashin in speaking upon the subject of the address this afternoon, mentioned matters personal in relation to cargoes of fish that I have shipped to foreign markets. He stated that it was reported that I wanted to sell my own cargoes and used my position and influence to forward the Trading Company's interests. In reply, I state that from a period just previous to the time the Fish Regulations came in force up to the present day, I shipped seven cargoes of fish across, and so far I have only been paid the full value of two of them. Out of 200,000 quintals of fish sold in Portugal since the Regulations, I sold one cargo. In the light of these facts you can see that I have not used my position as Minister of Marine and Fisheries to benefit myself or the Trading Company, as we are in no better position as regards sales than many other shippers, although our reputation for fish of good quality is generally recognized.

Another remark made tonight by my Hon. Friend, the Leader of the Opposition, was in connection with the Circulars sent to our Councils in 1918. I often wonder when I read those Circulars how I came to write them so well and gauged the situation so accurately.

At the time the Conscription Act was being drafted, the whole country was on fire over Conscription. We all knew that three-fourths of the country did not want Conscription, and I knew that I had to cast in my lot with the Government and ensure the passing of the Act, thus risking the work of my life and my public career. I knew what I would have to face, especially from my opponents; I knew that many of my supporters objected, but I ventured all on the principle of "Empire first."

That Circular was written at my desk in this House immediately after the passing of the Conscription Act in this House. It was hastily written, but upon its face it bears the imprint of sincerity and determination to overcome and endure. That Bill went up to the Upper House where it was considerably amended. That Circular can be read and re-read in the House for the next fifty years by friend or foe, but never will it reflect upon the man who wrote it.

Another matter that has come up for much discussion by the members of the House in commenting on the Speech from the Throne is the matter of the Fish Regulations. Now I want to say a few words in explanation of these Regulations. During October 1918, great annoyance was caused fish exporters in this country by the establishment in Italy of a body or fish dealers who banded together with the intention of handling all imports of fish to that country. This combine was known as the Consorzio. The Government here protested against its formation or construction, but nothing was done to eliminate the trust. I went to Italy in the winter of 1919 and interviewed the Italian Government and the President of the Consorzio. I asked them to abolish the Consorzio, as it was unfair to an ally and detrimental to the commercial interests of a British Colony, and we didn't want to do wrong towards them in asking unjust prices for our fish; but my efforts were fruitless. This Consorzio last spring refused to allow Newfoundland fish to enter Italy, and ordered several of our vessels, loaded with fish, out of Italian ports, which were then sent to Mr. Hawes, Alicante.

Conditions were the same all the summer, and things began to look serious as the time for the buying of fish arrived.

The ex-Minister of Shipping and the trade kept up the fight with them continuously, and after four months' fight they gave in and agreed to buy on terms submitted by the trade. They then bought 18,000 or 20,000 quintals from Mr. Hawes at 95/- cash against documents. Just at the time when everything seemed to be going well, in steps Mr. Munn, offering two or three cargoes at a reduction of 10/- per quintal. Mr. Munn did not know what Mr. Hawes sold that fish at, and made offers without knowing the exact conditions.

Here was a case of an irresponsible destroying the 4 months' work of the trade and Government in fighting the Italian Combine in the interests of a square deal for Newfoundland. Had Mr. Earle or Mr. Munn known the exact conditions, probably they would have stood out for the price obtained by Mr. Hawes. They rushed in where angels feared to tread and destroyed the fabric built up after months of contest, and the Consorzio triumphed. If Mr. Munn cut prices in one day ten shillings, what was there to prevent someone else from cutting the price another five shillings the next day or next week? The Consorzio, finding Newfoundland dealers, all to pieces, one working against the other, endeavoured to use one against the other, and finding all with cold feet they thought they could buy at their own prices. A big slump in Italy meant a big slump in all markets, for all eyes were then turned towards Italy. I will refer later to Mr. Earle's statement of profits at 85 shillings.

At this time the old Government were defeated in Newfoundland and we came into power. The trade immediately placed the situation before me, and I saw how useless it would be to revert to the old tactics of my Hon. Friend, the ex-Minister of Shipping, who tried to work by persuasion, but failed; and I resolved to take action, under the Import and Export Act, and fix the prices of fish in all markets by law. This was the beginning of fish regulations.

I was then informed that a firm in Spain had sent Circular Letters out to the Spanish fish dealers offering fish at 78/- that was then selling at about 90/- to 95/-. So Spain was then brought into the scope of Regulations to prevent a big slump there. Portugal was then in a desperate condition, and some had cold feet and were offering fish at any price or rushing it into the hands of consignees to be sold at a sacrifice. We held those at bay and fixed a price that only entitled the shippers to come out without loss. Confidence was restored, and I am more resolved than ever that the Regulations are to be maintained, and I consider the results fully justified the action.

Mr. Hawes was recommended as a suitable man to handle the Italian situation; he was experienced in the European markets, was an able, shrewd man, highly capable for the work, and I agreed that he should be given the necessary power to deal with Italy. He accomplished a great work for us in Italy soon after his arrival there, and backed by all the authority we could secure for him, he succeeded in making a binding contract with the Consorzio. That contract saved the country from disaster, as its effect was felt in all the markets. When he made the contract 53 Italian liras were equivalent to a pound, only a week or two later Italian exchange went bad, and had we not a contract, the price must have declined 10/- per quintal in a few days. The Italians purchased at 85/- with exchange at 53, it soon went to 63 and on to 83. The fish they bought at 85/- soon cost them, through low exchange, 130/-. You will perceive what this means to the poor Italians, and what conditions prevail there. Had Mr. Hawes not contracted when he did, our fish could not have sold in Italy two weeks after at more than 70/-.

The exchange situation is overlooked by those who find fault with the Regulations. The big injurious factor in Portugal and Italy is the alarming low rate of exchange. In Portugal, 80/- to us means 240/- to the Portuguese buyers, as our dollar is worth three of their money. Fancy Portugal taking over half a million quintals of our fish—the largest buyers in the world—and paying 240/- of their money for a quintal of fish.

We sold 150,000 qtls. by that Hawes agreement, but we have not been able to find the necessary fish suitable for the Italian requirements, and we could have disposed of 50,000 qtls. more if we could have produced the right quality of fish. It was not to be had. The bank fish on the West Coast was not suitable. The Italian market requires small, hard cured, merchantable fish—something like the Brazil requirements, except Italian must be smooth and not salty, while Brazil takes rough and salty. This is a lesson to us respecting improved cure and the proper assortment of fish for the several markets, which I will refer to later.

One of the best things I think I ever did was by going to Europe this past winter, because I became acquainted with conditions exactly as they existed, and am now in the position to adjust any contingency that may arise, and that I think would be suitable and for the betterment of the Trade of this Dominion.

The position that I occupy in this Government is an important and a strong one. When I propose regulaery and the Government is not prepared to accept, then I will walk out of the Government. I am not going to propose anything that will be detrimental to the people of the country or the Trade thereof; nor am I going to allow anyone to dictate to me as to what my duties are; and when I made up my mind to make regulations governing the price of fish, I intended sincerely to put them through as long as I believed they benefitted the people of the country. I assure you again, Mr. Speaker, that I will never put any regulations in force or be the means of promoting or recommending any regulation that will in any way be injurious to the Trade or to the fishermen, whom I represent. And let me say, that earnest and energetic as I appear to be, my chief interest is in the men who sent me to this House.

If I can see a certain fixed price paid for fish in the foreign markets, I will know pretty well what should be paid for fish locally. The exporters here have not been alive to their trade responsibilities in marketing fish for years past; fish shipping has been a gamble, pure and simple. An exporter may be a millionaire one year and in poverty the next. We want to protect ourselves against the past methods. I have been thinking this matter over for many years; I have listened to men interested in this subject during the past ten years; I have attended meetings of fish shippers where they fixed the price on fish one day and the very next offered fish at a less price. My Honourable friend, Sir John Crosbie knows that he tried in 1918 and 1919 to arrange prices and adjust conditions in order that we might get the best possible price for our products. Meetings were held day after day and night after night, and after arranging matters one day, a man who sat on that very committee would on the next day be the first to break the arrangement. I have an experience that my connection with the Shipping and Fishery Departments afforded, and that experience has taught me that I should do something never attempted before to place the business of exporting fish on a sound basis that would reduce considerably the risks so generally shouldered under the old system of shipping on consignments.

If Sir John Crosbie were in my place and his Party in Office, he probably would be enforcing similar regulations, based on the experience of past years.

If we had allowed the combine in Italy to fix the price on our Newfoundland fish, how could we hope to handle the situation that confronted us? Could we expect Mr. Hawes to sell at 95/- per quintal while another man without hesitation would have sold at 85/-, and yet another with banks running after him for advances selling at 80/-. No one would buy fish unless convinced that prices were down to rock bottom. Who then would be anxious to buy if prices were cut 10/- in one day? Such buyers would hold off and wait until the irresponsibles had tired of cutting under each other.

I sold fish in Greece this year for 103/- and within a week, a man in this country offered fish at 80/-. Now why sell at 80/- when 103/- was obtainable? The market was gradually dropping until it declined to 79/-, when we stepped into the breach and said that the price for Greece must be 95/- and we sold as much fish in Greece this year at the regulation price as we did last year and received cash against documents. With regard to Greece for next year, we are going to put a Trade Commissioner there and we will have a man from Newfoundland to look after our interests. The consumption in Greece during the past five years has increased 100 per cent. or from 50,000 qtls. to 100,000 qtls. How can we expect buyers in Greece to purchase outright if one buyer pays 103/- one week and find his competitor buying the following week at80/-. If the buyers knew that all would have to purchase at a fixed maintained price, they would willingly buy, knowing that they could not be undersold and profits instead of losses would result.

I do not need to labor this point, as all interested can easily perceive what benefit must ensue to buyer and seller by such an arrangement. Arrangement by consent failed utterly and we had to take the bull by the horns and fix a price by law. The cure was drastic, but it was absolutely necessary, and in my opinion the results have fully justified the steps taken. There can be no looking back —onward and forward must be our watchword. There need be no cold feet—reasonable values will be forthcoming the coming season, and under our Regulations all will fare alike.

A standard article must be produced and every cargo must bear the stamp of quality that will ensure our fish a market equally as favourable as any competitor. I am a believer in outright sales, and if that system is to work satisfactorily we must supply a quality of fish that will prove a credit to the Colony.

We expected at the time of the elections that fish would go down to $5 or $6 per quintal. We all looked towards Italy. We had one hundred and fifty thousand quintals of Shore and one hundred and fifty thousand quintals of Labrador soft that should be sold in Italy. Spain, Portugal and Brazil knew that Italy was not buying, and they would not buy either; they held off hoping the price would decline and fish would be had at their own price. That was the position. Everyone locally were buying some fish, and our biggest buyers were buying as little as possible. I was nervous all last fall, and I daresay the Honourable the then Prime Minister was too. All here knew of the serious Italian situation, and all shuddered with the thought of what would happen if Italy held off. I asked the Government to convene a conference of the Trade to consider the situation, but to no avail. All realized that if Italy held off every market would follow suit. Already three months' consumption had been lost in Italy. That in itself meant the loss of sales amounting to 100,000 quintals. With this situation confronting us, there was no other course open but that adopted by selecting our best man to handle the Italian situation. That course saved the country from a calamity and has placed at least one million four hundred thousand dollars in the pockets of the exporters to date.

There was a statement made in the Upper House a few days ago that we lost three million dollars on fish this year, through the operation of the Regulations. I defy that man to prove that even one penny was lost on fish this year through the Regulations. I throw out the challenge to him; his statement was unfounded and untrue. He knew it to be such when he uttered it. Men who represent Water Street and who make such statements without facts to substantiate them, are a menace to the best interests of the country and are unfit to be in the Upper House. In my younger days in this House, I might have said some silly things in the course of a speech, but you never yet heard me say anything of a serious nature without proofs.

Do you know that when we undertook the work of the Regulations, fish was quoted at 96|— in Brazil. For weeks before we came into power, Brazil prices held at 96|—, and no sales were being made. The Brazilian buyers held off. They thought fish was going to be cheaper. They had their agents here in the persons of Messrs. Walter Monroe and Charles Duder, and everything that was done here in the fish business was soon known in Brazil. Now, do you know that this time last year there was, in the city of St. John's, one hundred and ten thousand quintals of Brazilian fish and to-day there is not forty thousand. Almost all this forty thousand has been sold at about 110|—. Last year this time that market was overstocked with old fish, and remained so up to the end of September. This year Brazil will not hold a drum of old fish after October, and when the new fish comes in during September, Brazil will be paying at least 110|— for its supplies. A big contrast with last October, when no sales could be made even at 96|—.

In the past Brazilian firms used to say "send us your fish and we will pay you by a ninety days draft payable about six months after the receipt of the fish." In other words, it frequently happened that six months elapsed before the shipper of the fish received his money in London. This year, 90 per cent is paid before the fish leaves port, and out of 200,000 qtls. shipped so far this season not a penny's loss for claims has been made, and most all the shippers have received cash in full.

In future there is to be an inspection on fish for Brazil and nobody is going to get around it. I am surprised that the merchants of this country did not inaugurate this policy of inspection and payment twenty years ago. If they had, one firm would not have lost two hundred thousand dollars the year past on three cargoes of fish shipped to Brazil. On each drum of fish shipped to Brazil we have given the shipper two dollars through the regulations that I feel sure would not be theirs had there been no regulations.

We sold in Greece since the Regulations were enforced fifty thousand quintals of fish and at ten shillings more than we would have got if we did not try and keep shippers of fish protected.

Portugal to date has taken sixty seven thousand quintals of fish more this year than last year. Since July 1st, Portugal has taken four hundred and seventy thousand quintals of fish, whereas for the previous twelve months only four hundred and seven thousand qtls. were shipped there. Only forty thousand quintals of Oporto fish remain in Newfoundland to-day, and Portugal consumes on the average forty thousand quintals of fish per month. There are about sixty thousand quintals in Portugal and forty here, and there will be no new fish to any extent till September, when they will be able to get the usual supply. We were told of a man who sold a cargo at seventy-six shillings and defied the regulations; I could have sold that cargo through our Trade Commissioner at 81/- cash. There have been eleven cargoes sold there outright at 81/-; those bought at our price. The man who sold for 76/- broke the regulations and lost a dollar per quintal. I am doing my best for the country's welfare, and here is an exporter underselling, injuring himself and making it impossible to sell at 81/-. Who expects Oporto or Lisbon to buy outright at 81/- if, during the next day or week, someone buys at five shillings less. We cannot do sound business on such a basis. The Portuguese situation is at present fairly satisfactory—yesterday one of our shippers was instructed to draw at the rate of 60/- per quintal on an Oporto cargo. This is an indication of outright selling. We cannot sell outright and consign at the same time if we want satisfactory returns. No buyers will be anxious to buy outright at 80/- if another from the same city received consignments which may be sold five shillings less and cause a loss to the outright buyers. Outright sales are what we must insist on; it is the only basis for sound business. We must regulate prices for outright selling; cash to be paid here and standard quality certificates attached to each Bill of Lading.

If the Trade will stand behind me, I will strive to get the best price possible for our fish, but if the Trade are not satisfied to that, then they had better get someone to take Coaker's place, and let fishery matters run on as in the past. I do not want to be in the Fishery Department. My place is down at Port Union looking after the fishermen's interests. I do not want more work, or more salary as a Minister, but seeing that I could do something to help along the trade and thereby help the fishermen of the country, I decided to accept the position as Minister of Marine & Fisheries. If the trade will not stand behind me, it must accept the responsibility which the country will place upon its shoulders for being too selfish and unpatriotic to avail of the first opportunity in a half century of adjusting business conditions that every business man with experience has condemmed continually from year to year.

My service can be availed of now, I am here to perform and not to talk or play. If the trade says no; we are content; then, I am ready to bid adieu to the Fishery Department, and it can proceed in the future as in the past—an eyesore and a reflection upon the people and country.

I can sell our fish as well as they can; Port Union fish has a reputation and will sell as favourable as any other fish either at St. John's or outports. The regulations are nothing to me but hard work and worry. We may hear in a few days that Mr. Hawes is disgruntled because he cannot get his own way or that I refuse to accept his advice. Mr. Hawes' ideas may sometimes clash with mine.

Before I got to Portugal there had been a meeting of fish dealers there, and they had passed resolutions embodying their dissent to buying any Newfoundland fish under the regulations.

I had a letter from one of the strongest firms in Oporto offering to buy all fish going to Oporto and pay cash in Newfoundland for it at the regulation prices. They said there is the proposition, and if you will not send fish to Oporto through anybody else and you will live up to the Regulations and sell the fish according to the regulations, we will buy. We will pay cash for it in St. John's before it sails, because you will give us certificate of the cargo and you have agents here to adjust all claims. You cannot send fish to Oporto on consignment and sell outright as well. There will be no more consignments. When sent there on consignment it may lay in store and rot or go dunn. On one occasion when I got my returns from Oporto only 45/- was got for the fish I sent, when I was offered 95/- before it left Nfld. Therefore, it is a poor policy to send fish on consignment to foreign fish dealers. The houses in which it is stored are not weather tight; the windows are low down and the glasses out and the rain beats in and often spoils the fish. There is a half inch of dirt on the floor and the germs ruin the fish. That is the position of sending fish on consignment to some Oporto dealers.

I know people on the West Coast who sold, contrary to the regulations, two hundred and fifty thousand dollars worth of fish to a firm which was bankrupt a year ago. The firm was not worth 25,000 dollars. Shippers should know to whom they were ship sent this fish on consignment on sent over the fish on consignment on the authority of someone in London. If one asked such shippers for a loan of $10,000 they would want to know what it was wanted for and what security could he given. They had no one on the other side to check and see if they got 75/- or 90/- for their fish. They would get an account of sales or something, and there it ended, gain or lose. Men here in the fish business who strive on Water Street to make money, work late at night and watch every cent they spend, make mistakes in this way and waste all they have earned in the twinkling of an eye. I know of a person who had 10,000 qtls. of fish in Portugal and the sale of it looked very doubtful, and the party asked us to help him out. We got cash down for it on condition that no further shipments are sent to that port for a certain time. This is where regulations prove good, and but for the regulations that lot of 10,000 qtls. may lay in store on consignment until it became black with dunn and sold at half its value.

If members of this Legislature say that the regulations are no good, they are saying what is unfounded. I know my friends on the other side of the House are led away by party politics. But when this matter comes up before the House in the shape of a Bill, I hope they will all stand by my efforts to place our staple industry on a sound business basis. So far, the regulations have benefited the country to an astounding degree. They prevented prices from going to pieces, and at same time secured some profits. 160,000 drums have been sold under regulations to Brazil at a profit of 2.00 per drum over what would have been paid without regulations. That means $320,000. Portugal has taken 200,000 qtls. of which 130,000 qtls have been sold at a price that has given exporters $2.00 per qtl. which means another $260,000. We sold Spain 200,000 qtls. since regulations came into operation, and at a saving of $2.00 per qtl., another $400,000 has been conferred by regulations.

Italy has purchased 170,000 qtls. since the regulations became operative and at a saving of only $2.00 per qtl. another $340,000 has been added to the amount plucked from the threatening disaster. Greece has purchased 50,000 qtls. since Nov. 20th, and at $2.00, another $100,000 has been credited to the regulations. A total of $1,420,000. To this may be added sales of stocks abroad and locally, that will make the protection afforded equal to a sum of $1,750,000 saved to the exporters of Newfoundland that most of them expected would be lost when they reflected on the 10th day of November last.

Mr. Long complains that he was prevented from selling a cargo by one of the Advisory Board because he could not sell at 84/-, less 1%, while 84/-, less 2%, was offered. The Board is not responsible for that trouble, as it was not consulted; but Mr. Long's cargo got in trouble after leaving Fogo and the ship had to make for St. John's, discharge and repair, and under those circumstances had he closed for that cargo at 84/- less 1%, the buyers would have cancelled the sale when they found that the cargo would probably arrive in April instead of December. He would never have got an offer of 84 shillings for that fish but for the regulations. The price would have gone down to 80 or 70 shillings in two weeks, and later still lower down But the regulations would not permit the decline in accordance with the desire of the fish dealers in Oporto, and the 81 shillings price fixed in February has been maintained up to the present, except in the case of Mr. Long's cargo, recently sold through Rolfe & Co. for 76/-.

If the fish that was sent to Oporto was standardized there would not be half the stocks there that we find today. When I went to the stores in Oporto I found that the No. 1 fish had been all grabbed up. If there had been three times as much No. 1 fish it would have been all sold promptly. The people want No. 1 fish; they want good fish, and we have to see to it that we send them good fish. These people don't want mixed fish. They want No. 1, and if we give them No. 1 and protect them, we will have in Portugal our best market. It is the best market we have in the world. We have to see to it that our fish is properly cured, and that it is properly assorted. We send to Spain very little prime Spanish quality. The Spaniard wants a different kind of fish from other markets. He has no use for white fish; won't buy it. He wants thick, yellow fish, which he eats raw. He doesn't want it salty, but almost smatchy and not hard. They have a national meal of rice and curry, and it tastes very much like smatchy fish. They don't want hard fish; they want a soft fish. Then we are told that fish is selling in Spain for 60 shillings. Such fish went there before the regulations came into force, and we do not accept any responsibility for the low price it may be sold at. That fish would be dunn, or turning red, slimy or sunburnt. Give us a chance to see what the regulations can accomplish after a full years' operation. Let us start with the new fish this season and after a few months all will recognize the benefit of regulations and control of exports. We started last year at a time when half the catch had been shipped, and our greatest difficulty was caused by having so much fish in the markets on consignment not under control. The uncontrolled fish controlled the price of the new arrivals. If we fixed 85/- as a price in Portugal or Spain, it was not possible to secure such unless through outright sales, as consigned fish sent before Nov. 20th flooded the markets and competed with the new arrivals. Hence no fair trial of the regulations was possible; but starting the new season and carrying it through, we will have a fair trial of its merits and will then be able to judge properly as to its benefits.

We want fish standardized, inspected in St. John's, and paid for in St. John's. Can we have any better system? 170,000 quintals of fish has been sent to Italy since the date of the regulations. Two-thirds of this fish would have sold below 70/- had there been no regulations and sale through Mr. Hawes. Exchange created a bad situation. It was so bad that the price of the fish came to 130 shillings. One week after our bargain was signed exchange went down to 63 liries in the pound, making a difference of about $1.50 per qtl. more to the Italians.

I have found that the Consorzio was comprised of a fair, business-like lot of men. They wanted to get the fish at the lowest price possible, and the wonder of it is that we have got along as well as we have. Italy was without any fish last fall when she should have consumed 100,000 quintals. In Brazil fish is now selling at 110 shillings, and the only firm that has held out against the regulations is the Seixas firm. They want to get our fish on their own terms; but they will find that while we will be fair we will also be firm. If they will not buy on our conditions, they may find some day that their big competitor at Pernambuco will receive all the shipments from here to that port and thereby control to a considerable extent the sales in that great city. If this happens, they alone will be to blame. We want to treat all right, but if any think they can play with the trade interests of this country, it might happen that more progressive men will slip into their business.

What, gentlemen, has made the big corporations of the world? What has made the Standard Oil Company and the Imperial Oil Company? Nothing but organization in disposal of their products to the different markets of the world. There must be regulations by which all will be governed; there must be unity. If we are compelled to do so by the lack of business ability on the part of foreign buyers, we will open our wholesale branches abroad and dispose of our products as has been done by big well organized and successful concerns. We must have a man in the markets who will look after our interests. That is what we want, and it is the cause of our failure in years gone by.

Mr. Speaker last night when we adjourned this debate at midnight, it was my intention to proceed today, so I take this opportunity of finishing my remarks in connection with the Address in Reply. Some business men have asked what quantities of fish have been sold in Spain since the regulations came into effect.

Two hundred thousand quintals of fish have been sent to Spain since the regulations came into effect, and out of that amount of fish one hundred and thirty thousand quintals have been sold, leaving about seventy thousand quintals unsold. That is not a large stock for Spain at this time of the year. There is very little Spanish fish in the country today and the exports from Newfoundland to Spain will not be very large from now until the new fish is ready in September. Last year about this time twenty-eight thousand quintals of fish were ordered from Italy to Spain. Labrador fish that was sent to Italy, when the vessels got there, was not allowed to enter port, and Mr. Hawes was asked to save it by storing at Alicante. The time of the year had come when nobody wanted Labrador fish. Hawes and Company were appealed to, and they took charge of the cargoes and put them in cold storage and sold them during the summer. Instead of there being a total loss, the exporters received very fair returns. Not only was this done, but from this time up to the latter part of September some thirty thousand quintals of old Shore fish were sold in Spain. The amount of sixty thousand quintals of fish was sold in Spain during last summer. This quantity was placed in cold storage and prevented from deteriorating. That is what happened in Spain. Sixty thousand quintals of fish were sold in Spain during a season that had always been considered unsuitable for handling fish.

In former years, no one there would think of taking fish in the Spring of the year, as it would surely deteriorate, but, under the present circumstances, with the cold storage facility a fresh supply of fish can be provided weekly during the warm summer weather. Spain to-day instead of being an eight month market, has become a twelve month market. The seventy thousand quintals of fish now in Spain are not a large quantity under those circumstances. The only bad feature about this fish is that it is an inferior quality. Much of it should be in Italy or Portugal. It will have to be sold in Spain at reduced prices. When I was in Spain, I saw a lot of this fish there, utterly unsuitable for that market, and it had to be sold at a reduced price. This has nothing to do with the Regulations. The fish went there before regulations went into force. At present, Italy has no surplus of Labrador fish and Spain has only a small quantity. When some arrivals reach there the stocks will not exceed ten thousand quintals. This amount is not going to last very long. Spain up to date this year has received from us three hundred and forty six thousand quintals of fish as against two hundred and sixty three for the previous year. Therefore, Spain has taken eighty three thousand quintals of fish more this year than the previous year. Now in view of those facts, I would ask what my friends on the other side of the House who are opposed to the Regulations have to say. They say the Regulations have stifled the consumption of our fish in the foreign markets. Here is an instance when Spain has for 10 months taken eighty three thousand quintals more than she did for the preceding year. In the preceding year the total exports were two hundred and sixty three thousand qtls. It is not surprising to find considerable quantities of fish in Spain to-day because cargoes sent from the North last fall and intended for Italy were forced into Spain owing to the Consorzio's action in refusing to purchase from Newfoundland.

At the present time we have an enquiry from Italy for old fish, and it would be a big advantage if the merchants would find out what fish they have on hand and let me know. They have arrived at some arrangement whereby an American firm can supply fish to Italy on terms financially satisfactory to the Consorzio. I would like to know just what fish we have on hand. It is my opinion, and the facts back up my opinion, that because of the fish regulations the situation in the market to-day is much more favorable than this time last year. Greece has taken 90,000 qtls. so far this year. Last year she took 86,000 altogether. The returns show much more, but the Escasoni's cargo was cleared for Greece and increase the quantity. The real quantity was 86,000 qtls. Brazil has taken 200,000 qtls. so far this year. Last year she took 260,000 qtls. up to end of April. We haven't enough to supply the Brazilian demands this season. All stocks on hand have been sold. Stocks on hand at present are 40,000 qtls. against 110,000 last year at this time. Halifax has taken 30,000 quintals of fish from the West Coast. Some have told us that we are losing sales in Brazil which Halifax was securing, but Halifax have to replenish stocks from the West Coast. I think it is a very fortunate transaction. The West Coast fish are not suited for the Brazilian market. If the fish has been sold at Halifax, it has undoubtedly been sold at a profit. If it had been sent to Brazil it would have sustained a loss. If it had gone to Oporto it would have done no good. If the people on the West Coast can't dry their fish by the sun they will have to get driers and make fish suitable for the Brazil market. No man can handle 100,000 quintals of fish without shipping some to the Brazil market, and it is no wonder that a man like Mr. Harris has had to worry over the disposal of his stocks, seeing he has not been able to ship to Brazil. Last year this time the Brazil market was over-stocked. The 110,000 quintals of old fish sold in Brazil last year from May to October, were with great difficulty disposed of. The catch of fish for the year ending December last was about 80,000 qtls. short of the preceding year. That makes it all the easier to dispose of the full catch of last year before new fish arrives. There is not in Newfoundland to-day 150,000 quintals of old fish to be disposed of, as against over 300,000 qtls. last year at this date.

Now I am going to refer to the remarks of my friend, Sir John Crosbie. He made some important remarks regarding Mr. Earle's fish. Mr. Earle has made a statement that he sent three cargoes of fish to Italy on which he made $44,000. And he further states that the Government was not satisfied but wanted him to make $66,000. I want to say right here that such a profit was impossible. The statement was made for the purpose of injuring the fish regulations. It is true that Mr. Earle purchased his fish for less than was paid in St. John's or at Port Union. At 85 shillings he couldn't make 10 cents per quintal if he paid $12.00 for fish. He did make a big profit on 6,000 quintals Labrador fish, about $3.00 a quintal; but the fish was purchased at Fogo at a low price. In St. John's or at Port Union at that time Labrador fish cost $10.50, including labor. But is this any reason why we should allow Mr. Earle to sell $1.00 or $1.50 less than the merchants on Water Street could sell at? The fact that Mr. Earle sold at 85 shillings when Mr. Hawes sold at 95 shillings ought to be sufficient proof that he did not get the price that he should, and is sufficient justification for the regulation of prices. This case furnishes a good reason for the regulations. Mr. Earle would, if permitted to continue that game, ruin the markets for our whole catch of fish. Mr. Earle had little or no competition in buying his fish, and he did not give the fishermen the price that he should have given them; and if he had given them a fair price he would not have been able to undersell. So that the regulations will not only protect the merchant, but it will assure the fishermen a reasonable price for their fish; a standard price all around. If we permit Mr. Earle and a few others who can buy fish at a low price to go into the market and sell, every fish merchant on Water Street would be put out of business in a couple of years. Mr. Earle did not make $44,000 on the three cargoes. He may have made $25,000. But he should have paid a higher price for his fish in the first place, and had he done so he would not have been so anxious to cut the price 10 shillings per quintal. Had Mr. Earle paid $12 for Italian fish he would have to receive 85/- in order to make 10c. per quintal profit. He purchased probably at $10 to $10.50 and could undersell buyers whose fish cost $12. If such conditions continued, it is easy to foretell the end. A reduction of 10/- in Italy meant lower prices in every market and a loss of $2 per quintal on our catch means throwing away $3,200,000 on 1,600,000 quintals.

I stated last night that 11 cargoes had been sold in Portugal since early February. It is right to see that those selling fish in Portugal sell at a regulated price. If we allow a firm to sell at 76 shillings it means that the man who pays 81 shillings will suffer a loss. We have to protect our whole interest in the fish business, and to do that we must regulate the price under which all fish is sold.

Every reasonable man will therefore recognize that, as exporters would not or could not agree on a price to be secured abroad, it became the duty of a Fishermen's Government to adopt measures that would make a standard price for all compulsory. I am a firmer believer than ever in regulating prices, but such regulations must be principally enforced on this side and not in Europe. To enforce such on this side means the adoption of outright sales for all markets and cash payments at St. John's or London. Such a system entails a strict standard of inspection and assortment and we shall endeavour to provide the same as soon as the new fish begins to move.

We must try and keep our prices firm in Portugal, for these people would not have bought unless they thought that the price was going to be maintained at 81 shillings. Only a few days ago, our Trade Commissioner there sold 7,000 qtls. at 81 shillings for a firm on the West Coast, which was a remarkable transaction considering conditions, and no firm should sell in either Oporto or Lisbon under this figure. It is true that there are five cargoes at present outside Oporto, but we have not altogether 40,000 qtls. of fish for that market and you must remember that they take 40,000 qtls a month. Only this week I notice that the consumption has gone up in Oporto to 8,000 qtls. and in Lisbon to 3,300. Think of it, Gentlemen, eleven thousand three hundred quintals of fish for one week. Why, Portugal is the best market we have. In Lisbon also, where previously we sold scarcely any fish, the consumption went up this week to 3,300 qtls. I think this is a wonderful position for a country like Portugal—it is a revelation and more especially, when we consider the frightful exchange conditions with which they have to contend. Their exchange is so low that our fish at the price they are now paying for it, costs them in their own money at the rate of 240 shillings, and that is the wholesaler, mind you, not the retailer. And still, sir, we have these enormous sales. Why, it is my opinion that if we were rich enough we should send them half a dozen cargoes of fish for nothing as a sort of bonus for all that they have bought and are still buying from us.

And now a word with regard to the demand to have the Regulations removed. I have here a message received from our Trade Commissioner in Spain and Portugal which reads:

> "Ridley's action has depressed the market, the Regulations can alone save the situation and they can and must be maintained."

What he means by that is that Ridley is offering fish for 75 and 76 shillings in Lisbon and the effect of this sort of thing is to create a condition so alarming that the Trade Commissioner, whose warning should be seriously considered, in looking after the country's interests, wires me that the Regulations must be maintained in force at all costs. Now I am not going to say very much more about the Regulations, but, a word as to the future. So far as I am concerned the Regulations must stand, but they will stand in accordance with these resolutions:

(a) That the Newfoundland Board of Trade recognize that Fish Export Regulations are essential; but those now in force do not entirely meet the requirements of the Trade of this Colony.

(b) It is the opinion of the Newfoundland Board of Trade that the Advisory Board should, if at any time it is essential that prices are to be adjusted, and supplies regulated, meet the whole body of the St. John's Fish Exporters, and as many Outport shippers as possible, and fully discuss the matter, and recommend to the Government the necessary alterations.

(c) That the Newfoundland Board of Trade is of the opinion that the Shippers should have the right of offering their supplies of codfish direct to the buyers in all Markets, excepting Italy at present, and in Italy as soon as conditions will permit provided they maintain the prices and regulations set forth.

(d) That the Newfoundland Board of Trade write the Government requesting them to grant the desires and wishes of the Trade.

When we bring in those regulations they will be so framed as to meet the recommendations set out here and we shall take into consideration the views and best interests of both city and outport exporters while at the same time we shall give first attention to the best interests of the country and our chief industry, whenever we find it necessary to regulate prices in the foreign markets.

Now, for the resolutions introduced by the Hon. Mr. Grieve, which were entirely in the opposite direction. His resolution was as follows:

"RESOLVED—That in the opinion of this meeting the action of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is in the nature of a restraint of trade and is consequently illegal in law, and that the act under which sale of fish is to be regulated in the matter of prices violates a fundamental principle of political economy in so far that arbitrary prices are sought to be established without reference to the inexorable laws of supply and demand, and furthermore that the Act under which this action is taken was in the opinion of this meeting meant to prevent trading with enemy nations rather than as a bar to commercial intercourse between friendly nations."

You will see, Mr. Speaker, that this is an entirely different matter altogether and the difference between these two sets of resolutions was proven by the fact that the former were unanimously adopted by the Board of Trade irrespective of whether the members were supporters of the regulations as they then stood or not.

It is important to note that the business people of the outports are becoming interested in what the Government are doing in this direction. Some time ago we had occasion to write Messrs. G. & A. Buffett of Grand Bank about a report that came us that they had sent away a cargo of fish contrary to the regulations, and we received a letter from them in which they say they believe in standardizing exports of fish. Here is what they say:

(Copy)

Grand Bank, Nfld.,
April 21st, 1920.

W. F. Coaker, Esq.,
Minister of Marine & Fisheries,
St. John's.

Dear Sir:—We have your favor of April 9th. We note that the Government intend to control the export of fish and to standardize it, and while we do not see eye to eye with the Government in what they have done, we certainly realize the necessity of standardizing fish, and having regulations so that it will be practically impossible for any one to ship a cargo of fish to a market which demands a good article, unless the fish is of good quality.

For years past we have been in accord with your suggestions about standardizing fish, and we believe if this can be done and the culling of fish arranged on a just basis, fair alike to the fisherman and the exporter, a great deal will be done to stabilize the prices, and make conditions more satisfactory for all who are engaged in the fishery and in the fishing business.

We beg to endorse all that your Government does along the e lines and hope that the cure, ull and standardization will be a great success.

About the Grand Bank firms being represented at St. John's. As far as we can understand we were not consulted or even advised as to what was likely to happen, with the possible exception of Mr. Harris.

Yours truly,

G. & A. BUFFETT.

I believe that the sentiments expressed in that letter constitute the keynote of the feeling of the outport exporter with regard to the Fish Regulations.

I have a word to say before concluding on the subject of the cure of our fish. We have before the House a Bill providing for standardization. This Bill provides for the appointment of a committee of eleven persons, of whom one will be the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, ex-officio, while other members will be from the Board of Trade, outport fishermen, outport dealers; and in short the committee will be fully representative of the entire fishing interests of the country into their hands will be placed the power to make the necessary laws to improve the cure and establish a standard for export. The most important step to be taken in this movement for a better quality is that fish will no longer be permitted to be accepted talqual. We must cut out that practice, and in its stead we must have three grades or standards of fish, Number One, Number Two, and Three, and the difference between the prices paid or the one and two grades must be so great that the man who makes number two fish this year will be sure to make Number One next year. Personally, I should like to see the difference in the prices not less than two dollars. At the same time we must not be too hard on the fishermen; on the contrary, we should encourage him by giving prizes or bonuses, or some other inducement to make good fish. But the man who buys inferior fish in the hope of being able to dispose of it as a superior article will be the loser; if he buys Number Two, he won't be allowed to sell it for Number One, because not a fish will be allowed to go out without being subjected to the strictest inspection, and when those who will at first be disposed to evade the law in this way find that they cannot get away with it, they will soon make up their minds that the sooner they get into line with the regulations the better, and in this way we will ultimately be putting out an article that all the markets will be demanding as fast and in as large quantities as we will be able to supply.

When the F. P. U. members were on the other side of the House, we talked persistently of this matter of standardization of fish and the necessity for a strict cull, and it has been always the aim of the Union to encourage the making of good fish and to see fish paid for according to its quality. It is a sad thing to see the way Labrador fish is handled. A man brings along fish to one buyer who refuses to touch it because he does not consider it good enough. It may be dark or dirty or have some other fault; but that man brings the same fish to another buyer who takes it, and dark and damp and all as it is, packs it into a vessel amongst other fish as Number One.

This must be prevented if we are to send good fish to the foreign markets; for 100 quintals of bad fish are enough to spoil a whole cargo. I saw a cargo landed when I was on the other side, into which yaffles of bad fish had been stowed here and there, and you could tell every yaffle of it as it came out. It went all through the cargo and did more harm than could be imagined. It would have been better for that man if he had kept that fish together and sold it for what it was worth.

The standardization of fish here is not only going to do incalculable good for our trade, but you will then be enabled to give the man on the other side what he wants, and get your money in St John's when your fish is loaded. As the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, it is not altogether the fault of the fishermen. He is not going to wash his fish, as clean as he ought to, if he can get the same price for it without doing that.

I don't consider that the men who make bad fish should be blamed for the quality. If they couldn't sell it they wouldn't produce it, and the men who buy are the men who are responsible for it. These new laws of standardization have power to attend to everything that is necessary in the making of fish and the control of fish from the time it is caught until it reaches the consumer on the other side. Rules and Regulations will be brought in time and again with the approval of the Governor in Council for the improvement of the cure. You cannot formulate a rule or regulation in any Bill prescribed here for the proper enforcement of an improved cure. It must be done through a commission and we must be guided by experience from time to time and thereby make the proper adjustments. I think this is a move in the right direction. We cannot succeed unless our fish is able to compete with the fish of other countries. The Norwegian fisherman does not cure his fish. He catches it only. It is bought by large plants and cured. The fisherman in Norway only catches the fish. but in this country every fisherman makes his own fish and almost every one of them makes it differently. Today we are up against the competition of a country that makes a better looking article than we do. They have a clean looking and better looking fish than we have. Yet, their fish is not as good in taste as ours. If our fishermen would take more care in the splitting and washing of fish the result would be significant and the quality would demand the price. We should split our fish to the tip of the tail, take out more bone, make a slanting cut in taking off the sound bone instead of the usual straight cut and thus remove all the blood in the bone.

The liver adhering to the nape should be removed. All shore fish over 18 inches should have the black removed from the napes. Fish must be washed singly and the back washed as thoroughly as the face. I shall do all in my power to make these improvements a reality. I know my friends on the other side of the House, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition and Sir John Crosbie will assist me in putting through a bill that will have for its object the making of as good an article of fish as supplied by Norway or Iceland. It may not be done in a year. It may take two or three years, but what we want to do now is to make that fish so that it will demand the best price. Spanish importers are to-day selling some fish at 60/- per quintal, but the seller of that fish was carrying a bad article and had to take 60/- for it because that's all it was worth. Such fish was dunn or going slimy and went to Spain before the regulations came into force.

When the bill comes before this House for discussion and we get down to the matter of the standardization of fish we will be able to go into these matters more clearly. For the present I wish my remarks to go through the reporter's box to the fishermen and exporters in order to enable all to start a discussion on those matters of vital interest to the whole country.

Mr. friend Mr. Walsh, the Hon. member for Placentia and St. Mary's District, in speaking on the speech from the throne referred to the need of aids to navigations on the Southern Shore. I may say in reply to Mr. Walsh that a commission has been appointed consisting of Capt. English, Commander Fenn, and Mr. J. J. Collins, Superintendent of the Marconi Wireless Co., to enquire into these conditions relative to aids to navigation along the Southern Shore and report if there is any way in their wisdom to improve the aid to navigation between here and Cape Race.

There is at present a Directional Finding Station at Cape Race and if another such station could be built at Cape Spear or Signal Hill, I am sure we would eliminate all possibility of any steamer going ashore between these two stations providing they use their wireless. The directional station at Cape Race gives a ship her direction but can't give the distance from land. A second station at Cape Spear would enable all ships to find the distance from the land consequently all risks of striking land in a fog or storm would be removed.

If my friends of the other side of the House can suggest anything to remedy the conditions on this shore we will be very pleased to discuss it with them. In reference to the survey of ships, although it may not be possible for my staff to inspect every ship that sails out of this Colony we may at least provide that they all be equipped with sufficient lifeboats and lifebuoys to guarantee the sailors a fighting chance for their lives, and I welcome any information that may be supplied me that will tend to locate any offenders against those necessary and desirable regulations.

In regard to getting a supply of salt for the coming season I expect that we shall be able to secure salt this year much cheaper than last year, despite the fact that the cost of freight has increased 20/- per ton. You talk of war prices, why last year we could get a ton of salt freighted from Spain for 25/— and to-day we must pay 45/— and yet we hope to be able to sell salt this year at a considerable reduction on last year's price of $4.70 cash.

Mr. Speaker, it was my duty to inform the House of these regulations and what they meant, but it is not my duty to take up the time of the House as the gentlemen on the other side of the House have done, and as I have done when sitting in their places. Yet I hope they will give me credit for any good I may try to do and encourage me in the work I have set out to accomplish. If I make mistakes I am open to fair criticism. If I do wrong I am open to your censure. I am here because I feel I have a duty to perform in the work I shall endeavour to accomplish during the near future, my labor will be much lighter and success more certain if all will pull together and learn to forget party politics. In my position as Minister of Marine and Fisheries I am the servant of the House and the Country, and any information that I am able to give them from time to time in relation to the regulation and other matters pertaining to my Department I will only be too pleased to supply.

And it being after midnight, Wednesday, April 28th, on motion, the debate on the Address in Reply was adjourned.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, unless I receive an assurance that the questions on the Order paper will be answered to-morrow, I will ask that these questions not answered be kept on the Order paper until they are answered.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—All the questions asked were either answered or answers were promised at the earliest possible moment.

MR. SULLIVAN:—I repeat, Sir, that the questions be left on the Order paper.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—That is not the practice. When I was in the Upper House I asked questions the answers to some of which I have not received yet, and I see no reason for letting these questions remaining on the Order paper.

MR. HIGGINS:—Neither is there any reason why these questions should not have been answered.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—The leader of the Government came in here this morning, after keeping us waiting for more than an hour and apologized because the Order paper was not ready.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—The statement of the Leader of the Opposition that I offered an apology is absolutely untrue. The Order paper came late and there was no time to send the questions on it to the Departments to which they related, and the only questions of which I had personal knowledge were answered.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—If my statement is untrue I take it back. I said you apologized and you owed us an apology for keeping the House waiting.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—These questions were not asked till last night.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—That is no reason why they should not have been answered, or at least left on the Order paper now. We want business, not camouflage.

MR. SULLIVAN:—I still contend, Mr. Speaker, that if these questions are not answered to-night, they should be left on the Order paper until they are. Surely we are not asking anything unusual or unreasonable.

HON. MINISTER, POSTS & TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, may I give my experience in this particular. When I was on the other side of the House, I often asked questions, and when the Speaker had called these questions they were stricken off the Order paper. Sometimes we had to wait weeks for the answers and often we did not get them at all. Of course, if the head of a Department to whom a question is directed is absent from the House it is right that it should be left on the Order paper, but if he is present and states that the answer is in course of preparation, that should be sufficient.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—I think that any question on the Order paper for a day when the House meets at 10.30 might be put on a second time.

MR. HIGGINS:—That is the idea; that is all we ask for.

Mr. Moore gave notice of question.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act respecting the effect and Application of Certain Acts subsequent to Consolidated Statutes (Third Series)" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Industrial Societies Act, 1919," was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council wih a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 41 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Newfoundland Medical Board," was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its pro visions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister, the Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Food Control Act, 1917" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister, the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Public Works was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting thec oncurrence of that body in its provisions.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Mr. Moore gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises, it adjourn until three of the clock this afternoon.

The House adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, April 28th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Sullivan gave notice of question.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled report of the Council of Higher Education.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Rencontre for telegraphic communication in that place. This petition is signed by 184 inhabitants of Rencontre and New Harbor, which people will also benefit by such communication. I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that for some years these people have been practically isolated. There is no telegraphic line to Burgeo, a distance of 100 miles, and the people in Rencontre and vicinity are living isolated practically as much as the residents of Northern Labrador. I think this line is due the people of that place. The amount of revenue taken from these people in one year runs into thousands and thousands of dollars and they get absolutely nothing in return. I do not see why they should be deprived of the privileges that other settlements of far less importance are enjoying. They should not be handicapped in this way. There are many business men there who do not enjoy even a decent coastal service and you can't get a doctor unless you take a motor boat or other vessel and go to Harbour Breton, a distance of about 60 miles. And, Mr. Speaker, we must take into consideration the position of the returned soldiers who have gone back to settle down in Rencontre and the nearby settlements. Many of them volunteered and went overseas from Rencontre, are we going to ignore these boys? Are we going to send they back there and banish them altogether. I think, Sir, that if this telegraph line is not due business men then it is certainly due the soldiers. No doubt it is a pretty hard place in which to erect a station, and no doubt surveyors will go up there and come back and say that it is impossible But, Mr. Speaker, I say that it is not impossible.

When the Anglo line was first brought through this district the settlements were not taken into consideration, but I suggest Sir, that it can be done and Rencontre can have a telegraph system. I will ask the support of the Hon. Minister of Justice in presenting this petition. I presume that he is acquainted with this part of my district which borders on his own, and I ask his support. I think Mr. Walsh, the Hon. Member for Placentia and St. Mary's will also support me in this petition, as I know that he has considerable knowledge of the needs of Rencontre and is well acquainted with the district.

MR. WALSH:—I have very much pleasure in giving my support to the petition presented by the hon. member for Burgeo, Lieut. Small. It is true, as he says, that I have had experience along the coast line, and I am familiar with conditions in the settlement of Rencontre. It has been said and it is true that most of the telegraph offices that have been established are not a paying proposition, that the revenue from them was not sufficient to pay for their upkeep, but a telegraph office is a necessity to the people of that settlement, and I take this opportunity of giving my support to the petition presented by Lieut. Small, and I hope the same measure of support will be given me with reference to requests that are now before the House for the District which I have the honor to represent. I have no doubt that when these matters come before the Executive due consideration will be given them, and I hope Rencontre will be given this great facility.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I support the petition presented by the hon. member for Burgeo for two reasons, first because I represent a constituency on the South Coast, which is connected with Lieut. Small's district, and because I am familiar with conditions there; and secondly because I know that these offices are essential, but we are laboring under great difficulties for this reason: The Postal Telegraphs run by the Government do not go farther west than the east end of Hermitage Bay. To erect a postal telegraph office at Gaultois one has to run a cable from Hermitage to Gaultois in order to reach there. When you come to Push-through the Anglo-American Telegraph Company runs through the district of Burgeo.

Like Mr. Small I am in the same position in Bay D'Espoir, a place which is shortly to be the seat of an industry, which we hope will be equal to Grand Falls, and a population of one thousand has no office except one run by the Anglo-American Telegraph Company. It is at Conne River, miles away from any place of importance. Now if I want to get a telegraph office at St. Alban's, I have to make arrangements with the Anglo Co., to let us connect up with their office, and my honorable friend will find himself in the same position, that unless he can come to an arrangement with the Anglo-American Telegraph Co., you have got to erect a new system of Postal Telegraphs from Bay D'Espoir West.

Now it comes to a question whether we should consider buying out the interests of the Anglo-American Co. on the West Coast. I don't know that they are doing very much business now, because places that are asking for telegraph offices are not connected with the line, and I think it would be worth while to see if the Government can make some arrangement with the Anglo-American Telegraph If this is not done, it will cost a lot to put telegraph offices in these places. I shall take the earliest opportunity of bringing the matter before the Government.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from the settlement of Sandy Point, Bay St. George, concerning three very important matters, and it is signed by all the inhabitants of the place.

The first matter is that Sandy Point is no longer a port of call, and they request it be again made a port or call for coastal boats. The second is in connection with the extension of a breakwater. The land there, Sir, is very low lying, of a sandy nature, and unless the breakwater is extended, we shall lose the harbor altogether, as each year more and more of this point is being washed away. If we lose it we shall not have a harbor in Bay St. George.

Some years ago a similar petition was presented on this very important matter. The people went so far as to offer to give free labor, and to supply the material for this work. That offer was accepted, and the first year each man brought from the woods two cords of timber, and was given a certain amount of money. The second year they brought the timber and received no money. I think when people are willing to give free labor that they should be given assistance. I suggest that this matter be referred to the Marine and Fisheries Department, and if it is taken up by them I would like to discuss this matter with them.

The petition states that the man who runs the ferry is satisfactory, but they request that he should be paid more, in order that it may be worth his while to give his whole attention to it. At the present time he is not paid enough, and that if it were increased he would be able to make an additional number of trips. The fact that it is signed by every man in the settlement, should be sufficient to convince the members of this House of the desirability of its being granted.

MR. SCAMMELL:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from the people of St. Barbe that that place be made a port of call for the coastal boats during the coming season. I consider that that petition is very reasonable, and I have very much pleasure in giving it my support, and I beg to refer it to the department to which it relates.

HON. MINISTER POSTS & TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a number of petitions all dealing with the same subject, namely the extension of the railway from Heart's Content to the south shore of Trinity Bay and as far as Old Perlican. This section was not in the original railway contract, for some reason, when the branch line was being done from Whitbourne to Heart's Content. This is a very important section, not alone in Trinity, but in the Dominion. Between ten and fifteen years ago there were a number of schooners at Hant's Harbour and other places nearby that traded between the different localities and St. John's. Now there is only one schooner used as a freighter there. It is a great fishing centre, especially around Brownsdale, Lead Cove and New Melbourne and in spite of the isolation, drawbacks and hardships these people have settled there, owing to the fact that they are near the fishing grounds. It is difficult to them to live and the people could not leave to go elsewhere to fish if they wanted to, as nobody else would go in there to buy their extensive fishing property and land. Consequently these people are making a great sacrifice. If, as has been said by nearly everybody, that the success of the country depends upon the fisheries, these petitions are of more than passing interest. They have no means now of getting their products away after catching and curing them. I know of one or two cases last year and the previous year in which people had to haul their products over an inaccessible road to Old Perlican and then put them on board the train for St. John's. The cartage was 40 cents and the freight was 80 cents so that an allowance of $2.00 had to be made on every quintal of fish, apart from the loss of time, etc.

I have great pleasure in supporting these petitions, although I realise the problems and the difficulties in line. But if the government is going to do anything with railways I trust that this new line will be given first consideration and at the earliest possible moment. The petitions are not unreasonable and I have reason to believe that promises were made by past governments in this direction. Therefore, we are committed to it to a certain extent. I hope that the Government will see its way clear to grant the request of the petitioners.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the prayer of the petition. I may say that there is no part of that district from Hant's Harbor to Lead Cove where the people are in a worse condition with regard to the shipping of their fish. It is a very rough section and last year people had their ships and stages swept away by heavy sea. As stated by my colleague, Mr. Halfyard, these men there from New Melbourne down to Lead Cove find it difficult to get away their fish. Thirty years ago there were plenty of schooners there but there is only one there now. And I have known that schooners have had to wait six weeks before getting in there, last year, owing to the heavy sea running. These people lost their stages and slips were destroyed. I trust that if the Government are going to do anything with branch railways that they will not forget the South Side of Trinity Bay, as it is as much needed as any place in the country.

MR. GUPPY:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the prayer of the petition.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the inhabitants of Isle aux Morts asking that that place be made a permanent port of call of the s.s. Portia. Isle aux Mort is a growing little settlement. Four or five years ago there was only one business man there. To-day we have three business men there and we have from 50 to 65 fishermen there with all modern appliances to catch fish. This place has not as yet been recognized by any of our coastal boats and I suggest that this petition be referred to the Department of Shipping and hope that Isle aux Morts will be made a port of call of the Portia.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the Bill entitled "An Act to provide for the Better Obtaining of Information Respecting the Cod Fishery," was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House:

(1) A statement showing what moneys if any have been sent to the district of Placentia & St. Mary's since November 30th, 1919.
(2) And to say to whom sent.
(3) And for what purpose and also by whose request the money was allocated.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of the House all correspondence between the Great War Veterans and the Government in connection with increased pensions and allowances to sailors and soldiers and dependents, and to say:

(1) If the request for a temporary measure only, and until the scale of pensions is amended, is it the intention of the Government to allow the following increases:
   (a) Total disability, 20 per cent. increase.
   (b) Orphans of sailors and soldiers, 20 per cent. increase.
   (c) Children of deceased sailors and soldiers, 20 per cent. increase.
   (d) All other cases where deceased or totally disabled sailors or soldiers was or is the sole support, 20 per cent. increase.
(2) Also is it the intention of the Government to make this increase retroactive from November 15th, 1919.
(3) And is it the intention of the Government to carry out the policy in connection with returned soldiers and sailors as outlined in the Prime Minister's Manifesto issued in October, 1919, as follows:

"I propose that the soldier lad and navy lad of Newfoundland, the record of whose deeds is as good as the record of any body of men in Great Britain or in the British Colonies, shall be placed upon the same status as the soldiers of the neighboring Dominion in the matter of pensions, disability allowances, gratuities, pensions and allowances to dependents and financial and other assistance to enable them to get back to a peace basis and earn their living as honorable and independent citizens. The boys who by their sacrifice, their achievements and death have made the name of Newfoundland famous and won for us a place of honor in the world war are worthy of every reasonable consideration to their parents, and wife and children, must not be permitted to suffer because of the heroism and sacrifice of those upon whom they were dependent for comfort and support."

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Public Works if it is his intention to accept the recommendation of the elected members of Placentia and St. Mary's with regard to the matters coming under his jurisdiction as head of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if it is his intention to accept the recommendations of the constitutionally elected members for Placentia and St. Mary's, with regard to public matters in connection with said district coming under the jurisdiction of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Dr. Jones to ask the Hon. Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines:

(1) What agreement, if any, has been made with Mr. John Moore of Avondale, for attendance on sick cattle in the District of Harbor Main.
(2) What qualifications has Mr. Moore for such employment.
(3) For what period has he been engaged, and on what terms.
(4) Whether he has made or is expected to make reports on the work performed and the number of animals attended by him.
(5) If any claims have been made against the Department for losses of cattle, said to be due to his attendance, giving particulars of same, and what settlement if any has been or will be made in connection with same.

Dr. Jones to ask the Minister Public Works if any claim has been made against the Department of Public Works for compensation for damages done to the motor car which was precipitated into the harbor at Avondale by reason of improper protection on the main line of road, during the summer 1919.

Also what amount has been paid, if any, for compensation; and what measures have been taken to prevent the recurrence of such accidents at this point.

Mr. Moore to ask the Minister of Finance and Customs to furnish this House with a list of officials dismissed in connection with his Department from the outports and St. John's offices sinces the present Government came into power, and name of each; also a statement of charge against each.

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. LeGROW:—Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to take up much of the time of this House. But I want to congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the splendid way in which he handled the matter of the fish regulations, and I feel quite sure that the members of the Opposition also feel that there is every justification for the regulations as proved by the great work that has been accomplished by them so far. I also want to extend my hearty congratulations to my friend, Mr. Cheeseman, on the able manner in which he has dealt with the fish regulations. There can be no doubt that the regulations are for the best interests of the country.

I wish to thank the gentlemen on the other side of the House for their kindly references to my soldier friend, Mr. Small, and myself. They are the judges of our conduct and we will have to stand by it. Now with regard to the sectarian cry, I want to say right here that I am not guilty of the sectarianism which I am blamed for using in last fall's election. I am not guilty of carrying around a picture of His Holiness the Pope, but I can say something of that picture. When I came back to St. John's a soldier friend said to me: "LeGrow, you won your election all right." I said yes; I worked hard for it. I am not guilty of carrying around a picture of His Holiness the Pope, but I am prepared to prove that such a picture was used by one of The News bunch, and I am prepared to take an affidavit to that effect. If there are any of The News staff here they can take down what I say. When Mr. Matthews went to Trinity Bay he faced certain defeat. It is one of the districts which Mr. Bennett has said were conceded to the Opposition last fall. If I had been defeated I do not think that the Opposition would come across with a seat for me. Mr. Hickman told the people of Bay de Verde District, even around my own town, that I was only a boy. I am not ashamed of the fact that I am a poor boy. When Mr. Matthews was defeated he acted like a man, but Mr. Hickman, who opposed me, acted like a whipped child. I told him that when I came back from the district I would prove to him who was the boy.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—Mr. Speaker: In rising for the first time I would take this opportunity of congratulating you on the high honor conferred upon you, in your appointment as Speaker for this House, and I feel that the honor has not only been done you, but the fishermen of the colony in general from whose ranks you have come.

Like many Hon. members who are occupying seats in this House to-day, I cannot boast of any parliamentary experience, but I am proud to say that I have the honor to represent one of the most important constituencies in this dominion, and it is one which depends entirely upon the fisheries; consequently it is fishery matters that I wish to deal with principally this afternoon. Any suggestion coming either from the government or the opposition, that will tend to make matters better for the fishermen of this dominion will have my greatest support.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition in his remarks referred to conditions as they were in this country some thirty years ago. He showed that the business of the country was then practically controlled by Water Street merchants, but conditions have changed. Water Street is not controlling the whole business of the country to-day. The outports are coming into their own. We have come to take a prominent part in the general business of the country in a business-like way, and I am sure you will agree we are doing justice to the undertaking. You have only to look around you, and you will see the country is not represented only by men from Water Street, as was often the case. You will find that men are coming from the outports to take part in the government of the country and I think that this is a move in the right direction. The Hon. Leader of the Government is an outport man, so is the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, before going further, I would like to state that I have listened with a great deal of interest and attention to the speeches made by the Honorable members of the Opposition, and in my opinion they have been very reasonable and interesting to a young man just entering Parliament. I was particularly struck with the speeches made by Lieut. Small and Sergt LeGrow on the Government side, and my honorable friend, Mr. Fox on the Opposition. I am sure that all will agree that the speeches delivered by all three gentlemen whom I have mentioned were worthy of the great attention they received from both sides of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I do not pose as an expert on fishery matters or fishing, therefore all that I say might not be correct. The fish regulations have been well advertised both at home and abroad. The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with whose department the regulations are particularly connected, has explained them in such an able manner that I believe every member feels satisfied that he has made an honest effort to improve conditions for the fishermen of the Colony. Mr. Coaker tackled a big job and I am sure everyone will agree, that he has handled it in such a manner that he has done a great credit to himself and his fellow countrymen. I am not familiar with the Italian, Spanish or Brazilian markets, but judging from what the Hon Minister of Marine and Fisheries has told us about those markets I feel sure that the regulations have been a great benefit in as far as they concern the aforesaid markets. Referring to Brazil, I have in my mind an outportman who last year sent a cargo of fish to Brazil. They told me a little while ago that it took nearly nine months to get the full payment for this cargo. They of course shipped that cargo under the old system. The same firm that I referred to shipped another cargo a few days ago and understand they have already sold and that they have received ninety per cent of the sale price in cash. To my mind the case that I have just referred to is in itself a justification of the fish regulations at any rate in as far as Brazil is concerned. Take the position of the outport business man who is trying to build up a business for himself. Very few of them have any capital to start with. Now I want to point out to this House what a great advantage it would be to us if we could sell our fish to foreign buyers for cash against documents instead of having to send it to Europe on consignment. Having to buy our trade requirements for cash they take these goods to the outports and sell them to fishermen on six or nine months credit, and even then we have to take fish as payment for our goods. And under the old system it would take us very often from six to nine months to get cash returns for our fish shipments, you will appreciate the fact that the man with a limited amount of capital has a hard proposition. If it can be made possible to sell our fish for cash against documents it will be a great thing for the small business man and exporter, it will give the small man an equal chance with the big man, and as a consequence the whole country will benefit. As far as the West Coast is concerned our principal market for many years past has been Portugal. This was perhaps largely due to the fact that for some years past the largest percentage of our shipments were bank fish, and Portugal offers the best market for bank fish. However, within recent years conditions have changed along the coast. The banking fleet is rapidly decreasing and the fishermen who formerly went to the Banks are now engaged in the shore fishery.

But with this change we will have to divert a part of our attention to Brazil. The shore fishermen bring in a large quantity of fish that is very suitable for this market. I understand that it is necessary to have the fish very dry in order to get the best results from Brazil, and I should say that it would pay any Brazil exporter to install a modern fish-drying plant. I feel confident that in the very near future the West Coast shippers will be placing a portion of the collections in Brazil and I also feel sure that they will ship fish of a quantity that will be second to none either from St. John's or elsewhere.

Such men as Hon. Mr. Coaker, Sir M. P. Cashin and Sir John Crosbie are men who are well qualified to discuss fishery matters. There are also many other members in the House who can undoubtedly furnish much valuable information in connection with our fishing industry. I am satisfied that if we will be big enough to forget our party politics and get down to busines we can now do some valuable work in the interests of the great fisheries.

I have heard a great deal of criticism over the regulations. I daresay that they have not measured up to all that was expected either by the people of the country or the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself, but at the same time have sufficient proof that this country has already received profits as results from these regulations. Some individual might have been hit. So what we must consider is the greatest benefit for the greatest number. I have had some little experience with the Portuguese market and the London broker. No doubt there is a good deal of truth in that statement. At the same time there is another side to the story when we talk about the London or European broker. I can cite a case in which my firm was interested. About a year ago, when things were looking pretty good on the other side, we shipped a cargo to Oporto on consignment. We telegraphed our brokers to know when they would advance, and they replied that the selling value was then about 75 shillings per quintal. We drew for the sixty shillings, but what happened? Although six months after we had made the shipment, we received the accurate sales of the shipment from the brokers, which document revealed the very unpleasant news that the shipment against which we had already drawn 60 shillings per quintal had averaged 51 shillings per quintal, and of which he had to pay freight, insurance, commission, brokerage, etc. The result of this transaction was, you can see—we owed the brokers considerable money. What happened in our case which I have just quoted often happens with others who ship fish on consignment—you never know where you are going to get off. If we can make it possible to sell our fish outright we will know what we are doing and be able to conduct our business accordingly. Therefore notwithstanding the fact that the London broker has often been a great help to the small man, outright sales would be a far greater benefit to the same man.

I was particularly interested in the remarks of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition about the catching, curing and handling of fish generally. He is a man of experience and knew what he was speaking about. But he referred only to the foggy days when telling how hard it is for the fishermen to make good fish. But I would like to point out that unfortunately there are some fishermen who do not always take the full advantage of the fine days. While we have every sympathy with the fisherman who is so unfortunate as to have his fish damaged by bad weather over which he has no control we should have no sympathy with the fisherman who does not take advantage of the fine days to properly cure his fish. Unfortunately for all concerned a great many of our fishermen do not seem to realize the fact that fish is an article of food and that it should and must be treated as such if we are to get the best results. The quicker the fisherman realizes this the better it will be for ourselves. Codfish or any other kind of fish require careful attention from the time they are caught until they are placed in the consumers' hands.

As I have already pointed out the fishermen are not to blame as much as the buyers and exporters. For the past four years it was an easy matter for exporters to get away with poor quality fish and even make considerable money out of it; of course that was due to the fact that Europe was practically starving for fish and we had no competition in the fish markets. However, now that the war is over and our competitors are back again in the field with renewed energy matters will be different and we must immediately prepare to meet competition from Iceland, Norway, etc. One of the quickest and best methods is for us to send over fish of superior quality. If we are to get this superior quality we must immediately point out to the fishermen how important it is that they should produce a superior article, then if they fail they will only have themselves to blame; and to their sorrow they will eventually pay the penalty by losing their markets. It would be very unfair to blame the fishermen at the present time seeing that we exporters in our desire to get ahead of each other have really encouraged them into a loose and careless manner of curing. At the present time if you tell a fisherman that his fish are not well dried or the quality is poor, he will reply (and justly so) that why should he cure his fish well when the other fellow who brings along an inferior quality can get just as much for it as the man with good quality. There is not at the present time any encouragement for the fishermen to make good fish. Let the law get after the exporter and see that he really ships the quality represented on his bills of lading. When the exporter finds that he must ship the quality represented he will be more careful in buying and when the fisherman finds it pays better to have good fish than bad they will do their best to have it good. We must throw aside our political views and get down to united effort and in a very short time the results will be apparent to all.

I heartily congratulate the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on intimating that he will bring in a bill for the standardization of fish. I believe that it will receive the unqualified support of every member who has any interest in the fishermen of the country.

The object of the new regulations have been clearly defined by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I endorse all that he has said. Mr. Coaker has the interest of the country and the fishermen at heart, and will, I believe, in due course prove it to the satisfaction of all.

About two weeks ago our firm shipped a cargo of fish and within that short time we have been able to sell it at eighty-one shillings per quintal, cash against documents. Is that not better than sending it over on consignment and having to wait six or eight months for the payment? This sale was made through our Trade Commissioner, Mr. Stephen Smith. To my mind this transaction is not only a justification for the regulations, but is also a good reason why we should have trade commissioners in every market where our products are sent. We should have had them years ago. The London broker is undoubtedly an honest fellow, but at the same time why should we have a man in London doing what our own men can do with much better results.

I can quite realize that some of the big men of St. John's are opposed to the regulations, because to my mind under this system the small man and the big man will have an equal chance. While it is true that some of the big men of the city have often helped some of the small outport men, it is also true that many of them have often been opposed to matters that they thought would help the outport man to get to the top of the business ladder. When the outport merchant can ship his fish direct there is no reason why it should be sent to St. John's. Today's news from Portugal is very encouraging. I notice that the total consumption for the past week in Oporto was eight thousand quintals, or three thousand more than the previous week. Eight thousand quintals is a big consumption for Oporto at this time of the year. And in Lisbon last week there was an increase of twelve hundred quintals in the consumption over the week previous.

It is encouraging to know that the stocks held on the other side are being cleaned up. At the present rate of consumption Portugal will be wanting more fish before we will have any ready to send over. The winter catch on the West Coast was very small this year consequently we will not have much to send forward until September or October. I see no reason why we should despair, but at the same time we must be very careful and it is necessary for us to stand together and make a united effort in the interest of our fishing industry. We should have a propaganda in South America to boost our fish trade. There also ought to be a propaganda in this country in connection with the proper curing of fish. If we play our part well the fishermen will look after theirs and the consequence will be a happy and prosperous people, and where people are happy and prosperous there can be no Bolshevism. I feel sure that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and his associates will do their duty regardless of party politics.

Hon. Mr. Bennett in his speech referred to the housing problem in the city of St. John's. There is lots of room in the outports where men can work hard and be healthy and comfortable. Why do they not come to the outports to live if they are not satisfied with conditions in the city.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words about the high cost of living. Being engaged in business myself there is no reason why I should not be called a profiteer too, and probably I am—"wait and see." In our business we handle practically everything from a needle to an anchor, and I think I ought to know something about where profits are likely to be found. All the enquiry boards center their whole attention on flour and a few other food commodities. That would be alright if it was only necessary for us to have food. The people of this country must have clothes as well as food. It is quite true that the price of provisions and groceries is very high, but if the enquiry board would divert a little of its attention to the stores that sell dry goods, hardware, boots and shoes, they might find something of interest to the consumers.

The coastal service, well, Mr.

Speaker, it is in a very bad condition, and while we blamed the late government for it they are now blaming us. However I am satisfied that the present government will tackle the matter with earnestness and do their best to improve matters. As far as the South West Coast is concerned we have to depend entirely upon the coastal service. We do not enjoy the advantage of a railway and in Burin District we have not even a good road.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I wish to touch upon a matter, a delicate subject. It is sectarianism, and before I say anything further on the matter I wish to congradulate a gentleman on the other side of the house in the person of Mr. Fox, who handled the matter with skilful tact. It is only too true that for some time this has been going on, The serpent has been continually crawling into new ground. I believe that the newspapers are to blame for a great deal of it. Educated men who read this sectarian stuff in the papers pass it over with a feeling of disgust. But it is in the small outports where unfortunately educated people are only too often very scarce, that is where the newspaper that prints sectarian stuff often does a great deal of harm. Many outport people only see a newspaper at election times and then unfortunately they often take them too seriously. If they see an account in the paper that some one is attacking their religious organization it often makes them antagonistic to the church to which that person belongs. Such articles often create an outburst of sectarian feeling where good friendship and the best feeling had hitherto existed regardless of what altar they worshipped at. All the newspapers should refuse to publish such vile stuff as we have seen appear in them in the past. I think that the Prime Minister and the Hon. Leader of the Opposition ought to see that the papers supporting them are kept free from sectarian stuff, we might then get some clear literature. When we were campaigning in Burin District we advised the people to disregard the papers one and all. Denomination or religion was not mixed up with politics in our district.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a few observations on the matter before the chair, before proceeding, however, I wish to extend to you, Sir, my most cordial congratulations on the very high honour you have attained in being elected to the position of First Commoner of the Land. You have reached a position of great eminence and in congratulating you, I feel that I can do that Sir, with a greater degree of sincerity because I stayed right here and voted for you, and did not vacate my seat on that occasion.

MR. HIGGINS:—We did not do that out of disrespect for the Speaker.

MR. HIBBS:—I hope not, for your own sakes.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to join with the other speakers in congratulating the two hon. and gallant gentlemen who proposed and seconded the Address in Reply, Lieut. Small and Sergeant Major LeGrow, who have performed such splendid service on behalf of this Dominion in France and Flanders and have also done themselves honour here to-day. I am proud that we have two representatives of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment here with us, and I regret very much that we have not a representative of the Navy also.

The hon. member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett, stated yesterday that the late Government had endeavoured to place a representative of Britain's right arm in this Assembly, in the person of Mr. Matthews, who contested the District of Trinity. I will not go as far as the hon. member for St. John's West and say that a district should be opened without contest for gentlemen who served in either branch of His Majesty's Forces, but I do say Sir, that when a representative of the Army or Navy appealed to a district for political support he should at least be treated decently.

Mr. Matthews could not be elected in Trinity Bay last fall. He was associated with the wrong party.

No person who knew anything about the conditions North of Baccalieu expected to see the election results any different from what they were. It was no surprise to anyone that he was not elected, for it was a foregone conclusion that he had no chance. Even the Leader of the Opposition himself knew that his candidates would be defeated in Trinity Bay. The surprise to me is that they secured the vote they did get. I have yet to discover how they polled even the small vote they received under the circumstances.

To use the words of the Honourable Leader of the Opposition, I wish to jog his memory and remind him that we also endeavoured to place a representative of the Navy in this House in the person of Captain Walter Kennedy, who appealed to his native district after spending nearly four years in the North Sea, but unfortunately for the District of Harbour Main he was defeated. However, he took his medicine like a man. In regard to those two men there was just this difference, that while Matthews was treated decently, Capt. Kennedy was set upon, beaten and treated generally in a most outrageous manner.

MR. HIGGINS:—The evidence did not prove that.

MR. HIBBS:—I happen to know something about that evidence. There are times, Mr. Speaker, when it is difficult to restrain one's self especially when one is speaking conscientiously and knows what he is talking about. It has always been an accepted truism that those who live in glass houses should never throw stones, especially Sir, when those at whom the missles are directed are entrenched behind an impregnable fortress of honest purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the clear, concise and able explanation he has just given us with regard to the Fishery Regulations. We have heard a lot of adverse criticism of these regulations and a great deal of talk about the ruin they were going to cause, but I think that it must be admitted now that the opponents of the movement entertained mistaken opinions, and I believe this is quite clear even to the honourable gentlemen on the other side of the House.

And Sir, I want to point out and I do so in a good-natured spirit, that if in my criticisms of the hon. gentlemen in the Opposition benches I should say anything to disturb their feelings they must look upon it as a mistake of the head rather than of the heart. I do not want to pose as a political purist, but I do want to be fair and honest, and in any observations I shall make I shall call a spade a spade.

Our political opponents outside and hon. friends opposite are pleased to term some of us "Coaker Members" of which we are proud, but I would like to take this early opportunity of stating that personally I hold opinions of my own, and I hope the day will never come when I shall fear to stand up here and express them.

Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to magnify the sins of the late Government under Sir Michael Cashin, for God knows they were great enough. The electorate of this country have dealt with that in the most democratic way, and have punished them for their political transgressions, consequently, but a remnant to-day sits on the Opposition side of this chamber, but I want to point out to the House and to the country the remarkable conversion that has overtaken some of the hon. gentlemen opposite, and the manner in which they have so suddenly forgotten their past sin. I would like to know the secret of their sudden repentance and conversion. It might be that the Opposition side of the House has some wonderful influence for good or that there is a peculiar kind of magnetism in the seats which requires one to but touch them and in the twinkling of an eye so to speak, becomes purged of his political sins, and develops all at once a wonderful zealousness for the welfare and interests of the people and this country. Naturally, as a youngster in this House I am curious to know why it is that all these things of which we now hear so much of did not occur to these honourable gentlemen before.

Some of my friends here on this side have passed thro' the Opposition fire also and have become purged, and that's one of the reasons I am glad to be associated with them. Now, they will try to do some good for the country from the Government side.

Sir Michael Cashin has held a prominent seat in the Government of this country for many years and was Prime Minister up to the time that the people turned his party out, but he evidently forgot to even attempt to perform any of the good things he so eloquently described in that long speech he delivered here during the last day or two. There is not a conceivable public need or requirement that he has not aired since his political conversation took place.

Some of our Opposition friends had no need of the conversion spark, and of course these do not deserve so much credit as the others, for there is more rejoicing over one sinner who repenteth than over ninety-nine just persons who need no repentance and those who have been purged I suppose are the better for it.

Mr. Speaker, I have had some connection with this House before I became a member of it. I will not tell the story now, but merely say that although the honorable Leader of the Opposition and myself had a passage at arms on one occasion I have long since forgiven him and there is no ill-feeling. I have always had the greatest respect and veneration for the honorable gentleman. It had been said that he was to sever his connection with public life in this country, and leave for some more congenial clime, and I heard that with real regret, for I look upon him as the only link which now connects us in this House with the political life of the Colony for a quarter of a century past. In spite of our political differences I want to say that Sir Michael Cashin's name is writ large on the pages of this country's history, and there are many things throughout the years that redound to his credit.

But to continue, Sir, we have heard a lot of late about affidavits, and it reminds me of the saying that it's an ill wind that blows nobody good," for if the gentlemen of the Opposition had not this they would have nothing to hang their hopes and arguments on. Considering their recent record I do not know how they would feel facing a Government that has been returned to power with a larger majority of votes, and a greater victory geographically than any previous government in the history of the country.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—You are mistaken; what about Bond in 1900?

MR. HIBBS:—I said the greatest majority in votes cast, and I think I am right.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN::—No, you are not.

MR. HIBBS:—Very well, Sir Michael, I won't argue that point, but I maintain that geographically our victory was the greatest. We represent practically all the Districts except a few seats on the Peninsula of Avalon and that of the District of St. George's, but it will be remembered that the gentleman who represents that District was elected on the ticket of this Government and by the assistance of the policy of the Leader of this Government. It is true he has strayed away from the fold, but I have no doubt he will be with us again if we want him.

MR. MacDONNELL:—There will be a great many sheep astray from that fold before I go back.

MR. HIBBS:—But, Sir, there's another question I want to deal with, and it is a very delicate one, and one that is sometimes very much misconstrued. It is the question of sectarianism, in which many of us are great sinners. One would infer from the speech of the honorable member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett, that the Government party appealed and won their seats on a sectarian issue. I want to throw back that charge, for it is false and unfounded.

Now I deplore the fact that sectarianism has been used in the campaign. I won't say that it hasn't been used, because if I did I would be a great hypocrite. Since I knew what politics meant. I have known creeds to be used to a greater or lesser extent by unscrupulous men. I profess the Anglican faith. I belong to the District of Harbor Main and I was born and brought up in a Roman Catholic settlement. I was reared among Catholic friends and relatives who stand nearest and dearest to me; in my boyhood days I attended no other but a Roman Catholic school, and I say here today that there are Catholics I would give my life blood for, if need be, and they, I believe, for me. But let me explain the issue as I have seen it. Has it not always been said that on a political issue our Catholic friends stand more firmly together, but you can easily split up the Protestants?

MR. HIGGINS:—The reverse would be nearer the truth.

MR. HIBBS:—Perhaps so now, but we have to our shame and discredit been using our religious creeds in the past as political organizations. If you sow the seeds, nourish and foster this sectarian canker worm, and later on get hurt by this serpent of your own creation, then you have your own selves to blame. Here are the plain facts, Mr. Speaker:

The denominational division of this country is about one-third Catholic to two-thirds Protestant. The natural outcome of playing off one religion against the other, as I have stated, is to rally the Protestant body more closely together, and as they are in the majority, there can be only one result. I am assuming now, Sir, that the hon. member for St. Johns' West is right in the conclusions he arrived at as to the cause of the denominational make up of the present assembly.

Mr. Speaker, I deplore this state of affairs. Personally I am not a sectarian firebug. I never judge any man by the altar he worships at or the way in which he says his prayers.

Let us then try as gentlemen and Newfoundlanders to stamp out this canker worm that is sapping our social and religious life. What we have to say let it be said here, and the man or men who uses the sacredness of religion to get a seat in this House should in future be hounded out of public life.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in reference to the speech delivered by Mr. Fox. I think it was one of the finest speeches that I ever listened to, and I believe it expressed the sentiments and character of the man. I thought as I heard him speak I would watch his career, as I believe such men as he will tend to elevate our political life. I am told that he took a broad stand on his first political platform last fall, and I am prepared to admit that he was in good company in the persons of my hon. friends Messrs. Higgins and Vinicombe. I look upon Mr. Fox as a young man of exceptionally good character. When he made his statements in this House last Friday night I came to the conclusion that he was the model type of Newfoundlander.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—What about Mr. Cheeseman?

MR. HIBBS:—He is also a splendid type of young man. I want to say here, Sir, that men like Mr. Fox can be a great power in ridding this country of the sectarian canker referred to. I understand that Dr. Campbell, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, has imported some canker proof potatoes this year. If we don't improve politically, I hope someone will import 36 canker-proof politicians for the next general election.

There have been some very unseemingly things done during the past campaign, but as it always touches a sore spot to mention these things, and as I have imbibed a little Coakerism I want to smooth over these tender spots.

Sir Michael Cashin has said that the Government has prostituted some public departments, and I would like to jog his memory again, and remind him that he himself has been the greatest sinner in this respect, for he himself has prostituted government departments.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—What Department do you mean?

MR. HIBBS:—I mean first the Department of Public Works. In the spring of 1919 $500,000 was voted for repairs to the public works of this country, at that time we had just passed through a period of depression occasioned by the great War. We had had our backs to the wall for a long period when it took all our resources to support our forces, and help to carry on the struggle.

Our people were too patriotic to embarrass the Government or expect much money for any other purpose during that time, consequently, our roads, bridges, wharves and other public utilities were in a bad state. The wear and tear of years had rendered it necessary to vote a liberal sum for this laudable purpose. Consequently, most people looked forward with much pleasure to having all those improvements made, but Sir, when that half million was voted by the then National Government, I felt that the Union party would never participate in its expenditure. I expressed my belief to some of the Union Members at that time. I knew that there would be some scheme or manipulation to get rid of the Union members of the Government, so that the public funds belonging to the people of this country would be used to purchase their votes and influence the support of the electorate. And, Sir, events have since proven the correctness of my prediction.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Is that so? You are young in politics yet.

MR. HIBBS:—That is so, Sir Michael, and I could tell quite a story of how the betrayal took place, and that famous vote of want of confidence that you moved and that was seconded by the then Prime Minister, Sir Wm. Lloyd himself.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Tell the story if you like.

MR. HIBBS:—I don't think Sir Michael would like to hear that story told here to-day, but I intend to tell it later on.

Mr. Speaker, "The Local Affairs Act" passed June, 1915, permitted the people to elect their own representatives on Boards to expend their money in the best possible manner.

The people generally elected the very best men on the Road Boards, zealous men; men who were competent and had some knowledge of road building. It is a well known fact that I did my best to establish a better road movement. I repeatedly interviewed the Minister of Public Works, but without any good effect. I was at that time Chairman of the elected Road Board with jurisdiction from Horse Cove to Indian Pond, about 20 miles, and excepting the Municipal Council here, this was the most important Board in the country. The main highway Topsail Road had to accommodate about 600 motor cars, and not being built for present day traffic t was torn to pieces.

We had quite a problem on our hands while the war was on. We didn't want to embarrass the Government, but when the $500,000 were voted I figured out that as we had about 3750 residents, on a per capita basis, we ought to get something over $7,000.00. We began to make plans for the expenditure of this amount. Probably every Road Board in Newfoundland was looking forward to this special grant. But I had a suspicion in the back of my head that everything would not go right, and that there was going to be some difficulty in getting the amount that should come to our section of the district. Events that have taken place since then have proved that my suspicion was not without foundation. The Minister of Public Works played his old game of politics, but he was not alone to blame. Every man who constituted that Government was to blame, and principally the Premier, now the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, Sir Michael Cashin. The money was held back. I tried to get some to repair bridges that had rotted away. Wharves were in a bad condition. I tried to complete a harbour under construction, but my efforts only represented time wasted. The expectation was Hibbs will soon be going to some district, and then I will spend the money. I went to Fogo, and two days after he went to Harbour Main district and threw our money around. At 6.30 Mr. Hibbs moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker, at the time of the adjournment of the debate yesterday, I was making some observations on the prostitution of Public Departments by the late Government, and I would now like to continue. I had made special references to the Department of Public Works. I pointed out that the National Government allocated five hundred thousand dollars for the repairs and rebuilding of the Public Works throughout the country. This was badly needed, as I reminded the House last evening, we had passed through a period of five years, during which time very little constructive work was performed. It was the largest sum voted during recent years, and I will discuss this evening the manner in which this money was expended. I think that even the gentlemen on the other side of the House will agree that the money was spent in a most disgraceful and discreditable manner, for it must be admitted that at least three hundred thousand out of the five were thrown away to influence votes for the Government. Take the district of Hr. Main as an instance:

MR. MACDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The Honourable member has no right to discuss a matter that is subjudice.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I claim a perfect right to discuss the action of a public man in connection with public matters.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—I have heard the remarks of the Hon. member for Fogo, and nothing that he has said justifies me in calling him to order.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I submit with all due respect to your ruling that this is not a matter that should be discussed here while it is before the courts.

HON. MINISTER MARINE & FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out that a member of this House is responsible only to this Assembly for his words. This House is superior even to the courts.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to have your ruling as to whether a member who is duly elected can take his seat while under legal inquiry.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The subject cannot be debarred from discussion in this House, and a member is responsible only to this House for any statement he may make while addressing the chair. Therefore, if Mr. Hibbs is not out of order, he has a right to proceed.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I repeat that public money was thrown away. Did not witnesses come in and swear that they received money for which they gave no returns That is public information, it has been published in the newspapers and sent broadcast throughout the land, it is no secret I'm divulging.

MR. HIGGINS:—I know the whole story of that and will tell it later.

MR. HIBBS:—Must I accept your words as a threat or an insinuation that I am connected improperly in this matter?

MR. HIGGINS:—No, I did not say that.

MR. HIBBS:—The Local Affairs Act took the expenditure of public monies out of the hands of the politicians and vested that power in the common people, thro' the Eelective Road Board. That is the most democratic Act on our Statute Book. As a matter of fact the manner in which public monies were spent in the past was anything but right, in most cases it was spent to catch votes, and in all cases it was the return of the Party and not the return in labor that was considered. For that reason when the Union Party was returned to the House in 1913 this Act was passed, and they were instrumental in having the measure enacted, and I must give the Government under the leadership of Sir Edward Morris, now Lord Morris, the credit of supporting it.

Under the Act the people of every locality are empowered to elect their best men to serve on the Road Boards, where formerly the politician or member for the District would select them, and generally they were heelers of that candidate. Very often then we found incompetent men on the Boards, the only qualification necessary was to be an intimate friend of the Candidate, and this is not always the best type of man. But under the present system the men are invited to come to a public meeting, and to vote for the men of their choice to represent their settlement on the Road Board.

I don't think that I am infringing on the scope of this subject when I say that men who had no legal authority whatever have secured public money and thrown it away as if it had no value. What was done in Hr. Main was done to a greater or lesser degree all over the country. Was this fair? Was it honest? Was it right to ignore the voice of the people, and the men whom they had elected to spend public money in favor of irresponsibles who had no authority whatever?

Now sir, I want to make a reference to my own District. The District of Fogo affords a good example of what was done with public funds throughout the North. We have a population down there of something over 8000, and on a per capita basis, we should have received between $16,000 and $17,000. Mr. Oake was Sir Michael Cashin's candidate, and he also ignored the Road Boards as much as he dared. He spent or gave away in Fogo District about $5,000, so that we have about $11,000 due us yet. This money was spent somewhere else, and I hold the Leader of the Opposition responsible for it.

My honorable friend, the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, who so ably represented the District of Fogo at the time, asked repeatedly for the Districts share of this money, but to no avail.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—And he got his share, too.

MR. HIBBS:—He did not get the District's share of the special grant of $500,000; part of that was given to Mr. Oake and the balance sent to other Districts that had no right to it

Was this square dealing? Was this an honest, manly way to handle public monies? Was it playing the game squarely and above Board, Sir Michael? It was virtually robbing the people of Fogo District, and if there is one District in Newfoundland that need money and deserve money, it is the District of Fogo.

This was not playing the game squarely by the people of this country.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—You have a lot to learn yet.

MR. HIBBS:—I may be young in politics, but one of the things I do not wish to become is a professional politician. He is about the worse type of man I know in Newfoundland. However, I have learned enough to know right from wrong, and when you take a dry goods clerk out of a shop and send him to a District like Fogo to try and win an election in the manner I have referred to, I know that it is not playing the game, and the same thing applies to Twillingate and other Northern Districts. What is the nett result of all this? This Government, by Proclamation, will give every District in the country power to elect Road Boards, but can we expect those men in the light of what has been done, to be honest and take an interest in the duties devolving upon them, when their neighbors can go around bragging that "I got fifty dollars, and did nothing for it," or "I got a hundred dollars without striking a tap for it." That's the example that has been set, and I assure you the consequences will be felt; you have undermined all that goes to make a man straight, and honest in the handling of public monies.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer honorable gentlemen to section 50 of the Local Affairs Act, and I want to ask my legal friends opposite who are so ready at rising to points of order what legal interpretation is to be placed upon it.

That section reads:

50.—The Governor in Council shall, by warrant on the public treasury of the Colony, pay over to the Boards, on the first days of October and April in each year, the one-half of the following annual votes and grants properly allotable to the area over which the said Boards exercise jurisdiction, viz.:—

(a) The grant or grants for the maintenance, construction and repairs of roads, streets, bridges and breakwaters;

(b) Any other sums of money voted for general public improvements.

I claim, Mr. Speaker, that under this section no member has any more right to go into a District or into any section of the country that is under the jurisdiction of a Road Board and distribute monies for public works in disregard of these Road Boards than any one of the Honorable members for St. John's East has to send a gang of men down to work on Duckworth Street without the permission of the Municipal Council. If that happened, someone would be before the Court the next day, but because these districts are in the Outports they think that they can go there and do as they please. I have heard it said that this Act was so framed that you could drive a horse and car thro' it, and I sometimes wonder if such loopholes were left purposely by the legal gentlemen who a hand in framing it. I could deal more extensively with this matter, but I do not wish to take up too much of the time of this House. I could point out many cases of corruption and prostitution of public monies were it necessary for me to do so. The result of all this, Mr. Speaker, is that now we have people asking for money for services that really need attention, and on which these monies that were flagrantly squandered should have been spent. I trust that Dr. Jones, who I know will represent the District of Hr. Main ably, will see that the public monies are better expended in that District in future.

And now, sir, a word as to the Fish regulations.

Some of the gentlemen opposite are anxious to convince the House that they fought a clean campaign last Fall, and that they were all a bunch of "Simon Pure's," but I would like to remind them that they have been playing politics with the country's greatest asset, the Fishing industry, even during the General Election. Some of the Hon. members have admitted that they learned more about the regulations since the "House" opened than ever before, and in all probability that is true, but it is a pity that as public men they did not try to discover some real facts regarding the measure while the by-election was on in St. John's West.

Then the situation was deliberately misrepresented, and we heard all kinds of abuse of Mr. Coaker and the regulations.

While the campaign was on, and before, all kinds of insulting slogans and catch cries were circulated from the newspapers and platforms, and even now I imagine I can hear the catch cry of "Mad Mullah of the North" or the "Menace of Coakerism," or something else equally deceptive and insulting.

I think an apology is due the Hon. Minister of Marine & Fisheries for the manner in which he has been attacked.

My Hon. friend, the member for Ferryland, Mr. Moore, saw fit to make some very uncomplimentary references to certain gentlemen who occupy positions in this House, men who in their position were defenceless. Now, sir, I question the propriety of such a proceeding, and I must say that I did not consider it at all manly or proper. We are all human and no man likes to sit quietly while an attack is being made upon him to which he cannot reply.

I may as well name these gentlemen as Mr. Moore did. They were Mr. Carter, Mr. Winter and Mr. Barron and others, and Mr. Moore tried to point out that these gentlemen were not as patriotic as they should have been. He made allusions hat might easily be misconstrued. Now, Sir, when one hears a man talking like that, you are almost inclined to believe that he means what he is saying and has shown a good example himself and I would ask permission to point out a little of the patriotic activity of this gentleman which was so freely displayed by him while the Great War was on. I do not so much judge a man by his words as by his deeds.

Act Number One

On looking up the records I find one transaction where a Boiler known as the Leonard Steam Efficiency Boiler invoiced at $650.00 was brought in by Moore & Co., and entered free of duty. Allowing an estimated freight rate of say $120 this would bring up the cost of landing this boiler to $770.00. For the information of the public I might say that this Boiler was sold to Mr. W. Woodford, Minister of Public Works, to be installed in a public institution for $1,675.00, showing a neat little profit of $905.00 on this boiler, assuming that the freight rate is correct. I also find that my Hon. friend was in receipt of some favours from the Minister of Finance, Sir Michael Cashin This is only natural, I suppose, seeing that he was a colleague of his. During the years 1917, 1918 and 1919 no less than 33 entries were passed for goods amounting to $14,000.00 imported by Moore and Co., and signed by Sir Michael Cashin himself.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Certainly, there was over $4,000,000 worth entered Duty free last year.

.MR. HIBBS:—I am prepared to admit that it is possible that the goods were intended for public institutions.

MR. MOORE:—Yes, and churches.

MR. HIBBS:—Yes, and were for that reason permitted free Entry, but nevertheless I am curious to know if the purchaser received the advantage of the Rebate. Another curious fact I have noticed on inquiry, that several of those Entries and Invoices have been removed from the records. I do not say that this has been done for a dishonest purpose, I merely make this remark in passing. Now, Mr. Speaker, this Hon. gentleman who has pointed out several men as not deserving of positions in this House, has made a great mistake in throwing stones at other persons while living in a glass house himself I may also state, Sir, that during the past two and a half years this same Hon. gentleman has received from the Public Treasury no less sum than $93,683.00. He would no doubt have received a considerable amount over this if his contracts had not been cancelled by the present Government and it is quite obvious that it is this cancellation business which has made him so sore and disappointed. I also find, Mr. Speaker, that another gentleman very closely acquainted with the members on the other side of the House had received money covering contracts to the amount of $251,-$50.00. The gentleman I refer now to the Hon. W. J. Ellis.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—That money was on account of work on the Lunatic Asylum and other institutions. Did you expect him to do this work as a charity?

MR. HIBBS:—Not at all, Sir, I merely want to show how you looked after your political friends to the ex clusion of others.

Another gentleman who received considerable favours at the hands of our friends opposite was Mr. Jesse Whiteway, who received from the Board of Works Department alone $83,411.00.

My Hon. friend, Mr. Bennett thinks that returned veterans who appealed to a constituency should not have their seats contested Well now, I admit that would be a graceful act, but I wonder why you didn't think of that when you sent Mr. Whiteway over in Bay de Verde district to oppose Sergt. Major LeGrow, and I also wonder if this liberal patronage had anything to do with the resignation of Mr. Whiteway's seat in the Upper House so that he might be free to contest that district.

The firm of M. & E. Kennedy also received a nice little slice in the form of $106,609.00.

There is still another man with whom no doubt our friends are familiar, Mr. James Spratt. He received $33,775.00. In the general and bye-elections he was very conspicuous and it is not at all surprising when you consider that he had received such fat contracts and there was a great possibility of his losing them.

We may now take McGrath Bros They were also very active in the last election, and I don't blame them either. They received several thous and for painting institutions, which contracts, of course, they did not want to lose.

Mr. F. McNamara is one of the honorable gentlemen who supports the Leader of the Opposition in the Upper House. He received $3,640.00, a nice little sum, but still he must be feeling sore by this time that he did not get more when he had the chance.

And now I come to an old and genial friend of mine, and I am glad he got something. I would not like to hear that he did not get anything. He is smiling over there near the curtain. Mr. N. J. Vinicombe is listed as having received $8,062.90, and that was, I presume, when he was a prospective candidate for St. John's East. Now, Sir, if, as my friends on the Opposition charge me with, I am a little suspicious, you can hardly blame me, for I heard a lot from Sir Michael Cashin the other day on profiteers and profiteering, and he attempted to move an amendment, deploring that no mention of dealing with profiteering was included in the Speech from the Throne. He tried to make us believe he was sincere. Really he looked sincere, but now I want to ask him to define what he calls profiteering. In his zeal for the people of the country he talked five hours, and his address, while interesting and instructive, contained some remarks that I want to question.

I find that Mr. Jesse Whiteway was commissioned to supply some gauze, or cheese cloth, to the hospital. I find that in 1918 and 1919 he paid for this gauze as per invoices the sum of £791.7.0. If you were to make this up at $4.86 to the Pound, you would find that it comes to $3.489.66. This gauze was allowed to come in duty free, and rightly so. We must assume he paid a nominal freight charge. He sold this gauze to the Government for $6.931.90, making on that deal a profit of approximately $3.000. Was that an excessive profit? Would you call that profiteering? Sir Michael, and that's why I am suprised, if that went on with your knowledge, at your coming here and telling us you are sorry there is no legislation to deal with profiteering. Now, is that consistent? Is that the kind of consistency you were going to practise? If so, I am glad that you are on the Opposition side of the House, and not only that, but we are going to keep you there.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—In justice to Mr. Whiteway I might say that he bought a considerable amount of such material locally, that may be included in that bill.

MR. HIBBS:—This is the amount covered by his invoices at the Customs.

Hon. W. J. Ellis is another case that resembles profiteering. I am glad he is now recovering from his recent illness, and only that I know he is convalescent I would not refer to this matter. He supplied material for the Empire Barracks and charged and was paid for 201,366 feet of lumber. Now, this was an extraordinary quality of lumber. It possessed some strange kind of vanishing disposition, because we find that when the Superintendent of Public Works attempted to enumerate the quantity used in the building, and allowing 40% waste, which would indeed be excessive, all that could be accounted for was 146,216 feet; over 60,000 feet seems to have entirely disappeared. I think it will take us the next two years to investigate matters of this kind.

LIEUT.-COL. SULLIVAN:—Tell us the prices charged for it.

MR. HIBBS:—I am coming to that now. At the time this lumber was supplied, the market prices for rough spruce board were from $37.00 to $40 per thousand. Mr. Ellis charged and was paid $50.00 to $60.00 per thousand. The market price for match board was $40 to $50 a thousand. Mr. Ellis received from $50 to $75 a thousand. Was that profiteering? I merely point out these things to see if you are consistent and I ask if these things were done with your knowledge. If so, how can you justify it?

And now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to take Sir Michael Cashin to task for getting after members for doing that which he himself has done. When I was sitting here the other day I heard him accusing the Hon. Mr. Coaker and the Prime Minister of having quarreled, and when it came to election time of shaking hands over the matter. Now, I want to remind him that it is very dangerous to bring up things of this nature. If we were to probe into the political history of the past 25 years we would find that many strange things have been said and done. I don't think it is good grace on Sir Michael's part to find fault with and attack the Prime Minister and the Minister of Marine & Fisheries because they have forgotten their past differences, and let by-gones be by-gones, and come together to do something for this country. I would remind the Hon gentleman that he too has had unkind things said of him by men whom he afterwards forgave and became very closely associated with. I Would ask Sir Michael if he knows or remembers such a man as Alfred B. Morine.

I have a singular remembrance of a certain incident that happened in the House.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of Order. This man cannot quote past proceedings, or lay it before the House for the consideration of the House in the manner he is doing.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—While I have the honour to occupy this seat the same liberty that I accorded to the men on my right will surely be accorded to those on my left. I shall endeavour to observe the points of order, but if the points are not raised properly I shall have to keep to what the authority of the Rules of the House provides.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can draw from your remarks that I have elicited any censure. But with all due respect I wish to point out that my point was well taken and to add that even if the Chair was prepared to relax the rules heretofore that that is no answer to what is happening at the present moment. I direct the attention of the Chair to the violation of the Rules of the House perpetrated by the Hon. Member for Fogo. He has no right to quote in the manner in which he is doing, or to lay before the Chair anything that transpired in the past.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—May I ask how it was that Sir Michael Cashin was allowed to quote the other night my remarks in connection with the Hon. Mr. Squires.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say that we are altogether apart from the question. What happened the other night has nothing to do with now.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, apparently it all depends on whose ox is gored. I am disagreeably surprised to find out that the Hon. member for St. John's East is falling from grace so soon. He made a splendid speech the other night and I was delighted to congratulate him. But, now I find him sitting there and listening to Sir Michael Cashin quoting previous proceedings of this House, as it referred to the Prime Minister and the Hon. Mr. Coaker, without turning a hair, but just as soon as I attempt to quote references to Sir Michael then the Hon. gentleman discovers I am out of order.

If it was right for his honoured leader to quote those references. surely in all fairness, it is equally right for me. If the Hon. Member, Mr. Fox is unbiassed, and stands on principle, why did you not remind the Chair that the Leader of the Opposition was out of order.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to another point of order. The Hon. Member for Fogo has no right to address a private individual in this House, He should address himself to you and not to me.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I was going on to say when I was interrupted, that Mr. A. B. Morine on the occasion referred to, in addressing the then Hon. Mr. Cashin, used the following words: "Is there a law of God or man that you have not broken; if you received your just deserts you would be behind four stone walls. And yet, Sir Michael Cashin not only forgave him but he took that man Morine into his Cabinet last year, and gave him the portfolio of Minister of Justice. If Sir Michael Cashin could do that with Mr. Morine how can he consistently claim that it was wrong for the Hons. Messrs. Coaker and Squires to forget their past differences?

Now, Sir, I think I have delayed the House quite long enough. Before taking my seat, however, I would like to have a certain matter set right. We often make mistakes and this is an instance.

Up to the time when we heard the statement from the lips of the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Higgins, that he was no longer a solicitor for the Reid Nfld. Co., I was inclined to doubt the statement in the press. In order to remove misunderstanding I would advise him to take the earliest opportunity of looking through the International Law Directory, which carries an advertisement that the firm of Higgins & Hunt are solicitors for the Reid Company, and have same corrected to avoid misunderstanding. I wish to say that I accept the hon. gentleman's statement that he is not Reid's solicitor, and I direct his attention to this in a friendly spirit, because it is in direct conflict with the statement of the hon. member in this House.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, this has gone far enough. With all due respect to the Chair, the hon. member for Fogo has been extended such latitude that should not be extended him; an extension that has led to such a flagrant abuse of the rules of the House as we have just witnessed.

MR. HIGGINS:—'Tis getting like a rehearsal for a concert or a Kelligrews soiree.

MR. HIBBS:—You evidently do not want to hear this. Why is it that the law firm of Higgins & Hunt are stated in a reputable law journal to be the solicitors of the Reid Company when you come here and say you are not?

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I think it is clearly a case of personal privilege to rise to a point of order. The Hon. Member has undertaken to get himself into trouble. There is always a way to teach people even if desperate methods have to be employed. Referring to the International Law Directory for 1920 which he produces. As a professional man I take it that the man has no knowledge of the land in which he is wandering when he comes in here and endeavours to spring something extraordinary on this House. What the point is I do not know. Apparently, there is some remarkable thing about my history or how I get my living. He produces a book with an "AD" in it stating that we are Solicitors for the Consolidated Foundry, I do not know that we are. I think Mr. Conroy was the Solicitor for that Company. That we are Solicitors for the Reid Newfoundland Co. We certainly are not. That we are Solicitors for the Imperial Tobacco Co. We are, and the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation is not now in existence; also that we correspond in English and French. As a matter of fact we correspond badly in English and I am afraid not at all in French. What our cable address and other things are mentioned also. As I take it the object of the Hon. Gentleman in discussing my private affairs is to suggest that what I told, namely, that I was not the Solicitor for the Reid Company, was an untruth. If the Hon. Gentleman tries to question that statement further in any shape or form, I shall have to ask for a Committee of Privilege to censure him. I think it is indecent and disrespectful for any Member of this House to come along and act the scapegoat or the instrument for someone else. I say that the Hon. Member for Fogo displayed a little lack of thought this afternoon.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I want to serve notice on the hon. member for St. John's East, that while I am sitting on this side of the House and he on that side I am not going to allow him to bulldose me or talk to me again as he has this afternoon. If he thinks he can do it, well then he never made a bigger mistake in his life. He may be allowed plenty of latitude in other places to camouflage, but he cannot do it here, and the sooner he understands that the better. If I touched a tender spot while dealing with a matter of public concern, he will only have to take his medicine, and I may have to give him more of it before I finish. I hope I have too much pride and sense to allow any man to speak of me like that.

MR. McDONNELL:—You must hold a great opinion of yourself.

MR. HIBBS:—In view of recent events I hope the member for St. George's does not hold as high an opinion of himself. It is Sir the height of impertinence. Is it because the hon. member for St. John's East happen to be a lawyer that one can't refer to him. What is all the row about? What has been said to raise so many members' ire? I have not started to talk at all yet. I am only playing with them. I cannot say what will happen when I do get started. If the hon. member for St. John's East makes a statement that he is not the solicitor for the Reid Nfld. Co., I accept it, but if to-morrow he advertises in a daily paper that he is, surely Mr. Speaker I can comment upon it.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. This is not an explanation Sir, I want to have the proper thing done. And when a man in here discusses a man's private business he will hear from me. Does he mean to say that I am lying?

MR. HIBBS:—I said at the beginning that I accepted the hon. gentleman's statement. But when he says that he is not the solicitor for a Government contractor, and an advertisement from his firm says he is than it is a matter for public discussion, and any remarks I make I will not take back, not for any man. And I wish to call his attention to that fact.

MR. HIGGINS:—When the matter comes around again you will hear from me.

MR. HIBBS:—The hon. gentleman is welcome to say all he likes. I will take my seat and give him an opportunity to say all he has to say on the point, and he will find that the gentlemen this side of the House will take their medicine without interrupting and calling the attention of the Speaker to imaginary points of order . If my remarks trouble any person, well, I cannot help it. The question under discussion is a public one and I cannot do more for the hon. member for St. John's East than accept the statement he makes. If any differences arise between us I hope I shall have an opportunity to discuss them fairly with him, but I make no apologies for anything I have said.

In conclusion, I hope to have the pleasure of seeing the Hon. Leader of the Opposition returned to this Chamber for many years to come, and that I will be here to view him occupying his seat on that side of the House.

The remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, April 29, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Cape LaHune and the people of Petites for the erection of a telegraph station at those places. Cape LaHune has a population of 400 people and Petites a population of 250. This petition is signed by every man in these settlements and I strongly support it and trust that the department will give it its due consideration.

MR. TARGETT:—I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Old Perlican asking for a sum of money to repair the public wharf at that place. The wharf is now in a very bad condition and I think it would be a great pity to let it fall into total decay. It would be far cheaper to spend a small sum of money on it now and save further expense in the future. I hope the department will see its way clear to grant this allocation.

MR. GUPPY:—I rise to support the prayer of the petition presented by Mr. Targett.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the inhabitants of Point aux Gaul on the subject of telephone extension. They ask that Point au Gaul be connected with Lamaline by telephone. It is a very important fishing settlement, about three miles distant from Lamaline and the residents have to go to Lamaline to conduct practically all their business. Lamaline is not considered a safe harbor for steamers, consequently people have to wait there for three or four days to take passage by a coastal steamer, whereas if they had a telephone service people could remain at home and save considerable time and expense. I trust that this petition will be referred to the department to which it relates and receive earnest consideration.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition. The people of Point aux Gaul are an industrious and thrifty people and any facility that this Government can provide for them will be appreciated; besides it would mean a great benefit for the country generally; and any facility given to the class of people mentioned will amply repay the Colony.

MR. SMALL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Burgeo asking that a fog alarm be erected on Bore Island; also that a gas buoy be put at the entrance to Burgeo Harbor. The petition reads as follows and speaks for itself.

I might say that this petition is signed by 210 of the best fishermen of the country and it is also signed by captains Connors and Blandford, of the steamers Portia and Glencoe, respectively. We have had in the past lots of wrecks accompanied by loss of life, around Burgeo owing to not having a whistle at Bore Island. Fog is very prevalent there and coastal steamers at night time have to lie off between Burgeo and Ramea. It would be an easy matter to erect this at Bore Island by providing an assistant with the lighthouse keeper. I trust that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will take this matter up and give it the most careful consideration.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary who in the absence of a Minister of Militia is responsible for the Militia Department.

1.—To inform this House how or in what manner confidential documents in the custody of the Militia Department relating to returned soldiers 2583 Michael Doran, Martin Tracey and Pte. Milley, came into the possession of The St. John's Daily Star and were published in that paper on March 12th, 1920;

2.—And to inform this House if any enquiry has been or will be held into this regrettable breach of confidence on the part of some person in the Department of Militia;

3.—And if he is aware that the only legitimate use an officer or a soldier may make of documents or information of which he becomes possessed in his official capacity is for the furtherance of the public service in the performance of his duty, and that the publishing of official documents or information or using them for personal controversy, or for any private purpose, without due authority will be treated as a breach of the official secrets act, 1911;

4.—And also to ask him as head of the Militia Department if he is aware that the company conduct sheet of a soldier is to be destroyed on his discharge.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I beg to reply to the questions of Mr. Sullivan re Militia Department as follows:

1.—To inform this House how or in what manner confidential documents in the custody of the Militia Department relating to returned soldiers 2587 Michael Doran, 8253 Martin Tracey, and 2583 Private Milley, came into the possession of the St. John's Daily Star, and were published in that paper on March 12th, 1920.

No confidential documents in the custody of the Militia Department relating to any returned soldier came at any time into the possesion of The St. John's Daily Star, nor were such published in that paper or in any other newspaper on March 12th, or any other date.

2.—And to inform this House if any enquiry has been or will be held into this regrettable breach of confidence on the part of some person in the Department of Militia.

Answer covered by the reply to No. 1

3.—And if he is aware that the only legitimate use an officer or a soldier may make of documents or information of which he becomes possessed in his official capacity is for the furtherance of the public service in the performance of his duty, and that the publishing of official documents or information or using them for personal controversy, or for any private purpose, without due authority, will be treated as a breach of the official secrets Act, 1917.

This question is practically a quotation of a part of paragraph 1860 of the King's Regulations and Orders for the Army, issue of 1912. This paragraph comes under the heading of "Documents and Maps marked Secret, Confidential or for Office Use Only." The entire paragraph 1860 reads as follows:

"Documents and maps classed as 'secret' or 'confidential' are not to be referred to in any catalogue or publication which is not itself a document marked 'secret' or 'confidential' as the case may be. The only legitimate use an officer or soldier may make of documents or information of which he becomes possessed in his official capacity is for the furtherance of the public service in the performance of his duty. Publishing official documents or information or using them for personal controversy, or for any private purpose, without due authority, will be treated as a breach of official trust under the Official Secrets Act, 1911."

In so far as Mr. Sullivan's question, No. 3, consists of an exact quotation from Rule 1860 above quoted, it is correct army law.

4.—And also to ask him as head of the Militia Department if he is aware that the company conduct sheet of a soldier is to be destroyed on his discharge.

In the case of imperial soldiers, two conduct sheets are kept for each soldier, a regimental conduct sheet and a company conduct sheet. The regimental conduct sheet is the permanent document, and is compiled from the company conduct sheet. As the compilation proceeds the company conduct sheets are destroyed, this being done at definite periods. The company conduct sheet contains the details of the soldiers conduct, giving the exact date and particulars of every military offence. The imperial authorities do not keep a permanent record of all these details; they keep a summary only. Consequently the company conduct sheet, when summarised and its contents transferred to the regimental conduct sheet, is destroyed, the King's Regulations providing that before the company conduct sheets are destroyed the entries in the regimental sheets will be checked and completed. As an illustration—take the case of a soldier who had a record of being drunk on five occasions. The company conduct sheet would give the exact date and particulars of each case of drunkenness, while the regimental conduct sheet would merely indicate as a summary that that particular soldier had been drunk on five occasions within a specific period of time, but would not give the day of the month or the details of the occurrences. My honorable friend will be able to secure full information in all these particulars by reference to the King's Regulations already referred to. In the case of the Newfoundland Regiment the considerable trouble and expense of taking each soldier's company conduct sheet and digesting it for the purposes of having a permanent digested record of the soldier's career in the form of a regimental conduct sheet was not adopted, the company conduct sheets being kept, instead of the department going to the trouble and expense of having the soldier's record gone over in each case and specially summarised for a permanent regimental record. So that my hon. friend may have an opportunity of further studying the question in which he appears to be interested, I would refer him to the King's Regulations, paragraph 1919, under the head of "Regimental Conduct Sheets," where he will find that the regimental conduct sheets of non-commissioned officers of the rank of colour-sergeant and upwards will be kept as confidential documents.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I should like to make one or two observations with reference to this, with all due deference to the replies of the Prime Minister. Our Prime Minister is a lawyer, but I contend that these documents are confidential and soldiers who were on the other side know that conduct sheets over there were strictly private. Let me cite a case of divorce proceedings that were in court in England last year. Evidence was required by a lady to prove that her husband had contracted venereal disease in France, and an attempt was made to secure from the authorities evidence to prove this fact. But so strictly are the regulations carried out over there that nothing could be divulged; an appeal was made to the War Office, but also without avail. I contend that the documents referred to are of a confidential nature and that the information used by The Daily Star newspaper must have been obtained by someone connected with the Militia Department. It is stated explicitly in the King's regulations that even if the documents are not marked private, that they are official documents and cannot be used in controversy or in private.

I again contend that they were used for political purposes, and before this session closes I intend to go more fully into this matter. There has been a leakage somewhere and men who are friends of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment are going to insist and find out how that leakage occurred.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question on the Order paper of yesterday in connection with the Finance Department I wish to draw the attention of the House to the answer given by the minister to the question asked by my honorable colleague, Mr. Moore, for the number of officials dismissed from the department during the last six months. I see Mr. John Brazil has been dismissed for no services performed. I would like to point out to the House that Mr. Brazil has been in the service of the department for the last nine years. He was tidewaiter on the Fiona and several revenue cutters around the Island. He is a first class officer and there was no mark against him during my term of office. He belongs to Renews. He was promptly dismissed when the new government got in power mainly because he was a supporter of mine. I do not know whether he was and I do not care. There was no charge against this man up to the time I left the department. He was a first class officer and I got proof of that right here. It comes from a man who is recognized all over the country and who has been one of the best civil service officials Newfoundland has had. This gentleman is Inspector O'Reilly. (Reads recommendation.) I also have another certificate here and will read it. (Reads certificate signed by J. H. Dee, Inspector.) As I already pointed out he belongs to Renews and has a big family and was solely dependent on this monthly salary. From the department he received this dated January 28th, 1920. (Reads dismissal notice). I would like to draw the attention of the House to this case especially. The man who has dismissed this man has power from the Government to do anything appertaining to my district, and he was paid to run against me in Ferryland District in the general elections. But he did not save his nomination fee. The people of the district have been insulted, because a man who was paid to run against me but who was not able to save his nomination fee can dismiss officials as in this case. This defeated candidate has been handed over the District of Ferryland by the Government of the day to control as he wishes, and to appoint people to the various positions. This man is dismissed because he supoprted me. I will say right here that if this state of things is going to exist I am going to make things hot for the present Government of the day. None of this was done in Sir Edward Morris' time, Sir Wm. Whiteway's, or Sir Robert Bond's, none of it. This action reveals a debased contemptible mind.

MR. MOORE:—I want to say that Mr. Hibbs is not correct in what he says about that boiler. My bill covers not alone the actual cost of the boiler but also that o finstalling it as well.

MR. ARCHIBALD:—Mr. Speaker, as I rise to address this House for the first time I am mindful of the fact that I am in the presence of hon. members on both sides of ten to thirty years experience, and I do so with a certain timidity, not being an experienced speaker; but, however, the oldest hon. member had to make a beginning.

First, Mr. Speaker, I do heartily congratulate you upon the office you have attained as First Commoner of the land. I am proud of your attainment for several reasons, Sir, one of which is that you are a full blooded fisherman of the old stock. The whole country ought to be proud, Sir, as we are a fishing people and it is time that a fisherman should fill that chair. I am sure, Sir, that you will conduct its business without fear or favor to any hon. member of this House, and I feel confident that you will do credit to yourself and country.

I also congratulate Lieut. Smail and Sergt. Major LeGrow on the able manner in which they delivered their address in moving the reply to the Speech from the Throne. I am sure Sir, that all the hon. members will join with me in extending to them a real royal welcome and that at all times the hon. members of both sides of this House will show them that courtesy due them for their heroism and that special respect in which they are held by the people as Blue Puttee men. I am sure, Sir, judging from their first speeches, that the soldiers of this old land of ours have nothing to fear; the Regiment has in them men that can state their case well and at all times and get their rights.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I pass on to say that my appearance in this House as a public man is not of my own seeking as I made a strong effort to keep out of the field, having been brought out in two public meetings at Harbor Grace. I am only here, Mr. Speaker, because of the confidence placed in me by the fishermen and working men of Harbor Grace District. When I saw this body of people with such confidence I could not help coming, and I hope, Mr. Speaker, that with all my short-comings I will measure to some small extent up to their expectations.

Now that I have made clear the reason of my appearance, I want to clearly state to the hon. members of this House that I have one object and one only, namely, the betterment of the whole people, especially that of the fishermen and workingmen, to endeavour to create conditions that will make them more prosperous. Mr. Speaker, the cost of living today is tremendous, the remedy for this will need the honest effort of every man and especially that of hon. members of this House and leaders in every walk of life.

It is the especial duty of hon. members of the Government to conduct its affairs in such an honest and efficient manner that the people will reap the benefits. Honest administration is the only thing that will save this country and eventually will be the means of reducing taxation and increasing the earning powers of the people. I feel sure, Sir, that the Government will look immediately into profiteering and stop it; we owe it to the people.

Mr. Speaker, we are not holding seats in this House as private individuals (as the hon. member of St. George's, Mr. Macdonnell, who being elected by the people on the Liberal Reform ticket took it upon himself to place his District in opposition without their consent), but we hold them as a trust from the people. They are their seats and not ours. Therefore, Sir, we must at all times use the public eyes and make all our laws to help them and also put our foot immediately down upon anything that hurts them. I hope that I shall never treat my seat in the People's House as though it were Archibald's; it is not. I wish to take this opportunity to tell the general public that I regard it as a sacred trust and will treat it as such.

Mr. Speaker, our campaign in the District of Harbor Grace was fought clean. We spoke along democratic lines and did not use any abuse of our opponents. We criticised the actions and policy of the then Government, which was our duty; but, Sir, I will challenge any person in or out of the District of Harbor Grace to say that we talked any dirt, sectarian or otherwise. In the face of that, Sir, I noticed in the editorial column of The Evening Herald of January 3rd, 1920, of which the hon. member of St. George's, Mr. MacDonnell, was then acting editor, a veiled hint as follows: "The report that Mr. Archibald at Harbor Grace held a set of Roman Catholic prayer beads in one hand and an orange in the other asking his audience which would they accept." Now, Sir, this remark was evidently calculated to circulate a false story or it was a deliberate invention on the part of the editor. This advertised my name throughout the length and breadth of this country and perhaps further as a type of character which I most strenuously abhor. I must take this opportunity of stating to the public through the Reporters' Box that this oblique insinuation is an absolutely deliberate falsehood on the part of the inventor. I take this to be an insult not only to me, but to the whole District of Harbor Grace which elected me by such an overwhelming majority. This insult falls upon both Catholics and Protestants of Harbor Grace District and especially upon the Orangemen who constitute by far the largest voting force of the District.

I want to point out to the hon. member, Mr. MacDonnell, that the people of our district are of a class who would be the first to condemn a candidate who attempted to use such despicable tactics to gain an election.

The Opposition have introduced into this House a discussion of sectarianism, and in reply I would touch on what I consider the real history of it. The Hon. the Leader of the Opposition Sir Michael Cashin, and the hon. member of St. John's East, Mr. Higgins, say that this is the best place to have free discussion and wash our dirty linen. I agree with them that in this House is the place and not on the street. I also agree most heartily with hon. members of the Opposition that this sectarian division is a most deplorable state of affairs and one that all fair-minded people are opposed to.

I will go on to show that this division has been set up by the Catholic people themselves.

A large body of people look upon politics as a game and this game has landed us in a sorry plight politically.

Mr. Speaker, I do not altogether blame the papers, although they are pretty bad and hardly fit to read. I do not think that this is the real source of the trouble. I have traced this back to the time of the deadlock. When Sir Robert Bond failed to appoint a Speaker, His Excellency the Governor called upon Sir Edward Morris, a Catholic leader, to form a Government. He managed it and came to the country. At the time of the deadlock, for instance, Placentia was with Bond, but at the next election which was but a short while after, they completely summersaulted. What happened I am not prepared to say, but it looked funny. The result of that election was that all the Catholic seats were on Sir Edward Morris' side, except two, the present Mr. Justice Kent and Mr. Dwyer, with a good share of Protestants. That was alright; we heard nothing whatever about it. Four years after we had another election, and the same thing happened. We still heard nothing about it. The present election came on, and again the same thing happened; but this time with only two Protestants.

As a consequence of the repetition of these tactics, it appears that the Protestants learned the lesson and quietly united. The most unfortunate thing about this, Sir, is that the game was carried too far, and now the Protestants have been shown their power and have had a decided victory. The psychological effect of this is that a victory once won will not be easily given up, even though all newspaper agitation ceases. The people to blame for this are those politicians who have looked upon politics as a game. It can be no longer looked upon as a game for then the Catholic people will be in opposition for the rest of their lives. But as it is, Mr. Speaker, I venture to risk an opinion and that is that the next time the Catholics will have to vote with the Protestants if they want to be in power. If they do that, then the next election which will be eight years from now, will likely find the whole people mixed as they used and should be.

When we come to the question of fisheries we arrive at the very life and pulse of the country. At the present juncture and for some time past a new departure has been absolutely necessary and no government has had the courage to tackle it till now. The country is very fortunate in having as Minister of Marine and Fisheries a man of ability, strength of character and sincerity of purpose sufficient to cope with the many and great difficulties of the situation. And I am sure that after hearing the speech of the Hon. Mr. Coaker, which has been conceded to be a master stroke even by many outspoken opponents of the Regulations, we must be convinced that the public confidence has not been misplaced. It is very pleasing indeed to note that the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition, Sir Michael Cashin, in rising to compliment the Minister, stated that if this policy outlined was followed, he would bespeak the unanimous support of the Opposition.

This must be of great satisfaction to the Hon. Mr. Coaker coming as it does from such an experienced man in the country's trade. It is hopeful to note this spirit in the Opposition, for by the united action of the fishermen, Trade, Opposition and Government, a complete and practical policy can be worked out, which will bestow a great blessing on not only one class, but the whole population of the country. Better days are dawning for this little Colony if the whole people can only forget politics, prejudice and selfish individual gain to work together to carry this difficult and exceedingly important national question to a successful solution.

I will not detain the House, Sir, any further by going into the details which have been dealt with so ably by the Minister and other Hon. Members, and which will be discussed fully when in committee.

MR. SCAMMELL:—Mr. Speaker, before the debate on the Address in Reply closes, I should like to avail myself of the opportunity to make one or two references to some of the matters contained in the Speech from the Throne. But, first of all, Sir, I want to extend to you my very sincere congratulations on the honor that has been done you by this House in electing you to the dignified position of First Commoner in the land; a position which you have already shown yourself well worthy of holding. This honor is not alone an honor conferred upon you personally, but upon the fishing community of this country and on your native district of Carbonear. It must indeed be extremely gratifying to a man who has lived a life of strenuous toil such as yours to have reached such a position of honor. I feel sure that under your lead the dignity of this Chamber will be sustained.

I also desire to compliment the proposer and seconder of the Address in Reply, Lieut. Small and Sergt. Major LeGrow, upon the very excellent speeches made by them on that occasion.

The debate which has taken place over this Address has been of extreme interest to us all, and to us junior members of this House not only interesting but instructive as well. It will, I think, be appreciated, Mr. Speaker, that we who are in this Assembly for the first time naturally approach the occasion of our maiden speech with a great deal of timidity and with some diffidence, and if we are wise, we look to the conduct of senior members as our guide in matters of parliamentary procedure and parliamentary etiquette. Our knowledge of public affairs must of necessity be more or less academic, and when a man's knowledge has been derived chiefly from the text book and the lecture room, he cannot be expected to speak with that confidence which naturally characterizes the utterances of members more practically experienced in public matters.

While we look to the speeches of the older members chiefly with interest as to what they may contain by way of just criticism, useful information and valuable suggestions, we look forward to the speeches of junior members with the added interest of curiosity as to the manner of their delivery and the language of their composition. It was with this added interest that I listened to the speeches of junior members on the Opposition side of this House. On this account I desire now, Sir, to extend my congratulations to Mr. Fox, the Honorable Member for St. John's East. I regard the speech made by him on the opening day as one of the finest efforts in debate made in this House during this session. Its predominant note appeared to be the sincerity with which it was delivered, and if the Honorable member proposes to give to everything he will do in the future the same sincerity as he displayed on that occasion, then I predict, Sir, that he will go a long way in the public life of this Dominion. His address was at once interesting and instructive.

It is very naturally the duty of the Opposition to criticise, but, at the same time, that criticism should be tempered with a due amount of consideration for the dignity of this House. Some of the Honorable Members opposite have expressed a great deal of disappointment and surprise at the Speech from the Throne, many of them pointing out that the Speech is remarkable, not so much for what it does contain as for what it does not contain. Now, Sir, I cannot see that the Speech must of necessity foreshadow all the legislation that need be enacted at this session, and before this House closes I think that we shall have done a great deal more in the matter of legislation than was anticipated by the Speech.

Some members have held up the manifesto of the Leader of the Government as placed before the electorate last Autumn, pointing out the utter absence from the Speech of many important promises of legislation outlined in that manifesto. I do not think, Sir, that it is necessary for the Government to embody in its first Speech from the Throne all the legislation promised for a period of four years. In my opinion if the Government of the day is able to carry through even the legislation foreshadowed in this Speech, they will have gone a long way in the fulfilment of their pre-election promises, and gone a long way in justifying the confidence reposed in them by the electorate at the last general election.

In listening to the criticisms of Honorable members, I was reminded of that admirable parody of Bright's on some lines in "Grey's Elegy," which goes like this:

"For who to dumb forgetfulness aprey
The pleasing sweets of office e'er resigned,
Left the warm precincts of the Treasury,
Nor cast one longing, lingering glance behind."

and I wondered how much of their criticism was actuated by feelings like that.

Mr. MacDonnell, the Honourable Member for St. George's, expressed some anxiety as to the possibility of unrest and disturbances among the people. I do not deny that as a result of conditions directly attributable to the war, a position has arisen which makes for an unsettled public mind. But, surely Mr. Speaker, the greatest safeguard we, in this country, can have against anything of the nature contemplated by the Honorable gentleman is a Government so immensely popular and fortified with such overwhelming support as the Government in power to-day, and I can assure the Honourable Gentleman and this House, that stirring events will have indeed to transpire before the confidence of the electorate in this Government is shaken. We have gained their confidence and we are not likely to do anything or to refrain from doing anything which may on the one hand alarm the electorate, or on the other cause us to lose their confidence.

To my mind, sir, the subject which takes precedence of all others in this Speech is the subject of Coast and Inland Transportation. The Government, in this problem, has got a big question to face. The whole service seems to be disorganized, and the facilities at our disposal are absolutely inadequate to cope with the increased demand for freight and passenger accommodation. All will admit the difficulty of arriving at a successful solution of the problem due very largely to the shortage of available tonnage. I can tell this House that much trade is being lost to this country and this town in particular as a result of the condition of our Coastal Service. Particularly is this true of the West Coast. I regret that the Honorable member for St. George's is not on this side of the House, so that he and I could get together and think out a good Coastal proposition for the betterment of conditions on the West Coast. Let me give this House an instance. I have in mind a case that came under my notice at Bonne Bay during my campaign last Autumn. Two commercial travellers, one representing a St. John's firm, the other a Halifax firm, were endeavouring to sell flour to the Bonne Bay merchants. The St. John's firm was able to compete with the Halifax firm as far as the question of price was involved, but when the question of delivery came up the St. John's man was left behind. The St. John's firm might be able to deliver the goods in a fortnight or three weeks. The Halifax firm gave an absolute guarantee to deliver the goods in ten days, and consequently got the order. The firm of Farquhar & Company are giving the West Coast a line of steamers from Halifax via North Sydney, and Halifax firms are therefore attracting West Coast business. I do not say that West Coast firms are anxious to patronize Halifax business, but unless we can give them an adequate Coastal Service ensuring fairly prompt deliveries, the whole trade must go to Canadian ports. I realize that this subject of transportation is a big one, but we should tackle it at once, even if we have to go to the extent of building the ships ourselves. Naturally, this year, we shall have to put up with some make-shifts, but I am prepared that my constituents will be perfectly reasonable when once the situation has been placed before them, and a reasonable hope held out that the ships will be forthcoming another season.

Just a word, sir, in reference to the Fishery Regulations. I am not a business man and therefore dare not presume to discuss these regulations in relation to their effect on prices, but I think that the statements made by the Honorable Minister of Marine & Fisheries have conclusively proved, even to the most sceptical, that the regulations have stimulated prices, and obviated what would have been a severe disaster last season. There is, however, a phase of these fishery regulations that I consider I am perfectly qualified to speak on, that is the phase of the regulations or of the Bill that was brought in respecting the regulations, that relates to the cure and cull of fish. I come from a fishing family, and have served a four years' apprenticeship on a Labrador fishing schooner. As the travelling delegate of the Fishermen's Protective Union I have visited nearly every place of any importance in the Island, and I have always taken the trouble to view conditions as they prevail and to get the opinions of fishermen everywhere with regard to fishery matters. There is a decided opinion in the country in support of a move to improve the cure of our fish. There may be many causes why we are not producing a better article. To my mind fish should be thoroughly washed from the knife before being salted away, and when fish is being washed preparatory to being dried in the sun every fish separately should be washed and not a large quantity thrown into a tub and just mopped over with a swab. Fishermen have frequently expressed the opinion to me that dirty salt is largely responsible for bad fish. Sometimes in the Autumn salt is removed from vessels and resold the next Spring and perhaps used during the ensuing season. Such salt is detrimental to the curing of a good fish. As pointed out by the Honorable Minister of Marine the buyers themselves are largely to blame for the wretched condition of our fish. I have known cases where two schooners in the same port have arrived from the Labrador at the same time. One man takes all the trouble in the world to make good fish. The other man gives his fish a rough overhauling and disposes of it as quickly as possible, not infrequently receiving a much higher figure than the man who has taken the trouble to make a good article. This is only encouraging men to make bad fish, and the sooner the proposed bill is put on the Statute Book and a proper system of grading, standardization and cull inaugurated, the sooner shall we be producing a better article and obtaining better prices abroad. No one who knows Mr. Coaker will, for one moment, doubt his sincerity, and fishermen everywhere are prepared to stand by him and support him in this great work he has undertaken.

The Marine and Fisheries Departmen is at last receiving that attention which its importance merits. It is ceasing to be merely a department concerned with lighthouses and marine works, and is about to perform the important function which such a department in a country like ours should perform. The proposed research bureau in connection with that department is a long felt want, as there is undoubtedly abundant valuable information regarding the habits of our fish denied to us every year because of our having no such bureau. The question of profiteering has been brought forward and discussed by members on the opposite side of the House, and I heard a great deal of the subject during my campaign and during my recent visits to the Districts of Fogo and Bonavista. Especially was this so in regard to the question of salt, and I was pleased to note the statement made by Mr. Coaker while on this subject the other night. He has said that altho last year salt freight was 22 shillings and this year freight has risen to 45 shillings with salt costing one dollar extra, yet salt this year will be sold for $3.70 per hogshead instead of $5.70, as would have been the case if the same gentlemen who are now in the Opposition were controlling the Government as they were last Spring, when such outrageous profiteering on salt was permitted. This statement will give fishermen everywhere an added interest and confidence in the Government and demonstates conclusively that questions affecting the welfare of the fishermen will at all times receive the very earnest consideration of this Government, and I say that if this Government can give the fishermen salt this year at even one fifty cent piece less than they paid last year, they will undoubtedly enlist the wholehearted support of the body of fishermen all over the country. There is undoubtedly a very decided opinion in the country that the Government should do something with regard to this question of profiteering, and I, myself, should like to see the Government interest itself in this subject.

I understand, Sir, that there is an Act in force in England today under which a man or women who purchases an article and who think they have paid more than a reasonable price for it can avail of an opportunity to bring their case before a local committee of investigation appointed under the Act, and have their case enquired into. By way of example, I was reading of a case the other day where a lady bought a pair of shoes. She considered that she had been charged an unreasonable figure for the shoes. She took her case before the local committee and on investigation is was proved that the shopkeeper had charged a profit of sixty-five per cent, and as the maximum profit allowed on that class of shoe under the Act was thirty three and one-third per cent, the retailer had to give the lady a rebate equal to the excess profit in addition to having pay the fine imposed under the Act. If the Government could bring a scheme something like this, I feel sure that public opinion on the question would be met, and altho' I am not in a position to make an announcement, I believe it is to the intention of the Government to bring in some sort of legislation dealing with this question.

The subject of Sectarianism has received considerable attention from both sides of the House during the debate, and I want to say a few words on the subject myself. My opponent stated at a public meeting here during the bye-election that sectarianism had been responsible for his defeat and my success. I do him the honor of saying that he did not charge me with having used sectarianism, but, Sir, the natural inference from such a statement was that I had used it. The charge I have already refuted in the newspapers, and I want to refute it in this House. The people of the District of St. Barbe are as broad-minded and tolerant as any people in this Dominion. I have in mind now the case of the Church of England clergyman at Cow Head. He has during his parochial visits to call at a place called Port aux Choix, and while there he always boards with a Roman Catholic and conducts his services at the residence of a man who belongs to the Methodist Church.

Now, Sir, I want to ask you and to ask the House if anywhere in this Dominion there is to be found a better example of broad-mindedness and utter absence of anything like narrow sectarian feeling. And this, Sir, is an index of feeling that prevails all over the District. Sectarianism did not defeat Captain Kean. I won my election because I was with the Liberal Party, and if I go back to St. Barbe four years from now with the same party, I shall win again.

I want while I am on this point to refer to a remark, or rather to the general tenor of the remarks made by the Honorable Member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett, while on this subject. He poses here as the champion of the Church of England. Now. Sir, if the honorable gentleman has been filling that role in the past, I do not see anything in the records to prove that he has been a very ardent champion. I, myself, come from a good old Church of England family, and I yield second place to no man in my allegience to that Church, and I want to assure the honorable member for St. John's West that he need have no anxiety as to the interests of our Church being lost sight of. We, on this side of the House, who are members of the Church of England will see to it that we get our fair share of what is due us, being prepared at all times to be fair and square, and to give and take.

I should like, Mr. Speaker, to say a word in reference to the subject of Education, and the new Department about to be created. However, as the time for adjournment is now at hand, and as I have no desire to prolong the debate, I shall reserve my remarks till the House goes into Committee on the Bill that will be submitted. It is a subject that I am deeply interested in, having been, myself, a teacher for four years. I should like to say that I am as much in the dark as members on the other side as to what the Bill will contain; but I do know this, and I make the statement in order to allay any doubt that may exist on the subject, that we do not propose to upset the existing denominational system now in vogue, but rather to enthuse it with new vigor and efficiency. I am not so sure that I, myself, would be prepared to support a Bill that proposed to upset the existing denominational system.

I am proud, Sir, to be associated with a Government that proposes to establish a Department of Education. I want right here to pay a word of tribute to the Honorable Dr. Barnes, who will be our first Minister of Education. He is an old teacher of mine, and the first professional training I received as a teacher I received from Dr. Barnes. He is eminently qualified for the high position he is called upon to fill, from long, practical experience as a teacher, and from his intellectual attainments, attainments that have been enhanced by travel and study in all the leading educational centres of Europe and America.

I will not delay the House longer, but when we go into Committee on the proposed Bill, I shall have something more to say on this subject.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled Report of the Board of Pension Commissioners.

On motion the debate on the address in reply was adjourned until next session.

Pursuant to order and on motion on Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs" was read a seconed time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the Bill entitled "An Act to Amend Chapter 176 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series entitled "Of the Encouragement of Shipbuilding" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill I would point out to the House that it does not contain any radical alterations to the Shipbuilding Act of 1916. At the present time schooners up to the size of 120 and 130 tons receive a bonus. We have made up our minds that the class of foreign vessel needed in the future will not exceed 160 or 170 tons, and this class of vessel will suit the Newfoundland foreign market fish trade. I think the day has gone for larger size vessels. In future fish will be shipped in steamers. The Marine and Fisheries Department will take up this matter during the summer and will endeavour to have steamers leaving here every three weeks for Spain, Greece and Italy in the fall and winter.

Under this bill vessels with tonnage up to 150 or 160 tons will receive the bounty. There has been a considerable amount of strong feeling in connection with this bounty matter, as one ship at 130 tons received bounty, while one at 140 was excluded.

Another section provides that there shall be a rebate of duty paid upon any of the materials used in the construction of vessels that did not receive the bounty. Some vessels built during the past two years were excluded from receiving the bounty, as they were too large, but the builders expected and believed they would receive the rebate of duty, but we now find the Bounty Act deprives all vessels from receiving rebate of duty that are not entitled to the bounty.

Another point in relation to the rebate of duty is that after a vessel is built in the country it must be found that she was built in accordance with Schedule A or B of the Shipbuilding Act of Newfoundland. At the present time if a man does not build a vessel for a bounty he can put any kind of plank or other material in her which he wishes, and send her to sea, and there is nothing in the Newfoundland Law to prevent him from so doing regardless of how that vessel was constructed.

We want all our vessels built here according to Schedule A or B of the Shipbuilding Act, and when this Bill becomes law no one will be able to build a vessel in Newfoundland unless under inspection whether he receives a bounty or not. This is a very important point and one to which, I think, every honourable member in this House will agree to. We have no right to allow any man to use three inch plank when the plank should be four inches, and timbers eight inches apart when they should be four inches or six inches thick when they should be eight.

If keels for smaller vessels and smaller craft like the western boats are laid down, they will not be interfered with as they are built in accordance with Schedule C and will qualify for the bounty. We are going to take the power to have all vessels built well and under inspection, and I think every honourable member will agree with me that the time is fully ripe for taking that step.

Therefore, I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in moving the Second Reading of this Bill.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until three of the clock to-morrow afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, April 30th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

It was ordered that the Minutes of Thursday's Session stand over for confirmation until next session.

MR. HIGGINS: — Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the Prime Minister, I am able to present a petition from the people of Pouch Cove, asking the Government to provide a public wharf at that place. The petition is signed by the Rev. Mr. Tulk, Rev. Mr. Holmes, and Rev. Fr. Pippy, and so far as I can peruse by practically every fishermen in Pouch Cove. To those who are acquainted with the place they will appreciate that there is nothing, perhaps, that is wanted more in Pouch Cove than a public wharf. As far as I can remember the people of Pouch Cove have depended largely upon the use more or less, or private waterfronts. It's an important section of St. John's East, perhaps the biggest fish killing settlement on the shore, and I think it will be found that there are no people all along the shore in St. John's East that applies themselves harder to the fishery than do the people at Pouch Cove. They carry out their work under considerable disadvantages, as the place is usually storm swept, and I think it is really a reflection on the industry and determination of that class of men not to have a public wharf erected there. The amount of fish caught there annually by these industrious people is very large, and to their credit I may say that they are always alive to matters of public improvement. Within recent years certain things have been done down there that tended to improve conditions, notably the matter of a motor hoist was arranged and installed there. I hope that when the Marine and Fisheries Department takes the earliest opportunity to spend money that will not forget Pouch Cove, as I do not thing that there is anything that means more to the people of that place than the erection of a public wharf.

In light of the suggestion made they recommend that a suitable and practical man be sent there and report to the Government so that the best effort will be made to fulfil their request. Because it will mean so much to the men of the place, because it has been looked for so long, because it is endorsed by the entire locality and because of the importance of the settlement I support this petition with all earnestness and trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will give it the best possible consideration and while I recognize that because of past storms considerable demands have been made in the past on the Department, I feel that if it is at all possible something will be done. I therefore support the prayer of the petition.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I support the prayer of the petition presented by my honourable colleague, and endorse all that has been said, and hope and trust that the petition will be given the sympathy and attention that it deserves, as the grant of it's request will greatly forward the work of the people of Pouch Cove and the interests of the settlement.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker. I beg to support the petition as presented by my honourable colleague, and hope and trust that it will receive the consideration it deserves. There should have been a wharf built at Pouch Cove years ago. Shoe Cove and other places there badly need the convenience of a public wharf.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Apsey Brook. They ask for a grant of two hundred dollars to build roads and bridges. The people have inhabited this place for the last fifty years and during that period have not had any public road. They need these very badly, and I trust when this petition goes to the department to which it relates it will receive the best consideration possible. Mr. Speaker, I also present another petition from the people of New Harbor, and another from the people of Harcourt, Smith's Sound. They all require the same things, roads and bridges. They are badly needed by the various localities. On account of the crisis through which we have passed during the past few years we know, it is difficult to find much money for roads and bridges, but I hope in the future enough will be obtainable to fulfil the requests for the building of roads and bridges. I also present another from the people of Chance Cove asking for a road. I ask that these petitions be referred to the Department to which tney belong.

Mr. GUPPY:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the prayer of the petition presented by my honourable colleague.

MR. SCAMMEL:—I wish, Mr. Speaker, to present a petition from the inhabitants of Belburns in the District of St. Barbe. It asks for telephone communication. This settlement is only a small place, but I ask that it be not judged by its size. The fishermen of this place are very industrious and the nearest place is Daniel's Cove. They also ask that a boat call there. They must of necessity take their produce to that place and owing to the uncertainty of passing ships they suffer a lot of hardship, and sometimes have to remain there for days. If they only had telephone communication they would be saved a lot of trouble and expense. The request is very needful and reasonable. It is a request which if granted would mean a lot to the men of the District of St. Barbe. I therefore ask that the matter be referred to the department to which it appertains.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from some two hundred men, fishermen of St. John's West, asking that a canal or gut be placed at Freshwater Bay. I understand the project was commenced by the late government and there is now a lot of material left on the bank so it would be convenient to again start the work. It would be a great advantage as it would be the means of saving lives and property and the storms in the past have wraught tremendous havoc out there. The north east winds are felt very badly. Whilst this petition is signed largely by people from St. John's West I think that the honourable member for St John's East will agree that the advantage will be also felt in his district. The grant of this petition will relieve tne congestion felt at the North Battery in the east end of the district and also believe the congestion in the West end of the district. Iam sure the other members of the district will support this, and I hope the govt will look into the matter. I ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the prayer of the petition. I am glad that the hon. member for St. John's West brought this matter before the House and I am happy to support and advocate its operation. It was last year when this matter was dealt with and was found possible to start the work. As it was pointed out by the hon. member there is a large amount or material at present around the local ity and it is easy to start the work commenced last season. This gut in my estimation will be of untold benefit to the fishermen population of St. John's and will fill a want long felt both in St. John's and Blackhead. The situation in Black head as I understand it, is that the people there have almost invariably installed motors in their boats and it is impossible to leave them on the collars because of the storms that prevail there and the result is that they would be washed ashore and consequently destroyed. When as it often happens they come from Blackhead into St. John's they cannot go back. The petition ought to receive the most careful consideration of the entire government. In my opinion the settlement out there can be converted into a most desirable fishing village. Around the pond situated at Blackhead the land is owned by private individ uals and while I was in power I servenotice on the owners that some day they may have to sell their rights for a reasonable figure. On that account it will require a large sum of money to acquire the land. It would be necessary to acquire all the land around this pond to make a suitable place for the fishermen.

In Sir Edward Morris' time the idea of opening up of this gut was afoot but as the money was not available it was not acted upon. But I hope the Government will continue the work. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are influential persons and they ought to be able to have the great undertaking continued. I have great pleasure therefore in supporting the prayer of this petition.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the prayer of the petition presented by the honorable Minister of Finance. No doubt St. John's West will benefit greatly by the opening up of this gut and I am certain that the fishermen of St. John's East would in no less degree profit in having this gut constructed. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I heartily support the petition.

Mr. Speaker intimated that he had received the following correspondence from His Excellency the Governor, which he read to the House:

The Governor has the honor to communicate to the Honourable House of Assembly the apopintment of the Commissioners of Internal Economy of the Legislature in accordance with the provisions of the Statute 61 Victoria Cap. 1, as set forth in the accompanying certified copy of a minute of the Honourable Executive Council approved by the Governor on the 16th March.

Deputy Colonial Secretary.

MR. Mac DONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I wish, Sir, to move the adjournment of this House to give time to consider the uncalled for and unjust attack made upon me yesterday by the hon. member for Harbor Grace. His attack on me comes under two heads: First, the statement in The Evening Herald. Now Mr. Speaker, I am going to read the whole article in order to show up Mr. Archibald, and to show this House just what it does contain. (Reads article.)

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to explain to this House the reason for that article. There appeared in the columns of The Daily Star newspaper an article to the effect that the candidates for Sir Michael Cashin in Placentia and St. Mary's had made sectarian appeals while canvassing their districts last election. Mr. Walsh refuted this charge in an article to the newspapers over his own signature. Now, Mr. Speaker, was that not fair that The Evening Herald should comment on Mr. Walsh's article It did so under the heading, "A Complete Refutation." The letter was a complete denial that any such conduct had been resorted to by the candidates for Placentia district. We put the two cases together. We believe that Mr. Walsh made no such appeal, and we believe that Mr. Archibald did not do as reported. Now, Mr. Speaker, there can be put one or two explanations of the hon. member's action yesterday in this House. That statement was either made through malice or ignorance. If through malice, there are no words too strong to condemn the hon. member. If through ignorance there are no words of mine sufficiently expressive of the pity I feel for the low standard of intelligence of the man who made the charge. If Mr. Archibald had searched the back files of the newspapers as I had to do this morning I think that he would remember the date when the article appeared. It goes to show that ignorance was the foundation of his statement. I was not given a chance to reply yesterday, and he did not answer me in the hope that I would not get a chance to reply. There is only one course open, namely, that Mr. Archibald withdraw that statement. The second charge is more serious, particularly because of the manner in which it was treated. The hon. gentleman used these words: "If this continues there will be trouble." You allowed him to refer that statement to me, and you allowed him to make his own deductions. He drew the inference that I was. dealing with sectarianism when I made my speech and used these words. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the official copy of my speech right here, and there is not in it one mention made of sectarianism. But when I do refer to it there will be no doubt as to what I mean. I use no back doors. There is absolutely no justification for allowing a member to do as the hon. member did yesterday. I will not submit to that conduct in the future. If I am not allowed to answer such charges by means of the usual courtesies 'of this House, I will try some other method. Yesterday I could not give the chapter and the page of the manual on procedure dealing with such matters at the time, but I came to it later. But I was sure I was in order in demanding the right to answer this charge.

There is a specific issue before the House and I demand here and now, Mr. Speaker, that you decide whether the charges made against me by the member for Harbor Grace are true or not, and if not true that he ask the person who made them to make an unqualified withdrawal.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Speaker may I ask the member for St. George's what it is he wants you to decide.

HON MacDONNELL—I want the speaker to decide whether or not there is anything in my speech to warrant the charge of the member for Harbor Grace that I used sectarianism and, secondly, whether there is anything in the short article in The Herald referred to that makes any charge against the member for Harbor Grace, and further, that if there is nothing to substantiate the statements made by that member that he be asked to withdraw them, and I would state, sir that any man who has been accorded the unfair treatment that has been accorded me in the one-sided ruling of the chair, cannot be expected to have that respect for the dignity of this House that he should have

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the question submitted by the member for St. George's is one for your consideration. Iregret that I was not in the House at the time this discussion took place and am therefore not in a position to give an opinion, but I submit sir, that it is no part of your duty to read newspapers and dictate on any matter contained in them. If the member for St. George's charges the member for Horbor Grace with breaking any of the rules of the House he should state what rule has been broken before demanding a decision from the Speaker on the point.

MR. MacDONNELL—Mr. Speaker I submit that it is not necessary for me to furnish proof that what I say is true when I deny the statements of the member for Harbor Grace, but in order to save time I have submitted absolute proof of the fact and if it is not your duty to read anything appearing in a newspepers there is no reason whatever that I can see why you should refuse to read my speech and decide whether or not there os anything in it that could beconstrued into even a resemblance to sectarianism.

HON MINISTER OF JUSTICE—What I understand the member for St. George's to say is that he is not responsible for the newspaper article referred to and that the other charge is that he used language in his speech savoring of sactarianism.

MR. MacDONNELL—No sir, I accept full responsibility for that article but what I do say is that there is no charges contained therein against Mr. Archibald.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Oh, I see, I thought that you dis-claimed responsibility for the article in question, but I think that the matter of the construction placed upon a statement by either one honorable member of another is no matter for the Speaker. As to the other charge, that is also a matter of opinion. Personally I do not remember anything in the speech of the member for Harbor Grace that had any reference to sectarianism. I understand the matter under consideration by the hon. member when he used the words to which the member for St. George's took exception, was the high cost of living, and what he said was that if profiteering did not stop trouble would arise. I do not think that the member for Harbor Grace would maliciously misconstrue anything said by the hon. member.

MR. MacDONNELL:—It is the matter of Mr. Archibald's explanation that makes Mr. Archibald's meaning unmistakeable. In making his explanation the member for Harbor Grace said he was not speaking to the Catholic people of the country, nor to the Catholic members of the Opposition as a whole, but to me personally, and his remarks were made either maliciously or without knowing what he was talking about.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I am sure he did not make the statement maliciously and will be only glad to give a satisfactory explanation, but as to the newspaper article in question I do not think that you, Mr. Speaker, can be expected to deliver judgment on that. As to the reference to the speech I bear out the member for St. George's, and I am sure that anything said by the member for Harbor Grace he will be only too glad to withdraw. It is regrettable that these things should occur, but they are unfortunately sometimes unavoidable.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the remarks of the hon. Minister of Justice and thank him for them, I still wish to place on record my contention that it should not be made a precedent that, that which is a lie should be allowed to go by as a harmless mistake.

MR. ARCHIBALD:—Mr. Speaker, judging from the way the hon. member Mr. MacDonnell, just delivered his spite speech, it is quite apparent that I must have stepped on his corns. His effort in insinuating in editorial of The Herald of Jan. 3rd that I held an orange in one hand and a set of Roman Catholic prayer beads in the other while campaigning Harbor Grace district, has recoiled on his own head, and I want to tell him, Sir, that before I allow him to paint me in that garb he will hear more than he bargained for. He will have a job to explain to the people of this country why he allowed some of that vile stuff to appear in the editorial columns of The Herald just before the bye-election of which he just admitted full responsibility. For, Mr. Speaker, if I have to read some of this high class literature of his to this House he will find it difficult to explain to the Protestant people satisfactorily why he did it.

I am glad to notice, Mr. Speaker, from the editorial comment of The Evening Herald of April 30th, that in his attempt to vilify me (which is like water on a duck's back) he was so excited that he lauded Hon. Mr. Coaker to the sky when he says, it requires energy, brains and executive ability to reach the position which Mr. Coaker fills so "admirably" in this dominion. I say so too, and am very glad to note The Herald can tell the truth once in a long while.

I also note that The Herald is trying to take back water when they say that they might have been misinformed about me using the orange and prayer beads on the campaign. They also say that when they are assured that they are wrong they will not hesitate to say so. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope that he will have the good manners to apologise when he finds out the whole truth of the matter. For if he does not I will tell him that Harbor Grace district will resent the insult hurled at them. I assure Mr. MacDonnell that the Harbor Grace district people are not the kind that would allow any man to appear before them on a public platform using such despicable tactics, and he will find out that at the next election Harbor Grace district will teach him that they are not going to be insulted. Mr. MacDonnell need not waste any printers' ink in telling Harbor Grace district about Archibald, because they know him quite well, as he will see from the big majorities we rolled up at the polls; but he does not want facts, he wants camouflage. But Sir, he cannot put camouflage over me. If he tries it he will get back some unvarnished facts which he evidently does not like.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your attention to the fact, that up to the present time, the correspondence I have asked for from the Colonial Secretary, has not been laid upon the table of the House. The question I referred to Sir, was asked April 27th, referring to Mr. Harry J. Crowe.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I have been in touch with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines in connection with that matter, and up to this morning he was not able to find any correspondence, but they are pursuing the search and when it if found you will have it.

MR. SULLIVAN—I want to call the attention of the Hon. Prime Minister to the fact that it was not altogether a matter of correspondence between Mr. Harry Crow, and the Reid Nfld. Co. and I think if he will send an enquiry to some of the other public departments he might find what has been asked. I know there is correspondence, Mr. Speaker, and I am quite sure he will be able to locate it. Another matter, Mr. Speaker, and one which has a great interest for the people of the country, and one that has a great interest for returned soldiers. and one which the G. W. V. A. is watching closely is the question I asked on April 28th. Surely it is an easy matter for the Prime Minister to say yes or no, to say whether he is going to do this or not.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I don't know whether the Hon. member for Placentia is out of order or not, but the correspondence from the G. W. V. A. has been considerable. Some fifteen or twenty letters have been copied. The balance are being copied and he will have them eomorrow.

MR. WALSH:—Mr Speaker tne district of Placentia and my actions there have been discussed in this House, and with your premission I would like to make a statement with regards to a charge that has been made against me in the press. I want to thank the Hon. member for Hr. Grace for giving me the opportunity of settling once and for all the matter referred to in connection with myself with regard to the election in 1913. Though the matter never came before the House before the charge has been brought up in a paper some seven years ago. The charge was that I publicly exhibited an article of devotion in 1913 in order to gain the votes of the district. One of the chief reasons why I did not take the opportunity of referring to this matter, was that I have too much reverence, too much respect, too much regard for thearticle referred to, and too much confidence in the members who occupy seats in this House to think that I should have to make any explanation of this charge. If the charge made was that I used that article while canvassing the district, I plead absolutely guilty, and I want to say that since I was a little boy they have been revered and respected by me, and that I would be prepared to safeguard them with my life if necessary. I have carried them with me for twenty-five years. To the charge of using them from a public platform I pleed not guilty and every luckily sitting on the right of me in this house is one of the men who opposed me in 1913, and if there was any truth in that charge surely the man whom it affected most would have some proof. The matter has never been referred to for seven years Never have my colleagues referred to this matter because if Mr Sullivan saw this article and I think he saw this article, know that there were no truth in it. Now I hope that this will end the matter and I trust that never again will I have to refer to any article of devotion used by any denomination and I have the same respect for any article. Now there was a statement made in The Daily Star, that in the district of Placentia and St Mary's if sectarian dodger was used. Immediately I read this article I replied and absolutely denied the charge, as has been said. Since than I have discovered that there was a paper in one section of the district, but I want to say here this afternoon that this dodger or poster was not seen by myself or my colleagues, was not known of by either of us until polling day. The morning of polling day I was at Trepassey, and I saw this thing posted on a fence and I had to enquire where it come from, and who was responsible for it, and I want to say if any gentleman in this House, or outside this House, can say that I have used sectarianism in my district, or that I know anything about the dodger until the morning of polling day, I am satisfied to place my resignation in the hands of the Prime Minister. I hope that what I have said is enough, and that I will not have to refer to this matter again.

MR. JONES:—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the first time to address this honourable House of Assembly, and, I might say, that perhaps it is more difficult for me than it is for any other member to make a speech. I want you to clearly understand what I am. Some of the members are much younger than I am. Politically they are exactly the same age as I am, though, in point of years, I have the advantage. Some having been schoolmasters and received an education, while the education I received was all finished before I arrived at the age of ten years. From that age I started to get my education in the fishing business, and I have spent over forty years going to school and my education is not finished yet. In the light of all that I have heard during my short time in this House, I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I hope you will not be too severe in your condemnation if I make any mistakes, and I know that I shall make them. If I make a laughing stock of myself, then I expect you to laugh, or if I deserve your censure then I expect to be censured. I shall have to bear it as well as I can, but do not pity me. I extend to you, Mr. Speaker, my heartiest congratulations, and in view of what I am and who I am, I think I can share in the honor conferred upon you, because with the exception of Mr. Guppy, the hon. member for Trinity, I am the only fisherman, belonging to the rank and file of the fishermen, holding a seat here at the present time. I was on the Labrador last year and had the good fortune to secure a bumper trip of eleven hundred quintals of fish, and I confidently expect to do the same next summer. Therefore, in being a fisherman, I am sharing in the honor with you. I will not proceed until I congratulate the two gallant young men, the proposer and seconder of the Address in Reply. These two noble young men did their duty in the great war, which has happily ended. They have nobly done their part. They have helped to make the land and Empire that we are proud of, free. They have done their part nobly and they have helped to render stainless the flag that we all love so well. In the words of one long before us, "Cheers for the living and tears for the dead."

I have nothing to commend myself to you, Sir. I have no especial qualifications for a seat in this House except the hope that I have an ordinary share of common sense and some know ledge of the local needs and requirements of the people of Newfoundland and particularly the people of Twillingate District that I represent, and I desire to do something for those people, mainly for the fisher folk.

Now, I am not going to detain the House very long, but I think I might say something about fish. I know something about the catching and curing of fish, but regarding the marketing and the fishery regulations I am not prepared to attempt to speak. Having spent forty years at the work I believe that I know something about the catching and curing of fish, how to make it good and how it make it bad. I am glad that I belong to a class of people that are noted for the good quality of fish that they make. Of course I will have to be careful of what I am saying, because the man whom I sold my fish to all my life is sitting here listening to what I am saying, although I fear not contradiction, because I never made any bad fish. I suppose every fisherman would say the same. I think it is time for us fishermen to see to it that we are more careful in making our fish, because our future prosperity depends upon it.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition, Sir Michael Cashin, said the other day that it costs more to make bad fish than it did to make good fish, which is very true. When you let fresh water get on it and have to salt it over two or three times, especially so when after all the trouble he should get two or three dollars per quintal less for it. I have a good many times brought home cargoes of eight or ten hundred quintals and taken a good deal of it on my own place to make, but never allow any fresh water on it, we always have coverings for fish on the flakes. No one can make good fish after it has had fresh water on it, and if a fisherman has not got coverings he should put his fish in his store or stage. Now the thing that the fisher men need is not so much to be told how to make fish as to give him an incentive for making it good; if you do that you will have found the remedy.

Every fisherman knows that fish should be split before it gets soft. Everyone may not know that it should be split to the tip of the tail but they will soon take a hint when it is given and when it is made worth while.

Every fisherman knows that no liver or guts or blood should be left on the fish, every fisherman knows that fish should be washed clean and everything possible done to keep it clean and decent so that it may be fit to eat; everyone knows that it should be salted properly for Labrador or shore, which ever way it is being cured, the only way then is to standardize cull of fish and pay for it according to quality. It may be that some will have to learn to their cost, but better to learn that way than to put bad fish on the market.

At present it does not matter much whether you make good fish or bad, you get paid about the same. Much has been said about what may be done to better the conditions of the fishermen. I hope that the time has come when there will be something done along those lines. A friend reminded me of how we used to read the papers when the House was in session and look for something that might be said about the fishing interests of the country, but looked in vain. Now my friend said we cannot say that any more because much is being said on fishery matters, and more than that, we are glad to believe that something is being done.

Some steps have been taken with regard to the culling and standardizing of fish. It is absolutely necessary that we should get a fair price for our fish. Everyone is aware of the uncertainty that attends a fisherman's calling, not to be sure when you start out on a summer's voyage whether you will get any fish or not, is quite enough to worry a man, without having to worry over the price, but we are satisfied to put up with that if we could have a reasonable amount of assurance that we would be paid a fair price for what we got. I cannot believe that there is no way possible to be found to regulate prices, so that there will not be so much uncertainty. If something is not done to assure us of fair paying prices I am afraid that the time is fast coming when fishermen will be scarce. What if we went out on strike? Every other class or union can do so, but they say the fishermen cannot. Well, perhaps he cannot, but a great many of them can certainly leave the country, can go over to Canada or the United States and go fishing, where the government would protect their interests. I have one of the best fishing schooners ever built in Newfoundland, the traps and motor boats, everything necessary to prosecute the fishery, but if some one could assure me now that I would not get ten dollars per quintal for my fish next summer, I would telegraph to my son to-morrow morning and tell him to sell it to whoever would give most of it, and go to Canada of the Unites States, and when a home was provided the rest of the family would follow There would be nothing else for us to do. We are glad to know that something is going to be done by the present government, glad to know that we have at the head of that Important department of Marine and Fisheries, a practical, capable and energetic man, he is the fisherman's friend. I think that it is fitting that the President of the Fishermen's Protective Union should be Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We have very confidence in him, we believe he will look after the fishermen's interest, he not failed us in the past, when he does it will be time enough to go back on him, at the same time we do not bow down and worship him. We know he is a moral man, we know he may make some mistakes, but we believe he is sincere, and what he is trying to do is for the best interest of the country. As to making mistakes the man who has never made any has never done anything worth wile, and may I not say that if he had never made a mistake he would be much too good a man to do it here with the crowd of sectarian bigots and political sinners, that are here, judging from all that have been said and admissions that have been made.

Now Mr. Speaker, on the subject of sectarianism, there is an article which appeared in The Evening Telegram on November 18th, I want to read a portion of that article which was copied from a Toronto paper I take it that the fact that it was copied indicates that it was endorsed by the editor, and that he takes responsibility for it. I will read that part that refers to sectarianism and the people of the north.

Mr. Speaker, one of the Hon gentlemen on the other side the other day reminded us that we are not quite so fleshy on this side of the House as they were on that side. I suppose tnis means that it is natural to kick when you grow fat. If it is so, if the gentleman on the other side kick a little you will not blame them, it is only natural.

MR. SAMSON:—Mr. Speaker, upon rising to address this House for the first time, allow me to congratulate you on the high honor conferred upon you in your appointment to the Speaker's chair. I wish to extend my congratulations to our war veterans, Messrs. Small and LeGrow, the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply, for their splendid speeches. I also wish to compliment my honorable friend, Mr. Fox, upon his magnificent address, and I trust that his political record will be such that we shall always have occasion to feel proud of him.

With regard to sectarianism, it seems to me that certain politicians in this town during the General and the Bye-Elections were guilty of breaches of religious etiquette, and not being contented with what had been accomplished on the platform and in the press, had to drag religious sentiment by the neck into this Assembly. This town of St. John's was a hot-bed of sectarianism during the elections, and since coming here we have been fed up with it.

I am proud to be able to stand here, Mr. Speaker, and state that the tactics used in the election campaign in St. John's were absent in the North. We put up a clean political fight, and are not ashamed of our record in this respect.

I challenge any man either inside the bar of this House or outside to convict the representatives of Twillingate with using that abominable and disgusting cry of sectarianism. Religion was not mentioned by any one of us. It is disgusting to some of us junior members who represent clean districts to hear honorable members of this House harping so on sectarianism, some of my opponents who have posed as pure innocents in this respect being among the most guilty. Personally it matters not to me whether a man be Catholic or Protestant, as long as he is a man I have every respect for him. I am not a sectarian firebug.

A kind of sentimental appeal issued from the Hon. Mr. Bennett during his speech in relation to the Royal Nfld. Reservist whose fortune it was to be defeated in Trinity Bay. I contend that any sailor or soldier who dons the political uniform to go into the political field must take his chances the same as anybody else, and should sink or swim with his party.

I think the Hon. Leader of the Opposition in his speech the other night commented upon the wretched conditions existing at the Lunatic and Poor Asylums. I do not think these conditions could be attributed to the present Government, which has held office but a few months, but rather the fault lies at the door of past governments.

In connection with the creation of a Department of Education, some honorable friend in the Opposition ranks sarcastically stated that he suppose the new Minister of Education would only have to write out cheques. I contend that the lack of such a department in the past is one of the chief causes of so many illiterate people in this country. The training and grading of teachers, and salaries, the supplying of suitable text books, the furnishing and supplying of schools, the proper inspection, etc., can only be dealt with by a departmental head.

This subject of education I am very much interested in, as I have spent fifteen years in the teaching profession, and I naturally realize some of the many deficiencies in our present system. When this Bill comes before the House I hope to be able to take an active part in the debate.

We have heard much in reference to the Fish Regulations.

We all remember when the great F. P. U. organization was first started, and many times since, that it met with all kinds of opposition from all directions; but this opposition has been overcome by the organizing ability, industry, honesty, and tenacity of purpose of the Hon. Mr. Coaker.

The Fish Regulations are meeting with somewhat the same opposition, but in the end will, I believe, prove as necessary and useful to the merchants as the F. P. U. is to the fishermen.

The illegal spending of half a million dollars last fall in order to win the election was a grave injustice to this country. The money was not handed over to the legally-appointed Road Boards, but was presented to prospective Cashin candidates, and a great deal of it was wasted. Districts such as Twillingate were robbed of some of their funds and the money handed over to districts supporting the Cashin administration. As a representative of Twillingate District, I shall not be satisfied until such time as the allocations referred to are returned.

Most of us junior members are not here hoping to get-rich-quick or to win political knighthoods, but we are advocates of a clean public service, clean politics freed from sectarianism, clean legislation, and fair treatment to all classes and all creeds.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate you on the high honor that has been conferred upon you. I have not the least doubt that you will do the position credit. I also wan to congratulate the two soldiers who have spoken in reply to the Speech from the Throne. And while I am doing that I am reminded of some remarks that were made by Mr. Bennett regarding Mr. Matthews. I don't believe there is a man in this country who has more respect for a soldier or a sailor than I have. If the gentleman, Mr. Matthews, had come to me and asked me for my place in Trinity District, provided he had come out on our side, I would have given it to him. I believe it is my duty as a representative of Trinity District to state here that Mr. Matthews was treaed with every respect by the people of that district. It was not the man, but the party that they voted against.

I do not say that I gained my election in Trinity because I was Targett but because the party I was associated with was the best party that went to the country. I do not think, with all due respect, that because a man was a soldier or a member of the Royal Naval Reserve a voter should give up the dictates of his conscience to vote for him. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have the greatest respect for both the soldiers and the navy men because I look upon them as men who are willing to give up their lives for their country but, I say, Sir, it was their duty to do so. These young men went to look after the interests of their country, to protect their homes and guard their fathers, mothers, brothers and sisters, and some their wives and children. I say it was their duty and they did it nobly, and Mr. Speaker, there were other men who went from Trinity District besides Mr. Matthews, and some of them made the supreme sacrifice, and even though Mr. Matthews did go out to keep my head on my shoulders is any reason why I should vote contrary to the dictates of my conscience. While I hope we honor these men who went out to fight for us, we should not forget that many of those who stayed at home because they could not go did all they could to help the cause and to carry on the work of those who were gone, and I am happy to say, Mr. S peaker, that we had one man in Hant's Harbor who gave three sons and one daughter to the cause, and that reminds me of the noble part played by the women of this country in the world war. They fought hard even though they were not on the battlefield, they worked early and late, and by their knitting and other efforts helped to make those who were gone comfortable and happy, while we all know the heroic work performed by our Red Cross nurses. I do not think that there is any credit due to the men who passed these remarks about Trinity District.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman who represents St. Barbe has spoken about salt, and that reminds me of the different times I have heard of the trouble caused by bad salt in the making of fish. It is impossible to make good fish with bad salt and as the fishery is our staple industry it must be upheld by every means at our disposal. Our aim should be good fish and good prices, and I must say, Mr. Speaker, that we on this side of the House have been endeavoring to do all that is possible towards this end. For many years past fish in this country has not been made as it should have been, and while the fishermen are to some extent responsible for this, those who have been buying it are not entirely blameness. I am glad to say that we are at last becoming educated in this matter as well as in regard to our other fisheries. Some years ago when I was in the lobster business I came here to sell my lobsters I was a total stranger, although I was born in St. John's, and I did not know one buyer from another. I went to a man to see if I could sell my lobsters and the first thing he asked me was what kind they were. I said they were good lobsters, and he replied, "They all say that and sometimes it is scrapings they have instead of lobsters." I said, "I don't know anything about that but my lobsters are there and you can open every tin of them if you want to." The result was that I sold him my lobsters and if I wanted to do so I could have been selling to him up to this day. But, Sir, we Newfoundlanders have not been what we ought to be in the matter of handling our produce, and I am glad we are now becoming educated. I trust the time is coming when every article of fish we pack or cure will be nothing but the best and that Newfoundland will not be behind other countries in the quality of her produce.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that there are brighter days in store for Newfoundland, although on the opening day when I listened to the speeches of the gentleman on the other side, I thought that we were going to have another Black Monday, and I felt sorry for the fishery rules, and sorry to see so many fishermen in the gallery who were facing starvation, but I do not think that things are quite so bad as that nor do I think that they are likely to be. I believe that our fishermen are going to be comfortable and happy, for we have a Government now that will do the very best possible to improve our fish and thereby secure good prices, and that is generally what makes people happy. When a man goes out and toils day after day and winds up his season's work by getting good prices for his produce he forgets the hard work in the knowledge that he is well paid and that's what is going to happen in the future. I should not be surprised to see many of these young men who have left here to seek their fortunes in other countries coming back here to settle down, because I know, Sir, that they would not enjoy themselves as well anywhere else as they would in Newfoundland if they could make a comfortable living here.

Now Sir, it is not my intention to delay the House any longer than necessary, as we are getting along towards the first of May and I should now be in Hant's Hr. and I trust the time is coming when this House will be open for the transaction of the country's busoness in February or even January.

I don't lay the blame on any particular person, but I do wish that the time will come when we shall have the House open in January or February, becouse to my mind it has been very hot in this House since the session opened, and I think we have been needing a lot of ventilation In 1913 I come into this House and I sat in the cool shade of the opposition side. Perhaps it was better, because at that time I was a greenhorn. Whe I came up the winding stair in 1913 I felt pretty shaky.

I hope Mr. Speaker, the time will soon come when the opposition won't have to climb up a winding ctair, All the same Mr Speaker, I wouldn't like you to be under the impression that it is not a comfortable place down in the opposition room. But I attribute the comfort of the opposition room to our present Minister of Marine and Fisheries Mr. Coaker. I believe it was through him that the oposition room came to be so cosy, and Mr. Jennings will always keep up the good work in this respect and I may say that we are all going to keep up the good work. They say self-praise is no recommendation, but as far as that goes, we are all inclined to praise our actions.

The next subject I see here in the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, is the subject of education. My hon. friend up in the corner laughs at me when I say education. He don't know anything about it. He never knew the want of it like I did, Mr. Speaker, I never had a chance to learn. I was left an orphan at eight years of age, and missed my chance in life I had to plod along as best I could. It it a miracle to me that I am in the House of Assembly today.

Now, talking about miracles, I have a little story to tell about a man who went to church to hear a certain clergyman preach on this subject. I don't want to offend any one in telling this story. I want to be fair and equal to every man. We have all read the miracles in the good book, but this particular man did not know what a miracle really ment, and after the clergyman had finished his sermon he approached him and asked him to explain the meaning of miracle. The clergyman in endeavouring to explain the meaning asked him to walk ahead of him, and as he did so he administered a sharp kick to the inquirer and asked him if he felt the smack. The and replied that he did, and the man said if you didn't feel that kick, it would have been a miracle."

But that's not much benefit to the count country Iknow, yet it makes one laugh, and we need a laugh now and than to bringhen things up a bit.

Education means a very serious thing to me. I have a little just enough to get along with, but sir, I am in sympathy with the young generation of today, and from the debths of my heart I pray that the young folks will have some rules and regulations drawn up for their benefit, and that they will get the opportunities for education that are certainly necessary We want a system in this country whereby every boy and girl will get an education, and I intend to do all I can to help that purpose.

Shipbuilding—well now, I don't know much about that. I had to get a man to build a punt for me once, and I helped him in cutting up some timber for it. He afterwards paid me a great compliment by saying, "I never saw a youngster take things as handy as you do." Now I don't profess to know much about shipbuilding, but I know that we want our ships built to bear the storms they have to face, and I shall do all I can to support a law for improvements in this matter. I don't intend to delay the House much longer, but at any time I think it is my duty to speak, I think I will do it.

Sectarianism. This is a delicate matter to touch on, and it is not for me to say much about. I have much respect for all religions, and I don't care what atlar a man worships at. This is a personal matter between the man and his God. I don't think that in the past years there has been as much talk of sectarianism as there has been this year, but I am glad that the matter has been brought up in this House to be thrashed out once and for all, and that from now on we should never talk about it whether in the House of Assembly or in the campaign.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, before I leave this House to-night I would like for every man to walk across the floor and shake hands and say that neve. again will sectrianism be used as a weapon in a general election. Life is too short to bother about such stuff, and it is of no benefit to either the members or the people.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker I crave the attention of the House to say one or two words, but before doing so I would like to congratulate you on the high honour conferred upon you as Speaker of this House I am more than pleased, Sir, to see you attain to such an altitude.

I have also much pleasure in congratulating the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne for the able manner in which they addressed the House on that occasion. I refer to Lieutenant Small and Sergeant LeGrow.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I voice the sentiments of every Honorable Member of this House when I say that each and all of us welcome with joy these gallant heros who did so much for the preservation of Liberty and Freedom.

And I think sir that I voice the sentiments of every Newfoundlander when I say that every one of us is proud that the great world war that raged for four and a half years is over, and the men who went and fought our battles on land and sea, the men who preserved our families, the men who hammered back the Germans, the men who have been our saviours are home.

Of course a large number of these gallant men paid the supreme sacrifice, laid down their lives on the altar of their country, in order that we who didn't go may enjoy liberty and freedom.

To-day, sir, we sympathize with the parents and friends of these heroes, and to those who came home bearing the scars of battle, many of whom incapacitated for life, and to those who were fortunate enough to come back without receiving any wounds, to one and all I think that I am safe in saying that they deserve to be given every consideration, and everything possible done to meet their requirements and to assist them in life's uneven journey.

So, Mr. Speaker, we are free from Prussianism. The devastation that prevailed in the war zones has ceased, the thousand and one German atrocities are a thing of the past, the victors are home.

The thousands of hearts hitherto crushed by the burden of war are experiencing a new joy, and I hope and trust that that joy will never again be marred by the horrors of war, but that a peace, a lasting peace, a peace that will know war no more forever will be the result.

In reference to the Speech from the Throne I would wish to say that I think every Honourable member opposite seems to be somewhat in accord with every paragraph that it contains, but their chief points of criticism were on matters that it did not contain.

To my mind it would be altogether unnecessary for the Government to put all the good things they intend doing for the country in the Speech from the Throne. What's the use Mr. Speaker of having a Speech long enough to reach from the Bar of the House to the Speaker's chair?

If all the good things forthcoming from His Majesty's Government were outlined in the Speech from the Throne then I think the Honourable members opposite would be criticizing it in a different manner.

In all probability instead of holding itup for ridicule and using some of the slang vernacular they would be terming it an exaggeration, a prevarication, a mis-statement or a hyperbole.

So I think that the Government has adopted a wise plan not to have the good things outlined in the Speech, but to let them come as a surprise.

It is a well known fact that the usual style of Governments in this and other lands has been to open Sessions of their Legislature with a Speech from the Throne.

These speeches to some considerable extent have been more of a formality than anything else, and are sometimes followed by elaborate addresses from both parties of the Governments concerned, more especially the Opposition Party.

A Speech from the Throne, sir, and the multiplication of words that sometimes come after it, is of very little account unless real actions follow.

This has been proven to a very large extent in the history of all Governments the world over, more especially the history of the Governments of this country, whose policies and actions in the past have not been of a very high order.

I think I am safe in saying that the policies of most all of the Governments of this country has been "Get all you can boys and ask no questions." A policy that is dreaded in every self-governing and civilized country in the world. This may appear to be strong language but nevertheless true to a very large extent. Past Governments in this country, sir, promised much and performed little. Look at the platform promises of past parties, look at their performances, look at the parties themselves, look at the neglected districts, look at the ignored petitions that my friend, Mr. Walsh, the Hon. Member for Placentia and St. Mary's, referred to the other day, and I am sure you will agree with me that things have gone very much awry in the past history of Newfoundland Governments.

Past Governments have practiced such things as trading in patronage, awarding contracts and buying supplies without open and honest competition and many other grafts and scandals that have been so common.

Almost ever since Newfoundland has had Responsible Government we have been going on in practically the same old political rut.

For generations Governments have been elected and defeated, promises made and forgotten, statesmen have conjunction with cleverness, are men come and gone, elections have been lost and won, unscrupulous politicians and others who were after the Almighty dollar and self-aggrandizement have gone on hand in hand.

One Party has succeeded another in office for over eighty years and notwithstanding all the demands for reforms and all the beautiful promises made, and all the grand platforms drawn up when parties were in opposition. "Notwithstanding all these things," as one party succeeded another in office the new party coming into power didn't do very much to down the influence confronting it and forcing it to play the same old political tune on the same old political instrument in the same old political style and treat contracts and awards as rewards to be handed out to party workers.

The system has been an evil one, and one that has cost the country enormous sums of money.

It was simply this: "You scratch my back and I'll scratch yours."

There is another thing, Mr. Speaker, that has cost the country enormous sums of money as well to which I would like to refer briefly. That is the pure waste of public money on the eve of a general election in this country.

You know, sir, that it has been customary in the degrading politics of Newfoundland for Government candidates seeking election to the House of Assembly to appear before the electorate with the public funds of the Colony at their disposal, and to scatter these funds to the four winds of Heaven so to speak, North, South, East, and West, or any other course you like in order to catch votes.

This vote catching scheme has become an eye sore to the wealth producers of this country.

They are now wide awake to the fact that the hard-earned taxes that should be wisely expended to meet the pressing necessities and the requirements that they requested the Government for time and again have been squandered by sleek unscrupulous politicians on the eve of general elections. I am hoping, Mr. Speaker, that sometime in the near future a Bill will be brought down, passed, and placed on the Statute Book of this Dominion to the effect that any candidate seeking election to the House of Assembly who would so disgrace himself as to use the public funds of the Colony for political support, that that man whoever he may be, be put inside the walls of His Majesty's Penitentiary with oakum to pick or brooms to make until he repent in sackcloth and ashes. On the eve of a general election, Sir, is no time to expend public money, whether it would be expended economically or otherwise. If there is a surplus or a special grant to be utilized for public works, it should be expended at least six months before a general election takes place. I hope and trust, Mr. Speaker, that this waste of public monies, this vote-catching scheme, this ridiculous political bluff will cease now and forever more.

We are here now, Sir, in Legislative Session convened as standard bearers of a Liberal Reform Party, under the leadership of the Hon. R. A. Squires, whose manifesto is unequalled in the political history of this Dominion, and I hope and trust that each member of this Government will fully realize the meaning of the words Liberal Reform, "I repeat, Mr. Speaker, Liberal Reform" not in words only, but in actions. A Liberal Reform Party, Sir, is an absolute necessity. I daresay every man has done a considerable amount of thinking anent the former political situation of Newfoundland politics, and they are willing and ready to admit that there is ample room for improvement all along the political line, and that is what is needed to bring about reforms are men of sound moral character and real actions, instead of profession or cleverness. The good Book says "Faith without works is dead being alone." I think, Sir, that the writer might have added "Professions or cleverness without actions are dead also." Professions or cleverness is alright when not abused, and we give it all due respect, and fain would be the possessors, but when it leads a fellow to think that he is the cream of creation, the pink of perfection, the only pebble on the beach, then I say its wrong, and radically wrong and when it leads a fellow to appear before a constituency and appeal for votes on the ground be represented by a clever scoundrel than by a man of sound moral character and small ability, then I say it is ridiculously wrong. What the world needs to-day in business, politics and social life, are men who will do what is right, men of real actions instead of words, men of principle and honor instead of deception and bluff. The only absolute necessity in the politics of Newfoundland are men who are willing to put country first, constituents second, and self last. But sorry to say these kind of men in the politics of this Dominion in the past were few and far between. It was a very easy matter to find the man who was after the Almighty dollar and self aggrandizement. It was a very easy matter to find the fellow who posed as a political prophet, but who knew very little about the requirements of our people or what their grievances were. They apepared to be big political M.D.'s who knew all the ailments adjusted, and lots of other good of this country, and the remedy they prescribed in a great many instances was to send men to our Legislature who have passed with honors in the Universities of the world, men who would make black appear white, and white no color at all, men wtih their tongues hung in the middle—all bark and no bite. Character was never considered at all, or at least was always given a secondary consideration. Hence the absolute necessity for a Liberal Reform Party. What we need, Mr. Speaker, in our Legislature in conjunction with University training, in conjunction with cleverness, are men who will do what is right—men who will stand sentinel in the public interest. men who will take public monies into their custody and see that no wasteful expenditure is indulged in. men who will put laws on our Statute Book that will make the country a better place to live in, men who will present a Progressive Platform and then strive tooth and nail to have it put into effect, realizing at the same time that promising is one thing and performing is quite another. Men who will not tolerate wasteful expenditure which increases public debt to the extent of a camel on a cat's back, but rather do their very best to carry on the country's business in a thorough, economical and practical matter. I think such is the Liberal Reform Party.

Just one or two words, Mr. Speaker, in reference to the Fishery Regulations.

I read several letters of criticism to these regulations which were given publicity over nom de plume signatures in the Opposition press, which took no effect whatever; because I thought they were entirely partisan and written out of political spite, or the writers would have acted like men and come out over their own signatures, instead of signing themselves this, that, and the other thing. And I may say, Sir, that I didn't take it for granted that what the editorials in these Opposition papers said concerning these regulations were all gospel truth, simply because I knew perfectly well that if these same identical regulations were introduced by Sir M. P. Cashin and his Party that these very same papers would be moving heaven and earth in lauding them up to the sky.

Just now, Mr. Speaker, I seem to be fully convinced that these much talked of Fishery Regulations will prove beneficial to our staple produce. My reason for thinking this is because I have obtained quite a lot of information from what I call a reliable source, especially from Mr. Coaker's notes on the conditions of the various fish markets that he had the opportunity of visiting, and from the grand speech which that honorable gentleman favoured this House with the other evening, which lead even some of the Opposition members to confess that what Mr. Coaker said concerning these regulations were absolutely correct.

I am sure, Sir, that the fishermen of this country ought to feel proud to have at the head of the Fisheries Department such a man as the Hon W. F. Coaker. Of course he has his faults, like all human beings; but we can't get away from the fact that ever since November 2nd, 1908, at Herring Neck when he began to show to the country his organizing ability and his desire to benefit Newfoundlanders, that he has done a service to this Dominion which has been already of immense good to it and which will in years to come prove the most beneficial transaction that any man or body of men ever bestowed upon this country and its hardy sons of toil.

I was going to say a few words on Education, Mr. Speaker, but I understand that the Hon. Dr. Barnes intends bringing down a Bill dealing with that important matter, so I will reserve my remarks for a later date.

In conclusion I wish to say that I am proud to be a standard-bearer of the Liberal Reform Party under the leadership of the Hon. R. A. Squires, and I believe, Sir, that many good things will be done under his administration. I believe that the high cost of living will be brought down; profiteers will be muzzled or put in the "pen"; the tariff will be somewhat things will be done. And I would like to say to honorable gentlemen on the other side of the House, if they don't believe it, just wait and see.

MR. GOSSE:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in congratulating you on the high position in which you have been placed and I am all the more glad to see you so honored because you are a man of my own type, a fisherman. I also wish to congratulate my two friends sitting behind me, not only on their splendid speeches, but also on the active part they have played in the great war. After all, I do not give them much credit for this, because I consider that it was the duty of all young men who could to answer the call, and if I had been young enough I would have been there myself. I was sorry that I did not have a son old enough, but I had a nephew who spent three years in France.

Now Mr. Speaker, the position I find myself in to-night is one which I can hardly explain. It is my first time in the House of Assembly, and when I came here I expected to get some information, to hear something that would be edifying to us outport men and fishermen. You know, Sir, that the outport districts will not be represented by and by by anyone but fishermen, for these people know that straight honest outport men know better how to look after their interests than St. John's lawyers, and moreover they will want no graft because even if they got the chance they would not know how to take it. You will pardon me, Mr. Speaker if I make any observations which might seem offensive, for I assure the honorable gentlemen on both this and the other side of the House that I have no intention whatever of saying anything of the kind. As I have previously said, when I came in here I expected to hear something edifying or interesting, but I am sorry to say my expectations in this respect were not fulfilled. I have listened to all the members on the Opposition side of the House criticise the Speech from the Throne, which I presume is their duty, and if I were in their place I would do the same.

When they had finished it came around to the Government side, and the members over here retaliated, and in this way we shall finish the month of April, spend the month of May and perhaps the most of June sitting here trying to get the business of the country settled up.

MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, in common with my friends on this side of the House as well as with those on the other side, I would first like to extend my heartiest congratulations to you on attaining the highest position that the country could give you, namely, that of Chief Commoner. I do so particularly on account of your district being the next door neighbor of mine, knowing your interest in that part of the country, and that if there is anything that you are called upon to do to promote the welfare of the people of the district, you will be only too pleased to do it; and on behalf of the people of the district I extend my heartiest congratulations to you, for I feel sure, Sir, if any dispute arises with regard to the boundary line of the district of Carbonear and Bay de Verde, it will be settled amicably by ourselves without going to a higher tribunal.

It was not my desire to take part in the debate on the Speech from the Throne, as I have every confidence that the Speech from the Throne is well able to take care of itself. As I have said already it was not my intention to detain the House, but a foreign matter was introduced which there is no sense of reason in repeating over again or enlarging upon. I listened with a great deal of attention to the speeches made by gentlemen on the other side, and many of them I appreciated and thought well of. The speech from the Hon. member, Mr. Fox, was certainly a splendid effort. Especially was I struck with that part of his speech which some members on the Opposition side misconstrued. My only regret is that the hon. member, Mr. Fox had not delivered it some time before polling day. If he had, it would certainly have had a good effect, not only in St. John's, but also among the people in the outports. The address of Mr. Higgins was also an able one. Justice was done to himself and to the speech itself. I am sure I appreciated his effort very much indeed. I would also like to congratulate my hon. friend Mr. Bennett, for his able speech, if it was not for the fact that he introduced matters that were calamitous and unfortunate. Reference was made by him to the returned navy man who contested the district of Trinity and what he thought led to his defeat. In this connection I wish to say that there is no member on this side of the House or on the other side that has more reason to feel sore over this matter than I have. When Mr. Bennett was addressing the House and referred to the Trinity Bay affair, being somewhat new to parliamentary proceedings, I interrupted him saying I would take the opportunity to refer to the matter later.

But I feel sir, after all that has been dragged into this House, it is unwise to refer to this matter again. It is distasteful to me and to a man of any principle whatever. Any remark I may make I would like the hon. gentlemen on the opposite side to look upon it in the broadest sense, as I do not wish to be considered narrow. It is unfortunate for this country, that unlike other countries, we have no large questions to debate, such as tariff reform. The whole tenor of our questions is more or less local matter, and we are very apt to drag in matters that ought not to be drawn in when we are considering our country's interest.

There has been a lot of foreign matter brought in here these past few days, which I regard, and I believe the hon. members present regard also, as not being quite parliamentary. I will not refer to the matters which I have been accused of doing in the Bay de Verde district, as I feel sure that the members of this House are large enough and big enough to believe me when I say what I am accused of is absolutely false and there is no truth whatever in it. It is most unfortunate that in our political life the leaders of each party are surrounded by men who have no interest in the country, any more than what they can get out of it for themselves. These men have their very existence at stake during elections. They want to get something and are low enough to go to any depths or lengths to accomplish their ends. This is most unfortunate. The members of this House will see what I mean in this respect. They are associated with a party of men of a low type, with no honor, no principle, and with nothing in them which is essential to make a man. They are always ready to do anything and to act anything to bring their own ends about. I hope that the leaders of the Government and the Opposition will soon come to realize that all these tactics tend to their own destruction. There are those associated with them who impart to them unfortunate yarns which are false. Nobody feels more sorely about these stories than I do myself, for not only do I take it as an insult to me, but an insult has been cast upon eighteen thousand men of this country, ninety per cent. of whom are among our best citizens. The members on the other side, including Sir Michael Cashin, blame these reports for their defeat at the polls. This is not the case, and if Sir Michael is thinking that way he is thinking in the wrong direction.

SIR MICHAEY CASHIN:—What gave you that impression? Maybe you refer to the remarks of the member for St. John's West.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Well maybe the remarks were made by the hon. member for St. John's West. I am wrong. I thought something like that may be passing through Sir Michael's mind. If I am wrong I apologise. But as I said before, there were certain men who destroyed Sir Michael's party long before it was formed up. This may be rather a strange expression for me to make, but I think when you come to take into consideration the history and the political developments of this party for the last 12 months my hon. friends will say that what I state is true. Whatever reason there was or whatever motives the honorable gentlemen had in passing the vote of want of confidence in themselves does not interest me. This is a matter on which I am not very well informed, but what I want to refer to is the formation of the party after the dissolution of parliament, and I will say this, if Sir Michael's best adviser, Sir John, had been in the country, probably a different thing would have happened. In the formation of that party they got round them men who were sufficient to secure their own destruction. For the proof of this you have only to refer to the article which appeared in the Daily News and The Telegram dealing with Mr. Bennett and the Department of Militia, and what these papers did when my friend Sir John Crosbie was acting Premier of this country. These papers went throughout the country, yet when the Government was formed it took into its bosom these men who had already destroyed the party. If the statements made were true, they did not further the reputation of the party, as the result showed. When they took these men the country became suspicious, and I venture to say that if Sir Robert Bond had done the same thing, although he is a man of such wide prominence and splendid reputation, the result would have been the same as that which happened Sir Michael. Sir Michael, your party was destroyed by the very friends who helped to form it?

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Is that Mr. Cave's opinion?

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—That is my opinion, Sir Michael, or your party and all the members of which it is composed will bear me out. Anyway it is now time for us to forget what has happened and to get down to work and to do something for the benefit of the people of Newfoundland. I firmly believe that the newspapers are no benefit in a political campaign. The only news one cares to read is the foreign extracts.

SIR JOHN CHOSBIE:—Mr. Cave, do you refer to all the papers?

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Yes; my statement refers to all the papers without any exceptions. The only news fit to read is what comes from foreign parts. In the Bay de Verde district campaign the only paper we saw was the Daily News, and, in writing to my friends in the city, I told them to keep from the district all other papers, as the Daily News contained all the campaign matter that was needed. Every item in that paper was against us, but it brought votes our way. I think it is about time that we were doing something beneficial for the country and letting the people have a clear idea of the country's position.

The tactics adopted by the leaders of political parties remind me of the kaiser. He had secret service men throughout the country. They brought to him information that England was doing so and so and that she was going to be crushed out of existence. They influenced the old man's mind so that he at last became nutty over it to such an extent that he set the world on fire by declaring war. This is what has taken place in public life. Secret service men carry false information to their leaders and then certain tactics are adopted which terminate in disaster.

There are one or two remarks which the Leader of the Opposition made the other day to which I would like to refer. He referred to me as a pretty nice spectacle. I will really forgive Sir Michael for that, as I rather think he was laboring under a very great strain, and in the heat of debate he probably said things that he is now sorry for.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—No, I am not.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—I thought you were a broader man than that. I am sorry. I do not make any objection as it rather amused me when Sir Michael stated from the other side of the House that I was a pretty nice spectacle in the Shipping Department. This is a matter to which I do not wish to reply. When I came to this Department Sir Michael forgot that there were only three men fit for the position—Sir Michael, Sir John and myself. Now it was impossible for the Prime Minister to induce Sir Michael to take the position of Minister of Shipping, and Sir John would not honor us with his services, then surely all will admit, including Sir John, that the only thing left for the Prime Minister to do was to get the next best man, and Sir Michael will admit after all that I am an ice spectacle. Now, I do not wish this to be taken as sarcasm.

There were certain statements made by myf riend which were not correct, and I think he must have been misinformed. There are one or two extracts in the Daily News report of Sir Michael's speech, and if they are incorrect I should like my friend to inform me.

Referring to Minister of Shipping, Sir Michael was pleased to say that there was not a knob of coal in town. At the time he was speaking the Prospero was unloading 400 tons, and not only that, but Mr. T. A. Bown held in stock 450 tons, making a total of 850 tons in the city at that time. Sir Michael could not have been in possession of facts when he made the statement. He referred to industrial places being held up through lack of coal. We have kept enough on hand to supply those places because of the labouring class who would be seriously affected by the closing down of industry. He said that the minister did not know where to get enougn coal to bunker the steamers that were going to Sydney. There were four steamers in the harbor fully bunkered at the time the hon. member of the Opposition was speaking. They were held up because of the demands of the firemen. These steamers have sailed since without taking a knob of coal out of the city supply. He also said that the Minister of Shipping did not know where to charter a steamer to bring coal. The fact is a steamer was chartered, but circumstances arose over which neither the hon. leader of the Opposition nor the Minister of Shipping had control, and which made it impossible for the charterer to carry out the charter. The steamer met with an accident which detained her. Other steamers which were promised were held up by strikes in foreign parts. Th most uncalled for remark was when the hon. member said that we were wasting time with the Jobs of New York. No time was wasted with that firm. I have no doubt that the hon. leader of the Opposition had reference to an article in the Daily News of a little time ago in which they referred to the Jobs running the Shipping Department. Sir John Crosbie asked for certain information which was tabled. The next morning it appeared in the Daily News. We were trying to do everything possible to relieve the situation, and had no time to waste with any one particular firm.

At the time referred to the hon. member will remember there was lying in our port one of the steamers belonging to the United States Shipping Board, which we were unable to bunker without greatly depleting our stocks We were anxious to assist this steamer and took the matter up with the Shipping Board, and tried to induce them to send one of their steamers here with a cargo of coal. To show our sincerity in the matter we offered to take half the cargo which we would have to sell at a loss, as we could not ask the people to pay $23.00 per ton, when we were getting coal from Sydney and selling it for $15.00. At the same time Messrs. Job & Co., of New York, offered a steamer of about 3300 tons. Our proposition for this steamer was that she would take on board 1000 tons of gas coal and 500 tons to bunker the Hurion, the balance of the cargo we would take over for the city. The Gas Company did not get the permit through in time to avail of the steamer and the Shipping Board abandoned the idea of sending down the coal. So that the proposition had reference only to the Gas Co. and bunker coal for the Hurion.

The Gas Co. requires a special quality of coal, used only for gas purposes, and they should import their own supplies. The Minister of Shipping has no more right to furnish the Gas Company with coal, than he has to supply any manufacturing concern in the city with raw material.

Another statement to which I want to refer was that the management has been incompetent since Sir John Crosbie retired. I do not want to bring in any personal criticism, but it is a fact that Sir John was evidently unable to get coal to carry on his own business, although he had the supplying of the public institutions.

He could not get coal to provide these institutions with and had to go out of business, leaving these institutions on our hands to add to our difficulties. If it were possible for him to get the coal to supply these institutions he would not have thrown the responsibility over on us. There were many difficulties which confronted us when I came into office, the least of which was not the coal position, with little or no stocks in town and the winter commencing six weeks earlier than usual.

In order to feel safe and be assured of sufficient winter supply 20,000 tons of coal should have been imported during the latter part of October and the first of November. When we came into office stocks were very low in the city and we were compelled to enforce regulations as Sir John Crosbie had done in order to keep our fuel supply going. My honorable friend, the Leader of the Opposition has said that if the Minister of Shipping has had the courage to ask Sir John Crosbie to help him out the situation would have been saved. I hope, Sir, that the day will never come when circumstances will arise which will put me in that position. It may be news to the Leader of the Opposition that Sir John is one of my best friends and that I am always at liberty to walk in and take a seat in his office at any time.

Sir Michael said that when he was in Halifax there were seventeen ships there open for charters. If he refers to his visit in February I might say that there was no need for us at that time to charter any vessels as we had arrangements made whereby our supply was provided for up to the first of May, and if the contract had been carried out all would have gone well. If he refers to his visit in March then all I can say, Sir, is that if these seventeen vessels were there they must have been well camouflaged, and only he was specially privileged to visit them, for I would inform this House that we had prominent brokers in Halifax on the lookout there for just such charters, and Major Montgomerie who was invited to co-operate with us in the effort to secure tonnage, assured us that he tried his best and failed. We also had ten or twelve brokers in New York whose efforts to procure steamers for us were equally fruitless. I am not asking him to take my word for it. He can go to the Shipping Department and look through the correspondence that he will find there in relation to this matter.

Sir Michael further stated that he had spoken to the manager of the Dominion Iron and Steel Co., who told him that there was no difficulty in getting supplies. I presume Sir Michael meant tonnage, and if that is so I would like to state that not so very long ago we applied, not only to the Sydney office of the Dominion Co., but also to their Montreal office and to the president himself in an endeavour to secure tonnage, but to no avail. This will also be borne out by the correspondence on file in the Shipping Office.

He goes on to say that the Minister of Shipping had not made the slightest effort to relieve the coal situation. I do not think, Sir, that he was justified in making this statement unless he had the prooff in his hands. He was also in error when he said that coal was being doled out in quarter ton lots at the rate of $20.00 per ton. How is this possible, if as Sir Michael alleges, there is not a knob of coal in town? He is also inaccurate as regards the price, which has not yet reached $20.00 per ton sold in quarters, on which the cartage is materially higher than on tons and half tons.

Sir Michael is also incorrect when he states that during the war period coal did not reach more than $15.00 per ton. If the hon. Leader of the Opposition believes that statement to be true, then I must say that he bought no coal during the war period. The price reached during the war and which held for a considerable time was $17.00 per ton. It dropped to $15.00 simply because freight rates dropped $2.00. The price is regulated first by the prime cost of the article. which since January has advanced $1.35, exclusive of trimmings, second by the cost of freighting which has advanced about $2.00, thirdly by the cost of handling which had advanced about 40 c., making a total of $3.75 per ton, and would justify coal being sold at $18.75 per ton without increasing retailer's profits over those allowed by the late Minister of Shipping.

Mr. Speaker, I make these statements not merely to justify my position, but to inform the hon. member of the Opposition that he has been misinformed.

MR. BROWNRIGG:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer you my heartiest congratulations on the very great dignity conferred upon you by the men sitting on the left of your chair, and I am sure after your retirement from this office twenty or twenty-four years from now you will hand down to your successors as much honour and integrity as was left by any of your predecessors, who held this high office and important position. I wish also to offer my hearty congratulations to the hon. and gallant member for Burgeo and LaPoile, and the hon. and gallant member for Bay de Verde on their very able speeches on the Address in Reply from the Speech from the Throne. I feel certain that these hon. and gallant members, representing the two important districts that they do, will play the game of statesmanship with as much gallantry and dignity as they played the manly and noble game of soldiering.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in answer to some of the charges that have been made against me by the hon. the Leader of the Opposition. Sir Michael Cashin has stated in this House that I would be fighting under his banner, and if elected, occupying a seat under his leadership, if he had promised me the position of Minister of Finance and Customs, with his party if successful at the polls. If parliamentary etiquette would allow me to deny this charge in more forcible language than it allows I would do so. All I can say is that that statement is absolutely incorrect and unless the hon. Leader of the Opposition makes an affidavit that his statement was correct then he must lie under the charge of deliberately lying. I neither asked nor sought for any departmental office from the Leader of the Opposition when he interviewed me to contest in the interests of his party the district of St. John's West. When Sir Michael Cashin tendered his many friends an invitation to a dinner given by him at Smithville a few years ago he sent me an invitation, I declined same and would not accept his hospitality. At that time a great number of citizens were aware of this fact and some of them commented very strongly on my attitude. However, I had my own personal reasons for declining the invitation. In fact, I would not go to "Dinty Moore's with the hon. the Leader of the Opposition. I neither sought nor asked an interview with Sir Michael Cashin over political matters. The intermediary that was acting in the interests of Sir Michael Cashin and trying to use his influence in getting me to go out under the banner of the gentleman opposite can verify these facts.

I was always a supoprter of the Liberal Party under the leadership of the late Sir William Whiteway, and the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Bond. During my residence in the West End Sir Edward Morris contested the district under Sir Robert Bond and I voted for that gentleman and used my influence on his behalf, but when Sir Edward Morris, now Lord Morris, saw fit to break from that party then my interest ceased in the interests of that party that he came to the country with as leader. It would therefore be very inconsistent for me to break away from that great Liberal Party at a time that I was certain they were to be elected in the contest that was about to take place. In fact, during a conversation with my hon. friend the member for St. John's East, Mr. Vinnicombe, who will remember well that one day after a meeting of the Municipal Council we were talking over political matters, I told him that if he wanted to be on the winning side he should try and get with whatever party would oppose the late government. However, he did not take my advice and I think he will give me credit for knowing or at least for having some knowledge of who would be the winners in the contest that took place last year.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform this House that the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Higgins, asked my brother if I would not contest St. John's East with him in the interests of the late government under the leadership of Sir Michael Cashin, and the answer that was given Mr. Higgins was "there was nothing doing." With these facts I think it is unnecessary for me to say any more as to how my sentiments were running, and in pointing out to you who I thought would be the better party in the interests of this country.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to explain about another charge brought forward in this House at yesterday's sitting by the hon. the Leader of the Opposition. Sir Michael Cashin came into this yesterday and from a paper read to this House the hardship that was imposed on Mr. John Brazil, late tidewaiter on the s.s. Fiona in being discharged from the Customs Department. The facts are: On my taking over the office of Minister of Finance and Customs I found several men in that Department who were drawing fairly large salaries and giving no returns whatever to the country. Amongst them Mr. Brazil, of Renews, who I understand is a strong supporter of Sir Michael Cashin. This gentleman was drawing from the Customs Department $824.00 per annum and also $1.00 per day, board money when not on steamer, which was very often and his work consisted of going to bed and getting up again. This was the only return that Mr. Brazil was giving to this country for the salary he was receiving. When I heard these facts I told the Sub-Collector, Mr LeMessurir, that such occurrence in this Department should cease immediately, and informed him to notify Mr. Brazil that his services were no longer required. As to the date of the notification of Mr. Brazil's dismissal, it did not enter my mind. I was unaware, until Sir Michael Cashin read it to this House, that this gentleman had been dismissed on one or two days notice. It was not my intention to treat Mr. Brazil in such a manner, a thirty days notice, and if Mr. Brazil had seen me about this matter I would have arranged to have him paid one month's salary, which I think he was entitled to. I would ask the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox, if I have not already done this very thing as British fair play at least demands with another supporter of the late government, who resides in the West End and has been dismissed by me on the recommendation of the Civil Service Commission appointed by the late government, because he was incompetent in the performance of the duties that he was supposed to fulfill.

If I were vindictive and wanted to come back at the hon. the Leader of the Opposition, there is not one man occupying government positions in Ferryland district under my jurisdiction, or in fact under any other Government Department that would not be dismissed for supporting the hon. the Leader of the present Opposition.

I would like to point out another case that was on my answer paper to the question of the junior member for Ferryland district, Mr. Moore. Mr. Stephen Hall of Codroy, was employed as a customs official travelling back and forth from Sydney and ports of call on the West Coast this year. Every trip he was on that boat this country had to pay Mr. Farquhar, the owner, his passage back and forth, his board money when on her and when ashore we had to pay him $1.00 per day, for his upkeep, and mind you, Mr. Speaker, this man could not give one cent returns to this country in the position that he held because a steamer when coming into port must enter through the customs official in that particular place. This, Mr. Speaker, is only one of the few in which government offices were handled during these late years, and where would it stop if the majority of people, in their wisdom, had not concluded that it was time for a change.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to say a few words briefly before the motion passes. I may say that the artillery preparation that has been going on for the last two days will be stopped. Zero will be when I sit down, and the Prime Minister will deliver our counter attack, and I hope he will attain his objective. I joined with others the other day in congratulating you on your appointment. I now wish to sympathize with you as well, because I think you have a record. You are the only one in my experience who so soon after the opening has had two of his rulings questioned and put to the vote of the House. I think we have a House in which every member is quite capable of looking after himself, and the debating power is certainly a record. I would like to single out a couple of members for personal reasons. One is Mr. Scammell, hon. member for St. Barbe, because I think for a junior member of this House he has made one of the best maiden speeches I have ever heard in this Assembly and he is a credit to the House. Mr. Fox is another because he is a pupil of mine. He studied law with me, and I have watched his career with interest. I hope in the course of time the predictions made for him will be fulfilled, and I may say I think he is a decided asset to the House.

While, Sir, I congratulate the various gentlemen, at the same time I have to deprecate one speech made to the motion before the chair and that was the speech of the honorable member for Ferryland, Mr. Moore. I suppose the hon. Mr. Moore considers that his well known war activities gives him the right to attack some of the officials of this House and to sneer at men who wear rejection badges. Any man who entered that armoury and volunteered with the full and firm conviction that, as far as he knew, he was going to lay down his life, but was not so fortunate as those who went across to the other side, did all that was humanly possible for him to do. The Great War Veterans' Association and the men who went over and fought and were wounded recognize that fact. Numbers of rejected men are members of the G.W.V.A. and I say that it does not become any member, I do not care who he is, to sneer at any man because he was not at the front if he has offered so to do.

I would like to point out to the younger members on this side of the House advisedly I may say, that it is eighteen years ago since I won my first election, although you may not notice any gray hairs in my head. It is 17 years since I first sat in this House and I want you to believe that, with the exception of the Leader of the Opposition, who is the father of the House, though I cannot call myself his step-father, I am his nearest relation, I am senior and he is the only member in the House to-day who sat here before I did. I only hope that he will continue to be the father of the House for some years yet, and that he will find his present chair very comfortable.

Hon. members on the other side, I think nearly all of them remarked that there was absolutely nothing in the Speech from the Throne. As we have been here now over ten days discussing it, it really does look as if the Executive Council put something in it. Our hon. friend, Capt. Gosse objects to being here until June, but if the Speech from the Throne that contained nothing occupied over ten days, then if it contained something he would be here until October next. When listening to the speeches from the other side, I could not help thinking how the Leader of the Government who had been in office for ten years had been waiting to have an opportunity afforded him to criticize somebody else's Speech from the Throne. I have sat in opposition when the present leader of the Opposition was on this side.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—But I always managed to get back.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—But when I did come back I came on the Government side every time. I have seen Speeches from the Throne torn to shreds by the Opposition party at that time. We were always glad to have the opportunity. I want to warn younger members on this side that it is all part and parcel of parliamentary life.

When the hon. member for Fogo was speaking, he referred to the fact that the present government had the largest majority ever given to any government in this Island. It was questioned by the other side. Now I have had complied a few figures that I think may be of interest to hon. members. The biggest majority previous to this one was in the year 1900 when Sir Robert Bond came back with thirty-two members against four for the Opposition, the latter having three seats in Bonavista, and one in Port de Grave. The total votes cast for Bond candidates was 51,657 against 29,267 for the Opposition, but at that time there were independents in the field as follows: one in St. Barbe, one in Ferryland, one in Hr. Main, another in Placentia and another in St. John's East. The total vote against Bond was 30,809. The majority for Bond was 22,390, which was the biggest up to that time. In 1904 Bond was again returned to power and came back with a party of thirty members. The vote cast for Bond candidates was 52,932 against 34,662 for the Opposition, giving a majority of 18,170 or four thousand of a majority less than what he got in 1900. The next big majority was secured by the leader of the present government. In November last Squires and his party polled 72,687 against 21,330 for the Opposition which gave the Government, as Mr. Hibbs said, a record majority of 51,-157. It is no wonder then, Sir, that Opposition members have taken the earliest opportunity since this House opened to criticise the Government. They have four years ahead of them, working overtime, to try and reduce that majority.

Referring to the Labrador Boundary question, I think I would be ungenerous and uncouth if I did not thank the hon. members who so wisely referred to me in connection with this matter. I appreciate it and hope that their confidence will not be misplaced. This question, which has been looming up over and over again, will, I hope be decided within the next eighteen months. It may be of interest to know something about that, because it is a question that means a great deal to Newfoundland it we can get our proper share of Labrador. This dispute has been going on now since 1903. I think hon. members on the other side will agree that for some time it has been referred to in the Speech from the Throne. It must be remembered in dealing with this question that we are up against a large propostion in many ways, but the chief one is this, that Newfoundland is a small country, its influence is small, it has a small population and in fighting its battles against the Dominion of Canada, which is so big, powerful and influential, it is natural to suppose that share of the Labrador peninsula given to the Province of Quebec will be large. Legal gentlemen handling the case up to this time had in view. The late Mr. M. W. Furlong gave a lot of time and attention to this matter. He protested from the first that there was to be no question to be submitted to the Privy Council, which would enable them to arrive at a decision, except purely on points of law, and that is why the question is going on without being settled. The Dominion wanted to have the question submitted to the Privy Council in this form: "Please define boundary line between Newfoundland and Quebec in the Labrador Peninsula." The late Mr. Furlong stuck out against this and consistently asked that the terms of reference be "What is the boundary line between Quebec and Newfoundland in Labrador under the law." In order that there should be no outside influence brought to bear upon the Privy Council, we have all the time taken the position that that boundary line must be determined according to law. The late government agreed upon the terms of reference to be submitted to the Privy Council, but something has been done since I have assumed the position of Attorney General. We have agreed that the terms of reference will be submitted in this way: "What is the boundary line between Quebec and Newfoundland on the Labrador peninsula according to statutes, proclamations and orders in council." To carry out and maintain our position solicitors on the other side agree that the Privy Council will be guided by law only in dealing with the question. That is the present position. We have agreed and Canada has agreed and now we are discussing the exchange of pleas. I may say that we have retained the finest lawyer in the United Kingdom in the person of Sir John Simon, who was Attorney General of Great Britain in the Asquith administration and with him a prominent barrister on the other side named Mr. Barrington Ward, K.C. This question will not be decided this summer, but we have so far arrived at the question to be submitted to the Privy Council. Arguments will be submitted on behalf of Canada and on behalf of Newfoundland. For the purpose of preparing our arguments for our counsel in England, I propose to go to England after the closing of the legislature, so that we can have an opportunity of exchanging views before the case goes for trial. But our cases will not be exchanged before the expiration.

In conclusion there is one matter on which I would like to touch. It is a subject which I am glad was brought up I think, by the honorable member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox. This is a subject upon which I think I can speak with a certain amount of authority. I refer to the suggestions made here that voters which put us here were influenced by the particular altar at which they kneel. Now there is a certain section of the people who are using this sectarianism which only consist of whispers and hints from one to the other. People never saw anything about it in the papers until recently and the matter was not heard in this House until the honorable member for St. John's East broached the subject and I am glad he did. And I say this discussion has done a lot of good. It will help to choke the serpent that goes about in the dark and which is sapping the energies of those who want to do something for our country. Now I know that there are certain Protestants who think the Roman Catholics are using the sectarian cry, and I know that there are certain Roman Catholics who think the Protestants are using the sectarian cry. Well there are a certain number of people in each denomination who think this, but they carry on their work by whispering behind their opponents backs. Now, Sir, we ought to let these people know that they are not going to do any good,they are not getting us into the House by means of the sectarian city.

There are some good men in this House who would rather not be here at all if their means of getting here were the use of the sectarian cry. But those men are going to stamp out such a vile matter. We are here to do some good for our country. We are not in this House to represent any particular religion. We are here in this House for the state. The country needs the best of our energies. There are no Catholics or Protestant seats in the Upper House. No person who goes into the Upper House goes into it as a Roman Catholic or a Protestant. They go there to further the interests of the country they live in. The seats in the Upper House belong to the state just as those do in the Lower House.

Some days ago the honorable member for St. John's West protested against two Roman Catholics being given two Protestant seats in the Upper House. If any denomination has not got its representation we are not to be blamed. This sectarianism wastes our efforts, it wastes our energies. I hope that now that we have expressed our views we will have finished with it. Now, Sir, we have got to pull together and do our duty to the state and not hate one another for the love of God. As I think it is very apt, Sir, I wish to quote a few words from the pen of J. B. O'Rielly, or Wendell Philips.

"Come workers, here was a teacher, and the lesson he taught was good,

There are no classes or races, but one human brotherhood;

There are no creeds to be outlawed, no colours of skin debarred,

Mankind is one in its rights and wrongs, one hope, one right, one guard?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER.— Mr. Speaker,may I first be permitted to express to this House my hearty congratulations and to the country a word of good cheer on the very high .verage o debating ability which this Chamber has evidenced during the past ten days. To both the Government and the Opposition benches a word of sincere appreciation has to be extended. I am sure I may be permitted having already feliciated the honourable and gallent gentlemen who moved and seconed the motion for the appointment of a select committee to convey a special word of congratulation to the junior member of the Government Party, Mr. Scammell for the particularly eloquent effort with which he impromptu dealt with the matter of public importance which came within the scope of his address and also the Leader of the Oppossition my hearty Congratulations for having within his ranks a gentleman whose maiden speech in this House showed the possession of considerable debating ability. It is an augury of good future for Newfoundland when in a new Legislature the debating strength is of such high average, the independence, dignity and strength of purpose so marked, the fearlessness with which public matters have been approached so much in evidence, and there is added the touch of true oratory from both the Government and Opposition sides of the House.

I look forward, Sir, to seeing some of the younger men of this Chamber taking prominent places as the years go by as independent men and gentlemen, as gladiators for the truth, well worthy of the honor which the electors of our Ancient Colony have conferred in giving them seats in this Chamber.

It is not often, Sir, out of the hundreds of times which it has been my privilege to rise in the course of debate or on public platforms that I have felt the great personal hesitation and regret which I do at this moment, because to me the approach of personalities in debate is most grossly distasteful; but, Sir, the Leader of the Opposition was pleased in the course of his remarks to make certain personal references to which I feel it my duty to this House to make reply. And the first, Sir, is the most unpleasant one of all. Here I would quote the words of Mr. Cave, the Acting Minister of Shipping: "Secret Service men often carry false information," and attacks, particularly such fierce personal attacks as the Leader of the Opposition was pleased to make upon myself, are very often based, honestly in intention but falsely in fact, upon the false information which such Secret Service men carry to their leaders. I refer at this moment to the suggestion made by the Leader of the Opposition, when he said that a public meeting held in the Majestic Theatre I deliberately singled out the name of one of Newfoundland's most estimable young ladies in the person of his daughter, Miss Mary Cashin, for personal attack. I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition made the statement in this Chamber, because it gives me an opportunity of publicly making an absolute denial. If Sir Michael Cashin had been present at that meeting he would not be under the impression to which he gave expression.

In making that charge against me,

I hope Sir, that he idd it honestly believing that the charge was true, but there are in this Chamber tonight nany men who were present at that Majestic Theatre meeting and know that no person was singled out for personal attack, much less that any attack was made upon Miss Mary Cashin to the effect that she received from her father the Minister of Finance the sum of $1,500, $2,000, $2,-400 or whatever the amount was, in a false, fraudulent or improper manner. The fact was this; Sir Michael was pleased to publish a letter over his own signature in some Opposition paper, and in it refer to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Brownrigg, and ask that he secure from the Department of Finance and Customs certain particulars in connection with the cost of a certain loan concerning which the Minister of Finance had made some public criticism. These particulars were secured and handed to me on the platform of the Majestic Theatre and were read. No name was omitted from the list given me, and no name was added by me. Unfortunately, Sir Michael was informed that I mentioned his daughter's name only and criticised that one name only. Those who were present know that I read a list of names, and the best evidence I have that I read a list is that two persons in St. John's, neither of them the one to whom Sir Michael referred, and one being Mr. Paddon, Manager of the Bank of Montreal, asked me why I read the name of the Bank of Montreal from the list. Mr. Paddon said they were regular brokers and that the transaction with them was in the ordinary course of their business as bankers and brokers and not any special business, as was the case with certain other names, and he did not think the Bank's name should have been read with the others. Personal attack, Sir, is a thing which I despise. Political battles may be fought, and fought fiercely without any combatant degrading himself to the baseness of personal calumny. I know how Sir Michael was feeling; I know how I felt when in the "Telegram" there was a personally abusive article attacking my father; I know how I felt when in a certain other paper there was a vile and most offensive personal attack upon my wife; I know how Sir John Crosbie must have felt when some months ago there was a personal attack upon some of his family, and insofar as any references were made thereto in any Government paper I express to him my sincere regret. It is entirely contrary to my own personal feelings and to the program and policy of the Government that personal discourtesies should be injected into public debate or print.

The next matter to which I would refer and I mention this too with feelings of sorrow, was also introduced by Sir Michael into his addresses on two occasions, frst on the opening day, and later in his lengthly speech on the motion which is now before the House. I refer to what is known as the "Lornina Inquiry." Sir Michael was pleased to say that in connection with that inquiry I had stabbed him in the back. I believe that he thinks I did. I do not think for one moment that he would have made that statement if he did not believe it, but, again quoting the words of the Acting Minister of Shipping, "The Secret Service men carry false information." The entire facts in connection with that matter are within my own personal knowledge and clear memory. The suggestion that there was any attempt on behalf of Sir Ewward, now Lord Morris, or myself to injure a colleague of the Executive of that day is absolutely without any foundation whatever in fact. I am as perfectly satisfied that Lord Morris, who was then bitterly attacked by Sir Michael Cashin in connection with that matter and who has since been bitterly pursued by him in connection therewith, was free from any suggestion of an attempt to play falsely as that I am now addressing the House upon this most unpleasant topic. Every detail of the transaction is within my knowledge, burned into my memory because of the fact that I have realized time after time from the conversations of friends of mine who were also friends of the Knight who is Leader of the Opposition that there was that feeling of bitter resentment and most hostile personal antagonism on the part of Sir Michael Cashin towards myself which any man might naturally feel towards another if that other, being an Executive colleague, should descend to such infamy as that of attempted political assassination. I am glad that Sir Michael has given me the opportunity of publicly refuting the suggestion that Lord Morris or myself was identified in any way whatever with any attempt to do him political injury.

There is one other matter, Sir, with which I must now deal, and I do so merely because it too was included within the scope of the attack of the Leader of the Opposition upon me, and that is the charge with which the name of my friend and colleague, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was identified several years ago. Sir Michael was pleased to read from the records of the Legislative Council the circumstances under which as a gladiator for the party for which I stood I fought against the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries as vigorously as I knew how; he also read the record of how my then opponent, the gladiator now sitting on my right, fought against me with all his vigor. Of these records neither of us is in the least degree ashamed. The line of our conflict and the clash of arms have been borne throughout the length and breadth of the country, and have found prominent places in the Hanzards of both branches of the Legislature. We are both proud of the vigour of our fight, and now, having laid aside all personal differences, each appreciates the other all the more because of the strenuous conflict of the past. We have joined our fighting forces in the interest of the Homeland which we both dearly love, and for the advancement of which we will give our life's best efforts. The Leader of the Opposition has already had reason to realize our fighting powers, and can appreciate the strength we can put behind our common cause, the welfare of our country. The majority of 31,157, the largest majority ever secured in this country by any Government, is evidence of the truth of which I speak.

As to the insinuations honestly made by Mr. Coaker some years ago, repeated a few days ago by Mr. Fox in this Chamber, reiterated by Sir Michael Cashin on yesterday, to the effect that in the autumn of 1917, when Colonial Secretary of this Colony, I received from Mr. H. D. Reid the sum of $5,000 as a bribe to affect my attitude towards the Reid Newfoundland Company in the matter of certain claims then pending, I again quote the words of my honourable friend, the Acting Minister of Shipping, "The Secret Service men carry false information." When Sir Edward Morris became Attorney General I was associated with him in the practice of law, and the very first thing he did when he took office was to close his records in connection with various large matters he was previously handling for the Reid Newfoundland Company. Some time after that I was retained by that company in connection with these matters. When I became Attorney General in 1914 I wrote the President of the Reid Newfoundland Company informing him that my acceptance of public office meant the cessation of professional relationships with the company. For some time previously, through the courtesy of one of the Company's accountants some of the collection business for the Electric Light Department, Dry Dock and the Angel Engineering and Supply Company, Ltd., came to my office to be handled in the same way as similar business from any other firm on Water Street. Within a few weeks after I became Attorney General a circular was sent around by me to these debtors informing them that the accounts for the Reid Newfoundland Company would be closed, and as soon as possible thereafter this business was wound up. There has been no transaction between the Reid Newfoundland Company or anybody connected with it and myself, the firm of Squires & Winter, or any of my associates, friends or relatives, directly or indirectly, with the exception of the items to which I have referred, from which I or my firm or my associates, friends or relatives have derived any profit or advantage from the Reid Newfoundland Company to the value of a two cent postage stamp. On behalf of clients I have had business dealings with the Reid Newfoundland Company, but under no circumstances did I represent the Reids or any of their outfit or associates. My fees were charged to the people whom I represented and were paid by them and not by the Reids directly or indirectly. No fee was ever charged by me in connection with any of these transactions to the Reid Newfoundland Company, nor was any share, commission or any other consideration paid me by the Reids in connection therewith. I had no personal interest of any kind in any business dealings with the Reid Newfoundland Company, nor did any of my friends, associates or relatives, from which any profit or benefit directly or indirectly accrued to me or them from the Reid Newfoundland Company or any of the Reids or any of their connections. Not only have I not acted in a professional capacity for the Reids, but I have not been a shareholder in any timber grants, mining properties, water powers, licenses or any other Government concessions of any sort whatever at any time in connection with any business associated with the Reid Newfoundland Company. I am proud, Sir, of my clear-cut, straight public record in my relations, professional, commercial and otherwise, with the Reid Newfoundland Company and every other Company since the year 1908 when I first entered public life in this Colony.

I would now refer, Sir, to that contemptible thing which the lengthy debate in this House has done much to kill in this country—sectarianism. In 1908, then a law partner of Sir Edward Morris, I as a Methodist stood as a candidate for him for a Methodist seat in the District of Trinity. He was a Roman Catholic, but that did not affect my attitude in the least. I did the best that lay within my power for him and the policy for which his party stood. The leader of the Trinity team, Hon. Robert Watson, was elected. Mr. Stone and I were defeated. That was the "tie" election. In the following spring there was another general election. Again I gave my best as a party man in the fight for the cause of my Roman Catholic leader, and was proud of him as the brainiest, most capable leader with whom I had been personally identified in Newfoundland's public affairs. I was successful, as were also my two colleagues.

In 1913 I went back to the electoral District of Trinity under my Roman Catholic leader to fight against the forces of the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Bond, associated with that invincible Northern fishermen's organization, the Fishermen's Protective Union, and by the wonderful personal prestige of Sir Robert Bond, combined with the strength of that organization in the District of Trinity under the Presidency of the gentleman who is the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I was defeated by a large majority.

As a Methodist I fought under my Roman Catholic leader, glad to go to defeat for him and his party; a defeat which was recognized as being sure and decisive before I announced my candidacy for the constituency. As was anticipated, I came back defeated. Two members of the late Executive Council, now sitting in opposition to me, have done me the deliberate discourtesy of saying that it was through their grace that Sir Edward Morris offered me the portfolio of Justice and a seat in the Legislative Council. They may now say that; I know otherwise.

Unlike certain other members of the party, I went to my constituency to face certain defeat after a fierce fight, with no suggestion as to any consideration. I went as a party man, not as a hireling. I paid my own one-third share of the campaign expenses of our three candidates, and provided my own motor yacht for the party. I was fighting for the cause of a man whose bigness of heart and brain commanded my devotion.

Some little time after my defeat Sir Edward Morris sent for me to meet him at his residence, and he then offered me the Department of Justice. I declined, saying that I could not afford to take it. I told him that I would appreciate an Executive seat without portfolio, but a Department I could not take, for the simple reason that I could not afford to practically abandon my large law practice for the income of the Department of Justice. Some days later he sent for me again, and I again declined. At a later interview he asked me, in the interests of the party which I had served to take the Department of Justice. He took the position that it was essential in the party interests, as he wished to complete his Executive and Departmental offices strictly along denominational lines, and there was not a Protestant constituency he dared open.

Why, let me inquire, was it impossible for hom to open a Protestant constituency to elect an Attorney General? Because The Evening Telegram newspaper, opposed to him then as it is opposed to me now, had then, just as it is doing now, paraded sectarianism. If the honorable members will refer to the files of The Evening Telegram of the winter of 1913-14 they will find a series of most virulent attacks on Sir Edward Morris because he was a Roman Catholic. Look at the present sectarian contents of its columns. The same old paper at the same old game—preaching sectarianism and attempting to inflame the people this way or that just as its contemptible management feels it can manipulate religious sensibilities best to its own advantage.

The courtesy, Sir, was not extended by Messrs. Cashin and Bennett to me as they would have this House now believe. Rather was it a sacrifice made by me at the call of my leader and a courtesy extended to them to stabilitate the Executive administration of the day at very considerable financial sacrifice to myself. Any man who has occupied public office knows that the Attorney General cannot hope to make as good an income in office as he could in the active practice of his profession, untramelled by the curtailing influences of his official position as law adviser to the Crown. The Attorney General of today is in a similar position financially. He is debarred from associating himself professionally with business matters in which the Crown is interested, and in a small community as this is, finds himself compelled to frequently decline valuable business for clients because of their being Government contractors or otherwise interested in matters upon which he has to advise Council.

I am indeed disappointed that these two gentlemen, who were my colleagues in that Executive administration, felt that I was accepting a courtesy from them in accepting the Department of Justice, offered me by my leader, and I assure them that if I had had the faintest thought that the Executive administration regarded the offer of portfolio as a courtesy to me, it would never have been accepted. I accepted it when Sir Edward Morris laid the proposition before me that he could not open a seat, because of the bitter sectarinism of The Evening Telegram newspaper. I have on my desk at the present moment clippings from The Evening Telegram of the autumn of 1913 to prove the truth of this statement. So far as I was concerned, a Roman Catholic leader was good enough for me to follow when I regarded him as a man of ability and brains, broadmindedness and strength of purpose, and from the records of St. John's West I know that there are a large number of the leading Roman Catholic citizens of this town who take the same position towards myself as a Protestant leader, as I took towards Sir Edward, now Lord, Morris, the Roman Catholic leader of that day.

Why think you was it that I offered myself to the constituency of St. John's West? Was it merely because there was a very strong probability of being beaten, or was it because in that constituency there would be the fiercest fight of all the constituencies? I think not. There were seats that were sure seats in this country, as the election has well proven.

But, Sir, there was more in my going to the District of St. John's West than the mere question of an election; there was the question of party, there was the question of prestige. There was above all the fact that if I as a Protestant, a Methodist, a man who was recognized throughout the Island of Newfoundland as having been prominently identified with the Loyal Orange Association in Newfoundland and in the Dominion of Canada, was prepared to go to a constituency the majority of which were Roman Catholics, in which my own Methodist denomination was comparatively small, I was throwing down the gauntlet to the demon of sectarianism, and if elected, destroying it, as, thank God, I believe I shall be instrumental in doing. I was giving the challenge to the man who, like Mr. John R. Bennett, says that a man does not count as a man, but only in the light of the altar at which he worships. If it were not for the fact that I had a belief that there were in this West End constituency electors of strength, of intelligence and honor, men who thought much of public welfare and little of sectarianism; men who would vote for men, principles and party, without having regard to the religious denomination to which the leader belonged, think you, Sir, that I would have dared to offer myself to a constituency in which if every Protestant had voted for me and only Protestants had so voted I could not possibly have been elected. I realize that there was a section of the community from which I was attacked from a sectarian standpoint. Here is some of it. I have seventy-five quotations here listed ready to read to you, but I shall not delay the House at this hour; but the lowest and most contemptible infamy of all I must mention. The Acting Minister of Shipping has referred to it. It was the fact that from a certain Protestant newspaper office in this city there was circulated the story that a dirty, contemptible, sectarian placard, was being circulated by Mr. Cave as a candidate in the District of Bay de Verde. An infamous lie that was. The false statement started from that newspaper office, the office of The Daily News, and was circulated throughout the entire West End constituency. I can tell you the names of the people who conceived the iniquity, who circulated it, and I know the channels used for the dissemination of the abomination. I spent months in chasing the matter to its source and discovering the individual men who were associated with it. Then, Sir, one of our newspapers, an exclusively Roman Catholic newspaper, attacked me because on last Christmas I did that which I have done every single Christmas for ten years when I have been in Newfoundland at Christmas time, and that was to attend the midnight service in the Cathedral. When a charge was made against me in the papers that I was going around town seeking invitations to Roman Catholic functions, the attack got down to a level when the utterly contemptible baseness of the people who were identified with that attack was such that my traducers were recognised as being fit only to be chased through a sewer by sewer-rats. I would like to be able to believe that there is not a single member of the sitting Opposition who is directly or indirectly connected with any such propaganda, but, Sir, every party has its 'Hang 'er Downs,' bitter, malicious, mean-minded men, who to gain an object, whether that object be vindictiveness or personal or party advantage or benefit would sacrifice the most sacred things in life on the altar of selfishness and revenge. Distasteful as this subject is, I welcome the opportunity of having this question discussed on the floors of this House, and to say to you that I never worked with a man more honourable and true, more loyal as a colleague, cleaner in debate, stronger in purpose, and with greater dignity of character, than my Roman Catholic colleague in the West End and present Minister of Finance, Mr. Brownrigg. There are gentlemen on the other side of the House whom it has been my pleasure to regard as friends for years, and whom I hope it will be my pleasure to continue to so regard for many years to come, in spite of the apparent personal bitterness of their present political hostility towards me.

I shall not detain the House further on this matter other than to reply to a challenge which was made in the "Plaindealer" of January last. This paper, as is well known in St. John's, is an exclusively Roman Catholic publication, and was recognised in conjunction with the "Evening Herald" newspaper as one of the official organs of the self-styled "Hang 'er Down" organization created and led against me by Sir Michael Cashin personally, in the bitter January bye-election contest, in which Mr. Brownrigg and myself signally defeated our opponents. The big display head lines, themselves a lie, read as follows:

"Very Rev. Dr. Whelan, of North "River, insulted and humiliated by "Squires Freebooters."

"Be True to Your Class."

"The West End will 'Hang 'er "Down.'"

From the infamous articles I shall quote but a few sentences:

"On the 22nd you decide whom will "represent you for the next four "years—not represent you in church, "but in the House where the laws "under which you must live and work "are to be made.

"Decide then which men you want "to be there when those laws are "being framed—two workingmen or "two men who never did a day's work "nor know the sensation of sweating.

"Workingmen or men who never "worked!

"Laborites, or lawyer and mer- "chant!

"Men of your own class, or men "who wouldn't speak to you if they "met you on the street!

"Decide now and "hang 'er down" "till Thursday!"

Again:

"Father Whelan stands too high in "the estimation of the people of the "country to deserve this insolent and "intolerant treatment at the hands of "Squires and his associates.

"It is generally known that after "Squires' victory at the polls in No- "vember, the 'Orange Sentinel,' the "organ of the Orange body of "Toronto, boasted of his overwhelm- "ing defeat of the Roman Catholic "Government, and congratulations "poured in from prominent members "of that body, congratulating him for "having crushed out Catholic Govern- "ment in Newfoundland.

"We presume it is with a desire to "deserve those encomiums that he now "encourages the attack on a promin- "ent Roman Catholic clergyman. We "shall probably be accused by The "Star of raising the sectarian issue, "but we now invite the editor of that "paper, or Premier Squires, to pub- "lish those messages from Toronto, "with his replies thereto, as proof of "our assertion."

I have quoted very briefly from one issue only of one of the Cashin "Hang 'er Down" press. There were a multitude of much more abusive, personally offensive and sectarian attacks than this in the Cashin press, but the Hanzard should not be disgraced by its republication.

Be true to your class! The Bennett West End cry was "Don't vote for Squires; he is not a St. John's man!" Thank God for that, if Mr. Bennett's campaign methods and his low sectarian appeal in this House a few days ago are to be taken as the brand of St. John's birth and breeding. But in that paper at that time associated with the other headings it had another significance which was played to the limit by the loud-mouthed "Hang-'er-ons" of the street corner and the whispers of the back lane. Then note the "Father Whelan" article and the nature of that attack upon me.

As to whether The Orange Sentinel of Toronto made any reference to the Newfoundland elections or not I do not know. I rarely see the paper, but I do know that the English, Canadian and United States press was full of the vilest sectarian lying reports concerning the Newfoundland elections, and after several months' investigation, I can prove that Sir Patrick McGrath, the editor of The Herald, is the man who telegraphed the vile stuff around the world. I have on my desk clippings from "The Times" and other English papers, and from a large selection of Canadian and United States papers, and can prove that the contemptible material on which these articles are based was provided by Sir Patrick McGrath. If such stuff was published in many Canadian papers it would undoubtedly be reprinted in The Orange Sentinel just as it was in The Catholic Record.

But what have I to do with the fact that enemies of the McGrath type succeeded in abusing the confidence of the editors of such papers as The London Times and having maliciously false articles inserted in the columns of papers which are usually regarded as reputable. It is a matter for which I am no more personally responsible than I am for the fact that the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company has been pleased to have their city manager, Mr. Michael Sullivan, occupy an opposition seat under the leadership of Sir Michael Cashin and in true harmony with Sir Michael's own manner behave himself most offensively towards me in the course of debate.

This Roman Catholic paper, the "Plaindealer," one of the official organs of Sir Michael Cashin's "Hang 'er Down" organization, alleges that certain telegraph messages were received by me from and sent by me to Toronto, and suggests that these messages were of a sectarian character such as to justify the "Plaindealer" in denouncing me as unworthy of political support by my Roman Catholic fellow-citizens. I received one tele graph message and one only from Toronto, and sent one telegraph message and one only to Toronto. As to how Mr. O'Neil of the "Plaindealer" learned that I had received and sent telegraph messages via the Anglo and to Toronto, I do not know. In that connection one has to consider the possibility of a "Hang 'er Down" spy system either at my law office or at the offices of the Anglo American Telegraph Company, or both.

In response to the challenge of the "Plaindealer" to publish these messages I now read them to the House. The one and only message I received from Toronto was from a personal friend of long standing and contained six words only; these were words of sincere and hearty congratulations from my friend on my personal success and had absolutely not the faintest tinge of sectarianism or any other 'ism save only the warmth of personal friendliness. The one and only message I sent Toronto was addressed to a personal friend and has reference to a message from his at Ottawa, which message was a two-word cablegram: "Hearty Congratulations." It was addressed to Mr. H. C. Hocken, member of the Dominion Parliament:

"Thanks for your message. My vic"tory was in spite of Orange Leaders "opposition and not because of their "help. Every Past Grand Master was "an active opponent, Captain Kean
"being one of Cashin's candidates.
"Past Deputy Grand Piccott and "Forbes also Cashin Candidates. Pud-"dester was offensively abusive; also
"John Currie. Cave and Penney sup"ported me to a finish. Both were "made the butt of vilest personal abuse
"by Puddester. Cave, one of my can"didates, has been elected. If any re"ference is made in Sentinel to my "success, I want it to be made quite "clear that Puddester, Kean, Forbes,
"Currie, Piccott, Martin, and all "other leading Orangemen of Grand 'Lodge except Cave and Penney were 'active enemies."

"My general reference to the Orange association was due to the fact that Mr. Hocken is one of the leading Orangemen of Canada. He and his wife were entertained at my home in 1913 when the session of the Grand Lodge of British America was held here, and they with my wife and myself were guests during that visit at the well-known annual function under the auspices of the Christian Brothers —the Mount Cashel Garden Party.

My reference to the Orange Sentinel was due to the fact that Mr. Hocken is the proprietor and editor of that paper, and I wanted to be quite sure that he would not be misled by the sectarian nonsense that was being telegraphed abroad by whom I then did not know but whom I now know to have been Sir Patrick McGrath, the editor of the Herald.

As this House and the country well know, I am not in the habit of replying to charges made against me, but as Sir Michael Cashin introduced this matter and Mr. Bennett and Mr. Fox spoke on sectarianism at some length and the Plaindealer challenged me to publish these messages, I give the House the benefit of a knowledge of the facts.

Let me now for a brief moment make reference to the Speech of His Excellency the Governor and the public policy therein outlined. The gentlemen of the Opposition have been pleased to refer to it as an empty document, a poorly-drafted production a baloon, and Sir Michael Cashin, the Leader of the Opposition, held the document aloft and in his usual classic language denounced it "a Cod".

The first paragraph is, I sumbit, a suitable reference to the signing of the Treaty of Peace with Germany.

The second refers to the courtesy of the British Admiralty in donating to Newfoundland two steamers. Certain members of the Opposition were pleased to say that the British Admiralty ships were fit for nothing but to be used as breakwaters. For my own part, I have no such opinion of the ships of the British Navy, and I am pleased to note that His Excellency the Governor in his formal address extended to the British Admiralty an expression of appreciation from the Government of Newfoundland for the courtesy with which they had entertained our request for ships. I regret very much that that courtesy should be the subject of such hostile criticism by my friends opposite.

In view of the magnificent address in which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries dealt with the matter of the fish regulations and the policy of the Government in connection with fish matters, and in view further of the fact that the Leader of the Opposition rose in his place in the House at the conclusion of the address of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and congratulated the Government through the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on its fish policy and past program, I feel that it is not necessary for me at this moment to deal further with this very important part of the policy of the present Government, and the successful manner in which the regulations have operated for the benefit of the trade generally, in spite of the fact that members of the Opposition on public platforms and in private conversation and the Opposition press have for months been so abusive to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Government because they had the courage to put their convictions on matters of fish policy into practical operation.

The winding-up of the Department of Militia has been referred to. Is it not the fact, as one of the Opposition members has stated, that there is nothing to do in that Department. The Chief Staff Officer, Lieut. Col. Rendell, than whom it would be difficult to find a more competent and courteous gentleman to handle the affairs of the Department, informs me that it will be many months before the business of the Department can be finally wound up, month by month the staff is being lessened and every pressure that can be put upon the Department to expedite the finalization of its work is being brought to bear.

The reference to the work of Rev. Father Nangle is one which I am sure must be appreciated by every member of the Opposition. The whole people of Newfoundland, particularly those who, like myself, had closest friends and relatives in the battle-line, recognises the grandeur of his work. I desire to avail of this moment in which to heartily congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who during his recent tour of the battle-fields of France and Flanders conceived the idea of enlarging the purchase which the Government had determined upon in the matter of a site for the War Memorial at Beaumont Hamel to include the entire Beaumont Hamel battle-field. He telegraphed his recommendations in that regard to me, and I can assure this House and the country that the Executive Administration appreciated very much th e wise and thoughtful recommendation of the Minister and concluded arrangements whereby this historic spot, consecrated as it is, with the heroic sacrifice of many of Newfoundland's noblest and best, should form a part of Newfoundland in France, and have consecrated within its hallowed enclosures the material bodies of those who went forth from us to offer their lives upon the altar of freedom. Major Nangle has done excellent work. It would be impossible for me to convey to you an expression of too high appreciation of his splendid services. It would be difficult indeed for any country to be better represented in this specific work than Newfoundland is represented by Padre Nangle.

I was particularly amused when the Leader of the Opposition, Sir Michael Cashin, was addressing the House on the matter of Estimates. It will be remembered that the Speech from the Throne indicates the intention of the Government to lay upon the Table of the House bona fide Estimates with a view to the discontinuance of the unconstitutional practice which has grown up during recent years of deliberately undervoting supplies and depending to an abnormally large extent upon the granting by a subsequent session of the Legislature of Supplemental Supplies to cover the necessary expenes of the Civic Service. It will be noted that the paragraph contains the statement that Supplemental Supply will be avoided "as far as practicable," and the honourable gentlemen opposite gazed upon these words "as far as practicable" and ridiculed them, little realizing that by so doing they were showing their own lack of appreciation of the facts and their own lack of a knowledge of practical administration of public affairs. Let me illustrate. The late Administration undertook the construction of a new wing to the Sanitarium. It is probable that that work will be completed and ready for occupancy by October or November of this year. The estimated cost of fuel, light, maintenance and staff required in connection with that important addition is not included within the scope of the Estimates which will be tabled within the course of the next few weeks. The Estimates in that regard will be made as perfect as it is practicable to make them at the present moment. Likewise in the case of the Lunatic Asylum. Within the course of the present year the new Lunatic Asylum wing will be ready for occupancy. The probable cost of operation, upkeep and maintenance of that new wing is alsonot fully included, but the Estimates are correct insofar as it is practicable to make them at the present moment. Take the Coastal Service. The man who would venture at this moment to make a definite statement as to the cost of the Coastal Service for the year 1920-21 would indeed be a prophet. The Estimates in that regard also are correct as far as practicable. It might be possible to conceive of one of the junior members of the House spinning an oration to these words, but for the Leader of the Opposition, who boasts of his seniority in the House, he having occupied a seat for twenty-eight years, Minister of Finance for many years and Prime Minister for a brief period, to attempt criticism based upon the fact that it is impracticable under the circumstances to bring in Estimates which would be in themselves perfect and really accurate forecasts rather than mere estimates is so laughable as to approach the point of being ridiculous.

The reorganization in the Department of Marine and Fisheries is a matter which will be more fully indicated when the Estimates are laid before you. I am quite sure this much needed readjustment will meet with the hearty approval and unanimous endorsation of the entire House. It would be difficult to find a more vigorous or more enthusiastic worker, a more capable and earnest Executive head, than the Department of Marine & Fisheries has in the person of the President of the Fishermen's Protective Union. We have to remember one thing in this connection and in connection witb the fish regulations and the various bills that will be introduced under his auspices during this session, and that is, that the man who occupies the position of President of a large fishermen's organization has one object and one object only, and that is to serve the people with whom his life work is identified. I am satisfied from my experience at the Executive Board with Mr. Coaker that with him self does not come first, that the fishermen of the country, their homes, their happiness, their welfare and prosperity, come first in all his ambitions.

The organization of the Department of Posts and Telegraphs, under the Acting Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, Mr. Halfyard, is a matter witn which I am sure the entire House will also be in full accord. It is not a case of Dr. Robinson's being dismissed, as has been suggested by his admirer, Mr. Fox. A few days after I became Colonial Secretary I asked Mr. Mews to get in touch with Dr. Robinson and ask him to call to see me. Dr. Robinson did not call, but wrote a letter to Mr. Mews saying that he declined to accord me the interview sought. The first thing I did was to throw the letter into the waste-paper basket at my left, but on second thought I picked it out so that it might have a place on my curiosity file. From that day to this I have not had an interview with Dr. Robinson. I did not send for him again, nor did I ask anybody else to do so. Some little time later he tendered his resignation, and in view of his previous discourtesy and his apparent objections to working in harmony with my Administration, his resignation was immediately accepted. I can quite understand how antagonistic he was feeling to the Government. The mere fact that it is his name which constitutes Robinson & Company, Ltd., the proprietors and publishers of the "Daily News" newspaper is in itself sufficient evidence that to the Government to which his company and paper were so bitterly antagonistic he would be an obstructionist rather than a helper.

The matter of the creation of a Department of Education is one that has caused considerable newspaper comment. My friend, the member for St. George's, has referred to it on several occasions. I feel sure that during the course of debate the Government will have the advantage of some helpful suggestions from Mr. MacDonnell, who has had a considerable experience as a Superintendent of Education for the Roman Catholic denomination in the District of St. George's. Mr. MacDonnell is, I believe, a Bachelor in Arts, and has practical knowledge in connection with educational matters in Newfoundland. I welcome most heartily the assistance which I know he will gladly give in the debates upon this vitally important subject of education with which we have to deal most carefully, so that our Colony may have the very best educational organization that we can give it. My idea, Sir, is that the Minister of Education and his Department will be the keystone in the educational arch of our present denomination system, so that the whole organization may be so co-related as to bear in the best way possible our educational burdens. The idea of the abolition of the present system of education in this country is not for one moment contemplated; to interfere with it is not for one moment contemplated. To operate it more efficiently, to provide it with additional grants, to give it better organization, to help the various religious bodies to a fuller extent to provide educational facilities for their children; these are the objects of the creation of a Ministry of Education. In this House there are several experienced educationists. Dr. Barnes is a specially trained and experienced man. Mr. MacDonnell has had considerable training and experience. Mr. Halfyard, Mr. Samson, Mr. Scammell, Mr. LeGrow, and perhaps others, have had practical training and experience. I consequently feel sure that when the Education Bill comes forward for discussion it will receive such thorough consideration and careful, critical scrutiny that there will emerge from the debate a measure which will receive the unanimous support of the House and be the most valued addition to this session's legislation. The country has to remember one thing, and that is that we have very few, if any, entirely Government schools in this country. As Secretary of the Board of Governors of the Methodist College, think you, that I consider the Methodist College as a Government school? Not at all. If it were not for the help of the Methodist people in Newfoundland, the Ladies' Aid organization and other enthusiastic educational helpers, that institution could not exist. Take the Christion Brothers' Schools, Bishop Field College, St. Bonaventure's College, Bishop Spencer College, the Commercial Departments in connection with the Convent schools from which we get practically all our stenographers, does any one believe that these receive Government grants sufficient to maintain them? Throughout the length and breadth of our Island Home the schools that are dotted around our towns are maintained not exclusively by Government grants, but partly by Government grants and partly by the enterprise of the religious organizations by which the schools are operated. If it were not for the live interest of the various religious organizations, if it were not for the enthusiasm of the people of the different denominations who put self-sacrificing effort behind the educational problems of their respective denominations education would be backward indeed; there would be few schools and fewer Boards of Education. We have to do our best to get the most efficient educational organizations that we can so that our various religious denominations may be helped to better and most efficient effort, so that every boy and girl may have a chance to learn at least to read and write and start with some degree of a fair chance of taking his or her place in the struggle of this twentieth century.

Now to refer to the Department of Agriculture and Mines. I think we all know of the activities of Dr. Campbell, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, in the political campaign in the District of St. John's West. Dr. Campbell was defeated after a magnificent fight. The same ability as an organizer, and the same tireless energy and enthusiastic effort he is now devoting to the much-needed reorganization of his important department. Reorganization has already been begun in the most important practical branch, that of agriculture. The Department is now a centre of practical help and encouragement for farmers and will become of immense importance to Newfoundland agriculturally. It will also be reorganized in the matter of mines, water-powers, forest wealth and the various other branches which come within the scope of the extensive operations of the Department. The old Sir Robert Bond idea of a Model Farm has been revivified; not an experimental station, but a practical business proposition, the object of which is to help the development of farming enterprise. I am satisfied that under the able guidance of Dr. Campbell this Department will become a public utility which will play an important part in the Colony's future.

The paragraph referring in general terms to coastal and inland transportation has been the subject of much Opposition merriment. The Member for Placentia and St. Mary's asked that correspondence with the Reid-Newfoundland Company be tabled, and that was done. A Committee of Council was appointed some time ago to look into the whole situation and report. Several of the members of the Opposition have asked, almost pleaded with, the Government that the Reid Newfoundland Company be given fair play. They will be given fair play. In the consideration of the railway problem the fact that the Reid Newfoundland Company was the personal, bitter, malicious, aggressive political opponent of this administration will not be permitted to influence decisions. The problem will be dealt with fairly, frankly and fully. It will be considered simply as a business proposition in which the interests of the Colony must be fully safeguarded. This matter has for some weeks past been daily receiving and will for some time to come be receiving earnest thought and consideration.

The situation in connection with coastal contracts is also a matter of major importance. Newfoundland is primarily a coastal country. The extreme difficulty of securing steamers, the enormous cost, the fact that contractors feel that if they invest large sums of money in steamers the values will have so depreciated in five or eight years that they will be faced with large losses on capital account, are problems which are receiving most careful consideration.

Opposite me is sitting the late Minister of Shipping, who has full knowledge of the great difficulties to be faced in dealing with these problems and all matters appertaining to the coastal trade. I feel quite certain that the experience which he has gained during the years when he was Minister of Shipping will be gladly placed at the service of the Colony in the course of the debate on matters appertaining to that Department.

Much criticism has also been offered concerning the pronouncement as to Workingmen's Homes. From listening to some of the honorable members opposite, particularly Mr. Bennett, one would conclude that this past week was their first week in Parliament. These gentlemen have at last aroused themselves to the fact that some steps should be taken immediately to improve the housing condition of the working classes. I would remind the House that the first pronouncement made by any Government in favour of assisting in this connection is this paragraph in His Excellency's Speech. These present critics say the pronouncement is not full enough. May I ask what they did during the past six years to help improve housing conditions among the poor? From their words in this House one would conclude that the Hansard of last session and of many sessions past would be filled with their activities in this regard.

The facts are that the Government encouraged the incorporation of a Company to undertake the construction of workingmen's homes and their subsequent rental or sale.

This Company received the support of very many citizens who realized the situation and were prepared to invest money to help solve the housing problem. These investors do not expect to get as good a dividend on their investment as they would if the investment were made in Government Bonds; but to make dividends for themselves is not their consideration; their desire is to help improve local housing conditions.

The workers who have made themselves primarily responsible for this undertaking are Mr. James McGrath, for many years President of the Longshoremen's Union, Hon. John Anderson, and Hon. M. P. Gibbs. I am informed that the Company's bankers are the Royal Bank of Canada and that the Eastern Trust Company has been asked to undertake the business management of the Company's operations.

The Company has already on order large quantities of lumber and other building materials. The Government has agreed to permit importation free of duty of such building material and fittings as it is necessary to import for the building and equipment of the houses. The Company has, I am informed, prepared a programme for submission to the Government, and I have assured the Company and now assure the House that any reasonable business proposition submitted by the Company will receive careful and courteous consideration.

The suggestion that thirty houses would be erected during the next few months has been ridiculed. The opinion of the company expressed to me is that the most they can expect to accomplish during the summer months, having due regard to local lumber supplies, local labor available and the necessary principle of building construction economy so essential in the erection of houses to be sold or rented at a minimum cost, is thirty houses.

This is the first and a very important step in connection with an important social service programme, for it must be remembered that housing conditions have an important bearing upon public health and public morality.

The burden of the criticism of my honorable friends opposite, except insofar as some of them were personally abusive, was that the Speech did not fully cover the entire programme outlined in my Manifesto published in October last. My honorable friends failed to realise the fact so well known to the more experienced members, namely, that the Speech from the Throne is a formal document dealing officially and briefly with points of major importance from an official standpoint and is not expected by those who have even an elementary kuowledge of parliamentary practice to be a voluminous reprint of a general party programme which will require years to fully accomplish. If my honorable friends would refer to the various Speeches from the Throne of the past ten years they will see at a glance that no Government during these years has attempted to outline in the official opening Address such a complete and important programme as outlined on this occasion.

Several members of the Opposition have referred to the High Cost of Living. In spite of the statement of various members of the Opposition and the Opposition press to the contrary, the Government of Newfoundland cannot control the price of coal at Newcastle, New York or Sydney; the price of beef and pork in Chicago; the price of wheat in Western Canada and the Western States. But the Government can and will see that unjust profits shall not be charged to the consumer. The Government proposes to lay before the House at this session a bill drafted along the lines of the English Act to protect the consumer from unjust charges. The time has come when we must get down to the proposition of doing the very best possible for our Colony, having regard to our large financial obligations. We have to remember that the very best that Newfoundland can do for our soldiers and sailors and their dependents must be done; on the other hand we can go only as far as the resources of the Colony will permit. Obligations are heavy. The revenue is very satisfactory, but because it is good today, there is no guarantee that on the morrow when prices drop, our revenue will not be seriously depleted because of the fact that the revenue is made up to such a large extent of advalorem duties.

Thus, Sir, the Estimates have been drafted having regard to economy on the one hand, and efficiency on the other, and it is hoped that during the course of office of this administration it will be possible to do very substantial work for the reorganization of the public service.

I will refer to one other matter, Sir, and that is a reference made by my honorable friend, Mr. John R. Bennett. "This House," he said, "is divided by a line which may lead to serious consequences." This House is divided by parties; these parties sit on opposite side of the House; in that sense the House is divided by a table and an open space. Beyond that recognized division of parties and the physical separation of parties in this Chamber I know of no such line as that referred to by the honorable member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett. If the honorable member desires to create such a division as is suggested by certain of his remarks, then I regret his attitude. But he will not succeed if he makes any such attempt. This House knows no such dividing line. I know no such division; this Government knows no such division. As Newfoundlanders we have one duty and one duty only, and that is to serve this country we call home. I can assure the Opposition that that is the one ambition of this administration, and I feel sure that as the days pass and the members of the Opposition, who during the past few days have been displaying personal bitterness and pique, get the virus of disappointment and the bitterness of defeat worked out of their system by personal abuse of myself and my associates, these gentlemen will settle down as Newfoundlanders themselves with the Government and join in our desire to do the best we know how for the interests of our common Colony.

We stand, Sir, not divided, as Mr. Bennett declares, by a "line which may lead to serious consequences," but, in so far as we are true men and Newfoundlanders, we stand united in the strong determination of helping Newfoundland in the difficult days of reorganization, reconstruction and readjustment in which the Colony finds itself.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—In moving the adjournment of the House, I would like to refer to a matter that I know a lot of people are interested in. The Hon. Prime Minister and the Hon. Acting Minister of Shipping have expressed themselves fairly well, I am sure, and I am heart and soul in accord with some things they said. Now, sir, I very seldom read the papers of this country, but some friends of mine called my attention to what appeared in the Daily Star, under date of April 28th, in which my character was assailed in low-down, base and scurrilous fashion. I understand the Prime Minister has something to do with the control of this paper. Well if he is sincere in his utterances and is desirous of having a cleaner press and a cleaner public life, as he wishes us to believe to-night, I say right here now that this sort of vile stuff must cease and cease immediately. My answer to the paper that publishes this kind of trash is that it is not fit for any decent person in the city to read, and the one that wrote it is a "scavenger" of the worst type. The article in question says in part: "Sir John said Annie told him the story etc." It's about time that this thing was stopped and I am quite in sympathy with what the acting minister of shipping said. Now one of those days I am going to horsewhip some of the secret service men around here who write such ghoulish reports for the Star, and when I do make a move in that direction, the one who gets the horsewhipping will have cause to remember me afterwards. Let me emphasize that these secret service men come around here solely for the purpose of defaming and besmirching the reputations of decent and respectable citizens in this House. I tell you again, Mr. Speaker, that if we intend to live up to anything decent in this House, that this has got to stop. I notice the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries laughing. He is in a jocular mood to-night. He knows the crowd that is carrying it on. He got rid of them, consequently his paper is better. I repeat, Mr. Speaker that such foul stuff is written for my daughter's and other men's daughters to read, and it does not tend to give me respect either from my wife or my children. What these yellow references, contained in The Star, mean, I do not know, nor do I want to know, but this much is certain that it reflects upon my character and decency the way my name was dragged in, and I am not going to allow any man in this House or outside of it to carry on that sort of game with impunity. If there is any man who has anything against me, why not come and tackle me in a manly way, I can stand it, but I am not going to allow such trash to be published in this country about me. I appeal to the Prime Minister to-night to have this brand of stuff cut out of the paper. Just try it for a week and see how the paper would look. Any foreigner reading such filthy matter would naturally say: "Give us something clean to read." I also call upon the Hon. Dr. Barnes, Minister of Education, to see that this class of stuff is cut out of the public journals of the country. As Dr. Barnes well knows, it is not the uneducated man that usually causes trouble, but the educated man by the paragraph that he writes. If the Prime Minister is serious over the idea of endeavouring to have a cleaner press, I can assure him that I will be only too willing and too glad to give him my support and influence. After all, I am a Newfoundlander and am, therefore, entitled to be treated as such; and I do want to impress upon this country that I do not want to give Dr. Barnes money for educational purposes while abuse and slander permeates our city press.

Another matter that I would like to refer to, seeing that it has food for reflection for these secret service men again. An article was written during the election campaign that touched a tender spot for the first time with. I would like to have hold of the cur who wrote it and I would put him in his proper place. That article was written under a nom-de plume and referred to the late Mr. Crosbie. That was the father who produced me and that was my tender spot. As I have said before, attack me all you like and as often as you like in a fair manner and I am prepared to defend myself, but when it comes to raking the name of a deceased father, whose memory I still love and cherish, I think that that is hitting below the belt. On turning up the back files of the Daily Star for September 25th, I noticed a letter was written attacking my dead father. It was signed Brigus, but it was written in the Star office. When I entered Brigus on October 2nd I saw the letter. The people of Brigus could never write such a letter about a Crosbie.

Now I would say to the Prime Minister, you have laid down the principle to-night and I hope you will live up to it. I want to tell that I was born and christened in the Methodist Church. I have lots of Roman Catholic friends and Orange friends, and when I am gone, well, there'll be one more Protestant gone.

I again appeal to the manhood of the Prime Minister and the Acting Minister of Shipping to try and have a cleaner press, and if they see anything indecent going on to have a stop put to it. I hope and trust that this debate will be fruitful of good results and not go away in the air.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, in seconding Sir John's motion that we do now adjourn until Monday afternoon at three of the clock, I would say that if the Whole House is consistently sincere I concur in the motion entirely because there is a considerable amount of stuff printed in the newspapers that should not be there. I have samples of some of it on my desk now, which I have extracted from The Herald, and which only serve to degrade our public life.

And it being past midnight, Saturday, May 1st, 1920.

On motion the report of the committee on the Address in Reply was adopted.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until Monday next at three of the clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Judicature Act."

Hon. Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter four of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled "Of Legislative Disabilities and the Vacation of Seats in the House of Assembly."

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, MAY 3rd. 1920

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate. but seeing that so many both Opposition and Government members are doing so, I think it is up to me to make a few remarks.

I wish to join with the previous speakers in congratulating you upon your appointment as First Commoner of the land, and I feel as they do that the honour has not only been paid you. but to all the fishermen of the Colony. Coming from the ranks of the fishermen myself, I feel a little more at home, when a fisherman is at the head of affairs.

A few days ago the leader of the Opposition said with regard to the intention of the Government to make farmers out of returned soldiers, that the most of them have been fishermen, and that he thinks you cannot make farmers out of fishermen. Now I am of the opinion that if it is possible to make the First Commoner of the Land out of a fisherman, it is an easy matter to make farmers out of fishermen.

I also wish to congratulate the Mover and Seconder of the Address in Reply. Not only do I feel it is my duty to congratulate these gentlemen, but I also wish to thank them, and to acknowledge that I owe them a debt, for the service they rendered Empire and Country, and the protection they afforded us here. Like all true Britishers these gentlemen were not satisfied with the Victory they won on the battlefield, they were not satisfied to finish up with the fight they won, they returned home and took upon themselves the responsibility of fighting the political Huns of the country. They are true Britishers, and having been into the fight they want to continue.

I want to thank the Hon. member for Ferryland, Mr. Moore, for the bouquet that he threw across the House to my colleague, Mr. Abbott and myself, referring to the appointment of a Minister of Agriculture and Mines, it was something on these lines. He was surprised that Mr. Coaker was satisfied that a man not having a seat in this House, should get this office when two such capable men as Mr. Winsor and Mr. Abbott were available to fill the position. Now I wish to say for my part, had Mr. Coaker asked me to take charge of that department, I would have declined, and had he insisted, I would resign my seat in this House. I would decline because of my lack of Agricultural knowledge. I think the Government ought to feel proud, and the Premier has reason to be proud, that he can get such a man as Dr. Campbell to fill this position. He has a hard proposition ahead of him. He will not only have to use his Agricultural ability, but he will have to use his Medical ability as well in this position, and he is entitled to the full support of the Government he forms a part of.

When I first entered this House I received lots of information on many points. One was that you had to address the Speaker, and be sure to keep to the subject. If not, you would be called down. Now a word about Sectarianism. Before I entered this work I knew no man by the faith he believed in, and many times I have regreted that I ever took up this work, but if I thought the time would ever come when I would have to judge a man by his faith, then I would curse the day I ever touched it. Remarks have been made that this is the place to deal with it. That is right. We have to admit that this thing exists, we are face to face with it. If this is so, Mr. Speaker, if this is the right place to deal with it, then let us deal with it correctly, and have done with it. To-day we are writing history, and this history the people will read. When it is read fifty or a hundred years from now, don't let it be said that instead of doing our best for the people who sent us here, that we spent our time discussing sectarianism. To my mind what has brought about this condition of things is nothing mone or less than the dirty unscrupulous politicians we have had in this country, who would stop at nothing to gain a seat in this Assembly. My six years experience in public life has had been that political affairs in this country are nothing more than a seething mass of corruption. When there are men in this country who will sit around the Executive Council and make an appeal for one hundred, two or three thousand dollars, such a man would not regard your religion, his own or mine, then we should not trust our religion in the hands of these men. If the Hon. member for St. John's East, who gave us that splendid address the other night, and who expressed himself so broad-mindedly on this subject, went down those winding stairs thinking to himself, I gave those Protestant fellows over there a good fleecing, and we of the other denominations think that we gave the Catholic members a fleecing, then I say it would be better if those words had been left unsaid. In my opinion there is only one way to stamp this thing out from amongst us. That is, let Mr. Fox, the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who represents the Catholic faith and appears to be very sincere on this point, and I believe he is sincere, take with him some more young men of his denomination, and let some of the young men of the Protestant denomination join with them, and be determined to protect and denounce this sectarianism in every way.

Mr. Speaker, we are all aware of the great changes that have taken place the world over, and especially in Newfoundland, some of them, Sir, in this Assembly. For this last few years there have been quite a lot of debates on fishery matters, which is justly right, seeing our main industry is our fisheries. If you were to take the debates of this Assembly of bygone years, you would find that debates on fishery matters are as scarce as fish is in the Dead Sea. Why was this? Because of the class of men who sat here as representatives of the people. They were generally doctors, lawyers, business men and such like, who knew very little about the most important work of our country; and if by chance a real representative of the fishermen did get here, he was soon made to understand by his political advisers that he was here to get what he could for himself, and let the people look out for themselves.

Regarding the Fishery Regulations that there has been so much about, and have occupied some time in debates, I can only view it from a standpoint of a fisherman or a layman, and not as an exporter. Whether these Regulations are perfect or not, I am not prepared to say, but yet I feel sure we are in need of something to put our fisheries on a proper basis, for we are living in the twentieth century with a fishing system the same as a century ago, in fact, not as good, because the curing of our fish has been demoralized; still we expect to compete with other countries in the fishery business, who have taken the advantage of all the modern improvements of to-day.

When these Regulations were first put into force it was thought by some that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, also being a large exporter, was joining with other large exporters of this town to crush the small outport exporter. This thing is now contradicted, for we have heard from some of these men who spoke on this subject, and have shown how it has already helped them. I watched the debates in the Board of Trade on this subject during the winter, and I came to the conclusion that the opposition to these Regulations had more than one cause behind it—some from a political point of view, some because of the source from which it came, and some from those with no organizing abilities, and believed they should be in the same lines as their grandfathers were. Anyhow, the information given by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries a few nights ago, has cleared the minds of many, and as shown, if these Regulations are properly supported, will prove a great blessing to our fisheries. As regards the standardization of our fish, this is another matter of great importance, and I hope to have something to say on this when a Bill is brought before us for this purpose. Perhaps the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will have a Bill so well prepared that we will not need to do any hashing with it, but just support it. Many claim that the only thing required to give us good fish is for the buyers to pay the man a better price for good fish than they do for an inferior quality. No doubt, this will have a good effect. You have to realize, Mr. Speaker, that our fish-making system is demoralized, and our fishermen will want both encouragement and assurance that they will be paid for the extra trouble with it. For without a doubt, there will be political hypocrites trying to show to the fishermen that they are only paid for their Number One fish, the same as if it was sold talqual, really loosing on all, not Number One. This, of course, will cause some trouble among the fishermen; still it may be remedied by the influence of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

When the Hon. Leader of the Opposition was speaking on the move that the Government had made regarding providing workingmen's homes, he said many of the members on the Government side will not be interested in this, seeing that they belong to the outports. As for my part, Mr. Speaker, I realize I am elected here by the people of Bonavista district, and to the people of that district I owe a duty, and will try my best to perform it, yet in the meantime I realize I have to consider other people as well, no matter whether they live in this town or anywhere else. I believe that every man that is willing to work, should have a comfortable home. I don't know if you call it socialism, democracy or what, but I do claim that every man that is prepared to do an honest day's work, no matter what his occupation may be, whether it be fisherman, farmer, carpenter, laborer of every class, the State owes to that man a comfortable home, be able to feed and clothe his children, means to give them a good education, and to be able to lay a dollar oneside for old age, and pay his funeral expenses, so that when leaving this world and going into the one above, he will give St. Peter to understand he is coming there independent.

Mr. Speaker, it is amusing to some of us to listen to those members on the Opposition, who sat so long in the Government, doing very little for the welfare of the people; but now they are on the Opposition they are very earnest. The Hon. Leader, Sir Michael Cashin, laboured for nearly an hour, pulling up his sleeves and wiping the sweat from his brow, trying to impress the present Government on the great need of homes for the working men of this town, yet that Hon. gentleman sat for years in the Government and paid no attention to their appeal. And now the Government has attempted to do something, he is trying his best to ridicule it; and when refering to this clause, the Hon. gentleman held up the Speech from the Throne to this Honse, and said there is nothing in it, it is only a cod. Maybe, Mr. Speaker, that word is not parliamentary for me to use. I would not have used it if it had not been used by my superior parliamentarian. Whether this Speech is a cod or not, Sir, I am prepared to stand by this Government and the Leader of this Government if it will only try to perform what is included in this Speech. And I may say, not only do I expect it to be done in one year, but if it is done in four years I will be justified in saying there will have been more done for the general welfare of this country, than for the twenty-eight years the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has had the pleasure of holding a seat in this Assembly.

MR. JENNINGS:—Mr. Speaker, in order not to occupy more time than possible in offering my congratulations to you and to our two brave soldier lads and to some of the speakers on the Opposition side, I will follow the example to some extent of a very lazy man of whom I read some years ago. This man although extremely lazy was in the habit of saying his prayers when retiring at night. After a while he thought of a plan whereby he could avoid this trouble, so he wrote the prayers and underneath he penned the words, "These are my sentiments." He fixed this over his head and on retiring nodded his head toward the prayers and retired. So I would like to gather up all the best things that have been said in the way of congratulations and offer them to you as my sentiments and pass on to more serious problems.

I did not intend to take part in the debate at this juncture but I want to make a few remarks in reply to a charge made by the Hon. leader of the Opposition and also a statement by the Member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett. I was surprised at the acrimonous tone he introduced into his speech the other day. When that gentleman occupied a seat on this side of the House his remarks were usually courteous and never offensive and I am afraid at this time in the heat of debate he said things which perhaps he would rather on cooler judgment wish unsaid. I refer particularly to his broad, unqualified statement, "That the election was fought and won on sectarian issues all over the country." I want to tell that gentleman that we would not touch the dirty, filthy thing with a forty-foot pole, in the District of Twillingate. We could have sat down and won our election without making a speech, without visiting a settlement, and would have been returned with a substantial majority, and I say right here that if in the future elections have to be won on sectarian lines I shall never again occupy a seat in this House.

In the district of Twillingate most of the people belong to the Protestant Denomination, but there are a few settlements where there are a number of people who are of the Roman Catholic persuasion. We visited these settlements and were treated decently. I don't know how they voted; we received votes enough to return us twice over and we shall give every class and every section of the District the same treatment and the same fair play from Cobb's Arm to Shoe Cove irrespective of the altar at which they worship. Down in the Public Works Department a number of the officials belong to the R. C. Denomination, but to me they are all men; they have treated me with every courtesy and I have tried to accord to them the same treatment, which I trust will continue during my term of office.

I have been able to put a little patronage, since coming into office, in the way of four of our returned soldiers, but I did not make any enquiries into either their politics or religion, but was glad to be able to do a little on their behalf. Not so much can be said regarding the appointment of a young lady to a vacancy in the Public Works Dept. last October. This was a position which could have been easily filled by one of our crippled soldiers with just a little education, a position for which I have four applications on file at the present time, but there was no consideration given to these men at that time. The appointment was made for purely political purposes.

The Hon. leader of the Opposition, in his speech the other day, made the charge that one of the Public Depts was being prostituted. When he made that statement it caused me tc think. Circumstances have placed me at the head of a Department which has certainly been prostituted with a vengeance.

In the year 1913, previous to the election, a large surplus special was allocated to the different districts, in many instances given to private individuals to work it out or not as they saw fit. This was at that time not illegal according to law.

At the following session in the winter of 1914 the Opposition and particularly the F. P. U. men strongly criticized such a system of handling public moneys.

Sir Edward Morris, the leader of the Government at that time, formed a Select Committee to draft a Bill, and I had the privilege to serve on that committee, which was representative of both sides of the House. The Local Affairs Act was the result and we considered a great moral victory was gained when a law was passed providing that all public grants for roads, bridges and whatever were to be spent only under the supervision of legally appointed Boards. Now what do we find in the year 1919. In spite of that law we find the head of the Public Works Dept., whose special duty it was to see that law observed, breaking that law right and left and encouraging other members of the Government of which he was a member to do the same. When the announcement was made by the Minister of Finance last Spring that a large surplus special would be available for Public Works we were all pleased, as the needs of the different districts in this respect were great. In conjunction with my colleagues we prepared a list of special needs and presented them to the Government. All these requests were ignored and the distribution of this money in the District of Twillingate was given to a prospective candidate who came out on the Cashin ticket.

The Local Affairs Act was ignored and grants given to private individuals with no safeguard whatever as to what might be done with the money.

Of the three hundred and thirty thousand dollars allocated under the supervision of the Public Works Dept. the per capita share for Twillingate District from this amount was $23,624.15 but there was actually allocated the sum of $12,728.40 or just about half of its appropriation. What became of the other half? The explanation is not hard to find. Harbour main's per capita share was $14,107.-75. There was allocated to Harbour main $27,580.14 or almost double its share; there's where Twillingate's money went. Fogo had much the same treatment. Its per capita share was $14,098.13, it actually received $7,304.40. Where did the half of Fogo's grant bring up? That too is not hard to find out. Port de Grave's per capita appropriation was $10,623.-35, it received $16,182.92; that's where the other half of Fogo's grant went. A few weeks ago I got from the Marine & Fisheries Dept. a statement of the appropriation for Twillingate of the Marine & Fisheries grant; its share from that source was $20,387.94. The first item of expenditure was $1,000.00 transferred to Trinity District. Farther down the list were other transfers to different districts amounting in all to nearly $10,000.00 or about half of that grant. One of these transfers was made on November 14th to the Public Works Dept. On making inquiries I found that this $1500.00 had been sent to Ferryland. Now in view of these facts the Members for Ferryland can hardly expect me to send much special money to that District during my term of office.

Prostitution indeed with a vengeance, and in view of the needs of Twillingate District such conduct is nothing short of piratical, but is in accordance with the doctrine preached and practised by the late Government in order to buy the electorate.

Shortly after coming into office, hearing the rumours of abnormal stocks of vegetables supplied to the different public institutions, I took occasion to visit each one to see for myself. I did not go particularly to enquire into the "green pea" scandal, but more in relation to the stocks of potatoes and turnips. I did find rather heavy stocks, but this part was not so serious as the quality supplied, much of which was absolutely trash, no assortment, but small and rotten all dumped in together. I questioned the employees whether they ever had any instructions to reject any of those vegetables as unfit as they were being supplied by the different parties. In every case the answer was no.

One said he did refuse some on his own initiative but the owner of the stuff went off and got a note from the then Minister of Public Works demanding that those potatoes be accepted and that ended his attempt to do the thing right. I may say in passing that every institution has orders now to reject any unsuitable vegetables and holding them responsible if these instructions are not carried out. One peculiar circumstance in connection with the price of potatoes last Fall was that during the month of October at the same date some parties received $6.00, others $6.50 and some $7.00; apparently each man was paid according to his particular value but the vegetables were not considered. I may inform the House that owing to the unsuitable quality of these potatoes about half of them are unfit for human consumption and will cost the country from $10.00 to $15.00 per barrel.

I have had a few curious visitors since taking office. I don't know if I should tell the story of the "script." (A voice: "Yes, let's have it.") Well, sitting in the office one evening during my first week there a man looked in around the door and asked if Mr. Woodford was in. I said no, is there anything I can do for you. Thus encouraged he entered the office and walked up to the table. Well what is it my man? "I thought sir you may be able to give me a bit of a script." I replied no I cannot do that for you. Well, he said, we used to get them here, Mr. Woodford used to give them, and I got a very bad cold. He however went away disappointed and evidently spread the news, as I have received no applications since.

On another occasion I was waited on by two men who apparently represented others on the same errand. They had come from Bell Island on their way home to Harbour Main and wanted some help towards paying their fare. I had to inform them that there were no funds in the Department of Public Works for such purposes and that if they were destitute the only advice I could give would be to apply to the Commissioner of Charities, upon which they admitted that they were not totally destitute but were following a practice largely in vogue in the past when they and other parties did get help in this respect from the Dept. of Public Works. I could only tell them that if this was done by my predecessor he must have either paid the money out of his own pocket or out of some fund which he had no right to tamper with. I mention these facts as an example to what an extent irregularities have been practised in the past and to what extent the Dept. of Public Works has been prostituted.

Reference has been made to free entries. I have had some little experience of that too. More than one request has been made to allow certain goods to be admitted duty free and I have been told that all that was necessary was for me just to initial the invoice and the thing would be done. When first confronted with a request of this nature I made some enquiries and found that it was not the custom to admit anything duty free, it was irregular, unsafe and opened a wide door for something worse. It is just as well for the goods to go through the regular channels, collect the duty and let it go into the revenue as to remit the duty, giving a possible advantage to the contractor. All contracts drawn in connection with the Public Works Dept., so I am informed, are drawn with the understanding that duty is paid on all imports by the contractor, but there is one thing revealed in those requests and that is that some have been getting concessions contrary to regulations and that some one in authority has winked at such proceedings or perhaps been more seriously involved.

Mr. Speaker it is high time these irregular practices should cease. The time is ripe for a clean up; we hope to do something substantial in this respect and if at the end of four years we cannot present to the people of this country a better condition of affairs, a cleaner state, then we shall have proved ourselves unworthy of the responsibility of self government and should return to the status of a Crown Colony.

MONDAY, May 3rd, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to lay on the table of the House copies of the treaties of peace between the allied powers and the associated powers: Germany, Austria, Bulgaria and certain other governments relating thereto. Also report of public schools of Newfoundland for year ending December 31, 1919. Also report of the Department of Agriculture and Mines for fiscal year ending June 30, 1919. Also return of licenses issued during 1918 return of crown lands grants issued 1918-1919; returning of mining licenses issued 1918-1919; report of the 1st and 2nd surveyors of the Department of Agriculture and Mines; report of the chief woods ranger; returns of lumber operations; reports of Government analyst.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of my hon. friend, Mr. Sullivan, member for the district of Placentia and St. Mary's, of April 27th, referring to undertakings of a police nature in Newfoundland in which Mr. Crowe, either personally or in a representative capacity is interested.

The hon. member has been given access to the files and has, I understand, secured the information sought so that question is considered answered.

MR. SULLIVAN:—That is so, thank you.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present three petitions. These petitions concern not only the people of Fortune, but practically all the south coast of the Island. The three petitions all read the same, and refer to the coming shortage of supply of timber. The petitions ask that Government action be taken. It seems that some private individuals have taken up limits there, and in addition to operating two mills on the limits held, are also operating mills within the three mile limit.

In presenting these petitions I desire to say that I will do my best to see that some relief is given the people of Bay d'Espoir.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Clark's Beach in the district of Port de Grave. Before presenting the petition I would like to ask the leader of the government whether it is the Government's intention to introduce a prohibition bill.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—The matter has not been finally considered.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I will read the petition. It is signed by the Methodist clergyman and a large number of others. In presenting this petition I reserve my right for further comment until the government decides what action to take.

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people at Newtown. This petition is for a motor boat about 10 or 12 tons to take freight and passengers to connect with the coastal boat at Wesleyville. At the present time I understand it is the intention to make Newtown a port of call for the bay boat. Unless that is done, this petition should be granted.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support this petition.

MR. LeGROW:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Grate's Cove for $7500.00 to build a launchway at that place. This launchway is absolutely necessary, as the fishermen are now without any facilities for fishing purposes. This petition is largely signed, and I hope it will receive the full consideration of the department to which it relates.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay upon the table of the House copies of correspondence between the Great War Veterans' Association and the Government in relation to matters appeartaining to pensions and allowances to sailors, soldiers and dependents.

My hon. friends asks me the following questions:

(1) If the request for a temporary measure only, and until the scale of pensions is amended, is it the intention of the Government to allow the following increases:
   (a) Total disability, 20 per cent. increase.
   (b) Orphans of sailors and soldiers, 20 per cent. increase.
   (c) Children of deceased sailors and soldiers, 20 per cent. increase.
   (d) All other cases where deceased or totally disabled sailors or soldiers was or is the sole support, 20 per cent. increase.
(2) Also is it the intention of the Government to make this increase retroactive from Nov. 15, 1919.
(3) And is it the intention of the Government to carry out the policy in connection with returned soldiers and sailors as outlined in the Prime Minister's manifesto issued in October, 1919.

It is not probable that the Government will undertake any temporary measures. The whole question of pensions to soldiers and sailors, disability allowances, gratuities, pensions and allowances to dependents and financial and other assistance to enable the returned soldiers and sailors to get back to a peace basis, is receiving and has for some time past been receiving the careful consideration of the Government. In my manifesto of October last October, quoted by my hon. questioner I proposed that Newfoundland soldiers and sailors should be put upon the same basis as to pensions, gratuities, etc., as appertained in the neighboring dominion. Detailed information is being secured as to the status of the soldiers, not only in Canada, but in Great Britain, and Ireland, France, Italy, Belgium, the United States, New Zealand, Australia, South Africa, India and other British possessions. For the additional information of the hon. members I table certain information not included within the scope of his questions, namely, information prepared for me by the Department of Militia giving a summary of the status of soldiers and their dependents in the matter of disability allowances, pensions, gratuities, etc., amongst the leading nations engaged in the recent war, particularly Great Britain and the dominions. It will be noted that Canada makes by far the highest payments on the whole, and that Newfoundland ranks second. In some particulars the maximum payments made by Newfoundland were as high as Canada; in other instances they were lower. I am informed from both Canadian and Newfoundland sources that in actual practice the average payments to soldiers and their dependents were higher in Newfoundland than in Canada, because the standard of disability in the case of soldiers and sailors and the standard of dependency in the case of dependents is on a basis very much more favorable to soldiers, sailors and their dependents in Newfoundland than it is in Canada. This whole question is being carefully considered, as it is the intention of the Government to do everything in its power to assist the soldiers and sailors in these matters, having due regard to local conditions.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Salvage in the district of Bonavista, asking that a fog alarm be placed on Little Denier Island. A fog alarm on this island is an absolute necessity for fishermen and others trying to make harbor in the bottom of Bonavista Bay as there is a very dangerous group of breakers off the eastern end of the island. The petition is very largely signed and is endorsed by letters from the people of Wesleyville, Squid Tickle and St. Brendan's, all of whom are of the opinion that this fog alarm is an absolute necessity, and I trust the Government will find it possible to give this request favorable consideration and that it will be handed to the department of Marine and Fisheries, where I know my friend and colleague, the minister, will give it his best attention, and see that Little Denier is adorned with a fog alarm.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Cockle's Cove in the district of Twillingate, asking for a small post office. The post office was formerly in a private dwelling house and the man who owned the house and kept the post office is since deceased. They cannot make any other arrangement to establish the office in a private house and the building asked for is the smallest practical for the purpose for which it is needed. Seeing that they are having telephone communication there the coming season it is absolutely necessary that these people have a place of this kind for their convenience. I have much pleasure, sir, in giving this petition my hearty support and ask that it be referred to the Department of Posts and Telegraphs.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Joe Batt's Arm. This is a very lengthy petition and is signed by some 150 persons and asks that a breakwater be built out over a ledge of rock from Broom's Point, some two hundred feet, to give shelter to and make a safe anchorage for boats. During December and January of the past season a heavy storm was experienced there and a heavy sea hove in, destroying wharves, flakes, stages, boats and other property . The harbor is a rough one and every time a sea heaves in there this is a common occurrence. It is well known to this House that Joe Batt's Arm is a very important settlement, there being, I think, something like 250 fishermen there, and I am sure that this is as important a petition as has been presented here this session. The request is for the sum of $5,000 to perform this very necessary work. I know the place quite well, as my attention was called to it during the campaign last fall. I hope that the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs will bear me out in this, and I have very much pleasure, sir, in giving this petition my hearty support and ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

I have another petition, Mr. Speaker, from the people of Man Point, Gander Bay. Man Point is a settlement on the south side of Gander Bay and this petition is signed by the men of that place and those of Long Point asking for the modest sum of $400.00 to complete the public road from Man Point to Long Point. Although there is a lot of commerce and traffic between those places the only means of communication by travel is a right-of-way cut through the woods. I think in the early days there was a road there but the ground over which the line is cut is so boggy that it is necessary to wear long rubbers when going over it. There is quite an industry at Long Point, where

Mr. French operates a large mill, and besides people going up Gander Bay have to take this road when they cannot go by boat. I have much pleasure sir, in giving this petition my hearty support, and I ask that it be referred to the Department of Public Works, where I trust it will receive the attention its importance entitles it to.

Mr. Speaker, I have still another petition from the residents of Fogo, signed by Magistrate Cook and some 80 or 90 others, asking for the small sum of $100.00 to complete a road to a very important well. The obtaining of a sufficient water supply is one of the greatest difficulties that the people of Fogo have to contend with and in fact all down the coast from Tilting, Joe Batt's Arm and Barr'd Island to Fogo, the same trouble is experienced. It is extremely hard to get water and more especially during a dry summer, and for this reason the petition I now present is an important one. I have very much pleasure in giving it my hearty support, and I ask that it be referred to Department of Public Works.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the prayer of the petition presented by the hon. member for Fogo. I may say that this is an outstand ing need. Other settlements received considerable attention last year when a grant of $500,000 was made for the public works of the colony, but unfortunately for this district I had not the privilege of allocating this grant. I understand a great sum of money which should have been sent to Fogo for public needs was diverted to other districts. If I had the privilege of handling this money I can assure Mr. Hibbs there would be no necessity for presenting his petition this afternoon.

MR. SCAMMELL:—I have pleasure in supporting the petition of Mr. Hibbs in the matter of the cleaning out of Curley's Brook. I know quite a bit of the needs of this district. I spent five years at school in Fogo district. I know many people go down there to get water from this brook and I heartily support the prayer of the petition.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, before the funds of the treasury have been exhausted in granting the requests of Mr. Hibbs and his associates I would ask leave to present a petition from the people of Fox Hr. and Argentia for the sum of $500 to build a very necessary road in communication with a saw mill at that place. This mill was erected by the people to supply lumber for their own personal use. The petition has been signed by Rev. Fr. Savin and 60 or 70 other residents of the place. I trust the Department of Public Works will see its way clear to have this given due consideration.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to support the prayer of the petition presented by Mr. Walsh.

MR. SINNOTT:—I beg leave to support this petition.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave Notice of Question.

Mr. MacDonnell gave Notice of Question.

Dr. Jones gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Bennett gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Vinnicombe gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Walsh gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Fox gave Notice of Question.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Lance Cove, Bell Island, for the reconstruction of the public wharf at that place. I have personal knowledge of this need to the people of Lance Cove and I accordingly support this petition with great heartiness. I also wish to take this opportunity to draw the attention of the Government to the conditions now prevailing at Bell Island. Some few years ago a local council was appointed having jurisdiction over the whole of the island. This was later divided into two sections, one section looking after the mining district and the other section the front of the Island. Some few months previous to the termination of office of the councils which I presume did terminate, the people of Lance Cove and Freshwater were advocating a division of the west end council, and this was before the government. The situation over there at present is that the councils having accepted their term of office as expired have declined to take an interest in public works. I think, Mr. Speaker, this should be given the very serious consideration of the Government. The beach wharf and the Lance Cove wharf are both gone and no effort has been made to replace them. The beach wharf, though useful, is not so absolutely necessary but the immediate replacement of the Lance Cove wharf is absolutely essential. It is the only means of bringing provisions into this part of the island because to drag them over land from any other section would not only be a burdensome job but also a costly one. I ask the Government to consider this petition, but I am not personally concerned in what attitude you take in the matter of local councils, in making a third council or not, but immediate attention is absolutely urgent. Bell Island is a place where more than ordinary attention should be given, and I urge you to give this matter your earliest consideration. It has been reported to me, Mr. Speaker, that even the ordinary pauper has been neglected. The Commissioner of Public Charities in a conversation with me the other day stated that one of the councils have not yet applied for their last quarter grant. I invite the consideration of the Government in this matter.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to support the prayer of this petition presented by my colleague and I emphasize the importance of the matter and ask the Government to give it serious consideration.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support this petition.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word in reference to the petition of my hon. friend Mr. Higgins, as I have personal knowledge of the needs of the people of Bell Island having visited there quite often. The wharf at Lance Cove is not only important from the standpoint of Bell Island but it is much used by people from all over the country who go there to seek employment. I think there is a movement on foot to take over the tramway.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Judicature Act" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, "An Act to amend Chapter 4 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled "Of Legislative Disabilities and the Vacation of Seats in the House of Assembly," was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the Chair of Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs," I would point out that the bill itself is a very brief one and consists of the formal creation by Act of Parliament of a Department of Posts & Telegraphs, which department was created by Minute of Council in November last. I feel that every member of the Legislature will concur with me when I say that the Postal Telegraph Service throughout the country is such a large spending department and of such magnitude as a public utility that it should cease to be a mere branch of the responsibilities of the Colonial Secretary and should become a Department of the Crown with a ministerial head directly responsible to the people for the conduct of the department.

Section 1 of the bill provides for the creation of the department, over which a minister shall preside.

Section 2 places within the jurisdiction of the new department the supervision, control and direction of all matters relating to the Postal and Telegraph service of the colony. The office of Postmaster General under the provisions of Chapter 35 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) are by this section vested in the new minister.

Section 3 empowers His Excellency the Governor in Council to appoint a Deputy, and such officers, clerks and other employees as are necessary for the conduct of the proper business of the department.

Section 4 enacts the necessary verbal change in Chapter 35 above referred to, so that whenever the word "department" is referred to in that chapter it will hereafter refer to the Department of Posts and Telegraphs and not to the Department of the Colonial Secretary.

By sections 5 and 6 certain sections of Chapter 35 are repealed.

Under section 7 the sub-section of Chapter 35 relating to franked letters is repealed and a section substituted therefor covering the law as it actually stands to-day. The repealed subsection provided for the franking of letters to and from the Colonial Secretary, the Minister of Justice and certain other officials. The sub-section substituted therefor includes all the departments created since the original enactment of the repealed sub-section and adds such other public officials as the Commissioner of Public Charities, the Superintendents of Education, who were years ago granted the franking privilege by order in council, and such others as His Excellency the Governor in Council may determine should avail of franking facilities.

I trust that this bill will be accorded a unanimous second reading, as I feel that every member of the House appreciates the necessity for the creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs and the reorganization with a view to higher efficiency which it is hoped this step will make possible.

The Chairman of the Committee reported that they had considered the matter ti them referred, and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 4, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled the report of public schools, under Church of England boards, 1919.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Finance and Customs to lay on the table of this House the amount of free entries passed through the customs for the following years, 1916, 1917, 1918, 1919.

Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs tabled the information.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Finance and Customs to lay on the table of this House a list showing the number of officials appointed in his department, both in St. John's and outports, giving the names and positions of each, since November 15th, 1919. Also salary of each.

Hon. Minister of Finance Customs tabled the information.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs to lay on the table of this House a statement of the number of persons that sold government bonds in 1917 and 1918, and the amount of commission paid each.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE & CUSTOMS:—In reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to state that the information asked for is in course of preparation and will be tabled to-morrow.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to lay on the table of this House a list giving number of vessels built in Newfoundland since 1918, giving names, tonnage and amount of bounty paid on each, and amount of material passed duty free for the construction of each vessel.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—The answer to this question is being prepared, Mr. Speaker, and will be ready to-morrow.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of this House a statement showing the amount paid to the Reid Nfld. Co. for extending the railroad from Catalina Station to Port Union.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY:—Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman I beg to state that the amount paid the Reid Nfld. Co. for this extension was $90,848.87. This sum does not include the value of the land.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Acting Minister of Shipping to lay on the table of the House all information relevant to the chartering of a vessel to carry freight to Grand Bank, and what amount of subsidy is paid for said vessel.

HON. MINISTER O FSHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to say that this information is being prepared and will be ready to-morrow.

Dr. Jones asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary to lay on the table of the House a statement giving particulars of amounts paid in connection with the small pox outbreak in the District of Harbor Main, during the periods mentioned below, and authorized by Magistrate O'Toole.

1.—The number of cases attended.

2.—The number of successful vaccinations performed.

3.—The amounts paid for such attendance, and vaccinations, and to whom paid.

4.—The amounts paid for medicines, and to whom paid.

5.—The amounts paid for travelling expenses and board, and to whom paid.

(During the period between Sept. 30th, 1918, and May 31st, 1918):

1.—The number of cases attended.

2.—The number of successful vaccinations performed.

3.—The amounts paid for such attendance and vaccination, and to whom paid.

4.—The amounts paid for medicines furnished, and to whom paid.

5.—The amounts paid for travelling expenses and board, and to whom paid.

(During the period from May 31st, 1919, to April 1, 1920.)

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY:—

I might say, Mr. Speaker in reply to the hon. gentleman, that the information he asks for will take considerable time to prepare, and if the member for Harbor Main will call at the office of the Commissioner of Charities he will be able to obtain the information he seeks much more readily than my department could supply it to him.

DR. JONES:—Will I be at liberty to copy the information I want?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY:—Yes, and I shall be glad to place a clerk at the hon. gentleman's disposal.

Mr. Vinnicombe asked the Minister of Public Works if Supt. of Public Works Mr. Churchill is still superintending the work now being done on the Sanitorium and Lunatic Asylum. If not who is doing such work, when the appointment was made and why such appointment was made.

The Minister of Public Works tabled the information.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to lay on the table of the House:

(a) Statement showing the location of the dredge Priestman from the 15th day of November last to date.

(b) The number of days employed and where employed.

(c) The number of days not employed and why not employed.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—The information is in course of preparation

Mr. Bennett asked Hon. the Prime Minister (in the absence of the minister of militia) if all claims for pensions have been considered by the board of pension commissioners and if not, how many claims are still out standing up to the present date.

HON. the Prime Minister tabled the information.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER —In reply to the question of Sir Michael Cashin, I would state that the amount paid by the late government to the Reid Nfld. Co. for railway extension from Catalina station to Port Union railway temius was $90,848,87.

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of St. Brendans, Squid Tickles and Flat Island asking from Alexander Bay via. Squid Tickles. This Road is badly needed and would be of great service especially during the spring and fall when this is the only way the people of the settlements I have named have to go to the railway station at Alexander Bay and besides under present conditions the mail couriers are cut off from the settlements along their routes and this road would unable them to give much more effictient service. The petition is signed by all the people of the place from which it comes and I have much pleasure in giving it my hearty support and ask that it be referred to the Department of Public Works.

MR. ABBOTT:—I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in giving this petition my hearty support and I trust that the government will see its way clear to comply with its request.

DR. JONES:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Chapel's Cove, in the District of Hr. Main, asking that the public wharf there be repaired. During the storms of the past season this wharf was badly damaged and as the tishermen if they could not use it. would suffer much inconvenience I therefore give this petition my hearty support and ask that it be referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

DR. JONES:—I ask leave to present another petition from the inhabitants of Chapel's Cove objecting to the proposed removal of the post office. Chapel's Cove is a large settlement and is divided into two sections. Chapel's Cove Proper and Chapel's Cove Pond. During my 25 or 26 years in that district the post office has always been in the same house and no change was ever made no matter what political changes there might have been but the present government has seen fit to remove the office from where it has been so long. Chapel's Cove Pond has a post office of its own and the new arrangement the post office for Chapels Cove proper will really be in the Chapel s Cove Pond section. This is unfair to the people and this petition protesting against it is signed by ninety-nine and a half per cent. of the residents of Chapel's Cove. I trust that it will receive the consideration of this House and that the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs will see fit to take into consideration the protest embodied in this petition.

HON. MR. FOOTE—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Marystown for a road of about four miles to connect with the main road to Burin. By having this road a distance of twenty miles would be saved and the people of Fox Hr., Grand Bank, Garnish and other places would be greatly benefited. This petition is largely signed and the signatures include those of business people, clergy and other important residents. I trust that this request will receive the consideration it merits, and I have much pleasure in giving it my hearty support.

MR. CHEESEMAN—Mr. Speaker, this petition is a very important one, and I have much pleasure in giving it my hearty support.

MR. WALSH—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Sound Island asking for a sum of money to pay the hire of a wharf which is used there by the public in place of a government wharf. The wharf that was in use is so delapidated that it is no longer of service and the place where the Argyle now calls is owned by a business firm there, the Sound Island Stores, a branch of a city house. If the government could see its way clear to pay these people something for the hire of the wharf the private people using it would look upon it in a different light as at present they do not care to use the wharf with that freedom they would wish. I have much pleasure in giving this petition my hearty support and ask that it be referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

MR. SULLIVAN,—I also give this petition my hearty support.

MR. SINNOTT:—I beg to give this petition my support, Mr. Speaker.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, on the motion for the third reading of the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs," I would ask that this reading be deferred till to-morrow for reasons which I now propose to lay before the chair.

When this bill approached the second reading yesterday I ask for certain information relative to to this but Prime Minister forestalled this request. I would like however to deal with this matter and to deal with it in a manner which I hope the House will appreciate, as any remarks addressed are not intended in a spirit of malice. Dr. Robinson was a man of estimable character who occupied the position of postmaster-general with great credit to himself and untold advantage to the public in general, leaving nothing to be desired. The correspondence dealing with this matter is part of the matter with which I wish to deal this afternoon. I will draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to what may be an accidental inaccuracy in the reply tabled by the Prime Minister. The following letter is supposed to be a copy of the reply to a telephone message by the Prime Minister to Hon. Dr. Robinson. (Reads letter.)

The concluding paragraph is particularly important in the light of the comment I am forced to make on an inaccuracy which has crept into it. This is no mere displacement of words, but an interpolation which has changed the whole sense of the letter. Broadly speaking the position is this. When Dr. Robinson received the telephone message from the Deputy Colonial Secretary, asking that he would call in and see him, the Postmaster General declined to do so, but not for reasons as made out to be in the letter.

The letter which Hon. Dr. Robinson wrote to the Deputy Colonial Secretary sets that position clear.

Now the position was that Dr. Robinson refused to meet the Colonial Secretary to discuss the intolerable situation which had arisen out of the publication of the news and which had been flashed to every telegraph station in the country stating that another man had been appointed in his place. Until that situation had been withdrawn Dr. Robinson could not hold his position.

Now Mr. Speaker, I have been creditably informed that the information tabled by the Hon. the Prime Minister in this connection is incorrect and requires an explanation.

I am determined, and I have made an attempt to realize I am not in opposition, but that I am one sent here to fulfil my duty to the public, and in the spirit which should prompt all legislature going through the Assembly. I have sincerely attempted to associate myself with the Government in that attempt. I am prepared to forget that I am in opposition in this respect, but I want to insist that when I ask for information to be tabled in this House, I want that information correct. The interpolation objected to by me has been put in a letter given to me by the Prime Minister. You will realize yourself, sir, how out-of-place these words are in that paragraph. (Reads letter.)

I want, and I insist upon it as my right that deception be not practiced. I will not stand for it, and I will not permit deception to be practiced upon me. I am prepared to associate myself with any bonafide legislation which may be passed through this House.

In asking for an adjournment of the third reading of this Bill, I ask that my request for information in connection with this correspondence will have to be furnished to me in correct form. The copies tabled are incorrect, and incorrect in the most important particulars. I do not want to think that this was anything but a typographical error, but this sort of thing must not continue. The information tabled must be correct and above suspicion.

I now ask sir, that the original correspondence coming from Dr. Robinsin to the departmental head or subdepartmental head be tabled and that the copies of the correspondence sent to him be tabled; in particular do I ask that the original letter, dater November 20th, 1919, from the Postmaster-General at that time to the Deputy Colonial Secretary be tabled. The object of my remarks is for the protection and preservation of this House and for the purpose of keeping the department in question under control. I ask the Hon. Colonial Secretary to institute the fullest possible investigation in this matter, and, in view of the situation that has arisen, it would not be consistent to proceed with the third reading of the bill. I ask, therefore, that until the information asked for is tabled that the third reading of the bill be deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, if there be in accuracies in the correspondence, I will have the official responsible for the errors suspended on to-morrow, pending investigation.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, may I say, sir, that I do not ask that such drastic action be taken.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Well I will take it. I am not supposed to have handed me by my clerks, inaccurate information and have myself subjected to the personal discourtious criticism dealt out to me this afternoon for a matter of which I have no knowledge. Would my hon. friend inform me as to the particular inaccuracy to which he referred by writing it on the paper, as tabled yesterday, also, to inform the House as to the source of his information.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I may say that I am not at liberty to disclose the source, beyond the fact that it came from a source that I cannot dispute. It came from an authoritative source and from one that I accept in all bona fides.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I take it the hon. member has a copy.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, the original copy and the carbon copy of the late Postmaster-General's letter to the Deputy Colonial Secretary do not agree. The interpolation inserted in the third line, was not a word or two, but a whole line and so merits the personal attention of the Prime Minister.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I will be thankful if he will write it on the correspondence, and I can assure the hon. member that if anybody in that department, whether he be deputy, typist or any other official, is guilty, he will be suspended on to-morrow pending investigation. I do not feel that the third reading should be delayed, as the information will be tabled to-morrow. The bill has already passed committee stage, and the original referred to will be tabled to-morrow.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, in thanking the Hon. Prime Minister and Colonial Secretary, I wish to reply to his last comment. Whereas I think it necessary and absolutely desirable to have an investigation in this matter, I do not ask for nor do I request that any drastic action be taken against any official of the department of which he is the head. All I ask is that he give his personal attention to get the desired information. I would not have done so only that the inaccuracies are very material. As regards the dismissal of any official, that is a matter for which he is responsible and it is under his control. I think I have to ask the courtesy, if not the consideration, of the Prime Minister that the third reading of the bill be adjourned until the information asked for be given me on to-morrow. It is not an irrelevant matter to which I have referred, but material to the bill in question. I, therefore, have to ask that consideration be given to my motion and have the third reading deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend feels that he would not have as full an opportunity of discussing the matter unless the third reading be deferred. Thus I am glad to extend him the courtesy and deferring the third reading until to-morrow.

MR. FOX:—I thank you, sir.

Committee of the whole on bill "An Act respecting the Encouragement of Shipbuilding."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to review the bill now before the committee and briefly explain it.

Section 2 of the bill provides for an alteration of the tonnage bounty limit by allowing the bounty to vessels as large as 130 to 160 tons. The reason of the Government having so decided is because the bulk of the vessels needed for the foreign fish carrying trade comes within the class. The day for large vessels has disappeared. The freighting of fish to Spain, Italy and Greece will, in future, be done by steamers.

It is found that large vessels built during the war are no longer needed in the foreign business of the colony. There may be occasion for some in the Brazilian trade, but I hope that before long, even Brazil exports will be handled by steamers. When in London, I interviewed Sir Frederick Lewis of the Furness Line, respecting steam connection between St. John's, New York, West Indies and Brazil, and I hope that desirability will mature within a year or two. While Brazil sail trade vessels exist we will have to use them for that purpose, but I feel convinced that the day of building vessels over 150 or 160 tons for foreign trade is gone; therefore, it would be wrong for the Government to encourage the building of large sailing vessels for our foreign trade, therefore we propose to fix the limit of qualification for the bounty at 160 tons gross.

But we propose to repay duty paid for material used in the construction of larger vessels and vessels over 160 tons shall receive rebate of duty.

It is also provided in this bill that in order to secure the rebate of duties on vessels over 160 tons, they must be built in accordance with schedule A or B of the Shipbuilding Act. At the present time, the law allows a man to build any sort of a vessel, but, under this bill, a man, if he does not build for the bounty, he must build according to schedule and have his vessel undergo rigid inspection. To qualify in future a vessel must be built well or not be used. Builders will not be allowed to use plan 3 in. thick when it should be four, nor place timbers six inches apart instead of four. No man will be allowed to float his vessel unless he has complied with the law. We want to have vessels built according to schedule.

The difference between schedule A and schedule B is not much. Schedule B is a local schedule, capable of turning out good vessels and was established within the past ten years for the building of local vessels. A vessel built under schedule B if faithfully constructed would be a first class vessel in every respect.

Section 12 of the Shipbuilding Act provides for the refund of duties on vessels upon which bounty has been claimed. During the last two years a number of vessels built in Newfoundland have not received the bounty and consequently have not received rebate. Some 8 or 10 vessels have not been in receipt of either bounty or dutp, so that provision is made in Section 3 for the repayments of duties on material used in the construction of such vessels. All who built such vessels believed they were not payable under the act. I could have asked the Governor in Council to refund such duties by Minute of Council but considered as we were amending the act that the proper course was to provide for the repaymeent of such duties by inserting a claim in this bill.

The outsanding features of the new bill are that we raise the tonnage for bounty from 130 to 160 tons; that we will refund all duty on vessels over that tonnage that are built under Schedule B; the next feature is that vessels built during the past year or two that have not received the refund shall receive it.

MR. MacDONNELL—Mr. Chairman, while this bill is before the House I would like to make a few observations in connection therewith. To my mind, sir, this bill is dangerous, because on general principle retroactive legislative is wrong. I am sorry, very sorry indeed that this bill is retroactive. On general principle were the bill from now onwards, I would support it heartily, but retroactive legislation is, to my mind a step in the wrong direction. I am thoroughly in accord with the extending of bounties, because in any respect the matter of production is the only solution to the problem which most deeply concerns all right-thinking citizens, namely the problem of the high cost of living. In so far as this bill stands for the extending of bounties for shipbuilding, Iam in support of it, but there is something about that post factum or retroactive legislation that I do not appreciate and which I do object to. The question of bounties has brought to my mind a subject, which beyond all other subjects has been uppermost in my mind during the present session. I refer to the encouragement of Agriculture. As I have intimated before, I think that this House ought encourage all industries, because the more production the lower will be the cost of living, and this question of the encouragement of agriculture will get my heartiest support at all times. And in so far as the puestion of bounties has been considered, I think I am entitled and am perfectly within my rights when I express my regrets that the question of a bounty in the matter of agriculture and the matter of clearing of land has not been put in the speech from the throne. As I have already said, the question of the extension of bounties merits my approval. Some years ago as no doubt you are aware, there was a bounty of $20 an acre given for the man who cleared land and cropped it. I think that it was in the first session of the Morris Government that that act was repealed. Now we are confronted with one problem, which overshadows all other problems in importance, and that is the high cost of living.

There is only one solution, and absolutely ons solution to that, and that is increased production. Therefore, I submit that whilst expressing myself in accord with the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in extending bounties on shipbuilding, I am entitled to draw the attention of this House to the fact that so far there has been nothing foreshadowed of any intention on the part of this House or the exesutive government to introduce any bill that would give that very important, that almost indispensible government grant or bonus for land clearing. I am perfectly aware, sir, that I cannot, as a member of the opposition, introduce a bill to the effect that a bonus should be paid for the purpose of clearing land. A bill which involves the expenditure of the revenue must be introduced by the government side. I think that it is for these reasons, sir, that when this bill and the question of bounties come before this House that I deem it my duty, while recording my sentiments on the principle of the bill to draw the attention of the House to the fact that there is nothing mentioned of introducing a bill, which subsequently become an act for the benefit of those who clear more land and crop the same in subsequent years. We have had some discussions on the platform, in the press and in this House relative to the high cost of living. I submit, sir, that all these discussions were purely academic We have been dealing with general principles; we have been dealing with ideal conditions and we have been dealing with what we wish was the case, but which we know was not the case. Now Mr. Chairman, there is an opportunity right here. I want to throw out the suggestion and I want to have myself placed on record in this House as the one who threw out the suggestion, that the government, before this session comes to a close—and Sir, I want to state that I will ask a frined of mine in the governmene benches who will father it—to introduce a bill to this effect and that will be the one real antidote to this problem, which, above all other problems overshadows the life and existance, and controls the well-being and decides the attitude of many a man in this country with regards to right and wrong, low and disorder, the problem of the high cost of living

I sumbit, Mr. Chairman, that the most popular measure ever introduces at any time in this legislature would be placed upon the statue books of this country an act which provides that a man for clearing land and the cropping of same shall be given a bounty. Ten years ago it was put on the statutes that a man got $20 an acre for clearing land and cropping it. If that amount was compared with the relative value or money for 1920, it would be quite a sum; but, sir, I do not propose to ask too much of the government; to the hon. gentleman on the other side; but I will say this, that if the government would introduce a bill replacing that act that was on the statue book, and that instead of $20 an acre make it $35 an acre, they will not be giving relative value as compared with dollar for dollar with ten years ago, but they will be putting on the statue book of this House the most popular measure as regards the electorate and the most reasonable that I have yet seen foreshadowed as regards the high cost of living. My reason for suggesting that question of bonus is because I am in throught accord with the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he suggests the extension and enlargment of the bounties with regards to shipbuilding. With strikes on the one hand and with stringency of finance on the other, there is absolutely no solution to this question of how a man can live.

If there is a solution so as to give a man, who gives the best that is in him, a better standard of living, it is this increased production. And, sir, the government that finds itself deaf to this call, which may be inarticulate to some, if they find themselves deaf to the call of the men who work ten or twelve hours a day and still cannot get enough to eat, and such a government decides to pass over the suggestion that I have laid before this House, a serious situation will arise. There is in this country a suggestion, an implication, with some it is an article of faith, that the idea of encouraging agriculture solves the sigh cost of living. It produces the necessaries of life . I came to this House as the representative of the district, which beyond all other districts, is a farming district. I know the possibilities of that district. I know, sir, that if there be any development in the future of this country that that future development must come from the West Coast. You will find that on the platform in the press and in this Assembly there was nothing except scoffs and jeers at the idea that the west coast can do anything in the way of production.

I will tell you, sir, for the past eight years we have been handicapped because of nothing upon the statute books to encourage agriculture. There are upwards of one thousand acres of land situate along the Codroy River which upon analysis by a man with a university training, with a university degree of bachelor of science, were found to compare absolutely in every detail with the soil of Prince Edward Island. We know, sir, the members of this House know the people of this country know, we have been forced to recognize that Prince Edward Island farming stands out in big large letters and the soil there is, as I stated before, sir, in all sincerity, of the same calibre as our land on the west coast in every particular. Are you sir, are the hon. men elected to this House by their constituencies ,whose beliefs are certain of the future of the westward, is this House going to do nothing for the encouragement of the western sections? I regret that you sir, are chairman, not that you cannot fulfil the requirements expected of such a position, but I regret that you are not in the body of this House to voice the sentiments which I now express. I believe the House has not got sufficient knowledge of the conditions of this country with regard to agriculture. But sir, this matter of the encouragement of agriculture, this matter which if considered properly, will at least give the people of the west coast a decent chance, will receive the support of the men on the other side of the House; yes, I am sure every honest, square-minded man in this House will give the measure his hearty support. I do know sir, that to-day that it will easily cost any man fifty or fifty-five dollars to clear an acre of land and have it ready for burning. I know sir, to have provisions and prices moderate and to assist in reducing the high cost of living it is necessary to relieve this situation by removing the handicap which now exists.

Now sir, fifty-five dollars is the best value I could get. This is my suggestion to the House, it is only a suggestion. Well I hope an act will be passed embodying this suggestion and then it will become the law of the land and instead of having a minimum of twenty dollars per acre there will be at least thirty-five dollars per acre granted. Now this question was suggested to me last October when I was going through my campaign, but acting upon my principle that I would make no promises, I gave no assurance then; but now sir I bring this matter to the attention of the House in order that some may voice their opinions and those of their constituents. I do not know what their opinions are but I think it the first thing to be done in the matter of the reduction of the high cost of living. But this matter in the past has not been treated properly by the House and it has been the practice of the newspapers and the general public to regard agriculture in this country as a joke. I have seen men take the virgin forest from the government and convert them into prosperous farms. They paid thirty cents an acre, and I have seen them pay ten per cent. for their money which they had to borrow simply because there was not an act on the statute books promoting farming and thereby providing for an advance to the men of money at a small percentage.

Let us look around and see all the other dominions of the British Empire and see how they provide for the interests of the agriculturist. In four years we have to climb from the bottom rung of the ladder and try and achieve something and give a square show to those to the westward and give them a chance to produce crops in comparison with the rest. I have seen these men pay ten per cent. for their money and have fifty acres of land cleared and ready for burning. I have seen that land cropped for three years and then see the men get back fifty per cent. of their outlay. All this land simply requires the plough and team of horses and it is ready for cultivation. All of it is going to waste, all these thousands of acres, simply beacuse while we are here discussing bounty for shipbuilding which only concerns a few, and which is only a drop in the bucket, we do not discuss a decent bounty for the agriculturist.

These bounties only concern a few sections of the country, it is only a drop in the bucket, while nothing is being done to solve the question which interests every man north, south, east and west of this country. All this land which I have described afore lying idle because of the ignorance of the various governments of the conditions existing, and I say there can be enough food produced to feed this country. While we are discussing an unimportant thing we are neglecting a very important thing, while we are struggling after one atom we are neglecting a conglomeration of atoms which means a lot to the country. To prove to you this I can from experience say that for year after year crops are grown without any fertilizer, any manure or anything of that sort. The crops are sown in the same piece of land and yet the good results come. Surely that is absolute proof. There is not enough belief in the country. I know for a fact that particularly in my district we imported Russian wheat in order that we might see whether our belief in the country was true or false. We sowed the Russian wheat and have had just as good a crop as any in Western Canada.

Last year there was a tourist on the west coast and he saw the crop that was grown at Stephenville, South Branch and Little River, and he emphatically stated that it was as good as any grown in Western Canada.

Now, we have nothing on the statute books and there has been nothing fore shadowed of anything in the speech from the throne to encourage agriculture in any respect. I can assure you, sir, that this land can be cleared for fifty dollars per acre and this land which is near the river is abounding in leaf mould, and when the river overflows there is plenty of mud strewn over the land and the same land can produce three tons of hay which cannot be got in town to-day for sixty dollars per ton. This means three times sixty or sixty-five or a total of one hundred and ninety-five dollars worth can be produced from an expenditure of fifty dollars with regard to clearing.

We come here to consider this retroactive laws with regard to the building of ships which only concerns a couple sections of the country. I regret that the members of this House and more particularly the executive government have neglected to do something for the promotion of agriculture in this country. I am sure, sir, that some member will bring a bill of this sort before the House. A certain gentleman of the executive government promised me he would be willing to introduce a bill as I could not, being on the opposition, since it would involve an expenditure from the public revenue, and such bills can only come from the government side.

I can guarantee this House that we in the western section of Newfoundland can produce as much to the acre as can be produced in any part of Canada. We can produce three tons of hay to the acre, and it costs $50.00 an acre to clear it. I have had to pay $50.00 myself to have an acre of land cleared, and my only ambition is to have a decent farm cleared in which I can settle down. I know of thousands of acres which have never been granted. Any man taking 50 acres of land can earn a decent living, and be a big benefit to his country. I hope, Mr. Chairman, this suggestion will not fall upon stony ground, but that it will take root. If there is any future in this country, if there is going to be any advance, it must come from the west coast. The three districts, St. Barbe, St. George's, and Burgeo and LaPoile and coastline of the country, but what do we get of the marine and land grants? You know of the new reform movement, sir. It came to a head in your district before it did in mine. The people are getting their eyes open to the fact that they are not getting the grants that are theirs by right. The time is coming when if we do not get the facilities for the development of the God-given gifts that we possess, and that have been endowed upon by nature, we will split the country in two halves. Let St. John's have her own government and we will have ours. I know the people in St. George's district. I have been through the district. They had a good man representing them, but they sent me back to tell the story of what they wanted and what they were rightfully going to demand. The country divides itself geographically east and west, and during the winter months we are turned out to starve, as some have starved.

Do you think, sir, that there is not a breaking point? I am sincere in this matter. I wish the government had shown some smyptoms of throwing over the cast iron rule that St. John's is the centre of the world. The soil in the suburbs of St. John's is from six twenty inches in depth. In the land I speak of you can drive a pole seven feet without striking a stone. Are we to sit here in this House and give no encouragement to the people of the west coast? Are we going to close this session of the House without passing some bill with regard to this matter? The statements which I have made regarding the production of the west coast may seem elaborate, but I assure you, sir, that they are correct. That is the land that we cannot get through today because the virgin forest still flourishes there. In as much as this government is a government of reform I want to bring in this suggestion, and to give it my support. I hope that before this House closes the government will bring in a bill to again place upon the statue books the giving of a bonus for clearing land. This is a bill which would benefit every district in the country directly and indirectly. Directly in that it would benefit the man himself, and indirectly in that it would make every district produce much of the food products that it requires. Do you think that by wilful or ignorant neglect of the government the people are going to allow this condition to continue? Do you think that three or four customs officers and one policeman can keep within bounds the just indignation of all the people of St. George's district. I know that you don't agree with this condition. The time has come when the people of the west coast are awake to the sacrifices they have made, and the injuries they have suffered. No combination of men can any longer deny them the privileges which they deserve, the privileges which have been denied them in the past.

We will no longer be relegated to the back woods and we demand now that that which is ours by right be given to us. Up to the present that section of the country has been completely ignored in regard to a matter more important, more vital than the question of shipbuilding.

Mr. Chairman, this afternoon I took occasion to refer to the fact that no legislation was foreshadowed for the encouragement of agricultural development, that no bounty was being provided for to encourage the clearing of land and when in this bill the House is now considering, I found that it was the intention to further consider the granting of a bounty for the building of vessels, it brought the matter home to me all the more forcibly. I am in hearty accord with the extension of bounties for the encouragement of any local industry because I am firmly convinced that by such a course only will we bring about increased production, and when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said a few days ago that a bounty should be granted to fishermen as an inducement to them to improve the quality of their fish his statement had my fullest endorsation. I am very glad that the minister has taken cognisant of the possible benefits to be derived from such a step, and when that bill comes in it shall have my hearty support as the present bill has but in that this shipbuilding takes precedence over the necessity for a similar measure for the encouragement of the agricultural industry, I differ with him entirely. Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I am totally opposed to all forms of retroactive post factum legislation, in other words I am totally opposed to that which will permit the breaking of the law and the escape of the guilty by means of legislation passed subsequent to the crime itself; it is a dangerous precedent and bad legislation.

However much in accordance with the hon. minister I might be on the question of bounty because of the encouragement it must give to those engaged in local industries, and God knows we stand in sore need of the improvement that such encouragement would bring about, I cannot agree to make this bounty retroactive in 1917, I know not how many dollars may be involved. If the amount were but fifty cents I should still object, not to the amount, Mr. Chairman, but to the principle of the thing. It is utterly wrong that a man should be given the benefit of that to which he can lay no claim and this House would be lacking in its duty were it to tolerate such legislation.

I had hoped, sir, that this bill was a bill whose sole object was to give encouragement to shipbuilding in the future and as such it would be deserving of the support of every member of this House, but in my opinion at least, post factum or retroactive legislation is rotten and wrong, and I submit sir, that we ought not to support anything of the kind without having due regard to the consequences. There are many things, three of four of which I now have in mind, where to make such a bill retroactive would not be only wrong but disastrous; nevertheless if we do that in the present case what would be the argument against doing it in others.

With regard to shipbuilding, tonnage and the like I am a mere child, but still I would give this bill my hearty support were it not for this unfortunate clause; that I cannot support.

I am sorry sir, for delaying the House so long, but before resuming my seat I again want to draw the attention of the House to the absolute lack of legislation to encourage the clearing of land, and I hope that the government will lose no time in making it commensurate with the beneficial results that would accrue to the country from such encouragement. When that bounty was granted the amount was fixed at $20, as I have already stated, and I leave it to honorable members to judge the value of $20 today as compared with ten years ago.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Chairman after listening to the very lengthy and eloquent criticisms of this bill, I do not think that it is necessary for me to refer to it at great length, but as the measure is one of perculiar importance in some of its aspects, I would refer briefly to the points I have in mind, but before doing so I may say that I am in thorough accorded with the general construction of the bill.

Shipbuilding tho small is nevertheless an important industry in this country. The district I have the honor to represent has for a number of years been largely engaged in the building of vessels for the foreign trade, and I wish to say right here that no better class of vessels, either in point of model or wonthiness can be found than those turned out from the dockyards of Placentia and St. Mary's. When I first saw this bill I scanned it in the hope of finding therein some provision for the elimination of an unfortunate thing that has thus far been allowed to exist. I saw no section devoted to this and I consulted the Minister of Marine and Fisheries since he came into the House and he told me that a bill would be introduced at a later date embracing that matter. Now, Mr. Chairman; I do not see the necessity for another bill as it could have been dealt with in this one. All that would be necessary would be a clause in this bill whereby any vessel not able to pass Schedule A or B should not be allowed to engage in the foreign trade. I would go even further than that and prohibit such vessels from engaging in the coastwise trade. A bill should have been on our statute book long ago forbidding ships classed as floating coffins by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself going to sea, and I don't think there is any necessity now to longer defer the matter; we should do it right here by the insertion of the clause I have mentioned, and if such a clause were the means of saving even a single life it would be well worthy of the attention given it by this House. I have heard Sir John Crosbie say that he knew of a number of vessels having being sent across from here that were not fit to send outside of the narrows, and I feel sure that he has as much if not more knowledge and experience in shipping than any member of this House.

I hope the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will censider this matter and have this clause inserted. Increased encouragement should be given to builders of smaller crafts of the type of the "western Boat." The large ships are generally built by the large firms who have the financial backing and are not in need of the bounty. The smaller boats are built by fishermen who are entirely dependant upon them for a living. The people of Placentia and St. Mary's use only these boats for fishing purposes. When this bounty was given all material was at a very lew figure, but since then enormous increases have been made in the cost of material. We should insert a clause whereby increased encouragement should be given to planters for the building of these small vessels. A great number used to go down on the French Shore from Trinity Bay and Bonavista Bay to prosecute the fishery and members of these districts should use their influence to have this crause inserted. With bounties generally I am thoroughly in accord, and 1 want to endorse the remarks of the hon. member for St. George's in this connection. In the adoption of this bill a serious blow would have been struck against the high cost of living. Any legislation which would lessen the cost of the articles that are necessary on the poor man's table should have the support of every member of the House, and I believe that such a spirit prevails among them. If you can encourage the farmers to increase their crop of vegetables by granting a bounty you will make it easier for them to produce a meal for his family. Conditions today are almost at a breaking point when you must pay 40 cents a gallon for potaces, and I doubt if you can get them at that price. We can never hope to become a great farming country, but we can induce planters to go out into the bogs, and with the assistance of the government convert boglands and forests into farms that would be sufficiently productive to grow sufficient vegetables for local consumption. We should put upon the statute book a law that would provide a bounty for the clearing of land. I want to show this House that I care not who is the introducer of this bill but I want to say that I am prepared to give that measure my unqualified support. I feel it my duty as one of the representatives of this House of Assembly to make reference to the absence of a section I would like to see embidied and I trust the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see his way clear to insert two clauses I have referred to. If he will I will give every section of his bill my unqualified support.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—I may say that the bill drafted for the inspection of vessels provides for the inspection of all vessels by an agent of Lloyds or a deputy agent. Some of the clauses inserted have been copied from the Board of Trade bill, and anything you may not find in this bill will be found in the other. Referring to the duty rebate clause I may say that these duties can be paid now by order of Governor in Council. Mr. LeMessurier has stated that many builders have applied for a rebate of duty who were not entitled to it on account of not having been given a bounty. They used all the material they imported on these vessels and have said that they didn't know but they were entitled to a rebate.

Since the bounty act came into force 45 vessels have been paid a bounty amounting in all to $46,000. All vessels built were not paid a bounty. The 130 ton vessel built by the A.N.D. Co. was paid because she had her keel laid down before the act came into force.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—(Reads last section of bill to encourage shipbuilding). I do not think the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries touched on that point all together. With reference to this point I think when the war was on during 1916, there seemed as if there would be a big industry in shipbuilding and consequently Newfoundland would have to pay enormous bounties, so the government decided to name the bounty and the limit was up to schooners of about one hundred and twenty tons. Now a schooner of two or three hundred tons was recognized to be a rich man's schooner, owned by a man with lots of means, so one hundred and twenty tons was the limit set as it filled the requirements of the Labrador fishermen and the Grand Bank people and the other requirements around the island. That was the principle reason for limiting the bounty to one hundred and twenty ton schooners or may be one hundred and sixty tons, somewhere around there. The vessels of two and fifty or three hundred tons were used for different trades, some for carrying fish and other for freight purposes and enormous freights were paid during those days. One or two trips at the most paid for the cost of construction. There was no necessity to pay these owners and the hon. gentleman will I think appreciate the position. The bounty was for the fishermen and not for the merchants who were making fortunes out of the war in the freight business. That was our duty and I am prepared to support the bill before the House, but I am not prepared to support the position of going back three years and paying the amount on vessels of three hundred tons as during the war, as I stated they earned enormous freights and there is no hardship whatever. I do not intend to support the principle of having the act retroactive. I will if this part is withdrawn or a list of the parties to whom it may be payable is brought before us.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Chairman, I submit that sub-section 2 of section 2 of the Shipbuilding Act should stand. The principle of repayment of duties paid for timber, anchors, chains, duck, blocks and such like material used in the construction of vessels is a good one, in that it encourages local shipbuilding. By not granting a rebate of such duties you thereby give a preference to the Nova Scotia builders. The spirit of legislation all through has been to encourage local shipbuilding, not only by granting rebates on material used in their construction but to give bounties as well. No bounties are looked for in the claims at issue, but merely a repayment of duties made. I am informed and believe that the hon. leader of the opposition was approached during his term of office for a repayment of the duties in those cases now before the house and that the hon. leader of the opposition promised to make such repayment on production of particulars of the claims.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—In answer to the objection made by the hon. member for Burin with reference to the turning down of the Nova Scotian vessels, I may say that they are not fit for Newfoundland's requirements, and if they were not allowed to come in how many of them would be lost outside. What would happen if you sent them across the Atlantic with a load? The keel is so light and the rest of the material that the vessel would not be able to stand the strain of the cargo. When they are not able to meet the demands here then why should they be taken into consideration. If these people built vessels to suit Newfoundland then I would ask for it. As for my promise to see that the rebates were paid I think that was in reference to those vessels whose keels were laid previous to 1917. They will get the bounty. But I think it is ridiculous to pay three years' duty to those who have made fortunes in that direction. Bring down the names of the persons who claim them. It was pointed out in the speech from the throne that the sum of sixty thousand dollars was to be devoted to the erection of working men's homes. In comparison to this amount fifteen thousand dollars is a large amount when interest is reckoned.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—I do not know about that. You promised to pay it. I think if the hon. leader will reflect he will admit that he did promise to grant such rebates.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Burin for stepping to the fore for good old Grand Bank in this matter of shipbuilding. I am in agreement with what has been said by Sir Michael Cashin. And it was the intention to discontinue the bounty to vessels from about one hundred and fifty tons upwards. That action was justified because one trip paid for the vessel. During the war matters took a very different change and the freights earned could not permit the government to pay bounty and duty as well. Now, with reference to the Nova Scotian vessels shipbuilding for the past few years has been very prosperous. There were a number of vessels bought in Nova Scotia which helped us to carry our products across the ocean and every one who bought vessels in Nova Scotia made money out of them. I will support the act but will not if the retroactive section is not withdrawn. Anyway, if there is anybody entitled to the fifteen thousand dollars and we know their names, then I may give it some consideration.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—The Act of 1917 which excluded vessels of over 120 tons from receiving the bounty and rebates used in their construction was introduced to save the government from heavy claims which was feared would come from the Harbor Grace Shipbuilding Co. This company—as it is well known—commenced building very large and many vessels to sell abroad. The law previous to 1917 contemplated the payment of bounties and rebates only to such vessels as were built in this Dominion for the fishing and foreign trade of this country and not for an outside company which might come in—as the Harbor Grace Shipbuilding Co.—as the demands would be altogether too large and thereby defeat the object and spirit of the act to encourage shipbuilding for the trade only. I believe the hon. leader of the opposition agrees with me in this particular and for that reason I submit he should withdraw his objections to sub-section 2 of section 3 of the proposed legislation.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I would like to ask the member for Burin if it is his idea that the people should be called upon to pay a bounty on a schooner that cost $80,000 and that paid for herself the first trip across. I know vessels that have paid 50, 70; 100, and as high as 200%. I know vessels that have paid for themselves in the first trip. I have no objection to the bill starting from this date, I want to encourage the bill, but I am opposed to its being retroactive.

MR. FOX:—I am in acccord with the bill, that is, with a bounty being paid. But the part to which I object is clause 3, sub-section 2. I am opposed to the principle in the same way that I am opposed to retroactive taxation, If you begin this thing you can go back fifty years and give all kinds of concessions. I am in favor of the bill beginning from this date. You cannot tell us what is in the head of a legislator when a law is put on the statute books. It is not a sound principle of political economy. You don't know where it is going to lead you. It is all very well to say that it will only involve eight or ten thousand dollars, but we have to take into consideration the principle involved. It is a vicious principle, and because of that principle I disagree with the bill. Apart from that I do not object to it.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—The hon. member for St. John's East has elucidated the principle that there should be no application of the bill for the past, but to apply it to the future. If the bill is accepted it should be accepted all through. There are outstanding reasons for this condition in the past. I mentioned the Harbor Grace Shipbuilding Company. What would be the result if the government allowed this condition to continue? The Harbor Grace Shipbuilding Company would have swamped the government.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, I am absolutely opposed to the principle. The bill is intended to be retroactive. It is intended that the bill enable to be done what the statute books of the past three years says shall not be done. If we start out this thing where are we going to stand? If we allow the play of that principle, where are the affairs of this country going to end? The principle. Mr. Chairman, is a vicious one.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to indulge in any lengthy remarks on this question, but I would point out to the hon. minister, and I am sure he will see the point I am endeavouring to make, that this is not a case of discrimination, and I think that on reflection he will readily see the course that should be followed in dealing with the section now under consideration. We should view this question and frame the measure on broader lines or rather in a more practical way, for what is the point in allowing a clause of this kind to go thru? It amounts only to putting through legislation for the benefit of a few people. I do not altogether object to retroactive measures of this kind. If for instance, the people whom this section of the bill is calculated to benefit had suffered financial loss in the course of their operations of the past few years or if they needed help I should hesitate before offering any objection, but I think there is a vast difference between this class of man and those who will benefit under the act if sub-section 2 of section 3 is allowed to remain. I am of opinion, and I think most honorable members will agree with me, that it would entirely meet the case if this legislation were to become effective as from to-day, and in that case any objection to the bill would be removed. It is altogether absurd for this House to pass legislation to refund money to people who don't want it, and apart from this the hon. minister will surely see that there is no difference of opinion between the two sides of the House on the bill. We on this side are in full agreement with the idea of encouraging shipbuilding, but it must be apparent that it would be an unnecessary gratuity and an unnecessary kindness for us to go down to the treasury and hand out money in this way that might be spent to better purpose. If we have eight or ten thousand dollars that we don't want we can doubtless find some more worthy purpose for it.

If these people could be shown to need the money it would be a different matter entirely, but apart from everything else a clause of this kind is not necessary. I do not know who these seven or eight people are who stand to benefit by this measure in its present form, but the enactment of legislation to pay back money to men who can buy out any member of this house, or at least most of us is, I think even the hon. minister himself will admit, going a bit too far. Those who get vessels from Nova Scotia during the past few years with only the advantage of free entry were able to compete with the builders of local vessels. It is not a question to be considered from the moral standpoint nor is it a question of moral justice because we are dealing with people who do not want the money, and I would like to draw the attention of the honourable minister for Burin to one point, namely, that it is no encouragement to pay bounties to those who built vessels during the past three or four years. These builders have made money during that period by reason of the unusual demand that existed for the vessels they were able to turn out, and that now when we have adverse conditions to contend with is the time that encouragement is most needed. I can quite conceive how the government at first blush would be guilty of this mistaken kindness, and by the clause in the bill we would surely be over doing kindness, or in plain words "rubbing grease to the fatted sow." I would predict that every one of these nine or ten men, I dont know who they are, are men of means, and I do not think they can say with truth that they need further encouragement than they have already got for the vessels built during the war period. I would support the placing of that eight or ten thousand dollars at the disposal of the smaller man, and on that ground I would suggest the withdrawal of this section.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Chairman there is one point I would like to draw to the hon. member's attention, and I would first remark that I have a case in mind of one of those men to whom he referred as being able to buy up the members of this House, and who in reality is a very poor man, to whom this bounty would be of great assistance. Take the case of John Smith, who pays thirty thousand dollars for a vessel in Nova Scotia—his money goes out of the country and provides not a cent's worth of employment to local laborers or carpenters. On the other hand there is Tom Jones who builds a vessel here at a cost also of thirty thousand dollars, but out of this amount there is sure to be seventeen or eighteen thousand dollars paid out of this to the people of the country for labor, wood cutting and other things.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Chairman, like the other members who have got down to clause 2 sub section 3, I think retroactive legislation would bring bad results, because then we could make retroactive legislation to apply to any case when necessary. Take the case of Mr. Woodford. If he is convicted and dismissed from office, why not have retroactive legislation and bring him back to office. This is legislation for a class. Only 7 or 8 will be affected by it. Why should the majority have to dig down in their pockets to pay a duty on these ships. Mr. Foote says that one of these men is a poor man. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think any poor man could build a big ship, we must take that now with a grain of salt. There are other opportunities now to use this money so that it will help the masses as well as the classes. I hope legislation will be able to give the western boat an increase of 50% bounty, that is from 50 tons to 100 tons.

Before sitting down I wish to congratulate Mr. Foote for the pugnacious way in which he has grappled with this matter. I hope that when the H.C.L. matter comes up for discussion he will take the same pugracious stand to keep down the prices.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I wish to move an amendment. I move that sub-section 2 of section 3 be removed from the bill. It has been proved that this is of no benefit to the people. It has been stated and stated on good authority that the men who build ships in the past few years were paid a hundred fold. I fail to see why the House should go back and enact legislation for those who do not need it, and I submit that sub-section 2 of section 3 be removed from the bill.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to you that such an amendment is quite out of order. We should not discuss sub-section 2 of section 3 before we get to it. It is out of order for this reason, because it proposes to be an amendment that will be substantial when arrived at. Now there can be no amendment to that motion that it do not pass. If desirous of a vote take section 1 first and later the other sections.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I willingly and knowingly submitted that amendment because I wanted to assist legislature, but I will withdraw the amendment until the section is reached.

The chairman from the committee also reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the committee have leave to sit again on tomorrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 172 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Survey of Foreign-Going Vessels"

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on tomorow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 11 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Department of Marine and Fisheries."

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled balance sheets of income and expenditure account of the Grenfell Association.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until three of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

MR MOORE:—Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion for an adjournment of the house permit me to ask the acting Minister of Shipping if he has any explanation to make with regard to the state the city is in to-day in connection with the coal question.

I may inform the House that I went this morning from one end of the city to the other, and with money in my pocket, to buy a quarter of a ton of coal, but there was none to be had. Would the hon. acting minister kindly inform us when he expects to have any. I do not altogether blame the minister for the scarcity, as I believe he has the best intentions; but he probably is like myself and knows very little about shipping, and would not be able to tell a sailing vessel from a steamer if we saw them going up or down the harbor, except there was a funnel in one of them to enable us to make the distinction.

The coal situation has reached a very serious stage in the city at present, as apparently there is not a knob to be had, as far as buying it is concerned. I rang up by telephone the Minister's office this morning, but could not get it. Next I communicated with the Government Engineer and got an indefinite answer. I then endeavoured to get in touch with the Reid Nfld. Co., but again without success. Several other coal firms and places were called on by me, but the result of all my enquiries was that there was not a lump of coal available.

I would especially like for the Minister to inform us of what the actual position is concerning the coal problem.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING: —Mr. Speaker, at present there are four vessels gone to load coal. Two of them are now on their way here from Sydney with cargoes and I hope to have them here by the end of this week. If the hon. member for Ferryland is badly in need of coal, I think I can arrange to give him enough to put him over a few days. In fact I hope to have the four cargoes referred to here by Sunday next.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a word to say in this respect. The hon. minister is aware that this morning I made application to him for a small quantity of coal, but could not get any either for my factory or my dwelling house. I would like to know if there is not coal, which was very recently brought and landed in St. John's, held up here by certain parties. I understand that the steamers Prospero and Meigle brought cargoes. I presume the latter ship brought it to the Reid Newfoundland Company; but if not it should be put to the use of citizens.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING: —I do not know of any coal being held up. I know that Bown had some for sale, but he was experiencing some difficulty in the matter of cartage.

MR .BENNETT:—Bown told me he did not have an ounce to spare.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING : —I think we can arrange to supply exceptional cases right away. I arranged with Bown this morning in that direction. The S.S. Coban came here a few days ago with a cargo of coal for the Reid Company, as it was absolutely necessary for them to run their trains, as I understand that this section of the country is absolutely without coal for the carrying on of traffic However, I think that there is a possibility of relieving pressing or urgent cases in town at the present time. We are hoping to have four steamers here by the end of this week and when they arrive the whole situation ought be relieved for a while.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, May 5th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

THE PRIME MINISTER:—In reference to the question of Sir Michael Cashin answered yesterday relating to the cost of the railway branch line construction from Catalina railway station to Port Union terminus, and Sir Michael's request for further information. I am informed by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines that the amount paid in connection with the right of way was $12,736. That sum is in addition to the amount paid the Reid Nfld. Co. for construction purposes.

HON. MINISTER OF EDUCATION:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition which is signed by Samuel Bradbury, Geo. Hierlihy and 83 others asking that a flag station be erected at Country Road, District of Hr. Grace. Occasionally a train stops there to put off a gentleman coming from town, and I support this petition which asks that the train be stopped there whenever necessary for the convenience of everybody in that sector.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, at your request, and as you are unable to present a petition, being the Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition on behalf of Rev. Fr. Dinn and 166 others of Carbonear, asking that a sum of money sufficient to make possible the laying of a four inch pipe to connect the Carbonear water system with the R. C. church at that place.

In presenting this petition from practically the whole Catholic denomination of this important town of Carbonear I am informed by you that the respected clergyman of this denomination, Monsignor McCarthy and the sisters of the Convent have suffered in the extreme the past three years through lack of water for drinking purposes and household use. Quite a number of years since a small lead pipe from the water company's line was brought to the Monsignor's residence and for some years afforded a supply of water for drinking purposes but through the condition of the water company's service and a break in the lead pipe which the company failed to make good, the greatest inconvenience has been experienced. I also understood from you that some pipes are now in the city which were brought in for this extension, and I have to express your hope that the Government will see its way clear to accede to the prayer of this petition and I therefore ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

The Hon. Prime Miniser replies to questions.

Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries replies to questions.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the bill entitled An Act to amend Chapter 172 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series), entitled "Of the survey of Foreign-going and Labrador vessels," was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted of Marine and Fisheries, the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 11 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series), entitled "Of the Department of Marine and Fisheries," was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant or order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ,the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 176 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Encouragement of Shipbuilding."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the Chair of Committee.

Committee of the whole on bill "An Act respecting the Encouragement of Shipbuilding."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, with regard to this sub-section 2 of section 3, I wish to make one or two alterations, I propose to withdraw the following words:

"Where any vessel of a greater tonnage than one hundred and twenty tons, the keel of which was laid after October 19th, 1917, and before the passing of this act, has been built."

The amended clause will therefore read "Where any vessel built and launched in Newfoundland during the year 1919," the figures "120 tons" should read "130 tons." The remaining part of the clause reads as before, ed, and on motion of Hon. the Minister viz.: "and duty has been paid upon the materials used in the construction of the said vessel, the owner of such vessel shall be entitled to be repaid the amount of such duty upon proof to the satisfaction of the customs authorities that such duty has been paid: provided always that the surveyor or his deputy shall certify that the said vessel has been built in accordance with schedule A. or B. of the said chapter."

That means that only vessels launched in 1919 can get this rebate. In fact there are no claims at the customs from any vessels other than those. The claims so far made to the government are as follows:

The Marystown Trading Company, Harris, Ltd., G. Buffett, D. Pelley and another applicant not named. The Union Shipbuilding Company has also a claim for rebate on the schr. "President Coaker" of about $900, that claim does not appear on the list as it has not been filed at the customs house. The total amount claimed as rebate on such vessels as are included in this clause is $7000.

The total is $7,029.09. So far as we know those are all the claims from vessels launched during 1919, and in order to make sure that those vessels are entitled to rebate, under this act, they must pass inspection under schedule B. Many new vessels or vessels launched up to 1919 did not come in for this rebate because they came in under the bounty act of 1916 before we decided that vessels of certain tonnage were to be cut off from receiving the rebate. When the government decided to alter the 1916 act, it gave notice in the papers two or three months ahead, consequently many keels were then laid down in anticipation in order to secure the bounty.

I notice in the statement asked for by the hon. leader of the opposition which I tabled to-day, that 80 schooners received the bounty in the years 1917-18 and '19 of which 30 were foreign built vessels, and on which was paid $130,000 bounty. The other fifty were local fishing schooners, and of course received the bounty. Those claiming the rebate built vessels in good faith, knowing they were debarred from bounty, but believing they would receive the rebate, and they built good vessels which could qualify under schedule B. of the shipbuilding act. I am perfectly satisfied that they are entitled to the rebate, and as I did not feel like plowing in the old furrow and asking the Governor-in-Council to repay the rebate by minute of council, but considered it proper to apply to this House for this authority, I feel sure the House will recognize the legitimate claim of those builders and place them in the same position as regards rebate of duties as their more fortunate competitors who not only received the rebate, but also the bounty.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Chairman. Notwithstanding the amendments that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries proposes to make, there is nothing in that amendment which would alter the decision which I came to yesterday in connection with sub-section 2 of section 3 of this bill. It's simply the same thing put before this House in another form, because the section stated before:

"Where any vessel of a greater tonnage than 120 tons, the keel of which was laid after October 19th, 1917, and before the passing of this act, has been built in this colony, and duty has been paid upon the materials used in the construction of said vessels shall be entitled to be paid the amount of such duty upon proof to the satisfaction of the proper customs authorities that such duty has been paid; provided always that the surveyor or his deputy shall certify that said vessel has been built in accordance with schedule A. or B. of the said chapter."

Well, Sir, the amendment and alteration which the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has proposed to bring forward covers exactly the same ground. There is no doing away with the fact that the legislation he proposes to introduce in retroactive, and that I have already contended, is a bad policy; it is a vicious policy, and I say, Sir, that we should not establish a precedent of this kind in this legislature, because if we do, it may have far-reaching results. Powerful interests in this country in years to come, may make similar demands upon the revenue, and without particularizing what these demands may be, beyond saying that they may be unjust or dishonest, if sufficient influence can be brought to bear upon the department to which that claim may be referred, the head of that department may ask legislature to have it accepted and the legislature may adopt the suggestions made. I say, Sir, by this means we are laying ourselves open to unscrupulous parties, who may, for some reasons of their own, dissipate the whole revenue of the Colony.

It strikes me as peculiar that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries should ask this House and should ask the authority of this legislature to grant a rebate and to hand over to capitalists, a rebate of duty on material used in the construction of vessels built three years ago and to pay this money out of the revenue of this country. It seems to me unjust and unreasonable that the people of this country should be asked to hand out $7,029.09 to four or five parties, it might be said after all, the amount involved is only small. It is not the amount we look at; it is the precedent established, it is the principle involved; and if we allow this legislation to go through endless trouble may come of it in after years.

Satisfactory statements have been made here in this House by members during this debate, that there was no goodreason as to why this retroactive legislation should be accepted. Statements have been made that immense profits were made all through the war in connection with the shipping business. Inferences have been made that vessels that cost $70,000 paid for themselves in one trip alone and that dividends from 40 per cent. to 100 per cent. were drawn. When we take these facts into consideration are we justified or have we any good reason to introduce retroactive legislation and give out of the public revenue over $7000 to people who have already made large dividends in the shipping industry. The people and the firms who are claiming this rebate from the Government have amongst them the Marystown Trading Company. This company, we are informed, has made handsome dividends on all their vessels engaged in the foreign trade. Another firm asking for this rebate is Buffett & Company. They are looking for the modest sum of $1796. Why should the people of the country be asked to contribute that amount out of the general revenue? The people who are now putting forward their claims for the rebate must have known that according to the Shipbuilding Act they were not entitled to the rebate.

Another claimant for this rebate is the firm of S. Harris, Ltd., for the amount of $1391.00. Now, Sir, we can quite easily understand why my hon. friend, the member for Burin, came in here yesterday, and speaking on this bill with that pugnacious spirit insisting that this bill should go through. The principals are his constituents. Mr. Foote was dramatically trying to appeal to the House to have this bill become law. If the people claiming this rebate were poor men with no visible means of backing, then the hon. member for Burin would have my sympathy, but under the circumstances I cannot give the bill before the chair my support. There is no reason why we should hand out to the Marystown Trading Co. $1650.00. There is no reason why the people of this country, the laborers of this country who have been made sweat by the profiteers, hand out their money, because it is the money of the people generally. There is no reason why the Marystown Trading Company, Buffett & Co., and S. Harris Ltd. should be handed out this money. I admit that those people contribute to the general revenue of the country but then they are only falling in line with the rest of us. With reference to D. Pelley, well, I do not know to what category he belongs, presumably a contractor, probably he builds ships for the merchants. The F.P.U. are down for $900.00. The F.P.U. is in a good financial position and it can do without the $900.00. There are lots of use to which that money can be put to better advantage. I think it would be a greater tribute to the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and it would give him greater backing if he introduced a bill that was for the masses and not for the classes as this bill stands for. I appeal now to the common sense and saner judgment of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to his strong conception of honest legislation and his desire to safeguard the public interests, in his pronounced policy of the greatest good to the greatest number.

What the object is of introducing this bill I am at a loss to understand. Is it to compensate friends for their political support and influence in the recent election? The late government has been accused of every crime on the political calendar, but in my opinion no government since the introduction of responsible government, ever before attempted to railroad through this House legislation of such an indecent character as that now being debated. It is not my intention to speak any longer or at any great length on this matter, but I wish to say that I am in perfect accord with the statements made on this side of the House yesterday, while this Bill was in the Committee Stage. With reference to bounties we see no provision for an agriculture bonus or bounty. That bonus for which the people all over the country are calling out for. We see no assistance given the farmers to carry on their farming and it is absolutely necessary to encourage agriculture if we hope to reduce the high cost of living. Look at the conditions existing in this city to-day and one feels ashamed. Potatoes are twelve dollars per barrel and one is lucky to get them at that price. The price of hay and all kinds of vegetables are exorbitant. I think the least the government can do is bring in some measure to encourage the cultivation of our lands and this would no doubt tend to help reduce the high cost of living. The high cost of living was mentioned in the manifesto of the Prime Minister last October, but sir, it is conspicuous by its absence in the speech from the throne. I ask in all sincerity that the Governmen enquire into the conditions existing among the people of this country. Look at the prices of food and clothing and coal and other things. And when this is done you will see what the people are up against.

Never before were conditions in this country in such a disgraceful and discreditable condition as they are at the presnt moment. Here we have had a government in power seven months, and what have they done? Nothing. Never when the opposition held the Government of the day was there one occasion when things were as they are at the present, and that under war conditions. Go down on Water Street and one cannot buy or a lump of coal to burn. Flour is $20.00 per barrel, sugar is 23c. per lb., and so on. Is it any wonder the people all over the country are asking that something be done to reduce the high cost of living?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Placentia, Mr. Sullivan, is not speaking in accordance with the rules of the House. He is discussing the high cost of living and not the bill before the chair.

MR. SULLIVAN:—I am coming to the bounty question and all that I have said is relevant t othe bill before the chair. I am covering the whole ground. Apparently I have touched the Minister of Justice on a sore subject, and he cannot stand the home truths ne is getting from this side of the House. If he is the good sport I knew him to be he will take his medicine like a man. Before we are through with this session we are going to try and convince the House and the people that we are not as bad as we are painted, we are not the grafters we are charged with being, and even granting that the crowd on this side of the House are as bad as they are painted, I would ask the people whether they would not prefer to live under the conditions that existed when the opposition were the government or under the conditions under which they are living today.

Sir, we can provide money for the building of ships, we can provide money by means retroactive legislation to compensate a certain class of people for rebates, but there is no provision and no intimation of any provision being made for the poor old age pensioners. I see no provision, no bounty for the old age pensioners or for the oldwomen of the country. In the manifesto of the Prime Minister reference was made to a policy of old age pensions not only for every deserving old man but for every old woman too. These were only catch cries during the campaign previous to the general election. But as soon as the general election is over just as soon as the promises forgotten. I would ask, Sir, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries who introduced this bill to withdraw the amendment. That section referring to retroactive payments, during the debate of this bill the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said he would withdraw the paragraphs and I hope he is going to stick to his word, because I am sure if he carries through this legislation which he proposes to be is only tying a millstone round his neck that will cause him trouble at a later date, and he is not strengthening his position politically by bringing in this bill and railroading it through the House, an act that will give rebates to political followers. I have great respect for the hon. minister and I am sure he will do what is fair to the country and not bring in legislation that will promote the interests of the wealthy only. I have finished, Sir, and will not support the bill as it is proposed to be placed on the statute books by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— Sir, I am glad the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sullivan) has finished his long speech. It took me quite a few minutes to discover his topic on which he was speaking, he must have had several bills before him and taken the wrong one. Of course it is not unusual during the debate for some members to take up the wrong bill and stick to it for a considerable length of time. Of all the various matters on which the honourable gentleman touched there are two which call for a reply. I submit that first of all the quotation of special names as coming in for the benefit of this legislation is no reason why the act should be rejected. The mere fact that these people come in for the advantage of the act is not a valid reason for objecting to it. It does not make any difference whether certain companies come in for the advantage of the act, such as the Marystown Trading Co., and S. Harris, Ltd., and others, and they have more of the world's goods than we. Why should this kind of thing interfere with the principle of the bill? If this would hold then the Government in future in dealing with rebates would be guided according to the wealth of the party entitled or may be looking for it. If they have enough material wealth then they would not be entitled to the rebate and that is absolutely absurd. It would revolutionise the principle of the whole affair. I do not see why these people should be prevented from getting back the amount of duty they paid when they laid the keels of the vessels and they are entitled to the rebate and there is a difference between vessels built here and ones bought in a foreign country. Now with reference to the high cost of living referred to by the hon. member for Placentia (Mr. Sullivan). The price of flour and all the other commodities has not increased ten per cent. during the last seven months when compared with the increase for the past twenty-four months. The hon. member can make whatever excuses he likes, it might have been war or the after-affects of war that kept the prices up, but the fact remains that the talk about the high cost of living amounts to this, that of the increases during the last twenty-four months not ten per cent of them can be accounted for during the seven months the government is in power.

I don't see what a man's wealth has to do with whether or not he will get the duty back. For example, the A.N.D. Co. were trying to get a rebate. I don't just remember now what the articles were. The fact that they are wealthy is no reason why they should not get it. We don't discuss the financial standing of those who should get it or who should not get it.

The article in which the A.N.D. Co. was interested was, I think, sulphur. They imported a lot of it and had no use for it. If they could export it within a reasonable time they would get the duty back. Owing to the lack of tonnage they could not do that. We did not discuss if A.N.D. Co. was wealthy company. We thought they were entitled to the rebate and we refunded it. The only think we discussed was the principle. It is no argument. The government could have paid back this money without bringing the matter before the House. The hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox, argues that it would be retroactive and repealing a law already existing. Every day that we are in this House we are repealing, altering and amending laws of the country, which are already existing.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Chairman, this bill now before the House, at least to my mind, affects every symptom of the country's trade. I welcome the criticism that has been introduced by the hon. member for Fortune Bay in replying to the very able criticism by my able colleague, Mr. Sullivan. There is no question that the bill now before the House does not deserve the support or sympathy of the hon. members of this House. Every clause and every phase of the bill must be seriously considered. My colleagues who have already spoken from this side of the House have voiced my sentiments. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that it does not deal with the aspects that I think it should deal with. We are called on by this third section to give the sum of $15,000 to a few people who are engaged in the occupation of shipbuilding. Included amongst these ladies or gentlemen some of my constituents or some other gentlemen's constituents may figure. I care not, Mr. Chairman, whether these people are my constituents or some other gentlemen's constituents. I claim that if the statement made in this House two or three evenings ago was correct, and I want to refer to that statement by Sir John Crosbie in the course of his remarks respecting the general condition of shipping during the period of the war and after. He (Sir John) said that the initial cost of $80,000 was paid back to him in the first voyage. I say, Mr. Chairman, that each and every member of this House is a party to the corrupt activity which has been going on—the worst in the history of responsible government in Newfoundland. If Sir John, I say, is prepared to substantiate the statement that he made in this House a few evenings ago, then I think it is the duty of every member of this House to oppose this bill.

I do not believe that my honorable friend, the Minister of Public Works, for instance, wants to go back to his constituents in his district of Twillingate and try and justify that he was compelled in accordance with this assembly to support and give his sanction to a measure that meant the direct handing out of over fifteen thousand dollars of the people's money to a party of capitalists. I have the same regard and the same respect and the same confidence in the integrity of the Minister of Public Works that I have always had; and I have the same for the greater number of the members of this assembly—that in this matter before the House this afternoon, whether it is to catch votes or compensate for votes captured during the political campaign, I hope and trust that all the gentlemen of this House it will be dealt with by this tribunal of men properly constituted in an impartial manner ,and the matter with which I am now dealing is one of great importance and about which every member of this House ought to be concerned, and it is the Act Cap. 107, Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, 3rd series, entitled "Of the Encourage of Shipbuilding." The building of ships, the sailing of ships and ships' management are three essentials in the life of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. But it is not going to be easy for any particular member or particular section of this House to come in here and introduce a bill which appertains only to a particular section of people. I notice that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are amusing themselves in regard to some subject which I do not know, and I would like them to inform the House what is the particular matter over which they are having a laugh.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—For the information of the hon. member for Placentia (Mr. Walsh) I may say that the Prime Minister was asking me if I would go with him to supper at St. Mary's church at six o'clock.

MR. WALS:H—I am sure the hon. the Minister of Finance is delighted to have extended to him the invitation by the Prime Minister to attend the party and he will be able to tell us all about it in due course. I know he shall be glad to participate in all suppers in his honor, and I feel sure he will keep a sufficient storage capacity open to partake of the good things that will be accorded him on this particular occasion. I thank the Hon. Minister of Finance for the information. Now with regard to the subject about which I was talking, it is of far more significance, of far more importance, and more reason in it; and it concerns each and every individual of this House more than the suppers tendered the Hon. Minister of Finance. Of course I appreciate his desire to try and take part in all the suppers that are given in his honor, but let us go back to the subject and let the best efforts of each member of this House be focussed absolutely on the objective of bringing around better conditions in this country. I will, as did the hon. member for St. George's yesterday, take this opportunity of placing myself on record with regard to the advocacy of an increased bounty for agricultural efforts. Now, without intentionally interfering or holding up of the affairs of this assembly, I want to say that this matter would be a bonanza to the country if properly handled . Go ahead and let the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines introduce a measure and make an honest attempt to uplift his fellow man and the extension of agriculture along legitimate lines and relieve some of the many hardships existing. To that I will give my unqualified support. I for a short period held the important position of Minister of Agriculture and Mines and no man can justify the charges that have been made against me. Under the regime of W. J. Walsh the Department of Agriculture and Mines had no opportunity to make any recommendations. This department in the future history of the country will prove to be a prominent factor. And here we have a bill for the further development and extension of the building of ships.

Mr. Chairman, this bill that we are now discussing is calculated to have a very marked effect on the whole prosperity of the country and while, as I stated at our last sitting, some sections of this bill have my entire support, this section that has been so vigorously, so ably and so wisely opposed by my colleagues on this side of the House must not be allowed to go unchallenged and to the opposition already offered to its passage I now subscribe my quota. I, for the life of me, cannot understand why this House should vote fifteen thousand dollars or fifteen thousand cents just for the purpose of satisfying the request of any particular section of the community for the sake of party politics, and, Mr. Chairman, I want to place myself on record as a representative of one of the most important districts in the country, whether it be in shipbuilding or ship sailing, fish catching or fish marketing as being opposed to it. It is my pleasure, my honor and my duty to voice the opposition of that district which is the embodyment of all those qualifications I have named, to this iniquious measure. It is quite true, sir, that many of those ships which were destined to play a prominent part during the war in the transportation of our produce, were cradled in different parts of my district during the years inclusive in this bill and would therefore come within its provisions for a share of this $15,000 which is to be handed back to the builders by our liberal financiers; but, sir, I care not if I offend some of my best friends, nay, I care not if I offend all my best friends. I only realize my bounden duty to the country at large. I onl yrealize that circumstances compel me to give my absolute and unqualified opposition to a bill which has for its intention the paying back of monies to persons who will take advantage of the position that may thus be created for making further in-

Chairman, it was stated by honorable members in this House, and reasons were given, that no such returns roads on the country's funds. Mr. should be made. In this connection I would remind the House of the speech made by the hon. member for Port de Grave, Sir John Crosbie, whose words on that occasion I distinctly remember. I am first of all, sir, a Newfoundlander, and a son of the sod, and anything that will benefit the masses, the sons of toil, will receive my hearty and unqualified support; but in this measure I see nothing of the principles I have enunciated, and I hope and trust that the father of this bill, the Honourable Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will see his way clear to take into consideration the helpful suggestions offered by the members on this side of the House, and I feel, sir, that the hon. minister is big enough to do this where he sees that such action on his part is likely to be attended by results beneficial to the interests of the common people. I say this in no spirit of flattery; the hon. minister and myself have agreed to disagree on certain principles and we shall continue to disagree, but I want to say, not only to those now in this House, but to the whole country, thru the reporters' box, that whenever any measure is brought into this House worthy of the consideration of the hon. members of this or worthy of the consideration of the men who in turn are worthy to represent the outport constituencies of this country and having for its object the betterment of the general condition in this country, it shall have my ungruding support.

But, and these buts seem to cause all or nearly all of the rows that have occurred in parliamentary proceedings, not only in this country but in every country. The bill that we are now discussing, Mr. Chairman, is one of the bills that must have a very great interest to the people of this country and to each and every member of this ouHse, whether a representative of St. John's or an outport district. With some sections of this bill I am in perfect accord but with other sections I am absolutely opposed to. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, do you think that it is justice to your constituents to grant an additional bounty to men who have already realized 100% on these vessels. Each and every member of this House and each and every individual of this island shall have the details of this action, and I shall place my language in such a way that will make the position clear to them. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to revert your mind back a few hours ago when the seat you now filled was occupied by the hon. member for St. Barbe, Mr. Scammell, to a statement made by Sir John Crosbie. I want to focuss your attention and the attention of the Prime Minister to that statement. Sir John said in criticising this bill that an amount of money would be provided that some honored persons would receive $15,000. Sir John stated that during the war vessels costing $80,000 were sent across the Atlantic, and on their first voyage these vessels produced enough money to pay the investors a handsome return on the moneys they invested. Now, Mr. Chairman, I consider that this is a most remarkable statement.

I regret that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries sees his way clear to leave the House at this particular time because I am now coming to a stage in my remarks that will need his attention and the attention of the House. After all the money these shipbiulders have made these men have the gall to come in here this afternoon and ask the government to give them a further play upon the revenue of this colony. I think each and every member of this House will agree with me that this is a request which should be relegated to the happy hunting grounds from which no traveller returns. I never want to see a repetition of this request. If you want to maintain the respect and confidence that was placed in you months ago it is not right that you should give your sympathy and tolerance to the passage of such a bill for the privilege of these people. If you are to measure up to the platform that was enunciated by you as being the Liberal Reform Party, I say, Mr. Chairman, it is your bounden duty to relegate to the back fyles any legislation of this kind. I absolutely agree to some of the sections in this bill, the absolutely may also be added to show any condemnation of the other parts of the bill. I think it would be a calamity to allow such a bill to pass through this chamber without a thorough ventilation. Too long we have lived in a fool's paradise, so to speak, in regard to this measure. It was a matter of whether Mr. Coaker was a friend of mine or whether Mr. So and So was a friend of mine. We have now come to a stage when questions of this kind shall no longer exist.

Questions that bring untold poverty to our people. These are the questions that we must consider and consider very carefully. Too long, I submit, have the petty affairs of this Island been allowed to sway in the judgment of gentlemen who are sitting on either side of this chamber. And if we want to act as true, patriotic Newfoundlanders and redeem ourselves from the unfortunate state of affairs that we are now passing through. We should not allow a moment to pass. Personally I believe that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had some consideration for the country at large in regard to the recommendations he has made and which are embodied in this bill. With these recommendations and with these desires that have prompted the hon. member, I am entirely in accord. But I think it would be much better for the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries if he had some practical men with him in regard to the bill we are now discussing. I say if he had some practical men in his party whom he could consult with regard to this matter, perhaps the observations coming from this side of the House might be unnecessary.

I want to say that so far as I am concerned I honestly believe that the oHn. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is absolutely honest in his desires for a great number of the people in this country. But I want to place myself on record, and coupled with that statement that I have just openly made through the reporters' box, that I believe the hon. minister is laboring under a delusion, if he considers that the brains and the ability of this House is composed absolutely by the gentlemen who sit behind him in this assembly. In further discussing the bill, I would ask him to look behind himself and consider for a moment, without being personal, the gentlemen who are associated with him and who have been directly associated with him in this particular branch of our industries. I have very carefully glanced along and noticed the personnel of the gentlemen who sit opposite me this afternoon, and, I am open to conviction, I do not see one individual member holding his seat who has had the silghtest, the remotest experience in relation to the particular bill that we are now considering this evening. But when I look around on this side, I can see men, three at least, who have had an intimate experience with regard to the industry that is outlined in the bill. Of course this is not a matter that the government would have to be very particular about; this is a matter that only affects the country at large; and obeying the country at large is not a matter that has up to the present moment entered the minds or brains of the present government; but I wish to assure you that the time is not far distant when your actions with regard to any legislation that you may enact in this House will have far-reaching effect upon the general electorate of this country.

As a Newfoundlander I am glad, and Ihope and pray and believe and trust that sectarianism will be relegated in the background and that you will be judged by your actions by the common people, irrespective of class or creed. Referring to this matter, if I am permitted, I want to say that had I went to the district of Placentia and St. Mary's last autumn under the banner of any man, whether he was Sir M. P. Cashin, Hon. Mr. Squires or the Hon. W. F. Coaker, or any other gentleman in this House or outside of it, I would have been elected; and I claim it as my right to state that the services of W. J. Walsh to the district of Placentia and St. Mary's for the four years that I had the honor to represent it fully justified the electors of that section of the Island to give me a further extension of their confidence and sent me back to this assembly. I make that statement and make it deliberately. There has been a lot said within the past few days with regard to the late contest. Now I want to place myself on record.

MR. CHAIRMAN:—Keep to the point.

MR. WALSH:—I am dealing with the matter before the chair. I want to say that when the time in this country arrives, and I hope it never will, when we as Newfoundlanders will be stifled or shut off from giving expression to the feelings that we have with regard to the general conduct of our public affairs, then I say that that day will be a lamentable one for our whole population.

I regret Mr. Chairman, that I have not the time to give to this very serious matter, as the whole composition of this House is affected by the clause in this bill which we have requested to have eliminated. I think that those gentlemen who comprise the overwhelming majority in this chamber should have given more consideration to this important measure. If they had considered its seriousness, they would give their unqualified support to the suggestions that have been conveyed from this side of the House.

With regard to my jurisdiction over the department of Agriculture and Mines I had not the opporunity to bring in the legislation that I know would be beneficial to ninety per cent. of the people of this dominion. With regard to the subject of bounty, I want to place myself on record as being in accord with the spirit of the bill, but I am opposed to that part of the bill which is intended to give back to certain wealthy gentlemen revenue which they have paid into the treasury of the country. The hon. gentleman, the member of Fogo, objects to my remarks. I say that any gentleman who has anything to say with regard to the expenditure of the country's revenue has a right to be heard. Lay before us whatever arrangement has been made between John Jones and Tim. Gibbons. Tell us what you want to do. I have no doubt that you do not want to put through an act that you would not lay before the people.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the point that I am coming to is that you are attempting vicious legislation. I see that it is now 25 minutes to six. I want to speak at least three hours longer. But it is with no spirit of obstruction, with an absolutely honest desire. It will be beneficial to the people that we must thoroughly consider any and all legislation that comes before this House. I honestly feel that my hon. friend, the father if this bill, in spite of all that has been said about him, has honest intentions in placing this bill before the House. I want to go on record as being one of the men who represents the people's interests, and if you want to know what I represent I recommend you to the department that I held for some time. I recommend you to the official records of the Colonial Secretary's department. When you see the records of my conduct you will know that I am fully qualified to give my views on this very important matter.

I regret that I have had to detain the House to such length with regard to this matter, but I want to say this that bills of this nature cannot expect to pass this House without just criticism.

Now with regard to that clause as to the amount of money that should be paid back on ships built since 1917, I must completely oppose it. I do not believe that there is any desire on the part of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to make any recommendation that any money be put through any particular channel for any particular purpose. I believe that the hon. father of the bill is big and honest enough to believe that it is in the interests of the people, but I want to say that this bill would do a great injustice to the masses of the people that are represented here. It is indeed to benefit the few. That clause which refers to the paying back of the money is vicious and should not be incorporated in the bill.

I do not believe it till I hear it from his own lips that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries would be guilty of the charge of going against those principles he has enunciated time and again in his speeches and through this House, and I want to assure him that if in this matter he takes the part of the underdogs he will have no greater supporter than the gentleman who is now addressing the House. I assure him that I care not if my own brother or my own cousin is a claimant for a share of this $15,000. I care not if it was on the eve of the election in the district of Placentia and St. Mary's, I on behalf of the people who are called upon to pay their proper proportion, dime for dime, and cent for cent, record my unqualified and absolute opposition.

On reflection, Mr. Chairman, I really don't think that it is the serious intention of the government to force this legislation, for I believe that on the other side of the House are men who have at heart the interests of the people who sent them here. When you, Mr. Chairman, were returned for the old and historic district of Fogo, you were not sent back here to represent any particular faction of the people, but the whole country, and so it is with every hon. member of this House, and I would not for a moment insinuate that you would attempt to use your official position for the purpose of benefitting any particular class in the country.

We are not here to pass without question, legislation that is likely to be detrimental to the country; we are here to scrutinize and to offer suggestions that might be helpful, and accepting these fundamental principles I have laid down I have an honest desire to add to the worth of this bill by some suggestion or suggestions that would make it work out more harmoniously, having regard to the beneficial results, and these are the feelings that prompt me to rise in my place in this House and add a word to the able, eloquent and reasonable criticism that has already been offered.

I am sure the hon. members of both sides of the House will give me their material support in the bill which improvement of them is going to be placed before the House. I regret the fact that provision was not made for the class of men who were equally deserving of the best consideration and efforts of each and every member of this House. I refer to the small man, the planter, and I don't know, Mr. Chairman, that down in your own district you can find men who have gone down to the French Shore to prosecute the fishery in craft smaller than 100 or 120 tons. I want to defy successful contradiction that I have myself engaged in the actual codfishery in the district of St. Barbe, and having done so it is only right, only just, and only reasonable that I should have some idea, however small, of the conditions that have prevailed on that coast. My reason for mentioning this particular is not that I have any desire of contesting this district, I am perfectly satisfied to contest the district of Placentia and St. Mary's, and judging from appearances I will continue to represent that district for some years yet.

It is quite true that this section only deals with half dozen or more people which we are called upon to-day to grant $15,000 for vessels built since 1917 and judging from the statement made by Hon. J. C. Crosbie that a vessel which cost $80,000 in construction paid for itself in one voyage it would be a disgrace and a downright injustice if we were to allow ourselves to pass such a bill. If this bill should pass it would only be right and fair of the people of the country were to come up in their masses and demand the keys of this assembly and say that you are no longer fit to represent us. These are my views, and in expressing them I believe I am expressing the views of all present. I don't claim anything in this connection. I don't believe the Prime Minister would bring in a bill to support legislation for a number of people who have made such a lot of money during the war. If these people were allowed to make enormous profits on the capital involved I must place on record my absolute condemnation of this clause.

Another section which is not included in the bill and one which I have raised an objection on account of its absence is the suggestion that the great mass of our people who are called upon to give such big money to the revenue should be considered.

I want to place myself on record as being one who is absolutely opposed to the adoption of the section of this bill that has been so openly criticized and objected to by members on this side of the House, and I want to suggest that this particular section be eliminated entirely, and I want to inform the House that I have a section which will confidently and more acceptably fill the place of the one to be discarded, if you will accept it. I want to assure you that if you will acept the amendment that I am about to suggest, that you will have done a great thing for the common interests of the common people. Men have gone; men have come. We are to-day a new assembly composed, I hope, of some gentlemen who represent some of the intelligent sections of our Island home. We are an assembly of Newfoundlanders and we all can claim that we are sons of the soil, and claiming to be such, is it not only honest and just and reasonable that we should come into this House and advocate legislation that would be for the betterment of our own people.

Now these tactics of mine may be construed by any section of the press or the house to be deliberate tactics of 'hang 'er down' or 'hold 'er up.' I want to say that there is no such desire within me. I have no desire to delay this house one second longer than is necessary to conduct the legitimate affairs of the country; but I have this desire that I will not allow this house to close one second sooner than it should, if I feel that by my objections, my criticisms or by my advice, I can add to any debate, or by my addition enhance the conditions for any section of our people.

Isay, sir, I am prepared to remain here until October next. These are my sole sentiments which prompted me this afternoon to rise in my place and suggest the argument that I am now about to introduce. It is a well known fact that a great portion of our people engage in the fishing industry and go down to the sea in small boats; these boats are known as 'glicerines,' but I do not known what the term means. I remember when I was fishing myself on the Groais Islands in the district of St. Barbe and I took my supplies at Little Bay Islands, the home of the Hon. Capt. Jones. I feel that I have had considerable experience, not experience that was told me by some fellow that had been fishing or by some politician who wanted me to work his end of the game, but the experience that counts, and I paid the cost. And I might state here that a number of gentlemen in this house were dumbfounded when they discovered that I had engaged in so many industries, and they thought that I was putting one over on them. Not so; any statement that I make in my place in this house, I am prepared to fall by it; even to make an affidavit. And being a practical fisherman, surely I am to be given some notice from a fishermen's government.

Now I challenge the Leader of the Government or the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to point out the practical fishermen who occupy seats on the government side and compare them with those who occupy seats on the opposition side, and find out where the most practical information can be found. I merely interject this part of my debate in an honest desire to try and improve conditions for the great mass of our people, who, to-day are struggling along with an almost unbearable load upon their shoulders. These people are called upon to pay dollar for dollar with the large and wealthy capitalist, who is allowed to continue to take advantage of his very profitable business without interruption. I think that the most deserving class of people in the country are those represented by hon. members whom I see here this evening.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to delay the committee in this stage of the bill, but arising out of the remarks which I made yesterday regarding the objectionable feature of the bill, there are a few words that might be added. I appreciate very much the approach which the hon. minister has made since yesterday towards meeting the objection. He realizes the highly objectionable aspect of this assembly voting away money to which these people are not entitled to by law. We are in quite a different situation from the executive minister recognises that the refund could have been made on executive responsibility. Whilst that point is one that no one is going to gainsay, it is no reason why we should legalize something that is wrong in principle. If voted on executive responsibility it would be something for which the government alone would be responsible. But, Mr. Chairman, the point which the hon. minister has not yet considered is the coming into this assembly and making laws to suit a few people, not alone a vicious principle, but is particularly objectionable because of what has been disclosed regarding this particular amendment. The minister has himself confessed that there is something about it that he did not want to have done on the responsibility of the executive government.

This is not merely a matter of idle opposition nor a matter of caprice for the sake of delaying the passage of a bill. The hon. minister himself has distinctly told us that this section has but one object and one only, namely to give to certain persons whose names he has given to the house, moneys that they are at present not entitled to receive. We have been told that since 1917 vessels beyond the class of 120 tons (and now made 130 tons) were not entitled to the bounty or to free entry on material used in their construction. The hon. minister has narrowed the issued down to the extent where he comes in here and tables a statement showing who is to benefit by this section. The only purpose of it can be to benefit people who have vessels launched since 1919 and the total amount involved is calculated to be in the vicinity of 7,000 dollars, to be given to the persons whose names are on this list, namely, Marystown Trading Co., $1,650; Buffett & Co., $1,796; S. Harris Ltd., $1,381; D. Pelley, $709; F.P.U. $900.

Now, I would like to say that there is one aspect of this which strikes me as being peculiar and somewhat out of place, and that is the cases of Pilley and the F.P.U., who do not seem to fit in here. Harris and Buffett should not be approached in the same way or placed in the same class as the bearer of that illustrious name which has also been given to one of the vessels on this list, President Coaker. Such examples of democracy and aristocracy should not be placed on the same level, nor do I think that the vessel bearing the illustrious name should be made the subject of legislation of this kind. A name we have often heard applied to the hon. minister is the "Worthy" President, and surely it is not "worthy" of the "worthy" minister that he should come in here and take away from himself that power which he was supposed to have by connecting his name with those of persons who are seeking concessions from the government to which they can lay no just claim. True the name of the vessel owned by the concern has been placed at the end of this list and is only in lead pencil and perhaps his name is there only in spirit of his characteristic charity, but this is not what we had been led to expect of him. This house is seriously asked tonight to vote amounts of money to Harris, Buffett and others, to shove back the hands of the law, to give these poor people the sum of $5,000 out of the public funds of the country. Is that the principle that the hon. minister should support? If this thing had been done on executive responsibility we would have nothing to say to it here, but that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should come in here and ask this house to pass legislation of this character is not at all in accordance with what we had expected of him, nor sir, is it in keeping with doctrines he has advocated that he should be the one to bring in and endeavor to pass "class" legislation, for we can call this nothing else.

I say that if this measure was even justified by the fact that these people were led to expect this refund there would be some purpose in passing it, but how can we justify it? These vessels were built at a time when the owners knew that they were not entitled to the bounty or the free entry of material, and surely it is no part of our duty because people apply to the government or to this house and set up a justification that, they thought they were going to get certain concessions, that we in our charity should give them what they ask for. In the first place the principle is unsound because, as I have already pointed out, these people don't need our charity, but nevertheless we are all human, and if they can get the hon. minister big-hearted enough to depart from his former high ideals of what is just and right nobody can blame them if they take all they can get. But sir, I doubt very strongly if the hon. minister has an idea that there is anything morally or legally right about the thing this house is asked to do. Of course we can make it legal by passing this section, but when we sit here and allow this section for which we are told there is no justification to go through, we are doing something which is bound to have farreaching effects.

Why, sir if people all over the country had cause to expect concessions of any kind we should be justified in granting them to as great an extent as we would in granting the request of the clause. This is nothing more nor less than a hold-up, a putting of the gun to the head of the government by certain people who have certain influence or power. Ithink that the object of passing such legislation is not worthy of a government that came into power leading us to expect something so entirely different. We should remember moreover, that when we sit here we are in a different position from that which certain of the hon. members on the other side of the house occupy as the government of the day. What they do as such is done on their own responsibility, but when we come in here to consider this matter as a legislature it is a different position altogether, and I would urge upon the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that this is not a question of amount, it is not a question of the $7,000, but it is a question of our setting up a position for which I venture to assert there is no precedent.

To say the government can come in here and ask this House to give effect to legislation that will mean the paying of money to people who are neither morally nor legally entitled to it, is going too far. Of course if the Hon. Minister wants to pass this bill as it stands he can do so, but I say this, and I hope it will be taken in the spirit in which it is meant, that he is sowing something that will give him and give this House trouble in the future. He is making his first great mistake.

The position, as I said yesterday, teing taken towards the men who own the boats is like rubbing grease into the fatted cow. It may be possible that the vessele are now only making their first voyage but that does not materially alter the position. There is a sort of exception in the list, the schr. "President Coaker." This ship was built by a shipbuilding company for the F. P. U. here is this much to be said about that class of boat, it was built by a firm which might be looked upon as a sort of co-operative company. But to return to the ordinary business man it is the same position as going down and have the merchants on Water Street get a rebate on all the goods they have imported. They have just as much right to expect a rebate, it is the same position practically speaking. These people approached the government because they said others got it and they thought they ought not be discriminated against. If a House of Assembly be asked to always consider legislation in the spirit that it ought to be enacted in such a way that the people would not be discriminated against, then we are going to set up a queer condition of affairs. If for a period of ten or twenty years the people were not entitled to a rebate, and at the end of that time legislation was passed allowing a rebate on ships built in the future would it not be just as reasonable as in this case to urge that those building during the intervening ten or twenty years should get the rebate.

If this were not done these people would have been discriminated against because the law was not made retroactive. The only justification you have to offer for the insertion of the clause in question is that the Marystown Trading Company or Harris, or Pelley, or the organization of the F.P.U., have been discriminated against. There hasn't been a single argument brought out in their behalf to prove the justification of their claims except that they have been discriminated against. If that's the only article you will always have people being discriminated against. If we are going to consider this only as a reason, it is one which will have no support. Another point in moving in this amendment is the fact that they have said they thought they were going to get a rebate, that's why they built the vessels. If we believe everything they say and they once discover the government was going to trat them over kind and that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had a heart that was easily touched, then you will be in for a time of it. It is not a question over which we should have a division; it is our duty on which our attitude is marked. It is not a creditable thing to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and it is not in the interests of these people themselves. It is a black mark in the life of one who claims to have so few against him that he will regret in the future. It is not that I object to the $17,000 being paid so far as the amount goes, but to be paid to these people under the guise of the encouraging of shipbuilding. We should be paying to people who have built ships, that is not an encouragement to build ships. I have no objection whatever in the wide world to these people getting that rebate so far as they are personally concerned, but I do object to the proposition that these people have influence enough to get the government to degrade itself and pass such an act. I have the greatest objection to this being done. I will vote against this and in due time move an amendment.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—The cost of everything that went into our vessel increased from two hundred to two hundred and twenty per cent. I believe that the other gentlemen were in the same position. When they made up their minds to build these vessels, they contemplated getting that $900 rebate.

MR. HIGGINS:—They had no right to contemplate any such thing.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—They did not know and we would not have built that vessel of ours, if we had known those laws were there. Our shipbuilding company, I might say, will never ask for that rebate under that act, but that is no reason why the other men should not. The attitude of the opposition only leads me to think that instead of coming in here and being straight and above board, that it is better to do things in the old way, namely, through the executive council to enable us to put through matters by minute of council. I believe we would get more respect here if we did things in the underhanded way in the executive council like the late administration did.

MR. HIGGINS—The case is so bad that you would not make your own claim.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, with the permission of the House and subject to the criticism of the hon. member for Burin, I would like to say a few words on this amendment. I was not in the House when the hon. Minister ff Marine and Fisheries brought down this amendment. Might I say in reply to the Hon. Minister of Justice that I did not object yesterday to sub-section two of this bill being passed merely because it repealed legislation. The hon. minister said that every Act passed in the legislature must have the effect of repealing any previous legislation. My main objection is on principle and retroactive legislation is the principle n this matter because it spoils the effects of the statute laws of the Colony. That is what I disagree with. I consider, and, as I informed the House yesterday, that legislation of a retroactive character is wrong and vicious in principle, and we cannot with any degree of security or any degree of comfort anticipate what the future may hold for this Colony if we set up the precedent, as attempted by this proposed enactment.

As regards the particular cases cited in the information laid on the table of the House by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that does not sway me from my position anything at all. That matter is purely a personal one. In one respect, perhaps, it explains the reason why the hon. member for Burin became somewhat alarmed with me yesterday. I notice that one of the interested parties that would benefit by the passage of this enactment is the Marystown Trading Company; another is Buffett and Company, and another Samuel Harris, Ltd.

Well, it might be laudable for any particular member of this House to get up and support this measure, especially with reference to the advantages that are going to accrue to certain people in his own district. Might I point out to him and to other members of this House who may be under a similar impression, that when he comes in on the floors of this assembly, he no longer represents one constituency; he no longer is to regard any laws that would be advantageous for his own constituency to the detriment of the others; but, under the constitution, he is responsible to the people of Newfoundland generally. And in this respect I say that this legislation will not be to the benefit of the whole people of Newfoundland. The effect is to ask the taxpayers of Newfoundland to go to the public treasury and hand out seven thousand dollars to four or five different people. I strongly object on principle and I contend that it should not be tolerated. It will not only have the effect of class legislation, but suggests personal legislation. I repeat that we are not passing legislation for the people of Newfoundland under this bill; we are not directing our attention properly.

As regards the Hon. Mr. Coaker's vessel, that matter is purely a personal one. I note with interest what he says about the building of that vessel. Of course, nobody will give too much attention to the excuse which he proffers. It is a well known principle in law that every man in the country is supposed to know the law; no man can plead ignorance of the laws that are on our statutes; and if the owners of that vessel had her built under a delusion, that there is no justification for coming in here now and saying, gentlemen for the delusion allow us to give those people bounties and rebates, which strictly in accordance with the law of the land should not be recovered. The same applies to other vessel owners. We cannot allow the argument to be reflected upon by an issue of that sort. We must confine ourselves to one or two principles. The law of the land being such and such, has a man any right to say that he does not know it? No matter what you thought, it cannot effect the situation. No man, who had a vessel constructed, had any right to think that legislation for the future will be enacted giving you certain concessions that the law of the land forbade. If a anm is foolish enough and guideless enough to depend upon the promise of politicians to bring down legislation that would benefit his own case and later finds that it cannot pass this House, then he has only himself to blame. If we allow the proposition to go unchallenged, any man who believes such and such a thing and is competent to get a bill put through the legislature of this country, then we do not know where the iniquitous principle is going to end.

An amendment is now brought down that vessels launched in 1919 shall have rebates, but when we come to regard it in a practical light we realise that the same vessels which the act of 1917 does not cover. When we read this bill the words themselves attempt to camouflage the issue. We cannot with any degree of consciousness recognize any principle of the sort involved and I do not see how any man can sooth his conscience on this point and can come in here and attempt to pass legislation of such a vicious nature. We know that this retroactive clause will cover vessels launched last year. We ask to regard the main objection brought before the House that we are here tampering with legislation for the financial betterment of certain individuals. Even the clause as amended includes those vessels whose keels were laid after 1917 and therefore the principle remains and the clause should not be so. Legislation of yesterday, the day before, ten months ago or twenty years ago, no matter when, the principle is the same.

If we should allow you to come in here and pass an enactment with such a vicious principle behind it, we would not be living up to the ideals of decent political economy and in short the public legislation of the country would be upset and this should not be tolerated. And this very thing we are doing when we come and think that the legislation involved in this bill is of a retroactive nature. This retroacticve section is for a certain class of persons for their advantage solely and we are not going to allow certain individuals to go down to our treasury which contains sums to devote to the uses which the law of the land says shall not be recognized and distinctly states that the rebates contemplated by this section shall not be paid. I would ask the hon. minister to consider this point in its serious phase and in its ethical light, and I impress upon the hon. gentleman that this ethical side of the issue should not be lost sight of. We could not permit pernicious precedents of this sort to take place because if we did we could not tell what would happen in the future. The House may not be constituted of the same honorable gentlemen who occupy seats here now and in particular there may be certain sections of the country with whom the government of the day may be very friendly, and it would come in here and pass iniquitous legislation of this kind for the particular advantage of these particular people and then the people of the country will say that such a precedent should not be upon the statute books.

The result of this precedent will be that bills will be brought in here and made law to the detriment of this country. This embodies my main objection, whether you construe the section as meaning vessels whose keels were laid in 1919 or launched in 1919, the principle is just the same and I object very forcibly to this amendment and it is a mere camouflage to pass an enactment to cover vessels whose launching is only a few months off; it is an audacious attempt to bring down before this House a bill embodying an iniquitious principle of legislation. The minister of marine and fisheries says that unfortunately some enterprising people laid keels of ships thinking they would get a rebate. This legislation is simply providing for contingencies that overtake some people owing to their unbusinesslike and shortsighted method of doing business. They expected to make a profit and they find they do not, well they have themselves to blame. That is no justification for passing legislation of this character. If some enterprising person undertakes a venture and a profit which was contemplated does not materialize why should I condone going down to the public treasury and taking out money to sooth the financial feeling of the loser by paying back his losses which were incurred through his own short-sightedness and unbusiness-like method.

To contend that legislation should depend upon this sort of a principle is outrageous. To say that those in control of the affairs of the country will compensate for private losses out of the people's money is ridiculous. I have never heard of legislation of such an iniquitous character based upon such a vicious principle as this and that is my main objection. The argument of the honorable member for Burin and to some extent that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries cannot be taken seriously. The member for Burin was amusing. He said certain persons thought that certain things would be done, that rebates would be granted. Now they want us to help them in going down to the treasury and pay these individuals money for losses to which they are not entitled to pay them for three years' losses sustained by certain firms owing to their business shortcomings. It comes to this that a man who owned goose-berry bushes will come along and ask for compensation for a poor crop of berries he had twenty years ago. Just think of it. I never heard of the like. I consider there is no right to pass legislation of this sort. But this contention is negatived by trying to pass sectoin two. We would certainly boost shipbuilding along decent lines. We will do everything in our legitimate power to provide and promote shipbuilding whether now or in the future, and it is the policy of the Opposition to do and they will not turn down any reasonable request for the encouragement of shipbuilding. I say sincerely that it is our duty to encourage shipbuilding in every material manner and we will grant a bounty when we can to those business men who go into a venture the profit of which not only accrues to themselves but also to the country. We would endorse any principle of that sort, anything of a laudable nature. But we are not going to allow an enactment to go through which will permit anybody to go down to the public treasury and take money out to soothe their wounded financial feelings because of losses sustained during the last three years. If the venture depended upon a principle of this sort then everybody will be looking for the same privilege.

We cannot condone legislation that tampers with the funds of this country. I object to it strenuously. If a precedent of this sort is allowed to go through one cannot tell what the future of this country will bring to us. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries brought the bill before the House and went so far as to make an amendment and for this he deserves credit.

The hon. gentleman is to be credited with the proper spirit of the legislator in bringing this business before the House, and before the people. But in doing that I cannot give him credit for doing more than his duty. It is his duty to the public and in performing his moral duty he is entitled to no credit. I am not going to pose before the country as one who is doing more than his duty. I want to look at it from a public standpoint. Because he does his duty he wants the country to thank him for it. The member of this House is not alive to his duties who would allow this matter to be disposed of behind closed doors. The other matters of this act are more or less all right, but section three, subsection 2, should not have been brought down here. In 1917 a law was brought down and if any company did something that it didn't know anything about it has nobody but itslef to blame. It is a subject upon which they should have been fully alive. If you allow this to creep in, in the course of a few days two or three people will come in here with a common bull story. You say to a man, you did something a few years ago for which you should receive a rebate, and we are going to give you a rebate. We are going to tell you how much we like you. Now, Mr. Chairman, where is this thing going to end if once we start on it. And then the hon. member for Burin comes in here and says that I am insincere and talking "Simon Pure" stuff. He and I crossed lances yesterday. When he got up he reminded me of a story by Robert W. Service, the "Soulful Sam." If he has not read that sory I would like for him to do so. But I don't want him to come down here with legislation that is not for the best interests of the country. The hon. member must remember that he doesn't represent Burin now. He represents the country as a whole not a few of his constituents. If, for example, the people of Quidi Vidi should ask me to put through some special legislation for them, I would say no, I am sworn to protect the interests of Newfoundland as a whole and I cannot support your proposition. And I want you to realise that when I get up here and advance arguments on sound principle that I am not posing as a "Simon Pure." I want to tell the hon. member for Burin that I do not want to descend to a discussion of personalities as he did yesterday, and if any members decide to do it and get hurt they have but themselves to blame.

Now as regards the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the Fishermen's Shipbuilding Co. would not ask for the rebate, I cannot regard that as an argument at all. If you say that you want to get this benefit for a few individuals, we have to take one of two possible positions. First, that the hon. member is too honest and has too much interest in the welfare of the country to take advantage of disastrous legislation, or, second, that the legislation is just, but that he will not take what rightfully belongs to him. On what horn of the dilemma is the hon. gentleman going to sit. Is he going to take the position that he is opposed to the principle but will grant the rebate to certain individuals; or will he decline to take what rightfully belongs to him? The latter course would be absolute robbery of the company of which he is president.

If we face this position as courageously as we should in passing this clause to take out of the public treasury six or seven or eight thousand dollars we will have done our duty.

It is not my money that I am handling. If it was I should probably go down to these men and say I am sorry for you and I am going to give you a cheque to cover your expectations, but once I stand here and control the funds of this Colony I cannot and I am in honor bound not to deflect one single cent from the legitimate channels for which it is intended. We can not of our own special grace for a paltry few in this country give money for this purpose. If my hon. friend the member for Burin wants to treat his friends let him write out a cheque and pass it along to them, but in this case it is not his own money that he has to deal with, it is the public funds of this country and under the law of God and the law of man we are responsible for it. If this government must insist on the passage of this bill with that iniquitous clause inserted, I shall not forget to remind them when they again come to the country that they did this thing with their eyes open. I regard the case with most compassionate eyes, but I have to disassociate myself from the personal and I must remember the duty the people of this country have placed upon my shoulders. We are bound to do nothing that will conflict with the public affairs of this country. I say that it is immoral for us to condone legislation of this sort. I say that it is immoral for us to inflate the private accounts of the Marystown Trading Company and others at the expense of the public funds of the Colony much as we would like to see them inflated. I must remember as a public trustee of the public funds I cannot give way to my personal feelings in this respect. I say that if $8,000 is taken from the treasury to fatten the bank rolls of a few individuals the government one day will answer for it to the people who they are sent to represent. I don't care if it is $8.00 or $800.00, the principle is the same. This thing has to stop I am rather surprised, absolutely surprised, that gentlemen of such political experience as those sitting on the government side of this House should show such lamentable ignorance of the first principle or political economy and when I come down with a bill and there is anything objectionable in that bill I have to explain to the House why it is that I am going to allow that iniquitous principle to operate. There you have Sir, an example of a most plausible enactment being dissipated by the concluding clause in it. Under the last section we are doing something which should have a bad effect on the conditions in this country we are building up with one hand and tearing down with the other. On this position I differ with the hon. member of the government who have supported this measure. We endorse everything for the encouragement of shipbuilding we must not grant any concessions to these people. In passing retroactive legislation we are doing something which is altogether wrong because in the future governments will come in that will probably be passing legislation that will date back 20 or 30 or 50 years, and it is not improbable that they will tav us back to the days of our forefathers.

If we are going to condone the principle of retroactive legislation, we must be prepared to meet the evil consequences that are bound to follow. It is time that men, who govern the administration of the affairs of this country, should realise the serious obligations they assume, and that when they come here to open this house they will not be in a manner much to the amusement of the galleries; that we have something more serious in view than playing to the newspaper critics and that we are not going to get off some smart saying that is going to tickle the fancy of somebody here; that we are not going to have enacted any vaudeville stunt that would be analagous to a panorama; or that we are not going to let pass from opposite sides any abusive remarks for the amusement of some highly fanciful one, who will paint a picture in large type to send broadcast over this country. No, sir, the people who sent us here and who own this assembly are not concerned about these things, but what they are interested over is that, as legislators, we rigorously perform our public duty. We have one object in coming here to take our seats and that is to see that public business is transacted in the most judicious manner; and what is more, that in our legislative enactments we guarantee our actions and convictions, and that we will not violate any principle in the administration of the solemn duties cast upon our shoulders to perform. We have to confine our own personal feelings; I have to forget that I am opposed to the gentlemen opposite; and I have to forget the feelings that were so embittered by the opposing political parties of this country, and I have to forget the downfall of any opponents, except for the fact that I am here as a public servant sworn to do my duty to the people in a proper manner, and it is time for this house in this supposedly enlightened twentieth century to see that a realization of its duties is raging in the breasts of every man who comes on these floors. I do not agree with playing the part of obstruction from the sordid political viewpoint; I do not believe in holding up a discussion lengthily, but if legislation is about to be enacted that I disagree with, not alone do I conceive it my duty to hold up, but I will oppose with every force at my command the passage of enactments that spell ruin for the country. Therefore, it is in this spirit that I approach this argument. I am in accord with the first three sections of the bill, but I am in total disagreement with this principle underlying sub-section two. I commend the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who conceived that act, on the bill as a whole. I can conceive the heavy work done by hon. minister and with all respect to all gentlemen whose position he now holds, there is no man who can perform the duties incumbent upon that office as ably and efficiently and more advantageous to the country than the Hon. W. F. Coaker. I believe that if there is one man in the country who will not sparehimself in the interests of the largest portion of the population of this country that that man is the Hon. W. F. Coaker. I do not say this in the spirits of fulsome flattery. But I repeat that the President of the Fishermen's Protective Union, who, by his intelligence, energy and industry has done so much in his various enterprises on behalf of the people who put him in that high position is deserving of the highest commendation. It is quite true that I do not agree with the political principle underlying his organization but I believe that the Hon. Mr. Coaker, with the exception of my own leader, has done the greatest work in public life to_day; and I say that the future D. W. Prowse of Newfoundland will paint the name Coaker in colours that will never fade, and even if the hon. gentleman was not here before me to-night I would say that he is the biggest power within the four shores of Newfoundland to-night and wields the biggest influence. I say, sir, that such a man's responsibilities must be enormous. Why the responsibilities of a Prime Minister must be light compared to such a man , who controls some thirty or forty thousand fishermen of the Island. I have often pondered over the praiseworthy and commendable vitality and the cleverness of that man, who unknown ten or twelve years ago when he set out to revolutionize the conditions under which the fisher folk of Newfoundland live. On the principle of proper political economy I do not agree with him. I do not think it is right for any corporation to have the power at its control to send men here to control the government of the country.

Inferences have been made that my colleagues and myself have been prolonging the debates by obstruction. I want to say that such is not the case, because if it were so I can conceive of nothing easier than for the few men on this side of the house to hold up the public business from passing through and making the government members procure the assistance of first aid ladies and gentlemen to bring them their meals.

MR. SAMPSON:—I would like the hon. member sitting on the opposite side of the house (Mr. Fox) to explain what is the use of repeating the same thing over and over again. I think it is only obstructing legislation.

MR. FOX:—Well sir, it all depends upon what one is repeating. When you repeat a cogent argument it has a very impressing effect and this is why there has been repetition of it. The gentleman who hear will I am sure be impressed and therefore recognise the logic of it. The hon. gentleman is a friend of mine and I have a frank admiration for him but I am only answering his question and may go further and say you cannot hear too much of a good thing. This is a matter you should never lose sight of or tire of hearing. There is something worth while in the argument of the opposition and the same principle applies and the men who take conscientious interest in the affairs of their country such as the honorable members of this house should never tire of hearing salient truths. And it is really astounding to me to find honorable gentlemen here in this house endeavoring to pass legislation of such iniquitous character. They ought never lose sight of the welfare of their country. If they come into this chamber and seriously attempt to pass an enactment involving such a pernicious principle. I say that they are delinquent to their duties and are disgracing the legislature of this country. Any legislator being a party to such an attempt, an attempt to pass a measure having a vicious, iniquitous principle such as this one, surprises me beyond expression. The members of the opposition are here occupying their seats for one purpose and for that purpose they were sent here. If we allowed legislation of that sort to go through, if we did not vehemently protest, we would be sadly neglecting our duty of checking the legislation of this country. This is no party measure.

If I were a member of a party to-mor row and they attempted to pass legislation with a principle of this kind underlying it and I could not convince them that they were wrong, then I would leave them. I cannot imagine that public men can so far forget themselves, can forget the knowledge they may already have, as to allow a principle to control the legislation of this country such as is contained in this bill they are attempting to put through. I am surprised. I would excuse the hon. gentlemen if they lacked knowledge of political economy, if they did not recognise the various principles, but the nature of the attempted legislation is of such an iniquitous character, it is so obvious that I am astounded. This section is violating the principles of this house while the act is otherwise perfect. The efforts of the Honorable Minister of Marine and Fisheries are being spoiled and an otherwise perfect act is being frustrated by the inclusion of this sub-section two of clause three. If this section were there there would be no comment whatever. I therefore ask the Honorable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to delete this section and then we will have a perfect enactment. Sections one, two and three are alright but section two of clause three is morally and logically wrong. I have endeavored to show to the house the altogether wrong motive they may have sustained they may indulge upon their super_abundance of principle and do so. But men of public experience, the legislators of this house ought not to pass legislation that is directly detrimental to country and legislation of this sort proposed is indeed very pernicious to the interests of those who send me here, who sent me here to frustrate any attempts to pass legislation that tends to prove detrimental to them. Is it legitimate to go down and take out of the treasury the people's money to be devoted to the use of private individuals? For this reason this reason this clause is not right. I may say that if any of the honorable gentlemen on the other side wish to compensate their friends for some losses and am sure that if the opposition were the government tomorrow and they attempted to introduce a section in a bill of this sort the present government then being the opposition would strongly oppose such an attempt his section is frustrating the otherwise good attempts of the honorable minister and it is a negation of all the good contained in the act.

I would ask the honourable Minister of Marine and Fisheries to consider his serious responsibilty as Minister of the Crown in introducing a bill with such a clause included in it and would he not consider himself doing right by the people whom he represents by deleting the objectionable section. I hope then the honourable gentleman will admit that the clause is not right and will therefore strike it out, but I look more so to the cabinet for that serious consideration which this section deserves and after they give it that consideration I have no doubt that its obvious ridiculousness will reveal itself.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Sir, I realize after hearing the several discussions from this side of the House as to the giving of rebates to certain parties I would not be living up to the traditions of this seat which I now occupy if I did not rise and reveal my disappointment in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in introducing a bill of this kind and my objection to the retroactive clause contained therein. Before I go further I would like to ask the honourable gentleman if it is correct that so far as the F. P. U. are concerned they are not going to apply for the $900.00.

THE HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Yes, I said that.

SIR JOHN C. CROSBIE:—Well then that at least you will not take $900.00 but for the life of me I can not understand why you are fighting for some other man. I regret that Mr. Harris who is in Florida, Mr. Buffett who is at Grand Band and the gentleman who is in charge of the Marystown Trading Company, are not here to hear the charges made against them.

MR. BENNETT—Mr. Chairman, I want it to be understood that I do not want to embarrass the government or to obstruct the government in any legislation that may be brought forward, but I want to place myself on record as being opposed to this bill. Unfortunately a discrepancy has been allowed to come in which is a reverse of the enactment of 1917. Previous to 1916 the need for vessels in our trade was obvious, and the government undertook to give a bounty to encourage the building of ships. In 1917 it was discovered that the building of large vessels was contemplated on a large scale by foreign capitalists. The Hr. Grace Shipbuilding Company has been mentioned in this connection. These people were encouraged by our legislation to build ships in the Colony. They built the ships and then sent them outside of the country. They were not used in the country at all. The present Minister of Marine and Fisheries at the time pointed the matter out to the executive government, and he was quite right. In 1917 the bounty on large vessels was stopped.

When the bill promising bounty for shipbuilding was first introduced the entry of foreigners into the shipbuilding industry in this country was not anticipated. Fortunately the act was availed of in the right manner by our people and during the years of the war some very fine vessels were turned out of our shipyards, vessels which took up the foreign trade of the country when steamers were no longer available, and saved our commerce so that in this respect the government which was responsible for that bill can claim a great deal of credit. It was money well spent and it returned a hundred fold to the colony. Vessels to the value of one and a half millions of dollars were built under this act.

With regard to the Bill we now have under consideration, the objections to sub-section 2 of section 3 have already been well and ably ventilated by other members on this side of the house and it would but be laboring the question for me to take up that aspect of the matter. The principle involved is a vicious one as has been so clearly pointed out by Mr. Fox, and when provision was made to give the bounty to those who laid down keels prior to the act of 1917, the matter should end there as the legislature intended that it should. There is nothing to warrant us passing sub-section 2 of section 3 of this act and now that the duty has been paid on the material used in the construction of those vessels there is no reason why those who paid it should receive a rebate. The Hon. Minister in charge of the bill says we will bring in an amendment by striking out the words "keels laid since 1917," and vessels launched in 1919." This, however, does not alter the position in the least because the list before us is that of vessels launched in 1919. They were built by the Marystown Trading Co., Harris, Ltd., Buffett & Co., the F. P. U. and others, and I take it that the keels of these vessels were laid since 1917 so that the amendment does not alter the situation. It is not to the individuals who will benefit by this measure that I object but I do object to some men on the government side of the House trying to make good promises made last fall by paying back money to men and concerns who are engaged in a paying industry, for no person will deny that whatever the building of vessels may have been prior to the war, it was attended by large profits during the past three or four years. We have heard here of vessels paying for themselves in one trip, and surely a vessel that can do this is a profitable asset. I know of firms in this town myself who have grown rich by their vessels during the war. This is not a question of helping a cripple over a stile, but rather, as Sir John Crosbie has put it, it is gvng to hm who hath and takng from hm that hath not."

I am glad, sir, that the government did not exercise their right of doing this on executive responsibility, I am glad that they brought it into this House and gave us on this side a chance to place on record our disapproval of such a principle as is here involved. I can easily appreciate the fact of Mr. Foote having valuable supporters in Burin District and his saying to them: "I am going to put you on the same footing as those who have received this bounty, but that is no reason why this House should be expected to pass this unjust and unreasonable measure. I am sorry that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has seen fit to lend himself to this act of the government, but I am glad that he at least had the decency not to take his share of this money. That very act of the hon. minister is the best answer to the contentions of the other side and the best proof that the principle we on this side are advocating is right, honest and above board. Itrust that the minister will consult with Mr. Foote and Mr. Cheeseman, the hcn. members for Burin, and have this objectionable clause withdrawn, for I say, sir, that it is bound to react upon the men who pass it. It has not even the cloak of charity to recommend it.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Now, for the life of me, I cannot see why we should make this act retroactive. The act otherwise is absolutely perfect. If you are not going to look for it yourself surely you are not going to argue for it for other. Why we should go back three or four years to give somebody money out of the funds of the country is beyond me. I can understand you pretty well, sir. But, you say, if I withdraw that bill, if I do that, they will crow over it in the papers to-morrow. I promise you, sir, that it will not appear in the papers. I will tell the Daily News not to mention it. When you realize it is wrong, you ought not to give it to Mr. Harris, Mr. Buffett, or anybody else. I have no intention of doing any obstruction work. We are not driving the nail in the same hole, Mr. Jennings. We have heard the legal lights on the bill, and I believe they are right. I believe we should not make retroactive legislation. But, might we not ask you, sir, to give this matter 24 hours consideration. I believe that if you had another sleep on it everything would be alright to-morrow. I do not believe in the principle of retroactive law, and if it is wrong in principle it should not be done. I want to put myself on record as being against Harris, the Marystown Trading Co., Buffett, or anybody else getting any money back and I want it to be clearly understood. You, sir, are not going to take it, then why give it to the other fellows. You would give in now only you are afraid we are going to crow about it. If you give these men this money it will almost fulfill the scripture: "To those that hath shall be given, and from those that have not shall be taken away." I have no desire to obstruch legislation, but I am appealing to you not to do for others what you would not do for yourself. If these other gentlemen were here they would also be persuaded with you that it is wrong, and they too would withdraw their claim.

MR. MacDONNELL—Mr. Speaker, regarding the statements made about the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries I am not prepared to reply as to their accuracy or inaccuracy, while he may know as much as I do about it, even the most learned doctors have differed on many points, but I am not prepared to stand for that clause and assist in the passing of an act which I know to be wrong.

The sole objection of this bill is sub-section 2 of section 3, and I believe the passege of this bill with that clause inserted would be a blow at the constitution of this country. I am not opposed to a question of dollars and cents, but to the question of whether it is right or wrong to spend any money at all in such a case. The amount being so small we could easily let it go through, but I submit that if wrong and I believe retroactive legislation to be wrong, and though this is a small matter a conglomeration of many such matters would be something serious to contemplate. A snowball on the top of a mountain may look nothing yet it might be an avalanche before reaching the bottom. The constitution of a country is a mechanism which is very delicate and when anything is directed towards the constitution we should be very careful we don't disorganize the whole system.

Everything is founded on a matter of compromise and it is necessary for everyone of us to see that the two sides of the question be observed. It is only necessary to view the history of the constitution and you will find ready authority for the position which I now take. The old laws began to disappear as cities began to grow, but a new principle arose; a principle which still remains that each man should be prepared to surrender a certain amount of his personal liberty and right that general good may come of it. Our government to-day is founded on this principle. We all sacrifice some of our personal liberty for this reason. And if any man has any reason to believe that any other citizen is favored in any respect in which he is not, then, sir, there begins to be a certain discontent which subsequently becomes universal. Now then in this very section under discussion we find certain individuals to be treated in a particular manner different from the general public. I submit, sir, that the risk is too great for this assembly to pass any such legislation. It is very easy to pass from a democratic government of tyranny by the single passage of this section of this bill. The incipient stage may seem absolutely harmless to us. It may seem at first blush to me conferring upon individuals directly and indirectly upon the community certain advantages, but we must remember that we are not entitled to do that. We were sent here to preserve the principles of the people and to safeguard the privileges and interests of the people. We were not sent here to penalize 240,000 people for the advantage of four or five. Why should any one man in this country have to pay one cent in order that a bounty or rebate of duty should be given to men who have no claim thereto.

If this was a country in which the rate of taxation was low there might be some excuse, but we are paying an abnormal per capita rate of taxation already in this country, and I fail to see what justification any hon. member on the other side of the House would have to increase that burden by one hair's breadth for the benefit of 4 or 5 people. It may be that certain parties in the government and, who, perhaps, are not in the executive government, made promises to supporters that they had no authority to make. They led certain people to believe that if they went on with the building of vessels that subsequently it would be alright.

That may be perfectly true, but we are not bound to accept the theory of irresponsibles. We in this House have got to be shown the basis for such an enactment of any legislation, and if the thing is constitutionally unsound, as I believe it is, and there has been no argument brought forward by any member of the government to show that this is not so, this House should take nothing else into consideration except that one fact. This House cannot start in to lay out a theory by which the priviliges of our people will be sacrificed and the common constitution of our country made a scrap of paper of. That may seem a large way to look at a small question, but that is the logical consequence of such questions. This is the conclusion that other men arrived at when they introduced a bill ten times as far-reaching as this one. When you come to that stage, Sir, you come to a condition when the government is not of the people, for the people and by the people; you come to a state where you got bureaucratic government and where you are in the first stage of a journey towards tyranny. Hon. gentlemen on the other side can take the chances if they like, but the time will come when the people will see fit to saddle the blame on right shoulders. I wish to put myself on record to-night as stating that this House, if it passes legislation that it knows o be wrong and to be bad, is beginning the absolute destruction of the constitution, which will mean the doing away with the reason for our existence as legislators. That is the thing we will have to decide, simply because I believe that it is necessary that what we do we should do with full realization of the consequences and with our eyes open.

I agree that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is cognizant of all that pertains to the welfare of the fishermen of this country. I am sure of that. But this is so rabid and so radical a departure from all that I ever thought from the line of action that would be taken by him, that I am almost surprised that a section of this character would find itself in that bill. There has never been a man in this country who has championed the cause of the masses more vigorously and strenuously than the hon. minister himself. And, Sir, he comes into this House and brings in this bill, an excellent bill, but which is absolutely marred and spoiled by this sub-sector less than this: that we must penalize every other man in the country for four or five men for a certain amount, and you and I must pay our share of that duty which is to be refunded to those men.

But what I cannot understand is how the hon. minister became converted to such a theory. He may feel that ethically these men are entitled to consideration. I give him credit for that. But no matter what his private opinion or feelings are towards any particular people, we must not do anything that will bring about the smashing up of the constitution of this country or that we must start in this country in order to satisfy the desires of four or five men, an agitation that will set the seeds of discord over this land. We cannot afford to do that nor can we dare attempt to do anything in any way that tends to lessen the respect which is held and properly held for this honorable assembly. If we take away any of that regard; if by our actions we cause anybody or any number of men to have less respect for the laws of the land, then, Sir, there is an inevitable law of retribution even in this world, which will bring home to us some day the responsibilities for such an action. I submit, Sir, to this House and in particular to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who has brought in this bill, that he weigh well the consequences to this country as a whole. If it is essential and if it is true that the withdrawal of this section will penalize those four or five men, it is unfortunate and, perhaps, regrettable, but that is all about it. We must try and secure the greatest good for the greatest number. We cannot attempt or try to attempt to make legislation for any paricular individual. While I am sorry that this section should be in the bill, in another way I am glad that this kind of legislation was introduced at this early stage of this session in order that we may know from now onwards and begin to consider what are likely to be the consequences of every single clause of every bill which we may enact. We have got to do that, and I believe that the hon. minister upon consideration, will see that this criticism from this side of the House is simply and solely, because we believe that this may be a step unintentionally but, none the less insidious by which we would digress from the path we should pursue. It is a step in the wrong direction and a blow to the constitution of our country, and I have yet to hear from any hon. member on the other side of the House justify the enactment of retroactive legislation from the standpoint of political economy of political ethics. We cannot afford to play with any legislation of this chacater, and let us decide here and now that the duty we owe to this country and posterity will be upper most in our minds and that we will see that the rights of the many are safeguarded. Therefore, I will ask again the hon. minister to consider this.

DR. JONES:—Mr. Chairman, I have no intention to attempt to delay the affairs of this House by factious opposition to this measure. I am more or less traveling on a limited license just now and it is to my advantage to have as much legislation as possible put through this House while I am here so that in case my license is cancelled I shall have had some experience when I come back again.

With reference to the section of the bill now before the chair, I wish before it comes to a vote, to record my personal opposition to that section. My opposition is because of the retroactive clause in it, as it is bad in principle and will be bad in effect. No doubt Mr. Coaker, to some extent, realizes that the principle is bad because he gave way so far as his personal interest and the interests of the Fishermen's Protective Union are concerned and admitted it.

But there is another aspect to be taken into consideration and that is that Mr. Coaker's adherents, his loyal supporters who follow him through thick and thin, and take his actions as infallible. My experience among the Coaker supporters in my district has shown me that these men place complete confidence and trust in his infallibility.

So just imagine the effect this retroactive legislation will have in the setting up of a precedent of this kind. The adherents of the introducer of this bill will think that the principle involved is absolutely right and his effort will therefore be backed by these great numbers of men, and I am afraid with bad results in the future. As my colleagues of the opposition have so ably stated in this debate, the giving of bounties for the building of ships, and rebates, and free entries for materials used in the construction and outfitting of ships have my hearty support, but this retroactive principle involved in this section is one to which am utterly opposed and disagree with in every detail.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—We are asked to come in here and hand out five or six thousand dollars. What is the reason? Is not this the right place to give the reason? The hon. member for Burin and the hon. Minister of Justice have expressed themselves in favor of it. It is to fulfil political promises? When we see Mr. Harris of Grand Bank, asking for a refund of a large amount and the Hon. Mr. Foote coming in here and asking on behalf of Mr. Harris that the amount be refunded, it looks suspicious. This is proclaimed to be a Reform Government, and we are confronted now with legislation of this sort. The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows that this is not commendable .nd if he had kept his promise this egislation would not have been necesary. If legislation of this sort is going to be brought in here where are we going to end? There is not a man on the other side of the House who has a word to say in favor of the bill, ll dumb, waiting to vote on the enactnent of the bill.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— I object to the language of the hon. Leader of the Opposition in charging that a member on this side of the House supports this bill as part of a price.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Is this the right legislation to pass? No, you are just as much ashamed to pass it as the one who introduced it. When one is confronted with legislation of this sort after the appeal that was made to the country by the present government, we wonder what is going to be introduced next. We are asked to pass a measure of this kind. It is mere effrontery. It is mere bluff. No justification is given for it. We are asked to vote this to the real profiteers of the country. This man Harris asked me to repeal the "profits tax" law at the price of his support. I declined to do so. I declined to promise him the price.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— Again I have to object to the unparliamentary language used by the hon. Leader of the Opposition. You refer to a member on this side of the House as using bluff. I object to the word "bluff" as unparliamentary language.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—If unparliamentary, I will take it back. A minute of council would leave an uneasy memory in the minds of the men who would pass it, and we are here asked to legalise a bill, the principle of which is admittedly wrong. It is not just or necessary in any particular There is no justifiable necessity for it, and it will rebound against the government more than any measure that may be introduced. The government promised that the high cost of living would be looked into. They didn't tell the people that a measure would be introduced paying out money to the wealthier concerns in the country. Has no member of the government anything to say on this bill? You must feel that it is wrong, to endorse such legislation as it establishes a precedent that will be absolutely vicious and dangerous.

I believe that Mr. Coaker feels that he is in a false position and he was placed in that false position by the member for Burin, Mr Foote. Will the hon. member for Burin ask the Finance Minister to hand him back the amount paid by him the past two years in profits taxes? Surely it would be just as reasonable as this s. Surely Sir, it is not the intention of the gentlemen on the other side of the House to pass legislation like that. I am in full accord with this bill otherwise, but as soon as I eyed this paragraph the first thing I did was to draw the hon. minister's attention to it. The thing to do Sir, is to stop it from going through. There is a long history in connection with Burin district. Grand Bank itself has got a quarter of a million dollars from the government of the day and the district has a special coastal boat. I don't begrudge the hon. gentleman getting all he con for his district but when it comes to voting special moneys to special people, I for one, will never be a party to it, whether I am on this side or the other side of the House. With these few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I feel it my duty to record my vote against the measure.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word or two to this debate. In beginning, Sir, I would wish to say that I am sorry that the hon. introducer of this bill did not carry out his promise which he made here last evening, that this section would be withdrawn. He volunteered to have the section stricken out. Now, Sir, I am sorry he did not carry out his promise. He would have saved a lot of discussion and a lot of trouble. I firmly believe that the hon. introducer of the bill feels that it is not the right think that the House should adopt that section. It is wrong no matter from what point you view it. I remember and know why the act was changed in 1917. There are more reasons than one, but I will not, owing to the time, attempt to give them all. The reason why the act was changed was because many vessels were, or at least would be built in this country by outsiders from foreign countries at Harbor Grace. They were induced to put a great plant at Harbor Grace. It was made law that certain duties paid on materials brought into Newfoundland for shipbuilding would be refunded. And then considerable amounts of material were brought here to make the industry pay during 1916-17. Then the company gave orders for supply of material from the east, north, south and west throughout the Island. A great industry was started at Harbor Grace and it looked as the Colony would be called upon to pay enormous bounties on vessels built in the country. This was brought to the attention of the government and after due consideration the act was amended and this alteration made.

Those people at Harbor Grace immediately protested in as much as they were induced to come here and operate under the provisions of this act because of the bounties paid by the act and build ships in Newfoundland. Now if the promises were carried out there were some hundred thousand tons of shipping turned out and consequently about one million dollars would have to be paid in bounties. That argument was put forward and the government of the day decided that the bounty would only be paid to ships of 120 tons.

The argument was that the vessels of one hundred and twenty tons were large enough for the banking business of this country. And it was also objected to on the ground that it was not right to pay the bounty to foreign-going vessels.

Now that was done. That was law adopted the Harbor Grace company immediately complained that we did not keep trust with them and immediately prepared to withdraw from Newfoundland. Now what is the condition to-day in Harbor Grace? That great idustry built up in 1916, to-day is gone from Newfoundland and this country received another black eye. This is one of the reasons why the shipbuilding plant at Harbor Grace was destroyed. I am not prepared to tell why the industry fell through. We had no right to do that, and if we were willing to pay the bounty for these vessels the company would not have withdrawn.

This plant meant labor to men of this Colony of every description. It gave men of the South and North labor in getting timber during the spring and winter months of the year. We destroyed all this by changing the act. The intention of the act was the encouragement of shipbuilding among the fishermen in Newfoundland, and therefore limited the bounty to ships of one hundred and twenty tons. It cut out the rich men who were building vessels for carrying our fish to market.

Another reason for this limit was that vessels of three or four hundred tons built here or in the neighboring provinces were either sold or earned freight and in either case they paid for themselves. It was therefore not reasonable for the Newfoundland government to adopt the policy of paying bounties to such people and to come down and yap out public money to those who have invested their money in shipbuilding and got it all back again. That would have been a wrong principle. There would be no business principle involved in it and it would have done a great harm to the country. It certainly did induce the Harbor Grace company to come here. and why not?

Now this was the law of 1917. You come in here and you want to alter it, you want to change it and make a clause retroactive so as to be able to pay this bounty to three or four individuals of this Colony. It is against the law of the land and is morally corrupt, and for the very same reason we did not pay the Harbor Grace company, and I strongly object to it. If people other than fishermen undertook the venture of building ships fo. an investment and lose their money, they would suffer by their loss, and it is no argument for the introducer of this bill to come down here and try to pass a measure a retroactive act so as to compensate these parties for their loss.

HON. MINISTER PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of taking exception to a remark of the Leader of the Opposition. He stated that the $90,000 given for the spur line at Port Union was part of my price. When he says that I was bought he states what is absolutely untrue and without the slightest foundation whatever. I'll go back to the spring of 1917 when the National Government was formed. The necessity and desirability of forming that coalition was talked over by me with the leader of the F.P.U. and Dr. Lloyd, the leader of the Opposition of that time, and never from first to last was there a mention of a cent of payment one way or another, nor, Sir, am I one cent better off to-day as a result of that amalgamation. I never received a cent. I was never promised a cent nor did I ever ask for a cent in connection with it. I never heard of any bargain and so far as I was aware there was no question at that time of concessions to Port Union. If there was any understanding of the kind it was never spoken of to me.

I was lying in the hospital all the time during the first sessions of the National Government and did not take any part in the legislation enacted at that session. I am aware that concessions were made to Port Union at a later date, but it was only right that these concessions should have been granted to a concern that was so closely connected with the interests of such a large number of our fishermen, and I hurl back the statement he has made on the Leader of the Opposition as an unqualified falsehood, and I demand, Sir, that he retract his statement, which is absolutely without foundation or justification.

MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—My hon. friend has raised a moral issue in his case. I consider it a just claim or the government would not have passed the shipbuilding act in 1916, when all ships received a bonus. It was afterwards decided that all ships should not get a bonus and an amendment was brought in so as to cut down the bonuses to 130 ton vessels or over.

Under the 1916 act all ships at this size were entitled to a rebate and bounty. This was done by the late government and was a legacy to us from them. I have been honest enough to come here and make a clear statement of the case and my hon. friend on the other side of the House should raise the moral issue.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman, as the hour is late I do not want to take up the time of the House any longer than is necessary. Nobody has made any statements of an objectionable character in the debate unail the leader of the opposition saw fit to introduce uncalled for personalities in his remarks a few months ago. Iwant to assure the hon. gentleman on the other side that no member of the government has any ulterior motive as far as these rebate are concerned. I didn't even know that this clause was in the bill until it was brought before the House.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—You said you were a member of the treasury board.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—This never came before the treasury board. Uulike my hon. friend opposite, we preferred to bring the matter here and discuss it openly.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—That a chestnut.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—That's a chestnut that cannot be roasted too much. If that $7,000 is going to be kept up long, how much longer is that $500,000 going to be kept up? It is only a matter of proportion and I leave it to the hon. gentleman himself to figure it out. What I really got up to say was that no promises of any kind were made by me in connection with this matter and secondly, I want to defend an honest man whose name has been brought into this discussion. One would imagine from the remarks of the gentleman opposite that Mr. George Harris had come to me and asked me to refund him his money. I want to say here that George Harris is a man who rose from the ranks of the fishermen and I am sure that he never did any grafting. He supported me, not because of any promises I made him, but because he considered me the best man, and as far as I am concerned I believe he was right. He never appealed to me after I was elected to do anything for him, because he is above that sort of thing, and I cannot allow these charges to be made against him or the firm of S. Harris Ltd., when I know they are unfounded and only used for political reasons by Michael Cashin.

I was told that Iwas bobbing up and down a few minutes ago but I know who is the chief bobber up. We talk about refund of duties, what have personalities got to do with it. I say that I for one deprecate any personalities in a debate of this sort. I merely got up to clear myself and Mr. Harris.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I think it is very happy comparison between that $7,000 and that $500,000 as the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was one of those who voted that sum to public works.

MR. HIGGINS:—Apparently a given rule of the road has been established so that each member may get up in their turn., But, I am afraid the Hon. Minister of Justice ably spoke on the spur of the moment. He suggested that the object of the debate was to draw the attention of the House to the $7,000 and that we were asked to forget the $500,000. There is a great difference between the two votes. One has been allocated for the repairs of the public works of the colony, the other is a vote for Harris and Buffett that Pelley and one who has refused to be in the company of such, the corporation of the F. P. U. who are owners of the "President Coaker"

MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—I must thank some of the members on the opposition side af the House for some of the statements they have made Much has been said that might have been left unsaid, but the country will be delighted to know that we have been two days discussing the clause of this act .

Mr. Fox has asked me whether I am to be false to the Shipbuilding Company, or whether I am ashamed of the issue. I have infinite faith in the moral issue that these men should get their money. I have no right as a member of this House to cast or vote or use my influence to pass any legislation that may benefit myself or any Company I may represent and I therefore withdraw the claim. However, that is no reason why my company should give up its rights to this money, that would otherwise be paid but for the fact just stated. Members of the House should not use their influence to benefit themselves. I have received $1500 since November as salary in connection with my department and board of works, but of that amount I shall pay the Shipbuilding Company the $900 that they must forfeit under this bill, because I cannot permit public moneys to flow to that company, through my vote or influence in this House. This is not the first time our companies have been penalized here and because of this same fact in relation to my connection with public affairs. I refuse our company to have any financial relation with the treasury. None of our companies have sold ten cents worth of goods or have done business with the government in any way since I entered the government in 1917, or for that matter before that time.

Mr. Fox said we are going down to take $7,000 and hand it out to the men. That is not so. They paid the money into the revenue; they are not asking anyone to refund their money. We are just handing them back their own money they have paid in as duty on the material used in building those vessels. All duty on the timber and material used on the ships has been paid for in duty and if these vessels were built in Nova Scotia and sent here, no duties would be collected, and therefore our builders would suffer, while Nova Scotians gained.

If we did not provide a rebate and Bounty in this bill you would find nobody anxious to go into Shipbuilding here in the future. I believe these men have a just claim and as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I brought the cat into this bill and all the arguments made by members of the opposition have not convinced me that they should not get a rebate.

The reasons to-day are not the same. You canot see a vessel that will make her value in one of two trips. The expenses were not as high then as they are now. We have a vessel that for the last twelve months did not make more than 70 per cent profit The freight rates on steamers are gone up, particularly those in connection with salt carrying. Last year salt was brought in as low as twenty-five shillings per ton freight, now the lowest, I understand is forty shillings. I would like to ask what the Escasoni got last year.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Forty shillings.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—We brought salt in as low as twenty-five and as high as forty. I am indeed pleased with the discussion that has taken place on this shipbuilding bill, but I was sorry with the breeze that occured at the end of it. I kept my patience as much as possible. We have had many a clash before, though I do not think I was the cause of it. However, that is all forgotten about now. I hope that I shall be able to maintain the dignity and responsibilities of my present position.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say a word in regard to the imputation, if not the specific influence, made by the leader of the opposition, that I promised Mr. Harris something for his support.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—I take your word for it. You don't have to make an affidavit.

HON MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Harris is above anything like that and he only wants what is legally due him. I regret very much the personalities introduced in this House. It is very discritable to the opposition.

MR. CHEESMAN:—As Mr. Foote has cleared himself and in view of the idea that the leader of the opposition seems to have, I would like to say that personally I have no knowledge of profits tax or rebate of duty having been introduced into the late election in our district. I had no conversation with any man in the district as far as this bill is concerned I know absolutely nothing about it. I do not know whether Mr. Harris got goods in duty free or whether he had them given him.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Chairman, before this rebate closes I would like to ask the Hon. leader of the opposition if he is prepared to take back the charge he made against me, namely, that I was bought.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—I said it in a general way. You were bought as a party man. I do not say individually, but collectively.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I came over for the motives which I am not ashamed of. The condition of affairs as represented to me at that time required a coalition of the two parties then sitting in this House and for purely national purposes and because it was in the best interests of the country, and for these and no other reasons did I become a party to the National Government. There was never anything about price either as a party man or individually. I demand that the Leader of the Opposition take back the words.

SIR M P. CASHIN:—I do not mean you individually, but collectively.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I do not take this as a correct apology.

MR. CHAIRMAN—I will ask the Hon. Leader of the Opposition to retract the words.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—I have taken it back. What does he want me to do, make an act of contrition for him?

MR. HIGGINS—Mr. Speaker, on motion of the adoption of the report, I would like to move this as an amendment: "That the report of the committeee by amending sub-section two of section three be stricken out.

MR. BENNETT—Mr. Speaker, I second that motion.

The Chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received.

On the motion for the adoption of the report, Mr. Higgins moved and Mr. Bennett seconded "that sub-section 2 of section 3 of the said bill be stricken out."

Whereupon the House divided and there appeared for the amendment: Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir John Crosbie, Mr. Bennettt, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Fox, Mr. Vinnicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Moore, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. MacDonnell (11).

And against it:

The Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, Minister of Fisheries, Minister of Posts, Hon. Mr. Foote, Minister of Public Works, Acting Minister of Shipping, Mr. LeGrow, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Winsor, Mr. Small, Mr. Cheeseman, Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Gosse, Mr. Targett Mr. Guppy, Mr. Jones, Mr. Samson (18).

So it passed in the negative.

On the original motion the House divided and there appeared in its favor the Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, Minister of Fisheries, Minister of Posts, Hon. Mr. Foote, Minister of Public Works, Acting Minister of Shipping, Mr. LeGrow, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Winsor, Mr. Small, Mr. Cheeseman, Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Gosse, Mr. Targett, Mr. Guppy, Mr. Jones, Mr. Samson—(18); and against it, Sir M. P. Cashin, Sir John Crosbie, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Fox, Mr. Vinnicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Moore, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. MacDonnell—(11), so it passed in the affirmative, and was ordered accordingly.

It was then ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts & Telegraphs" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

The Prime Minister intimated that His Excellency the Governor would receive the address in reply at noon to-day.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Bennett gave notice of question.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the legislative council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the following bills, entitled respectively:

"An Act respecting the effect and application of certain acts subsequent to the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series)."

"An Act to amend the Industrial Societies Act, 1919."

"An Act to amend Chapter 41 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Newfoundland Medical Board,'" and

"An Act to amend "The Food Control Act, 1917'" without amendment.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until 11.30 of the clock this morning.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

HON THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I beg to table the correspondence which was ready to be tabled earlier in the day, but was held over owing to the absence of Mr. Fox from the House.

MR. FOX—Mr. Speaker, might I thank the Prime Minister for his courtesy in deferring the consideration of the third reading of the bill respecting posts and telegraphs during my temporary absence from the House this afternoon, not so much to discuss the bill on merit, but that I want the opportunity of discussing the points I raised yesterday in reference to certain correspondence tabled through the courtesy of the Prime Minister. In approaching the subject I shall be very careful in laying the facts before the chair.

Some time ago Dr. Robinson held the position of postmaster-general and conducted it not alone with credit to himself but with exceptional and unusual benefit to the country as a whole. He retired from that position. The position taken by Dr. Robinson's friends was that his retirement was forced upon him, while the position of the government was that his resignation was voluntary. References were made that Dr. Robinson's refusal to discuss matters pertaining to his department, although Dr. Robinson's contention was that he had refused to discuss matters altogether foreign to the usual duties and function of his office. Accordingly, correspondence was asked for, and, to the courtesy and foresight of the Hon. the Prime Minister, was tabled the day before yesterday. Upon examination of the correspondence a most material discrepancy was noticed. There was correspondence that went to the very root of the situation and which completely prevented Dr. Robinson from setting up a position that he originally claimed, namely, that he was never derelict in his duty; that he never refused to perform duties pertaining to the administration of his department, but simply refused to discuss matters foreign to his departmental duties. The next he knew was that he was asked to send a message notifying the public generally that the Hon. Mr. Halfyard had been appointed as acting postmaster-general.

The discrepancy to which I referred yesterday and which I will now explain was to the effect that the first paragraph of Dr. Robinson's letter was altered in the copies tabled and to this extent.

On the third line of the first paragraph the following words were inserted: "In re the creation of a post and telegraph department." The letter from Dr. Robinson read as follows. (Reads letter.)

Now, according to the information got from the Colonial Secretary's department through the correspondence we glean the fact that Dr. Robinson replied saying he regretted his ability to comply with the request of the Deputy Colonial Secretary to meet the Prime Minister to discuss the creation of a new department of posts and telegraphs.

Now this altered the whole trend and tenor of the correspondence, but to make matters clear I will read a copy of the letter written by Dr. Robinson. (Reads first paragraph.) Now I wish to know of the honorable member how this decrepancy and interpolation referred to by me yesterday came about. Now this interpolation altered the whole trend of the matter and put a different phrase on it, as it gave the people to understand that Dr. Robinson refused to discuss the matters in relation to his office and therefore put the gentleman in an unfavorable light. The copy to which I am referring is under date November 20th, 1919.

When I gave notice of question to the House on this matter the Prime Minister, with his characteristic courtesy, without loss of time, laid upon the table of the House the information asked for and the correspondence speaks for itself. I had an interview with Mr. Mews at my office and I have brought with me here all the information which Mr. Mews gave me. I asked Mr. Mews permission to utilise the information as otherwise no explanation would be forthcoming, and he said I need not regard what he told me as confidential and might disclose anything, he said. Mr. Mews also told me that the Prime Minister was in no way connected with the matter and was perfectly innocent.

Now Mr. Mews rang up Dr. Robinson on the telephone and asked him if he would meet the Hon the Prime Minister to discuss the creation of a post and telephone department, and Dr. Robinson said he would consider the request, and on Nov. 20th wrote this letter to the Colonial Secretary's Department and it reads as follows.

(Reads letter.) Now according to the correspondence and the information laid upon the table of the House there has been an interpolation and to that I object. We must get correct information from the public departments. When I asked the Prime Minister about the matter he immediately rang up Mr. Mews on the telephone and Mr. Mews said he did not know anything about the matter and whatever happened was quite unintentional.

Now we come to the kernel of the situation, when we find that the original letter which was filed in the Colonial Secretary's department has some notes written upon it in the margin and they were. (Reads them.) Now these are the words complete, but why should the information derived from our public departments be so misguiding, and this is what I object to.

Apparently the typist in copying the original letter thought the notes were to go in and there it comes about that these words which were not in the original letter were in the copy of the correspondence which has been tabled here, the day before yesterday. Mr. Mews wrote these notes upon the original letter and sequently the original was copied. I think it is absolutely imperative that we receive correct information from the public departments. The Dominion must know all that transpires and therefore it is essential that correct information be published.

The House met at half past eleven of the clock in the morning pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that in accordance with the intimation received His Excellency the Governor would receive the address in reply presently.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker and the House proceeded to Government House and being returned to the Assembly room, Mr. Speaker informed the House that His Excellency had received the address of thanks, and had been pleased to reply thereto as follows:

Government House,
St. John's, Nfld.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honorable House of Assembly:

I thank you for your address in reply to the speech with which your present session was opened.

C. ALEX. HARRIS,
Governor.

May 6tn, 1920.

Mr. Speaker left the chair until three of the clock.

MR. TARGETT—May I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Hillview, asking for a sum of seven hundred dollars for building and repairing Maine Line Road from Hillview to Loreburn. This road is divided into three sections, from Hillview to Hatchet Cove, from Hatchet cove to St. Jones Within, and from St. Jones Within to Loreburn.

I wish to say sir, that several requests have been made, but so far nothing has been done. I hope the government will take up this matter, as this it the main line road leading from Hillview to Northern Bight railway.

MR. WINSOR—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of St. Brendan's in the district of Bonavista, asking for the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars for the purpose of repairing a railing in that locality, known as Mckey's Railing. This was put there some years ago as a safety for the public, as this place was looked upon to be somewhat dangerous, especially in the winter season. This railing now needs repairs. I hope the government will grant the request of the petitioners. I ask that this be referred to the department to which it relates.

MR. ABBOTT—Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure in supporting the petition presented by my colleague, Mr. Winsor, and hope that the government will see its way clear to grant the request of the petitioners.

MR. GOSSE—I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Bay Roberts and Harbor Grace on the subject of prohibition.

MR. ABBOTT—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the electors of Charlotte Town. The petition asks that the sum of $250.00 be granted them to repair the road leading from Charlotte Town to Port Blandford. This road is in a very bad condition. In fact it is absolutely impassable.

The petition is signed by Allan Chaulk and some sixty or seventy others. I hope that the government will grant this small amount to these referred to the department of public works.

Mr. Sullivan gave notice of question.

Mr. Scammell asked the hon. the minister of finance and customs to lay on the table of this house a statement showing the value of goods, material and supplies imported into Newfoundland for the Anglo Newfoundland Development Co., Ltd., free of duty since the company started business in Newfoundland; and in particular for the years 1916, 1917, 1918 and 1919. Also what refund of duties paid have been made since the company started business.

The hon. the minister of finance tabled the information requested.

Mr. Bennett asked the hon. colonial secretary to lay on the table of the house a copy of all correspondence between the government and F. A. McKenzie of London, England, relative to the war history of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment, also copy of minutes of council passed by the late government in relation to same.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Finance and customs to table a statement showing the amount due in taxes by the Commercial Cable Company to date.

The Hon. the Minister of Finance tabled the information requested.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 176 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled 'of the Encouragement of Shipbuilding,'" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the Bill entitled "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Codfish" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Second reading of bill "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Fish."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks regarding the Bill. It is generally conceded that the cure of Newfoundland fish is not as good as it might be, and for many years the Fishermen's Union have been discussing the advisability of seeking legislative enactment with regard to the improvement of the cure of our fish. In 1909 at the first convention of the F. P. U. a memorial was prepared respecting the standardization of fish. That memorial was presented to His Excellency the Governor, through Sir Edward Morris at that time, and a deputation of the Union waited on him.

The request of the Union was that this matter be taken up with a view to having legislation enacted for establishing a standard cull of fish.

The Government at that time sympathized with the request of the deputation and promised that something would be done; but that something was never done. For many years afterwards the Union still agitated for an improved cull. At our last convention quite a lot of time was taken up in discussing this matter again, and, so far as my knowledge goes, I feel convinced that the fishermen of the country are prepared now to have legislation enacted that would provide for an improved cure of fish.

The one great drawback to the cure of fish has been the selling of fish talqual, which means that the man who has good fish to sell gets no more for it than the man who has No. 2 inferior fish to sell. The result has been taken by the man who would make good fish because he felt that he was not rewarded for the extra care and labor that was involved in turning out a No. 1 article.

The further result has been that year after year the cure has grown worse and worse and fishermen have taken less interest and become more indifferent as to whether they made fish good or not. Talqual fish is good and bad mixed together. We want, therefore, an improved cure; we want to encourage our men to make better fish, and we consider that the proper way to do it would be through rules and regulations. One of those regulations will, no doubt, be the fixing of the prices between the different qualities. In years past when fish was culled Merchantable and Madeira there was usually about fifty cents of a difference between the qualities, No. 1 or Merchantable was $5 and Madeira $4.50.

The price of fish now is about $10 for No. 1. We consider that when we make regulations we ought to make a difference so large to do the best possible to turn out a No. 1 article. I think certainly that as far as my knowledge and influence go that a price of fish should be fixed as the difference between No. 1 fish and No. 2. Consequently the man who finds that his friend got $2 per quintal more than he did for his fish this year, will make every effort next year to receive the No. 1 price.

Under this bill, a commission will be appointed to establish regulations to show the fishermen what they consider should be done to turn out the special articles for the different foreign markets. These regulations will be published and distributed all over the country and in that way we hope to arouse an interest and enthusiasm among the fishermen and get them to put forth the best that is in them to turn out the different qualities of fish for the different markets.

At present there is considerable wonderment existing with regard to the values of codfish for the coming year. In my opinion, if we can establish an improved cure. that shore fish, salted as No. 1, should fetch $12 per quintal in the market the coming year. That will be $12 for No. 1 and $10 for No. 2. These figures will be better than the prices paid last year when the price started in St. John's at $10.50. So if we get $12 and $10 for Nos. 1 and 2, respectively, or an average of $11, that will mean 50 cents over last year's price.

With regard to Labrador fish. The greatest we will have this year is in keeping Labrador fish within a scope that will not discourage the shoremen, but I feel that if shore fish No. 1 sells at $12 that Labrador No. 1 will sell at $10. There is a wonderful feeling among the shore fishermen now over the prices paid for shore and Labrador, because it is so easy to make Labrador fish. It is handled in a much easier way and it takes but a few days to make Labrador fish, but it takes weeks and weeks to make shore. We always find among the shore fishermen that they aren ot getting sufficient rate of value, as compared to Labrador, owing to the Labrador fish rate of value. That is a matter that there is no apparent control over. The majority of the markets only want Labrador fish and will not have shore fish. The supply of Labrador fish the last year or two was somewhat limited. We have not had any surplus supplies of Labrador fish in our markets.

Last year the Eskasoni went to Roumania, Greece, with fifty thousand quintals of Labrador fish and had to remain there a considerable while. If we had had the selling of that cargo we would have secured good results. We marketed all our fish to Greece satisfactorily; and this year I am looking forward to an increased demand for Labrador, especially if put up in the way the markets require it. I am looking for a demand from India; the demand from Greece will still be above what it was, and we hope during the fall to make arrangements to sell to Egypt. There has been some, correspondence with regard to sending a man to Egypt and we are told that there is a possibility of Egypt taking from twenty-five to thirty quintals, which, of course, would be soft Labrador.

Altogether I look forward to a brisk demand for Labrador this fall, as the demand has been considerable and the supply limited. And if men get $10 for No. 1 Labrador, there is going to be quite a feeling among the shoremen, because of the difference of $2 between. Therefore, as this year I am looking forward to a commission appointed to deal with this matter. That commission shall consist of not less than five or more than eleven persons and of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall be chairman.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES: — This Commissione shall have power to control the handling of fish from the time it is caught until it is disposed of to foreign buyers. Rules and regulations will be passed dealing with the manner of catchng, splitting, cleaning, salting and drying, curing and pickling and preparation of fish for sale and export, and also with the culling, selecting, assorting, standardising,branding, etc., etc., with a view to the establishment of the grades in the local and foreign markets and also for ensuring as far as possible a suitable article of a proper grade for the several markets. This commission will be a very important commission and will have power to recommend rules and regulations to the Governor in Council. In this way we nope to get what has been wanting for the last twenty years, viz., some sort of an improved cull, and I am sure that when this commission gets to work, considerable benefits will ensue. It is a matter of great importance to the country, and I am sure the country will accept the bill with interest and appreciation. It is unfortunate that during all those years the country has been without a standardization system and the merchants have bought and sold fish and exported it without let or hindrance. With this standardization, old conditions will disappear. It will be, I hope, the means of encouraging every man to make a number one article and no fish exported from this country in future will be a reflection on our cure and good reputation. When this commission gets to work every package will have to bear a standard brand and every cargo shall be inspected and a certificate issued and no fish will be allowed to be exported from Newfoundland unless it has been inspected and entitled to a certificate. Under these rules we shall not be able to see again what I saw when I was visiting in Spain and Portugal. In Spain there were fifty thousand quintals of fish which should have been in Italy or Portugal. In Portugal there were fifteen thousand quintals of fish which should have been in Spain. Much of the fish in Spain should have been sent to Oporto, because it was saleable and suitable for Portugal, but not required in Spain. Now if we can get the suitable fish required by the Spanish market, I have no doubt whatever about an increase in the consumption of fish there and I believe it can be increased on hundred thousand quintals per year. The exports to Spain for a year amounts to about three hundred and fifty thousand, and if we can procure the kind and quality of fish Spain requires, there is no reason why we could not sell four hundred and fifty thousand instead of three hundred and fifty thousand. The Spanish fish buyer wants to get the No. 1 quality and there will be an increased demand for the peculiar fish he requires.

Every Newfoundlander refuses to take the No. 2 quality of flour, although it might be $2 cheaper, but will wait for weeks to secure the No. 1 quality rather than take the inferior kind although much cheaper. The same reasoning applies to the Spanish fish buyers. They are prepared to pay a good price. I know of fifty thousand quintals of fish being in Spain and only fetching eighty shillings per quintal, whereas if the proper article were on the market, one hundred shillings would be paid. Even to-day 105/— can be had for No. 1 fish in Spain. Because it was an inferior quality according to the Spanish idea of fish, it sells at twenty-five shillngs less. In Portugal I saw a cargo dscharged and culled and the fish was assorted into three grades and placed in the stores and buyers would come along immediately and purchase the number one prime, which they are prepared to pay good prices for. But of the twenty-five thousand quintals in that store not one hundred quintals was suitable for the No. 1 requirements.

Spain wants the yellow quality, as the while kind is unsaleable, but in Oporto the white is a good seller. We will have to assort the fish for the various markets. It will be no easy job. It will mean a lot of hard work to standardize the fish. The co-operation of all is needed. I hope there will not be any division amongst the people in this matter and all will unite in this national issue. I hope there will be no politics in connection with the standardization of codfish. I am not going to have any party politics in the standardization of codfish on my part. The commission will have full control and select the men along meritorious lines and debar political heelers.

When this bill reaches the committee stage it will be fully thrashed out and I feel sure it will receive the serious consideration of the other side of the House whose ranks contain men of experience in the fishery of this country, in the persons of Sir Michael Cashin and Sir John C. Crosbie, whose life-long experience may be able to recommend some suggestions that will improve the bill. I hope all party politics will be left aside. I hope the standardization of fish will be developed along lines that will encourage the fishermen to turn out the best article, thus ensuring right values and a sure demand abroad.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—We are required to give you a blank cheque to go out and do as you like with. When the bill goes into committee I will have more to say on this point. I am in accord with the bill as a whole. It is a long felt want.

Now, with respect to the manner of catching, splitting, and preparing fish for exportation, just what do you mean by the manner of catching and the manner of splitting? All young men who split fish have to learn and you are going to have some bad ones. There will be many obstacles in your way in carrying out this measure. But I am glad to hear from the hon. minister that there is going to be no politics in this.

There will be lots of hangers on, looking for jobs, and many of them would not be fitted for the work. The first requirement is competent men. I don't think the hon. gentleman will have any opposition from this side of the House on this measure. It is a long felt want; but I think he should give up the names of the commission, and what rules will be laid down. We do not think that we ought to give him a blank cheque and allow him to fill in as he sees fit. I can assure the hon. minister the full support of this side of the House on this measure.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the hon. member of Marine and Fisheries, the bill entitled "An Act to provide for the better obtaining of information respecting the Codfishery" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—The conditions of this bill place a certain responsibility on the owners of schooners coming from Labrador, the Banks, St. Barbe and Straits of Belle Isle. It requires them to get in communication with the Marine and Fisheries Department from the nearest telegraph office, and wire the information as to the kind of fish he has and the quantity. This he is supposed to do within 48 hours. It is to be given to the trade, as we will allow the trade to know the individual catches of fish brought from Belle Isle the Banks and other places. It also requires the fish exporters to report what quantity of fish of different grades he has in store every two weeks.

This year we tried to get this information, and while some merchants have been glad to give the information, others have refused. This will give us an idea of the supply of fish for the different markets. It is to be confidential information, the trade wil lonly know the total qualities of each grade, but no one will know what stocks each firm carries. This is very necessary if we are going to conduct the business on a sound financial basis. It does not entail any hardship on any person. It will cost the fishermen nothing; the messages will be sent collect to my office. We will then know the quantity of the various qualities of our total catch, and there will be less speculating.

Next year we may be able to provide accurate information respecting the shore fishery, as it is probable that by that time we will have the country set out into sections under the supervision of inspectors who will carry out the rules respecting local cull.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I wish to say that I also agree with this bill. It is most unbusiness-like that we cannot go into the department and get the information regarding the total catch of fish. It can be done in other countries.

There is no reason why a vessel coming from the Labrador, or any other place, could not report to the nearest customs officer. But that is only a matter of detail. It is very unbusiness-like to go along through the summer months not to be able to find out the amount of the total catch. I don't believe it is possible to find out now the total amount of fish caught during the last fiscal year.

The amount of fine, I think, is too heavy. The offence of giving a wrong report is not a criminal matter. You will have no trouble with the fish coming from the Labrador, Grand Bank, and these places. But St. John's and the places around St. John's are going to give considerable trouble.

MR. SCAMMELL — Mr. Speaker, just a word or two in reference to this bill. I may say that I am heartily in accord with it, but I should like to ask the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries one or two questions that have suggested themselves to me while reading this bill. The necessary provision is made for information respecting the Labrador and Straits fishery, but what I want to ask the minister is, how he proposes to get the information with regard to the shore fishery. The sub-collectors in many places are very careless in performing their duties in regard to this matter. I have in mind now the case of my own home of Change Islands.

During the summer I frequently take up the papers and read fishery reports telegraphed in from some of the larger centres around the Island, but Change Islands never appears in the list, and as we catch our fair share of all the fish that is going, I think it only right that we should get our due amount of prominence and praise. I have no doubt that once sub-collectors find it is their duty under this act to telegraph the information they will discharge their duties in this respect.

There is one other matter I should like to refer to. It is perhaps a lesser detail than the one I referred to before, and it is this: I should like to know whether the masters of vessels arriving from the Labrador and the Straits are to telegraph their report at their own expense or at the expense of the depa rment.

MR. MacDONNELL.—Mr. Speaker the two points taken by the hon. member for St. Barbe are the very ones I was about to touch on, and I believe that a few suggestions on this bill would not be amiss. I know, sir, there are many men in this House, many members of the Upper House and many men amongst the public who do not believe that the law of supply and demand has ceased to be responsible for the regulation of the prices of commodities. These are men of intelligence and of superior knowledge and consequently they are men by whom the matter of publishing our codfish catch will not be favorably received. It would that we would be giving the very information to outsiders that they want. Italy will know just how much we have to sell them and they will regulate their prices acordingly. Grece, Spain, Portugal, Brazil and all the other countries will know what we have to give them and they will do the same thing. The principle is vicious and if carried out is bound to be harmful.

The Hon. Minister himself, than whom it is impossible to find a better man where the fishermen's interests are concerned, knows very well that we should not give the outside the benefit of knowing our catch. It is a principle that on mature consideration I believe no right thinking man either in this House or outside of it would subscribe to.

In this matter you must remember that we are up against the theory that Spain, Portugal and other fish buying countries will bid for our product according to what they know we have to offer them, and while it is desirable and even necessary that the Minister should know the catch from week to week, this information should not be published for the benefit of others.

I am sorry, sir, that a man who has displayed the intention of, and the capability to protect the interests of the fishermen should find himself in the position in which the hon. minister is now placed; and that some other member of the F. P. U. is not its president, so that the minister would be left free to deal with such matters as this as one independent of any influences, for he is a benefit to the country even if he was never backed by any particular section or party, because of his intelligence and ability.

I wish sir, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries could come in here as an independent party, as connected with no concern or corporation and there would be no man even on the other side of the House give him stronger support than I would. As it is now, he comes in here on the one hand wishing to advance the interests of the fishermen and on the other hand bound by this act to publish information which would be most harmful to these same interests. I am sorry, sir, that again within 24 hours we find the Hon. Minister here in a dual capacity, for it is a position in which no man can justify himself.

With regard to the other parts of this bill I am in perfect accord, but I cannot for a moment agree with the idea of scattering broadcast this information of every quintal of fish we have to dispose of. No man or combination of men can make me believe that prices are not governed by the law of supply and demand the more perishable the commodity in question the stronger does this apply.

Now sir, if we accept this theory of supply and demand then I suggest and emphatically place myself on record as the one who sugges it, that we cannot give information to the enemy. Let the buyer be governed by his needs and the needs of his customers, and by what he feels that he needs, and let that be the only criterion.

Don't you see, Mr. Speaker, if we had 100,000 qtls. last year and we told them that we had 150,000 qtls. this year, we would only get three fourths of the price. We dare not do it, and I, sir, and you, sir, and everyone else in this House owe it to the people of this country to tell the truth, but if necessary, separately, individually or collectively, we owe it to them to put up a bluff and let the world outside think that we have more fish than we have got. I ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I believe that it is not his intention to publish this information for the beneft of the people of Greece or Spain or Italy, so that they may know the total of our catch for a day or a week or a month or a year.

I am a firm believer in the principle that the more perishable an article the more necessary it is as an article of food. On general principles, sir, I object to this bill and I know there is no man in this House more willing to listen to the objections laid before the house by your humble servant than the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

He proved that when the House was in committee last night on the shipbuilding bill, which he knew was subsequently to become an act. He knew the fine points and the real points as well as the weak points of that bill. I think I shall never forget it for a man holding such a position. He said in effect that such and such a thing is right and that such and such is not, and that certain men will get the benefit of it, but because I introduce it I cannot take chances because of people who will use it in future against me.

That was the tenor of his utterances, irrespective of party or irrespective of obligations. I think, Sir, that that is the biggest thing ever done in this House. I am sorry personally, and I am sorry from a party standpoint that it happened. I think it is unfair and most unjust to have any man placed in the dual capacity that the hon. minister was and to have him adopt a course of action that he never anticipated.

While recognizing the bona fide of the hon. minister, I think his attitude in this matter is most unfair. I know the hon. mnisted is big enough to take the consequences of other men's faults and advice, but I submit for the consideration of this House and for those hon. gentlemen who have greater reason than I to remember, that this is the second time within twenty-four hours that the hon. minister has come into this House and taken on his own shoulders this time to prevent, and absolutely prevent buyers from being penalized and from ultimately penalizing himself. He has taken upon his shoulders again that which he did not anticipate. I think it is unfair for a man to whom the whole country, north, south, east and west looks, and with such a brilliant future ahead of him, to take such a course. The whole object is that the hon. minister is big-hearted enough, broad-minded enough and self-sacrificing enough to take upon himself the responsibilities and consequences of a bill which maw materially affect the price of fish for the next ten years.

It is because of that that I draw the attention of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to my suggestion as to whether or not it would be to our advantage to let the foreign markets and foreign buyers know from day to day the number of quintals of fish that we catch in this country. To my mind it is courtesy miscarried to give them what knowledge, which is beyond ourselves, of what the fishermen have to produce; a knowledge that might influence them in getting at a lower price the fish that we place in the continent of Europe and the market in Brazil. Apologizing for the time that I have taken up, I justify myself by the sincere wishes that I have taken up, I justify myself by the sincere wishes that I have in bringing this matter before the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries and father of this bill, and consider the consequences of making the men that want to buy our fish conversant with our catch daily. I am sure that the minister is a big man with regard to organization, and I have sufficient belief in his bigness that he will exercise his ability and intelligence in the direction that I have referred to. I am of the opinion that fishermen in this country should have to furnish information to any individual or company, no matter how estimable or how desirable, in contradistinction to his own interests; and the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is connected with exporting companies, should not have information furnished him to supply to foreign buyers as soon as he gets it. We dare not put on our statute books an act that gives the benefits to a man that comes into this House in a dual capacity. I submit, Sir, that there is no man in this House or in this country who is a more sincere believer in the theory that I am.

In four short years we shall have to return to our constituents and justify our conduct in this House where as those gentlemen in the Upper Assembly have no constituents to return to and explain what they done, and if they made a law they made it for them selves. I wish to state that or at least I submit that a speech in the Upper House has no more consequence and is not so important as a speech in the Lower House simply because those in the Upper House represent nobody and are therefore liable to no one for what they say or do. We have taken upon ourselves certain duties, heavy burdens have been placed upon our shoulders, we have undertaken each of us burdens of this world all of which the estimable gentlemen of the Upper House do not carry and therefore the statements we make in this Lower Assembly are of much more consequence. I regret having taken the time of this House, but I assure you, Sir, although my statement might not be accepted that it is not my intention to hold up the legislation of this House. But I want to state at the earliest opportunity with reference to this bill (Standardization of Codfish) that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should not give the benefit of his knowledge of the amount of fish caught in this country and other various matters to Italy, Spain, Brazil, Portugal and the other markets. We should not encourage this Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a man who personally exports codfish, to give to the outside markets information so that they can regulate the demand according to the supply. We have, Sir, a man in dual capacity, a man who isprepared to go to any lengths to benefit the fishermen of this country and this gentleman is in a position to get the advantage of the conditions existing in the foreign markets.

It is true the Department of Marine and Fisheries is an important one but when the honourable minister fulfills his task he ought to resign as he is in a dual capacity; he is not only W. F. Coaker, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he is also president Coaker of the F.P.U., president Coaker of the Union Shipbuilding Company, President Coaker of the Union Export Company and this is recognized. He is the best man in the position but when he does his work he ought to vacate his position as a minister of the Crown, and go back to the sphere which he occupies better than any other man in the country and give his attention to that industry which demands that this bill come before the House. He represents the fishermen of the country and he will have all the information as to the supply and demand of fish in the foreign market because of his position of Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Of course for years to come we shall not forget his enterprise in bringing this bill before the House and thereby promoting the interest of the fishermen of the country. Last night when the honourable minister introduced a bill for the encouragement of shipbuilding he said he would not take the $900.00 under the act, although he could get it because he knew that the bill was mortally wrong. And I am sure in the same manner he will not take advantage of his present position as Minister of Marine and Fisheries. And I am sure when the honourable minister comes to reply to the criticisms on the bill he will admit that he is in a position to take advantage of his information regarding the number of fish caught and the price of fish and I firmly believe he would be the last man to give away outsiders such information and thereby giving them an opportunity of being able to regulate the supply and demand. I agree with him that re-organization is necessary so as to improve our influence on the foreign market.

No man holding a departmental office should be given information that is going to be beneficial to his private business. Each one of us last fall deprecated the fact that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was in a dual position. I take back nothing that I said last fall. We should not penalize a man who is honestly trying to be of benefit to his country. But that, Mr. Speaker, is the position of the hon. minister. He is being criticized by a lot of people because of his dual position, while he, himself, is working for the best interests of the country. And the minister should give the benefit of that dual position to the people who have made him what he is. I am not a universalist with regard to legislation. We are not taking the weight of the world upon our shoulders. We are here to make laws for our own country, and they dare not criticize the man who is occupying the dual position. I am sorry Sir, that last night he had to sit at that table, and against his own good judgment he had to accept an act which was intended to benefit a few people. We dare not ask him to sit at that table again to-night. It would be a pity, Mr. Speaker, to kill such a man merely because the legislation has not been given sufficient thought. We have rather to save him from himself. I have no respect for members of this House. I have no respect for political parties. I like a man who tries to do something for the benefit of the public. If the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries considered himself and the Fishermen's Protective Union he would not put such legislation upon the statute books. I believe the hon. minister is fair. I do not believe that the president of a large corporation should have this information. He has the information of every merchant and fish exporter in the country, although he is in competition with them, while the information of his own corporation is known only to himself. I believe that the publication of this information would give to the enemy of this country information that would enable him to give his own price for ourf ish. Now, Sir, I don't think we can afford to let the big man on the other side know the total catch of our fish. I have great confidence in the present Minister of Shipping. He is not interested in the export of fish, and he is the man to whom this information should be given. He is a big man and a square enough man to handle this information. He is the man who should direct the ships. The information should not go to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the hon. minister would do well to follow the suggestin that I have made to him. Mr. Speaker, I will no longer take up the time of this House. It is not opportune for the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to place himself upon the altar of ideals. He is too big a man, too valuable a man. I would ask, Sir, that he insist that the information be forwarded not to him, but to the Minister of Shipping. He is a man whom I am ready to vouch for as a square man, honest and ready to give a square deal to every man in the country.

If this information is given it should be given to the Minister of Shipping and not to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and it would take Mr. Coaker out of an awkward position if he introduced an amendment to this effect. The Minister of Shipping is the person to whom the information should rightly be given, because it is he who controls the exportation of our produce and I submit that it is but fair to him and fair to the hon. introducer of this bill who thereby will be saved the criticisms of four years. I say that it is his duty to those who made him what he is that this information should be given to a man who has no dual role, and I hope that those suggestions made in good faith and in an honest desire to make this bill more exponenta of these principles that are in the interests of the people will be received in the spirit in which they are offered.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I personally am in full accord with this bill and I think that it is going to be a great advantage to the trade of the country, more paricularly if it is carried out as strictly as it should be, because in that case we will get valuable and reliable information in connection with which we were always more or less in doubt.

By means of this measure we can so regulate our marketing so that when our catch is small we shall at least be able to get good prices. The bill is in accord with my own ideas and my only suggestion is that the law be forcefully carried out and not merely placed on the statute book to be afterwards thrown aside and forgotten.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Second reading of bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Fund and for Other Purposes."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill, I would remind hon. gentlemen that a few days ago a petition was presented asking that the bill be introduced. When I pesented that petition I referred to the splendid work that was performed by the Women's Patriotic Association on behalf of our soldiers and sailors during the war. So successful were their efforts and as a result of their hard work in this connection that the association now finds itself with a balance of about $27,000 on hand which they propose spending for the benefit of the dependents and children of soldiers and sailors who gave their lives in the war.

The most important sections of this bill are 5 and 7, the former of which gives power to the appointed trustees to erect and equip at a cost of $7000 a recreation hut for the use of the sailors and soldiers receiving treatment in the Tuberculosis Hospital, while Section 7 gives them the power to attend to the matter of providing for the education of and otherwise assisting the children of veterans or of men who have lost their lives during the war.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the second reading of this bill because I feel with the hon. the introducer that the efforts of these ladies are worthy of the highest appreciation and support that we can give hem. They have done and are still doing good work and thereby they have earned for themselves the respect and admiration of the whole community. I am glad that they have such a large surplus on hand and I know that with the funds thus at their disposal they will continued their good work in the future.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER.—When the Hon. the Attorney General presented a petition from the executive of the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland seeking incorporation, it was my privilege to refer to the magnificent work of the women of the association throughout the length and breadth of the colony the appreciation of the government for their self-sacrificing and philanthropic activities. A very great deal was doethrough the channel for the comfort of our boys who were overseas and the consolation of their friends at home. On that occasion I bespoke for the bill the second reading of which has now been moved by the Attorney General a unanimous passage in this chamber, and I appreciate very much the courtesy of the leader of the Opposition in accepting the suggestion which I then made and now seconding the motion for the second reading of the bill. The ladies of the association have substantial funds and propose to continue their activities in the interests of the returned soldiers and sailors. I am sure their work is highly appreciated and the country is glad that they have decided to become incorporated as a philanthropic body and carry on in peace philanthropic work similar to that which they so successfully undertook in times of war.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 172 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Survey of Foreign-going and Labrador vessels" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on tomorrow.

Second reading of bill "Of the Survey of Foreign-Going and Labrador Vessels."

HON. MIN. OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, something over a year ago I was at Twillingate when this very matter was discussed at a largely attended meeting of the fishermen and sea-faring classes. The feeling was running strong at that time as regards loss of life on account of what they believed to be overloaded and unfit and unseaworthy vessels. A man in his motor boat could touch the top of a jibboom of a "floating coffin" that was loaded with fish there ready to sail across the ocean. They realised that something should be done and when I came to St. John's last spring. I brought this matter before some members of the government at that time, but for some reason or other it was not taken up. During our campaign around the district last fall I met a man who was mate on a new vessel that was abandoned in mid-ocean on her maiden voyage. He told me that the first gale of wind that they had after leaving St. John's they could not hear themselves talk in the forecastle because of the noise of the timbers. I said this must have been a bady constructed vessel. I was surprised that the vessel could leave St. John's for the market. Eventually she reached accross and discharged her cargo and loaded a cargo of salt, which he said ought not to have been put in her. She met heavy weather and the crew had to battle for their lives for days and days. Eventually the men were taken off by a Norwegian steamer and just barely escaped with their lives, after being dragged through the water with a sixty foot manilla rope. Now, Sir, these things should never happen. She should not have been allowed to sail from St. John's for a foreign port. This kind of thing will be prevented from happening by the enforcement of this bill, which, therefore, I will support.

MR. FOX.—Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. minister of marine and fisheries why he would notapply this to all sea-going vessels instead of all foreign vessels. You will notice under the merchants shipping act a distinction drawn between sea-going vessels and foreign going vessels. The latter is a broader term. If we are going to allow these provisions to pass why not apply them to every type of vessel. As to the spirit of the act, I will have something to say when we go into committee.

HON. MIN. MARINE & FISHERIES —Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the hon. member that there is some difference. You cannot permit vessels not fit to go across at Atlantic to engage in the coasting trade of the country. In any case the coasting vessels will be under survey and we will make provision for all these things. We ought not to be so strict on coasting vessels. Some vessels that were on foreign going voyages during the past few years would do splendid coasing service. At the present time we have splendid coasting vesels on the west coast that are utterly unfit for sea voyages.,tho they are strong enough and good enough to suit local conditions.

I feel sure that when we go into committee that we will have a bill to meet the aproval of all.

HON. MIN. MARINE & FISHERIES —Mr. Speaker. In oving second reading of this bill. I do not intend to refer to it at any length. I merely wish to say that the idea of the bill is to provide that every vessel before loading here for a foreign port must undergo a thorough survey. This is to apply to outside vessels coming here as well as to our local built vessels. If a vessel is chartered outside to take a freight from here and does not come up to the requirements of our schedule B then she shall not be allowed to load. If a vessel purchased outside the Colony by a local firm does not met these requirements we shall allow them to use her for a year or so as to give them a chance to dispose of heragain. Of course if vessels coming in here have a certificate from Lloyds equal to our schedule B we shall recognize that certificate.

HON. MIN. MARINE & FISHERIES —There are many vessels supposed to be good that when used for carrying fish damage the cargo owing to leaky decks. We had a vessel chartered for Oporto last year, just off the slips, and on arrival there it was found that $8,000 worth of fish was damaked owing to water having leaked through the decks. If the ships are not up to schedule B of our shipbuilding act, we will allow them to be used for a certain time, after which they will not be allowed to be used in the trade of the country. Section 7 of this bill provides ample protection for this. It reads as follows: 'Any vessel owned in Newfoundland or elsewhere, which shall not be qualified as set forth in Section 3 of this act, shall on the first occasion on which she shall be in a port in this colony after the passing of this act, be submitted for survey; and unless she shall be found to be constructed and fastened in a manner as least as good as that required by Section 3 of this act she shall not receive a certificate of seaworthiness; provided, however, that of it shall be reported by the surveyer that such a vessel is in his opinion fit to continue in the North Atlantic trade for a short period, the minister of marine and fisheries may issue a special order to Lloyds surveyor or local surveyor, empowering him or his deputy to grant such vessel certificates, of the vessel be otherwise in accordance with the provisions of this act, for a period of not more than twelve months from the date of such survey."

Many ships have been allowed to leave our shores for trans-Atlantic voyages in an unseaworthy condition. Two vessels to my knowledge left Twillingate during 1917 that were overloaded and they were lost with twelve valuable lives.

Another thing which is provided for in this act is the deck line. All our vessels must in future carry this mark. It may not be possible to establish this the same as under the Imperial Board of Trade act.

It will be difficult to fix the mark on our newfoundland vessels, as most of our ships are sheared differently from the English built vessels, and the English act strictly applied might prevent ships from taking 500 quintals that they are well able to carry, and power will be given to the governor-in-council to depart from the imperial act when dealing with our peculiarly sheared vessels. Half of the vessels crossing the Atlantic jettison part of their cargo and the insurance limit has reached 6½ per cent. on cargoes. An additional 1 per cent. had to be put on by Lloyds this season.

There are other objections as well that are necessary to be removed if we are to lessen the high rate of insurance. The men in command are not as good at seamanship as they ought to be, and there are many good men who have not certificates of service and who should be given a chance to secure them. I think the Board of Trade are endeavouring to secure certificates for some of the best men and a bill may be introduced dealing with this feature of the trouble before the house closes.

Something must be done to protect the honest shippers saginst having to pay such high rates of insurance caused entirely by losses of vessels that are unfit for the Atlantic service, because of unseaworthy vessels being permitted to engage in the business. Freight by steamer is far cheaper than freight by schooner, and if we don't cut down the vessel rate of insurance, steamers will replace the sailing vessels. About $1,300,000 was paid the past season fish insurance by sailing vessels. If we cut down the rate 2 per cent. we would save $435,000 to the fish shippers of this country who shipped in vessels. Therefore a rigid inspection of vessels to cut down insurance rate is absolutely necessary for all concerned in the fiheries of the Colony.

I feel sure the whole House will unanimously accept this bill, as it is a matter we can all agree on. The Hon. Sir John Crosbie has had a great deal of experience in matters of this kind and anything he may suggest for the improvement of the bill, I will be quite willing to consider. The shipowners want legislation such as this and I am sure the insurance companies will welcome it quite as eagerly. It will mean a saving of about 35c. per quintal if we reduce the rate 2 per cent.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Do I understand that American or French or Canadian ships carrying Lloyd's certificate will be exempted.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Yes, any ship carrying a certificate of seaworthiness will be exempted.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—That's the point I wanted to know. I appreciate your position, but the surveyor may go and examine her and may send her across but she might damage your fish all the same. But the bill appeals to me more or less; there may be one or two exceptions. I do not believe we would be able to continue sending vessels across as we have been doing, but during the war we couldn't get good vessels and we had to take what we got.

I am more or less convinced that the day of sailing vessels is passing by. I know that I am safe in saying without being egotistical that I'll take off my hat to no man in regard to marine insurance.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 11 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series), entitled 'Of the Department of Marine and Fisheries'," was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Second reading of bill "Of the Department of Marine & Fisheries."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is that we will have two boards now instead of one. We are thinking about getting a large board of about fifteen men, among them will include men who have had experience in connection with the herring fishery.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I now table correspondence asked for yesterday by Mr. Bennett in connection with Mr. MacKenzie of London. As certain members of the Opposition and Opposition press were inclined recently to attack me personally because of a stenographic inaccuracy in the copy of a letter tabled by my department some days ago, I would observe in this case that I did not personally type these copies, nor did I personally compare them with the originals.

The papers have been sent to me here for tabling by one of the senior clerks of my department, and I consequently take it for granted now, as I did in the previous case, that the copies are typographically correct. If my hon. friend desires to see the original documents and compare them with this typewritten copy he may no so upon calling upon the Deputy Colonial Secretary, Mr. Arthur Mews, C.M.G.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 7th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from a number of trapmasters of Caplin Bay asking that trap berths be drawn for in the future. I may say that this is the fairest way to decide the ownership of trap berths. It has been known in the past that several fishermen, after a season was over, put out an old trap or a part of a trap so as they held it all winter; consequently there was considerable lot of damage done to moorings. This petition is unanimously signed by the fishermen of Caplin Bay. I hope that the Marine and Fisheries Department will deal with this matter this season and put this trap berth question under the new rules and regulations.

MR. FOX:—With the courtesy of the Houes. I hand in a petition from the residents of Bell Island, the prayer of which is a special grant of three hundred dollars to be expended on a road going from ——— Pond to Freshwater in the west end of Bell Island, a distance of two and a half miles. It is signed by a large number of residents and I feel sure that it will receive the consideration it merits from the department to which I ask that it be referred.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition presented by my colleagues. There is no council over there now and I believe a deputation of the residents are going to call on the Prime Minister to see what can be done by the government to remedy the existing conditions on the Island.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I beg to present a petition from the residents of Seal Cove, Fortune Bay. They ask for a sum of money to repair the breakwater and also ask for the dredge to be sent there. Although presenting it to the House of Assembly I may say that the matter is already having the attention of the government.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—In reply to Mr. Sullivan's question I may say that the information is being prepared.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—In reply to Mr. Sullivan's question I may say that the matter is being considered.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I wish to remind the Minister of Finance that he has not answered the question of mine in reference to the Commercial Cable Co.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—In reference to that portion of the remarks of the hon. the Leader of the Opposition referring to the Port aux Basque cable, I would say that the whole matter of the relationships of the Commercial Cable Co., Anglo-American Telegraph Co., and Marconi Company with the government have for some time past been under the consideration of council.

THE HON. MIN. OF FINANCE:—I have asked the heads of the department for the information requested but as far as they are concerned they do not know anything about the matter. I may ask the Leader of the Opposition that if he has any information in his possession he may let us know about it and we will take steps to get the information re Commercial Cable Company.

Classes to train courting couples are suggested by the Vicar of Mansfield, England.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—The Deputy Minister of Finance ought to know about the payments made by the Commercial Cable Company for the last few years. The Company lost the case taken by the government against them and then they appealed on the other side.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I may say that as far as the appeal before the Privy Council by the Commercial Cable Company is concerned which involved the sum of about one hundred and twelve thousand dollars that has been won. But I don't know of anything that has taken place before I assumed office and I do not know whether this is an action the government took against the company for taxes or not. Anyway the sum of one hundred and twelve thousand dollars is due still.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I will take this opportunity of congratulating the government on winning this case but I think really the congratulations is due the late government. Mr. Morine was the solicitor at the time, when the company appealed. The Anglo-American Co. withheld payments of taxes for four years but as soon as they heard the Commercial Company lost their case they immediately paid the arrears of taxes. They amounted to 94 thousand dollars. Before closing this matter I would like to know whether the government decided upon anything with the Commercial Cable Company about the connection between Port aux Basques and Sydney.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Did you get that amount from the Minister of Finance?

HON. MIN. OF FINANCE:—I have asked for the information from the heads of the department but as far as they are concerned they have no information.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—The Deputy Minister collected the taxes at the rate of four thousand dollars per cable and it is only a small matter. He ought to have a record of it.

HON. MIN. OF FINANCE:—I will look for it in the morning.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Before passing that section I would like to know the intention of the section, Section 3. I would like if the minister in charge would outline in a general manner the programme for the future.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Finance & Customs to lay on the tbale of this House a statement showing the amount of duty paid by the Anglo Newfoundland Development Co., Ltd., since 1905 to January 31, 1919, and in particular the amounts of duty paid in 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916, 1917, 1918 and 1919.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary if the Government have made any representation to the Red Cross Steamship Company, against the increasing of the freight rates on that line of 20 per cent to and from New York.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled, "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Codsh."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Second reading of Bill "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Fish."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks regarding this Bill. It is generally conceded that the cure of Newfoundland Fish is not as good as it might be, and for many years the Fishermen's Union has been discussing the advisability of seeking legislative enactment with regard to the improvement of the cure of our fish. In 1909 at the first Convention of the F.P.U. a Memorial was prepared respecting the standardization of fish. That Memorial was presented to Sir Edward Morris at that time Prime Minister, and a deputation of the Union waited on him. The request of the Union was that this matter be taken up with a view to having legislation enacted for establishing a standard cull of fish. The Government at that time sympathized with the request of the deputation and promised that something would be done; but there the matter ended. For many years afterwards the Union continued its agitation for an improved cull. At our last Convention quite a lot of time was taken up in discussing this matter again, and, so far as my knowledge goes, I feel convinced that the fishermen of the country are prepared now to have legislation enacted that would provide for an improved cure of fish. The one great drawback to the cure of fish has been the selling of fish Talqual, which means that the man who has good fish to sell gets no more for it than the man who has No. 2 inferior fish to sell. The result has been that very little care has been taken by the man who would make good fish because he felt that he was not rewarded for the extra care and labour that was involved in turning out a No. 1 article.

The further result has been that year after year the cure has grown worse and worse and fishermen have taken less interest and become more indifferent as to whether they made fish good or not. Talqual fish is good and bad mixed together, and at its introduction began the indifference to cure. We want, therefore, an improved cure; we want to encourage our men to make better fish and we consider that the proper way to do it would be through rules and regulations, in which No. 1 fish sold much higher in value than No. 2. One of those regulations will, no doubt, be the fixing of the prices between the different qualities. In years past when fish was culled as Merchantable and Madeira there was usually about fifty cents of a difference between the qualities. No. 1 or Merchantable was say $5.00 while Madeira was $4.50. The price of fish now is about $10.00 for No. 1. We consider that when we made regulations we ought to make the difference so large to do the best possible to turn out a No. 1 article. As far as my knowledge goes, Ithink that a price of $2.00 should be fixed as the difference between No. 1 fish and No. 2. Consequently the man who finds that his friend got $2.00 per quintal more than he did for his fish this year, will make every effort next year to receive the No. 1 price. Under this Bill, a Commission will be appointed to establish regulations to show the fishermen what they consider should be done to turn out the special cures for the different foreign markets. These regulations will be published and distributed all over the country and in that way we hope to arouse an interest and enthusiasm among the fishermen and get them to put forth the best that is in them to turn out the different qualities of fish for the different markets. At present there is considerable depression existing with regard to the value of codfish for the coming year. In my opinion, if we can establish an improved cure, No. 1 Shore should fetch $12 per quintal in the local market the coming year. That will be $12 for No. 1 and $10 for No. 2. These figures will be better than the prices paid last year, when the price started in St. John's at $10.50 Talqual. So if we get $12 and $10 for Nos. 1 and 2, each half and half respectively, or an average of $11, that will mean 50c. over last year's price.

With regard to Labrador fish. The greatest care we will have this year is in keeping Labrador fish within a scope that will not discourage the shoremen, but I feel that if No. 1 Shore Fish sells at $12 that Labrador No. 1 will sell at $10 improved cure, while No. 2 will be say $8 and $9. There is a wonderful feeling among the shore fishermen now over the prices paid for Shore and Labrador, because it is so easy to make Labrador fish, and so difficult to make Shore. Labrador is handled in a much easier way and it takes but a few days to make it, while it takes weeks to make shore. We always find among the shore fishermen an objection that they are not getting sufficient relative value as compared to Labrador. That is a matter that there is no apparent control over. Some markets only want Labrador fish and will not have shore fish. The supply of Labrador fish the last year or two has been somewhat limited. We have not any surplus supplies of Labrador fish in the markets the past season. Last year we marketed all our fish to Greece satisfactorily; and this year I am looking forward to an increased demand for Labrador, especially if cured as the markets require it. I am looking for a demand from Egypt. The demand from Greece will still be as good as last year, and we hope that during the Fall, we will be able to make arrangements to sell to Egypt. There has been some correspondence with regard to sending a man to Egypt and we are told that there is a possibility of Egypt taking from twenty-five to thirty thousand quintals, which of course would be soft Labrador. Altogether I look forward to a brisk demand for Labrador this fall, as the demand will be considerable and the supply limited. And if men get $10 for No. 1 Labrador, those who secure fair voyages will reap considerable reward. Therefore, as this Bill provides, there shall be a Commission appointed to deal with the matter. That Commission should consist of not less than five or more than eleven persons, of which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries shall be Chairman.

This Commission shall have power to control the handling of fish from the time it is caught until it is disposed of to foreign buyers. Rules and regulations will be passed dealing with the manner of catching, splitting, cleaning, salting and drying, curing and pickling and preparation of fish for sale and export; and also with the culling, selecting, assorting, standardizing, branding, etc., etc., with a view to the establishment of the grades in the local and foreign markets and also for ensuring as far as possible a suitable article of a proper grade for the several markets. This Commission will be a very important Commission and will have power to recommend rules and regulations to the Governor-in-Council and in this way we hope to get what has been wanting for the last twenty years, viz.: some sort of an improved cull, and I am sure that when this Commission gets to work, considerable benefit will ensue. It is a matter of great importance to the country, and I am sure the country will accept the Bill with interest and appreciation. It is unfortunate that during all those years the country has been without a standardization system and the merchants have bought and sold fish and exported it without let or hindrance. With this means of encouraging every man to make a number one article no fish exported from this country in future will be a reflection on our cure and good reputation. When this Commission gets to work every package will have to bear a standard brand and every cargo shall be inspected and a certificate issued and no fish will be allowed to be exported from Newfoundland unless it has been inspected and entitled to a certificate. Under these rules we shall not be able to see again what I saw when I was visiting Spain and Portugal. In Spain there were fifty thousand quintals of fish which should have been in Italy or Portugal. In Portugal there were fifteen thousand quintals of fish which should have been in Spain. Much of the fish in Spain should have been sent to Oporto, because it was saleable and suitable for Portugal, but not required in Spain. Now if we can get the suitable fish required by the Spanish market, I have no doubt whatever about an increase in the consumption of fish there and I believe it can be increased one hundred thousand quintals per year. The exports to Spain for a year amount to about 350,000 quintals and if we can procure fifty thousand and if we can procure the kind and quality of fish Spain requires, there is no reason why we could not sell four hundred and fifty thousand instead of three hundred and fifty thousand. The Spanish fish buyer wants to get the No. 1 quality and there will be an increased demand for the peculiar fish he requires.

Every Newfoundlander refuses to take No. 2 quality of flour, altho' it might be $2 cheaper, but will wait to secure the No. 1 quality rather than take the inferior kind although much cheaper. The same reasoning applies to the Spanish fish buyers. They are prepared to pay a good price. I know of fifty thousand quintals of fish being in Spain and only fetching eighty shillings per quintal, whereas if the proper article were on the market, one hundred shillings would be paid. Even today 105/— can be had for No. 1 fish in Spain. Because it was an inferior quality according to the Spanish idea of fish, it sells at 25 shillings less. In Portugal I saw a cargo discharged and culled and the fish was assorted into three grades and placed in the stores and buyers would come along immediately and purchase the number one prime, which they are prepared to pay good prices for. But of the twenty-five thousand quintals in that store not one hundred quintals was suitable for the No. 1 requirements. Spain wants the yellow quality, as the white kind is unsaleable ,but in Oporto the white is a good seller. We will have to assort the fish for the various markets. It will be no easy job. It will mean a lot of hard work to standardize the fish. The co-operation of all concerned is needed. I hope there wil not be any division amongst the people in this matter and all will unite in this national issue. I hope there will be no politics in connection with the standardization of codfish. I am not going to have any party politics in the standardization of codfish on my part. The Commission will have full control and select the men along meritorious lines and debar political heelers. When this Bill reaches the Committee Stage it will be fully thrashed out and I feel sure it will receive the serious consideration of the other side of the House whose ranks contain men of experience in the fishery of this country in the persons of Sir Michael Cashin and Sir John C. Crosbie, whose life-long experience may be able to recommend some suggestions that will improve the Bill. I hope all party politics will be left aside. I hope the standardization of fish will be developed along lines that will encourage the fishermen to turn out the best article, thus ensuring right values and a sure demand abroad.

I might say it is the intention of that section to give the Commission power to deal with the cure of fish from the time it is caught until it is put on board the ship for export. This section gives them their power to do so. They may not use those powers. For instance it may not be necessary to make rules and regulations as to how fish is to be caught, but it is well to have such powers. The manner and mode of catching fish is dealt with by the Fishery Board. In Norway they have a certain system, and as soon as the fish is taken out of the water there is a certain vein cut in the throat, the fish is bled, and that is why it is white. Now that could not be done here. The conditions that prevail in Norway are quite different from here, but it is just as well to give the Commission authority in case that in the future they may want to make necessary rules and regulations. They have the authority here to make rules and regulations to be approved of by the Governor-in-Council before becoming law. The whole system depends upon the men who comprise the Commission. We must have good enterprising, reliable, experienced men. If we get a good Commission, three parts of the trouble will end. It may not be easy to get the fishermen to follow out the instructions, but we will make the trial. We do not mean to have men going around compelling them to do this and that, but it is the intention to scatter literature broadcast and advise them what to do. It is absolutely necessary that when fish is split to drop it into a tub of water and wash all the blood and gurry off before salting. This is very important in curing fish; consequently it may be necessary to deal with that aspect of curing, if reasonable persuasion and advice are not effective. Therefore we give the Commission power to deal with cleaning and wasting.

Then there is the salting of fish; everybody knows what that means. There are certain kinds of salt that should not come into this country. It is not fit for use, and good fish cannot be obtained as long as it is used. Also, the cure of fish must determine the kind of salt used. Cadiz salt everybody knows is good salt for shore fish. Santa Pola the most suitable salt for Labrador and it may be necessary in the future to prevent the use only of such salt for salting Labrador fish. There might be regulations made as time goes by with respect to this. In the same way the drying of fish must be taken up. The day is coming when we will probably have to establish driers in every important fishing settlement.

Everybody knows of the conditions that exist at the present time in the drying of fish. The late curing of fish means very often that the fish has to be held over all the winter, and exported in the following spring or summer, and at a loss in price. That is the condition which existed the past year. Sometime we will have to get artificial driers. When we get properly started in the Fisheries Department and a competent man in charge as Superintendent, we will probably have this matter experimented on and arrive at a solution of this trouble. We will have to try experiments with different driers. I want to have one as cheap as possible. Then there is the matter of cure. As time goes by we shall probably have to make some rules and regulations with respect to the cure of fish. This year the merchant must understand that if he buys poor fish he is not going to export it as good. If we make a difference of say $2.00 in the price if No. 1 and No. 2 fish we will soon get all to turn out a No. 1 quality. But this cannot be done in a year or probably two years. I do not mean by this that we will regulate the price that will be paid the fishermen for his fish. That will be determined by the supply and demand that has been so much discussed. We have to learn by experience and step by step. Then There is the pickling of fish. Fish that goes to Spain must be pickled if it is to fetch the highest price. But there must be only a certain quantity pickled. If there are 350,000 qtls. pickled and only 300,000 needed in Spain, we will have 50,000 qtls. for which we have absolutely no market. Every cargo of fish should be inspected, and the inspector of it should issue a certificate when the cargo is completed, The various sections of this Bill may appear to mean the same thing, but this is not so. There are a lot of matters in connection with fish from the time it is caught till it is exported that have to be provided for, and that is what we are trying to do. Even if fish is loaded improperly it will injure its sale. In taking in fish in the next two or three years we will not be able to make such a great distinction with respect to grades, but we will have a big distinction in the prices as between No. 1 No. 2 and No. 3. There will not be more than three or four qualities. When the local inspectors are provided, the merchant will have no control over the culling of fish. I would like to see the day when the merchant will have nothing to say on their wharves about the culling of fish, when the inspector will not be interfered with either by the merchant or the fishermen.

With respect to the last clause, this is a very important clause. Fully three-fourths of the claims for bad fish are due to bad dunnageing, damp vessels and leaky decks. I saw vessels discharging with absolutely no dunnage, with nothing on the side of the vessel under the fish. We cannot permit this to continue.

Then there is the matter of the standard of size, conditions of assorting, selecting, etc. All this is put in the Bill because the Board will find out that they must have the powers to deal with such matter as time passes. Fixing the difference in prices is a very important point. That is what I mean by No. 1 and No. 2. I want No. 2 so penalised that every man will be induced to make No. 1. In many cases No. 2 is made because of conditions which the fisherman does not control; but on the other hand, I have seen fish left on the flakes three and four days and nights as a result of utter indifference as to results. We must remedy this condition. Very often the buyers on the other side want to know who the shippers are and from what port a vessel has sailed. If by the Union Trading Company, they say all right, if by Earle & Sons they feel that the quality is all right if from Marystown they go carefully, and ask all kinds of questions. They know that from certain places and from certain shippers they get good fish. The standardization of fish is going to be the salvation of the West Coast shippers, as the same grade of No. 1 will be the same at Grand Bank as at St. John's or North. We cannot expect Bank fish to be as good as Shore fish, but when it is graded it will fetch No. 1 price if No. 1, and if No. 2 it will pass as No. 2, and every buyer will know exactly what is in the cargo.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—This is not a blank cheque, the whole thing rests with the Commission and if you get the right men on that Commission, success will follow. Certainly, if we allow it to be made a political football, we might just as well tear up the Bill now for all the good it is going to do. We cannot allow it to become a political eye-sore, the trouble from which this country has suffered so much in the past.

As we go on with the Bill, some suggestions may be offered, but no matter from which side of the House they come, so long as they are calculated to make the Bill more perfect, I shall be delighted to take advantage of them. The day has come for this Bill, the day has come for us to turn over a new leaf, and I hope the House will approach this measure in the right spirit and solely with a view to doing the greatest good for the country in general.

Second reading of bill entitled "Of the Survey of Foreign-going and Labrador Vessels."

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES—Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bll, I do not intend to refer to t at any great length. I merely wsh to say that the idea of the bill is to provide ttha every vessel before leaving port must undergo a thorough survey. This to to apply to outside vessels coming in here as well as to our local built vessels.

If a vessel is chartered outside to take a freight from here and does not come up to the requirements of our Schedule B, then she wll not be allowed to load If a vessel purchased outside the colony by a local firm does not meet with these requirements we shall allow them to use her for a year so as to give them a chance to dispose of her again. Of course, of vessels coming in here have a certificate from Lloyd's we shall recognize that certificate. The bill also provides for a loading line and will fill a long felt want.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the Hon. Member, I might say that I do not know whether it would be wise to state the names of two practical fishermen, but I can certainly promise him that there will be. The Fish Exporters had a meeting a few days ago and asked me to include five exporters on the Commission and to be elected by the Board of Trade. I objected to such a proposal, because first, it was dictating to us, and next, that five would be half the membership of the Commission. Immediately the impression would be that we were allowing the Board of Trade to dominate us. With regard to the question of the Hon. Member for Placentia, I would inform him that there will be two practical fishermen on the Commission and probably three. In reference to the suggestion of the Hon. Mr. Higgins as to notice to be given, I am prepared to alter that clause, making it imperative that 30 days notice be given, before every occasion when the Rules and Regulations are brought into force.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—I feel with the hon. gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that the time has come for this bill to be introduced for the improvement of our codfishery, but there are one or two alterations I would suggest in regard to the bill now before the repair. In the first place the question of penalty should not be left to the commission by this house of assembly. It is giving a blank cheque to persons of whom we know nothin to go out and do what they please. It is neither fair to us nor to the country.

With regard to the matter of catching fish, I am of the opinion that very little can be done. You cannot compare our fishery with Norway's; they are two entirely different things. For us to attempt to bleed the fish as they are taken into the boat would be attempting the impossible. For instance, take a man going out to his trap in the morning and dipping in 40 or 50 quitals of fish, and you will see how ridiculous it is for us to try and copy Norway in this respect.

As to the matter of salting and pickling fish, I want to point out that here is a fish that has caused considerable trouble, and there is nobody who knows this better than the hon. minister himself. The pickling of fish is done almost exclusively by the bummerman, who catches only a small amount of fish. He has his puncheons, his hogheads, or his barrels as the case may be, but he puts his fish in these, nicely split of you like, but no matter how well it is handled it is not going to be as good as the salt bulk fish. As the scarcity of salt increases, pickled fish will increase, because it only requires half the salt. You wash it out, make it and it is beautiful to look at, but the trouble begins when you put it in bulk. Then it becomes dun and damp and goes through everything that might be with it.

Now if you are going to make rules and regulations and intend to carry them out, you must have a penalty and that is the only way you will deal with the matter of pickled fish. If it is likely to have a detrimental effect on other kinds of fish it must be stopped altogether even if you sell it in Spain. Take places like Torbay for instance, where half the catch comes from, the bummerman, too, when fish is not plentiful, pickles his fish in many cases. To prevent this you must have a penalty, and right here in this House of assembly is the place to decide upon the penalty.

As far as culling is concerned and the hopes held out that we won't see the same thing happen in the future as happened in the past, I don't agree with the hon. gentleman. I hope I am not taking the gloomy view of it, and I admit that while prices are as they are to-day everything will be all right, but when prices are bad you will find that conditions will go back to where they were in the olden days. When the demand is poor and the merchants are not anxious to buy, it will be found difficult to keep up to these regulations.

I have sold fish where I've had nine or ten qualities where there were really only two or three, but what could you do? The price was low and there was consequently little or no demand. The merchant would go down on the wharf to the culler and say "You are putting Madeira with merchantable or West Indies," and so on, and the man who was selling the fish had to take what he got. Another thing, it is certainly going to be impossible for the commission to grade the price of fish.

As far as northern and western fish is concerned there is no doubt about the fact that the northern fish is the best. Trinity Bay fish is, I believe, the best fish made anywhere in the Island. It is the best place in the country to make fish.

Now with regards to Bank fish which is exported from the west coast, it is next to impossible to make it up to the standard of shore fish. The fish is thrown up on the deck and very often it has to remain there all day, so that between the exposure of the sun and the rolling of the vessel the fish is soft by the time it is split and stowed down, making it extremely difficult, if not altogether impossible to have good fish. Again, when it comes to be landed for making it has to be taken from the vessel, put into a dory from the dory into a ramshorn, from the ramshorn to the water-horse, and from the water-horse to the flake, and then if you get any kind of bad weather how is it possible to have good fish?

Now, in Bonavista Bay, Trinity Bay and along the southern shore, they haven't these conditions to contend with and they should be expected to produce a better article. I would very much like to see a penalty provided at once if we are to make a serious attempt to stop the pickling of fish, and there is no doubt that it must be stopped. It will be a hardship at first, I know but still it is our duty to do all we can for the betterment of the quality of our fish. It is an article of food and the very best care should be exercised in handling it.

Now sir, what does the reference in the bill to weight mean. It dosen't refer to the rock in the box, I suppose?

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—At the present time in weighing in fish for Brazil we are not particular enough—and drums are often found to be two or three pounds out. We intend to give the inspector the power to attend to this matter and see that the weight is right when the drums are being packed.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—The answer to that is that whenever you weigh in fish you will weight out one, two, or even three per cent. less, and the same thing applies to drums. You'll never get them to turn out the same as they are weighed in.

Now sir, as far as the reference made by the hon. minister to driers in concerned, I do not at all agree with him. We will never see many driers in this country and personally I should prefer that we would not. We cannot make as good fish with artificial driers as we do now and many hon. members on the other side know this as well, if not better than I do. Fish fade in this way is not palatable as that dried by the sun and air and that is the reason why our fish is so much more popular in the foreign markets than the product of other countries. Sun and air has much the same effect on fish as the climate has in the maturing of port wine.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would again say that I would like to see this penalty put in the bill.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—With reference to the request of fixing penalties it would be extremely difficule to do so at this time. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is quite willing that a penalty should be provided, but you will see that it is impossible to provide a general penalty in as much as some offences will require heavier penalties. Similar penalties are provided for in breaches of the ordinary regulations. The marine and fisheries department in this case in given power to fix the penalty. It is very hard for us to fix a thing of this sort. If sufficient confidence be placed in the commission to handle this matter, I do not think we would be doing too mucn to grant them the power to provide the penalties. At the present time unless we were in possession of the rules and regulations made by the commission it would be impossible to provide penalties

SIR J. CROSBIE:—What about another bill providing for a fine of $500.00 respecting the codfishery.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Yes, that was provided because you knew what you were going to fine them for. It would be impossible to set up penalties for any particular set of rules and regulations that have not yet been drawn up.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Take the standardization of fish for instance. If a man breaks the rule in connection with the pickling I think that $10.00 would be sufficient as a fine, but if one of the merchants were to commit a grave breach a heavier penalty would certainly be necessary. We should lean more leniently on the fishermen who may be convinced for a small offence. How are you going to provide a general penalty to cover all under these conditions. The point is we want to make the fishermen who commits a breach of the regulations pay probably $10.00 while the merchant who in in a position to break the more necessary regulations pay $10000.00.

MR. HIGGINS:—One thing the commission ought to guard against is the probabilities of providing a heavy general penalty. A specific penalty should be made for each class of offence. I would make a specific fine for pickling but I would seperate that class of offence from getting after the bigger man who is expected to pay more. The point to be gotten over by the commission is the providing of seperate penalties for different offences. Supposing a mixifum general penalty of $-.000 was made law, then it is quite conceivable that some magistrate might fine a fisherman $200 or $250 for a small offence. If you would direct the cofmission to provide a penalty for each class of offence then the fagistrate would not be able to overreach himself in the administration of his office.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— That just the very point that stopped me when I started to draft penalties. Now I have here drifted a further addition to be put into this bill giving the comfission power to—

'Fix penalties for any specific rule or regulation."

I think the Hon. Member for St. John's East is passing comments upon the paper in question which it does not deserve. There were one or two points raised by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Fox). First of all he opposed the advisability of appointing the commission to deal with the standardization of fish.' I think he will recognize that on these technical points in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the legislature delegates the duty to those who know most about the subject Supposing the House has this bill before it and draws up the rules and regulations for the standardization of cod fish, the only thing I could do was to see that they were legal, they were framed properly and the proper language was used, but I must confess it is a matter about which I know nothing and therefore cannot discuss. And if I made the rules and regulations and sent them around for the approval of the fishermen they might say this is nonsencial who drew these up. Who was he? He was Warren the lawyer. Why should we deal with the technical side of the question where the fisheries are involved and about which most of us know nothing and bring in rules here and ask the House to discuss them. ou or I do not know the first thing about them. It is best to leave them to practical men and this is done not alone in Newfoundland but in every other country. Take the Board of Trade in England. It has several sub-committees to deal with every concievable subject of a technical nature for instance, rules for the safety of miners, rules for quarantining, rules as to the building of ships. The rules about quarantine are dealt with by the public health board. Rules for traffic are made by the police department. Then there is the game and inland fisheries board. This board regulates the catching of salmon and trout and the killing of partridge, when the close season commences and so on. If all these rules had to be made in this house, then the legislature would never get through.

It is better to leave it to those who know most about it. Now with reference to penalties under the act the only penalty the fishermen would be liable to is only a civil one. If he put up what he said is number one quality whereas really it is number two he is the sufferer as he will not get paid for it as No. 1. Now when a fisherman catches his fish he can do what he likes with it. He does not break any rules except public health if he leaves it there to rot. Altho it may not be the fishermen's interest or his neighbors to do so.

Well, for instance, when he catch-- es his fish he does not carry out the rules and cure it in the proper way the penalty will be when he comes to sell it he will not get the price for number one when his quality is only number two. I think everything is clear in the act. The matter comes under the Department of the Marine and Fisheries and the honourable minister is responsible to this house. And I have every confidence in the hon. gentleman and those that will constitute the commission.

MR. FOX—I subscribe to the proposition that we can place confidence in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to select the commission. I am sure he is sincere in his intentions and he will not allow anything to go wrong that he can help and I endorse what the Honorable Minister of Justice has stated. But I ask that a select committee be appointed to confer with these gentlemen who will comprise the commission and that the commission will work in conjunction with the select committee and make the rules and regulations before the prorogation of the House. I humbly submit that these rules and regulations be laid before us for our assent and I think the members of the House will view this reasonably, but I do not presume to dictate to the members of the commission on matters of which I have not practical knowledge. I do not believe in appointing to the commission people who are outsides and who are not responsible to the country and give them the whole control. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is only one man out of eleven people. His voice is only one of those on the commission. I ask the House to consider the principles of the Bill and I think we should know the names of those on the commission, and I do not agree with placing in their hands unlimited powers when they are not responsible to the electorate. I think the matter should be completed before the closing of the House.

MR. SULLIVAN—I am very pleased to be able to congratulate the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in bringing in a measure of the kind contained in this bill. It is a bill which the Progressive Liberal Party can support, and from the tone of the debate upon it I have no doubt that all the members of the Progressive Liberal Party will give this bill their hearty support. It is a progressive measure and it is our policy to stand for anything that stands for progressiveness. I have no doubt that there will be a lot of adversity of opinion on this clause contained in the bill, but as a whole will be easily overcome. I endorse what the honorable Minister said here yesterday when he said that this commission would be formed along non-political lines. I hope that the men selected to compose this commission will be practical men and hope this commission will not be comprised of merchants solely. I trust that the men will be selected as the Minister stated yesterday on merit. If this is done it will have my hearty support and that I am sure of those on this side of the House. I am sure that the great organization of the F. P. U. will watch this measure with a great deal of interest because as the Hon. Minister stated here yesterday this idea was first formulated at the convention of the F. P. U. held in 1909.

Another matter to which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries referred is the question of talqual. I do not blame the fishermen for selling his fish talqual. I blame the merchant. During the last few years the merchants wanted the quantity not the quality, and if a man is assured of first class price for a third rate article he is not going to bother making a good article. But if there is a difference in prices he will soon see that every fisherman will try to put up a first grade food product. I am in accord with Sir John Crosbie, not to penalize the fishermen. The penalty of difference in price should be sufficient respect to the kind of salt used we shauld have scientific tests made and educate the fishermen into using the proper quantity of the different grades. I differ from the member for Port de Grave regarding the pickling of fish. Pickled fish is not the kind that is wanted by the big marketss of the world. I want to say that I am in accord with this bill, and wish to congratulate the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries in introducing it If it is properly carried out it should bring good results and be of great benefit to the country.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, as a member of this assembly who was for some time engaged in the catching and curing of codfish, I want to add a few words. I want to congratulate the hon. introducer of this bill It will if handled properly, remove many of the obstacles under which the country is now laboring in putting up good fish. The committee which is to be appointed will be composed as to represent every section of the country. I sincerely hope that not only the buyer and the exporter and other monied interests will be represented on this committee. I hope the fishermen will be represented, because the information asked for in this bill can only be furnished by men who have actively engaged in the catching and curing of fish. Large losses have been met by the exporters of fish, principtlly because they have contracted to supply large quantities. I want to consider especially one case. I remember one of my constituents sold 1400 quintals of fish to the agent of a lage exporter doing business here. When the cargo arrived this man who had sold for $14.25 was told that if he would release the agent and the merchant he would get a bigger price. He released them from their contract in all good faith. But when the surveyor was put on and all the talqual taken out it netted him $10.25, a loss of $4.00 per quintal. This thing has been snappening all over the Island because of the talqual system. There should be an incentive to produce a good article, and if the price is paid for a No. 1 article as distinguished from a No. 2 article, the No. 1 article will be obtained. I have seen fish handled in such a way that you would never think that it was meat for consumption. I note that the fishermen will not be penalized this year. This, I think, is a step in the right direction.

Here I want to say once more, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. father of this fill has my entire co-operation in every particular, and I trust that the best results will accue from it. Although I have no doubt been accused of occupying the time of this house solely from the desire to obstruct the proceedings this charge is entirely incorrect. Any time that I have anything to say upon any matter that is before us I shall deem it my privilege and my duty to express my views, and I am going to avail of that privilege whenever it appears to me that it is right and proper in the interest of those whom I represent that I should do so.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr.Speaker, I would like to say that as far as the framer of the bill is concerned there is no intention of penalizing the fishermen. The only penalty he is up against is getting a lower price where he purchases inferior article. There may be a penalty for pickling fish when he should not, but I understand that a certain quantity of fish can be used. But the only penalty is really the penalty of price, which comes into effect in the grading of the fish.

MR. MacDONNELL—Mr. Chairman with reference to the bill now before the House, I have to differ from everybody who has so far spoke on the mat ter either on this side or the other side. It is not that the bill may not be a very estimable one. I am of the belief that it is. I am of the belief that it may work out to the great benefit of our fishing industry; but what I object to is this we in this assembly should be asked to delegate to a body of men of whom we know absolutely nothing the administrative powers which are ours and ours alone. I say sir, most emphatically, that we have no right whatsoever to delegate to others the powers which the people have given to us. We have no right to give to a number of men we don't know a blank cheque to make what laws they like and inflict what penalties they like regardless of whether these laws may prove to be beneficial or detrimental. It is a lamentable ever sight on the part of the hon. minister that he should think of giving to any commission those powers which belong to this House alone. He has a perfect right to make what rules and regulations he thinks necessary in connection with this bill, but they should be made here, and further, the hon. minister knows that these rules and regulations are to be, and I consider it neither courteous nor fair to the members on this side of the House that he should refuse to tell us what powers are to be vested in this commission and what laws they are to be pemitted to make.

If every other member of this House is prepared to subscribe to a principle of this kind I for one am not. I am going to give to no man, no matter how estimable he may be, that right which I possess as a member of this honourable assembly. The very idea is rediculous. It is all very fine for the hon. minister to talk about good intensions and bona fides. I have no doubt of his good intensions, but he is presuming too far on this House when he permits outsiders to pass laws and penalize our fishermen. I am suprised at hon. members of this House, and more particularly the members on this side, allowing such a thing to go on without voicing the most vigorous protest, and I say again that if there are thirty-five who want to do this thing here is one who will not subscribe to it. If we place ourselves on record as allowing this to go through and a bill came before us to give any member in the cabinet the right to appoint commission with plenoptenitory powers to make laws and regulations, we cannot object to it.

It is regrettable, Mr. Chairman, that an hon. member, because he dares to voice his disapproval of any measure of which he cannot agree, should be accused of obstructing the proceedings. Does this House think that because a man is characterized and tagged as an obstructionist that he is going to be muzzled? This is what is being attemp ted here and some day I shall fix the blame for it on the right shoulders. The mantality of the person who thinks that he can intimidate men by this sort of misrepresentation and abuse is indeed pitiable.

I say again Mr. Chairman that with regard to this bill I want to go on record as emphatically objecting to the principal of giving such powers as are here indicated to a commission, the constitution of which we khow nothing. Why didn't we come in here on the opening day, appoint a commission to carry on the whole business of the country and go home and be done with it? We have heard too much of commissions in this country and seen too little of their work, and to think of any number of men being picked up on the street and given powers as far reaching as these, is too much. Despite the good will of the hon. minister, he has no power once this commission is appointed to control their actions. He gives them the power to do things of which he may not approve and which he would not do himself, but he will be powerless to prevent it. I do not see why he cannot at least give us the names of the proposed commission and some idea of the laws they will make. Of these matters we are absolutely in the dark and yet we are asked to give carte blanche to this unknown bady of men to make laws for and impose penalties upon the people who sent us to this assembly as their representa tives. When the time for this comes I, at least, shall go on record against the idea that I should band over my part in the making of the legislation of this counry o any man.

Mr. Chairman before this bill goes through I would like to be assured on one or two points. I wonder, when this commission have made their regulations, what would happen if these regulations were to contract with those already on the statute book? When they come into force will they cancel all other regulations in eference to this matter, because if so we cannot take the chance of giving to an unknown body of men the power to revoke existing laws. Unfortunately we we do not know what we are doing; we do not know what the proposed regulations are to be, what penalty will be provided, who are to be the men who will make those regulations, or it they will take procedence over those now on the statute book. I think it is unfortunate that with regard to the bringing about of the necessary reforms we should have to abrogate our authority to others and for this reason all must go against the bill because when you take away that section there there is nothing else in it. The hon. minister has said that the fishermen will not be pentlized this year, but that does not alter the position that it would be alright to appoint a commission of enquiry for the purpose of fond ing out what changes are necessary and the best way to make them but such a commission should not have the power to make regulations.

MR. FOX:—In sections of this act I am in full accord, but I have several objections, however. In the main I thoroughly understand the theory that codfish be standardized. If to-day our markets hove been injured or we have lost our grip we can attribute nothing to it but the fact that we are responsible. We had great opportunities of capturing the best markets of the world and holding them, but we took the advantage of the days that were in dire distress and we sold them fish that we should not have sold them, and we have nobody to blame but ourselves Whe is responsible fo this condition of affairs I am not prepared to say, but as the Hon. Sir John Crosbie had said we cannot blame the fishermen. If a man can come up here to St. John's and sell any quality of fish we cannot blame him for that, and the man who has taken great care to cure his fish has received no encouragement whatever, because the man with the bad fish will secure just as good a price as the man who brings along the good quality

I say that Newfoundland shauld be in the same position to-day that Norway and Sweden and Iceland are holding. They have the best markets of the world because they deliver the best cured fish and it demands the best possible price. Newfoundland fish should be made so as to get those markets and hold them and I am in through accord with this act that our fishery industy be standardized. But I object to the theory that this House should delegate its powes to a body of men for the purpose of carrying out this act. And, in stating this I quote an old motto which sets the whole position as it should be. "Powers which have been delegated to a body should not by them be delegated to others."

I say that we are not doing our duty if we delegate to a commission ir irresponsiblles the powers which have been vested upon us by the people whom we represent. Why should we not prepare the rules and regulations Isn't is just as simple for us to have to select committee and confer with a committee of outport men and prepare these rules and regulations and incorporate them in this act by legislative sanction. I think we are derelict in our duty if we endorse this pinciple of appointing a commission of irresponsibles to drift rules and regulations when we do not even know the men, and I am sorry fo this country if we allow the government to pass legislation of this character. I object to that theory and I believe the government is making a serious mistake in allowing legislation of this kind to pass this House. What is to prevent the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries appointing a select committee of this House to investigate into this matter and draft rules and regulations and take them into his consideration and let the rights of Newfoundland be protected. What do we know of anyone of this commission? Are they under any obligation to us? Have we any gurentee that they will furnish the country with a set of rules that will conserve the right of Newfoundland

But the idea of deliberately condoning the practice of delegating the powers and obligations of this legislature to a group of men, who are not answerable to this country, is an unpartonable offence aganst all constutional practice. The theory of government of such classes of people that this bill affects is treated in a very light fashion indeed, particularly by the Hon. Mnster of Marine and Fisheries, who is responsible for the carrying out of such a principal. If the hon. member of the government do not realise the principle that they are intoducing, then it is time that they opened their eyes. I must again say that I object to it on theory and on principle.

Another further objection that I have to the bill is that I want to know under what cenction are the rules and regulations to be carried out? What authority has this group of gentlemen to exercise powers that they have no right o no authority to exercise. They start off to make rules and regulations and there is nothing in that act to compel the enforcement of them. I commend that to the law minister of the crown. We are told in the act that the fishermen are to be penalized, but the full penalty is to be placed upon the selling of fish. Would the Hon. Minister of Justice please tell me under what particular section of the act is anybody penalized, and I want to know what will the effect of the act have. We are loading up our statute book with laws of no practical effect and the only effect that I can see that this act is going to have is that it will some day bring be a fee. The Hon. Minister of Justice tells me that it is not the intention to penalize the fisherman, but to encourage him to make good fish in his own interest, and that when he comes to sell badly cured fish he puts himself within the penalizing scope of the act. But I would like to know what section of the act can be enforced, as regards penalty, and what is the use of putting it on the statute book if it cannot be enforced. You are carrying that principle too far and we are likely to have a very practical law library. Another point I would like to refer to is this: Why do we want to limit ourselves to any commission. Why not say in Section 3 that rules and regulations shall be prepared, subject to the approval of the legislature before being put into effect, controlling the manner in which codfish is prepared for sale and transported. I protest emphatically against the transferring of the powers of the legislature to any commission and I would suggest that a select committee of this House be appointed to sit in conjunction with the commission appointed under the bill.

Why limit the effect and scope of the regulations to the improvement? Why not make this act as broad as possible? It cannot hurt it and may do a lot of good. It may avoid friction. It certainly will make the statute very much clearer and leave no room for argument. I understand the idea is not to apply the act to old time methods, but merely for improved methods. Let us suppose to those gentlemen, who are to prepare the rules and regulations dealing with so-called improved conditions of codfish, that I assuming that I am a fisherman, can produce evidence to show that I have prepared my fish in the good old-fashioned style. They cannot touch me, because there is nothing that I have done is an improvement on the old methods. Why not strike out the words "for the improvement" and say specifically "and the manner in which codfish is prepared and transported." I suggest that to the consideration of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

I thoroughly endorse the spirit of the act and I think that it reflects great credit upon the Hon. Mr. Coaker, who has brought it down. It shows his interest in the people, particularly in the fishermen, and his determination that our staple industry is to be fully protected in every possible way. I ask him to consider the points that I have raised and add them to this act when formulating his rules and regulations. I repeat that I do not subscribe to the vicious principle of delegating our duties to any outside irresponsible party, not as regards this particular act, but in the interest of legislation in general out of respect for our constitutional principles and to avoid the setting up of any dangerous precedent. I would ask the Hon. Minister to consider the unlimiting of the scope of the regulations, and I also ask him to consider as to whether or not there is any sanction for the enforcement of the act. As regards the penalizing section of the act, the Hon. Minister of Justice says that the fisherman is not to be touched, but when he attempts to sell an article, not according to the standard cure, he should be penalized. We must remember that if the act is going to be effective it must not be passed over in a haphazard manner and treated in such a fashion as not to hurt the feelings of anybody. It is absolutely useless to put such legislation on our statute book, and I am not going to be a party to it. We had the anti-smoking law and many other enactments that I could mention and which were more honored in the breach than in the observance. They were passed by previous governments, whose members were most indefatigable in the ingenuity they showed and who knew that they would never be carried out.

I support the contention of the hon. member for St. George's that we should not delegate to any outside body of men powers that are ours; but with his further statement I do not subscribe. I think he intended in his reference that the manner of the criticisms of a certain newspaper was not right and proper, that its comments were not up to the standard and that they tended to muzzle debate in this House. Now I have been a consistent reader of The St. John's Daily Star and I never found anything objectionable in it, but rather followed its utterances with extreme interest. I always found that it was maintaining a most excellent literary standard. I think that the refined and scholarly gentlemen who edit that paper must have cultured minds, excellent taste, rare talents, brilliant attainments, high gifts and broad ideas to keep their journalistic ethics to such a good and clever moral standard that literary men alone must prize and appreciate. These are gentlemen of the old school and, in their attempts to carry out their obligations, nothing is farther from their minds than to try and hurt the feelings of anybody. I think that their personalities bears an impression on almost every line of that estimable journal. Their sole object in view, apparently, is to bring material to a paper, and not alone to have it published here, but to show the outside world what a high standard our press have arrived at here, what high characters our public and prominent men have and what high grounds of debate we have.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—On behalf of the Government press, to which Fr. Fox has so courteously referred, I extend to him a word of appreciation and thanks. Mr. Fox has already addressed this house at some length on a multitude of occasions during the past week and has not missed any occasion to inform the house as to his own whole-hearted sincerity and that he could be depended upon on all occasions to correctly express his views uninfluenced by political or party considerations. I feel that in this case Mr. Fox has departed from the usual traditions of an opposition member being consistently critical of anything that appeared in any newspaper not actively supporting his party, and in this case he has highly complimented the Government press, not so much perhaps because of the entire freedom of the Government press during the past six months from criticisms of opponents, but rather that because in comparison with the Opposition press during that period it has been exceptionally fair and high-toned. In view of this oft-repeated declaration by Mr. Fox of his own personal frankness and sincerity, I accept his courteous references as having the same full and complete sincerity and frankness as he has so often claimed for his own character and utterances.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I think the Hon. Member for St. John's East is passing comments upon the paper in question which it does not deserve. If it does not live up to the standard we should like to have it we ought not to misconstrue anything said in this House. There were one or two points raised by the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Fox). First of all he advocated the advisability of appointing the commission to deal with the standardization of fish. I think he will recognize that on these technical points in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the Legislature passing the duty to those who know most about the subject. Supposing the House has this bill before it and draws up the rules and regulations for the standardization of cod fish, the only thing I could do was to see that they were legal, they were framed properly and the proper language was used, but I must confess it is a matter about which I know nothing and therefore cannot discuss. And if I made the rules and regulations and sent them around for the approval of the fishermen and they would say he is nonsensical who drew these up. Who was he? He was Warren the lawyer. Why should we deal with the technical side of the question where the fisheries are involved and about which most of us know nothing and bring in rules here and ask the House to discuss them. It is best to leave them to practical men and this is done not alone in Newfoundland but in every other country. Take the Board of Trade in England.

It has several sub-committees to deal with every conceivable subject of a technical nature, for instance, rules for the safety of miners, rules for quarantining, rules as to the building of ships. The rules about quarantine are dealt with by the public health board. Rules for traffic are made by the police department. Then there is the game and island fisheries board. This board regulates the catching of solmon and trout and the killing of patridge, when the close season commences and so on. If all these rules had to be made in this House then the legislature would never get through.

It is better to leave it to those who know most about it. Now with reference to the penalties under the act the only penalty the fishermen would be liable to is only a curl one. If he put up what he said is number one quality whereas really it is number two he is a sufferer as he will not get paid for it. Now when a fisherman catches his fish he can do what he likes with it. He does not break any public health rules if he leaves it there to rot. Altho it may not be to the fishermen's interest or his neighbours to do so. In fact that is what is happening in some of the fish stores down on Water Street to-day Well for instance when he catches his fish he does not carry out the rules and cure it in the proper way the penalty will be when he comes to sell it he will not get the price for number one when his quality is only number two. I think everything is clear in the act. The matter comes under the Department of Marine and Fisheries and the honorable minister is responsble to ths House. And I have every confidence in the hon. gentleman and those that will constitute the commission .

MR. FOX:—I subscribe to the proposition that we can place confidence in the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to select the commission. I am sure that he in sincere in his intention and we will not allow anything to go wrong that he can help and I endorse that the Hon. Minister of Justice has stated. But I ask that a select committee be appointed to confer with these gentlemen who wll comprise the commission and that the commissien will work in conjunction with the select committee and make the rules and regulations before the prerogration of the House. I humbly submit that these rules and regulations be laid before us for our assent and I think the members of the House will view this reasonably but I do not presume to dictate to the members of the commission on matters of which I have not practical knowledge. I do not believe in appointing to the commission people who are outsiders and who are not responsible to the cou ntry and give them the whole control. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is only one man out of eleven people. His voice is only one of those on the commission. I ask the House to consider the principles of the bill and I thing we should know the names of those on the commission and I do not agree with placing in their hands unlimited powers when they are not responsible to the electorate. I think the matter should be completed before the closing of the House.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker after hearing the Hon. Minister of Justice and members on this side of the House I want to say a few words on the matter now before the House. From the standpoint of experience I am not qualified to speak on this question. But some time ago a fisheries board was created and we find on the board a number of clerks, but I think I am as well qualified to speak on the bill as those. I would like to know who the committee is going to be Have we any guarantee that the commission won't be the same as the fisheries board and mads up of the same kind of men. We ought to know whom the commission will be composed of before giving power to act

MR. FOX:—I understand that it is not the intention to penalize a man except in the price. If the object is merely that why bring the matter in here? Why lumber up a statue book with that kind os stuff? If the intention is merely to start some kind of progranda why not the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries get out a little phamplet and send around to the people? If it is the intenton to to penalize merely on the price why not put in a section to the effect that when a man sells his fish the penalty will attach? I say the point I make is well taken, and I want to have it considered by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

MR. CHEESEMAN—Mr. Speaker as I take it it is impossible to bring in all the rules and regulations that may from time to time be necessary to carry this bill into effect. It is a matter that is justly left to the commission that is to be appointed. I realize that in giving all the authority that is required to put this bill into effect is giving a big thing, but the committee will have to be changed from time to time. There is one thing I would like to see. We can tell certain men in one section of the country to pickle fish for Spain. I would like to see it arranged that a man would be fined if he pickled any fish at all. We can't pickle some fish and salt others . We can't mix it. We must do something to do away with pickled fish. If a cargo of fish is mixed it can't stand to get across I am of the opinion that we must not be too severe on the fishermen. We the exporters and the merchants, are responsible. If the merchant and the exporter handles his end of it allright the whole undertaking will be a success.

With regard for the west cost fish I would like to say a word. Along the west coast of Newfoundland fish caught in the winter season, there is no better fish in any part of the world. Portugal is a good market for bank fish, always has been.

I have only a few more words to say, Mr. Chairman. I have given this bill a great deal of consideration and I think it is a good bill, a bill whose object is wholly and solely to benefit the fishery and the fishermen of this country. I am glad that we at least have a government that is going to do something of real benefit for the the fishemen, the bone and sinew of the country as we politicians are wont to call them when we are going around looking for their support at election time. In the present minister of marine and fisheries we have the right man in the right place and I feel sure that he will carry out fairly and fearlessly any policy which he belieces to be for the general good of the country. I am prepared to give this measure my fullest support and I hope that all the other members of this assembly will do the same. Naturally the good results of this bill will not be apparent in a few weeks nor even in a few months but as time goes on I am confident that all will see the benefits of this very necessary legislation.

MR. MACDONNELL—Mr. Chairman before this bill gets thru, I would like to be assured on one or two points. I wonder when this commission have made their regulations, what would happen is these regulations, were to conflict with those already on our statute book. When they come into force will they cancel all other regulations in reference to this matter because if so we cannot take the chance of givig to an unknown body of men the power to revoke existing laws. Unfortunately we do not know what we are doing; we do not know what the proposed regulations are to be, what penalty will be provided, who are to be the men who will make these regulations or if they will take procedence over those now on the statute book. I think it is unfortunate that with regard to the bringing about of the necessary reforms we should have to abrogate our authority to others and for this reason I must go against the bill because when you take away that section there is nothing in it. The hon. minister has said that the fishermen will not be penalized this year but that does not alter the position. It would be alright to appoint a commission of enquiry for the purpose of carrying out what changes are necessary and the best way to make them but such a commission should not have the power to make regulations.

MR. BENNETT:—I am not a fisherman nor the son of a fisherman but I have had some experience in this assembly with bills of the nature of that which is before us this evening. I fully appreciate, sir, the motive which actuates the hon. minister in introducing this measure, having for its aim the improvement of our staple industry, and as has already been stated, any bill introduced for an object of this kind is entitled to, and should receive the fullest support that we can give it. On reflection, however, I am led to the conclusion that this bill is altogether too far reaching in its effects. It is a matter which demands the gravest consideration of every hon. member of this House, when we are asked to delegate our administration powers to a commission as we will do if we pass this bill, and doingsomething that we shall some day regret. Surely sir, this assembly is as representative as any commission that could be found to consider the matter, and I think it will be appreciated that the position is a wrong one that we should shirk our responsibilities by delegating to any body of men, no matter what their qualifications or political afficlations, the power to reg ulate and control the catching, curing and marketing of the fish of the country. Looking at this bill casually and without havng due regard to its possible consequences, I would be inclined to say that from an opposition standpoint we have nothing to fear through the results accruing from the measure. I say, sir, that it means a revolution in the conduct of the fisheries of the country, but its far-reaching effects, although they may be ultimately to the benefit of the country as a whole, are certainly going to lead to a serious complication and a serious situation as regards the fishermen of the country and those engaged in the carrying on of the industries of the country. The standardization of fish is a subject which has been deliberated upon in this Assembly as much as any other subject in the past. Since the advent of the leader of the F.P.U. party and his followers in this House this matter has been more acute than heretofore and has received the serious consideration of past governments; and without going any further, I submit that the standardization of fish would be all that is necessary to do in this present instance.

Let us look at what will accrue thru the penalizing section of this bill, if the merchant purchased fish in all honesty for a certain standard and paid the price that that standard for. If he buys No. 2 fish and pays a No. 1 price for it he is penalized and if he buys No. 3 and pays a No. 2 price for it he is penalized. Naturally he is going to protect himself and is not going to put himself in the position that he will be hailed before the commission or any other constituted body to answer for a breach of the regulations that are made by that body. The result will be that when the fishermen comes in as he has in the past with the full idea that the parcel of fish he has for sale is No. 1 quality and when the merchant puts his cullers to examine that fish, he awakens to the fact that what has happened heretofore is no longer possible. During the past three or four years most fish was sold talqual. There was a set price for that kind of fish and the merchant paid the fisherman no matter what were the relative qualities or the different grades. Under this bill, the merchant can no longer extend that latitude and the fishermen will have to subject himself to the cull, which will grade his fish down, and when he makes up the average he will find that he will receive a figure that will probably not alone disappoint him, but astound him. It was pointed out this evening by an hon .member on this side of the House a case in which a man sold his fish subject to a certain cull at $14 a quintal, but when that fish was delivered to the merchant and the cull was given in it averaged less than $7 a quintal. Well, sir, that, as I said before, is a condition that means serious trouble for those who are instrumental in bringing about this change. The justification for it I am not questioning, as I believe that some standardization of fish is absolutely desirable for our future trade and future prosperity. We are no longer in an open market unchalleneged by competition like we were within the past four or five years. It is well known to all of us that our old competitors have entered into the markets again and this will naturally bring about a reduction in the prices for our product. Instead of looking for $14 or $17 per quintal for fish, as we were a few years ago we are looking to-day for $10 or $12, which means that in order to get the price fish must be A-1 quality; but when the lower grades are culled from it we will find ourselves in the position that the average price will be, not $10 or $12, but $6 or $8. This condition of affairs may be found impossible to obviate. I am not prepared to lay any blame to the Hon. Minister or the Government for attempting to correct a situation that is bound to occur in the ordinary course of events; and, sir, I will go as far as this, that I will support the standardization of fish, but this bill goes very much farther and asks that powers be delegated to others outside of this Assembly to regulate and see how fish are caught, cured, packed and how it is to be marketed. Reference was made this afternoon to what is known as pickled fish and it was stated that pickled fish was not desirable in many of the markets. If it is the intention of the Government to disallow the pickling of fish here, I can say that they are treading on very dangerous ground, as I know of certain sections of the country that will resent this to the bitter end. No one portion of the district that I represent is one of the best fishing and most progressive settlements in the country, I refer to Petty Harbor. The entire catch of fish there is pickled ,and I have yet to learn of any trouble over the fish produced from that quarter. We may not desire it as individuals for our own purpose or for our own tables, but evidently there is a market that requires that class of fish and that market is the Spanish market.

I do not feel that I would be doing my duty if I agreed to any such delegation of powers as outlined in this bill, from this House to those who are in no way responsible to the people. We have no idea or no conception of what this commission is going to be like, who are the members or likely to be! We have no idea as to whether that commission will sit in St. John's continuously, whether they will sit here partly, or whether they will be parmanent employees of the Marine and Fisheries Department or whether they will be a permanent board of the department or anything of the kind; but we are told in this bill that the Governor in Council will appoint a board whose powers will be so far-reaching that even this legislature will take only a second place as regards the greatest industry of the country. The principle is vicious in the extreme. If it was merely a matter of little interest or not of great moment to the country, one may say for the sake of convenience, let it go into the hands of a representative commission, but here we have the very vitals of the country concerned in this very important matter. I ask this House to hesitate before they establish a precedent that will so far take out of their hands that power, that the people of the country have placed in them, and place it in the hands of those who are not responsible and not answerable to the people of the country. I quite appreciate the desire of the hon. minister in this connection as well as in every other connection that he has shown himself for the betterment and the improvement of the fishery, and I believe that he is sincere in this and hopes to bring about a condition of things that will be for the benefit of the country in the future, but I think he has taken a very large step in this direction. He has undertaken a position that the time is not ripe for. I advise you to be more cautious and to make haste slowly and eventually you may bring about a revolution in the fishing business of this country. It was only yesterday that this bill was placed in our hands and we have not had time to consider it, yet we are asked to give our consent to what will lead to such far-reaching consequences. I do not think that this important matter should be passed over lightly but should be ventilated in the minutest detail. I am informed that fisheries in this country have been handed over to the control of certain gentlemen who are supposed to do their duty with regard to inspection and the problem of looking after what is known as our herring fishery. When that matter was before this House two or three years ago it was very strongly pointed out that we have an opportunity of establishing our herring fishery on such basis that it would stand only second to our codfishery . We got prices raised, by the innovation of the Scotch cure method, from $6 a barrel to $26 in the foreign markets, and I think that during that time we were making a name for ourselves. But unfortunately, that condition has been changed and this inspection, supposed to be carried out, has been relased and herring, instead of standing in the New York market as they did two or three years ago and commanding respectable prices, are now selling there for slaughter prices.

Where are we going to get individuals who are capable, where are we going to get a staff capable and able to supervise the affairs of the fishing business on Labrador and every other far away fishing village around the Island and see that the rules are carried out in their entirety. If they are not carried out in their entirety, if there is no machinery to put them into effect, the matter is bound to be a failure, and none of us want to see that happening.

This side of the House wants to assist the Government in bringing about an improvement in the curing and the catching of fish, but let us move cautiously, let us not make an error but go step by step and do everything thoroughly so that we might assist towards improving the fishery. This matter covers the whole situation and particularly affects the main industry of the country and we are putting in the hands of five or ten men appointed by the Governor-in-Council absolute control and giving them powers not only to make regulations but to impose fines and forfeitures and other matters.

Imake this remark not in consequenee of my own practical experience of the fishery which is small, but in consequence of knowledge which I have gleaned from those who have been connected with the fishery for the last thirty years, in what has fallen from their lips, not only those who sit at present in this Assembly but who have in the past spoken o nthis matter, and I am led to the conviction that some steps should be considered and a thorough research made and care taken that what is being legalised and handed down on the fishermen is for their benefit.

Under this bill the fishermen are to be penalised and the merchant is to be penalised, but in the end the merchant will penalise the fishermen. If we penalise the merchant it will come back on the fishermen and will be merely a go-between to get at the fishermen in this instance.

Now sir, it is only proper that this should not be put into operation for another year, and the people should be warned; they should be given notice of what they may expect after a reasonable time so that they may be able to make preparations, and they ought to be made aware of what they will be liable to and if the people are warned and they properly understand 'the true situation and everyone is aware that the movement is entirely in his own interest and some good is being provided for the fishery it will be judicious to go ahead. But sir, we have no guarantee or assurance that if this bill passes, the remote parts of the country will know about it. Some fishermen in the remote parts of the country perhaps may find themselves in a bad position, he may find himself in an absolutely unjust position when he comes in here to St John's to sell his fish.

Move cautiously in this matter. Let us make no mistake. It is not possible to put this bill into successful operation inside two or three years. It would only mean revolution to the main industry of the country if enforced immediately. This must be done gradually and everything considered. It would be unfair to delegate the management and the entire administration of the fishery of the country to the party who will comprise this commission. In matters of this kind there is generally a select committee constituted of the members of this House to consider the matters contained in the bill. It is the province of this Assembly, constituted as it is by a large number of representatives of the fishermen to make rules and regulations and then make them the law of the land. If we do not do it this session, well, the next, until the large body of men who represent both the people and the fishermen of this country who have the practical experience which they have demonstrated until the ten F.P.U. men in this House, who must of necessity, know the every phase of the fishery ,have made the rules and regulations.

Still on this side of the House there are also men of wide experience as to the curing and the catching of fish and to a committee of those men ought to fall the duty of perusing the rules and regulations. This is too important a matter to be glossed over lightly, of too serious a consequence, and that is why I am opposed to the contemplated movement. Naturally it is not going to be popular with the fishermen. The fishermen will suffer before any good will come of it, and it ought not contain anything that will make them suffer. For these various reasons I wish to go on record as being opposed to the passing of a measure of this kind.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—In reply to the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West I think he has not given the matter before the chair very much thought. It is evident from the remarks of the hon. member that he is not aware of the fact that as long ago as October 1909 this matter has been a live matter to the fishermen of the country, and at the convention held at Change Islands in 1909 resolutions were passed asking the Government to introduce legislation upon the very same lines as are included in the bill before the House. A deputation was appointed to interview the Prime Minister, who then was Sir Edward Morris. He received the deputation and spent four hours conversing with it, and the points in this bill from beginning to end are the same as were contained in the resolutions passed at the convention. But the legislation was not passed. In all probability it was no fault of the Prime Minister but the fault of competitors. The Government party of that day was not the fishermen's party and may for want of knowledge did not take up the matter. Ever since that time the Fishermen's Union has been agitating the passing of legislation of this nature. Every convention since 1909 this point has been discussed and never has there been a dissenting voice during all those conventions. The fishermen of the north have fought for it for ten years past. So for the fishermen's side of the matter it is the fishermen's desire. The fishermen only hope that a bill of the sort before the chair will become law. Now the exporters of the country are unanimously in favor of the bill. In January last there was a meeting of the exporters and for four months now the exporters have considered and revised the bill in every detail, the same bill as is now before the House. So if the fishermen of the north are unanimously in favor of it and the exporters are unanimously in favor of it the objection of the hon. member for St. John's West is not worth while. Every point of the bill has been considered and thrashed out.

The commission is given the power incase it wants to use it, if time shows that it needs the powers. The commission will be representative and the first man whom I asked to serve on the commission was Sir John Crosbie. He said he was afraid he would not be able to act on the commission, but when the commission is appointed, members of the opposition will be asked to become members. The hon. leader of the opposition will be asked. It is up to us to have such an act as this enacted. You need have no fears regarding the enforcement of the clause concerning pickled fish. I have no desire to allow anything to be done that is not for the best interests of the country. The only concern that I have is whether or not it is for the best intertsts of the country. The matter of the pickling of fish is one that must be regulated. We have a sale for 300,000 quintals, but we don't want any more pickled fish than we have a market for. The mixing of pickled and salt fish in a cargo is a curse to the trade. There is not a year that $1,000,000 is not lost through the mixing of fish.

The member for St. George's and the member for St. John's East say that we are giving too much power to the commission. The matter of culling and standardizing may have to be changed from year to year. We cannot come back to this House and spend two or three days talking about amendments. The Board of Trade was given full power to deal with this matter by their constitution when it was first drawn up. I strongly opposed giving this power to the Board of Trade. I told them I would alarm the people and create an agitation against it because I held the Board of Trade, representing only exporters, should not remake the cull of fish. The idea was then abandoned.

Conditions in other countries are different. The whole of the curing is done by large establishments. If we had a few large establishments handling all our fish we would do the same thing. But we have to do the very best possible. As it is at the present time, there is no law regarding the culling of fish, the curing of fish, or the shipping of fish, and as a result, we are up against all kinds of difficulties in marketing our product. The merchant can ship as prime No. 1 any quality that we may have on hand. The result is that he spoils the market to which that fish is sent, for all fish that may come after, no matter how good, lies under suspicion. The very fact that the hon. leader of the opposition and Sir John Crosbie are in accord with it is evidence that the bill is the best that we at the present time can introduce.

We are trying to bring about a system that we all shall be proud of. A lot of time has been spent in putting this bill into shape, and I think it is the very best that we know of just now. If twelve months from now we see that the bill is not applicable, then we will have it amended. We will not have anything done that will be against the interests of the fishermen. There is not now, nor will there ever be a government who is not afraid of the power of the fishermen. I don't think we should spend any more time debating this question. We are all anxious to do the very best.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, I would like to make just one remark with regard to what the hon. minister has just said. I think he misunderstands our position. We oppose delegating the powers of this Assembly to any commission. We have the same thing in the words of the hon. minister himself. He objected to delegating the powers of this House to the Board of Trade. This is exactly the same principle. I endorse the stand that he took with respect to the Board of Trade, but I am surprised that he has changed his position. I thoroughly endorse the intentions of this act. It is a most necessary thing. But I object to delegating the powers that the people of the country have given to the members of this Assembly only. I say that if the minister will withdraw this objectionable clause I will give the bill my unqualified support.

HON. MINISTER POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS: — Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words in reference to some remarks made by one of the hon. members of the opposition. The hon. member of St. John's West said that this measure would cause a revolution in the fishery of this country, and he also said that we should go slowly, that the time was not ripe for such a measure. I am informed by Mr. Coaker that a delegation of the F.P.U. called on Sir Edward Morris when he held the reins of power with the object of having this law placed upon the statute book but he could not get his party to agree to it. Remarks from the lips of one of his associates a few moments ago make us wonder if it were possible to do such a thing. This idea of moving slowly has been going on for centuries. The question of the cure of cod has been necessary for the past thirty years, and yet the hon. member for St. John's West comes in here to-night and tells us that the time is not ripe for such a measure. He also informs us that a revolution will be caused in the fishery conditions. I am surprised to hear such remarks from the lips of an ex-colonial secretary. Here are examples of the tie-up of legislation by the previous government. On June 5th, 1919, this legislature was asked to consider a bill for the entering into a contract for coastal service. Further on an act to authorise the Governor-in-Council for improvement of mail service.

MR. BENNNETT:— Did you oppose it?

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Oppose it? Yes. They were also asked to enter into an agreement for improved telephone service. All these bills were railroaded through this House last year. Another important act in connection with the St. George's Coal Fields was railroaded through the House in the space of 24 hours. Mr. Fox, with full knowledge of these facts, has associated himself with such men who are guilty of these things. He pleads ignorance of these facts. These things should have been done by Sir Edward Morris, and they would have been done but for the dead-wood' which brought him down into the hole. This commission will only have powers to advise the Governor-in-Council and it will be left for them to decide whether they will have the rules and regulations that they suggest placed on the statute book. Why, if it were not possible to appoint this commission we might as well dispose of all road boards and committees and meet here day in and day out to transact the business of the country. I have nothing more to say. Let those men who have a practical knowledge of the fishing industry air their remarks. Now we have the opinion of these men who are well versed in the language of fish, opinions that we have very much respect for and I am sure they know what they are talking about and this bill is good enough for us.

MR. FOX:—I regret very much that I didn't seek his assent before I had thrown in my lot with this party. I trust he will pardon me for my oversight, but he has been buttressing my argument. I would like to point out to Mr. Halfyard that the delegation of powers to the Executive Council is a totally different matter than the delegation of power to a commission of irresponsibles.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—In section 4 it states that "All such rules and regulations shall be laid before His Excellency the Governor in Council for approval." Is't that delegating the powers to the Governor-in-Council and not to the commission?

MR. FOX:—It is delegating powers to the commission, to Water St. merchants. The commission may be responsible to parliament but it is a totally different position when you go into the street and give them legislature for anything they want, and in any case does the hon. minister say that two wrongs will make a right. On his own admission he objected to that principle two years ago and I take it that that objection came from a common sense man, and I say now that if it was wrong then he cannot set it up now. If we are to conduct legislation in that fashion what is to prevent us from going back over the life of past governments and committing the same offences that they have been guilty of.

MR. GOSSE:—I realized when I came in here to-night that we are up against some very mysterious thing. I wouldn't talk about taking the bone out of codfish. Some of these gentlemen here wouldn't know which end of a codfish the tail was on. You are talking about the standardization of codfish and what condition it should be in for a decent man in Portugal or Spain to eat. In my opinion now we have no necessity to argue over an act which should have been passed years ago. Mr. Coaker brings in a bill and gentlemen from the other side criticize it when it is only a matter of making a good codfish. The only way to cure this is not to buy a bad one. Refuse to buy bad fish and you will always get good fish. Now, when I see valuable time being wasted by gentlemen who I presume are just hanging up time, it makes me feel bad. I think we should do better. Why, it is only a matter of making a good fish and the people are objecting to our waste of time.

MR. BENNETT:—The Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs made reference to me a few minutes ago in a manner which I hardly appreciate. I merely endeavoured to express my views and he took occasion to refer to some things that have happened during the time of Sir Edward Morris. He referred to the deadwood which was holding the Prime Minister back. I might inform him that this matter was never brought before the Executive Council during that time, therefore the "deadwood" did not hold back. The matter was brought up here and was referred to a select committee of this House.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—You weren't in the Executive in 1909.

MR. BENNETT:—No, oh that was away back. I could not have been in the deadwood, you will have to explain that to some other party. But, as far as holding back any legislation is concerned I am glad to know I had power over such a man to hold him back.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the introducer of this bill if it is the intention of the Government to give the herring fishery any attention? Are you going to bring in another bill or make provision for it in this one? Remember the herring fishery was worth a million dollars here a few years ago and now it is going out of existence very quickly.

HON MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, I do not think it would be wise to mix up a herring bill with a codfish bill . If we are going to deal with it, deal with it as a separate bill. The latest suggestion is that the herring board will go out of business and the powers of the Marine and Fisheries act vested in the herring board will be transferred to the fishery board. We are doing that because we think the fishery board will more generally represent the country, and if there are any defects in connection with the herring business, we might be able to remedy them in connection with the powers of the fishery board. I agree with the hon. leader of the opposition with regard to the importance of the herring fishery. A couple of years ago it was worth one million dollars, though last year it was worth half as much. I hold with him that the matter is of great importance and that something should be done to place the herring business on a sound basis. If he wishes to help me in preparing a bill to encourage the herring fishery, I shall be delighted. We have had some experience ourselves, and perhaps we might get some men engaged in the herring fishery to aid us to devise a bill that will improve existing conditions.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the debate which has taken place on this bill to provide for the standardization of codfish, and find the situation, so far as the opposition is concerned, to be as follows: Sir John Crosbie gave his hearty and unqualified endorsation to this bill. He thought it was a measure that should have been undertaken years ago and made it clear that in his opinion if the commission were a representative and sane one the effect of the bill and the regulations which might be made thereunder would be of very great benefit to the fisheries of the colony. Sir Michael Cashin supported the bill with equal strength and in somewhat similar terms. He raised the objection, however, that the penalties which would be imposed for violation of the regulations should be specified in the bill. That criticism was fully met when it was explained that a bill which created one or two particular offences should specify the penalties for these specific offences, but a biil which created a commission to draft rules and regulations affecting such a large matter as the standardization of codfish could not possibly specify the penalties which would be imposed for the breach of regulations the nature of which cannot be known before the bill is passed and the commission has undertaken its work. That explanation has been fully concurred in by the hon. the senior member for St. John's East, Mr. Higgins, and I understand the leader of the opposition is fully satisfied that in that particular the bill is as complete as it is possible to make it at the present moment.

The hon. Mr. Bennett has expressed himself, I regret to say, as most aggressively opposed to this bill. He states that the bill means a revolution in the codfish industry of the country. He objects to the appointment of a commission to deal with these matters, and thinks that all the rules and regulations which are to be made should be now submitted to this legislature, that they should now become law and be unalterable until the next session of the legislature, when they could be revised. It is scarcely necessary for me to point out the absurdity of such a position. There was one statement which the hon. member made which gave great pleasure to the Government. It was as follows: "This bill will eventually lead to the advantage of the fisheries, but if a man were looking at his own political advantage and his own political future he would be foolish to support a measure of this sort. It is a bold move and the men who would pass it must be bold men and must feel themselves well entrenched." In that statement Mr. Bennett drew a clear distinction between his own line of conduct and the line of conduct of the members of the present Government. Mr. Bennett declares his own oppressive opposition to this measure because he evidently, according to his own statement,, thinks more of an immediate political advantage or his own personal political future than he thinks of the welfare of the fisheries of the country. This Government may, as Mr. Bennett says, be bold men to undertake a measure of this sort, but they have undertaken it, and the fact that Sir Michael Cashin, the leader of the opposition, and Sir John Crosbie, which two gentlemen are the two practical experts on the opposition benches, concur in the necessity of the measure and have volunteered to support it, shows conclusively that those on the opposition benches who know what they are talking about feel that this policy is one which should be undertaken.

As to whether this bill is to the present or future political advantage of the Government which has undertaken the responsibility for the passage of the measure through this House is not a matter in which the Minister of Marine and Fisheries or myself or any other member of the Government is primarily concerned. The important question is not what popularity or unpopularity the Government or any member of the Government gets from the passage of this measure; the vital questions are, How will this bill affect the fishermen of the country? How will it affect the trade of the country? What will be its effect upon the fishery industry of the country I am satisfied sir, that what Mr. Bennett says is correct, namely, that ultimately it will have a revolutionary effect upon the cure and marketing of our staple product. I am satisfied, as Mr. Bennett has said, that it will eventually lead to the advantage of the country, and regret that a man who has held important public office as Mr. Bennett has should stand in his place as one of the representatives for the important constitutency of St. John's West and declare that in spite of that he was going to oppose the bill because he felt that no man who had any regard for his own present or future political advantage would support it.

On behalf of the Government, sir, and particularly on behalf of myself and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is the minister in charge of this bill through this House, I assert that the question is not what present advantage or disadvantage may accrue to the Government or any member of the Government because of the stand they are taking in the matter; the only motive which is controlling the Government is the ultimate advantage which the leading members of the opposition admit will accrue to this colony by its passage, and even if it were true, as Mr. Bennett states, that our support of this bill will be to our political disadvantage in the interest of the colony, which interest it is our privilege to advance by our support of this measure. Otherwise we would be mere hirelings and time-servers, looking to our own political advantage rather than to the advantage of those whose best interests we are here to serve.

The most absurd criticism, however, that has been offered is that advanced by my hon. friends, Mr. MacDonnell, the member for St. George's, and Mr. Fox, the junior member for St. John's East, and the absurd line of reasoning which they advanced has been followed by some other members of the opposition. Messrs. MacDonnell and Fox take the position that it is highly improper for this House of Assembly to place in the hands of a commission, no matter how representative and capable, the power of making rules and regulations relating to the cure of codfish. Mr. Fox has pointed out that some years ago the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries objected to a section being put in the act for the incorporation of the Board of Trade under which the Board of Trade would be authorised to do this very thing. These gentlemen argued that the House was acting in an unconstitutional manner and was delegating its powers to a body of men not responsible to this legislature and not responsible to the country. These gentlemen declared the most aggressive hostility to this measure based upon these arguments. My hon. friends evidently omitted to take the trouble to read the bill. The commission referred to in paragraph 1, and of the bill is authorised "to prepare and draft rules and regulations for the improvement of the manner in which salt codfish is prepared for sale and transported." If that commission were authorised by the bill not merely to prepare and draft rules and regulations but to first prepare and draft rules and regulations and then on their own responsibility to enforce them, the criticisms of my hon. friends would be perfectly in order and the case would be parallel to that objected to by the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Coaker, when he took the position ten years ago that such powers should not be placed in the hands of the Board of Trade. I would point out, however, that the very next section, namely, Section Four, the section which my hon. friends omitted to read, provides as follows:

"All such rules and regulations shall be laid before His Excellency the Governor in Council for approval, and if and when so approved and published in The Royal Gazette shall have the force and effect of law as if incorporated in this act."

Thus their entire argument is absurd. The commission merely prepares and drafts rules and regulations. These rules and regulations must then be laid before His Excellency the Governor in Council. The rules and regulations do not come into effect until they have been so approved. The body responsible to this House and responsible to the people of the country for all rules and regulations is consequently not the commission, which has merely power to prepare and draft rules and regulations and to submit them to the Council; the body responsible to this legislature and to the country is the Executive Government. Thus Section Four of the bill answers emphatically the arguments advanced b ythe hon. members opposite against this measure.

Mr. Fox argues that because Mr. Coaker opposed this power being given to the Board of Trade some years ago, he is now contradicting himself in vesting the power in this commission. Mr. Coaker has pointed out that he opposed the power being vested in the Board of Trade for two reasons: First, because the Board of Trade would not be a representative body for the purpose of making rules and regulations in connection with the cure of codfish. It would be representative of the wealthy classes; it would be representative of the fish buyers and the fish shippers, but it would not be representative of the middle-man, the schooner owner and the fisherman. To put this matter entirely in the hands of the Board of Trade, as was the proposition to which Mr. Coaker objected some years ago, would be putting it in the hands of a class which could not be regarded as in any way representative of and in any certain instances sympathetic with the interest of the fisherman. This commission is to be a truly representative commission. There will be on it members of the Board of Trade. It will be non-political, because on it there will be members of the opposition as well as members of the government. There will be no class distinction because on the commission will be practical fishermen, and the various sections of the country will be properly represented. Thus, sir, it is patent to even the most careless thinker that the parallel suggested by my honourable friend does not exist. Then again, the Board of Trade would be open to all the criticisms and objections which my hon. friends, Messrs. MacDonnell and Fox, hurled against this bill because they had omitted to read Section Four to which I have already referred. Mr. Coaker objected to the Board of Trade being given this authority not merely because it would mean that the buying and shipping classes would be regulating this important matter for all classes, but because that body would not be responsible to this House and would not be responsible to the people of the country. All the objections which Mr. Fox urged against this measure are the objections which Mr. Coaker urged against these powers being vested in the Board of Trade. These are arguments which I would myself urge against this bill if these rules and regulations were to be made and enforced by this commission entirely on its own responsibility and without governmental control. But, sir, such is not the case. Under Section Four of the act it is the executive government, responsible to this house and responsible to the people, which passes rules and regulations prepared by this commission and submitted for approval or otherwise, and these rules and regulations do not become law until so approved. Thus again the parallel suggested by Mr. MacDonnell and Mr. Fox is seen not to exist.

I must again quote Mr. Bennett when he stated that the reason why he opposed this bill was because of its revolutionary character, and say that I support this bill, and call upon the entire opposition to follow the leadership of the practical fishery experts of the opposition. Sir Michael Cashin and Sir John Crosbie, who have already voiced their support of the measure, and give this bill a unanimous passage in this chamber. I support it because I believe it will, as the years go by, revolutionize the curing of codfish in this country. Newfoundland imports beef and pork and flour, and it knows the quality of the article by the brand that is on the barrel. Why should not Newfoundland codfish go forth to the foreign market in such a way that the foreign purchaser will know the class and quality of the fish that is in the package by the brand that is on it? The time has come, sir, when we must depart forever from the loose, unbusiness like, unscientific and haphazard methods used in connection with the curing of our codfish and get an article which will have a recognized standard in the foreign market, so that the name "Newfoundland" on the head of a fish-drum will be as well known in the fish markets of the world as is the name of Cape Race known throughout the world of wireless telegraphy.

It has been suggested that this is a bill which may penalise the fishermen and possibly subject them to fines and forfeitures in connection with the ordinary conduct by them year by year of their fishery operations. I feel that that position has already been made abundantly clear to the House. I would merely point out in this connection that the fishermen are not to be subject to fines and forfeitures as to compel them to improve the cure of codfish. The fishermen are to be educated into better methods of cure; they are to be informed by circulars and pamphlets from the Department of Marine and Fisheries as to how best to handle their fish. They will be encouraged in every effort to treat fish as an article of human food and to cure it in such a way that it will fetch the best price in the foreign market. The only fines and forfeitures, sir, will be the disadvantage which will accrue to the careless or indifferent man who will not interest himself in improving his cure and will consequently not get as good as if he had taken more care in preparing it. The ide aof the harsh enforcement of penalties against fishermen for the violation of rules and regulations laid down under the authority of this act is not within the contemplation of the government, but rather will rules and regulations be made for the guidance of the fishermen in the improvement of the cure, and to enable them to get the very best price that they possibly can for the article which their toil produces, the article which forms the staple export product of this colony.

I again, sir, call upon this House in the name of the fishermen of Newfoundland and our staple industry, to give this bill unanimous support and let us see to it that the name "Newfoundland" identified with codfish will be a brand of honor and security to the purchaser who when he sees the name on the package will know that the package contains just what it represents itself to contain, and not of uncertain grade and quality as has so often happened in the past.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman, cut out those last few words about the fixing of penalties in sub-section 7. I do not think that those words ought be tacked on to that section, but should merely come in as a new paragraph altogether.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, just a word arising out of the remarks of the hon. leader of the government. I think it has been disclosed from the debate generally that the only point upon which there is any attitude of apparent opposition taken is the principle with reference to the powers given to the advisory board.

Might I suggest, if it is necessary to suggest it, and it is the position we take on this side of the house in the matter, that the Governor-in-Council will see when this commission has reported that ample opportunity in the way of notice shall be given where minor matters might be treated as something to be penalized for and for which the people should be prepared. I think that point will occur to the Hon.

Minister of Marine and Fisheries when he looks at sub-section 2 of section 3 and later at sub-section 4. The point I make is this, that I recognize myself that in a matter of this kind the regulations cannot be haphazard but as thorough and as proper as it is possible to make them. I realise that it is a big question and it is going to take the commission, no matter how well chosen or how competent they may be, a considerable time to deal with it, as the scope of advising is large and as that advising may take in regulations that might appear trivial at first and yet make considerable inconvenience if introduced in a careless, haphazard fashion.

Regarding the district of St. John's East, I would only ask the Governor-in-Council that if they are going to have any radical change of method for the treatment of fish that we get more than one single notice and that before they give effect of law to any change they may desire that the fullest and most extended notice possible be given throughout the country.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for St. John's East has clearly stated the views of the Government in this regard. The bill is intended to help, not to impede; to encourage, not to penalize. No drastic measures will be undertaken. Information will be circulated amongst the fishermen, and everything possible that can be done to help and encourage them towards the improvement of the cure of fish will be undertaken. Ample notice will be given as to any rules and regulations recommended by the commission and approved of by the Governor-in-Council. Improvements in the cure of fish can be brought about only by interesting the fishermen and letting them see for themselves that it is to the advantage of the fishing industry of the colony, which means to their own individual advantage, to improve the cure, and not by attempting hasty or unreasonable pressure.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Chairman, there is just one point that I am not clear on. As stated this afternoon, I welcome the bill and, perhaps, may vote for it. With regard to the personnel of the commission. I am glad that the hon. minister has tendered an invitation to this side of the House to act on it. I would like to see at least two practical fishermen on that commission. I mean men who are actually engaged catching fish. A man may have been a practical fisherman in his past life and to-day be a buyer and an exporter, and with all respect for that particular class of man, it would give an idea that he was looking after his own interest, and it may be thought among the fishermen that their interests were not safeguarded.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the hon. member, I might say that I do not know whether it would be wise to state the names of two practical fishermen, but I can certainly promise him that shall be. The fish exporters had a meeting a few days ago and asked me to include five exporters on the commission and to be elected by the Board of Trade. I objected to such a proposal because first it was dictating to us, and next that five would be all the membership of the commission. Immediately the impression got about that we were allowing the Board of Trade to dominate us. I got busy. With regard to the question of the hon. member for Placentia, I would inform him that there will be two practical fishermen on the commission and probably three. In reference to the suggestion of the Hon. Mr. Higgins as to notice to be given. I am prepared to alter that clause, making it imperative that 30 days notice be given, so that on every occasion when the rules and regulations are brought into force, at least 30 days notice will be given.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendments.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to provide for the better obtaining of information respecting the Cod Fishery."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Regarding this bill some of my friends on the opposite side object to it because information is given to the foreign markets as regarding the catch of fish. I do not know whether there is much in that objection, but if they feel that the information should not go out of the country I have no objection to inserting that in the bill. But I would like to point out ,no matter what the bill contains, the information will go abroad. Every country has its representative here in St. John's. Brazil knows what is going on here. Italy knows what amount of fish is caught here, and the Portuguese Government has all the information it requires, and even if we put a clause in this bill, prohibiting the information going abroad, it will have no effect in so preventing the foreign markets. We know week by week what catch there is in Norway, but nevertheless this knowledge by us does not affect the markets where the Norwegian fish goes. Every up-to-date business man abroad knows what is going on in Newfoundland, and if he does not know why he is carrying on business in the twentieth century. I have no desire that we injure the fishermen's interests in Newfoundland by giving out information, and if it will improve their interests, I have no objection to inserting something to that effect in the bill.

Now, the principle of the bill is that all schooners arriving in Newfoundland shall have to report within forty-eight hours after their arrival and state the quantity of fish on board and whether it is to be made as Labrador shore or Labrador soft, or shore and the possession of these facts will help us to know the quantity of fish we shall have to offer to the foreign markets and of the quantity of stocks we have for each. The point in connection with this bill that the exporters will be able to get fair ideas of the stocks held and the different qualities contained in the various stocks. This is necessary information for the advisory board. That board should know what fish there is to be shipped and for what markets it is suitable. This may not be perfect as it will not cover the shore fishery, but we can get the information from the sub-collectors which will be fairly reliable, although in some sections it is not as accurate as it might be. The Labrador catch has always been uncertain.

In 1917, we had a meeting of the exporters and one member stated that there was over half a million quintals of Labrador fish and they could only offer about three dollars and sixty cents per quintal. The fact of the matter was that there was only three hundred thousand quintals of fish that year. Now this statement had the effect of sending a fog along Water St. and created a despondency, but we informed the exporters that the Italian Government wanted a lot of fish. The information put life in the buyers, and consequently the price started at five dollars and fifty cents per quintal and not three dollars and sixty cents. Last year all believed that the Labrador catch was a very large one. It turned out that there was not enough Labrador fish to go round and it has been disposed of at a fair price. If the trade knew stocks of Labrador were so short last fall, they would have held for higher prices, but they were anxious to sell and wanted to dispose of it at any price before the crash came. The price fell from one hundred and five shillings down to seventy-nine because of inaccurate information. If, in the future, we find that we can obtain from the statistics of the fish inspectors certain information as regards the shore catch, we shall have power, under this act, to secure suc hinformation.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendments.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Vinnicombe gave notice of question.

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to confirm a Contract between the Government and the 'Susu Steamship Company, Ltd.'"

Hon. Mr. Foote gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 183 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Management and Control of the Harbor of Grand Bank.'"

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to confirm a Contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Steamship Pulp & Lumber Company, Ltd."

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, I wish to avail of this opportunity to call your attention and the attention of the hon. members to what I consider to be the most brutal, cowardly and absolutely uncalled for attack which has ever been made against any public man in my memory. I had listened with a great deal of attention and pleasure a few nights ago when Sir John Crosbie made an honest and gentlemanly appeal for a cleaner public press, and I had hoped that the Hon. the Prime Minister, who is the controlling factor in the management of one of our daily papers, The Star, would try and bring sufficient reform to bear on his personal organ so that decent citizens might be able to permit its entry into their homes without risking the future purity of their innocent little children. But, sir, I am sorry to say that the whole stock-in-trade of The St. John's Daily Star appears to me to be gutter snipe journalism, and The Daily Star seems to have a goodly stock of gutter snipes amongst its scribblers. The misleading, contemptible reference to me, which appears to-day's issue of The Star, can have only one object, and that object to do me a personal injury, not a political injury either, and sir, if we were now engaged in a political contest I may be able to forgive the writer on the grounds that his political enthusiasm was allowed for the moment to stultify his manhood, but sir, I am convinced that manhood is no characteristic part of the writer, and I am glad that his real identity is unknown to me, for if I knew him the results would be painful if not disastrous, for him. Not only is insult offered to me, but the contemptible cur, the disreputable vampire hurls his insult from behind the screen of his infamous filthy sheet, in the faces of the thousands of honest, respectable, independent electors of the historic district of Placentia and St. Mary's, who sent me to this Assembly as one of their representatives, and sent me here with no crawl-in-vote, either, but as an appreciation of my six years' services, gave me over five hundred increased majority over my 1913 vote, a district which has sent its sons to fill honored positions both in church and state.

Mr. Speaker, I have no newspaper to defend me, but I have my seat in this chamber, and I am going to avail of my constitutional right to defend myself from this scandal-monger, and yellow journalistic crook. Only a foul, base and diseased mind could deliberately put in cold type such a mendacious utterance. Irepeat, sir, that this literary assassin is a cold-blooded reptile, is unfit for human society, and his proper place is slouching aimlessly in the polluted waters of a dead sea, with serpents of his class and breeding for company.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until Monday next, 10th inst., at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, May 10, 1920

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled the report of the Minister of Agriculture, 1919.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave ta present a petition from the inhabitants of Cannaille South, Bonavista, for the sum of $150,00 for the purpose of digging and concreting a public well in that part of the town. The supply of water at this place is somewhat impure, so much so that annual visit of typhoid fever has been the result. Pure water is essential to pure health so I hope this matter will be given the attention it deserves by the department to which it relates.

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I have pleasure in supporting this petition.

MR. MacDONNELL.—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Curling and Summerside for a grant for a cross ferry.

At the present moment the only ferry in that bay is one that makes several round trips every day. This petition is for a cross ferry to connect with the train. It would take about $1200,-00 to operate a gasoline boat.

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Safe Harbor. It is signed by the inhabitants of that place and of the adjourning places, and askes for the sum of money for the improvement of the road to the church and school; also for a sum of money for the repair of the road from Loo Cove to Safe Harbor. Also a petition that Safe Harbor be made a port of call for the bay boat. Also a petition that a light be placed on Pool's Harbor Shagg Rock.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Fogo asking for the sum of $3,000-00 to erect a public wharf. The landing wharf at Fogo was destroyed some years ago, and since then the people of that important place have been at a great disadvantage in this respect. The petitioners asks that a wharf be erected near the Court House which is centrally located. The object of the people of Fogo is to have a Post Office erected on this site later on, and having the wharf in close proximity, the handling of mail matter can be greatly facilitated. Every Hon. Member in this House I am sure will admit that Fogo is one of our most important Northern Outport towns, and that an effort should be made to give them this much needed public facility. I ask that this petition be received and referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries when I feel sure it will receive due consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the residents of Joe Batt's Arm asking for a small sum of $50.00 for the purpose of digging a public well. Perhaps no part of Newfoundland has suffered so much because of the lack of a sufficient supply of pure water as this section of Fogo district. From Fogo to Tilting the formation of the land is such as to render it very difficult to obtain pure water, and I propose to ask the Government this year for a sum of money to purchase a Keystone Well Drill, by which I hope to solve the water problem in the district. I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of this petition.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition from the Members of the Society of United Fshermen of Seldom Come By, asking for the sum of $100. for the purpose of building a road leading to the Hall. This road is also one that is used by the general public. Last year, I happened to go to this place and found only a rugged footpath there, in fact the place was positively dangerous to travel by night, and I realize the necessity of attending to this matter at the very earliest moment. I have much pleasure in presenting this petition, and would ask the Department of Public Works to have a sum allocated for this purpose.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:— Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a word or two with reference to the answer to a question of mine, tabled by the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs. As you are aware Sir, reference has been made in the recent debating in this House to a charge publicly made against my daughter, and in which the insinuation was thrown out that there had been wrongdoing in the Department of Finance of which I was the head at the time this charge that I now refer to, was made. One of the principal features of an address delivered by the Leader of the Government to his constituents in St. John's West at a meeting held by him and his colleague during the campaign previous to the bye-election at the Majestic Theatre, was that Cashin's daughter had received over two thousand dollars in commissions for selling bonds in connection with the loan of 1918. Altho there were some sixty other names on the list from which the name of my daughter was picked out, the leader of the government was unfair and ungentlemanly enough to pass over the others so as to make it appear that only the one amount had been paid. Naturally, I took exception to this and asked that the full list of the names be tabled. Now sir, what really happened was this. The government of the day, two members of which were Messrs. Coaker and Halfyard, decided to allow a discount of two per cent to any person buying bonds to the value of fifty thousand dollars or over and to pay a commission of two per cent to any person selling bonds to the value of the same amount. My daughter took something over one hundred thousand dollars worth of bonds and received this discount and I want it to go down in the Hansard so that the matter may be set right before the public that if my daughter did wrong in getting this discount so did the sixty odd others whose names are on the list I have here and which I shall now read to the House.

You will see sir that there are on this list more than sixty names and the amount involved is between fifty and sixty thousand dollars but in spite of this fact my daughter's name was the only one picked out to be held up to ridicule and in order to give out the impression that I, in my official capacity, did wrong in paying this money.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— I realize that the honourable the Leader of the Opposition was out of order in the observations which he has just made and that I too am out of order in replying, but I feel that the House will extend to me that courtesy. Sir Michael Cashin has again stated that which I have already denied. He has repeated his statement that at a political meeting held in the Majestic Theatre in January last the Minister of Finance and Customs, the Hon. Mr. Brownrigg, and myself, singled out the name of his daughter, Miss Mary Cashin, for the purpose of attack, because she had received $2,500 from the finance office, when Sir Michael was Minister of Finance, as commission on the sale of Newfoundland Government bonds. I merely repeat that Sir Michael Cashin's statement is false. I am not aware that Mr. Brownrigg referred to Miss Cashin's name on that or any other occasion. He may have done so, but I do not remember hearing him do so, and if he did make anything more than a casual reference to her name at that meeting I should probably remember it. As I have already informed Sir Michael Cashin in this House, what happened was this. Sir Michael Cashin published a letter in The Evening Telegram criticising the Minister of Finance, Mr. Brownrigg, and asking him to get from his Department a statement of the disbursements in connection with the floatation of the loan. Sir Michael's intention in writing the letter was to discredit his opponent, Mr. Brownrigg, and suggest that he did not know how the costs were made up. A statement was secured from Mr. Keating in accordance with Sir Michael's suggestion in the letter. While I was addressing the meeting in the Majestic Theatre referring to the loan a list of a considerable number of those who had received large commissions was handed me, and I read the list. Sir Michael has again suggested that the only name mentioned was that of his daughter. Sir Michael is again stating that which I have already denied, and in repeating the statement he is saying what he must know to be false. The entire list of the scores who received small amounts as just read by him in the House was not read by me, neither was such a list handed me. I was not interested in the payments of $5.00 or $50.00; I was interested in the payments of thousands of dollars, and as Miss Cashin had received from the Finance Office one of the largest amounts paid any broker or commission merchant in connection with the sale of bonds her name was read in conjunction with the names of a number of others who had received large amounts. The statement that Sir Michael makes that her name was the only name referred to is absolutely incorrect.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I was not at the meeting and do not know what you said, but her name was singled out in The Star newspaper.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I am not discussing what appeared during the course of the political campaign in any newspaper, whether supporting the present government or opposed to it; I am dealing only with the allegation made by Sir Michael Cashin that Mr. Brownrigg and myself singled out the name of his daughter, Miss Mary Cashin, and referred to her only as a broker or commission merchant who had received a large sum of money from the Treasury in connection with the sale of Government bonds. Sir Michael Cashin says that some lists were held back. I know of no lists being held back; the list that I read was the list of the people who had received the large amounts and his daughter's name was one of the list. I did not have any list of the multitude of small amounts which Sir Michael has just read, and if I did have it I would not have wearied a public audience by reading it. Sir Michael has said that there was a suggestion of wrong doing on the part of his daughter in connection with the saie of these bonds. Ihave heard of no such suggestion. So far as I know, so far as I have read in the papers, so far as I have heard on the street, there is absolutely nothing more and nothing less in the transaction than that an arrangemen was made by Sir Michael Cashin, then Minister of Finance and Customs, with his daughter under which certain bonds which might have been sold direct by the Finance Office were sold by Sir Michael through his daughter, Miss Mary Cashin, who made the usual brokers commission for herself on the transactions. It is not suggested that she received from the Finance Office a bigger commission than was paid any other broker or was paid any banker or other person who dealt in Government bonds.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I, too, Mr. Speaker, fail to see why Miss Cashin should have been chosen as the victim of this piece of misrepresentation. This was a legitimate amount paid according to an arrangement practically passed by this Assembly and anybody might have received it, as indeed many did, who complied with the provisions of that arrangement. This thing, Sir, should go before the public in its true light so that the wrong already done by the mis-statement of the facts might be set right. I know people who pooled together in buying these bonds in order to get the discount, and there was nothing wrong about it because, as I have stated before, the thing was practically passed by this legislature. I do not think for a moment that the Prime Minister would want to do Miss Cashin a personal injury but nevertheless the matter was placed before the public in a very unfair manner.

Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs in the absence of Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries tabled answer to question asked by Mr. Vinnicombe, as follows: "If Mr. Holwell, fish warden, had been dismissed. If so, for what cause, and if anyone has been appointed in his place."

Petitions were presented by Mr. Abbott from Canaile re public wharf; Mr. MacDonnell, from Bay of Islands, re ferry; Mr. Winsor, from Safe Harbor, re roads; Mr. Hibbs, from Fogo, re landing place; Mr. Hibbs, from Joe Batt's Arm, re public wharf; Mr. Hibbs, from Seldom Come Bye, re road.

Pursuance to notice and leave granted and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to confirm a Contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Steamship Pulp and Lumber Company, Ltd.," was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. Mr. Foote the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 183 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Management and Control of the Harbor of Grand Bank'" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

SIR M. P. CASHIN asked the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs to table a statement showing cost of loan of $6,000,000 passed by this House May 8th, 1919.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the bill entitled "An Act for the Better Obtaining of Information respecting the Codfishery" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Women's Patriotic Association of Newfoundland" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act to Regulate the Exportation of Codfish."

Sir John Crosbie gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 11th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from quite a number of the trap owners of Pouch Cove in the District of St. John's East in reference to a matter that has of late been occupying the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, namely, the drawing of trap berths. This petition requests first that the drawing for berths in that particular section be deferred for a year, and secondly that the Pouch Cove and Bicayan Cove voters be "pooled" for a common drawing. This latter request, in the light of the peculiar circumstances, is, I think you will admit, is, a reasonable one. The position is this. Biscayan Cove, which is practically a part of Pouch Cove, has ten prime berths, while there are only four trap owners there to draw for them, and what is asked is that the remainder of these berths be thrown open to the Pouch Cove men. Little need be said in an explanatory way as the matter is already one of which the department has already some knowledge but I would ask the immediate attention of the minister himself be given to this petition because it is made in good faith by these hardworking and industrious fishermen and because if it is not found practical to defer the drawing it might at least be found practical to combine, as it were, the waters of Biscayan Cove and Pouch Cove, or in other words give the trap men of Pouch Cove and Biscayan Cove a prior right to set berths in that section which embraces the two places. I think it will be conceded that if the drawing takes place the bona fide residents of the cove itself should have the preference to the berths, and I say this so that our friends on the North Shore who cross over for the fishing season there will understand that the men who are on the spot and actually living and rearing their families on the St. John's East shore will be given first chance to secure berths in their own waters. I have no doubt that the Fisheries Department will see that the petitioners get fair play. I appreciate, of course, the difficulties with which the department is faced in grouping up these berths and having them drawn for, but in asking that this matter be given the earliest consideration of the department I would point out that the necessity for this exists in the fact that some decision must be arrived at before the proclamation governing the drawing of berths be issued.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the petition presented by my learned colleague, and I also ask that the department give the matter its immediate and active consideration. The question is an important one and I think when all the facts are taken into account there will be little doubt about this reasonable request being granted.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to give this petition my fullest support and in doing so I would suggest that the Fishery Board might take into consideration the fact that this matter of arranging berths should be attended to, at least so far as this section is concerned, in the fall instead of in the spring for the reason that it would be a very great hardship on these hard working men after keeping their berths all the winter to lose them in the spring. In addition to the loss of the berths there would be the trouble and expense of changing their traps to make them either deeper or shoaler, as the case might be to suit the new berth. I think, sir, that such an arrangement would be most unfair to them and more particularly when they are all satisfied to have the matter settled as this petition requests.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I would like to ask the hon. member for St. John's East if the place in question is not common fishing grounds for the people of Pouch Cove and Biscayan Cove.

MR. HIGGINS:—It has been in the main: The men from Pouch Cove have fished in Biscayan Cove waters but they were used exclusively by Biscayan Cove fishermen and in part by men from Pouch Cove. But the trouble is that in the summer seven or eight traps belonging to Bay de Verde people are laid down there between Shoe Cove and Biscayan Cove it is a great hardship to the people in that settlement as they have to go elsewhere. The same occurred last yeai at the Battery and the drawing was postponed for another year.

MR. MacDONNELL:— Notice of questions.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— to ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "and act to confirm a contract between the government and the Susu steamship company Ltd."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to withdarw that motion.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—To ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "an act to regulate the exportation of codfish."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— on behalf of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—I ask leave to withdraw that motion as it proposed to bring it in by recoultion of committee.

NOTICE OF QUESTIONS

ORDER OF THE DAY.

Committee of the whode on bill entitled "An Act to amend chapter 172 of the consolidated statutes (third series) entitled "of the survey of foreign going and Labrador vessels."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I move that this stand deferred owing to the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Second reading of bill entitled "an act to amend the Judicature Act."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—In proposing an amendment to the judicature act I desire to say, although it may come as news to the members of this House lawyers fees for cases tried in court have been fixed by law. Owing to the high cost of living as leader of the bar I have been asked to present this bill. It consists of a higher scale and a lower scale, but I may say that the mere face of a scale beng here dosen't say that this amount will be paid. All clients who take their cases into court are entitled to have the bill taxed. If the amount s too high he may take it to the register who will reduce it. This is similar to the English scale only t is not so high. It is also found necessarw that an increase be made in the scale of fees for a witness.

Today a witness is paid 75 cents and he makes every effort to staw away from court with the result that the administration of justice meets with many obsticles on thic account. The most important of all is the scale of fees to sherffs and process servers. Many deputy sheriffs get 50 cents for serving a writ and 25 cents for every mile over two miles, with the result that sometimes a whole morning s spent in serving a writ for this amount and there is great difficulty in keeping sheliffs on the list. Therefore I ask an increase and if not lone I fear it will be impossible to get a writ served.

MR. HIGGINS:—I rise to second that motion and I may be able to corrobate the statements of the Hon. Minister of Justice having actual experience of the facts as they are today.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to uresent a petition from the residents of Point LeHayse, P.B., asking for the sum of $200 to repair a road leading from the main road over to Holyrood Pond. This road is a very important one for the reason that all the fence material used by the people of that place as well as the material used for fishery purposes such as stages, flakes, etc., and the material used n several small mills has to be hauled over it and it is therefore imperative that something should be done to keep t in good condition. I might point out, sir, that since this road was made there has been no provision made for repairs to it and it has had to depend on small sums that might be devoted to its up-keep from special grant. The same thing applies all over the districe, there being, in many cases, no provision whatever for main roads. I trust the Minister of Publc Works will find it convenient to consult with the different representatives of dstricts with a view to increasing the grants for main line roads all over the country as the grants are at present hopelessly inadequate. There are in some sections main line roads of from five to eight miles long for which there is no provision whatever for maintenance out of the main line grants. I hope, sir, that before the estimates go thru this matter will receive serious consderation as there is no time like the present to deal with important matters of this kind.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I give this petition my hearty support for the reasons outlined by my colleague, Mr. Sullivan, and I also endorse his request that the representatives of the various districts be consulted with in order to have the annual grant read-justed to meet the growing demands of main line roads which have built from time to time from special grants. There are fifteen such in Placentia district and some of them have railway connections. A few have been added to the list o fthose receiving a share of the annual grant, but there are still a number of wrich no provision has been made and now when the estimates are about to be brought in is the time for something to be done.

MR. SINNOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I also have much pleasure in giving this petition my hearty support.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Walsh gave notice of question.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of puestion.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Terenceville, F. B., asking for a sum of money to complete a pier and breakwater which is now unde construction. In presenting this petition I wish to give it my fullest support and I might point out that Terenceville will in the near future be the terminus of the branch railway, the line for which has already been surveyed and promises, therefore, to be a flurishing settlement.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Cupids asking for a modification in the present prohibition law. This petition is signed by 160 names which are certified by two prominent residents o fthe place, Abram LeDrew and James LeDrew. As I have already asked the prime minister what is the intention with regard to this matter and been informed by him that the government has come to no decision, I would ask that this petition be allowed to stand over until the matter comes up before the House.

M. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, 1 ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of St. Brendan's asking for the sum of $250 to repair a road leading from Shoal Cove to Shalloway Cove, known as Hall's Road. They also ask for a sum of $250 to repair another road leading from Hayward's Cove to the cemetery, known as Dock Cove Road. This petition is signed by partically all the electore of St. Brendan's and I trust the government wlli give their request the fullest consideration. I ask sir, that this petition be refered to the Department of Public Works, and hope that it will be given the consideation that it deserves.

MR. WINSOR:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the prayer of this petition and I trust that the government will see its way clear to grant the sums asked for to make these very necessary repairs.

Sir J. C. Crosbie asked the Minister of Justice if Magistrate Mifflin of Greenspond had been transferred. If so, why? And to state to what place Mr. Mifflin had been trans ferred and what will be the nature of his duties.

Sir J. C. Crosbie asked the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs if the postmistress at Squid Tickle, B.B., Miss A. Burden, has been dismissed. If so, why? Has any charge been made against her? If so to lay a copy of such charge on the table of the house.

On motion the notices respecting the bills entitled "An Act to confirm a contract between the Government and the Susu Steamship Co., Ltd.," and "An Act to regulate the exportation of codfish," were withdrawn.

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to move the House into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions regarding the exportation of codfish from this colony.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Judicature Act" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, "An Act to confirm a contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Steamship Pulp & Lumber Company Ltd." was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill in confirmation of a contract between the government and the St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company, I would observe that this contract is not one for which the present administration is primarily responsible. During the year 1919 negotiations were pending between the late government and the company with respect to this matter. The arrangements had not been completed when the late government was defeated on the third of November last, and shortly after their defeat at the polls and before they resigned from office a minute of council was passed under which an agreement was concluded. The document gives evidence on the face of it of being hurriedly drafted and not fully considered in the interests of the Colony. It was signed by the company, the great seal affixed thereto, and forwarded to His Excellency the Governor for signature. The document contained certain sections which were in direct conflict with the 1919 act relating to the exportation of timber, and as the administration responsible for the minute of council had in the meanwhile retired from office, the document came before the present executive government for consideration, as the completion of its execution was a matter for which the present Government would be responsible. A perusal of the contract disclosed the fact that in eseveral particulars the interests of the Colony had not been protected as fully as in the opinion of the present administration they should be protected, and it was also thought that the concessions with respect to the exportation of pitprops should be reduced. As a result of the refusal of the Executive Government to undertake responsibility for the completion of the execution of the document and act of confirmation of the contract in the form in which it was passed by the late administration, there was a series of conferences between representatives of the company, the Attorney General, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and myself, in the hope that this legacy of the late administration might be put into a form which would not be entirely objectionable to the Government and at the same time acceptable to the company. After a considerable number of conferences this was accomplished. The size of pitprops permitted to be exported was reduced; the section relating to fredom from certain general taxation was modified; a section was added providing for the appointment by the Government of an inspector to see that the provisions of the contract were carried out by the company; the salary of the inspector to be paid by the company; a provision was inserted to the effect that the fredom from taxation on securities, etc., applied only in the event of the company not making a profit of seven per cent.; a provision was inserted calling for the continued operation of the company's pulp and paper enterprise, and various other restrictions necessary in the interests of the Colony were included in the contract.

Hon. The Prime Minister (Continued.)

The result is that I am now in a position to submit to this House for confirmation a contract which while in the matter of the exportation of piptrops is not strictly in harmony with the general policy of the administration is nevertheless a contract which may be regarded as reasonably satisfactory in the general interests of the Colony; a contract which is certainly very much superior to the contract approved of by the late administration. The bill is not in any sense of the word a party measure. The contract itself is a legacy of the late administration. In the form in which it was when the present Government took charge of affairs I would not be prepared to submit it for ratification to the legislature, but with the modifications which have since been made in the contract and concurred in by the company, I can recommend the contract to the House as worthy of its careful consideration and undivided support.

The St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company is an English company incorporated under the laws of Great Britain and Ireland, with its registered office at Sheepbridge Works, Chesterfield, England. The company is strong financially, its directorate being a body of capable, wealthy English gentlemen who propose to develop on a small scale an enterprise at Lomond, in the district of St. Barbe, similar to the undertakings of the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, at Grand Falls. For some time past they have been operating a saw mill in that neighbourhood and have already shown themselves to be a company which deals honorably and courteously with its employees and is prepared to operate its areas, not merely in the interests of immediate profit, but rather with a view to the development of valuable business undertakings of a permanent character.

The House will be interested to know that Dr. Grieve, who for so many years was prominently identified with the Grenfell undertakings in Newfoundland, has for some time past been the Newfoundland manager of the company, and I am quite sure that with the financial strength and responsibility of its directorate and under the able management of Dr. Grieve, the St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company, Limited, will develop an important pulp, paper and timber enterprise in the Bonne Bay area, in the district of St. Barbe.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow move the House into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions respecting the lighting of streets in the outports.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion of adjournment, I wish to draw the attention of the Hon. the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, to what I consider to be an important matter. I just noticed now that another serious accident has happened on Bell Island, and I notice one of the victims has died, and the other is in a serious condition. Now I claim that there should be a competent man appointed immediately as inspector of mines. It is not good enough to be reading of these accidents happening on Bell Island, and some of them are caused because we have not a competent inspector, a man who is prepared to do his duty by the public, without fear or prejudice. I believe there is a man supposed to be doing some such work, and there should be an inquiry into this. A man should have to undergo a stringent examination before he is given charge of underground work, and explosives, and I speak as one fully qualified to speak on this matter, because I spent some years at this work. Mr. Hall may be a good man in his line. He may know something about the technical part of mining, but he knows nothing about the practical part of it. I bring this matter before the Prime Minister in the hope that steps will be taken immediately, to put in that department, some practical, competent man, and I submit that he should be given sufficient salary, so that he will be independent of any corporation, or company, and he will be able to safeguard the lives of the men who partake in this dangerous work.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1920

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Twillingate, Moreton's Hr. and Salvage, B.B., requesting the erection of a breakwater at Twillingate. Twillingate, although not a good natural harbor, is nevertheless a port of call for many southern vessels going up and down the coast and especially the Labrador vessels. The inhabitants frequently suffer heavy losses through property being damaged by storms. The harbor is exposed to ocean gales from east to north and very often vessels drive ashore there in these gales, and in many cases are total wrecks. These petitioners now ask for a sum of money to put a breakwater in the most suitable place so as to make the harbor, as far as possible, a safe one. There was a request before the government for the deepening of Shoal Tickle but this is being waived in favor of the breakwater. This is I can assure the house from actual knowledge of the facts, a long felt want and I trust when the request goes before the department of the Colonial Secretary, it will receive the attention that its impolrtance entitles it o.

MR. JONES:—I beg to suport this petition, Mr. Speaker, as I know the great need that exists for this breakwater. Twillingate, as you know, sir, is the principal place in the district and further than that, it is an important harbor in other respects. It could not be in a better position fot the convenience of passing vessels but unfortunately it affords very poor shelter and consequently, as Mr. Jennings has pointed out, numbers of vessels are driven ashore there each year. I think you, Mr. Speaker, will remember that only last year a Carbonear vessel was lost there. Now that the young men of the district are looking forward to the future for the improvement of the fiisheries they expect that something will be done to improve conditions. Moreover this breakwater will be in the interests of all the people along the east coast and more particularly to schooners going north and south. I have much pleasure therefore in giving this petition my hearty support.

MR. SAMPSON:—Mr. Speaker, as the junior member for Twillingate, I also desire to give this petition my hearty support. Twillingate as you know, sir, is the capital of the north and considering this fact as well as the size of the town and the amount of business being carried on there, a special effort should be made to make it a safe place not only for Twillingate vessels but for all the vessels on that coast. I therefore join sir, with my colleagues, in asking that this petition be given the best consideration.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow move the House into a Committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions respecting a contract between the government and the Susu Shipping Company, Ltd.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Minister of Justice if the Royal Commission promised to be appointed some few days age to inquire into "The Woodford Affidavit" are yet in existance?. If so, kindly give the names of the commissioners and when they may proceed to business.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—A Royal Commission is being drafted. Chef Justice Horwood, Justice Kent and Hon. R. K. Bishop have been appointed and there is no reason why they should not proceed to business next week.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. Minister of public works if a contract has been made to continue the motor ferry service from Branch to St. Joseph's in St. Mary's Bay. Were tenders asked for contract, if so that a copy of all tenders be placed on the table of the House.

The information asked for was tabled.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the hon. the premier to lay on the table of the house all, or any, correspondence between the government and any parties in relation to the construction of a motor highway on the west coast, in the district of St. George's.

The Hon. Prime Minister—The correspondence is in course of preparation and will be tabled as soon as ready.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the minister of posts and telegraphs what price per hundred copies is being paid for the foreign news sheets mailed from the P. O. department to outport post offices not having telegraphic com[illegible]ication.

The Hon. Prime Minister—On behalf of the hon. minister of posts and telegraphs who is absent, I beg to say that this will be tabled as soon as possible.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the hon minister of finance and customs to table a statement showing the number of men left this colony since May 1st, to date.

The information asked for was tabled.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the minister of finance and customs to table a statement showing in detail the expenditure of loan six millions raised.

Minister of Finance & Customs—I will table a reply as soon as possible. It is now in course of preparation.

Pursuant to order and on motion of hon. the minister of marine and fisheries the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 172 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of the Survey of Foreign-going and Labrador Vessels.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair.

HON.MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—In this bill entitled "Of the Survey of Foreign-going and Labrador Vessels," I would like to draw your attention to an alteration made since the second reading in Section 4 of the bill. After the word "survey" the word "has" is replaced by the word "have." This word has been substituted in order to compel people to have them surveyed. As pointed out in the past similar laws were made but were not lived up to as no penalties were provided for a breach of the act.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that I endorse this bill, and I think, as the hon. minister of marine and fisheries says, it is very necessary but I would like to see a clause inserted dealing with certificates of masters and mates.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—A bill is being prepared to cover this matter.

I also wish to endorse a suggestion that has been recommended to me, that the act should provide, that on any breach of the act by the ship owners, that their vessels should not be given clearance until the fine was paid. It should be made incumbent upon them to comply with the terms of this act. In this matter the department would be able to see that the regulations are carried out.

With regards to section 6. This section compels a surveyor to do his duty. Section 5 defines what he has to do, but it is one thing to define duties and another thing to have such duties carried out. He must not pass any vessel that is not sea-worthy. We are going to make it a crime for surveyor to pass any vessel that is unseaworthy and are going to punish them is he does not do his duty in this despect.

Now with regard to Section 5. We will also note that any vessel built in Newfoundland must be built under Schedule B. All vessele must be up to schedule or they will not get certificate. Schedule B. is the class we havebeen building to entitle the builder to the bounty. It is impossible now for a vessel to sail unless qualfied under Schedule B. so the owner or masters in future will have to ask for an inspection or be fined.

Regarding Section 12. The registrar of shipping will have deputies in the outports and the governor-in-council will work out with the registrar of shipping where the mark must go and he will instruct sub-collectors in the outports where the load line must be placed. Now I think that this is a desirable bill. It will not be very stringent on a vessel of good construction, but any vessel not seaworthy will not be allowed to sail from Newfoundland. The act has been gone into by Lloyd's surveyor and officials in my department and a committee of shipping, and we are doing all that we can to make it perfect and all seem to be satisfied with it.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I think what Mr. Fov said is very correct, because it will get over the difficulty you want to get over and save a lot of trouble; besides, that is a matter that you will hold a vessel up on quicker than by imposing a thousand dollar fine.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the point raised by the Hon. Mr. Fox, we will amend Section 5 and add a new paragraph this way, No such ship shall be cleared for any voyage by any customs officer for a foreign port until she shall have received such certificate of seaworthiness."

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, in connection with that amendment would it not be better to say that No clearance shall be granted until the registar, or the official placed in charge, is satisfied that the requirements of the act would be carried out." This would not limit the application of the act, and if we recognize the necessity for putting in a clause this would make it as wide as possible.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—And the man in charge would get his share for the survey, I presume, and the master of the vessel would be able to carry his certificate with him to whatever port he would be bound.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:— Certainly..

Mr. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, with regard to this Section 7. Whilst I realize the idea, which seems, perhaps, to be a great hardship to discontinue a vessel that is not seaworthy, what is the point in allowing a vessel to run for twelve months, if she is not seaworthy. I think that is too long. If a vessel is not fit to go, why let her go? You are giving a men a long period to jockey with a vessel that is unfit.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I think it is a mistake to give too long a time Make it read for one trip.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—It is only meant for one trip. However, we shall make the section read "not more than six months." With regard to Section 9. How is 100 tons? Do you think we ought to make it 120.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I think you are all right there, 100 tons is plenty.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—We intend to follow the imperial measure as far as possible. Reads Section 3 bill entitled "Of the survey of Foreign-going and Labrador Vessels."

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Now, is this bill "Of the survey of Foreign-going and Labrador Vessels" to come into force as soon as it is passed? How is this going to effect foreign-going vessels?

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—If this bill comes into effect after the passing of this measure there may be a hardship (Of the survey of foreign-going vessels).

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—This measure (Of the survey of foreign-going and Labrador vessels) shall come into effect by proclamation and then sufficient time will be allowed.

MR. HIGGINS:—Why put the government in the position of having this bill (Of the survey of foreign-going and Labrador Vessels) come into effect by proclamation and then allowing a certain time?

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—This act shall come into force six months after the passing of this measure. How would that be?

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Maybe six months would be too long. Should come into force after August 31st. A lot of vessels have returned by then.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—Come into force three months from the date of the passing of this act.

SIR JOHN C. CROSBIE: — Mr. Chairman, before this section 10 takes effect I would like to call the attention of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that I think there is some law on the statute book dealing with the survey of vessels going to Labrador. I also wish to point out to the Hon. Member that I know that this law is not carried out. Now we ought to see that this law is carried out as near as we can. At the present time the people sailing to Labrador do so in nothing short of floating stages. They are not treated like human beings at all and this is something we ought look into. I do not know much about the people going down shore fishing but I do not think this applies to people going fishing down in Bonavista and Green Bays. But in Conception Bay something must be done or else we will wake up some day because of some disastrous happening and then say how sorry we are. This can be avoided, and what I saw of it was enough. On one occasion I saw the Diana sail and the people aboard were treated in a most inhuman fashion. I think the Hon. Speaker of the House knows Conception Bay and he may be able to make so suggestions to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I make the appeal on behalf of the crews sailing from this place.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—I thank the Hon. Member for Port de Grave for giving me the opportunity to say a few words with regard to the conditions which obtain not alone on the Labrador vessels, vessels going from Conception Bay and the other bays of the Island, but also the conditions existing on the coastal boats, as alluded to by the Hon. Member. I do think, sir, that while the Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has had the courage to introduce so many bills of such far-reaching effect on the fishing population of this Dominion he ought to get up courage once more and introduce a bill grappling with this matter, the conditions which obtain around Conception Bay. Now there is quite a number of vessels going to Labrador to prosecute the voyage, that is the shore fishery, which belongs to a class of vessel which ought not to be used as such. These vessels are in that condition which the members of this house would call unseaworthy. These same conditions going to and from Labrador to prosecute the voyage, that is the shore fishery, which belongs to a class of vessel which ought not to be used as such. These vessels are in that condition which hte members of this house would call unseaworthy. These same vessels are up against the same conditions going to and from Labrador as they would be crossing the Atlantic. In the spring time when they prosecute the voyage they are up against ice and very bad storms and the same storms when the voyage is over. Some men have their entire family with them.

When the planter comes home in the fall he brings his voyage and very often a good part of his family. He takes all kinds of chances. The class of vessel used is not what this house would call seaworthy. There is a custom that when a vessel has served her day in other lines of work she is used to take people to and from Labrador. The people are glad to get there in anything, but we must do something to protect the people against themselves. The condition with respect to the coastal boats is often worse than the vessels. I have often left my place in the Straits on a boat with accommodation for 120 passengers with 300 people on board. I remember in one instance coming up on the Ethie. Dr. Grenfell was on the boat with me. The people crowded on and were placed in quarters not fit for cattle. I wane to the captain and objected to his taking any more people. We had men and women lying around everywhere, surrounded with all kinds of indecencies. It is a situation that this house should immediately take steps to remedy.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman along the same lines that have been referred to by the hon. speaker I was talking to a captain of the conditions from the Straits to the terminus at Bonne Bay. The conditions are something frightful, as has been said, but it is not the captains fault. His hands are tied. The people get on the boats and are stowed away in every conceivable place. I recommend that the hon. minister of marine and fisheries take this matter up with a view to bettering this condition. On the second reading of the bill I thought it wise to make the bill applicable to all seagoing vessels. The same danger awaits the vessels in the coastal trade as those going far away from the coast.

MR. SCAMMELL:—Mr. Chairman, while we are on this subject I am glad to avail of the opportunity that has presented itself to me to make a few remarks with regard to the Humbermouth-Battle Harbour route, and I should be negligent in my duty to my constituents on that coast if I failed to embrace this opportunity. I am totally in accord with all that has been said by his hon. the speaker and by the hon. member for St. John's East. No one is in a better position than myself to speak of conditions that prevailed on that route last summer. I made two trips on the Ethie and saw the overcrowding of freight and passengers at its worst. The condition of affairs that prevailed was absolutely outrageous and well nigh intolerable. Every spring there is the usual large number of fishermen going down the coast and returning in the autumn. This only aggravates conditions. The Ethie was entirely inadequate. The captain is not to blame for overcrowding passengers. People will come on board and cannot be prevented. The only solution is a boat of the Meigle type or like the Portia or Prospero.

The route is a long one, 400 miles, and nothing less than a boat of the type I have referred to can give an adequate service.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Chairman I have had some experience along those lines. I have made a couple of trips on this route, and have seen the conditions that the people have to contend with. Last year, in the fall, when I was at Bay of Islands, I found the coastal boat so crowded with passengers and the freight congestion so great that it would warrant this house taking action to see that these conditions would not occur again. As with the trains, tickets are sold sometimes amounting to 60 or 70 over the accommodation space. There is nothing to prevent the agent from doing this. With respect to the Ethie service the thing was absolutely mismanaged. At the outset she would take enough freight at Humbermouth to load. When she comes to Bonne Bay she is unable to take anything, although there is half a load there waiting. I have seen the freight piling up for three or four weeks, and when the Ethie came to Curling she was always loaded for Bonne Bay. When she arrived at Bonne Bay and discharged she had to go down the Straits empty. The service cannot be run on cast iron rules. Much must be left to the discretion of the captain. The result is that people beyond Bonne Bay, the people who most need the service, are entirely left out. The trouble is, people are making conditions to suit themselves. Why cant we right here make conditions the best possible for the greatest number of people?

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Government is going to bring in some proposition with respect to the coastal service. If that is the intention this discussion will come in then.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—Full opportunity will be given to discuss this question.

SIR JOHN C. CROSBIE:—The Hon. Speaker has made the matter very clear. As he says, usually the vessels are out of date, they have been worn out in some other line of work. We have a law with respect to the survey of Labrador schooners but the law is not carried out. May I ask the hon. minister of marine and fisheries to attend to this matter, and see that the law is carried out.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, with regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Port de Grave, there is a law already on our statute book providing for the survey of Labrador vessels.

The inspector of shipping is appointed under this act to look after this survey but as there is no penalty provided it is impossible to have the law carried out. Now we can reconsider Section 4 of the bill before the chair and after the word "dollars" insert the following words, "This section shall apply to vessels engaged in any way in connection with the prosecution of the Labrador.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Chairman, while this matter is under discussion, there is one point that should not be lost sight of. While I am thoroughly in accord with what has been said by his honor the speaker, I want to point out that there is a certain class of people engaged in the Labrador fishery whose very livelihood depends on their getting down to that coast at a certain time in the spring and whose lives depend on their getting back at a certain time in the fall, and if you are going to do anything with regard to this matter it should first of all be decided whether or not under the improved conditions resulting from such a law as is here proposed, you can assure these people the necessary accommodation to take them back and forth, because if we cannot see our way clear to do this it is better to let things stand as they are, at least for the present.

MR. SAMPSON:—Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with what the minister of public works has said, and I, too, believe that we cannot alter the present condition of tnhigs till we have more vessels. As Mr. Jennings has said, these people must get down at a certain time and they must get back again in the fall before it is too late and until we have sufficient accommodation for them to do this under the improved conditions, we cannot risk making too radical a change.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—With regard to the conditions as they affect passenger traffic, if I remember correctly, there is already a law on the statute book providing for the survey of passenger accommodation on Labrador vessels, but not of the vessels themselves.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Yes, but as the Hon. Minister has pointed out there is no penalty provided for in that law. I quite see the force of the remarks of the Minister of Public Works, but what His Honor the Speaker points out is that we should do the best we can with what vessels we have and make them as nearly fit as is possible under the circumstances for the accommodation of human beings. As he has also pointed out, fishermen often bring their families down to Labrador with them and present conditions should no longer exist. Whatever excuse there might be for such conditions existing on a sailing vessel, there is no excuse whatever for their existing on a steamer.

With regard to the past few years, as Mr. Scammell has pointed out, the war was on and it was difficult to provide any kind of shipping accommodation and we had to take what we could get, but now, what His Honor the Speaker and what I want to see is that the best possible is done with regard to the vessels we have. Surely if we are going to provide for the survey of vessels freighting fish across the Atlantic, we should also do something with regard to vessels freighting people to Labrador.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—There is one thing I should like to draw attention to. My hon. friend, Sir John Crosbie, is interested in Lloyds insurance, and I would like for him to let Lloyds know what we are doing in this bill with a view to bringing about a decrease in the rates on fish cargoes going across the Atlantic. If we could get a decrease in the rate of 2 per cent. it would mean a total average save to the Colony annually of $450,000.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I hope to be going across the water shortly and I shall take the opportunity of pointing this matter out to Mr. Scott, Secretary of Lloyds, in the hope of getting this decrease, but Lloyds will want to be shown some proof of just what we are doing

Another point Mr. Coaker has brought to my mind and one which I hope has not slipped the memory of the government and which is now,

I presume, under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Shipping. The matter I refer to is the collision between the General Currie and the Portia at Marystown. I understand that Mr. Harris has taken his case into court and if attended to properly the policy of the Portia should cover the accident and the protest of Captain Connors should be looked after.

MR. GOSS:—I understand. Mr Chairman, that a bill is at present before the House in relation to the survey of foreign-going and Labrador vessels. I am well acquainted with Labrador vessels, and I know to-day from actual experience that the vessel of 30 or 40 or 50 years ago was a far better class of ship than the Labrador vessel of today. I understand that vessels going to the Labrador are surveyed and classified to suit the insurance inspector It is also under- that the government inspector it to see that these vessels do not go down to the Labrador with far too many men than they are able to carry, but in accordance with their tonnage allowing so many men per ton. I myself have always sent ten or twelve crews down to the Labrador on one schooner each year, but I have a customs officer on board to survey the vessel.

Refeiring to the coastal boats I have heard men say who travelled back from the Labrador on some of these steamers that they would rather pay a higher rate for their passage and come back on one of my schooners, because they can't eat or sleep on board one of them, and if she has the misfortune to ground on a rock, wel, you might as well jump overboard. Newfoundlanders who go down to the Labrador don't want to be caught on a rock, neither do they want the government to hold them back because the vessel on which they are bound has not passed the inspection of a surveyor. If the matter of vessels sailing out of St. John's is brought up Lloyds and everybody else knows that they make one or two trips and perhaps sail out twenty or fifty or a hundred or two hundred miles and then drop right down and the crews return by ocean-going steamers. But sir, up on the Labrador the practical seaman can almost smell a breeze springing up and they get in out of it before the storm breaks.

To-day, sir, it is impossible to buy first class vessels. Men can't aord it. Sometimes I feel like not sending any schooner to the Labrador because they are old, but I can't afford to buy first class new vessels and send them there. I think the present law is quite sufficient to insure owners of ships from sending vessels that are unseaworthy to the Labrador, having in view the fact that they are at first subjected to inspection by the insurance people. If a vessel was not seaworthy it wouldn't be insured.

With regard to foreign-going vessels I think all possible should be done to discontinue the practice of sending vessels that are inadequate for the service across the water with our fish. The Nova Scotian and local built soft wood vessels cannot do the work that the English vessel could do. They generally make one or two voyages and that's the end of them. But, in the Labrador vessels I don't think that it is possible to make any improvement at present.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Judicature Act."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and ti was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to confirm a contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company, Ltd. "

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

MR. MacDONNELL:—In spite of the short notice I got regarding the condition of this bill I wish to support it, in this respect, that it is a bill which stands for the development of the natural resources of our country. Too long we have had our natural resources bound up. Too long have we had property, timber property, in this country, in the hands of speculators. I hope and trust that this is the beginning of a line of action on the part of the Government. to have the crown lands act enforced or remodelled, as it finds necessary. I have a particular reason for supporting this bill, and it is in connection with that, that I ask for particulars with regard to certain correspondence.

I know that this company which I had in mind when I made that statement yesterday, are prepared, if given concessions, the same as we have given to the St. Lawrence Steamship, Pulp & Lumber Co., to give something in return. Now I know that this company, in so far as that they are going to operate in this country, will give returns for the concessions granted them, in the amount of money expended, but the company that I had in mind for the same considerations, are prepared to do the same thing, the promotion of new industries, and over and above that they are prepared to construct over two hundred miles of roadway twenty feet wide, starting from Deer Lake.

I know that this matter was put before the late government, and I know that there was an idea that the government was favorable to it. In my district, while I did not promise that the government would do anything in this matter, I did promise that I would give my support to it in this House. I have, sir, in my possession, petitions which I shall present in a few days, petitions which I could not present in the ordinary ruling to speak for five minutes. They come from every section of Bay St. George and Bay of Islands, signed by every man in the district, asking that the government take into consideration this matter which should have been done a year and a half ago, when the people spoke their approval of that action. The late government, to my mind, showed a lack of respect for the opinion of the district in that matter, and I believe now that the same forces which influenced them to take that action, are at work, to induce the present government to disregard the interests of the people. We have some men here in St. John's who go salmon fishing to the west coast in the summer. There are a few of them who believe that they will be injured if these concessions are given. One of the things they are prepared to see given is a prescriptive right to these rivers. Down in that district there are thirty rivers, and thirty pools in each river, and there is one river four miles from home, with thirty or forty pools, and they want seventy pools out of six or nine hundred, and because some gentleman thinks he might want to go to one of these, we must remain in the backwoods for ever.

I know that this company is prepared to spend the money that should have been spent long ago. They are prepared to build two hundred miles of road, on these conditions, and what they have asked, has been granted by the people who own it. I don't see, sir, that the one section of the country where there is a future, should be hung up because of a number of people who think their pleasures may be inrefered with. There is at present no prescriptive right to the salmon pools, but men come here from Canada, and the United States, and put up their camps by a certain pool, and we dare not go and fish in that pool, because they would drive us out of it. These men benefit the country immensely. They pay ten dollars a year rod tax, but when a company comes in and offers to do things which should have been done twenty years ago, we see them hung up, see the whole matter delayed, because some people are not prepared to give the men who are prepared to gove something in return, the same rights which they give to a wool merchant, or a junk merchant from Halifax, who gives in return ten dollars a year. I wish I had a copy of the correspondence in this matter.

A dual offer had been made in a petition signed by every man in the district t ogive them the considerations regarding the pools, and if they are prepared to give that which is their own, I fail to see why the government which stands for reform, which stands for advancement, should stand in the way of the development of our natural resources.

Another proposition on the lines of this bill here is read, and I believe has come before the executive. They are prepared, besides building that road, to put up factories, furniture facorties, for the use of the timber which they already own by purchase. They are prepared to put up a wharf in the harbor of St. George's, so that several steamers can lie along side at one time. How much money would it take to build a wharf like that? We could not do it in a hundred years.

We have been ignored in the past. At the present moment it would be too big a tax upon the government to expect them to do this thing at once, but I hope that no attempt will be made by any hon. gentleman on the government side to consider or advise a "dog in the manger" policy and to retard that which you cannot do yourselves and to refuse others the opportunity of doing it. I shall take the opportunity before this House closes to present those bona fide petitions asking that the government immediately take up this business, although I do not know whether I am entitled to present those petitions from this side of the House, seeing that they involve an expenditure of public monies. I took action this year in order that this government may see the undoubted sins of the past government in this respect and that would be their excuse in pursuing their line of action. I took action to see that the petitions were again signed up and I have a batch of them on my desk now, including upwards of two thousand signatures. I will present them when I get a complete listin.

If it is desirable for the development of this country to give those rights to the St. Lawrence, Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company, Ltd., I cannot see that we should keep back the same rights from a similar company, who are prepared to give up in return two hundred miles of a road, to keep it cleared and built up and hand it over to the government after four years as a present. That road would be twenty feet wide and would cost ten thousand dollars a mile. It would extend from Deer Lake to Little River, as I have already said, and it must go along through the valleys and the rivers and would open up the best line in this country, and if it's worth while to have the country opened up thru that part of the country which advancement must come, I think it is a golden opportunity that should not be missed and which, I believe, will not be missed. I know that there are gentlemen in this House who have expressed themselves against this proposition, because of granting the use of thirty pools out of nine hundred. Now there is no man in this House or in this country more opposed to preservation, or more entitled to be opposed to preservation, than I am. I saw the operation of preserves and I know something about them. I saw and studied the present day limits, which were given to those who gave nothing in return, except that they wrung the heart's blood out of the people. I am prepared to support any project submitted by any body of representative men from any section of this country, as I believe every district should be given its proper share in the administration of affairs, and, I am sure, that the same gentlemen now sitting on the other side of the House will be fair-minded enough to see that such a measure as the one I have referred to, yoes through at the present session. I say at the present time because the matter is urvent. I know that a survey has been made and that work has started across the Reid Newfoundland Co's blocks, and I know that if this thing is put through that sufficient money can be deposited in any bank in this country to show that the company can fulfil its obligations. Up to now, not only were the company not encouraged in their enterprise, but received a kind of a laugh and a sneer. This is all the reply and response that has been given to a matter of any straight argument or force. The acquiring of lands that any man can buy for thirty cents an acre was one of the concessions asked for. Timber lands they wanted none, as they got enough. They wanted certain rights with regard to mineral lands and these are all the things they were looking for.

With regard to mineral lands, any claims that they take up they want to work immediately, but that may not be advantageous to some gentlemen who come here for three or four weeks in summer and who have claims up on the west coast and which they hold for eighty or á hundred dollars a year until they get somebody in to buy them. For years past it has been known that certain gentry whose friendship with the agriculture and mines department has enabled them to jump claims. I know the words I am using and I can furnish proofs. That line of conduct may suit them, but it does not suit us. I know that we have had geologists down here the past two or three years and they know of claims that were not paid for and they are prepared to pay royalties and to work them in conjunction with this 200 mile of a road that I speak of if given the rights so to do.

Here is an opportunity for this government putting the west coast ahead two hundred years. They may take it if they like. I shall, before this House closes, present these petitions and I shall put myself square with the people, and if the ekort that attended the men in this matter is futile, then when the time comes for the people to have a voice and a say in this respect they will be able to blame those responsible for such an action and I hope I shall be able to tell them a story in a way that they will not misunderstand.

Therefore, I am in thorough accord with this bill, because it grants privileges to a company who are prepared to develop, what odds what the company is or who the company is, so long as it means the development of this country; and I hope that other hon. gentlemen will take a similar position that I ake when a similar question, under similar circumstances, arises concerning my district.

With reference to the statement made by the Prime Minister, did I understand him to say that a guarantee must be given that $1,000 industry must be established or that a half dozen industries the accumulated value of which would be say $3,000,000. Is this the principle?

HON. THE PREMIER:—This contract is, as I have already said, a legacy from the late Government. Under this contract permission is given to export certain quantities of that that permitted under the 1919 act, which is the general law of the country. If any company has a proposition which would mean the expenditure of millions of dollars in the Colony the Government would be glad to give consideration to the granting to it of reasonable concessions, but each proposition must be laid before the Government in a concrete form with definite information as to the financial strength behind it before the matter of concessions would be considered. I would point out that the late Government agreed to this company's exporting pit props larger in size than is specified in the contract now being considered by the House. The maximum size of pit props which the late government agreed to permit this company to export was six and a half inches. That was reduced by us to six inches.

MR. MACDONNELL:—Well I understand that this House passed six and a half inches and when it went to the upper house they made it six inches.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I am not prepared to state whether the act in the form in which it passed the House of Assembly provided for six and a half inches, but I do know that the bill as it passed the legislative council, of which I was then a member, limited the size to six inches. As I have already explained, under the contract approved by the late Government the pit props which the company was permitted to export consisted of a percentage not exceeding twelve of pit props exceeding six inches, but not exceeding six and a half inches in diameter, and twenty of pit props exceeding five and a half inches but not exceeding six inches in diameter, in both cases the diameter being measured at the top or thinner end. The present Government did not concur in this general policy; they thought that the company was being permitted to export unmanufactured wood of too large a size, but the contract had been made by the late Government; there was a minute of council authorizing its execution; the contract was signed by the St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company and the great seal of the Colony had been affixed thereto, though it had not actually been signed by His Excellency the Governor. Negotiations were entered into with the company, conferences being held between the company's solicitor, the Attorney General, Dr. Grieve, the company's representative, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and myself, as a result of which the company agreed to reduce the maximum size in each case by half an inch.

MR. MacDONNELL—That point I wish to make to the Prime Minister is that if any class of people were in similar circumstances, if the same guarantees were given, will the same consideration be given them? I would like to say that if this is not so why make special legislation for one company? The other day we did the same thing when rebates were granted half dozen companies. I hope this is not an instance of it again. I think we ought to get right here an assurance that warrants our support to this bill, (re confirmation of contract for export of pit props, etc.)

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—All that I can say in answer to my honorable friend is that any company which lays before the Government a bona fide proposition for the expenditure of a large sum of money for important developments in Newfoundland will have its proposition carefully considered and investigated, and every concession consistent with the best interests of the Colony will be granted. As to whether any particular concessions would be given will depend entirely upon the whole proposition. I feel that the member for St. George's has in mind the concessions to which he has already referred in reference to the district of St. George's. In that connection I would say that there is no person associated with the Government who desires to impede in any the development of the district of St. George's. We are all desirous of encouraging the development of that important and populous section of the island but up to the present no proposition which the Government as a body of sane business men can reasonably consider has been submitted. As soon as any gentlemen of financial strength either personally or through their duly accredited representative, lays a proposition before the Government in the interests of St. George's or any other section of the island it will, I can assure the honorable gentleman, receive every consideration.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I can assure you, sir, you will not have to wait for a solicitor to come along, but I will see that the cards are laid upon the table pretty soon.

MR. SULLIVAN:—I take it that no concessions are being asked for in this bill (re the confirmation of a contract for the exportation of pit props, etc.,) down to and including clause 9, but I hope that it is a reputable concern that is getting this contract through. I think it is a great movement because back in the old days we were the first to take this kind of a step in this country and before Quebec, and it is regrettable that legislation allowed the exportation of wood in the past in its raw state. Anyway I suppose it was necessary to make the deal and it is no use to criticize it now. But I do not see why such great quantities in the dimensions mentioned in this bill should be exported in its raw state. If this timber was converted it would practically mean twenty times as much labor in this country and would leave more money in the country. I do not think there will be any great export of pit props from this country in the future for the simple reason we are so far away and then again the rates from Scandinavia are cheaper. I think there is no necessity to worry over this bill. The other concessions granted to the company are all right.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman, could my honorable friend, the member for St. Georges, tell me the name of the American company to which he has referred.

MR. MacDONNELL:—The Company has not yet been incorporated.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I know nothing of any representations having been made to the government directly or indirectly, on behalf of any American company or corporation with respect to the construction of a road on the West Coast. Mr. W. H. Taylor and many residents of St. George's were in communication with the late government and also with the present administration. This correspondence was based upon the supposition that certain wealthy gentlemen of the United States were prepared to make large investments in certain sections of the District of St. George's in consideration of certain timber, mining, agricultural and fishery concessions, but up to the present the Government has not been approached by any such capitalists, nor by anybody on their behalf. When the copies of the correspondence which my hon. friend has already asked to be tabled in this regard are before him he will recognize the soundness of the attitude of the Government in this connection.

MR. MacDONNEL:—Do I understand that they refuse to furnish the money?

HON THE PRIME MINISTER:—Nobody refused to furnish any money as nobody was asked to furnish any. The Government does not know who the parties are that propose to furnish the money. Some little time ago the local solicitor for Mr. W. H. Taylor, who claimed to represent certain undisclosed American principals, was asked for information as to who these principals were, and what was their financial standing. Other than a list of names of gentlemen who resided in the United States no information has been forthcoming.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I understand there have been several solicitors interested in this matter.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Yes. From a perusal of the correspondence I gather that the Hon. Donald Morison was the first solicitor interested in this matter. He made a proposition to the late government. That proposition did not receive favourable consideration. Last autumn Mr. Morison left Newfoundland for the winter and after he left, Mr. Leo Carter, as solicitor for Mr. Taylor wrote the present administration with respect to the same matter as that referred to by the Hon. Donald Morison in his correspondence with the late Government.

MR. MOORE:—Mr. Chairman, I notice in this bill that pit props shall not exceed six inches in the top whereas the bill that passed this House last year said six inches in the butt. Is there any reason for the change now?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Ferryland is correct when he states that the 1919 act relating to the exportation of timber limited the size of pit props to be exported to a maximum of six inches in diameter at the butt or thicker end. That act provided that the Government in Council might grant licenses for the exportation of round timber previously barked and sawn square at both ends subject to the condition that the licensee must own and operate a pulp or paper mill and a saw mill used in preparing pulp wood for the licensee's pulp or paper mill. As this company has a saw mill and proposes to erect a pulp and paper mill it would not be necessary for any special contractual relationships to be created in connection with the exportation of pit props if it were not for the fact that a part of the pit props to be exported exceed the diameter provided for by the general law of the Colony. Under the 1919 act the pulp or paper mill must have represented a capital expenditure of not less than $200,000. In this particular instance the capital expenditure would be not less than $1,000,000.

MR. MOORE:—Could any other company get the same privileges extended them as this company?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—This contract is a legacy which the present Government received from the late administration, and the section of it relating to the exportation of pit props does not represent the considered policy of the present government in connection with the exportation of such manufactured timber. The present general policy of the administration in this regard does not exceed the export privileges set forth in the 1919 act. If, however any company is prepared to undertake the expenditure on capital account of millions of dollars in this country for the development of large pulp and paper operations, the Government is ever prepared to take into consideration the special circumstances in connection with such large expenditures and consider the granting of special concessions.

MR. MOORE:—If they spent fifty thousand dollars, would that entitle them to export?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—The expenditure of $50,000 is only a quarter of the expenditure called for in the 1919 act. If any company is prepared to undertake the expenditure of millions the Government would be inclined to grant them every reasonable concession.

MR. MOORE:—I understand when this pit prop bill went before the Upper House last year the size of pit props to be exported was reduced from six to five and a half inches.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—My recollection is that the original bill of last session gave a maximum of six and a half inches which was afterwards reduced to six. By reference to the bill my hon. friend will see that the maximum in the bill is six inches and not five and a half as suggested.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion the report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Mr. Foote the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 183 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled "Of the Management and Control of the Harbor of Grand Bank" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Speaker, the object of this bill is to increase the personnel of the board of management of the harbour works at Grand Bank and to give them the power to impose certain taxes on ships entering that port, which taxes must be approved by the Governor in Council and which will be devoted to harbour improvements. The board will also be empowered, under this amendment to levy a tax of 20 cents per ton on all coal being imported into Grand Bank. The board will be increased from five members to seven. With this brief explanation, Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the second reading of the bill.

On motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the House then adjourned till 3 o'clock to-morrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 13th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from the people of Fogo asking that a more modern post office be erected in that place.

The petitioners point out that as Fogo is a distributing centre for all mail matter on Fogo Island, that the present office is not sufficiently commodious to cope with the work, and they ask that a suitable building be erected on the grounds near the court-house, which is centrally situated and near the site where they hope to build a public wharf, later on. I saw this post office last fall and noted the conditions under which the work was being performed, and I think an effort should be made at the earliest possible moment to erect an office capable of handling the mail matter and worthy of the important little town of Fogo.

I heartily and sincerely support the prayer of this petition and ask that the matter be referred to the proper department where I hope it will receive the consideration its importance merits.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Fogo asking for the sum of $3000.00 for the purpose of erecting a public wharf. The wharf at this place was destroyed some years ago, and since then the people of Fogo have suffered a great disadvantage on that account. Fogo is one of our most important outport towns and has rather a large amount of traffic and commerce, and is certainly deserving of much better facilities in this respect than that which it at present obtains.

The wharf at which the steamer now lands is situated quite a distance from the post office and the people ask that a suitable wharf be built on the property adjoining the court house grounds which is central and most convenient to the travelling public.

I know the need of this wharf is very urgent and I have much pleasure in giving the matter my heartiest support and hope that the Government will see its way to allocate a sum of money for this important purpose.

I ask that the petition be received and referred to the department of marine and fisheries for consideration.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present ap etition from the residents of Joe Batt's Arm asking for the small sum of $50.00 for the purpose of digging a public well. The people of Joe Batt's Arm in common with the people of other sections of Fogo district suffered in the past because of the lack of a pure water supply, I know of no place in the dominion where the people are so handicapped in this respect as in that section from Tilting to Fogo, as well as several settlements on the Straight Shore. I have given the matter a great deal of consideration in the hope of finding some way of solving this very distressing problem. I believe the best and most economical means of securing water in this section, where the ground is of a brick formation is by the use of a well boring drill. I intend to submit the cost of one of those outfits to the Government within a few days, as I think the purchasing of such a drill would be a very feasible proposition, as no doubt thereare many other sections throughout the country where it could be used to obtain water at much less cost than blasting wells. particularly through rock.

The Bell Island mining companies informs me that they have found the drill a very effective means of securing water.

The Nova Scotia provincial government have fourteen of such drills in use, and I hope we will be able to get at least one of these outfits this year.

I know the hardships which those people have to undergo for the want of pure water, which in the past has no doubt been the cause of the outbreaks of typhoid fever in parts of the district.

For this reason I heartily support this petition and ask that it be sent to the department to which it relates.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I also beg leave to present a petition from the Society of United Fishermen and others of Seldom-Come-By in the district of Fogo, asking for the modest sum of $50.00 to build a road to the S. U. F. Hall.

I distinctly remember passing this way last fall and finding it difficult to navigate the foot path over rocky ledges which are positively dangerous at night.

The proposed road would be a source of benefit to a great number of people, and as the sum asked is a very small one indeed I feel sure the government will see its way to grant the prayer of the petitioners.

I earnestly suppoort this request and ask that this petition be also referred to the department of public works for attention.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Mr. Speaker. I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Cupids asking that the present prohibition law as it stands be made more stringent. I have 72 names signed to this petition. In the petition that I presented yesterday for the modification of the act 16 names were appended.

THE HON. PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table estimates of the revenue and expenditure of the St. John's municipal board for 1920.

MR. MacDONNELL gave notice of questions.

HON. PRIME MINISTER tabled reply to question asked by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

HON. MIN. OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Smith's Hr., Stocking Hr., and Burlington asking that telephone connection be established between Burlington and Smith's Hr. This would be a great boon to the people of these places as it is now impossible to get even news of the mails without travelling a distance of 3 or 4 miles. It would also be a great benefit in many ways and I give it my heartiest support and ask that this petition be received and referred to the department of posts and telegraphs.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Bay L'Argent, on two subjects, the first being that another boat be sent to Fortune Bay. The present boat is not able to fill requirements and they ask that something be done about putting a decent boat in Fortune Bay. I found while canvassing the district last fall that the people were very much pleased with the Susu, and they would like to see her go there again. While it is not possible for the Susu to go there as she has to fill another contract made by the late Government I have given constant attention to this matter and I think I have at least arranged for a suitable steamer.

The other matter they petition about is for a continuance of the overland from Bay L'Argent to Baine Hr., Placentia Bay, and in presenting this petition I would like to say, that every effort is being made to detain the Hudson Bay Co. steamer at Fortune Bay, and I hope the Government will be successful in its efforts and I hope that the overland mail question will be given due consideration by the Government.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled statement of estimates revenue and expenditure of Municipal Council 1920.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of question.

Sir Michael Cashin gave notice of question.

Sir John Crosbie gave notice of question.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary if any correspondence has taken place between the Food Control Board and the wholesale sugar importers and control of same; also if the Control Board knows of any stock now stored in Canada awaiting shipment to Newfoundland.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, replying to the question of Sir Michael Cashin, I beg to state that I sent a copy of the order paper to the Chairman of the Food Control Board and he sent me a memorandum, saying that he would have the information to-morrow.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN asked the Hon. Minister of Public Works what amount of road money allocated to Ferryland district within the past six weeks giving the names to whom allocated, name of settlement, amount of each allocation, also if he is yet sending out the local road grants to the road boards.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, replying to the question from Sir Michael Cashin, I beg to table the information requested.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister o fMarine and Fisheries bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 172 of the Consolidated Statutes (Third Series) entitled "Of the Survey of Foreign Going and Labrador Vessels'" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Judicature Act" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to Confirm a Contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Timber Pulp and Steamship Company Limited" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Mr. Foote the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 183 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled "Of the Management and control of the Harbor of Grand Bank."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Committee of the whole on bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 183 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled "Of the Management and Control of the Harbor of Grand Bank."

MR. MOORE:—Mr. Chairman, I would like the Hon. Mr. Foote who is in charge of this bill how many tons of coal are imported annually into Grand Bank?

HON. MR. FOOTE:—About 2000 tons.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, the answer I got to a question from the Hon. Minister of Public Works regarding the allocation of road money seems to me to be very evasive. The minister states that the money was allocated for the building of a retaining wall dam aged by a washout. I do not know of any washout that has occurred in Ferryland district. I think that the road money for that district should be sent out as quickly as possible, because the men are all getting ready for the fishery.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I would like to know from the hon. gentleman if it is the intention of the Department of Public Works to dismiss those road boards and form new ones?

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—The boards are at present in a disorganized condition. Some of the members are dead. In all probability new boards will be formed.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I would like to know if you are prepared to take a recommendation in reference to those boards.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—As to some particular wants may be.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I notice that in Aquaforte the late Henry Winsor was chairman of the Road Board there and now that he is dead the job was handed out to a young slacker recommended by one of my opponents and he was sent over the heads of the existing members of the board. If this is the policy of the so-called reform government it is only a nickname on the present Government. The time has arrived when the members should see that the money is sent. I want to see a road board there.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I might say in reply to the honourable the leader of the opposition the late Mr. Henry Winsor passed away before the money was sent out.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—He was there.

HON. MIN. PUBLIC WORKS:—That money was not sent out while Mr. Winsor was there.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Pardon me sir, he was there.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I am sure that the money was not sent out.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Well, the authority was given before the money was sent out. The bridge was done. I am only asking for a square deal in this matter.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I wish to put the Hon. Member right on this point and might say that I am just as sure the man was passed away as I am here.

SIR MICHA$L CASHIN:—Well the board is still there I take it at Aquaforte, and the money was sent out to a private individual who was locked up here in St. John's in an office during the years of the war.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS: — If the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would refer to the Local Affairs Act he would find that no board should be in existence.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Oh that is a matter of choice. (Gives notice of question).

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—No, it is a matter of law. The information you ask for I cannot give.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Do you mean to say you are not going to answer my question as to whether there was anybody sent out to inspect the matter?

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—As far as I understood Captain Bonia was sent out.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Well what about the road monies? Is it the intention of the department to allocate the various amounts to the road boards?

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—There are no road boards in existence as far as the department of public works is concerned.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I think it is time that ou get these matters into right shape. The money ought to be sent there by now. The Hon. gentleman has the best reputation in the House as an honest and straight forward man. So I do not see why he has started to quibble about this thing.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I may say that I do not know whether it is the intention of the public works to appoint road boards.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Then you are not going to take any recommendations from the people of the district. I take it that you do not want any one recommended from this district. I hope you are not being made a tool of.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I think it very poor form for the leader of the opposition to say this. He ought to know more about the local affairs act.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Any district which needed the assistance of the local affairs act may call the same into operation for their benefit. This district has given the least trouble of all the districts around the island.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I am not prepared to take any recommendations from any one with regard to having those boards kept up contrary to the local affairs act.

THE HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—That bill is not ready and I ask that it be deferred. (Re resolutions for the Lighting of Outports.)

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, the local affairs act calls for two months notice before an election can be held.

MR. HIGGINS gave notice of question.

MR. MOORE:—Mr. Speaker, in connection with the matter that Sir Michael Cashin brought up, it seems to be the intention of the Government to hold up the money of Ferryland until the machinery of the local affairs act is put into operation. Why not have an election next week? I don't believe it has ever been done before. It is a most absurd thing. I say, sir, that if this is done, look out for a row.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I think there is some misunderstanding in the matter of local affairs. The same condition exists in Placentia. There are no elected road boards; but surely the roads are not going to be kept without repair because of this fact?

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, this matter was thought out by me some time ago, and I asked a question as to what was going to be done, that is, whether the money for the districts was going to be sent out as usual. I received an affirmative reply. I want to assure the Hon. Minister that I mean that the money be sent out in the usual way.

THE HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, if any representative comes into my office and asks for money for a road or a bridge, the matter will be attended to.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, the larger question, of course, is as to the expenditure of the whole lot of public monies. May I suggest that we amend the local affairs act so that a week's notice will be sufficient for the election of the road boards. The expenditure of money on roads in October would be a waste. I hope this matter will be attended to without delay.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, the situation with respect to Ferryland district and also the district of Placentia and St. Mary's is that the main line grants for the year 1919-1920 were expended last autumn by the late government and in addition practically all the local road grants for these districts were also expended. The bridge in the district of Ferryland to which reference has been made was an imperative necessity. There was no Ferryland grant available for the construction of the bridge so an order was given for the work to be done, the money to be provided for the next fiscal year. The small balances due on local road account for the districts of Ferryland, Placentia and St. Mary's are now available. The matter of the appointment of election of road boards is being attended to.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—The local affairs act requires 60 days notice to be given before the election of road boards. You might know if you want the road boards elected. Nobody wants to keep money that belongs to the district, but let us have the names of the districts that want to have boards elected. The minister is very strong on this point, of having things done under the local affairs act. But I would suggest that the present boards be given the money that is to be spent this spring.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, last winter when the roads in the East End were blocked with snow I applied to the minister to have them cleared, but the minister didn't have the authority. He had to see Mr. Squires. I understand that the Prime Minister has passed over the work of St. John's East to Mr. Carter, although Mr. Carter was not elected.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I may say that Mr. Parsons is the man with whom I confer on matters pertaining to St. John's East. He is strongly opposed to spending money on shoveling snow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions regarding a contract between the Government and the "Susu Shipping Co., Ltd."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—(Re resolutions regarding a contract between the Government and the Susu Shipping Co., Ltd.) This, I take it is a non-contentious contract. It was made the 29th day of September, 1919, between the Government of that day and the Susu Shipping Company, Ltd., and is brought before this administration on or about the first day of May in minor modification. The contract is in the usual form. The contractor agrees to furnish the steamship Susu to run between St. John's and several ports mentioned in the contract extending from Catalina to Fogo inclusive. The service is to commence on or about the first day of May in each year, sailings to be regularly made thereafter and to continue until the close of navigation; the trips to be performed with all reasonable despatch; the steamer not to be detained unduly in any port. The government may from time to time substitute other intermediate port or ports of call and add other ports on the said route without extra charge, provided the ports can be navigated with safety. The days for the departure of the steamer from St. John's shall be fixed by the Government, which has power also to detain the steamer for a period of twenty-four hours after the time for sailing. The steamer shall carry all mails and shall carry a regular mail officer in charge, for whom an apartment is provided. The stay of the steamer at each intermediate port of call shall be not less than half an hour and at the terminal port not less than two hours, unless the captain and mail officer on board agree that the period of time may be increased or lessened. The steamer shall during the continuance of the contract be kept in a good, seaworthy condition and properly maintained and equipped at the cost of the contractor, the Government having the right to have the steamer surveyed and inspected, contractor agreeing to immediately make good any defficiency under a penalty of $100 a day. Contractor agrees to provide suitable premises in St. John's for the receiving and discharge of freight and the embarking and disembarking of passengers. An amendment is necessary to section 12 as it is noted that the schedule referred to was intended to cover rates for the conveyance of passengers and goods. As a matter of fact, the schedule contains passenger rates only. This defect will be remedied by a proviso that the rates to be paid for the carriage of goods on the Susu shall not exceed the rates charged for the carriage of similar goods for like distances on the northern coastal boats. The contract is terminated by the loss of the steamer. In the event of damage steamer shall be repaired with despatch, but the contractor shall not be entitled for remuneration for the period during which he is unable to continue the service because of damage or because of the steamer requiring to be repaired. Section 16 provides a penalty of $50,00 for the steamer's failing to call at any regular port of call unless prevented by circumstances over which the contractor has no control. The contract is for a period of seven years from the first day of May, 1919. At the expiry of five years the contractor has the privilege, with the consent and approval of the Governor in Council, of placing a larger steamer on the service. In the event of the contractor claiming a larger subsidy because of a larger boat being substituted and no amicable arrangements being made between the Government and the contractor, the matter will be referred to arbitration as provided for in section 26. The contractor is at liberty to assign, sublet or dispose of the contract or any part thereof without the consent of the Government. In the event of the contractor assigning the contract or if there be any habitual breach, the Government may terminate the contract. The subsidy is the sum of $4,000 a month, and there is a provision that no port charges, light dues or taxes additional to those now in force in the Colony shall be imposed on the said steamer during the course of the contract. The contractor is prevented from giving preference to the contractor's freight to the exclusion of the freight of other shippers. Clause 26 provides that in all matters of difference arising between the parties on any matter in connection with the contract, the dispute shall be referred to three judges of the supreme court, who shall hear and determine the dispute as arbitrators under the arbitration clauses of the judicature act, 1904. The contractor is under a penalty to the government of $2,000 for the faithful performance of the contract.

Before proceeding further with the consideration of the contract it might be desirable that the schedule of rates be printed and placed in the hands of the members. I consequently move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman of the committee reported that htey had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

MR. BENNETT gives notice of question, re labour bureau.

THE HON. THE PRIME MINISTER —I shall answer that now. The government is having an act prepared along these lines and will submit it to the legislature in due course. It will be handed down in the course of a week or two.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN: — With our permission, sir, I would like the honourable the minister of public works to take this matter up and send out the necessary notices under the Local Affairs Act to the District Board to have the election. If the required amount of money asked for by the department has been voted by the Legislature, why not put the proper machinery into operation to have the money utilised. Why not notify the several boards in the district and call for an election. Why not instruct the department to do it.

Mr. Higgins gave notice of question.

Mr. Speaker appointed the following as Library Committee: Hon. the Speaker, Hon. Dr. Barnes, Hon. Mr. Foote, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Scammell.

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled An Act to Check Profiteering.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until three of the clock in the afternoon on Monday next, 17th inst.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, May 17th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition which was handed me by the Secretary of the Moderate Prohibition Committee. This petition came from the people of St. Bride's, Placentia Bay, and it is one that I fully endorse. Ninety-three residents of that place signed it, and it has for its object a very good cause, namely, the modification of the present evils of prohibition; furthermore, it is to try and do away with the flagrant use of scripts in the first place; secondly to abolish the manufacture of moonshine and other by-products; thirdly, to stop smuggling and fourthly to put an end to the consumption of deletrious substances, such as drugs, essences, Tanlac and other concoctions. In giving this matter my support I want to state as previously stated by me in this House, that it is time that something was done by the Government with a view to the modification of the present prohibition law. I understand that this is not going to be a party measure and that members on both sides of the House are receiving petitions, numerously signed by the people of this country asking for a modification of the prohibition act. I have very much pleasure in supporting the petition.

I have also a petition, Mr. Speaker, signed by practically every voter in Bar Haven, Placentia Bay, on the same matter as the petition I have just presented; also another from Merasheen, Placentia Bay, signed by virtually every voter in the place. It shows that the people are very honest in this matter and have made up their minds that a very strong effort is going to be made to remedy the evils which we see accruing from this prohibition law. I am quite sure that every Hon. Member in this House is prepared to see that the ent prohibition law tends to destroy tle of whiskey or rum or gin or brandy. And if we cannot give them a bottle a day, let us give them a bottle a week. It would be much better for them to have good stuff than to have them drinking the awful concoctions that have been repeatedly referred to in this House. The present prohibition lad tends to destroy the coming generation and is doing much more harm than good. We do not want to go back to open-bar days again, but we do want to give the people, who have not got the pull or money, a chance of getting something decent to drink when they want it. I think that if any member in this House wants a bottle of rum, whiskey or gun, or any other kind of spirits that he can probably get it because of the pull that he has and the friends that he has. Now I do not see why the people who are not endowed with this pull should not get the same privileges.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I realise that I am out of order to ask a question at this juncture. Do I understand that the Hon. Member for Placentia, from his place in this House, means to say that the members of the medical fraternity are flagrantly violating the prohibition law?

MR. SULLIVAN:—Certainly not.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the petitions presented by my colleague and I offer my support because I have been in contact with people whom I know have labored under great disadvantages in endeavoring to procure liquors for bona fide medical purposes. Whilst the present law, as applied to the city of St. John's and the larger out ports, may be suitable, it is not at all suitable for the isolated parts of the whole country, take for instance a place where a doctor is living a distance of twenty-five or thirty miles away. And if as some of our noted scientists in the medical profession told us is correct, spirituous liquors are beneficial for some diseases, it would be all very well for doctors to prescribe for liquors if people could get the scripts filled, but under present conditions it is absolutely impossible for a large number of our people to get in touch with doctors to get prescriptions. I know of cases where people came to me personally from different parts of the district and requested that I intercede for them and get them a small portion of brandy. With the result that after going myself to doctors and offering to put up the money myself I was absolutely refused. I say that I welcome any moderation of this prohibition law or anything that will eliminate the present state of affairs, and I do not think it is just that people of St. John's can get a bottle of liquor whenever they want one whereas the majority of the people scattered all over the island, East, West, South and North are in the unenviable position that they cannot get in touch with medical men. And if the outport people do happen to get a script they are so far aloof from the controller's office that a month elapses from the time they get the script until the liquor is forwarded to them. I am absolutely opposed to the return of the open bar-rooms, and I believe that prohibition has done a great deal of good, but I do not think it was the desire or the object or the intention of the majority of our people when they supported this measure a few years ago, to have conditions such as exist to-day, arise. I welcome any honest attempt made to satisfy the whole people, and I have very much pleasure in giving my hearty support to the petition presented by my colleague.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Grate's Cove objecting to the movement that is on foot to do anything in the way of modification with regard to the prohibtiion law. The protest very strongly against any measure being introduced in this house to modify the present act now on the statute book, which, as you know, sir, the country has spoken on and declared itself in favor of with a very decent majority. When that act was about to be formed it was fought in the very hardest way possible, yet the majority of the people voted against the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors. As I have said, sir, the people of Grate's Cove protest vigorously against any legislation being enacted in this House that is going to modify the present prohibition law.

MR. WINSOR:—I beg leave to present a number of petitions from the residents of Wesleyville, Hopeville and Valleyfield and they deal with the same subject as that mentioned in the petitions presented by the Hon. Member from Bay de Verde, that is, there be no modification of the Prohibition Act. They are practically signed by all the voters of the district. I support the prayer of the petition, sir, and I think the act has not been properly enforced. The petitioners also ask that the act be more strenuously enforced and that there be no modification of the act. I ask that they be handed to the department to which they relate.

MR. ABBOTT:—I have much pleasure in supporting the petitions presented by my colleague dealing with the Prohibition Act.

MR. SCAMMELL:—I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Ship Cove in the district of St. Barbe. They ask for a sum of money to be allocated for the construction of a public wharf in that settlement. I might say that there were two or three important settlements in this district. Cook's Hr. and Ship Cove are very important centres judging from the commerce accorded these places. I know that two or three hundred vessels loaded fish at these places last summer. There were vessels from everywhere north. This goes to show how important these settlements are. I support the petition and hope it will receive from the Government the consideration it deserves. I ask that it be handed to the department to which it appertains. While I am on my feet I will also avail of the opportunity of presenting a petition from the residents of Seal Cove, White Bay. It is on the same subject, a public wharf, and they ask that a sum of money be allocated for its construction. Now Seal Cove is not a safe harbour for a public wharf. I think South Arm would be a very suitable place for it. Even if the wharf was constructed at Seal Cove it would be impossible for ships to work there. I think if the wharf were constructed at South Arm it would suit the requirements all round. It is a safe and commodious harbour. I have much pleasure in giving these petitions my unqualified support.

Sir M. P. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Bennett gave notice of question.

Hon. Minister of Finance gave notice thet he would on to-morrow ask leave to move the House into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions for the amendment of the Income Tax, 1918.

Hon. Minister of Finance gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to move the House into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions for the amendment of the Business Profit Tax Act, 1917.

Hon. Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce the bill entitled "An Act to amend the chapter 86 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (3rd series) entitled 'of stipendiary magistrate and justice of the peace.'"

Hon. Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An act to amend cap. 27 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled "On Death duties."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on tomorrow ask leave to introduce the bill entitled "An act concerning the registration of midwives."

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce the bill entitled "An act to amend chapter 157 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of the fire patrol.'"

Hon. Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce the bill entitled "An act to amend Chapter 139 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of the encouragement of agriculture.'"

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions to provide for the lighting of streets in the outports.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I move that the House arise and sit as committee of the whole on this measure. (Resolutions re the lighting of the streets of the outports), I would like to say that it is very short and provides that if any settlement desires to impose a tax on all coal imported therein in respect of the lighting of streets, the Governor in Council is given power to impose a tax by proclamation on the receipt of a petition of the residents. The resolutions speak for themselves and therefore I move that the first resolution be adopted.

HON. THE SPEAKER:—I would like to ask the Honorable Minister what is to become of the settlements who have lighting at the present time?

THE HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE —I understand that these towns are paying for their lighting out of their road grants at the present time. Carbonear has a tax on coal which goes towards the payment for the water service there and I think it cannot avail itself of this act. This only refers to those settlements who petition the Governor in Council to carry this into effect and who have not water service. Those towns which have the water service have incorporated in the acts dealing with latter a tax on the coal exported and this goes against their water supply. This bill is being drafted according to representations made to the government by those towns which desire to connect with the electric light and is being completed so that any settlement may take advantage of them. If the electric light is extended along certain places and others require it, then they can make a petition to the Governor in Council to impose a tax on the coal imported. But at present we do not know what settlements these are.

MR. HIGGINS:—I wish to point out that while no one disagrees with the principle of the resolution yet I take on what the Minister of Justice has stated, that they are really the outcome of requests from particular places but I am sure these places are so situated that the electric light is easily available and can obtain light without calling upon their road grants. Why not have a measure where the whole thing is included? I make the suggestion that while the water service is more important than the lighting, the Governor in Council be given the power to impose a tax whether the people of a particular place require the installation of water service or the extension of the electric light. Apparently these resolutions are from particular places and I think they ought to be more general.

THE HON. THE PRIME MINISTER —In reference to the remarks of hon. member for St. John's East, I may say that the electric light incurs not so great an expenditure as that of the water service. A water company has to make an enormous capital expenditure such as was made by the Carbonear Water Company. This practically is obviated with regard to the electric light. It would be quite impracticable under a general act to impose a tax with reference to an undertaking for a large expenditure for the installation of the water service. This act only contemplates those sections of the country such as Conception Bay, the outer sections of St. John's, Carbonear and Port Union and such other parts that will petition. This bill is expressly intended to deal with the lighting of the outport towns and the lighting only. It would be impracticable to include within the scope of the bill the matter of water supply and sewerage. The taxes on coal to any outport may reasonably amount to a sufficient sum to provide the annual expense of the lighting of the streets. By that I do not mean the expense incidental to the development of electric power, but the annual expense necessary for the payment for electricity consumed. In its immediate operation the bill will probably affect only those places where electric plants are in existence; for instance, in the Peninsula of Avalon, and in the Bonavista-Trinity Bay section by the electric power plant at Port Union. As power plants are provided in other sections of the country, the act will be capable of operation. It is not thought that the revenue which can be derived from this act will be sufficient in the majority of cases at least to provide for the additional expenditure incidental to the erection of an electric lighting plant and the providing of poles and wires for street lighting purposes, but it will be sufficient to provide for the annual cost of current consumed. At the present time many sections of the country are paying out of their road grants the annual cost of street lighting. Under this bill the towns have an opportunity of paying for their street lighting out of a coal tax and so relieving their road grants of the burden of street lighting expenses. In some places it might be possible for the residents of the towns to organize a cheap lighting system themselves. provide the necessary capital outlay. the tax being sufficient to provide operating expense and interest on capital invested. In the case of water and sewerage systems the usual expense is so great that it would be quite impossible to conceive of any road board undertaking the matter of supplying water and sewerage, and consequently each town desiring to enter into such an undertaking should apply specially to the legislature for legislative authority in the same way as Carbonear, Harbor Grace, and Placentia have already done. This act applies to the whole island, but in the immediate present only those sections of the island which have electric plants in operation will be in a position to avail of it. Ultimately the idea of street lighting may develop so that the larger towns and settlements all round the coast may organise electric power plants of their own for street and household lighting purposes and will by this bill have power to put a tax on coal for the purpose of paying for street lighting to encourage them in such public-spirited development. I do not agree with the honorable member for St. John's East that the scope of the bill should be enlarged so as to include provision for water and sewerage supply, as such a matter necessitates a very large capital outlay which cannot possibly be handled on the basis of a coal tax.

MR. HIGGINS:—The company's power is put to the disposal of the people. Bell Island at the present time pays for street lighting out of road and marine grants. They are faced over there with the problem of water supply, and it is a serious problem. Bell Island is a very important settlement, and if provision is not made in this act to get a water supply I hope it will be done later.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—This bill is intended to cover the whole colony. Bonavista, Twillingate,)xploits, and any other places that want electric lighting. There are lots of towns where water supply is available, and if water power is not available, it can be supplied by motor power. The proper thing to do with respect to the water system is to provide for it by means of another act. Bonavista has been looking for a water system for a number of years. If the people in any settlement want a water supply it should be provided for by putting a tax on some article of importation.

HON THE SPEAKER:—Why I read this matter is because we have in Carbonear a lighting system and a water system, and we have a coal tax and a property tax. We want to put the water service in decent condition. If you take the fifty cents a ton tax that is charged on coal and apply only to the supply of coal what is going to happen to the water system?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—This cannot be done. This act refers only to those towns and settlements where lighting is available and the inhabitants petition the Governor in Council to impose a tax on coal for the purpose of lighting their settlement.

HON. SPEAKER:—The Chairman of Committees reports these resolutions passed without amendment.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had passed the said resolutions without amendment and recommend that a bill be introduced to give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled 'An act for the lighting of streets in the outports' was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled 'An act to check profiteering was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Hon. the Premier, whether it is the intention of the government to vote sufficient money to put the railroad in proper repair, either to the Reid Nfld. Co., or to any other party or parties.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—This whole matter is in the hands of a committee of council.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Finance and Customs for a statement in detail of the expenditure of loan of $6,000,000 raised in 1919.

The Hon. Minister of Finance tabled the information asked for.

Sir J. C. Crosbie asked the Minister of Finance why the cheques due April 1st for old age pensions have not yet been sent out.

The Hon. Minister of Finance tabled the information asked for.

Mr. Higgins asked the Hon. the Prime Minister if the Government has decided upon any policy with regard to the holding of elections for local councils at Bell Island, if so what is the nature of the same?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—A petition has been signed by the people of Bell Island asking that a bill be introduced for incorporation. In the meantime the present local boards have been asked to continue their work.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—I desire to inform the Hon. Member for St. George's, Mr. MacDonnell, that on tomorrow, I will be in a position to table correspondence which he asked for, in relation to the highway on the West Coast.

MR. MacDONNELL:—In reference to section 16, I think this is one of the clauses that is always found in a contract and it is one that helps very much to do away with the contract. Supposing a captain sees that by making a certain port out of the way he would avoid the possibility of being caught in a rising storm, do you think it is fair that this captain should be penalised. I think this should be left to the discretion of the captain and this section is unfair and should be modified.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I might say for the information of the Hon. Member for St. George's, that this is the only pressure the Government has to compel a captain to do his very best in making a port. My hon. friend should see that it is necessary to have some such power over the captain, otherwise he would be skipping ports.

MR. MacDONNELL:—If a man purposely misses a port I think some arrangement could be made with the owners to have him discharged from the service, but I think it is very unfair to have an iron bound penalty provided for such a breach.

MR. SAMPSON:—I have known of many cases where captains missed ports when they could have easily called at them.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, the department of posts and telegraphs and also the department of education, necessitate a form of amendment, in the chapter relating to the legislative disabilities law, which is chapter 4, consolidated statutes, third series and the subsection relating to seats being vacated is applicable to the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs, and to the Acting Minister of Education. It will be remembered that the Minister of Posts and telegraphs, and the acting Minister of Education went to their constituencies in December last, and were elected to their various positions by the unanimous will of the voters. The idea of section 2 is to make it unnecessary for them to go again to their constituencies. Section 3 deals with the Department of Shipping. As was indicated in the manifesto, and also in the speech from the throne, it is the intention of the Government to wind up the Department of Shipping, and were it not for serious conditions which arose last winter, the department would have been wound up. Mr. W. H. Cave has resigned his position as Acting Minister of Shipping, because of the provisions which makes it unlawful for him to hold his position any longer than six months, without going out again to his district, and as Mr. Hickman has asked for a recount of the ballots of Bay de Verde and as there has been no decision as yet in that case, under section 3 it shall be lawful for him to hold his position as Minister of Shipping until December 31st, 1920, so that it will be unnecessary to make another appointment. It would be absurd for him to go again to his district, firstly because the Government intends to wind up the Department of Shipping and secondly because it is not certain whether the seat belongs to him, or to Mr. Hickman. I now move that this bill be read the second time.

The House adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 18, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

MR. ABBOTT:—I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Charlottetown asking that the sum of three hundred dollars be granted to cut down a bank in that place a work which is an absolute necessity. The petition is signed by James Simmons, Samuel Abbott and about fifty others. I also ask leave to present a petition from Amherst Cove. The petitioners ask that the Government grant the sum of eight hundred dollars for the construction of a new road through the locality. I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of these petitions and ask that it be referred to the department of public works and hope that the Government will give them their consideration they desire.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—I ask leave to present a petition from the people of Grand Bank. The petition is practically signed by all the people of that town. The prayer of the petition is a strong protest against any modification of the prohibition act. It furasks that there be a more stringent enforcement of the law. I will deal with this matter later.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I ask leave to present a petition from a number of voters from Bay of Islands which was forwarded to me by Rev. ——— and it is signed by forty men asking that there be no change made in the prohibition act except that there be a more stringent enforcement. Like Mr. Foote, I will further deal with this matter at a later stage.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Since coming into the House I have received the following communication from Mr. John J. St. John, Secretary of the Moderate Prohibition Committee, (reads letter), in accordance with the request of a number of my constituents. I have much pleasure in presenting the following petitions, Nos. ', 30, 34, 57, 61 and 117 on the subject of the matter in said letter, (Modification of the Prohibition Act.

MR. SMALL:—I beg leave to present a petition of thirty two people of the district of Burgeo. The prayer of the petition is that there be no modification of the Prohibition Act. I have great pleasure in presenting this petition and ask that it be referred to the proper authorities.

MR. TARGETT:—I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Trinity of Trinity district. It is on the same subject as that mentioned in the preceding petitions, no modification of the Prohibition Act. Probably later I will be able to say something on this when it comes before the House for discussion. I ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates. I wish also to present a petition from the residents of Hant's Hr. asking that a sum of money be granted to repair the road which has not been repaired for five years. This road leads to a number of places including some fishing rooms and I ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates and I trust that it shall receive the serious consideration of the Government.

MR. HIGGINS:—In order that the east end of St. John's shall not be outdone by the West in the desire to help towards the betterment of things socially, I desire to present a number of petitions forwarded to me likewise to those presented by the leader of the Government in respect to the matter of moderating the Prohibition Law. These petitions are numbered and come from the eastern section of St. John's; 104, 109 Bell Island, section of Torbay 33; portion of the town 72. These are a few of the many more to come from St. John's East. I present the petition in the light adopted by those who preceded me except perhaps I state before presenting them that I am in support of the prayer of the petitions.

DR. JONES:—I beg leave to present a petition from a number of people residing at Indian Pond, Seal Cove, Brigus Junction and Chapel's Cove in the district of Hr. Main, and they ask that some modification be made to the prohibition act; also a petition from Rev. Father Sheehan and about fifty others asking that a sum of one hundred dollars be immediately spent on a road from Hr. Main to certain cultivated ground. This road has been bad for some time and they ask that one hundred dollars be expended annually on this road. It is essential that it be put into good condition as it is required to work the land. It is about two miles long and it is impossible to keep it up out of the ordinary road grant. I ask that it be referred to the Department to which it relates and hope that the prayer of the petition will be granted if possible.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I beg to lay upon the table of the House the report of the public schools of Newfoundland under the Salvation Army boards for year ending December 31st, 1919.

CAPT. JONES:—I beg to present a petition from the residents of Northwest Arm in the district of Twillingate asking that that place be made a port of call for the S. S. Prospero. This is an industrious settlement. It has four or five small and large mills. A good quantity of supplies go there from time to time. I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition and ask that it be referred to the department to which it relates.

Hon. the Prime Minister tabled report of schools under Salvation Army branch, 1919.

Sir John Crosbie gave notice of question.

Mr. Walsh gave notice of question.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of the Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill, entitled, "An Act to amend chapter 86 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'of stipendiary magistrates and justice of peace"' was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 27 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'of death duties,' was introduced to read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act Governing the registry of midwives" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 157 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series' entitled 'of the fire patrol'" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "an act to amend the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'of the encouragement of agriculture"' was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Colonial Secretary what response, if any were made to the public notices appearing in the newspaper in Dec. last asking for tenders for four coastal steamers and what is the present status of this matter.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— (Answer to Mr. MacDonnell) The whole matter of inland transportation is receiving the consideration of a committee of council.

In reply to Mr. Higgin's question I would state a petition has recently been received from certain residents of Bell Island seeking an act of incorporation for the island. The matter is under the consideration of the Government. In the meantime the two councils have been asked to continue their work.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Prime Minister to lay on the table of the House copies of the correspondence between himself and His Excellency the Governor in reference to the appointment of the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and the Minister of Education and also any other documents in his office pertaining to the same matter.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— The only documents appertaining to the matter were the commissions of the ministers. The correspondence consists of the usual formal letters to the ministers notifying them of their appointments. There has been no other official correspondence.

SIR M. P. CASHIN—Will you table the letters?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — I am tabling them now.

Mr. Bennett asked the Minister of Public Works, if the third clerk in his department Mr. Jas. Murphy has been pensioned and what is the amount of such pension. Also if Mr. Manning the stenographer has been appointed to the vacant position over the head of Mr. Netten the assistant road accountant who has been some years in the department and if so why has this been done.

Hon. Minister of Public Works tabled the reply.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Public Works to furnish a statement showing in detail the expenditure of $408,000.78 allocated to his department from the Loan of 1919.

HON. MINISTER PUBLIC WORKS: In reply to the question of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition I would like to say that I hope to have that information to-morrow.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Public Works on whose recommendation did he allocate $1,200.00 to Ferryland out of the so-called "wash-out grant"; giving the particulars of the work to be done, and to whom the money was allocated. If it was allocated to Capt. Bonia and if it is now in his possession?

HON. MINISTER PUBLIC WORKS —In reply I would say that Captain

Bonia is out of town. I will table the information on his return.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "an act to amend chapter 4 of the consolidated statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'of the legislative disabilities and the vacation of seats in the House of Assembly."'

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

MR. HIGGINS: — Mr Chairman, when the bill came before us for its second reading, and when for the first time we were made aware of its content and of its objects those of us on this side felt that when the bill came before the House in the Committee stage, in justice to this House and ourselves, a word or two should be said, so that there would be no misunderstanding, not alone in the House, but in the country at large as to what views we at least held, concerning it The bill purports to be a simple one and on the face of it, it does not seem to represent anything of much moment. Shortly the object of the bill is to confirm the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and the Minister of Education in their respective offices without the necessity of their having to go back to their districts for re-election, and personally. I do not see very much that is objectionable in the provision regarding these two seats. But I do think that something has been introduced into this bill for which, on proper consideration, it will be admitted that there is no necessity, and something which it seems to me would be a mistake for us to enact. That is the section which permits the Minister of Shipping to hold office till the end of the present year. The whole history of this matter is interesting and my remarks are more or less made with a view to directing attention to this fact and to emphasize the necessity of our thinking beyond the mere caprice of the moment or beyond what was referred to in the past by the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs as "political expediency." I appreciate, of course, the position the Government found itself in with regard to these matters, but the humour of the situation cannot be mistaken; it is so humorous in fact that it must go down to posterity. Two Ministers of the Crown, and "all honourable men" to use a historical phrase, very estimable men, appointed to positions which did not exist. Two positions were created that were never foreshadowed, I mean that they were never foreshadowed to the country at large nor to anybody outside that privileged few of the inner circle of that great organization which wields such an influence to-day over the political life of this country. Nothing was known of the creation of these departments until it was announced in the Advocate, it was news to those outside the circle, but after all we had to be satisfied with that, because it was the desire of that great organization that these offices be created. and indeed if it was the desire of that organization to reform the cabinet nothing could be said against it. Mr. Halfyard and Dr. Barnes went to the country and were elected to positions that had no existence legally, but in spite of this, we find by reference to the correspondence tabled that these gentlemen had been appointed away back in December last and yet it is only since we came here that Mr. Halfyard and Dr. Barnes have begun to be created respectively Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and Minister of Education, and the job is not yet completed, for we have not even yet seen the bill respecting the Department of Education. And indeed until both bills have passed the two branches of the legislature and been assented to by His Excellency the departments do not exist. And so the first and second acts of the comedy have been played, and now we come to the third act, and we on this side of the House, like our friends on the other side play our part as actors in the comedy and we say that it would be a pity if we spoiled the humour of this thing by not playing this third act out to a finish.

To that, however, I take no exception for there would be little or no point in doing so where these gentlemen are concerned. If their positions did not exist legally, they were created by that power which is greater than any government, and when the Minister of Marine and Fisheries issued his fiat the thing was done before it was done, and because we are living in the shadow of that great man and because we know what he may see fit to do, we dare not offer any resistance to his will. We on this side of the House are afraid that if we are not careful, he will make some of us ministers, for we know what the mighty man do. He was able to anticipate the feelings of the people to such an extent, he knew so well that they wanted a minister of education and he was so confident that the men he picked were the very ones whom the people wanted to fill these positions that he had no hesitation whatever in chosing them. The public must bow to the ukase of the Mighty One because his great prophetic knowledge renders it impossible for him to go wrong, but I do say that he should not flood us with ministers and so create a situation where there will be so many positions of emolument that it will come to be looked upon as an honor and a decided privilege to be an ordinary private member. But the most humorous part of the whole thing is that which applies to the Minister of Shipping. Section 3 of the bill reads: (Here Mr. Higgins reads the section).

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—That section has been amended. Your objection has been anticipated. The amendment makes it read as follows: (The Prime Minister reads the proposed amendment).

MR. HIGGINS:—I'm afraid the Hon. Prime Minister has too many worries on his hands to see the humour of the situation as I see it. The point I make is that Mr. Cave will hold his seat, according to the bill, until the end of December "unless the seat is declared vacant by the judges of the Supreme Court." That is the most delightful part of it and it is a great pity we weren't told that even if the Supreme Court did declare the seat vacant the Minister of Shipping would still hold his seat.

It is the one incomplete thing in that bill.

HON. PRIME MINISTER: — Will you move an amendment?

MR. HIGGINS:—I think this is a high class thing to be served up to us, and I think it is a joke to come down here and consider a bill which states that a minister shall hold office but shall not hold office if the judges say that he must get out. Should Section 3 be put in? It has been admitted by everybody that the department of shipping is through, and if anything is to be done it should be done now. None of us could speak but in a kindly way of the Hon. Mr. Cave, but I think it is an insult to him to ask him to stay in office. He is too good a man for that. I am sure that he would not have this House violate its laws by keeping him in any office that is going to be wound up at the end of the year. To keep him in office under such circumstances will appear to the country at large more or less as a convenient way of carrying along a supporter of the government.

It is decidedly obnoxious to put such a measure on the statute book. Mr. Cave has handed in his resignation of that position, which is absolute evidence of his intentions. In handing in his resignation he has complied with the law of the land, and having done that, why does the Government come in and ask us to pass that section. It is improper legislation anyway. If it was absolutely imperative for any man to hold office for a certain time it might possibly be just, but to come in here and say Mr. Cave should hold office to December 1920 you might just as well pass legislation to keep him in office until 1924. Four years or six months would make no difference. So far as the measure is concerned, on its face it states in effect that the department should be abolished and that it was going to be wound up this year. Surely there are men enough on the other side of the House to do the winding up of this department. I am sure we are free to say that what has to be done is purely work of an administrative character, and Mr. Hall and his staff could easily do this. There's no occasion at all for this section and the enacting and setting up of this section is absolutely unnecessary; beside it is flatly contrary to all traditional constitutional practice in the old country itself, and I do ask the Government to eliminate it. The section as it reads gives no guarantee that the department will be wound up even this year. There is nothing binding on the Government to wind it up, and if it is the intention of the Government under guise of this measure to carry along this gentleman for a time with the object of floating someone else in there later, I think it would be grossly dishonest.

The words of the bill on this point I wish to have made clear. It states that the department should be discontinued after this year. It gives no guarantee that it will be discontinued after this year. It gives no guarantee that it will be discontinued, and I ask the hon. members of the government to consider that "political expediency," as my friend the hon. minister of posts and telegraphs has chosen to call it, is not always profitable, and take care that some of these measures like Mother Carey's chickens don't "come home to roost."

There is no such thing as a precedent for legislation which recites that a department is about to be abolished, and yet proceeds to "whitewash" a man who illegally remains there. If the hon. minister of shipping were in his seat to-day and were still known as the minister of shipping, he could not remain in the House. We should ask ourselves in justice to him and the district which he represents if this position should be set up? I think that not alone would it be a mistake, but it would surely place discredit on all of us if allowed to go broadcast throughout the land. I don't think there is any occasion for it. Why surely there are enough members on the other side of the House to fill this position. Why not let the great man who undertakes to look after so many departments take this department under his wing? Where only a couple of months remain for the existence of the department we should not have to come down here and pass a special law for that purpose. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Bay de Verde, Mr. LeGrow, could go down and run that job for three or four months.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to take exception to one statement made by the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Higgins. He said that this bill was introduced with a view to carrying along a government supporter. Mr. Cave, I would like to inform him, is absolutely independent. He did not seek this position, and he can support himself without any assistance from anybody.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Chairman, as has already been pointed out, this bill which is now before the House is a shining example of corrupt legislature. If I remember rightly it was the Hon. Prime Minister himself, in the Upper House, who one more than one occasion, took exception to the government for allowing a certain number of seats to be filled by defeated candidates, for allowing this House of Assembly to be a rump parliament. Well, a rump parliament is bad enough, but we are going further, we are going to make it hereditary.

It used to be delightful to have it pointed out to us that there was one man in St. John's West, Lord Morris, who was looking after his constituency in the House of Lords in England, and his seat was not filled. There was another man who was a judge of the court, in this town, and his seat was not filled; another man who was at the head of the controller's department, and his seat was not filled. We had in all ten men, and no move was being made to put men in their places, and not one condemned it more than the Prime Minister. I said then that their conduct was reprehensible, and I still say it, and we are asked to go a step further. We are asked to change the law or rather to break the law of the land, in order that a man who has no right to a position anyway, may have it.

With regard to the contents of the bill it is quite in keeping with the way in which the department was sprung upon this country. Mr. Higgins has pointed about these departments, until one morning he saw an account of them in The Advocate, and although I was a member of that party, I was in the same position with regard to the department of posts and telegraphs, and education, and this bill being sprung upon the House in this manner is in keeping with that secrecy which surrounded those departments. I have no doubt that it would be a nice point of law, as to whether the actions of those two gentlemen up to the time this bill was brought into this House were legal.

Some time ago I asked what work was being done by the Minister of Education, and I was told I would get the information when the bill came before the House. I have no doubt that the Minister of Education is keeping within the law in doing nothing, because anything that he might do would be illegal. This bill, sir, is the logical conclusion that comes of the action started a few days ago. We then passed a legislation which gave to men who had no claim to them certain sums of money. We have had men elected to positions which do not exist, and I presume they were paid salaries for these positions, salaries which I do not think they were entitled to. Take the Minister of Shipping. We will see that he holds his position till the end of the year and then put it off further if necessary, in other words that this act is not necessary. That is what we are asked to decide. As is not necessary to point there are numbers of men on the government side who could fill this position, and if it is the fear that the appointment of any member would create jealousy then there are other ways out. This question of bills is becoming a complicated one, and the best thing we can do is get a formula.

Take the Prime Minister, who is Prime Minister, Colonial Secretary, and Minister of Militia, although he gets no salary for that position, and I am sure he would have no objection to taking another position. That would be one way out. I am sure no one would be offended if he took charge of that department. If that does not suit, what about Mr. Gibbs? Why not make him Minister of Shipping? I am sure everyone on the Government side would be delighted with the appointment. As Mr. Higgins said, one never knows when one is going to be made a minister. A certain anxiety has been expressed over one of the candidates for Hr. Main. Why not make Mr. Woodford minister of shipping, and give him a job as was promised him? It would not be more absurd than asking us to sanction this bill. This thing, if it were not tragic, would be delightfully funny. There was a time when three men out of all the members of the House of Assembly, held an office. Of late years the hard thing to know is which of the members of the government is not holding an office, and defeated candidates of the party are holding offices with emoluments, and being made ministers.

As Mr. Higgins has pointed out, that state of affairs is like Mr. W. S Gilbert's composition. The king of the country which he was considering wanted everyone to be in the same position as himself, and he tried to remodel everything. Everyone in the army was a general, and everyone in the navy was an admiral. Dukes and kings were common things, and earls were three a penny. The situation here threatens to become similar. We will have all the members of the government ministers, defeated candidates will be ministers, with a seat in the Upper House, and somebody like our friend, Mr. Woodford, will be made a minister without a seat in either House. At that time everybody was a prime ministers, and party leaders were met by twos and threes in the streets. That is what we are coming to. We are disregarding what we were sent here to do. A man shall go back to his constituency for re-election after six months, not at all we will have departments which have been conceived over night and born in the morning. This condition of things is only fit for comic opera, and I hope it will be produced in some of the theatres.

It is a pity that more of the citizens of St. John's are not here to-day to enjoy this comedy. I say, sir, that there is no limit to the absurdities that such legislation will lead to if allowed to continue.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, before this bill passes I would like to say a few words anent it. Like my legal friend, the Hon. Mr. Higgins, I am somewhat astounded at the bill, as I was under the impression when in conversation with some members of the government that it was only covering the positions of minister of posts and telegraphs and minister of education, but I am certainly astounded to see now that it covers my hon. friend, the acting minister of shipping, Mr. Cave, although he has resigned.

I think the bill in itself, as far as the ministers of posts and telegraphs and education are concerned is perfectly right, because, I presume there was nothing else to be done, seeing that they have already been appointed to fill these positoins; but why the hon. the prime minister and the government have decided to come in here with an act, which is irregular, and appoint Mr. Cave head of a department which you are going to do away with in six months time, I am at a loss to know.

I remember a couple of years ago when I was appointed minister of shipping, bills were passed to cover positions of ministers of the crown, but the great argument at that time was that a national government existed and the great war was on. To-day matters are entirely different. But even when those bills were being put through a couple of years ago, the present prime minister, in his place in the Upper House, was very strongly opposed to them, and in fact did not believe in them at all, but I suppose it is a case of Peck's bad boy, "What we do is alright, but what the other fellows do is all wrong."

I would like to say that in my opinion that the department of shipping, under the control of the hon. minister of marine and fisheries, is just as essential to-day as it was two years before the war, because until the hon. minister of marine is prepared to take that position and get extra help to run it, and run it as it should be run, we have a grave crisis ahead of us. My argument for that statement is as simple as A. B. C.

The position in this country today is worse than it was any time before and the hon. minister of marine and fisheries knows what I am saying to be correct. We are in a very serious position and a more serious position than I would like to tell this country, but I honestly believe that we are standing on the verge of a volcanic eruption and do not know when it will come off. The hon. minister of marine and fisheries knows this as well as I do and if the hon. the prime minister and his government don't know, the Hon. Mr. Coaker ought to tell him quick. I repeat, without any hesitation whatever, that you are in an acute position to-day, and I appeal to the Hon. Mr. Coaker to say whether I am right or whether I am wrong.

You have in this country now something like from twelve to fifteen thousand hogsheads of salt and you cannot get a tubfull out of Cadiz or some ports of Spain. You have only enough salt in this town to-day to last seven days for the supplying of all the vessels that come from north. I make that statement without fear of contradiction. In the light of that then do you mean to tell me that you do not want a minister of shipping? When I was minister of shipping in 1918 I was associated with the hon. minister of marine and fisheries, he was on my board and he knows how I had to fight to bring salt here.

In 1919 we had in this city over thirty thousand tons or approximately one hundred and twenty thousand hogsheads of salt To-day you stand to meet a situation of less than a hundred hogsheads and still you want to clew up that department. Let me emphasize that it is more essential than ever it was; and let me tell you further that the minister of shipping should be a member of the executive government, and if the Hon. Mr. Cave had held an executive seat you would not be in the position you are in to-day. I say if he had held an executive seat he would have been able to confer with his executive government to lay correspondence time and again before his brother councillors. I do not blame the Hon. Mr. Cave for the coal situation that exists in the city at present, because I know that he told the executive about it. But what help could he get from them? He simply had to fight his own battles and the only way he could do that properly was to occupy a seat in the council himself. I believe that the Hon. Mr. Cave was entitled to an executive seat, and I told him personally that it was imperative that he should have it, in order to carry on that position correctly; and I say to the hon. the prime minister and to his government that the Hon. Mr. Cave was entitled to an executive seat, and I told him personally that it was imperative that he should have it, in order to carry on that position correctly; and I say to the hon. the prime minister and to his government that the Hon. Mr. Cave has been treated unfairly. And I say, sir if you hope to extend his term of office, let him go to the district of Bay de Verde again for election, if the department of shipping is considered necessary by you, but if you think it is not necessary, clew it up immediately.

Look at the coal situation to-day. I wish to state here right openly in coal question was never more serious than it is at present. Such a condition of affairs would not probably exist if the Hon. Mr. Cave had had the opportunity to do his duty properly, but for the reason already stated, he was hampered and obstructed in the performance of his duties. At present schooners are lying up in Sydney Harbour awaiting to get a ton of coal to bring down. You will find there schooners from all parts of Newfoundland lying there for andefinite period.

I have previously referred to the salt situation, and I fear that the result will, in my judgment, be serious. Something should be done and I appeal to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. We want to do something and do it quick. We want to help the fishermen and to get them to work to enable us to settle the price of fish for them for next fall.

Here is another serious matter confronting the country to-day. Four weeks ago I asked for information on the same subject, but have heard nothing since. It is really the business of the shipping department. There is not a word from the Prime Minister or anybody else about it. I refer to the coastal service. We want a definite policy outlined concerning this important matter. You members on the Government side do not know any more about it than we do on the Opposition side. The Portia is on dock but we do not know when she will resume the service on the South West Coast. Regarding the Prospero, who knows when she will get north? Not a member on the Government side knows. The time is come when Mr. Cave, if appointed again, should be given the power to enable him to do his duty in a right way, and not have him running around after the Prime Minister whenever he wants to do something. If I had to go looking for the prime minister every time I wanted to do something, during my tenure of office, all would have been lost. I say again it is not fair to Mr. Cave, or it is not straight for the way in which he has been treated. If he has responsibilities and blame to shoulder, well then give him some powers. I would like to know from the Prime Minister what the government are considering or proposing to do with reference to the coastal service. Let us know what they are considering and we will help them out. I am not here to obstruct, I am here to assist if I can, in honor of the constituency that sent me here.

Certainly I think that this is a vicious bill. However, if Mr. Cave, by accident or oversight on the part of the Prime Minister, is considered passed his day after another try-out of six months, get some other man to try the job and endeavour to do something in that department. You cannot expect the Hon. Minister of Marine to do it all. I know pretty well what a heavy task he has got to perform and the obligations he has got to meet. I know and he knows that this very time is more serious than at any time since I was in charge. I want to appeal to the Prime Minister and his associates to take this salt question up seriously and get to work at it or you may have no codfish next fall to put a price on. Just think of this, Mr. Chairman: This time twelve months ago (in 1919) we had one hundred and twenty thousand hogsheads of salt in St. John's, and to-day you have less than sixteen thousand hogsheads; and that in addition there is now a strike on in Cadiz and we are informed from Cadiz that they cannot give us any definite idea when they can give us any salt, nor can we get a shovelful of salt out of other ports in Spain. Consequently we should ask ourselves this evening: Whither we are going and whither tending.

During my absence here last season when this legislature was open there was quite a deal of talk over the matter and price of salt. I regret I was not here. At that time we had our salt supply arranged, but if I had not held up the combine in December 1918 and demanded that salt be brought to this country, you would have realised what it meant to be without salt, but you are going to be without it this time and that is the funny side of it. Through the assistance of Sir E. R. Bowring, on the other side, and Mr. W. B. Grieve, who agreed with me, we got the salt here last year. Job and his outfit decided not have the salt come here. If you had been without salt last year, on account of Job and Morey, what a lovely position you would have been in.

I hope that this House will not tumble down about somebody's ears before this thing is got through with. I appeal to the Hon. Mr. Coaker, who is the only hon. gentleman on the government side whom I know personally that I can appeal to, to endeavour to save this salt situation and incidentally save his friends, the fishermen of this country. I also appeal to him, while arranging in act here, to appoint Mr. Cave as Minister of Shipping.

The situation is more serious than dreamt of. I question if we will have enough of hard coals to keep us going next winter. If a fellow gets up here and has the foresight to make a prophecy as to the outlook for Newfoundland, he is called a pessimist. But what can he do? You cannot close your eyes to the facts. They are and you have got to realise them, whether you are on the government side of the house or the opposition. And like the rest of us on this side of the houseI am prepared to put my shoulder to the wheel and serve Newfoundland, no matter who is the government of the day, and assist my fellow-men to get out of the hole we have got into, whether through mismanagement or what. If this is not done I may be able to say what is going to happen. Most of those on the government side of the house do not know much about the matter, but I believe the hon. minister of marine and fisheries knows that the statements I have made are absolutely correct.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—May be you would appreciate a coalition government.

SIR JOHN C. CROSBIE—I wish no coalition government. I had enough of that. I do not wish to be in the government no longer as far as I am personally concerned. But whether in the government or on the opposition I am ready and willing, if it is necessary, to give my services to the country. And I am prepared to do my duty if called upon in a fearless manner because of those who sent me here, and no defiance that will stand before me will prevent me from doing so. I ask the hon. minister of marine and fisheries, as he is the only person in the government who knows anything about the matter, if the salt position to-day is not very serious. I appeal to the hon. gentleman on behalf of the prime minister, on behalf of the government, to get together and try and get the salt position secure or we will not be sure as to what may happen.

I have no unkind word for the acting minister of shipping, Mr. Cave, but I do regret his position. I regret his position as acting minister of shipping, in which position he is not one of the executive council. He has not got the same as his executive brothers and those associated with him. I wish to call the attention of the government to this fact that the shipping question is more serious than they understand. It is of more serious moment than they give credit to. The hon. the minister of shipping wants every assistance possible from the executive government to carry out his tasks.

The coastal service requires great consideration and I want them to do something in this matter. I want them to lay upon the table of the house the plans which they suggest to carry out so that I may be able to give them any just criticism which they may deserve. I am waiting for this bill to come before the house so that I may criticise it if necessary. If it is all that can be desired then it will have my hearty support. I appeal to the Prime Minister and Eecutive Government and their associates and state that the position is really serious and demands immediate attention and the quicker the better, and I prophesied before it will not be far away when the Black Monday which we never dreamt of will be upon us.

Now firstly, as to the salt question, it is essential that sufficient salt be procurred, as it is necessary for the fishermen to produce the codfish. Secondly as to coal, some desperate attempt ought to be made to get some steamers to carry coal down here from the Dominion and Scotia Companies if we are to avoid a repetition or more than likely something worse than last winter, which was bad enough for anybody. Thirdly, some extraordinary effort should be made tc improve the deplorable coastal service, and the quicker the improvement is made the better. I am awaiting the coming up of thecoast al bill so that I can criticize it. I hope the leader of the government who, when a member of the Upper House criticised me because of the scandals I was committing as minister of shipping in the national government, will introduce a bill making it legal for Mr. Cave to act in his position according to his own dictates. I appeal to the hon. gentleman to seriously consider this matter before him and it is more serious than can be imagined.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—I wish to make some remarks in reply to the statements made by Sir John Crosbie re the salt question. Now the salt situation is, it is true, in a serious position, but not so serious as the hon. member announced to the house. The facts are somewhat like this: Since January up to the present time twenty thousand hogsheads of salt have been imported into the country. This is a large import under the circumstances because we have no steamers to bring salt in. There was remaining from last ten thouand tons available for the fishery of 1920. Our requirements are fifty-five thousand tons, so the balance of twenty-five thousand tons is still required for the present year's fishery, of course taking into consideration that the demands this season shall not be greater than last year's. Even when comparing the demand of this year with those of last year we will not have the same consumption of salt as we have had for the past five years because of the herring industry. There used to be two to fifteen thousand tons used down in Green Bay in the herring industry. On the west coast there is more salt than is required, and there is such a large amount there that some of it is being purchased for consumption down north. But the situation is serious because we had anticipated that a couple of cargoes would arrive before the end of May, as we had sufficient stocks to last till then, but these have not arrived.

There is at present a strike on at Cadiz and we have steamers there awaiting to load salt, but there is no possibility to get it until the strike is settled. From this point of view it is serious. If that strike continues it will be a serious matter. The salt importers met and discussed the advisability of having these steamers go to other ports for the salt, but it was gleaned that none could be had except at Lisbon. Large qualities are available there, but the difficulty is in the handling of it. There is none at Santa Pola or Geneva. Salt cannot be got there at any price. Salt can be obtained from the Portugal markets and it only requires to get into touch with the right people at Portugal and we may get the salt importers to consider whether it is not better to send the steamers to Lisbon to load. Of course if we do not get it, there it is, just as serious as Sir John Crosbie made it out to be, and it will be serious until the steamers are despatched to Lisbon to load.

With regard to the coastal service my hon. friend has already learned that the government of the day has not been lazy in the matter but has been exerting themselves in every way, and that it is not very easy to induce people to enter into a coastal contract in connection with steamers. We have been trying to purchase steamers so that they may take up the coastal service. The government has been trying to charter ships to the Reid Newfoundland Company and has endeavoured to procure suitable steamers, but all to no avail up to the present. At present there are only two bay boats. We have not been able to secure suitable bay boats or steamers.

The coal situation to-day is more serious than 1917-18. The demand for coal to-day is great but there is only a limited supply. Two years ago we could get sufficient coal from the Sydneys, but it is not easy to do that to-day. We can get sufficient coal for Newfoundland's requirements but we cannot get the steamers to bring it down. The coal matter is a serious matter, but it should not prevent us from developing the coal resources at St. George's. There is a deposit up there of over two million tons and if it comes too serious we shall have to mine this coal. There is enough there for twenty years, and if hte Sydney people should not feel disposed to make a square deal for the supply of coal for Newfoundland the government ought to see to it that the deposit at St. George's is mined and placed upon the market. Whether it is necessary or not the coal ought to be mined. We do not know what Sydney intends to do on account of the tax placed upon the ore.

It is the intention of the government that the department of shipping shall go out of existence at the end of the year. They anticipated during the winter to discontinue the department, but as pointed out by the hon. member for Port de Grave the demands on this department had to receive the serious consideration which they necessitated, and as it is essential that we get Bowring Brothers to take up the coastal service or else the government do it themselves the government ask for an extension of time for the minister of shipping : act and run the department. The de- department of marine and fisheries has enough responsibilit. Mr. Cave has had six monthrs' experience and ought now to know something about the department. No better man could be selected to work the department and an extension of time to the end of the year is asked for. Under the circumstances, as the hon. gentleman does not know what the decision of the court will be as to his return to this house, it was impossible for him to go to his district to be confirmed in his position as minister of ship- ping. He has done good work in the department. Of course he may not be able to fulfil the position to the satisfaction of the country in such an able manner as Sir John C. Crosbie himself. He has had the experience and Mr. Cave none at all.

SIR J. C. CROSBIE:—Mr. Chair- man, I quite appreciate the explan- ation of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but it is apparent that he does not understand the salt sit- uation as I do. He says that the stock required for this season is 55,000 hogsheads, but the local holdings does not exceed 5,000 tons. Bowring's and Baine Johnston's were the only concerns that imported salt last fall. Job's and Morey were afraid they would lose a few cents interest, and to-day they are drawing on Baine Johnston. I am told that our total stock to-day does not exceed 15,000 hogsheads. If I tell them that the situation is serious, they tell me that I am too pessimistci, and predicting another Black Monday. The supply at Lisbon is very limited. I question if they could load two steamers if the steamers were available. Now I'm going to tell you what to do, and I hope you will be sensible enough to do it. The minister of shipping has got to put restrictions on salt as quickly as he can. If the Cadiz strike is not over, even if we can get the steamers, there will be no salt to go north, and we will find in the month of July that the people of the kest coast will be sending to St. John's for salt. I suggest that we make some attempt to send down and get some salt at the West Indies. We ought to do it. I think that we can get the salt, but it can be easily found out by cable whether or not we can get it. Now that the fishermen know that there is a scarcity of salt there is going to be a rush on. We are practically to the first of June and without any salt worth while.

My hon. friend tells me that I will know about the coastal boats later. Well, I have been waiting two weeks already for some information, and I suppose I will have to wait longer. But my whole concern now is with the salt situation, and before the Government knows where they are the whole situation may tumble down over their heads.

Now with respect to the coal sit- uation. The hon. minister of marine and fisheries tells us that when the matter of taxation with respec to iron ore comes up he coal situation will also be brought up. The Do- minion Iron & Steel Company have nothing whatever to do with the coal situation. The Canadian government wants the coal to run their railroads, and if they demand it we are not going to get it. Send somebody to see if there is any coal there for us, and if it is there we ought to get it. If the coal is at St. George's we ought to go after it and get it. I would vote any amount of money to procure the coal at St. George's, but so far as I have been able to learn there is noth- ing there but water and rock.

It is part of the job of the hon. minister of marine and fisheries and mself to swap bouquets, but I am serious on behalf of the colony. Probabily I see the difficulties a little premature, a little ahead of somebody else, but we are facing a serious situation. If we are going to pass this bill, put Mr. Cave in the executive government so that he can do the job as it ought to be done. If you have nine members in the executive make it ten. We did it. I would not hold the job ten minutes without a seat in the executive government. I suggest that to the hon. the prime minister, feeling confident that the hon. minister of marine and fisheries agrees with what I have said.

In conclusion, gentlemen, I must ask you not to forget the salt situation and the coal situation. Think about it. If necessary stay up all night and think about it. Do something, and do it quick.

MR. WALSH—Just a few words in reference to the matter before the house to-day. I had no intention of speaking this afternoon, but I think I would be remiss in my duty to the district which I represent if I were not to take part in this discussion. With regard to the bill we are asked to discuss, it has been so well ventilated by the other members of the Opposition that it is hardly necessary to go over their comments. Any words that I may utter this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, towards any member of this house, will not be uttered in a spirit of disparagement with regard to these gentlemen. The whole bill is wrong and is only another step into the mud and mire of political expediency. With regard to the statement of Sir John Crosbie that the department of shipping is more essential than ever it was, I think I must disagree. While the war was on it was absolutely necessary to market our products, but now the war is over and I for one cannot see why this department should exist. It is true there is a great coal shortage, but to my mind the importation of coal plays no part in the duty of any government. We have in this town coal merchants who are not in the business, I am sure, for any philanthropic purpose, and who no doubt have made huge profits out of the business, and I cannot see why we should be asked to dig down into our pockets to assist these profiteering merchants. I understand that a bill is to be brought down here to deal with profiteering, and I am surprised that a number of the hon. members on the government side of the house have not protested against the further operation of the ministry of shipping. Its only duty at present is to assist the coal merchants in heir importation of coal and make further profits.

The same may be said of the salt importres. There were men in the trade then and they are in the trade now who were asking enormous profits on the different commodities required by the common people. The same requirements are being sold by the same men to-day, and if not at the same profits, I have no hesitation in saying at greater profits than ever before, so for this reason if for no other, I want to place myself on record as being opposed to the continuation of the department of shipping, if there is no more necessary work for that department than assisting the merchants in bringing in articles on which they can make big profits.

With regard to the Minister of Posts and Telegraphis I have very little to say. So far as the gentleman himself is concerned I have nothing but the greatest admiration for him. I feel sure he will do justice to the position, to the employees, and to the country, but I do want to place myself on record, as deploring a state of affairs which has lost us the service of that eminently qualified gentleman, the ex-postmaster general. During the time he occupied that office, I don't think anbody can accuse that gentleman of having neglected his important duties, but I think that everybody inside this house and outside of it will agree, that he was a most efficient official, and it is unfortunate that the Hon. Mr. Halfyard, or whoever may hold the office of minister of posts and telegraphs, in the future, will not have the wise counsel, and practical experience of that gentleman, Mr. Robinson.

With regard to the department of education, it has been said that this is a department of mystery. In looking over the correspondence this afternoon, which was handed to the leader of the opposition, in reply to a question from him a few days ago, I notice that these appointments took place last December, and I notice that the minister of posts and telegraphs, went into harness then, but if as has been stated there are no duties for the minister of education to perform, it is inconceivable that that gentleman has been participating in any pay or emolument from this house. I am sorry he is not here to-day or I would ask him whether he has or not. I don't believe he has. Surely, if he has no work to perform, and if this house has not been consulted as to any work that may be assigned to him, I don't think the government would attempt to force on this gentleman any amount of money for services he does not perform. This would be creating another precedent, compelling a member of this assembly to receive money under false pretences.

Now if we are to provide some position for the hon. ex-minister of shipping, as I am told he has resigned, and I want to state, that I don't think that there is a more honorable gentleman inside this house or outside of it, and I for one would like to see him occupy a position and I think it is deplorable that this gentleman should be placed in the position he is placed in, by the bill which we are considering, why not create one more minister, and in the creation of another minister I am going to suggest to the prime minister that he will only be carrying out one of the many pledges he sent to the country in his manifesto, why not create a department whereby the bone and sinew of this or any other country may be represented. There is no such department and never was, and no more important one could be thought of. Why not instead of by act of parliament permitting him to independently hold his seat without going to the people for re-election, why not appoint him minister of labor for another six months, and then if you are not in a position to send him back to his constituency, pass on and give it to some other man.

It is well known that any man on the government side of the house is well qualified to take any position from prime minister down. Well then, it should be an easy matter to find some other man to take up the cudgels on behalf of the laboring classes, and then you can pass the hon. ex-minister along to some other position. Be that as it may, I avail of this opportunity to appeal to the hon. the prime minister, and to each member of the government, not to allow this house to close until you have redeemed that pledge which you gave in regard to a department of labor, and I want to assure the prime minister and his associates that anything that lies within my power to help this motion along I will do gladly, and anything that will lighten the burden of the laboring classes will have my hearty support and cooperation.

Now whether it is wise or unwise that the coastal servce of this country should be controlled by the government is a matter that only time can tell. I would like to have the figures of the expenses of the boats controlled by the government from the tmie they were taken over by the government. It is only when we have these figures that we will be in a position to state whether from a financial standpoint the country has been getting better service by having these steamers under government control. I doubt whether government control of coastal boats will ever be carried out successfully.

During the war when transportation and railway service was taken over by the government in other countries, millions of dollars were lost, and it is only reasonable, because if these are taken over by the government, any government, there is always an army of government supporters who will be looking for a job. Sometimes the applicant may be qualified, and may be fully entitled to the position he applied for, but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is not the qualifications of the applicant that count, it is the number of votes he may mean to the party in power. Now I don't refer absolutely to the present administration. It would be the case with any administration, and I don't think that under such conditions government control of coastal service can ever be successfully carried out. I would like to say with regard to our coastal service, I had hoped that at this session, and I still hope it, that some legislation will be brought in whereby a provision will be made for the large and important stretches of coast line throughout the different parts of the country. These very people who are labouring under those difficulties have to pay their proportionate part, with the man who has a railway running to his back yard, and a coastal boat stopping at his stage head.

Some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house may say, this is the first time we have heard this from you. You are six years in this house, and why did you not try to get better coastal service in that time. In answer to that I would say, that at the first sesion of this house, when I had the honour to occupy a seat, from my place in this assembly, I pleaded that additional coastal service be granted the district which I had the honor to represent. However, as you know, Mr. Chairman, in August 1914, the great European war broke out, and that was the signal for no further expenditures for local improvements, and wisely so. All the money available was required to meet our war debt, and to keep the troops across. For this reason for the whole duration of the war, no member of the house, nor no person outside of this house, made any requests, for these very necessary facilities.

Now that the war is over and now that the government is installed in office, we should not allow this session of the house to terminate without having made provision for every section, every mile of our coast line from no matter what section of the island, and no matter whether the request comes from a representative who happens to be sitting on the government side or whether it comes from a man sitting in opposition. The request is a reasonable one, and I do not think that any hon. gentleman would, for a moment, stand up in his place in this house and state that the coast line between Trepassey and Placentia is not entitled to better coastal facilities nor would he state that the coastline between Cow Head and Cape Norman is not entitled to better coastal facilities, and the same principle applies to any other section of the island. It is about time then that hon. gentlemen of this house woke up to the fact that important duties of theirs are awaiting adjustment; and it is about time that the attention of this house would not be taken up too lengthily in trivial matters as I have known. I have known the attention of this house to have been occupied for hours and hours in discussing minor matters and more important matters that the whole population is vitally interested in were allowed to stand over from year to year. Are we ever intending to make an honest effort to try and stay the numbers, nay, the thousands of our men who yearly emigrate from this country? Are we ever intended to make an honest attempt to try and make conditions at home for them such that they will see that the legislature is with them and that we are making an honest attempt to try and better their conditions? The other day, in reply to a question asked in this house, I was informed of the enormous numbers of our manhood who were packing their bags, so to speak, and getting out.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—There are nearly as many coming back.

MR. WALSH:—I hope they all will come back, we do not want to see them stay away. Now with regard to this statement I want to state that only two days ago a number of my own constituents came down here with their last year's catch of fish and they found conditions such in this city that they resented the treatment that was handed out to them by the fish buyers of St. John's. Out of ten men who came four made up their minds and bought tickets for New York. These are men who had motor boats and all equipment for fishing. Now this is an alarming state of affairs and no jocose matter. I think we ought to try and better the conditions of the fishermen if we want to keep them at home. I do not blame the present government for that condition of affairs. The hon. minister of marine and fisheries knows the truth of the statement that I have just made, and I think I am perfectly within my rights in further discussing this matter while this bill is before the house. This is a bill giving a department absolute control over the importations of salt, and salt is an article that our greatest industry cannot go on without. Now I think it is only fair and just, gentlemen, that I referred to brought down a large amount of fish that had been held over in Branch since last season. The reason why it was held there is because that settlement is such an out of the way place as regards communication. When these men arrived here I went personally and saw some of the fish buyers. There were only two merchants in town who would look at fish at all, one of them was the firm of Job Bros. & Co., who offered to take the fish and pay $11 per quintal for merchantable, as some of the fish was a little damp and there would be a drop on the price of it proportionately to pay for the extra labour entailed in making it merchantable. I went down on Job's wharf the day the fish was being landand I found that the fish was being sacrificed and the men's interests were being sacrificed. I make that statement deliberately and I will ask no better witness to the truth of that charge than the hon. minister of marine and fisheries. When I saw what was happening I told those men and advised them to close down and allow no more fish to go ashore out of their schooner. I brought them to the Hon. W. F. Coaker whom I knew would see that they would get fair play, as I believed he would; and I believe now as I did then that if the position had been put up to him that he would have endeavored to prevent those men and others from being driven out of their own country to New York and other places. However, I brought a sample of the fish to his office and he agreed that I was right in stopping the landing of it. He promptly recommended me to a party with whom I could do better, but, unfortunately, we could not find any other buyers, with the consequence that the firm of Job's took all the fish and the men had to take for it what was offered them. Now I hope that bill will be brought down by somebody or that something will be embodied in a bill preventing in future a recurrence of this character.

To get back to coastal facilities I might say that I have an honest desire to try and induce the government to take into consideration the fact that we have up there in the district of Placentia and St. Mary's that I have the honour to represent a coast line extending all the way from Trepassey to Placentia that you might say is absolutely isolated as so far as coastal facilities are concerned. The Portia calls at Trepassey and her next port of call is St. Mary's. Now between these ports there are from ten to fifteen places not served at all. The next port of call is Salmonier. Between St. Mary's and Salmonier there are another dozen or more settlements, and important settlement, not being served. Placentia is the next port of call and between Salmonier and Placentia there are at least, from twenty-five to thirty settlements where a coastal boat never touches and these people in that area have to pay for the boat that runs to Catalina, Burin and all the boats the run everywhere else. These people have to pay their proportionate shares and they should be given some consideration, and I believe that they will before the close of this house. I asked a question this afternoon in reference to this same matter and I am not unreasonable enough to expect a reply now, but I am prepared to wait until a reply comes in; and I hope that when that reply does come in that the answer will be that provision will be brought down a few days hence to give those people in that important section of the Island what they are justly entitled to. Those people are not unreasonable in their demands and they resent the fact of any hon. member of this house having to go on his knees to any government for their just rights when they are called upon to pay dollar for dollar towards the upkeep of any of the public institutions, and institutions that they are not receiving any benefit from. It is only their just rights that they should be given consideration and I trust that they will be too.

Now with regard to the department of shipping, as I stated at first, I must disagree with the hon. member for Port de Grave, Sir John Crosbie, as to the importance of this particular office. So far as this salt situation is concerned I believe that with such a capable and energetic man as the hon. minister of marine and fisheries at the head of the shipping department a man who is interested in every ounce of salt and where it goes after it does arrive over here, that the purpose would be better served.

MR. BENNETT—Mr. Chairman, I have to express disappointment and disapproval at this bill. My friend, Mr. Higgins, spoke in a manner that expressed the conviction of a majority at least of the members of this house. The first paragraph of the bill alludes to the minister of posts and telegraphs and the minister of education. The wisdom of the government in creating these two departments and the manner in which they were created opens itself to much criticism. The men were appointed to departments that did no exist. I presume they have been drawing their salaries from the date their appointment. I have no great objection to the principle involved, but there appeared to be no necessity for the departments.

The position of posts and telegraphs was under consideration for many years and I might say that to one who had the honor of occupying the office of colonial secretary and who was possessed of the knowledge to be derived there from, the absolute necessity of having in the executive government the head of the postal department, was well known and this was especially applicable as it had relation to the national government where one saw, as perhaps on no other occasion, the great advantages that were of this department in the executive government. But, sir, this pian under the regime of the present administration has received a blow at its very birth by the circumstances which were responsible for the forcing of the resignation of the estimable gentleman who, on the accession to power of the present government, was in charge of the postal department, a man whom none was more highly qualified, none more thoroughly fitted to administer the affairs of that important office. The loss of his services to the country was a great one, because the late postmaster general I know, took a deep interest in the affairs of the department over which he presided and he had just begun the work of remodelling the department, and I have no doubt that had he remained there but a few years he would have done an inestimable service to the country in the reorganization of a department which was in need of that attention which he was so well fitted to give it. I question very much, sir, if the present service warrants such a hope and I fear that unless wiser counsel prevail, unless we give rise above petty prejudices and give proper consideration to and hold in just appreciation the merits of the man rather than take into account his political affiliations, this department, or any other department for that matter, will fall into a deplorable condition.

The other department, the mystery department as it might well be termed, we know nothing about for all we have been told concerning it is that a department of education had been created. I am glad, however, that my old friend and colleague, Dr. Barnes, has been appointed to preside over it for whatever his duties may be, I do not know of anyone who is more capable than he of attending to matters educational, but the unfortunate part of it is that we do not know what his work will be. I presume that we will be somewhat enlightened on this point when the legislation dealing with his department is brought down and I might say that when it is it will receive the earnest consideration of this side of the house at least. The bill which is before us this afternoon, sir, is a whitewash bill in every sense of the word. We have in the past had examples of just what could be attempted in this way but this bill goes further than any other that has ever been brought in. The principle is justifiable under certain circumstances but this is asking too much altogether. I join with my colleagues in their expressions of appreciation of Mr. Cave's worth, in deed it shows the great value that is set upon his services by the government when they are prepared to put an act on the statute book that will legalize his remaining in office after the time that the law, as it stands now, says that he is entitled to remain there, but while I appreciate the anxiety of the Government to retain Mr. Cave in this office, I cannot agree that the precedent is a wise one to establish. Mr. Cave, under this bill, will not be appointed to office under any commission from the Governor-in-Council but will be made minister of shipping by an act of parliament, and what is more he will be minister of shipping until the 31st day of December whether the government likes it or whether they do not and further, if the government went out of power to-morrow, I leave it to legal gentlemen if I am not right in the contention that Mr. Cave would still continue to be minister of shipping. If this can be done there is no reason why the government should not make him minister of shipping for the next four years. The case now before court should not be made an excuse for this sort of thing. We were told that a decision would be handed down in a few days and in the meantime the department could very well be looked after by Mr. Hall who has rendered such valuable service both under the present and the late administrations. As to the advisability of discontinuing the department after the end of the year, it is open to question. We have heard this evening, two members of this house who are supposed to be experts in matters of this kind, say that this is so. We have heard Sir John Crosbie say that the shipping department would be more necessary from now on than it was during the period of the war and the necessity of a strong and capable man at its head has also been emphasized. Now, if that is so, what hope have we after the end of December. The government contends that the same necessity for such a department will not exist after the end of the year as exists now, but I say that this argument is not consistent and the government should make some provision for the possible emergencies of the future, and should if no other course is open appoint another minister. I have no doubt that there are many members on the other side of the house who could readily acquire the knowledge that would be necessary to fit them for the office.

There's some underlying reason why this should be done. The bill condemns itself, as shown by the means resorted to continue the office. To extend the term of the existence of this department another six or seven months without any regard to the future, and to ask this house to submit to such a law is not creditable to the government, and is not acceptable to the members of this side of the house. In regard to the coastal service we are informed that it is under the consideration of the government. I think it requires serious and immediate consideration. The government have been looking for steamers and can't get the necessary ones. The two steamers now in use are inadequate. I heard the other day that a schooner had been employed to carry mails and freight to the district of Burin, and quite proper too. If we can't get steamers then let us have a few good vessels. There is a great demand for increased facilities in the coastal service and what department should look after this, if it is not the department of shipping. I agree with Sir John Crosbie that this department is more necessary to-day than ever it was. Great trouble has been caused that department by the irregularity of the coastal service and I think this department should be kept and looked after. In the city at present there is a continuous exhibition of lack of facilities in handling freight. Isn't it possible that something be done tc relieve the congestion at freight depots? People are being taxed day after day and outport and city residents have to bear the brunt. Is there no hope? Hasn't the minister of shipping any suggestion to make for the improvement of this situation. Some premises might be obtained. I know the late government had hopes of securing the Allan premises but this was bought before it was possible to obtain it. It may be possible to secure another premises in some part of the town if an effort is made to do so. This would save the present hardship that is so conspicuous in the city today. Some capable man should be placed in charge, and our very best resources developed to improve this situation.

In referring to the last section of this Act I think it should not be allowed to go to the statute book, it is vicious to the extreme and goes beyond the ordinary whitewash, by all means let Mr. Cave remain in his position but let him go to his district with the proper endorsation and not ask this legislature to legalize a law for that purpose. It is vicious in the extreme and should never occupy a place on the statute book.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN: — Mr. Chairman, I want to add a few words to this debate. I am sorry that I have to object to the passing of this bill, personally I would like to see the hon. minister retain his position, but I cannot support this bill. A few days ago a retroactive bill was brought in here and here's another that is objectionable. There's no precedent for this in any legislature. Here we find ourselves passing an act contrary to all and every act on the statute book. Why should this be done? There's a great majority of men on the other side of the house and men who are competent to take this position, and there's no reason why we should be faced with this situation. We have heard from the hon. leader of the government that it is his intention to close up this department, but there's lots of work for the ministry of shipping at this time. If the conditions existing to-day are correct we might just as well have the department closed up for the past six months. Here we are to-day nearing the first of June and according to a statement made by Sir John Crosbie yesterday with only 15,000 hhds. of salt in St. John's. The caplin are practically on our shores from June the first to the fifteenth, and yesterday we were told that we are left with only 15,000 hhds. of salt to meet the summer's catch, and no hope as to what will happen to improve the situation in the next three weeks. He simply told us that there is at present a strike among the workers in Cadiz and if a couple of steamers were chartered now to load they would not be able to do so. We are now right in the hands of the laborers of Cadiz. I have gone around during the past week to several of the firms in town and I found that Bowrings and Baine Johnston's are probably the only two firms that have any salt at all.

If the ice was off the coast north of Capt St. Francis to-day there would not be a hhd. of salt left in St. John's. The northern bays are blocked with ice and it is just as well that they are because if the sfihermen were able to get here at present there would not be sufficient salt to give them. I asked the minister of shipping some time ago in reference to the salt question what was going to be done and he said that there was 30,000 tons in the country. But when you come to take St. John's with only 15,000 hhds. somebody is to blame. When Sir John Crosbie was minister of shipping he was always on the job with regard to the salt situation and was constantly in touch with the shippers and firms to make certain that sufficient salt would be obtainable in the country when needed for the fishery. If the position is as grave as it appears to me then I don't know where we are as far as salt is concerned. June and July are the two principal months for the shore fishery and if we go short of salt during these two months the results will be disastrous. As far as coal is concerned we can always find a substitute, because in the outports wood is chiefly used for household purposes and St. John's is practically the only place to be considered. But, salt is the mainspring of 80 per cent of the industries of Newfoundland. If it is true that there is at present only 15,000 hhds. of salt in St. John's where are we going to land. There's no use in coming in here and introducing rules and regulations for the benefit of our fisheries if nothing has been done to secure salt. It is indeed a grave situation. I don't know if the minister can tell us of the existence of stocks at Halifax or St. Pierre which we could obtain in a hurry if necessary. At the present time we have but one twentieth of the required quantity. In St. John's last year we had as much as the whole Island contains to-day. One of the reasons given by the minister of shipping yesterday is that salt would not be in the same demand in the northern bays this year. Last year there was an exceptionally great herring fishery in the northern and western bays and this year the minister is resting content on the assumption that this will not be the case this year. Perhaps the hon. minister is not aware that he is forgetting and sidetracking an industry that is worth a million dollars to the colony. In his opinion the herring fishery is gone. With all the rules and regulations that have been introduced nothing has been done in this direction and one of our greatest industries is about to be neglected.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the hon. the minister of justice the bill entitled "an act to provide for the lighting of streets in the outports" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the hon. the prime minister, the bill entitled "an act to confirm a contract between the government and the Susu shipping company, limited," was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The house then adjourned accordingly.

WEDESDAY, May 19, 1920.

The house met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. the prime minister tabled the annual report of registrar general of births, deaths and marriages, 1919.

HON. MIN. MARINE & FISHERIES

—Mr. Speaker, I beg to present a petition from the people of Open Hall, King's Cove and Keels regarding the modification of the Prohibition Act. The petitioners seek a modification. My own position is I will not support any modification of the act unless the modification comes from the supporters of prohibition. If they want to have the act modified it will be a pleasure for me to give it my support. I have a great deal of sympathy with the prayer of the petitioners asking that scripts be done away with, and that a bottle be given once in a while, but such a request must come from the prohibitioners,the people who have put the prohibition laws on the statute book. I have been trying to get some of the prohibitioners to do something in the way of modification. I do not think that these petitions will receive any support from this side of the house, unless the prohibitioners themselves become interested. One reason why I would like to have something done by the prohibitionists to supply a bottle once in a while in order to stamp out the making of moonshine. We cannot put machinery into effect to stop the manufacture unless something else is substituted for it, but the people who put the law on the statute must seek its modification and not the people who opposed prohibition.

Mr. Sullivan gave notice of question.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of question.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted. and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions regarding the exportation of codfish from this colony.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—Mr. Chairman, in submitting these resolutions I will endeavour to explain them briefly. The intention of the government is to appoint a board to carry out the fish regulations. This bill provides the machinery, and the machinery consists of five men. The minister of marine and fisheries will be president. one member will be selected by the Board of Trade, and the three remaining members will be selected by the Governor-in-Council. The duty of the board will be to advise the Governor-in-Council regarding the export of codfish, the issuing of licenses. The board will regulate the terms upon which fish is exported, and the quantity of fish going to any market. With the rules as they are at present the minister has great powers, but under this act, discretionary powers are taken from him. He takes advice from the board by controlled opponents. The regulations may not be necessary this year, but the fact that we have an act is no reason why it should be used. It provides the machinery in case it is needed, and we would have saved a lot of worry and loss if we had the machinery during the past two years. The board will not have the power to issue licenses. Every exporter will receive a license who pays a fee of $50 for twelve months. It carries an additional tax of ten cents per qtl. on dry fish and five cents on soft fish. This money is handed back to the trade in way o expenditure for scientific research and inspection of fish if necessary and also in connection with the payment of trade agents. The government is now prepared to hand over $150,000.00 to be spent for this purpose. It will mean that $450,000.00 is taken from the trade as an export tax and license tax.

People will say that there is no need for this bill, but where I ask is the harm of placing a measure like this on the statute book? There are times when it is absolutely imperative to regulate the export of codfish, because there are times when eight or ten cargoes are being sent to the same market when two would be sufficient to supply the demands, and it will be readily understood that while with two cargoes going into a market like Oporto for instance, we would get a good price, eight or ten cargoes going into the same market, under the same conditions, must result in bringing prices down very considerably. I do not say that I should be prepared to do anything in this way as drastic as the measures that had to be taken last fall, for we all know the grave necessity that existed then for taking a firm stand on the matter of fish exports. Everybody was shivering in their shoes because nobody knew what was going to happen next, and things looked anything but hopeful for our getting out of an unpleasant situation without a great deal of difficulty and losses. Even the Government themselves when they went out of power, did not know where the thing was going to end, and I may say without fear of contradiction that they were hopelessly at a loss to know what the ultimate outcome would be. These conditions were brought about by the fact that a number of irresponsible men started selling fish to the Consorzio without any consideration as to quantity or requirements with the result that they were responsible for the cutting of prices and the general demoralizing of the markets.

A few days ago, when these resolutions had been drawn up, I submitted them to the trade with the request that they consider them and make any recommendations or suggestions for improvements that in their opinion would make the bill more effective in the general interests of the trade, but they condemned the resolutions although a large percentage of them had endorsed the regulations last fall and they passed the following resolution at the meeting held to discuss the matter of certain resolutions. I accepted their resolutions as to the price ofthe license and made it as they suggested, fifty dollars. The unfortunate part of it is that false impressions are created as to the probable effects of these regulations and we find someone writing in the Herald who goes further even than the objectors amongst the trade and says "only one supporter could be found for the proposed resolution and with this single exception resolutions were unanimously adopted to the effect that if anything of the kind foreshadowed were to be attempted all supplies would be stopped." Now there is nothing whatever in the resolutions passed at that meeting to that effect, but here is a definite statement gone broadcast, that has not a shadow of foundation in fact.

What I take exception to is that a report of what took place was not sent to the papers so as to avoid any such misstatements of this kind. As to the stopping of supplies, it will be found that the sooner this bill is passed the sooner will supplies be given out, for we know very well that people are not going to withhold supplies merely because steps are being taken to protect the export trade of our colony. Of course we will not have as much supplying this year as we had in 1918 or in 1919, and personally, I think that the curtailment of it to some extent would not do any harm. but so far as its being affected by the prices likely to be obtained is concerned, I would venture to state that we will get just as much for our fish this year as we got last year and for Labrador No. 1 fish I believe that we will get more than last year's price. We must have a day of reckoning, it has to come sometime, and 1920 is as good a time to have it as any other. It is necessary that we should have such a day of reckoning every seven or eight years so that we may be able to see just where we stand. If we do have a short fishery, the fishermen will get good value for their catch, and if we have 1,300,000 qtls. this year we will get as much for it as if we had 1,500,000 qtls., and the men who would be catching the other 200,000 qtls. will be away making good money. I think the more fishermen there would be away from the fishery this year the better for prices generally.

Now with regard to our knowledge of the fisheries. Anybody who knows the facts are aware that we know nothing at all about them. Some years ago we had a man named Neilson come here to teach us something about them, but he was jaded by opposition to his work till he died and all efforts were negatived. The day is coming when scientific knowledge of our fisheries will be absolutely necessary and at present we know practically nothing in this respect. If one were to take the hon. members of this house down on a wharf to watch the tomcods swimming about, there would not be four or five amongst them who could tell you for certainty whether or not these tomcods could ever grow into large fish. The other day a petition came into my department with reference to the prohibition of fishing on certain grounds in the vicinity of Comfort Cove. There is very deep water in this particular place and it was a good ground for turbot. A man went out there and put down his trawl for turbot with the result that he found that there was an abundant of codfish there. The water was 200 fathoms deep and the fish had remained there all the winter. We know very little about the fisheries from a scientific standpoint.

What I propose is that a first class man be appointed as superintendent of fisheries and when the estimates come down you will find provision made there for $5,000 to pay such a man. The only difficulty will be in procuring him and whether we are to look for him in Canada, in England, or in Norway. Of course the best man is unquestionably to be found in Norway, but so far as I am concerned I would have some misgivings about bringing a man here from Norway to handle the investigating and scientific research of our fisheries because we would not want him to use the information that he would gather here to our own detriment. In Canada, there is quite a strong feeling with regard to the matter of research work of this kind and the sentiment there seems to be in favour of having it carried on in an international way. A conference is to be held in Vancouver in June to go into the matter fully and they have invited a representative of this colony to attend, but whether this will be possible or not it is difficult to say. I will not be able to go there. One of the subjects to be discussed will be scientific research. In this I think we ought to co-operate with Canada and work together because it would be greatly to our advantage to do so. Canada's fishery problems are practically identical with ours, and for that reason also it would benefit us to work in co-operation with the Canadian government. The boat Daisy which has been purchased from the British government is a trawler and when she comes here we can use her for the purpose of making experiments on our unknown fishing banks. I am informed that there is a considerable range of banks extending from Baccalieu to the Funks and from the Funks to Belle Isle and we have heard of alien bankers going out there and getting big catches of halibut. Now if we could make some experiments with regard to this, it would well repay our efforts. We cannot expect private concerns to have their vessels make these experiments, but when we have this boat, we can have this done. I hope that we will turn over a new leaf in all these matters.

We know least of all about that from which we earn our living. Mr. Grieve speaking in the Upper House said that Mr. Howes and Mr. Job went to Port Union to discuss fish regulations with me last November. I must make an emphatic denial of that charge. Neither Mr. Hawes nor Mr. Job went to Port Union to discuss the regulations on November 1st. They went there wholly and solely for the purpose of visiting the plant and we did not discuss the regulations at that time. We had no idea that we were going to be returned at that time. But Mr. Hawes and Mr. Job did go to Port Union some time after, about November 18th, when we were in power and discussed the regulations wi me. They both gave me valuable advice in connection with that matter, and I think that the statements made in the upper house by Mr. Grieve are unfair. As far as Mr. Job is concerned, he has been of good use on the advisory board and has always been willing at all times to give the best advice in his possession regarding the fish exports. He is a most useful representative of the trade and does not spare himself in any endeavour to assist the trade or the country.

Now I do not put much dependence on the late resolutions of the Board of Trade, because they had previously met in March and had resolved that the regulations were good, and they did not want the price of fish fixed except by conference, and I do not see why we should meet all the exporters and discuss the price of fish from time to time. If you ask my candid opinion on these regulations, I would say that they should be enforced because they have this season benefited the Colony to a tremendous extent. Nobody knows what would have happened if these regulations had not been in force. In conversation with one of the men who attended that meeting on Friday morning, he said "Mr. Coaker, if you abandoned these regulations there is no knowing what would happen." I asked him if he were not one of the men who voted for these resolutions, and he said yes but he did not get a chance to discuss them and did not know where he was. I refused to go to the exporters' meeting because I said that it was a matter for themselves to decide. If you want to improve them, make any suggestion and if acceptable, I am only too pleased to consider their bona fides.

There's another matter I would like to discuss. Several bills have passed this house and have gone to the upper house and been referred to a select committee and all those bills are in the best interests of fishery conditions in this country. If the trade will work with me in promoting the interests of the fisheries I will be only too glad to co-operate, but if they fail to do this they can have the department of fisheries conducted in the future as in the past, a department for allocating marine grants and supplying lobster labels. I do not want to be there if they do not intend to co-operate with us. I am there because I think I can do some good in straightening out the kinks in fishery matters. If they do not help, I am willing to get out. So far as selling my fish is concerned, I can sell it if they can. I have agents on the other side who can sell my fish at all times.

The resolutions and the whole bill were thrashed out with the trade; at first they were agreeable, but now they disagree. If they work with me I am ready to cooperate and I will goahead and do something to improve the conditions, and I am convinced if the country is to progress and prosper and place her export business on a sound basis, that much awaits to be done. The matter had become too serious to ignore. Yesterday I received a message from Spain containing the information that a firm had sent a shipment of Labrador and shore fish to that country, and that it had arrived there in a bad condition and been rejected. This fish we sold via New York. It has been dumped on the Spanish market at 50s. 6d. for the shore, which means a slump in prices all round in Spain and a loss to shippers of scores of thousands of dollars. Yet some say there is no need of regulations.

If any member of the Opposition can prove to me that these regulations will not benefit our cause in any shape or form, I will withdraw them, but I want positive proof. The country up to the present time has derived the benefits of hundreds of thousands of dollars from these regulations, and I seriously and confidently make that assertion. If they were not in force this season I doubt if we would be getting 50s. per qtl. for fish in Spain, Italy and Portugal.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and it was ordered that the committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of hon. the minister of finance and customs the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions for the amendment of the income war tax act, 1918.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE & CUSTOMS—Mr. Speaker, in moving these resolutions I would like to say that it is the intention to keep this act in force for another year, with one proviso, and that is that there is now provision made for each child up to the age of eighteen years. There is an allowance of two hundred dollars off the income tax, for each child up to that age. That is the only difference that is made in it.

The business profits tax will be continued for another year with one or two points of difference. Instead of the banks paying the regular assessment they will pay one-half of one per cent. on all deposits, up to December 31st. We think that this will cover all difficulties in connection with assessment. The other change, provides for the elimination of Section 3, Clause G.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, I think it is only right that I should at once support this bill. I find that by a happening of the past few days I have secured for myself additional exemption of two hundred dollars. I trust we shall see that many of the hon. members of this house, will take advantage of the policy of the government, in encouraging them to take their proper places in the world. I support this bill also, because the amendment has really been a subject of considerable discussion for some time past. A great deal has been said of the unfairness of the law, which compels men with families to pay the same as men who have no family. Apart from a personal advantage which this Bill gives me, I think iti s fair provision, and for that reason I give my support to it.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, although I am not in a position to support this measure for the same seasons as my colleague, Mr. Higgins, I do support it for other reasons, but I would like to see another addition to it, namely some provision protecting the men who are provident enough to put insurance on their lives. In Canada and in England, a provision allows a certain reduction, in proportion to the amount a man carries on his life. as although life insurance is a benefit to himself, it is also a benefit to the state, in as much as he prevents his family from becoming a burden to the state. I think that we ought to realize that in putting on an addition of this sort, we are giving a provident man encouragement, and I think we ought to consider well whether it would not be advisable to make some readuction for the man who benefits himself and the state in this manner. I beg to suggest to the hon. the minister of finance and customs that some such allowance be made.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman, the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox, is a very admirable one, and might be worked out in another session, in a way which might be equitable to the man who is as Mr. Fox says provident enough to insure his life, and thereby benefit himself, and the state. The matter is one well worthy of consideration, but it is impossible to consider any such change at the present time because it would necessitate a reorganization of the income tax.

HON. MINISTE OF FINANCE & CUSTOMS—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the suggestions from the Hon. Member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox, I would like to say that any such measure would place the assessor's department in a very peculiar position. I think it would take all benefit from the income tax to the country, if we were to make any provision for life insurance.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had passed the said resolutions with amendment and recommended that a bill be introduced ~~to~~ give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled "An Act to amend 'The Income War Tax Act, 1918'" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of hon. the minister of finance and customs the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions for the amendment of the Business Profits Tax Act, 1917."

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say against the bill, but I fear that the taxing of the deposits in the Savings Banks may cause a reaction quicker than we would realise. In other words the financial world to-day and especially the banks are tightening up their strings and we might get, before we know where we are, a big shot from the banks by their increasing the interest on loans. The Bank of England to-day is up to 7 per cent. and it may go up to 8. I have no doubt to-day that if the matter was properly and thoroughly probed, that there is business done over the counters in our banks at 7 per cent instead of 6. I would like to draw the attention of the house to the suggestion that I have made, as I think it is worth whil considering before any definite actio is taken in this matter. I know that when the last bill of this kind was before this house that it was optional for the banks to pay a profits tax o pay on deposits. They chose the former. It is a very difficult matter to try and get over the banks and I would like to say to the hon. minister of finance to be very, very careful and not have started a hornet's nest by an increase of the interests on loans.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt but that the banks are hauling in. The banks in Newfoundland and in other parts of the world are experiencing unrest, and business generally is no enjoying the same boon as it was four or five years ago. Commodities were very cheap then compared to no and naturally when money was cheap and the banks were not as careful and did not take the same precautions as they are taking to-day. We are well aware that the banks are not going to be satisfied with what we do. Whatever we do will not meet their views and no matter what act was passed that controlled their profits they would not be agreeable to it. If they come back on the country and instead of charging 6 per cent. on loans charge 7 or 8 per cent., we can in return increase our rate on deposits. Like Sir John Crosbie, I am fully convinced that the banks here at the present time are not giving money at 6 per cent. and this is a well known fact to the business community. Ostensibly they are charging 6, but in reality charging 6½ and possibly 7. As I have already referred to, if they come back on the country and say we will not give you loans under 7 or 8 per cent., we will answer them by making them give 4 per cent. on deposits. During the war there was world wide agitation that the rate of interest on deposits in the banks should have been increased.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that under no condition can we force any man or men to pay 4 per cent. because I think it is beyond our powers entirely; and let me add that the day you try to do that by an act of the legislature you invite all the people to take their monies out of the banks. You will find that it would not be a sound move to attempt such a thing. The hon. finance minister, who is a business man—and I do some little business myself—must remember that the greater part of the trade of this country is done by people who get loans from banks, and if we do not get accommodated by the banks we cannot go on. Even the biggest of business men will sometimes have to call upon the banks to help them, and in my opinion the greatest and the biggest factor during the coming year, even when the Hon. Mr. Coaker and his regulations are forgotten about, towards fixing the price for 1920 fish will be the four institutions, known as banks, in this colony, so I would advise you to be very careful. The exporters of our fish have to rely upon the banks; and remember that the whole financial world is in a state of topsy turvy. As regards the charging of the banks one-half of one per cent., I would say that that is purely a matter for the finance minister who is in charge with the finances of the colony.

MR. HIGGINS—Mr. Chairman, I rise to say that I do not think there can be any conflict of opinion as to disputing the act of the government. What actuate mse in supporting the resolutions is because I am supporting the judgment of two administrations, because the suggestion of one-half of one per cent. is not novel and the present government cannot be accused of it, and it is only fair to say that to-day's action is only a confirmation of the judgment of the previous administration. The 1917 act provided that as an alternative to paying the Profits Tax one-half of one per cent. on the savings deposits was to be paid. This proposal was acceded to and proceeded with and the banks decided to adopt the former course. Now the banks have apparently decided to escape the other method only to assume the cheapest way out for themselves. But the condtoins under which we live and with the estimates that the hon. minister of finance got to bring down and with the amount of revenue he has got to bring down and with the amount of revenue he has got to get to meet those estimates, I think that the government is justified in taking this step; and not alone ought we support the government in this thing, but I do not think that we can accuse them of having done anything in it haphazardly or too quickly.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Chairman, it has been stated by the hon. minister of finance and the hon. minister of marine and fisheries that the deposits in the city banks are between twenty-nine and thirty million dollars. If that is the case, this tax means a revenue of a hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Is the minister of finance in a position to inform me as to what were the profits tax paid by the four banks last year?

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE:—Seventy thousand dollars.

MR. BENNETT:—Sho that this tax will mean an increase of eighty thousand dollars or twenty thousand each. The danger I see that may arise from this extra tax is that it may have the effect of the banks increasing their deposit rates. To-day I understand their rates are 7 per cent. and they might increase it to 7½, which would mean a very much heavier tax than we are called upon to pay to-day. That I consider would be a very serious and dangerous position, especially under present conditions whereby it would have the effect of embarrassing and retarding business in the country very materially . The amount paid by the banks in interest on deposits is 3 per cent. Under present financial conditions this is absolutely below what people should receive. As to the powers of the legislature to make that interest higher, as applied to all the banks, I am not in a position to state, but the legislature has this power that tehy can regulate the interest in the Government Savings Bank. I believe that it would be sound finance if the government would regulate and increase the interest paid on deposits in the Government Saving Bank. It would have the effect of increasing deposits there. At the present time the government bank is not receiving that cooperation and help which it should. Therefore if the extra tax is going to have the effect of the four banks increasing the rate on their deposits, or that they may reduce their interest on the deposits of the public, I say that the time is opportune to do something for the fostering and encouring of deposits in the Newfoundland Savings Bank and make that institution worthy of the country in which it is situated. At present it is an institution that is not doing the work that it should do. I think that the deposits yearly are decreasing rather than increasing. Certainly I do not think that they have got their proportion out of the twenty-nine millions of dollars that is said to be deposited in all the banks. I throw out the suggestion that the time is opportune and there is the greatest amount of justification for it, for the government to increase the interest on deposits in the Newfoundland Government Savings Bank. I have no desire to oppose the resolutions, as I know that the Government requires the revenue, and I know that the other banks here have and are making large profits, as taxation here is not any greater than it is anywhere else.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had passed the said resolutions without amendment and recommended that a bill be introduced to give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled "An Act to amend 'The Business Profit Tax Act, 1917'" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Sir J. C. Crosbie asked that all correspondence be tabled in connection with the dissatisfaction expressed by the minister of posts and telegraphs over the post office at Broad Cove, Bay de Verde.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— In the absence of the minister of posts and telegraphs I may say that the answer to Sir John Crosbie's question will be tabled tomorrow.

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the Government to place a coastal boat on that isolated section of the coast between Trepassey and Placentia, taking in the following settlements: Trepassey Bay, St. Shott's, Peter's River, St. Vincent, Gaskier, Pt. LaHayse, St. Mary's, Riverhead, Mall Bay, Regina, Admiral's Beach, Mosquito, Salmonier North, St. Joseph's, Haricot, Tickles, Colinet, John's Pond, North Hr., Branch, Pt. Lance, St. Bride's, Gustlett, Angel's Cove, Patrick's Cove, Ship's Cove, Barachoix, Pt. Verde, and Placentia Railway.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Owing to the shortage of coastal boats it is not probable that arrangements can be made for this season.

Mr. Walsh asked the hon. the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the Government to continue the motor mail and passenger service between Sound Island, Barron Island, Woody Island, and the eastern end of Merasheen to Long Island and Arnold's Cove to connect with railway.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Owing to the shortage of coastal boats it is not probable that arrangements can be made for this season.

Mr. Walsh asked the hon. the prime minister if it is the intention of the Government to place an additional coastal steamer on Placentia Bay.

HON. PRIME MINISTER: — The question is the same as your second; practically the same.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Minister of Justice to table a copy of the commission issued to the commissioners appointed to inquire into the "Woodford Affidavit."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— No commission has been issued. The judges have notified His Excellency the Governor that under the conditions they will come to no finding.

Sir M. P. Cashin asked the Hon. Prime Minister to lay on the table of the house copies of all communications between the food control board and the sugar importers relative to the sugar situation or the control of the sugar supply.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— The chairman of the food control Board has informed me that the information will be available to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of hon. the prime minister, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 4 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled Of Legislative Disabilities and the Vacation of Seats in the House of Assembly.' "

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

MR. WALSH—Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening I was just about to conclude my remarks. I would now like to add one more remark in reference to that free gift of a ship and the purchase of two others. I would like to make one more plea that due consideration be given men of the navy and men of the army in this connection. Some men have come to me and I have told them to make application to the department of shipping and also to the department of marine and fisheries, as I did not know which department would have charge of this matter. Only last night a man came to me who had spent five years overseas. He went first as an ordinary seaman, and later he was promoted to petty officer. Since his discharge he has gone to school and qualified himself as a master. There are others who are entitled to just the same consideration, and I have no doubt that just consideration will be given them. I hope that if any of these men apply and are qualified that the first consideration will be given them. I understand that there are already quite a number of applicants. The men who went overseas and sacrificed their interests in so doing should be given first chance. Having done their bit, if we are going to make any attempt to fulfill our promise to them when they went and when they came back their application will be given first consideration. If these men are ignored and it is our misfortune to read in the newspapers that another war has broken out, how can we expect that another rally will be met? If some civilian or party heeler gets the position ahead of the returned man, the returned man will have to pack his bag and get out of the country. The fact that this man to whom I referred was promoted in the British navy should be sufficient proof of his qualification. This is all I have to ask, and I am sure it is not too much. I hope that when this matter is up for consideration, the men who have fought for their country will get first consideration.

MR. FOX—Mr. Chairman, might I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what exactly are the positions of Mr. Halfyard and Dr. Barnes at present.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—They are acting minister of posts and telegraphs, and acting minister of education respectively.

MR. FOX—Were they elected as such?

MON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Yes, after they received their appointments they vacated their seats and went back to their districts for re-election. If you would refer to the old act you will find that these offices were not included in those privileged under section 2, sub section 1. In the bye-election in St. John's West I found myself in the position, owing to changes made in the act during the war, that I could not seek re-election as premier for the same reason and I went back as colonial secretary.

MR. FOX—I support the provisions of this measure in so far as it offers protection to the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs and the Minister of Education and I think that in this we might even go a step further. Under the English Act, as you are aware a penalty could be imposed if these gentlemen sat in the house and vote without the proper authority and the mere fact of their resigning their seats and taking acting appointments would not alter the position in the least. Under these circumstances, might it not be well to have inserted in this bill a section that would provide these gentlemen with further protection. As to section 3, I must register my protest against anything of this nature being enacted. If it is thought necessary to abolish the ministry of shipping at the end of the year why not say so in a straightforward manner. As to Mr. Cave himself, I can only endorse what has already been said with regard to his capabilities, and I rceognize the fact that he is a most suitable appointee, but if the Government desire to retain Mr. Cave's services could they not get over that difficulty by appointing a nominal head of the department and give Mr. Cave the actual control of affairs, and he would then be able to carry out the duties of his office without the necessity of any such irregularities as must exist under this bill. I really think that we should endeavour to protect the constitutional policy of the country as far as possibly and it does not seem to me that an act of this kind would be in the best interests of this house. I would like to draw the attention of the Hon. the Prime Minister to the possible effect of the words in the concluding part of this section, "It shall be lawful," and might I not submit that some words be used in place of these which would render this part of the act less binding, on the assumption, of course, that the government does not see fit to take the other alternative of appointing a nominal head. It must not be forgotten that this will now become a statutory appointment which would mean that Mr. Cave would be holding down an office from which it is extremely doubtful he could be removed even on the dissolution of the Government.

Since it is necessary that this bill be passed, might I not suggest that some other words be used in place of those to which I refer as being objectionable. I know that it is not the intention of the Government to purposely create a situation of this kind but to avoid complications by having the verbiage of the act making it obligatory to retain Mr. Cave in the porfolio of shipping, no matter what change of circumstances came about, I feel sure that the Hon. the Prime Minister will readily agree to having the necessary change made.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—The words "subject to the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor" could be inserted and then the Governor could discharge him at any time he saw fit.

MR. FOX—That would meet the difficulty.

DR. JONES—Mr. Chairman, I must confess that the debate on this bill has become slightly puzzling because of the wide area that has been traversed and the many subjects treated therein, but Mr. Cave, I understand, is the man the retention of whose position we are asked under this bill to sanction. His position, it seems to me, is a peculiar one. He has been extolled in one breath by the members on this side of the house for exceptional qualifications as a minister of shipping, while in the next breath his department is denounced for the lack of results that have accrued from its operations, and I do not consider that it is either fair or logical to separate the man from the department, for the one must be judged according to the other.

The discussion on this matter reminded me of the pirate story in which it is told that a certain pirate chief was the mildest mannered man that ever cut a throat. My only experience of Mr. Cave has been to hear him speak in this house on one or two occasions, but from this I can say with truth that he is the mildest mannered man who ever held the portfolio of minister of shipping. Mr. Cave, in my opinion, has not lived up to the requirements of his position, and we have the evidence of this in the statements that have been made here within the past day or two. We are told that the country is threatened with a salt famine and surely one can conceive of nothing more disastrous to this country than a salt famine just now. It can only be regarded as hypocritical to be passing law restricting the fishermen, ordering them to cure their fish in a particular manner and to sell their fish only through certain specified channels and in certain ways while at the very time we are doing this there is nothing with which they can cure their fish when they do catch it. Surely when such a condition exists there must be poor management on someone's part to account for it. If the rivers at Grand Falls were suddenly found to be teeming with fish and the people there gave up paper making and went catching it, there would be some excuse if it was found that there was no salt to cure it, but in the present case there is no excuse whatever for the situation which confronts us. The position is a serious one and it does not reflect much credit upon the Minister of Shipping.

Sir John Crosbie who has had a wide experience and a great deal of knowledge in matters of this kind says that there is practically not a fortnight's supply of salt in the country, while on the other hand Mr. Coaker, who is equally well versed in this respect, tells us that there is no cause for alarm, but admits that the position is serious, and if this is so somebody must be responsible. If under the circumstances Mr. Cave cannot be retained in his position in the usual way, would it not be possible to find in the ranks of the government some other man capable of filling the office? As our friend, Mr. Archibald, who is also a townsman of mine, has told us, the government are two to one as compared with the Opposition and it is strange if a man capable of filling the position could not be secured from amongst so many if Mr. Cave is not willing to risk going back to his district for re-election.

HON. MINISTER OF SHIPPING—I am in the same position that you are. My election is still awiting the decision of the courts.

DR. JONES:—I am prepared to go back to my district to-morrow, if necessary, but at the same time I do not see why we should have to alter this act merely for the purpose of retaining Mr. Cave in his office beyond the time he is legally permitted to remain there, when there is such an abundance of material to chose from, and if we follow on in the manner in which we have been going thus far I believe that this session of the legislature will go down in history as having been marked by the amount of freak legislation enacted.

We have already occupied a great deal of time here when many of us myself included, are anxious to be at home attending to our work, but while this kind of thing goes on vigorous opposition must be expected and if this House was not asked to pass such measures as the one now before us, it would be found, I think, that the work of the session would go on very much more quickly.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Chairman, I want to add a few words to this debate. I am sorry that I have to object to the passing of this bill; personally I would like to see the hon. minister retain his position but I cannot support this bill. A few days ago a retroactive bill was brought in here and here's another that is objectionable. There's no precedent for this in any legislature. Here we find ourselves passing an act contrary to all and every act on the statute book. Why should this be done? There's a great majority of men on the other side of the House and men who are competent to take this position, and there's no reason why we should be faced with this situation. We have heard from the hon. leader of the Government that it is his intention to close up this department, but there's lots of work for the ministry of shipping at this time. If the conditions existing to-day are correct we might just as well have had the department closed up for the past six months. Here we are to-day nearing the first of June and according to a statement made by Sir John Crosbie yesterday with only 15,000 hhds. of salt in St. John's. The caplin are practically on our shores from June the first to the fifteenth and yesterday we were told that we are left with only 15,000 hhds. of salt to meet the summer's catch, and no hope as to what will happen to improve the situation in the next three months. At present there is a strike on among the works in Cadiz and if a couple of steamers were chartered now to load they would not be able to do so. We are now right in the hands of the laborers of Cadiz. I have gone around during the past week to several of the firms in town and I found that Bowring's and Baine Johnston's are probably the only two firms that have any salt at all.

If the ice was off the coast north of Cape St. Francis to-day there would not be a hhd. of salt left in St. John's. The northern bays are blocked with ice and it is just as well that they are because if the fishermen were able to get here at present there would not be sufficient salt to give them. I asked the Minister of Shipping some time ago in reference to the salt question what was going to be done, and he said that there was 30,000 tons in the country. But when you come to take St. John's with only 15,000 hhds. somebody is to blame. When Sir John Crosbie was Minister of Shipping he was always on the job from the first day of January with regard to the salt situation and was constantly in touch with the shippers and firms to make certain that sufficient salt would be obtainable in the country when needed for the fishery. If the position is as grave as it appears to me then I don't know where we are as far as salt is concerned. June and July are the two principal months for the shore fishery and if we go short of salt during these two months the results will be disastrous. As far as coal is concerned we can always find a substitute, because in the outports coal is chiefly used for household purposes and St. John's is practically the only place to be considered. But salt is the mainstay of 80 per cent. of the industries of Newfoundland. If it is true that there is at present only 15,000 hhds. of salt in St. John's where are we going to land. There's no use in coming in here and introducing rules and regulations for the benefit of our fisheries if nothing has been done to secure salt. It is indeed a grave situation. I don't know if the minister can tell us of the existence of stocks at Halifax or St. Pierre which we could obtain in a hurry if necessary.

At the present time we have one third of the required quantity.. In St. John's last year we had as much as the whole island contains to-day. One of the reasons given by the Minister of Shipping yesterday is that salt would not be in the same demand in the northern bays this year. Last year there was an exceptionally great herring fishery in the northern and western bays and this year the minister is resting content on the assumption that this will not be the case this year. Perhaps the hon. minister is not aware that he is forgetting and sidetracking an industry that is worth a million dollars to the colony. In his opinion the herring fishery is gone. With all the rules and regulations that have been introduced this year nothing has been done in this direction and one of our greatest industries is about to be neglected.

Nor do I take it that he is willing to let the herring fishery go by default. This fishery means one million dollars to the colony. He stated that we don't need as much salt this year as last year. This means that the herring fishery has become a blank within the last twelve months. It is the place of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to put some of the energy he is putting into other matters into matters concerning this important industry. And now exhort the Minister of Shipping to be in a position to tell us in the next forty-eight hours, what salt is in this country, or at least in St. John's. If there is only fifteen thousand hogsheads of salt in here at present, then is the Minister of Shipping in a position to tell us what he has done to remedy this condition of affairs. Did he enquire of the planters, and merchants, to find out if possible the exact position as far as salt is concerned. To my mind it is one of the most serious things that has occurred in the country for a number of years. Here we are near the first of June and there is no salt in St. John's and none coming. Is the Minister of Shipping carrying out the promises he made to the people of Bay de Verde last year? The Government don't care to point out the faults of others last year. It was the sins of the Government of the day that they put before the electors last fall together with false assurances and succeeded in the election, and here they are to-day sitting down and resting contentedly and the principal industry of the colony endangered, in fact the only permanent industry we have today, and then we are told by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that we won't need as much salt this year as last year. Men are leaving the country by hundreds, and it is not a good thing to have them leave here. This is what happened in 1905 and 1906. Men left and went to Gloucester and Boston as well as parts of Nova Scotia. It is true that some of them came back. Some had to return because their wives and families were here, but there were a lot who did not come back. Well, now, are we going to get back to that position again? It looks like it to me.

There is another matter. We are here a month now, or will be in a few days, and yet we have had no important legislation except one or two retroactive bills. It is now nearly the first of June and the Government are in power since last November. We were going to have everything up to date. We were going to have the House open in January, or at the latest, February. It is now the 20th of May, and as yet there is no legislation in the interests of the fishermen of the colony. We cannot even get our public accounts brought down. That is not in keeping with what was promised the people of this country last year. We were told by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as far as the coal situation was concerned, that if we did not and could not arrange for coal from Sydney we could get it in Newfoundland. He said that there were two million tons of coal in St. George's, and if necessary we could get that. How do we know that we could get it? We have a certainty that there is coal there, but I doubt very much whether there is sufficient of a commercial nature, and even with coal there, and our men leaving the country, you will have no labor to put in the coal fields. Now what do the Government intend to do as far as coal is concerned? Do they intend to make an arrangement with the Dominion Iron & Steel Co., of Sydney. They are in a position to do so if they wish. The position as far as the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. is concerned, is that they are wondering what tax is going to be placed on the ore yields from Bell Island. I don's know what the Government have decided yet, but I understood that it was the intention to put one dollar a ton upon the ore from Bell Island. Then surely if they can put one dollar a ton upon the ore, it will be easy for them to make arrangements with the Dominion Iron & Steel Co., as far as coal is concerned. Today we find that quite a number of our boats are held up in Sydney and cannot get coal. Now I would like to know if the Minister of Shipping has got in touch with the Dominion Iron & Steel Co., with reference to coal for these steamers in Sydney. Do I understand that the Minister made arrangements to have these vessels loaded? In the past there was an arrangement made by the Government that when we seent a steamer to Sydney there was no delay in loading. Now under existing circumstances I take it that it is an easy matter for the Minister of Shipping to make arrangemeents with that Company, because you have the power here to legislate with reference to the Dominion Iron & Steel Co. You have in Bell Island one million tons of ore a year, and you want a revenue from it, and you have to handle it carefully. You cannot do what you like with it. We may put ourselves in the position of killing the goose that lays the golden egg. If you tax Bell Island out of existence, you are throwing out of work 75 per cent. of the men of Conception Bay, who are earning their bread there. I am sure that legislation will come, but the only legislation we have had so far is one or two bills of unimportance. One was to return to certain individuals sums of money that they were not entitled to, and that was about all. Another retroactive bill was to put a man into the House of Assembly that the voters of the country did not put here, and who is not prepared to go back to his constituency for re-election.

Now there is another matter, one of the most important matters referred to by the present Government last fall, and that was the railway. The dangerous condition of the railroad was continually held up day after day for two or three months last fall. We were doing our best up to the time that we left office. We did our best while the war was on, and up to the time we were defeated, but we had no power from the people to pass any legislation in this respect. The present Government went to the country and placed before them the railroad position, and told the people how we were neglecting things. Now we are here a month and we have had no satisfactory information. The only thing we received was an answer from the Prime Minister to a question in which he says that a commission has been appointed to inquire into this matter. Is that sufficient answer? If you, Sir, are going to do anything this year, is it not time now to decide what you are going to do, and get to work, because you have to get to work this year or next, and the question you will be confronted with is, where are you going to get men to work on that railway? You cannot hold back until November, or December, and then put men on that railroad, and get only half value out of it. You all know quite well that you have to tackle that proposition, and the quicker you do it the better. Mind you, I am not finding fault or trying to criticise, but you have to do it. Whether you take it from the Reid Nfld. Co., or whether you make arrangement with the Reid Nfld. Co., you are up against it, and the Colony has to pay the bill. You have to do something to improve the conditions of that railroad, and you are saying to yourselves, if we do that the people will blame us for spending money on the railroad, for paying the Reid Nfld. Co., and you are not strong enough to come in here with legislation and pass a bill to put that railroad in first class condition.

That road has got to be put in shape. It will take millions of dollars to do it and it will take years to do it. What are you going to do about it? Thousands of men are leaving this Colony. Are you going to bring Chinamen and Italians here to do the work? You have the work to be done and you are offering nothing to your own men. Are you prepared to bring in legislation for work to be done and which should have been done three or four months ago. These are matters that are troubling the country and the people at the present time, and not whether Mister Cave or Mister somebody else retains his seat or not. Now we are the agents and the servants of the people of this Island and I for one am prepared to come in here and vote anything within reason to carry on this railway work or coastal work o rany public work that will be for the betterment of the whole people of this Colony. And way shouldn't I? That's what the people sent me here for. I have nothing personally to gain by seeing that these public works are properly operated. That in the position that I stand in today. We are here day after day discussing and losing time over a lot of nonsensical bills. Not one practical bill of any importance has as yet been brought before the House. But what capped the climax is when I picked up the order paper the other day and saw that an act respecting mid-wifery was about to be introduced. I can quite understand this being on the order paper because in answering a question concerning the Woodford affidavit the Hon. Minister of Justice replied that it was an abortion. Now that is the kind of legislation we have been up against the past month.

As far as the coastal service is concerned, the people are already saying that they are in the same old position. As soon as the Government were elected to power last fall they ran an advertisement in every paper for three or four months calling for tenders for coastal boats. The people who elected you thought then you were serious and that you were going to have a good coastal service, but in answer to a question two days ago we were told that you had no response whatever to this advertisement. Well here we are at the old see-saw game again. The whole country is virtually tied up now as regards the railway and coastal boats. Take the position of the steamers Prospero and Portia. The Portia has been at the dry dock for the past two months undergoing repairs and she will certainly be there for at least another six weeks if the amount of work that has to be done on her is accomplished. Tnat means tsat the coastal service on the south west coast is abandoned. The prospero is now in commission north, but she cannot do half the work demanded from her. We are told that the Reid Nfld. Co. had an agent on the other side of the water trying to purchase a steamer, but up to the present time neither the Government nor the Reid Nfld. Co's agent have secured a ship for coastal work. If we are intended to step forward, surely we cannot make much progress unless there is some encouragement in that direction. You will find day after day congestion everywhere as regards the ioastal service. You go to the Reid Nfld. Co's premises and you will find practically all the bay boats tied up, so that the coastal service is on the rocks, and the country will be on the rocks if something is not done and done quickly. It was only the other day that the railway was opened through to Port aux Basques. Not in my memory since the railway started have I seen that to happen before, and for the ten years that I was a member of the People's Party and the Amalgamated Party it never occurred. It was always possible to get from here to Port aux Basques, especially during the season of spring. It appears that ever since you came into power everything has been hoodooed and one trouble has happened after another. Now we are prepared to assist you, not for your sake but for the sake of the people and for the sake of the country.

Now take the road grants again, I want to get back after my old friend, the Minister of Public Works. We are now nearing the first of June and there has not been a dollar allocated to be spent on the roads throughout the Island. When he was in the amalgamated government he was in the position that he could spend moneys on roads on the first of May, if it suited him. Take the western districts. They are all clear of snow and frost now. In the district of Placentia and all the other western districts the money has to be sent out in the early spring, because after that all the men are gone fishing. I heard the Minister of Public Works say that no moneys would go to Placentia district this year until a road board would be appointed, under the local affairs act, and that the board would have the spending of all moneys but I would like to ask him what steps he has taken as yet towards the appointment of a board. Let me point out to him that the moneys for the district in the past, if not voted, were sent out by arrangement between the Government and the Board of Works Department on the first of May every year. That applied to the districts of St. John's East and West, Hr. Main, Hr. Grace, Ferryland and Placentia. Up to now there is not a dollar available to be spent on roads in these districts. In the district of Ferryland, as I pointed out the other day, we have road boards in every part of the district. I think the same road boards have been there for many years and they always, as far as I know, did good work for the money they got. The total grant for Ferryland, from the Goulds to Cape Race, was $1200, covering a distance of about seventy miles of road. There has been no money touched for that road yet, except for a few bridges that it was impossible to get over. As far as local road money was concerned, one-third of the amount used always be kept back in the Board of Works office and sent out automatically. This year, by order of the Minister of Public Works, no money would be sent out to be spent until boards would be appointed, under the Local Affairs Act. But you have not yet made any move to appoint boards. What is everybody's business is nobody's business. You gave us an excuse for not having an election, but you have lots of time to amend the act. Surely you are not going to sit here and wait for an amendment of the act before you allocate moneys for road work. The minister sits here in the House and does not know who got the $1200 that he sends out, although he repeatedly said in this House that he was not going to do anything that was not above board. In his estimates there is mentioned $1200 for a washout that never existed. You sent out $1200 and you are not in a position to tell to whom you sent it or by what authority. You did not do it off your own bat and you did not do it on the advice of anybody. We are now asking for $1200 to do the work before all the men are gone to the fishery, because by the time the election comes off, two months from now, all the men except a few stragglers, will be gone. In Ferryland during the past two or three weeks we could not get men to go to work during the spring of the year for the amount of money paid by the boards. You must remember that thousands of people are to be considered in this matter and the money is there to be given out for the workintended. And remember you are only sent here as a servant of the people, to do as you are told. We do not come here to be snarled at, but to do our duty in their behalf. Iserve notice on you now, sir, that it is about time that the money for Ferryland district is sent out. I take it that the hon. gentleman must be misinformed in some direction as far as Ferryland is concerned, because the men who spent money in the past, spent it honestly and well.

I must say that as far as family grants are concerned that I never found any of them in Ferryland district, and if you dispute that statement you can look over the records and find out for yourself. I never heard of a man who asked me for a family grant, and the Hon. Minister of Public Works can go to his department and find out if this statement is correct or not. I think your proposed action is an insult to the boards. How do you know whether every board is properly constituted o rnot? Why do you now amend the Act? We are passing all kinds of acts here within the past two or three weeks. We will fix that Local Affairs Act here in an afternoon if you want it. I hope it is not the intention of the Government to spend money in the fall of the year. If it is that money will be only a waste.

That road has got to be put in shape. It will take millions of dollars to do it and it will take years to do it. Thousands of men are leaving the country. Are you going to bring Chinamen and Italians here to do the work? You have the work to be done and you are offering nothing to your own men. And you are not prepared to bring in legislation for work to be done now and which should have been done three or four months ago. These are matters that are troubling the country and the people at the present time and not whether Mr. Cave or Mr. Somebody else retains his seat or not. Now we are the agents and the servants of the people of this Island and I for one am prepared to come in here and vote anything within reason to carry on this railway work or coastal work or any public work that will mean for the betterment of the fishermen of this colony. And why shouldn't I. That's what the people sent me here for. I have nothing personally to gain by seeing that these public works are properly in operation. That is the position that I stand in to-day. We are here day after day discussing and losing time over a lot of nonsensical bills. Not one practical bill of any importance has as yet been brought before the House. But what capped the climax is when I picked up the order paper the other day and saw that an act respecting midwifery was about to be introduced. I can quite understand this being on the order paper because in answering a question concerning the Woodford Affidavit the Hon. Minister of Justice replied that it was an abortion. Now that is the kind of legislation we have been up against the past month.

As far as the coastal service is concerned, the people are already saying that they are in the same old position. As soon as you were elected to power last fall you had an advertisement in every paper for 3 or 4 months calling for tenders for coastal boats.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received.

On motion for the adoption of the report Sir M. P. Cashin moved and Mr.

Bennett seconded that section 3 of the bill be stricken out.

Whereupon the House divided and there appeared for the amendment Sir M. P. Cashin, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Vinnicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. MacDonnell, Mr. Sullivan (9) and against it Hon. the Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, Minister of Finance, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Foote, Minister of Public Works, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Winsor, Mr. Small, Mr. Cheeseman, Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Targett, Mr. Guppy, Mr. Jones, Mr. Samson (16) so it passed in the negative.

The original motion for the adoption of the report was then put when there appeared in favor:

Hon. the Prime Minister, Minister of Justice, Minister of Finance, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Mr. Foote, Minister of Public Works, Mr. Abbott, Mr. Winsor, Mr. Small, Mr. Cheeseman, Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Targett, Mr. Guppy, Mr. Jones, Mr. Samson (16) and against it, Sir M. P. Cashin, Mr. Bennett, Mr. Higgins, Mr. Vinnicombe, Dr. Jones, Mr. Walsh, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. MacDonnell, Mr. Sullivan (9).

So it passed in the affirmative and was ordered accordingly.

It was then ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Minister of Justice the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled An Act to Provide for the Lighting of Streets in the Outports.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Public Works" with some amendments in which they resuest the concurrence of the House of Assembly.

On motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the said amendments were read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs" with some amendments in which they request the concurrence of the House of Assembly.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the said amendments were read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act for the Confirmation of a Contract with the Susu Shipping Company, Limited."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to Check Profiteering" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, in moving that this bill be now read a second time, I shall take the opportunity of briefly explaining its provisions. I feel, sir, that this is not a party measure nor will it be regarded as such and for that reason I am sure that it will receive the hearty support of the whole House. If, when the bill is being considered in the committee stage, any suggestion that would have the effect of improving it in any way, coming from our honorable friends on the other side, will be welcomed. The first section of the bill empowers the food control board to investigate prices, costs, profits, etc., and for the purposes of which investigation they will be given the power to summon before them such persons as they desire to furnish information or produce any documents that may be required with a view to fixing maximum prices, and secondly to investigate such complaints as shall be made to them of profits being sought or obtained which, under the particular circumstances of the case, are held to be unreasonable. upon which investigation they may, first declare the price that would yield a reasonable profit or secondly, require the seller to refund to the person making the complaint the amount paid in excess of such price.

Section 2 provides that if, as a result of any investigation made on their own initiative or on complaint made to them, the board may find that a seller has charged or has sought to charge a price that is, in view of all the circumstances, unreasonable, they may take proceedings against such seller before a court of summary jurisdiction and on conviction, the seller will be liable to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months. For the purpose of this section a fair rate of profit shall be held to be that which is not in excess of the fair average rate earned by persons engaged in the same business as the seller in pre-war days. Section 3 provides a penalty for failure to comply with or any infringement on any order of the board and also for the recovery of any amount ordered to be refunded by summary procedure as in the case of a civil debt. Section 4 provides for the imposing of a penalty upon such persons as shall knowingly or recklessly furnish any information or make any representation which is false in any material particular. Section 5 is to the effect that when a person can be convicted under this act is a company, every managing director or other officer concerned in the management of the company shall be guilty of a like offense unless he proves that the act which constituted the offence in question was committed without his knowledge. Section 6 merely has to do with the costs in any proceedings taken by the board. Section 7 gives the board the power to take evidence on oath while section 8 explains what shall be understood be the terms "sale" and "seller" and provides that the latter term shall include persons offering for sale as well as actually selling. Section 9 provides that nothing in this act shall apply to the sale of articles for export from Newfoundland or to articles sold by auction. Section 10 empowers the governor in council to appoint boards with similar powers under the act as the food control board, except that of fixing prices, to act in the outports. Section 11 empowers the board to make regulations governing the constitution, powers and precedure of all committees appointed under the preceding section. Section 12 reads as follows: No member for the time being of the board or of any committee appointed under section ten of this act shall be sualified to act in any case where he is a trade competitor of the person against whom a complaint under investigation has been lodged. The idea is to make it impossible for any person to investigate a complaint against a trade competitor.

Section 13 provides that whenever proceedings, founded on complaint, are being conducted before the board or before a committee, such proceedings shall be open to the public but such information or documents as may be required to be produced shall be regarded as confidential unless, of course, the case finds its way into court in which event it shall be of a quasi-criminal nature and the evidence will be at the disposal of the public as in other cases. There is also a clause in this section making it impossible for libel and slander actions in connection with investigations under this act, to be tried except before a court exercising judicial authority. There is one important section omitted from the bill which I shall read to the House for the benefit of honorable members.

(Insert section)

It is just possible that in certain small outports where there would perhaps be only one man doing business, a person making a complaint would be told when next he went to that store to make a purchase, be told that he could go elsewhere to procure what he wanted and the object of this section is to make it impossible for such a man to act in a vindictive manner against a complainant. This section will go in as 14 and section fourteen as the bill now stands will be made fifteen. This provides for appeals to the Supreme Court from the decisions of the board or committees. Section 16 reads "This act may be cited as the Profiteering Act, 1920," and shall continue in force until such date as the Governor in Council shall proclaim. This act has been drafted along the lines of the latest imperial legislation in this respect of which we have knowledge and with a view to meeting as far as possible Newfoundland conditions and I bespeak for it the support of the whole chamber.

MR. BENNETT:—I would like to ask Mr. Speaker if the members of the Food Control Board have been appointed yet.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Yes, the members of the board are Hon. A. W. Mews, chairman; Mr. J. J. McKay, Mr. McGrath, the late President of the L.S.P.U.; the President of the N.I.W.A., and Mr. H. W. LeMessurier.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister has said, there can be no difference of opinion on this bill, but one thing that strikes me at first blush is that well as the bill has been drafted and excellent tho its effects are likely to be, it might, because of the defficiency to which I am about to refer, become a dead letter. So far as I can see, there is nothing in the bill to ensure its provisions being carried out to that extent where its usefulness would justify its being placed on the statute book and I therefore propose that a section be incorporated to make it obligatory on the board to take action in all cases where action is warranted by the facts submitted in the lodging of a complaint or to give the man himself who makes the complaint or to give the man himself who makes the complaint power to take action. I take it that the government does not want to have this bill passed and the act placed on the statute book and then allow it to be forgotten or ignored, and I therefore see no reason why this precaution should not be taken, with this reservation, I support the second reading of the bill.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the good intention of the hon. member for St. John's east, I think that he will find that there is provision made in the bill against such a possibility as he refers to.

In reply to the objection raised by Mr. Higgins to the profiteering act that the board should be compelled to take action when a complaint is made, I think he will find that that is contained in the act. I have in my possession a whole collection of cases, where individuals complained they were being charged too much for certain articles. They took the proceedings necessary under this act and prosecuted the seller and in many cases received damages. I have in mind a case of a woman, who was charged one halfpenny 'a pint too much for milk. She made complaint to the board, they took the matter up, and the seller was fined $100. Once a complaint of this nature is made the food control board has full power to deal with it and they are bound to take action.

MR. HIGGINS:—But suppose they don't investigate it. I think our conditions here are different from those in England, and it must be remembered that there are wheels within wheels sometimes, and I think it would be wise to make it compulsory upon the board to take action.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—That can be done now but something can be inserted if necessary. If a man sends in a complaint, and the board refuses to investigate public opinion will force them to take steps in the matter, and anyway, a man can always get satisfaction by an appeal to the court.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 86 of the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (Third Series) entitled 'Of Stipendiary Magistrates and Justices of the Peace'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to amend Chapter 86 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, (Third Series), entitled "Of Stipendiary Magistrates." Certain offences can be tried by stipendiary magistrates, but the offence amended is not provided for. In Section 10, Chapter 96, it provides that the magistrate may impose a penalty, but there is no power granted the magistrate to try the case. I understand that magistrates have been in the habit of trying the offence in the past, and I want to make it clear that they have power to do so, so that the object of this bill is to provide this.

MR. HIGGINS:—In light of the fact that to-day we have the children given special encouragement to come into this world, and the act concerning the registration of midwives, and in light of the bill which has just been introduced, I wish to compliment the government on doing the hat trick, as regards a certain class of life.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 27 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of Death Duties,'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—In moving the second reading of this bill entitled "Of Death Duties," I would like to say that the present section of the act provides that the court shall not grant probate or administration to any estate until applicant has produced certificates from the Minister of Finance and Customs that the death duties have been paid. I may say that the procedure is very much easier, and quicker, and somewhat cheaper, when applicantion is made to the court on circuit instead of at St. John's, but owing to the fact that it is impossible to obtain receipts while on circuit, the result is that the administration cannot be granted, and this act provides that where application is made to the supreme court on circuit, they have the power to grant it, provided bonds are put up t othe amount of the value of the estate. If the duties are not paid within three months from the granting of letters of probate, they shall be revoked by the court.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the bill entitled "An Act concerning the Registry of Midwives" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, Lady Harris has for some time past been interesting herself in the matter of improved nursing facilities for the outports, particularly in midwifery cases. The object of this bill is to empower His Excellency the Governor in Council to make rules and regulations for the practice of midwifery by women. The Newfoundland Medical Act has already provided for the practice of miderfy by men. Lady Harris and some of the ladies of the Women's Patriotic Association have made arrangements whereby nurses will be placed in several sections of the country, the nurses' salaries being derived from fees received, a small minimum salary being guaranteed by the Government. I feel sure that this bill will receive the unanimous support of this chamber.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions respecting the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 137 of the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (thir dseries) entitled 'Of the Fire Patrol.' "

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Speaker, this bill entitled "Of the Fire Patrol" is a very short one. I note it contains a provision relating to a grant of money. Under these circumstances I ask the leader of the opposition if he will consent to the discharge of the order and permit me to immediately move the House into a committee of the whole to consider this matter in the form of resolutions.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:--That will be alright.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— The object of these resolutions is to amend Section 23 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) by striking out the words "Four Thousand Dollars" and substituting therefor the words "Six Thousand Five Hundred Dollars." This merely means that instead of the sum of Four Thousand Dollars being donated annually by the Newfoundland Government towards the expense of the fire patrol organized by the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company and certain other companies for the protection of some timber areas of the country, the vote shall be increased to Six Thousand Five Hundred Dollars. Even with this increased vote the amount contributed by the government is very small in comparison with the total cost. With the permission of the leader of the opposition and concurrence of the entire house I now move that the house resolve itself into a committee of the whole on these resolutions.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the said bill was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of question.

Hon. Mr. Coaker gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act respecting Certificate of Masters and Mates."

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 20th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—I beg leave to lay upon the table of the Huose a copy of the public accounts for the year 1919.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I ask leave to present a petition from the Montreal Trust Co. asking that an act be passed to authorize them to exercise in this country the same business as they are engaged in at the Province of Quebec. I may say that there is now in the city a similar company, the Eastern Trust Co. doing business under the same act. I move that this petition be received and as it is a private bill it would be referred to a select committee for consideration.

The following select committee was appointed to consider the petition:—Hon. Minister of Justice, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Winsor.

MR. LeGROW:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the women of Newfoundland asking that they be given the right of franchise which up to the present it has not been their privilege to enjoy and which they are undoubtedly deserving of. The petition reads as follows:

This petition is signed by some 1,700 women amongst which are very prominent war workers, such as Lady Cashin, Lady Crosbie, Mrs. Browning and Mrs. Mitchell. I think it is about time sir, that this cause give consideration to such a petition that prays for the introduction of an act to grant to every woman the right of franchise whuch during the war they had certainly earned. The war work they did is an outstanding debt that we can never pay but in a small measure we may be able to recompense them and show our appreciation of their noble sacrifices for King and Empire and the lads "over there." The fact is sir, that when we went overseas to fight we went there in a great part to fight for our women. The municipal vote should have been granted to them long ago and in both municipal and governmental elections I am sure that in the future if the right that is due them be granted we will see a wonderful transformation in our political battles. Cleanliness and sanity will no doubt be their motto as far as the political fight is concerned and I trust that the department to which it relates will give this petition the consideration it warrants.

MR. SMALL:--Mr. Speaker I strongly support this petition presented by my friend the hon. member for Bay de Verde and sir, without a doubt the women of this country should participate in the elections of both the municipal council and the government. During the past four years of the war the women of Newfoundland have shown executive ability and have relieved many men from positions that were most strenuous in order that they might go across and take their places in the firing line where duty called them first and foremost.

The women of Russia fought against the Austrians and went over the top many a time and feared neither gas, bayonet or shell, but very few came back. They died for their country as many of our boys have gone over and died, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that when we give to the women the right of franchise we are making a step in the right direction and we are only giving to them the right that is due them. We are making a step in the right direction inasmuch as we will have cleaner politics; our women will not tolerate the tactics that are generally used in political wars in this country. I give this petition my heartiest support, Mr. Speaker, and pray that the Government will give it due consideration.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speakere, I am in accord with the support given this petition by my Hon. friend the Member for Bay de Verde, and my friend the Hon. Member for Burgeo and LaPoile. I have not the military experience of the Hon. Sergt. Major LeGrow, much as I desired it, nor have I the experience of the Hon. Lieut. Small, much as I might enjoy it; but I am equally sincere in offering my heartiest support to the prayer of this petition. I have heard many arguments against women as politicians, but the chief one seems to be that the mentality of a woman is inferior to that of man, but it would be an insult to our intelligence if we were to give any consideration to any such argument. Their war work effort has been unquestionable and on general principles Newfoundland should concede to her women the right of franchise that has been conceded to the women of England, Australia, New Zealand and Canada. Their record in the war speaks for itself and no words of mine can paint their sacrifices as they have been made. As Sergt. Major LeGrow has said, they went out and fought for this women and for every death that they died on the battlefield the woman at home suffers that death a thousand times over. When we consider the grief and sorrow that was theirs when they let their sons and brothers and husbands go far away over the ocean to fight on a foreign soil we can realize perhaps the cross they had to bear all through the great war. For every single death that has been recorded on the battlefield, the woman at home suffers that death a thousand ttimes over, and that's altogether apart from their services at home to which my hon. friends referred. I strongly endorse this petition and whether parliamentary or municipal, I am sure that our politics will be made cleaner. In that respect I am absolutely sincere. Our political morals are very low and our standard of political morality is very low and I am certain that the entrance of our women into politics would elevate that standard. Apart from that there are some phases of our public problems which women alone are capable of handling. We are absolutely ignorant of some of these things. I look forward to the day when the women of Newfoundland will have the right to vote. We have people who because nature has been sufficiently kind to create them men they are given the right to vote. The only qualification that they have to offer for this right is that they are men, but as regards their intellectual powers and their relative knowledge of the country's affairs they are absolutely impotent. I know men that nature never intended that they should have the right of franchise and who are allowed to vote, yet there are today in this country highly intelligent women and not granted that right.

England granted them a franchise after a long period of waiting. New Zealand did not require much inducement to do so, and Australia, a nation in the forefront of the world, willingly and voluntarily, granted them a franchise. Canada saw the necessity of giving her women a vote, and we are the only section of the Empire that has not acceded this courtesy and positive right. Looking at it from the viewpoint of the position that women have in our life we can admit and we must admit that the one great influence in this world is the guiding influence of good women. If in our private life we appreciate that influence, why should we debar it from our public life. I have great pleasure in supporting the prayer of this petition so ably presented and seconded by the two gallant members on the other side of the House.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I am requested to say a few words in reference to the petition before the House this afternoon, and I fear that my Hon. friend Mr. Fox won't have long to complain on that point. The principle of the petition is one that I commend to the House. I have no doubt that the right of municipal franchise is one alone that is sound, and from the manner in which it was supported this afternoon, I feel certain that any bill introduced will be endorsed in that respect. I think that in the light of the character of the petititon itself and of those who have signed, and bearing in mind the different aspects suggested it must of necessity receive the very best consideration and warmest sympathy from every member of this House. If you want to get a keen mind not obscured by little prejudice you will find that in an educated woman. Her judgment is far keener than that of a man's. We are not unmindful of the part that our women have played in the war, and I hope that in the municipal bill which is shortly to be placed before the House that one of the first sections will provide for the franchise of women.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this petition before the House, and I fully concur with the sentiments expressed by the speakers who preceded me. As one representing the city of St. John's on the city board, I think that the time has come for the ladies to do better work than the gentlemen on the board, and I can assure you that when this bill comes before the House that I will cast my vote to give the ladies the right to vote. When I was asked to say a few words on this matter this evening, all I feared was that what I would say would hamper the movement, because of the scarcity of hair on my head, but I can assure you that the scarcity of hair is not due to ladies like Mrs. Pankhurst.

As has been already pointed out, I think that in view of the noble work done by the women of Newfoundland during this war that they ought to be given the right to vote. Now the speakers who preceded me have gone over all the ground and it leaves me no ground to cover, but I can assure you that I will do all that is in my power to help give the ladies the right to vote, both in the municipal and parliamentary elections.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the petition from the women of the country, presented by Serget. Major LeGrow, Lt. Small, Mr. Higgins and Mr. Fox. I support this petition because I believe that the women of Newfoundland are entitled to have a vote, if for no other reason than because of the services they have rendered the British Empire during the last five years. Sergt.-Major LeGrow and Lieut. Small have told us of the great work done by the women at the front, and I am convinced that everybody in this House and outside it, realizes the work that they did in that noble institution, known as the Red Cross. They took a noble part in the war. They went to the British Empire from all parts of the world, from Newfoundland, Canada, and New Zealand, and took just as important a part as the soldiers at the front. We may take the ladies of the city and we know that if there is anything to be done in the way of good work, you will find them in the front ranks. Then take the Women's Patriotic Association. No better institution was ever created. In that institution you could find women from eighty-four years of age down to twelve years old girls knitting socks, making shirts and doing all the other things necessary for the soldiers. Then we take the work that the women have done with regard to tuberculosis and only those who have suffered from that dread disease, can fully realize what an immense amount of good the women have done in this connection. Now take the children's welfare. What better nobler work could be done than that? Now if the women are not entitled to a vote in this country, it is a strange thing to me. I understand the British government have given them the right to vote, but I believe that it applies only to women of thirty years of age, and over and a great many women don't take advantage of it, because they don't want to tell their age, but I am sure we are prepared to give them the right to vote from the age of twenty one years up, just the same as the men. They are just as much entitled to it, because they have just as much intelligence as the men of the country. Go down to Water Street and you will find them taking their place at the typewriters, you will find them behind counters, you will find them acting as secretaries to some of the greatest men and if they are not entitled to vote, that they are not entitled to these positions.

Take as an example the people of England during the war. they were doing the men's work, farming, driving, buses, and doing everything that was necessary in the absence of the men, and the government were not slow in appealing to them to step into the breach, and they were always ready when called upon.

I trust that the Hon. the Prime Minister will bring a bill into this House to amend the election act, and give all the women of Newfoundland over twenty one years the right to vote, and I will heartily support that bill and I feel sure that every member of this House if he considers it for twenty-four hours, will not hesitate to vote, that the women, have the right to be represented in parliament, and the right to vote in elections. I believe that if they are given the right to vote, that it will mean that we will have a much cleaner election in this city, and I want to say again that I will give this bill my hearty support when it is brought in by the Hon. the Prime Minister.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Certificates of Masters and Mates" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time to-morrow.

Mr. Sullivan asked the Hon. Minister of Marine and fisheries if it is the intention of the government to make provision in the estimates for the erection of a fog alarm at Pt. La Hayse, St. Mary's Bay, and for one other alarm on the western shore of Placentia Bay.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House a statement showing:

(a) What sums of money have been expended by his department in the District of St. George's, since November, 1919.

(b) To whom such sums were sent, and on whose advice such allocations, if any, were made.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, in replying to the question from Mr. Sullivan, in the absence of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I beg to say that that information will be tabled on to-morrow, and the same reply will be given to the question from Mr. MacDonnell.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from Mr. MacDonnell, I beg to table the information asked for.

Mr. MacDonnell asked the Minister of Justice to lay on the table of the House copies of all correspondence relative to the appointment of a commission to enquire into the circumstances and alleged malpractices as disclosed by the Woodford affidavit:

(1) Between the Department of Justice and the Governor.
(2) Between the Department of Justice and those appointed to that commission now abortive.
(3) Between the said commissioners and His Excellency the Governor.

Also a copy of the said commission.

And further, any other correspondence between his department and any other parties whatsoever on this matter.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—In reply of the question from Mr. MacDonnell, I beg to state that there has been no correspondence between the Department of Justice and the Governor, nor between the Department of Justice and those appointed to that commission, nor is there any correspondence between the Governor and those appointed to that commission in my possession. There is no copy of that commission, because the commission was never finalized. No commission was sent out signed, and no commission was issued, because the final draft to be signed by the Governor had in it instruction to the commission to report findings, and as the commission would not do that there was no use in going on with the commission.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I understood from you the other day that the commission had been appointed and would get to work within a week from then.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—I did not say that. I said the commission had been drafted.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to table a reply to a question asked by Sir Michael Cashin.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to call attention to the fact that the latter part of the question that I asked relative to the Woodford affidavit has not been answered.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—There is no correspondence whatever.

Second reading of the Council's amendments to the Public Works Bill.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, as explained yesterday this amendment is to cut out sections three and four and substitute the following therefor: The effect of it is to have Mr. James Harris styled deputy instead of secretary in harmony with the other departments of the civil service. Sections five and twenty-five are hereby amended by striking out the work secretary and substituting deputy head of the department.

Second reading of Council's amendments to the Posts and Telegraphs Bill.

Committee of the whole on Bill entitled "Of Stipendiary Magistrates and Justices of the Peace."

Committee of the Whole on Bill "Of Death Duties."

Committee of the whole on bill entitled "An Act concerning the Registry of Midwives."

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the amendments made by the Legislative Council in and upon the bills sent up entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Public Works" were read a second time and concurred in, and it was ordered that a message be sent to the Legislative Council acquainting them that the House had concurred in the said amendments.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the amendments made by the Legislative Council in and upon the bill sent up entitled "An Act respecting the Department of Posts and Telegraphs," were read and concurred in, and it was ordered that a message be sent to the Legislative Council acquainting them that the House had concurred in the said amendments.

It is to be understood that this concurrence is not to be taken as a precedent or as an acknowledgement that the Legislative Council has the right to amend any money bill.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 4 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of Legislative Disabilities and the Vacation of Seats in the House of Assembly,'" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice the bill entitled "An Act to provide for the Lighting of Streets in the Outports," was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act for the Confirment of a Contract with the Susu Shipping Company, Limited," was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed, being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 86 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of Stipendiary Magistrates and Justices of the Peace.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 27 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of Death Duties.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act concerning the Registry of Midwives."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 157 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series) entitled 'Of the Fire Control;'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I now move that this bill be read a second time. I merely observe that on yesterday in the committee stage the House passed the subject-matter of this bill in the form of resolution. The bill simply consists of an increase for certain fire control services from $4,000 to $6,500.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions respecting the encouragement of agriculture.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I note that there is a printer's error in the order paper with reference to the agricultural resolutions. On yesterday this order was deferred until to-day. I move that the House resolve itself into committee of the whole to consider these resolutions.

MR. HIGGINS:—I would like to ask the leader of the government if he would give us some indication of the plan in regard to this change from twenty thousand to thirty thousand dollars. Under the old act no expenditure was ever made, although twenty thousand dollars were voted for the encouragement of agriculture.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Prior to the year 1916 there were two grants of $20,000 each, and that combined vote of $40,000 was put at the disposal of the Department of Agriculture and Mines. Shortly after the outbreak of the war the expenditure was reduced from $40,000 to $20,000 annually. The act, however, was not amended. Under these resolutions the first payment of $20,000 is increased to $30,000, and the second payment of $20,000 is increased to $25,000.

MR. HIGGINS:—That is exclusive of the Model Farm Act.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—These two votes are not exclusive of the Model Farm Act. They are under the Model Farm Act. That is the act with which we are now dealing. Under that act there was legislative authority for two grants each of $20,000, making a total of $40,000. This sum was taken by the board of agriculture and for the most part squandered. Certainly some value was secured, but a value not exceeding $20,000. A very large number of agricultural animals were imported into this country, but few were registered stock. A large number of them were of the poorest grade scrubs. They were distributed around the country with the same courteous charity that one gives Christmas presents. This agricultural policy was not dealt with as a business proposition. The distribution of animals was in the nature of political patronage and gifts rather than as a practical effort to improve stock. In many cases the animals were lost, died, or reached the butcher's table. The records show that a considerable number were "lost in bogs"; some few were reported as having gone mad and were consequently killed, and generally the policy was an utter failure. This was not due to any inherent defect in the policy as laid out by Sir Edward Morris. The policy was excellent; but it was due to the utterly inefficient administration of the policy by those to whom its administration was entrusted by the government.

MR. BENNETT:—This is in addition to the sum expended by the board of commissioners.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Under the first section providing for money grant, $20,000 was increased to $30,000, making it an annual increase under that section to the amount of $10,000. The second section relates to annual grant, and $20,000 is increased to $25,000, making an annual increase of $5,000 under that section. This makes a total increase on amount already voted by statute of $15,000. In other words $40,000 was formerly voted. We now ask for $50,000, and I feel sure that all the members of this legislature who have any knowledge of agriculture will agree with me that that is asking very little.

MR. MacDONNELL:—In reference to the statement of the Prime Minister as explanatory of this bill (of the encouragement of agriculture) or resolutions, I may say that while I agree with them and perhaps at one time had the same ideas as the Minister of Agriculture now holds, I do not think all the stock were exactly given as Christmas gifts but I hope to see an improvement in the present system which up to now has been lacking. While I agree that the animals were scattered broadcast throughout the country I do not see how much further we are getting by cutting down the animals I do not think these resolutions which will subsequently be embodied in an act to be progressive at all. They began at the wrong end. It may be very desirable that we should improve our stock of cattle in the country but if that means we have to import feed for them I fail to see that we are getting much further ahead. I suggested here some time ago when the bill concerning bounty for shipbuilding was before the House that the Government should include in its agricultural policy a provision for a bounty for the clearing of land. I have been assured that the bounty system in the past has not been a success in some places. That might be true. But with regard to our district, St. George's, I know it was a success and know that land that was cleared to get the bounty is still under cultivation and I know the amount of land under cultivation could to-day be increased three-fold if the bounty were placed again on the statute books. I believe that the government should do something in this way and give some encouragement to the people of this section of the country. The question of bounty and the matter of bonus on the crops for the first five years is a matter which I will support and I think this year when we can find enough money to pay fifteen thousand dollars to five individuals of the country who were not entitled to it unless because of the passing of an act, it is very strange that not a single dollar can be found for the encouragement of farming. There is no consistency in the policy of the government. If it means we got to raise the money we ought to raise it. This should be part of the policy of the government so that the people may be able to obtain a loan from the government for a number of years to be paid back say in five at a reasonable rate of interest on security of the properity. That is the policy that has been adopted elsewhere and it has worked out well. I think we should touch on this matter right away and something should be done immediately for the encouragement of the clearing of land and there reduce the high cost of living so much talked about. We should have increased production and thereby reduce the prices of the food stuffs. It is very regrettable that not a single dollar can be found for this very vital purpose. Still in the face of this we bring in an act to check profiteering.

It can't be that no money can be found for this purpose. It can't be that the House believes that there is no need of increased production. There is every reason to believe that giving a bonus will greatly effect the high cost of living. Surely it is not because the suggestion has come from this side of the House that nothing is being done. I would heartily support such a measure and I hope that it will be brought in. My only regret is that we are putting the cart before the horse. We are bringing in a measure to improve our stock and to increase our stock, without making any effort whatever to increase the production to maintain the cattle. I ask and very strongly urge that this matter be considered.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Chairman, I rise to support the arguments put forth by the hon. member for St. George's. In reference to the bounty on land the Prime Minister made reference last night to what happened to the bounty in St. John's West. I am willing to admit that the bounty was not always handled as it should be. But that is no argument against the principle involved. The fact that a law is abused is no argument against the law, but rather against the administration of the law. The arguments put forth by the member for St. George's must impress themselves upon every member of this House . It may not apply especially to St. John's West, but there are tracks of land in the country that could very well be cultivated, and encouragement should be given. The time has come when this law should again be put into force in order to secure greater production. There is nothing that will offset the high cost of living as will increased production. I hope the government will take the suggestion. I believe it will be a popular measure. Every dollar will come back tenfold. It has always been a popular measure. With an effective administration no land would be given bonuses until first inspected and passed as fit for agricultural purposes. Once the land is inspected and passed and put under cultivation the bonus would be forthcoming. In the district of St. George's there are numerous stretches of land that could be cultivated, and made to produce much that is to-day imported, but in many cases the land cannot be reached. There are no roads to the land. In many places the grass grows higher than the height of a man, but it must be let rot because it cannot be reached. It is up to the government to see that this condition does not continue, but this valuable land is reached and put under cultivation.

I am not sure that I know what the bill before us means as far as an increased grant is concerned. Three years ago the amount voted for this purpose was $20,000. Now we are asked to raise that amount to $55,000, to be devoted as the Prime Minister outlined last night. Considering his lack of knowledge and experience in that particular direction, the Prime Minister made an admirable showing. I am of opinion, however, that our agricultural possibilities in this country are not very far reaching in certain sections. The country cannot at present be maintained to any great degree on its agricultural products except our potato crop. This bill merely means the improvement of stock and matters of that nature, and we are faced with the fact that the ministers in charge of the department cannot represent his department in this House. My mind goes back to 1913 when the Minister of Agriculture and Mines and the Minister of Justice were not present in this House. The Minister of Justice was the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture and Mines was my friend, Mr. Blandford, the present High Sheriff. I recall the incessant bombardment from this side of the House. I remember the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Dr. Lloyd and all the members of the F. P.U. party protesting strongly against the action of the Morris government. I don't think I ever saw a man fight with greater earnestness and effect than did the Prime Minister (Lord Morris) at that time. They never let up during the session because of the absence of two responsible ministers from the House. Had not the Prime Minister been the strong resourceful man that he was thingh may have been much more serious than they were. It kept up until the gentlemen on the other side of the House saw it was useless to keep it up longer. I appeal to my friend, Mr. Jennings, if this is not true. I have no desire to hamper any agricultural ambitions of the government but I would like to know why the $20,000 is being raised to $55,000. I doubt if what the Prime Minister has said about there being no good stock in the country is true. If you will go to Mr. Geo. Ruby's farm or the Christian Brothers farm and many other such farms in the vicinity of St. John's you will find as good stock as can be seen in any country. What I do know, and what my friend Mr. Walsh will be in a position to tell the House, is that great strides were made in agricultural development during the Morris administration. Great improvements were made and these improvements have been noticeable all over the country. I don't think that the Hon. Prime Minister was well advised in making the statement last night that the monies spent during the past four or five years for this purpose were spent frivolously. I admit that some amounts that were expended were not fruitful of results but it must be remembered that $20,000 is a small amount and if it is to be increased to $55,000 much better things should be expected and the gentleman who is at present the incumbent of that department, who has so extensively advertised himself, has placed himself in the position where much is to be expected from him. He has placed himself before the public as an agricultural expert and he must now produce the goods. He has spent considerable money already in the publishing of reports and pamphlets and in newspaper publicity. This is a time for the serious consideration of our agricultural problems and not for frivolities. It is no time for men to go around the country talking of such things as cheese factories. I think we could consider ourselves well off if we could anticipate the erection of a butter factory. In my opinion the present Minister of Agriculture has a great deal to learn and I question very much if he has very much to teach the agriculturists of this country who have spent their whole life time working the soil and who know from that experience just what they have to contend with; they know what is best to suit their particular needs and the Minister of Agriculture would do well to go slowly and it is likely that he will learn something from these experienced farmers as to the conditions of the climate in this country, the conditions of the soil and many other items of general information as to the rearing of crops.

A model farm was tried here during the regime of Sir Robert Bond and while I have no doubt that this farm was well found and well fitted in every particular, and while it was conducted for a number of years along excellent lines, it was found to be of no general benefit to the country and for that reason a useless expenditure of public monies. When Sir Edward Morris came into power in 1919 it was abolished, it being pointed out that we could not hope to maintain a model farm in this country that would be productive of as beneficial results as similar farms in the agriculture centres of such countries as Canada, for as I have already remarked, this was recognized as being no means an highly agricultural country. Moreover we had the adventure of having the model farm of Canada at our disposal and in Truro, N.S. there is one of the finest of these farms to be found anywhere in that dominion, so that we are in the position of having the most excellent model farms that could be desired, right next door, and of which we could take advantage with practically not the cost of a cent to the country. I remember some years ago, Mr. Harry Cowan and Mr. John Holden of Topsail Road, and others, went to Nova Scotia for the purpose of visiting this farm that I have referred to with the object of getting information that would be of value to them in their farming, and they came back imbued with many new ideas that were of inestimable value. We know ,of course, that $55,000 is not as much in real value as it was a few years ago, but nevertheless we shall expect to see some appreciable returns for it in the way of improvements.

I think the Prime Minister was astray in his reference to Bowcock's farm. I happen to know that property. very well. A part of it is now occupied by the Tuberculosis Sanitarium, and another portion of it adjoins the Lunatic Asylum. It was the intention of the late government to erect the new Poor Asylum on this property also. If that had been done all three of these institutions could have been administered by the one head and the available ground there could have been worked, to some extent, by the patients of the institutions who were able to do light work in the raising of vegetables, etc., and so help to make these institutions to some extent self-supporting. But sir, part of this land is bog and is considered of little value. This money should not be spent in a harem scarem manner but should be directed in channels where it is calculated to do the most good. I suppose it is the intention to put up stables for the housing of stock where they can be kept for breeding purposes, etc., and subsequently sent to the outports. These building would cost a gread deal. I do not know whether this amount includes provision for construction of such buildings. The Prime Minister has not told us that, but if so there will be very little left for anything else. The cost of building now is now exceptionally high and nothing that would be required for such a purpose could be put up for less than $15,000 to $25,000.

I repeat that I have no desire to hamper the government in any way in connection with agricultural improvements, but rather am I prepared to help them to carry out any policy of the kind, because our future food supply largely depends on our Island being literally swept by the United States of its produce, and Newfoundland can hardly get a barrel of potatoes there. There are schooners leaving P.E.I. every day laden with farm produce for American ports. Now sir, I have it on the highest authority that we should not be depending on Prince Edward Island or any place else for our potato supply. Dr. McPhail, a noted agricultural expert who was down here some years ago said to me on one occasion, when he and I walked out towards the country, "You have one of the finest potato producing countries in the world, you have all the advantages of fertilization in your peat and fish manures, and instead of importing potatoes from us you should be exporting them yourselves." It is now more necessary than ever that we raise all the food stuffs possible because this is one of the most potent means wherewith we can fight the terrible burdens under which we are struggling to-day.

I would again emphasise the soundness of the plea so ably made by the hon. member for St. George's that a bounty be given for the encouragement of the clearing of land, and furthermore, that the bounty be made a reasonable one and one that would pay men to devote their time to this very necessary work of development, but first of all you should make sure of the nature and the productive qualities of the land to be cleared.

I therefore hope that hte passing of these resolutions shall prove to be the first step along the road of agricultural improvement, and I assure the Prime Minister that there will be found no more enthusiastic supporter than myself for any measure that has for its object the betterment of the agricultural conditions of this country.

MR. WALSH:—In regard to the resolutions now before the chair I might say that I don't presume to be an apologist for the Department of Agricudture and Mines during the period referred to last night by the hon. the leader of the government and I don't intend to listen to an attack made upon me during my time as Minister of Agriculture and Mines when the Prime Minister himself was then a party to all that was done. It is quite true that though I spent a short period in that position I do not profess to know as much about agriculture as Dr. Campbell knows about mines. I understand that this is a direct insult to all of the men who had anything to do with that department. It is also a direct insult to Mr. Halfyard who was minister of that department. With regard to his asdom of changes being made in that policy I am open to conviction but this is not the way to make improvements, nor is it right for the leader of the government to come in here like he did last night and make such contemptible references regarding the statement. With regard to his assertion that there is no pedigree cattle in this country I am not in accord. During my travelling I have seen some of the finest cattle in the world and in Newfoundland to-day I have seen cattle that is as good as any of those. Hon. gentlemen you must admit that a great deal was accomplished by the agricultural policy of the Morris Government and I think a great deal could be done now by the Prime Minister if he would come in here and do some good so as our planters may be able to get seeds this year to plant their crops.

It may be all very well to come in here and talk about model farms and encouraging horse racing but don't overlook the fact that the potato situation to-day if not taken in hand will play a far more important part in the agricultural future of the colony than these things. I say right here this afternoon that there are hundreds of farmers in the country at the present time without a barrel of seed potatoes to put in the ground to provide for the coming season. I know that such is the case in the district of Placentia and St. Mary's and so with many of the other districts. I have to-day thirty or forty letters from my constituents asking me if it is possible to secure seed potatoes. The Department of Agriculture and Mines state that they have none to give but can supply them at cost, but it is not possible for these men to obtain them even at cost and I think some means should be devised whereby they may be assisted. I resent any attempt in having potatoes sent out through the poor commissioners, but why not loan them a few barrels and have them returned when their crop is grown. It could easily be done through all the agricultural societies in the island. Some attempt should be made to avoid the unnecessary hardships and sacrifices that the farmers and planters will be called upon to bear if left without seed. In regard to the land clearing it is quite true that something should be done and some system inaugurated although a system was brought in during the past, at the time the Thorburn government was in power some people made claims for land I think, and it didn't work because they didn't clear it. But conditions to-day are not the same as they existed then. I think that the suggestion by my hon. friend Mr. MacDonnell was a very wise one. Why not give a bounty on the crop? The fisherman farmer is very anxious to-day in regard to what is going to be done to assist him at this time. The Department of Agriculture has never had sufficient power to look after the agricultural interests of the country. We should try and encourage in every way any grants that may be proposed for the benefit of agriculture. This is the only way that agriculture will ever appeal to the masses of the people in this country. A small amount of money would provide all farmers to-day with seed who are in want of it. Ten thousand dollars would probably be sufficient to relieve the shortage. Don't you think it would be better to spend $10,000 for this purpose than to squander $50,000 on a model farm. We are now passing through a period when we must be sure that we get 100 per cent returns for the money we expend before we allow any minister to put his hand to a cheque fo rany amount. This is an important matter which I commend to the hon. gentlemen of the government and I trust that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will intercede and see that these people get sufficient encouragement for agriculture so that they won't be in the situation next autumn that is now predicted. Potatoes to-day are $14.00 per barrel and the whole stock of P.E.I's are being sold in the United States at a great profit.

I think that this suggestion should commend itself to the hon. gentlemen, who are associated with the government and as I said before, even now it is not too late, to have some kind of an arrangement made, whereby those conditions would be relieved. As I said before, I would oppose any attempt that may be made by the government to have these people supplied through the poor commissioner. There should be no desire, or no intention of having our people placed in the awkward position of being pauperized, and I would strongly oppose any such attempt, and I believe every member in this House feels the same way as I do, because people may be in need of help at the present time does not say that they are paupers. The government should appoint men from the agricultural department as commissioners and send them to the various sections of the country. They can then consult with the clergymen and others in the different sections of the country, who will give them reliable information and then they may come back, and see that the state of affairs, which I am afraid will come to pass, be prevented.

With regard to the inauguration of a model farm, I don't know that I would oppose that movement, but as I said before, at the present time we can ill afford to spend any great amount of money, on any experiment. I think that if the method in vogue, under the Morris government, the Lloyd government, the Cashin government, with some alterations, be carried on by the present government, will be of as much benefit to the country, as the measure up before the House.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Chairman, while the House is in committee on this bill, I would like to say a few words regarding it, not from a spirit of opposition, because in a sense, I am in favor of it. The only thing is, that it does not go far enough. If we are going to be called upon to increase this grant to thirty-five thousand dollars, I hope it will be spent, and controlled better than the money, for similar purposes, has been because if we are to believe the report that has been tabled here, it is not the result we would expect for the money that has been spent, throughout the country, by the department of agriculture, in the past ten years. I see that on bulls alone, we have spent ,in all thirty-three thousand ,six hundred and sixty-five dollars, and eighty-one cents, on rams we have spent seventeen thousand, eight hundred and eighty-five dollars and forty cents; on pigs, ten thousand, eight hundred and thirty-six dollars and fifty-five cents, in all, sir, we have spent, sixty-two thousand, three hundred and eighty-seven dollars and seventy-six cents. On studying this report and the amount that has been spent on bulls, I should not think it has been profitable. The total number of bulls supplied to the country was three hundred and seventy-one. Out of that number, I find that there were only twenty-nine with a pedigree. In getting stock, we should be sure that they are pedigree stock, and there seems to have been no way of looking after the stock. Included in the statement submitted by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines I see that out of the three hundred and seventy-one bulls, that sixty-three have been bogged or strayed away, forty-eight killed and six have been returned to the Department of Agriculture. Out of the three hundred and seventy-one supplied one hundred are missing, and cannot be relied on. Out of the number supplied there are fifty-nine now on active service. I am sorry that I have not a full account of the rams but anyhow the rams cost seventeen thousand, eight hundred and eighty-five dollars and forty cents. If these figures are correct, it has been a very poor investment of the government. I am not opposed to granting another thirty-five thousand dollars, if they can get good stock into the country, but the stock must be better controlled and looked after than they have been in the past, and we must insist on getting pedigree stock or it is throwing away the money. I do not claim to be a farmer, but I do claim to have a certain amount of common sense. I think that at the present time it would be better for the Department of Agriculture and Mines to pass some legislation re a bounty to give encouragement to the farmers of the country to grow crops of hay, turnips and potatoes. I believe we could grow good crops in this country if we would only give the farmers encouragement to go in for it. I would like to see the government take some such action. I hope that the government will see its way clear to bring in some measure, if not this session, then next session, whereby a bounty will be provided for the growing of these crops. It would go a long way towards reducing the high cost of living, in this country. It is regrettable that the people have to pay fourteen dollars and fifty cents for a barrel of seed. This makes it very hard on the poor people of the outports to get the necessary amount of seed, to plant sufficient potatoes for their own requirements. I am glad to see that a certain quantity of potatoes have been imported and are being sold by the agricultural department for $14.50 a barrel and I want to congratulate the hon. minister of that department on that action, but I believe sir, that they are a lot short of requirements.

Seed is another very important article. If this matter is taken up on scientific lines, they will do the right thing in getting the best seed, because if we have good seed, we will get better results from the crops, and I trust the predictions of the Minister of Agriculture will be realised. I hope the government will see their wa yclear to grant a bonus for clearing land. This custom was in vogue in this country before, and was not successful, but it can be tried again, and if they cannot provide a bonus, perhaps they can give a bounty on potatoes, hay and turnips in the country. This would be a step in the right direction and I believe that that bounty would repay us tenfold and would give better results than a bonus for clearing land.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Chairman, while the House is in committee, I would like to say a few words on this matter. I will not delay you long. I was certainly amused at the speech made by the leader of the government regarding the policy of agriculture. We were all hoping for great things from this source, according to the promises he made to the electors of the country. I was also amused when he abused the late government in that connection. The country knows, I know, and every member of this House knows, altho he seems to have forgotten it himself, that he was a member of that government and yet he comes in here and casts slurs at that government. His speech was very short. He did not outline any policy. He did not say what he intends doing in connection with this matter. He said with regard to the late government that the cattle imported in the last five or six years were simply sent out to the people of the country to do what they liked with, and they were not looked after. He has not said what he intends to do instead of sending out cattle to the country. I would like the hon. gentleman to tell us here before this bill passes how he is going to regulate it. He has not told us what amount of cattle has been imported from Canada and the United States within the last twelve months. He has not told us how he is going to place that cattle around the island.

If you are going to send those cattle around the island, as was done in the past, although you berated the late government for doing so, I fail to see how they can be under the supervision of the Agriculture and Mines Department. Every head of cattle imported here will be sent out from the department to the northern and western districts and to the extreme end of the island and how in the name of common sense will they be under the constant supervision of the department. If you have not the confidence of somebody to look after those cattle you cannot supervise them; and you cannot engage officials to go around this island and afford to pay them out of the amount you are asking this House to vote now. You ought to get in touch with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and see what he did before putting his program into being. While the Prime Minister was speaking on this bill and I was thinking, I picked up his manifesto and it struck me that I should read it to the House and to try and point out to the House after reading this way the Prime Minister offered his criticisms of the government in the past and tells of the amount of good he intends to do with the small increased vote that he is asking for here now.

Is this the agricultural policy, as outlined by the Hon. Prime Minister yesterday that we are to look forward to. The gentleman who wrote that paragraph is now the Prime Minister as well as the Acting Minister of Agriculture and Mines in this House this afternoon. When he put that before the country I presume people must have taken it seriously but I want to draw their attention to that paragraph of the leader of the government of the day and I want him to follow me when I tell what the hon. gentleman intends to do to carry out that same policy which he denounced in the past in all its moods and tenses. The phrase ology is there in the manifesto. It is all his own. He proposed at that time to put an etensive policy before the country. Here we are to-day asked to vote $15,000 more to carry out that grand policy that was outlined to this country. I wonder if he was serious when he told the people of the country that he intended to do this because he was a member of the government when that vote for agriculture was $40,000 and he knew the reason why it was brought down to $20,000. It was reduced in order to help to pay the intering $15,000 now to what the grant was est on our war debt. We are only addduring the Morris administration after $20,000 had been deducted for war purposes or $5,000 less than what was originally voted by the Morris administration.

What is the position to-day in Newfoundland as far as seeds are concerned. You cannot get any seed potatoes to buy. To my mind it is in the same category as salt and coal. The farmers cannot get a barrel of seed potatoes to purchase in the city of St. John's. May be it would arouse your curiosity if I would draw your attention to what it means. If the Minister of Agriculture had five thousand barrels of potatoes to sell the people of this Colony to-day at $10 a barrel and say they got five barrels to the barrel on the five thousand. that would yield a revenue of four hundred thousand dollars; but at the present time you cannot get potatoes at the department for less than $14 or $15 a barrel, in fact, I understand you can not get any there at all. And still one got to come here and listen to trash handed out to him. I am an old member of the house now and I have been listening to this sort of thing year in and year out. The past Government was slurred this evening by the Prime Minister, who should know better because he was a member of it; but, after all, he is only trying to camouflage the promises he made the electorate of the island. Well, all I got to say in that direction is, that if all the rest of the legislation is of the same class as that you are now asking the house to pass upon, God help the future of Newfoundland. The hon. gentleman who represents the Minister of Agriculture and Mines in this house has not told us one iota of the future out of all the matter that he treated us to this afternoon. What does a model farm mean to the people of this Island. If you did build it it will go in St. John's east or west.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—In the West.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—In St. John's West there are a dozen or more better places than this Government can build there. Anyway what are you going to build it out of? Are you going to build it out of the $15,000 increased grant? And did you tell the people of this colony where you were going to build a model farm? And let me again draw your attention to the fact that in Newfoundland to-day north, south, east and west a large percentage of our people are perishing for want of potatoes, and if you had 100,000 barrels suited for this colony that would give eight barrels to the barrel, take your pencil and find out what it would mean. I think it would be equal to our codfishery. And here we are without a barrel of seed potatoes to be purchased. Fourteen dollars a barrel is asked from anyone who is lucky enough to get a barrel. Still we are asked to come in here to remodel the agricultural policy of the Government. Why the present increased grant is not sufficient money to buy a thousand barrels of potatoes.

We know you are not going to work miracles. The same old thing you are going to drift back to and worse than it was twenty years ago. Talk about giving out cattle. I think it was lucky these bulls did disappear. They were not the class of cattle adapted to this island. If the Government had to hold on to them we would have another million or a million and a half added to the public debt of this cost. I think the whole policy is a mock and a farce, or to use an Americanism, it is a cod pure and simple.

DR. JONES:—I had no intention of taking part in this debate, but it is beginning to dawn upon me that this bill represents the whole programme of the Government as regards agriculture.

If this bill for the encouragement of agriculture embodies all that the Government can do I am afraid the people of the country who expected so much are going to be grievously disappointed in the matter. The district I have the honor to represent is largely agricultural and in the past has benefited by the grants of the agricultural department as it has also suffered the short-comings of that department in the past. We would like very much better things, and as the era of mismanagement under which much money was squandered by the department was supposed to have passed, I had hoped that under the policy of the new Government great benefits would accrue to the country at large and to my district in particular. I remember the period when the bounty for the clearing of land was inaugurated and saw the benefits in many cases and the abuse of it in many other cases, and I hope the new policy embodies some scheme that can be managed properly and at the same time give satisfactory results. In our district the farmers are finding it difficult to procure seed potatoes, and in fact they are unable to get them because of the serious shortage this year, and next fall there will be a famine in potatoes at the head of the bay because of the short seed supply this spring. Dr. Campbell, who is now the head of the department of agriculture paid a visit to Hr. Main on the eve of what may be termed an abortive campaign (a term which was used yesterday I think by the Minister of Justice) evidently with the intention of contesting the district of Harbour Main when Mr. Woodford resigned his seat. Dr. Campbell visited my district on the day before Mr. Woodford's resignation and immediately got busy. During January and February a disease had been prevalent among the horses in the head of the bay, but none had died of the disease, and when Dr. Campbell came on the scene it was practically all over. He appointed a local man to look after the afflicted and a large supply of medicines was sent out to him. This man went about on horseback looking for patients but they were scarce, so he had to fill in his time by giving gratuitous advice. I asked in this House what his qualifications were for the position and to judge from the reply I believe any corner boy on the street was as well fitted. I was told he was being paid five dollars a day and his engagement was for 30 days. Unfortunately people accepted him as an official of the agricultural department and backed by the Government. Accepting him as such, a poor man of Avondale engaged him to treat a sick cow and as a result he lost both his cow, and calf, valued at two hundred dollars. He made a claim against the department of agriculture, but I believe it has not been paid, but I venture to say that if Dr. Campbell were to seek his election there next fall very good care will be taken to placate this man and his friends. We have heard a lot about corruption in the district of Harbour Main, but the very first act of Dr. Campbell in the district is one of corruption of the worst sort. It neither benefited the horses, the people of the district or Dr. Campbell's chances as a candidate. If that is the kind of thing we are going to get from him as his own reformed agricultural policy then the country will be very badly disappointed. If the question of supplying seed potatoes was not more important than the finding of a job for a heeler than we have little to hope for from the new agricultural policy of the Government or the present head of the agricultural department.

MR. MACDONNELL:—I don't want to delay the debate, but as one who is very much interested in this matter, I would like to say a few words on it, and I want to thank Mr. Hibbs for his speech and compliment him as a man who is not afraid to pass an opinion on any matter, and one who is fair enough to support a suggestion he approves of, regardless of the fact that it came from the opposite side of the house than he himself is sitting on.

I think that this idea of abusing the past government is no good, because when the Government comes up for election in the next four, it is not the faults of the late Government that will count for or against them, it is what they have done while they were in power. I think with regard to these celebrated cattle, that have been distributed throughout the country for the last few years, that as we have been told there are only a few remaining, we ought to pass a vote of condolence to the brethren of the deceased and let the matter rest there.

I noticed one good thing in the speech of the hon. member for Fogo, and that was his reference to a suggestion from this side of the House for a bounty for the clearing and cropping of land.

The report of the Minister of Agriculture contains many promises. Well we made promises ourselves last fall on the lines of the manifesto. The report is somewhat typical of the Canadian politician who made promises to his constituents and was elected for four years, and when he went to his constituents again for re-election he promised that there was not a single promise that he made four years ago that he was not prepared to make again to-night. So that all that the report of the Minister of Agriculture foreshadows is a repetition of the promises made last fall. The report is not prolific of very much good, as there is no assurance that the promises will be fulfilled.

What we need is a scientific analysis made of the lands of the country by a man qualified to do it, and of the different kinds of fertilizer for the different kinds of lands prescribed by him. I do not see anything wrong with this method of prescription. A scientific man could easily prescribe a remedy for present conditions. The fact that bonuses in the past did not work out as well as expected is not an argument at the present time Perhaps there was not sufficient supervision then. It was not because the policy was bad, but because the machinery was badly carried out. It could be found to work much better by imposing a penalty in the regulations you would introduce so that any person who received a bounty for the clearing and cropping of land and who was found to have obtained that money under false pretences could be penalized. With this inauguration the revenue would be protected and there would be no chance of malpractice. I hope that before this session closes that the Government will see its way clear to grant a bonus for the clearing of land and cropping after five years, otherwise the grant will be badly spent.

In granting the bounty on land clearing it could be got over by providing that the bounty would be given on the crop of the cleared land. That is an admirable suggestion because it does away with the chances of fraud which pertains so largely to the land bounty clearing system.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— With reference to the increase, I am glad the opposition has favored the increase from twenty thousand dollars to fifty-five thousand, and I think the support is warranted if we can run the department of agriculture along these and at the same time keep the expenses within the scope of fifty-five thousand dollars. The vote was forty thousand up to the year 1914 or possibly 1915, and the reason of the reduction from forty to twenty thousand is shown in the statistics in the reports of the Department of Agriculture, and I shall show you how it came about. I will refer you to page 38. (Reads.) Thus you will see that the work being done with the forty thousand was practically cut in two. Also on page 40 I will show you the difference in connection with the distribution of lambs. (Reads.) You will thus see that the work done during those years was more than curtailed by half. On page 41 then, similar position appertains, though not to the same extent proportionately.

Reference was made to my criticism of the policy of the distribution of live stock and the importation of live stock by the late government. The policy of the late administration would have been alright had it been worked out successfully. The policy as originally inaugurated in the year 1908 was a magnificent idea. If it had been worked out properly it would have brought about substantially good results.

My criticism was that the results for the past ten years are not commensurate with the one-third of one million dollars expended during that period. The expenditure was three hundred and thirty odd thousand dollars. Any one would criticise when he cannot conceive any good results after expending such a sum.

Mr. Crosbie has pointed out that there have been good results, and that is true, but they are not commensurate with the expenditure of one third of one million dollars. We simply ask for an increase of fifteen thousand dollars over the vote for the years from 1910 to 1916. In inaugurating this policy of the Government I wish it to be understood that we are conservative in the matter, but this we deem to be sufficient to start the programme. When the budget comes down there will be an opportunity to deal with this important subject among many others. This amount is enough to reorganize the department.

Now, Mr. Bennett criticised me as being an understudy for Dr. Campbell. That is true. But it is with great pleasure I am an understudy for such a man of great ability, a real genius and with such wide experience, and I never hope to acquire a part of the rare knowledge of agriculture he has. He has accomplished the most yet in the department, as is evidenced by his work in the department during the last ten days. As to the personal criticisms thrown across to me I will not make reference. I am only here at present to discuss the merits and demerits of the bill. I wish to take this opportunity of thanking the leader of the opposition for making reference to me in a section of the hansard. In accordance with the statements in my manifesto of last fall on the eve of the general election we hope to carry out the proposed agricultural program.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—I would like to ask why it is only fifteen thousand.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN—It was forty thousand before.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—It was cut in two in practice, but the act was not amended. In the yea" 1920-21 thirty-five thousand more will be expended than in the ear 1918-19.

MR. MACDONNELL—I would like to see the Government include in this section some provision for bounties on on land. I think it is time that this is recognised. As to the fifteen thousand increase I would like to see it one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I must say that I am rather surprised, because I understood from the Hon. Dr. Campbell that a scheme was going to be found out to eliminate the evil effects of the old system for the clearing of land, but he was not inclined to advocate a bounty for the clearing of land, but he was prepared to support the policy which would give a bounty for the cropping of land within five years after it was cleared. Of course it may be very estimable in the opinion of some people to import the very best kind of cattle and have a model farm to show, but I am rather surprised, I must repeat, that there is nothing in the policy and program of the government tending towards the fostering and encouraging of land clearing and the growing of crops.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I agree with the observations of my hon. friend, the member for St. George's, and the lines along which he has spoken are identical with those of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, Dr. Campbell, and I trust along these lines we shall be able to develop some practical proposition with reasonable expense and carry out the scheme as indicated by my hon. friend. And I really believe some good will be the result of such a program. I have discussed the matter with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines and his views are similar to those of the hon. member for St. George's.

MR. HIGGINS:—I wish to compliment the Prime Minister upon the excellent manner in which he has acted the understudy for the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and just like the lawyer-like manner he has swallowed more than the ordinary lay man could from the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, according to his thoughts of the matter all through, but I think he will agree with the principle that although it is discharged from the order paper which practically amounts to an adoption of it, it would be advisable that it stand deferred until tomorrow, when maybe the Prime Minister will be able to give us an idea as to what is to be represented by that thirty thousand dollars. He will appreciate that whatever was contemplated years ago does not appear on the bill and what is contemplated now is not apparent either. We would like to get an idea as to what is to be done with this money. I ask that the matter be embodied in resolution form and that the committee rise until to-morrow as a matter of form. There is not likely to be much debate upon the subject and then we will have an opportunity to discuss the demits and merits of the matter.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I have no objection to this item (Of the encouragement of agriculture) being deferred until to-morrow. I may say that it is not the intention of the agriculture department to develop the model farm as contemplated years ago but to inaugurate a scheme entirely different in principle, and it is not to be a scientific research. I take this opportunity to say that it is the intention of the Government to utilise the Bowcock Farm, which belongs to the Government, and have it planted and grow a large crop to feed a large number of cattle next year. It is the policy to have more potatoes and other articles of food grown to meet the shortage Newfoundland is facing. It is contemplated to acquire the necessary amount of nitrate of soda and import the numbers of seeds too numerous for me to enumerate, and not being a farmer I could not do so. It is not the idea of a scientific farm. It is not the idea of the Government to import cattle for breeding purposes and send them around without any supervision. Nothing of a scientific nature belongs to the proposed proposition. The department of agriculture and mines is giving its attention to the general improvement of stock and the encouragement and development of farming. It is thought that the potatoes and turnips and cabbage and other articles are produced in greater quantity and with a finer taste than those imported into the country for human consumption for years past. This is a general outline of our plans. And between now and three o'clock tomorrow afternoon I shall receive another lesson in agricultureal tuition.

Mr. MacDonnell gave notice of question.

Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice of introduction of bill.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—I beg to table the reply to the question of Sir Michael Cashin.

Mr. Speaker announced that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting him that that body had passed a bill entitled "Of the Dept. of Public Works" with some amendments. The amendments were thereupon read a first time.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—In moving that these amendments be read a second time on to-morrow, I would explain that their effect is merely to make Mr. James Harris the deputy minister of the department instead of secretary.

Hon. Mr. Speaker announced that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting him that that body had passed the Posts and Telegraphs Bill with some amendments. The amendments were thereupon read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Committee of the whole on bill entitled "An Act for the Confirmation of a Contract with the Susu Shipping Co., Ltd."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

The committee rose and reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill with some amendments.

Second reading of bill entitled "An Act to check Profiteering."

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Mr. Chairman, I have no intention whatever of prolonging the discussion, but would like to make a few observations on this important agricultural matter. As I look around the house, I see all classes in the community represented, but we are apparently lost for a Minister of Agriculture and lost for a farmer, and the only man in my judgment, who has disulayed any particular knowledge of the subject is the hon. member for Fogo. He evidently has some idea about it, but what surprised me is that he has branched off to something new and is now identified in the printing business. I notice in these resolution provision made for a new model farm; a vote for $55,000, which really means an increase of $35,000 over what has been spent annually the past two years; and a proposal to introduce thoroughbred stock. Now if my experience counts for anything. I would like to say, as regards thoroughbred stock, that by the time Dr. Campbell has bought enough of thoroughbred stock he will not have enough left out of that $55,000 to build a hen house, because he will be handicapped immediately for want of funds.

I have no objection to amend or increase this vote for agriculture, but there is no doubt in my mind whatever that there is a great deal of difficulty in trying to get people to take seriously what any Government will do in this country for agriculture, outside of a few men who wholly and solely make their living out of farming. The average man who does a little farming and a little fishing does not develop any quantity worth while of either, and really, after all, he only raises enough stuff for the use of his own family.

The Hon. the Prime Minister stated that a great deal of stock, under the policy of the late government, were given out as Christmas boxes. Now I do not agree with him, although he was a member of that government. When Sir Edward Morris introduced his agricultural policy, I remember the words that he used, namely, "We want to make this non-political." That was the greatest mistake he ever made. You cannot work on that principle and here is my reason for saying so. I remember in my own district, at that time I represented the district of Bay de Verde, an agricultural board was formed and animals were sent out to the different sections to be cared for. I saw the animals and they were excellent. One man got one of the finest looking animals I ever saw in my life to take care of, but because he was politically opposed to the party then in power, he let the beast starve to make political capital out of it. Now how are you going to get beyond that.

The Morris government made a mistake by making its agricultural policy non-political, and in nine cases out of ten you will experience the same difficulty tomorrow at the hands of your opponents, if your pursue the same policy. But I do say this, that the cattle sent out and scattered over this country by the Morris government did a great deal of good, not withstanding to the contrary the statement of the Prime Minister that they reached his table and mine and the butcher shop. I would also like to say that two of the best butchers in the country told me that the cattle raised and produced by this stock were the best they ever handled. If you will take a drive tomorrow around Conception Bay to Bay Roberts, you will see more sheep and lambs there than you ever saw before the Morris government were elected to power, so you see the distribution of the live stock over the country by the late administration must have done some good. The reason why I take eception to the remarks of the Prime Minister is because he was part of that policy and was there when it was put through. The cattle that he says went out as Christmas gifts, I think went out in the spring of the year. The policy of distributing cattle would have been productive of more good if the people had interested themselves more in taking care of them.

Then again agricultural boards, no odds, are just like the road boards. They will christen their friends first. No odds who elected them, you will find that that is the way that road boards are elected at the present time. I had an exhibition of that in my own district recently where there was a road board election at Clarke's Beach. There were only ten or twelve present, the rest of the settlement not knowing anything about it. The man who was elected chairman would not have been elected if proper public notice had been given. I appeal to the hon. minister of public works to give, at least, ten days' notice when road boards are being elected in future, and the magistrate of any place is the proper person to call a meeting. There is no necessity for the minister to get fussed up over this thing now, because I accept the opinion of the late chairman and am perfectly satisfied as to what happened. And that is where the trouble is going to come in regard to agricultural boards. When the board send a good animal to any section of this country, be sure that it will be given to a man who is able to take care of it. I am not opposed to this policy of buying pure bred stock, but I am giving you warning of what the late government suffered.

I understand that the minister of agriculture proposes to copy his model farm off Cumming's model farm in Truro. I visited there and I hope that that is not a sample of a good Canadian farm, which he has waxed eloquently of so much. You would want a couple of policemen to take care of you when you are passing through there, and you will not find ten men in Nova Scotia that will back that farm up.

I notice that the hon. member for Fogo dealt at length with the cankered potatoes. I remember the utterances of the late Mr. Dwyer in this house on the same matter. I want to tell my friends that this is a serious thing, as cankered potatoes are unfit for human consumption. I understand the Minister of Agriculture has imported out from Scotland a quantity of seed potatoes, and I say that if it takes the whole $55,000 to supply the country with seed it will be money well spent.

As to the reference of the hon. member for Fogo regarding fertilizer, I am in accord. You have not a man in this country today who can tell you what kind of ground to put fertilizer in. You want an expert to do it, and it requires a great deal of care and attention. If the hon. gentleman representing the Minister of Agriculture in this house had time, I would suggest to him to take a visit to the side of Quidi Vidi Lake and see a good example for himself of what a young man named Ross can do in the way of farming. He will show you, I am sure, just as good crops and live stock as you will see in any part of Canada, and all credit to him, and I say that Dr. Campbell ought be instructed to go down there and see Ross's farm and the class of cattle he has there reared and bred in this country. He is worthy of taking advice from.

My friend, the Hon. Mr. Hibbs, stated that he made application to the Minister of Agriculture for twenty barrels of seed potatoes to send north, but I understand that up to the present he is not in receipt of same. Now in my district there is a marked shortage of seed and some people cannot afford to pay for the amount that is procurable at such a high price. The Attorney General, who once represented the district of Port de Grave, knows that a great deal of farming is done by the people over there. I would suggest to the Government that as the people are not in a position financially now to purchase seed from the department that they be provided with seed on a. guarantee that a proportionate amount of potatoes should be returned by them to the government in the fall.

MR. SAMSON—They told us north that you bought all the potatoes last fall.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Yes, the current price per barrel was $4.50 and I paid $6.00 and sold them for $8.00, and I would do the same to-morrow if I got the chance. I bought considerable this spring and made a handsome profit out of them. Would you blame me for that?

I suppose you'll say I bought enough to get votes, not I. But getting back to this policy. On behalf of the district I represent I strongly support what Mr. Hibbs and Mr. MacDonnell have asked, that is that the government consider this land bounty. I think it will do a great deal of good, and the suggestion of Mr. Hibbs that the owner of the land get one half of the bounty when the land is cleared and the other half when the crop is on it is a good one. If the hon. the minister of finance could find enough of funds to carry out this suggestion I think he would do a good deal. I am sure it would do credit to the prime minister if he would see that this is accomplished. I support these suggestions of Mr. Hibbs and Mr. MacDonnel and I ask the Government to take them into consideration.

But I wish to say in defense of the Government I was associated with, that if Sir Edward Morris's policy had been carried out along the lines he wished a great lot of good would have resulted, and I have no hesitation in saying this. I may tell the Government that sooner or later, no matter what plans they have had, they will find some of them they will not accomplish. But I do ask that the bounty be extended and some of those poor people be provided with seed potatoes.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had passed the resolutions without amendment and recommended that a bill be introduced to give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Encouragement of Agriculture'" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of hon. the minister of marine and fisheries the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions regarding the export of codfish from this Colony.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. the introducer of these resolutions if he would consider these resolutions standing over until to-morrow? I understand that the trade are having a large meeting at 11 o'clock. If he wants to go on I am willing to take my part. You do not wish to let them stand over until to-morrow.

Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—To say that I am somewhat astonished at these resolutions would be putting it mild. I saw the resolutions first at the Board of Trade. There were 27 exporters present at the meeting, and they were unanimous that the resolutions were not what is required. I say unanimous, there was only one voted in favor of them, and I suppose he was afraid to vote otherwise. My great objections to these resolutions: 1, I am British; 2, they are not what this war was fought for; 3, they are a restriction of trade.

Last year when these resolutions first came into effect it was done, I think, under what we call the Imperial Act, which was agreed to by the government that I was associated with. The case was taken to the Supreme Court here and ruled out. And then the Government took advantage of an act that was never intended for that purpose, namely, the War Measures Act. The hon. minister and I differ very greatly on these resolutions. It is a pity when two great men differ. He has been abroad, and he says that everything would have been lost but for the regulations. Now I think that the loss would not have been as great if the regulations had been left out. The regulations had no effect in sustaining the market. He has the right to think as he does, and I have the right to think as I do. He was at the Board of Trade at that first meeting when these resolutions were first discussed. I was prepared to lay my cards on the table. The result is that 26 are with me now; only one against me. He was afraid and dropped out. Is this British fairplay?

I quite agree with the hon. minister that we should not be allowed to abuse the quality, but when the Government comes in and dictates to me whether I shall sell my fish for cash or on a ninety day note, whether I shall send it to Spain or Italy, they are going too far. It is not British fairplay. There is one thing that would help, give certificates for Nos. 1, 2 and 3 fish, and then let supply and demand take care of the rest.

I go down to you tomorrow and I say to you, I have 1,000 barrels of flour to sell. You say, all right, it would be a little inconvenience today for me to pay cash, I'll give you a ninety day note. Would it not be drastic for the Government to come in and say you will not take that note? Would that be right? Would that be British fairplay? We are satisfied that the men who give us a 60 or 90 day note are all right. Under this act we cannot do it. Is that what the great war was fought for? In my opinion it is not. The hon. minister said here yesterday that he may not put the regulations into effect; but if he should come along to Crosbie's store next fall and find 60,000 quintals of fish he might say we can't allow you to ship. We must wait until the other fellow gets some.

HON. MINISTER MARINE & FISHERIES—I would not have power to do that under this act.

In all probability it will be a bill that all will agree to. Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply to a few remarks made by Sir John Crosbie before I come to the matter of rising the committee. You said, Sir John, that you are debarred from having an agent on the other side to sell your fish.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—No, I said that I wouldn't sell fish if I had to have five agents to do it for me.

HON. MINISTER MARINE & FISHERIES—If I had my way all the men would send agents abroad to sell their fish. If I had to wait for orders I would be in a very bad position. Today we have representatives of all the big flour firms here, and they are constantly going into the trade and securing orders for their firms. Now this is the same position that the trade of Newfoundland should be placed into as regard to fish. And, if the regulations become law we will be in that position. In regard to raising the committee until after the exporters meet tomorrow I have no objection, and if any good can come out of it, well, I must say that I am ready to co-operate with the trade at all times.

Now we have the opportunity and the time has come when we must change our methods and stop sending cargoes of valuable fish overseas and letting them rot in ports and get one-third of the price for it. The time has come to perfect trade conditions in this country and every fish that we ship must be paid for. All other countries ship their goods in this manner and why shouldn't we do the same. We must wake up and find out some day that trade must be developed on sound lines and not on merely speculative lines as it is to-day.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Under this bill you'll have any power the board gives you.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—I am well able to sell my own fish and always was and you know that I was cute enough, when you put your regulations into force, to get clear of what I had without going outside to do it.

HON. MINISTER MARINE & FISHERIES—Did you make any money on it?

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Indeed I did make money on it, although unfortunately the man I sold it to dropped $7,000 on it.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—I thought you never sold bad fish.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—It was not bad when I sold it.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—No, as a matter of fact I understand that fish turned out good.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Now sir, would the hon. minister like for the five gentlemen who are members of the F. P. U. go down to Port Union and dictate to him as to how he should run his business? I venture to say that he would not stand for it. Why should I or you or any other man purchase fish and pay for it thru the banks or out of our own money, and then put it in our stores and leave it there because a few men who don't know a cod's head from its tail or a sculpin from a tomcod, say I must sell it. The thing you know in your innermost heart that such a proposition is not fair, if you would but admit it. While I have the power to do so, I shall stick out for British fair play, and this is not fair play of any kind.

The hon. minister spoke yesterday of supplies being curtailed and said that a day of reckoning was at hand. Well, he and I can shake on that. The day of reckoning is here and this thing is not going to help us meet it, and even the most intelligent man on Water Street admits this fact. You are going to drive capital out of the country. Suppose for argument sake that I bought 100,000 quintals of fish and sold 70,000 quintals of it, making two dollars a quintal on it, or in other words a total profit of $140,000, and then tried to get clear of the other 30,000 qtls. without a loss, would not my business instinct tell me that it was good business to do so, and would not the hon. prime minister himself say that it was good business. All I hope for his own sake is that he will not persist in bringing this bill into effect, but in any case he has stopped many people from giving out supplies because of the fear that he will bring it in. Speaking of supplies reminds me that only a few days ago I met a man who always paid his account and who I suppose does not owe a cent to anybody, and he told me that he had travelled the length of Water Street and couldn't get a barrel of flour to take home with him.

There is another phase of this situation which is a very serious one and it is this: If the buying of fish gets into the hands of five or six people or if the whole fishery trade is represented again by seven or eight merchants, we will soon afterwards revert to the days when the fishermen were going around with the yaffle under their arms looking for a buyer. I don't care what others may think, but that is my firm opinion. I know by the hon. minister as I look over at him that he intends to drop the price in Portugal again very shortly. No matter, there are bound to be heavy losses anyway. There is another thing. I understand he will have agents in the markets the coming season to look after his own fish. Am I right, sir?

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—Yes, to a certain extent.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—I thought so and I crongratulate you on your foresight, but that gives you a big advantage over the rest of the trade.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—Your resolutions back that up.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—These resolutions were contrary. Now if you have all arrangements made to sell your own fish———

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—Don't go too far with it.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Well, does it not amount to that. If you will have agents in the markets I suppose you have your arrangements made. Now if you can do that, why can't I do it?

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES—You can if you want to.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Yes, but you won't let ns sell our fish as we want to. Now I can imagine you if anybody tried to treat you in this way. Instead of using large black type, The Advocate would be painted red with my photograph on the top with a headline reading "Look What This Highwayman is Doing Now," "Black Ruin is Right Upon Us and All is Lost." You know this is true and there are many others on the other side of the house who know that it is true, but you won't bring your minds around to look at the thing fairly. I am not arguing from a political standpoint, I am arguing from the standpoint of British fairplay. You have got an executive that with the exception of Mr. Halfyard, don't know a sculpin from a squid.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—We are unable to identify you, Sir John.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—Yes, and this is not the only time that you've been unable to identify me. What you know about the subject now under discussion would only fill a leaf of a very small book. Of course nobody expects you to know anything about it, for the man who knows his own business knows a lot, and we have many of them going around today who don't even know that much. Now sir, I am not fighting this thing for myself: I am able to go on whether this bill passes or not, but the people who sent me here would have a very opinion of me if I did not voice a protest against such a measure I want to put it to you, is it fair? Is it British for you to keep me from selling my goods the best way I can? Have you not just as much right to go down on Water Street and say to the storekeepers you must not sell that high-priced flour or you must not sell that sugar you buy for 16 cents for 26 cents. We don't know what sort of a pitfall we are preparing for ourselves until we fall into it.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN — Mr. Chairman, I think it is only fair to accede to the request of Sir John Crosbie. The trade have a right to consider this thing, knowing that they handle something like $20,00,000 of our exports of fish, and I think it would be only right to raise this committee and hear what the country has to say to-morrow.

HON. MIN. MARINE & FISHERIES—Just a few remarks in reply to the hon. member for Port de Grave. The whole substance of this bill is to provide that if a man sends his fish across he must get cash for it without having to get back to the old system of a 30 or a 60 day note. We would then be in the same position as a shipper of flour to this country. That is the very thing we want. We must get our cash before we part with our fish. But still a dealer on the other side will sell his fish and provide 60 or even 90 day accommodation if he cannot get the cash for it. These regulations do not interfere as far as that is concerned. At a meeting of the board of trade the other day one of the members offered a suggestion that we pool all the fish. That is exactly what is required and the best way to handle our fishery exports, and it is likely to come some day. But, at the present time this is not possible and the next best thing is the regulations under this bill. Out of these regulations will come some day probably an Association of Exporters. If our exports were controlled by one body all our troubles would be at an end. In the absence of such an organization, this bill is best. In the bill there is not a rule or regulation to be found. It only provides the machinery. A board will be appointed having powers to recommend to the Governor-in-Council. No Government is going to acknowledge any recommendations that would be detrimental to the good of the fishery. What good is there of having governments if they do not look after these things? I promised the exporters that before fixing the price of fish I would call a meeting of the exporters and discuss matters with them. They felt that if this were done they did not see any strong objection to the regulations. I did not intend to stand behind the resolutions of the exporters in having them only to fix the price of fish and control exports under present circumstances. I am glad to say that we have here arrived at a decision not altogether unfavorable to this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I am not fixing these regulations to benefit the merchants of this country. My chief object is looking after the interests of the men who sent me here, and the merchants are saying to themselves, if Coaker can fix the prices we sell fish for in Italy, Greece and Oporto, he knows what we should pay for it and we will not get such profit on what we sell early in the season, and I am suspicious that this is the reason why there is so much opposition to the fish regulations by some exporters. I know of a man who in the months of December and January made a profit of sixty thousand dollars on three cargoes of fish that he sold. He could not do this under the regulations, because we would know the value he was to receive and would fix the price so as to allow him only a fair percentage of his profit on his outlay. And now I am going to give you some information with regard to the exportation of fish this year under the regulations. This year we sent to Italy 200,000 quintals against 210,000 last year. To Canada last year we exported 20,512 quintals and this year 38,376 quintals, an increase of 18,036 quintals. To England 6,080 last year and this year 57,549, an increase of 51,469 quintals. To the British West Indies this year we exported 70,196 quintals, against 57,852 quintals last year, an increase of 12,344 qtls. To Spain this year we sent 346,000 qtls., against 263,000 last year, an increase of 73,000 qtls. To Greece we shipped about three or four thousand qtls. less than last year. To Portugal this year we shipped 510,450 qtls., against 407,000 last year, an increase of 103,000 qtls.

This year altogether up to date we have exported 1,585,952 quintals against 1,437,336 quintals last year at the same date. Of course we must consider that last year we had a considerable stock of old fish here that went out later. These figures do not give us much cause for uneasiness with regard to the regulations. The other day at the meeting I asked to be given proofs as to the evil worked by those regulations. I asked to be given some facts that would convince me that they were injurious. The only answer I got was that there is a little danger in the fixing of prices, because such high prices abroad may not be forthcoming in the early weeks of the season.

I have much pleasure in acceding to the request of the leader of the opposition not to proceed with this bill until the board meets to-morrow.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and it was ordered that the committee have leave to sit again on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of hon. the prime minister, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled 'An Act to Check Profiteering.'

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Committee of the whole on bill "An Act to Check Profiteering."

HON. PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman, I beg to move that the following be made Section (2). as suggested by the Hon. Mr. Higgins, senior member for St. John's East: "Upon complaint being made by any person to the board that a profit upon any article sold is unreasonable, the board shall forward cause for such investigation to be made."

MR. HIGGINS:—I would suggest that you re-number the sections from that on.

HON. PRIME MINISTER: — I would suggest that we insert the word net before profit all through the act.

MR. HIGGINS—With regard to Section (2) I would suggest the insertion of the following after the word complaint: "Notice of the time and place which such proceedings are to be held shall be given to at least two of the daily newspapers forty-eight hours before the beginning of such proceedings."

HON. PRIME MINISTER—I have no objection to that.

MR. CHEESEMAN—Before going further I would like to ask if this act only applies to foodstuffs only or does it apply to all classes of merchandise?

HON. PRIME MINISTER—It pertains to everything sold in Newfoundland but not on what is exported from Newfoundland.

MR. CHEESEMAN—Take a vessel for instance that I bought a few years ago for two thousand dollars and sold to-day for eight thousand, would that be considered as excess profit or not; or take a codtrap that I bought four or five years ago for $200 and after using it ever since I sell it to-day for twice that amount. What then?

HON. PRIME MINISTER: — The question is not what it was worth five years ago or twenty-five years ago, but what it is worth in the market to-day. A man may have bought something for a thousand dollars five years ago and get five thousand for it to-day, but that would not bring him within the scope of the act.

MR. CHEESEMAN—Well that's a question again of following the markets. Supposing I bought a barrel of flour a few months ago for $15 and kept it until now and sold it for $17. Would I be justified in charging it, under the act? It strikes me that I would not.

MR. HIGGINS:—You might and you might not. It is a question of law.

MR. FOX:—Might I ask the hon. prime minister what his object was for inserting the word net before profits.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—This refers to a comparative profit as between to-day and pre-war times. A comparative profit to-day with a comparative gross profit of pre-war times would be exceedingly unjust. It would not be just to have the gross profit on a certain article to-day $1.00, if it was $1.00 five years ago, because the cost of the article has since doubled and trebled and the cost of the maintenance and upkeep of the premises of the business man, such as coal, rent, etc., has doubled and trebled.

MR. FOX:—I thank the hon. the prime minister for what he stated and the Section 3 which has the world 'net' inserted is not desirable. I think there may be cases in which a man can so manipulate his accounts and by taking account of certain expenses he could commit a lot of fraud. This act is after the English Act, and in the English one no reference is made to net profit, and I think the legislators on the other side will appreciate the fact that there is a danger if this word is left in that certain defences may be had owing to its inclusion in this section.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—I fully appreciate the observations of the hon. member for St. John's East in connection with the word 'net.' This act is drafted along the lines of the English act, and I have read some very active newspaper criticisms of the English act on the question as to whether the profit referred to was gross profit or net profit. However, the insertion of the word is not important, provided it is clearly understood that if the sum of $1.00 was considered to be a reasonable profit on a given sum $1.00 might not be a reasonable profit upon that same article to-day. Let me illustrate. Take a very small business concern, with a very limited capital and credit. Let us call it A. B. & Company. Let it be granted that their maximum credit and capital combined does not exceed $40,000. To-day that company cannot carry more than one-half the stock for its $40,000 that it did in pre-war days. That company has to pay overhead charges two and three times as great to-day as then. The living expenses of the owner of the business are two or three times as great now as then. I. A. B. & Co. have only one-half the quantity of goods to sell and have to pay twice as great overhead charges, and the living expenses of the owner are twice as great, the house can appreciate the fact that business would have to exist on the same profit per article as would have been a paying profit in pre-war day. This is consequently not a matter of comparison of the difference between the retail selling price as compared with the cost landed in pre-war days and the retail selling price as compared with the cost landed to-day. If the difference between the selling price and cost landed in pre-war days was reasonable, having regard to the circumstances as they then existed, then the same difference between selling price and cost landed to-day would be entirely unreasonable, having regard to conditions as they now exist.

MR. FOX:—My point is this, that a man may be charging exorbitant prices on a particular article, and to arrive at what profit he is making it is necessary to go back to what he purchased it for, not the amount of profit he made five years ago. If I am in the flour business and bought flour at ten dollars per barrel and sold it for seventeen dollars and fifty cents per barrel, I stand to profit seven dollars and fifty cents over and above the purchase price. I might have purchased it five years ago.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I think my honorable friend will see from a careful perusal of the last paragraph of Section 2 that the proviso merely means that a rate which does not exceed thef air average rate earned by persons in the same way of business as the seller upon the sale of similar articles under pre-war conditions shall not be deemed unreasonable; that means, unreasonably great so as to bring the seller within the scope of the operations of the act. On the other hand, the same rate of profit might under existing conditions be altogether too small, because the small business man of to-day cannot possibly support and maintain himself and his family, with living two and three times greater than it was in pre-war days and profit only the same as was then made. These small business men of the class to which I am referring, the small shopkeepers and dealers, were not a class of people who became wealthy because of the great profits made before the war. As a whole they got a comfortable living and no more as a result of marked industry and frugality. On the same margin of profit to-day such a man would starve.

On the question of the purchase and sale of flour and similar articles on a wholesale basis a serious problem arises. The question has to be considered is not so much the difference between the cost price and the selling price as the difference between th selling price and the actual market value of the article on the day it is sold. Supposing, for instance, a merchant buys one hundred barrels of flour to-day for delivery in August next. Unless the Wheat Board of Canada or some other trade organization interferes with his contract, he has to pay for that flour the price contracted for to-day. If in the meanwhile the price of wheat goes down, the Canadian seller may make a large profit of the transaction, because the Newfoundland purchaser is bound to pay his contract price. If on the other hand, the price of wheat goes up, the Newfoundland purchaser makes a considerable amount of money, because the Canadian seller cannot charge him more than the contract price.

That flour comes into St. John's. The value of that flour is not what was paid for it: it is the market value of that article, having regard to the price of wheat on the day it lands. If that flour is here in stock for three months, and at the end of the three months the price is gone up, the sale price of that flour at the end of the three months is the price to which that flour has advanced, and the man who has held the flour makes money on it. If, on te other hand, the price of flour has gone down, the value of that flour is the market value at the time of its sale, and the merchant who has held the flour has lost money on it.

Surely nobody thinks that if a man bought a schooner for $1,000 five years ago and the present value of the schooner in the market is $5,000, that man should be put in jail as a profiteer because he charged the $5,000 which is the market value of the schooner. If a man break out another's window, the damages are not what the pane of glass cost when it was put there ten years ago; the damages are what it would cost to replace that pane of glass to-day.

If a man has a schooner for sale, the question in which he is concerned is not what was the value of that schooner when the schooner was built years ago; it is, for what could he replace the schooner to-day. The value of a barrel in a man's store is not what it cost to put that barrel ot flour in the store; it is what he could replace that barrel of flour for in the market to-day. If a man buys flour at $15.00 a barrel and flour drops $1.00, then he has to sell his flour at $14.00. No purchaser would think of paying him $15.00 merely because the seller paid $15.00 for it. The purchaser would not pay a cent more than the value of that article in the market; that is, the value at which he could get another barrel of flour to take its place.

You cannot ask a business man to invest large capital in the importation of goods and tell that merchant by Act of Parliament that if there is a drop in the market and the price goes down, then he has to use the money out of his own pocket, while if there is a rise in the market and the price goes up, he has to forfeit the profit which the increase in the market value of the article would give him. That is one of the first principles of political science. As a result of the abnormal war conditions and the world turmoil, Acts have been introduced from time to time to regulate matters of prices.

In twenty years time those of us who are then living and students of political science will be able to determine as to whether these legislative enactments have on the whole been beneficial or not. I would be a prophet to venture an opinion as to what the views of posterity will be, but the great mass of public opinion to-day is that legislation of this sort ishelpful to the consumer and constitutes a temporary bar to prevent that proportion of the mercantile class who are dishonest from having free scope for the exercise of dishonest activities. The object of this Act is to do justice to the people of Newfoundland; it is not to ask the importer of goods to take all chances on big losses and take no chances on big profits. Just so soon as any such law comes into effect in this country there will be no importers. What man is there who will trade in schooners if the law tells him that he has to stand, out of his own bank account, every large loss that he makes, but will not be permitted to have for himself any large profit he makes. You will not get anybody to do business on that basis. You will not get a merchant to import flour, beef, pork, molasses, sugar and the other staple requirements of the country's trade which involve large capital outlays if they are told by the government that they have got to take their chance on losses but take no chance on profit.

Hence the word of this section is such as to provide that the profit charged is reasonable "in view of all the circumstances" and the clear minimum is the rate which does not exceed the rate earned by persons in the same way of business as the seller upon the sale of similar articles under pre-war conditions, shall not be deemed unreasonable. Certainly that would be the natural minimum as I have already explained because the small business man cannot begin to think of running a business and supporting himself and his family on the same margin of profit as he earned in pre-war days.

MR. FOX—If profit was excessive five years ago, then it would be profiteering to-day because it was not right then.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—It is just possible that in an individual case the profit earned five years ago as an individual item might have been ecessive, and that in spite of the general increase in cost of living, and overhead charges, it might still be excessive, but such circumstances are likely to be exceedingly rare occurrences, and no bill can be so worded as to meet every possible contingency.

MR. FOX—Might I suggest so we might have some time to consider the section that the committee rise and ask leave to sit again to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Why certainly, the matter may stand over until to-morrow. The question as to whether the word 'Net' is or is not inserted is a matter of very little importance, because the section indicates that such profit as is reasonable "in view of all the circumstances" is the profit to be allowed, and it does not matter whether that profit is "Net Profit" or "Gross Profit."

MR. HIGGINS—I take it is not so much the words "Net Profit." It does not make any difference if the word "Net" is there or not. I take it if the word "Profit" is there only net profit is meant. If I purchase an article at one dollar and sell it at one dollar and twenty cents the profit would be twenty cents and word "Net" plays no part. I think as far as the English Act is concerned it is the outcome of the conditions after the war, and the only idea anticipated here in this Bill is to endeavour to have the right competition. In normal time competition forced prices to be fair and reasonable, and as the Prime Minister stated in England there was not enough of competition. I think we can improve this section a bit (Sec. 3).

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—This matter has been the subject of some newspaper controversy in England. I am quite satisfied that it may be left to the Board to work out in a reasonable and just manner.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—I would like to have this deferred until to-morrow (Business Profits Tax Act). Gives notice of introduction of Bill.

Mr. Walsh gives notice of question.

Dr. Jones gives notice of question.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the Bill entitled "An Act to amend "The Income War Tax Act" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

Hon. the Minister of Finance & Customs gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a Bill entitled "An Act respecting the issue of certain Debenture Bonds of the Colony.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Mr. Walsh gave notice of question.

Dr. Jones, gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until three of the clock to-morrow afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 21st, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs tabled the following Financial statements:

Surplus Trust Account.

Statement of Public Debt to July 30th, 1919.

Balance sheet of Treasury Accounts for year ended 30th June, 1919.

Balance sheet of Treasury Accounts for year ended 30th June, 1919.

Statement of Current Account of the Government of Newfoundland, for the year ended 30th June 1919.

Colonial's Secretary's Departmental Trust Account for the Fiscal Years 1918-1919.

Hon. The Minister of Justice presented the following report.

The select committee appointed to consider the proposed Bill of the Montreal Trust Company, beg to report that although the notice called for has not been given, no harm can be caused thereby.

The Select Committee recommend the Bill to the House and are of the opinion that it should be introduced in spite of the fact that the notice has not been given.

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a Bill respecting the Montreal Trust Co.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance & Customs, the Bill entitled, "An Act respecting the issue of certain Debenture Bonds of the Colony was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER FINANCE & CUSTOMS—The late Government during their term of office endeavoured to raise a loan of $6,000,000. Five million was raised in Canada and one million locally. The million raised locally was not signed by the late Minister of Finance, and Messrs. Wood & Gundy are very anxious to have it signed; the contract requires that this shall be done by the late minister. This bill provides the necessary legal authority so that the signing by the late minister will be legal.

(Notice of Question)

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Shipping or in his absence the Hon. the Prime Minister to lay on the table of the House a detailed statement showing (a) The total cost of operation the coastal boats, Prospero and Portia from November 15th to date. (b) Total earnings for same service for same period.

MR. WALSH asked the mah ,.r.; u

Mr. Walsh asked the Hon. the Minister of Public Works to lay on the table of the House copies of all tenders received by his Dept. for a contract to operate the Motor Ferry Service between Branch and St. Joseph's in St. Mary's Bay and all correspondence in reference said contract.

Dr. Jones asked the Minister of Public Works whether instructions have been sent out for the conduct of the Road Board Elections in the District of Harbour Main on May 31st Also to name the parties, if any, instructed to carry on the elections in Colliers, Conception Hr., Kitchues, Avondale, Hr. Main, Chapel's Cove and Holyrood.

The Hon. Prime Minister, acting on behalf of the Minister of Shipping and the Minister of Public Works who were absent stated that replies were in course of preparation and would be ready by Tuesday.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 86 of the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (Third Series) entitled Of Stipendiary Magistrates and Justices of the Peace" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message, requesting teh concurrence of that body in its Provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. 27 of the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld., (Third Series), entitled "Or Death Duties," was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be Pursuant to order and on motion of the Whole to consider the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 157 of the Consolidated Statues of Newfoundland (Third Series), entitled "Of the Fire Patrol."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the Bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said Bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the House resolved itself into a committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions regarding the exportation of Codfish from this Colony.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN—I would like to say a few words on the resolutions which are now before the chair. Medicine in any shape is hard to take sometimes, and I recognize in those resolutions before the house a dose intended for the fish merchants of Newfoundland. While I agree with considerable that is in this bill, I am not prepared to support it in its entirety. It is a recognized fact to us, the old members of this house, and to the old members of the trade, that considerable abuse has been practised in exporting fish from the Colony, as far back as 30 years ago. I recognize that. To-day, and when I say to-day I mean up to last year, we are practically in the same rut, but then, to correct that takes considerable time. Your opinions may be right, sir, and mine may be right; still, I don't think that we should put our opinions up as infallible, and make them imperative, without listening to the other side of the case. I remember quite well, the year 1897, when fish was two dollars a quintal in this country. We had a large catch of fish in that year, but it was impossible to sell fish at all, cargoes of Labrador fish and fish from the northern bays were held up. There was nobody at that time interested enough to advise what should be done. The only answer to that position was the supply and demand. The demand for the fish was not there. Other countries, Canada, France, and Norway, had fish on hand, and the markets were overstocked. Some gentlemen here to-day will remember that year as well as I do. Mr. Gosse and Capt. Jones must remember it when the best price for fish was from three dollars and fifty cents to four dollars a quintal. Now the fish situation has changed through these years, and no doubt the war period helped to change those conditions, and the conditions we have to-day, we want to improve, and I agree with the minister to a certain extent, that we should do our utmost to better conditions provided we can do so without injuring anyone, but it is a hard matter to adjust.

I recognize that the minister of marine and fisheries has considerable difficulty in adjusting this, and I realise that he has a deep and sincere interest in this question, more so, in fact, than any other member in this house ever had in my experience for the past twenty-eight years. I recognize that in taking upon himself this work, that he is looking after the mainspring of the Colony, but then it is our duty, on the other hand, to go slow in the matter.

Last fall, when the present government came into power, the rules and regulations proposed at that time by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and sprung upon the Colony, were a great surprise to everybody, but I thought that they were a long felt want, but in the form that they are in to-day, I think that certain sections are a bit arbitrary. It is a hard thing for a man of means to go out and issue supplies to a number of fishermen in the spring and after the voyage is over, and the fish caught, the principal interest that he has is how much he can ge for that fish. Well, it is hard to adjust this matter because there are so many ways that different men can sell fish, as far as I can see, these resolutions mean, that a man after supplying fishermen for the voyage, when it is over, has to come in and consult with a third party, and a disinterested one, as far as these gentlemen who supplied for the fishery are concerned, as to what they will do with their fish.

But then, I can see the force of these resolutions as he explained them when he introduced them here, that if a man sells a cargo of fish at a very profitable figure in one or two places, or at a certain market, the custom, I take it, in the past with the trade here, was, if I had a cargo of fish, that I could realise one hundred or ninety shillings a quintal on, some other merchant jumps in and offers the same fish at one or two shillings less. That goes on until we find ourselves right down to hard pan and the markets overflooded with a half dozen cargoes, some on consignment, and some cash against documents. That is what happened in the past, and that is what caused the minister of marine and fisheries to bring in these resolutions; but on the other hand, is there any other easier way to meet these conditions than by these resolutions. When the merchants of Water Street and other parts of the country read these resolutions and find that they are placed in the hands of the seven men, who, under the amendment, are appointed to the board, I think that they will balk at it. I would balk very much at investing money, if I had any, in the fish business, under these conditions. A man who has any money likes to handle it any way he pleases. But I see the Minister's point of view, that this is intended for the benefit of the fishermen. I can fully realise that the interests of the fishermen must be thought of, and that is the reason we are considering these resolutions here to-day. Last fall when these resolutions were sprung upon the country, the greater part of the trade were in favor of them, and now only six months after, we find the same men, who were supporting them then, are denouncing them now. We who are here representing the fishermen of the Colony, and must of necessity have their interests at heart, at the same time should be fair to the merchants. I have no sympathy for the merchants. I can remember, and I paid my share, when the merchants of the Colony took care to find out the total catch of the fishery before they made a price for the fishermen of the Colony, and I don't want to go back to those days.

The trade has been revolutionized in the past twenty-five years, but how was it brought about? Not by the merchants of Water Street. It was brought about by the demand for fish on the one hand, and on the other by the drummers and buyers who came here from Canada and the United States and purchased fish in small lots. If we pass those resolutions that are before the chair to-day, we cut out the small man altogether. It will be impossible for him to export fish, because he will not be able to come before the board that will be appointed under these regulations and give satisfaction; but I for one don't want this. I am prepared to give the small man a chance, because I remember that twenty-five or thirty years ago the total catch of fish in this country found its way in through the narrows of St. John's.

Conditions have changed since then. Very little fish comes inside of Cape Pine to-day. It is exported more from the west coast. It is sold to drummers who come here from Canada and the United States. That is what built up the fish industries on the west coast. That was the beginning of Burin and Grand Bank. As far back as fifteen, twenty and twenty-five years ago they sold fish in small lots to Canada, which gradually increased until to-day some of them are the largest exporters we have in Newfoundland. Now I don't think we should cut out any small man, a man who is in the prime of life trying to build up a business for himself, and that is what we will be doing if we pass these resolutions. The minister has asked that we will give certain powers to the men who will be appointed to this board, but if we do so we want to make sure that they are just and will be carried out.

The whole people of the colony are to be ruled by a half a dozen individuals. I say it is unprecedented in the history of the trade of the country to have such conditions as are mapped out in these resolutions here to-day. Conditions regarding the exportation of fish, under these resolutions, within the next twelve months, will be deplorable. Such is not known in any other country that I know of. I am sure it is not happening in Canada or the United States. Here we are going to give away the whole fish business of Newfoundland to half a dozen men. True they may be above suspicion, but then it is a risky thing to do anyway, because the whole fish trade of the Colony is not going to be conserved while in the hands of a half dozen men, no matter how honest they might be. You may, as asked for in these resolutions, send drummers to Europe, United States, Canada and South America to open up fish markets, but at the same time you are frightening away the future fish business men of this Colony.

I recognize, and I know exactly what I am talking about so far as the fish business is concerned, that the exportation of fish in the past has been abused and will be abused no matter how stringent you make these regulations. There is only one way to cope with the situation and that is to standardize your fish when shipping. You can standardize your fish properly, cull your fish properly and ship fish properly, but you cannot prevent an exporter from mixing merchantable, Madeira and talqual fish, if he wants to, by standardizing the fish when leaving a port for the foreign market, and I quite agree with the fee asked for in these resolutions, as it will be money well spent on the part of the Colony to pay a sufficient number of men and honest men to see that the work is carried out and that cargoes are shipped properly.

I believe that if a cargo of No. 1 fish was to be loaded to-morrow for Europe or any other market that the proper thing to do would be to put one or two men in that store, wherever it might be, to see that no fish would be put on board that ship for exportation, excepting the quality prescribed in the bill of lading and in the invoice. We all know what has happened under the talqual system when fish was bought at the talqual price and in many cases not shipped as talqual, but if you make it stringent upon the shipper, as already detailed by me, you are soon going to change that system.

But I will draw the line and look at the situation from the standpoint of the purchaser and shipper of fish He goes and spends his money honestly and sincerely to buy fish and has to pay the highest price for it, owing to competition, and then he has to go bowing and scraping for a permit before he is allowed to ship that fish. The man who buys fish today has to pay the highest figure for it. He does not get it like we used in 1897 and '98. Take the West Coast. Within the past five years there has been competition in every settlement there. Schooners of all sizes are brought around by the different competitors and there is no chance at all for a man to buy fish as he purchased it twenty-five years ago. The gentlemen sitting on the other side of house know that to be so. If I pay my honest money for fish and after putting it into my store at a cost of ten or twelve dollars a quintal, as the case may be, then I have to go with hat in hand to this board and ask them for a permit before I can ship that fish to any market. In many cases I stand a chance of being refused a permit. In fact that has happened within the past six months. I know that the minister of marine and fisheries has refused permits to several shippers. These people were prepared to sell their own fish on their own terms and at a certain figure. Under the regulations a shipper has got to go to the fisheries department and tell the whole story to the advisory board, namely, the price he is selling for, the price he paid for it, and how much profit he is going to make and then after all that, it is up to the board as to whether or not they will grant the permit.

Now that is a very arbitrary regulation. I am quite prepared to back anything that will forward the interests of the fishermen of the colony, but I am not prepared to turn down the small business man and the small shipper. Take conditions to-day on the West Coast. There are many fishermen there not being supplied in Newfoundland at all. There are quite a number of people in Bonne Bay, Bay St. George and right down to Fortune Bay and in Fortune Bay, who are taking their supplies from Halifax to-day. There is an enormous business done on the West Coast and the supplies are brought around by a steamer owned by Farquhar and Company of Halifax. Now, under the regulations these people are not allowed to sell to Farquhar because Farquhar is disallowed from taking fish to Halifax without first coming to St. John's to look for ap ermit. Surely you do not want to destroy that West Coast trade.

The people on the West Coast at the present time have a great advantage over what they had 25 years ago. Twenty-five years ago a man brought his whole voyage to St. John's to sell. To-day he is selling in an open market with St. John's on the one side, Nova Scotia on the other, not to mention all the drummers that are scattered all over the West Coast I am sure that we do not want to turn the men down and I am sure that the minister in charge of this measure does not want to turn them down.

Those big shippers of fish now on the West Coast, as I have previously referred to, came right up the ladder gradually, made a small profit gradually, and gradually increased their trade until they came to be among the largest fish exporters in Newfoundland. Surely you do not seriously intend that that big business on the West Coast is to be controlled by half a dozen men in St. John's, no matter how experienced they may be. I have every confidence in the minister in charge of this measure so far as his honesty is concerned, but no matter how honest he may be, there is a certain amount of suspicion surrounding him in relation to the trade of the country, because, as admitted by himself in this house and as talked about it by other people outside this house, he is the chief one of the largest organizations in this Island, and which organization is one of the largest exporters of fish that we have; and it is only natural to expect that he will feather his own nest first.

Supposing a port in Europe needed half a dozen cargoes of fish tomorrow, which at a very good figure netted a good profit. The chairman of the board is the hon. minister of marine and fisheries, and is it not unreasonable to think that one of his cargoes would go forward first to help to fill the breach? Certainly he is not going to telegraph the west coast exporters. And I would not place any great blame on him for doing that, but this and other things create a suspicion by your putting this big industry into the hands of five or six men to control. It may happen in future years that, owing to these regulations, no matter how we try to keep the price of fish up, it will come down. It may happen within the next two or three years. It happened before remember and history repeats itself. I am half inclined to agree with the resolutions passed by the Board of Trade to-day. These men are men of considerable experience. Some of them have been in the business forty years. They are very much alarmed over this question and there seems to be unanimous disapproval among them over the regulations.

I was in the States and Canada last year and I found that I could sell four thousand quintals of fish f. o. b. St. John's at a very profitable figure. I was informed by wire that I could get the fish, but the first thing I was up against was the regulations laid down in the department of marine and fisheries. Well, after going into the matter I found out that other people had been ahead of me and that other cargoes were on hand there. I came to the conclusion that I would not be considered in the matter, as I had found cut indirectly that I would not get a permit. Now I consider that that was a hardship on me.

After all when you take a hundred or two hundred drummers and get them abroad, they are going to sell more fish than the half dozen men on the advisory board. If you think not, you are making a mistake. We want more markets. We want drummers sent to Europe and the United States to see fish put up in different forms. All that can come if we look after it properly. Take our dry cod fish to-day in the United States? There is practically none of it eaten there. Why, because we cure it dry and hard, and the Yankee, whether man or woman, is too busy to eat Newfoundland dry cured codfish because the first thing they would have to do is to soak it for twenty-four hours before they could eat it. But what is the position so far as the American sh is concerned?

They put in packages something like the way the lobsters are packed and the housewife on the way home will go in and buy a package of fish and go home, boil it or cook it as the case may be. But if she is going to use the Newfoundland codfish, take the dry fish, she has to soak it in water for twenty-four hours; she will experience a stench from the fish although it may be perfect, and she will immediately think the fish is not fit for human food. There is room enough in the United States, which have a population of over one hundred million people to-day living side by side with us, is there not for half if not the whole catch of Newfoundland fish? The fish has to be put up properly if it is going to find the right markets in the United States. They will not up there be in a position to buy our fish unless we do something to put up our fish after the fashion it is put up by the people in Gloucester. We are not going to enhance the price of fish in future unless we do this. We have sent men to South America and Europe to enquire into the state of the market and it is unnecessary for me to tell you what happened, we all know it.

If we come in here and in these resolutions ask that the sum of ten cents be charged on every quintal of fish to pay the expenses of the drummers to go abroad to open up new markets we must keep it up. Now if they go abroad and fail, send others away again and again until success is assured. If we keep on going we will get them. Take the drummers who come down here from Canada and the United States. They come in and put the article right before you and they are not content if you refuse them. They will come back again in a few months. The same thing applies to our fish. We are sending our fish to the same markets for the last century: Brazil, Italy, Spain and the Mediterranean. We have kept ourselves in the same rut for the last one hundred years. But as far as these resolutions are concerned, in part I support them and in part I oppose them. I am not prepared to hand over the fishing industry of this Colony to half a dozen men in this Colony. I would not be one of these commissioners for any amount of money. I do not think the resolutions are entirely right in principle and by adopting them in their entirety I think we are going to give a very bad blow to the fishery of this Colony.

The statement of the Minister that the merchants on Water Street will not give any supplies to the fishermen I do not believe. I am inclined to think that this will not amount to anything. The supplier of to-day and the supplier of twenty years ago are not in the same class. The merchant on Water Street to-day will not be affected by whatever passes in this house as regards supplying the fishermen. But every merchant knows where he supplied last year and all he has to do is to turn up his books and see what profit the planter made last year. So no matter what passes here he will supply him again. I do not agree with the minister when he stated either last evening or the evening before that perhaps a short catch may be a blessing. It would be a blessing and all right if we could not market our fish. One million seven hundred thousand quintals of fish may be only as good as one million three hundred thousand if we cannot get good markets for it. You are asking here for quite a lot of money to pay drummers whom I presume you intend to send away. If we open up new and better markets and our catch of fish should reach one million seven hundred thousand quintals, we would be in a very much better position than if our catch was only one million three hundred thousand.

It is deplorable to see men going away from this Colony to-day to seek employment elsewhere. It has happened before. When I was a member of this house twenty years ago I remember men leaving here day after day to work in Boston and other cities The men came up here in their hundreds to ask employment, but they had to leave this Colony. Every man who left here and went through the narrows should be making a living here. These men sent back the money to their families. They were energetic men and a loss was attached to their leaving. These men who had families dependent upon them had every right to leave the Colony when they could not get work here. If there had been work in this Colony they would have been encouraged to remain here. I think it is deplorable to have men leaving here to seek work elsewhere.

Because of the spurious promises and the difficult position of the present government, there is a shortage of men here if the work required to be done, were done. If the problem of repairing the railroad were gone into some four or five hundred men would be required. Why not come in here and legislate in that direction, and you have to legislate so far as the railway is concerned, and the right time to do so is the present. Now the men quite capable of doing that work are at this very moment passing through the narrows. Every man throughout the Island who has a family dependent upon him will be employed in some direction either inside or outside the Colony. I took up the paper to-day and see another one hundred men are leaving for employment abroad. Every ship that leaves here carries away some men and yet the hon. minister some forty-eight hours ago tells us that it is a good thing to have those men going abroad. Well I am not going to put a wrong construction upon what he said. I will call it a slip of the tongue. We should like to see men coming into the Colony and lots of work offered to them. But it is not difficult to get work here at the present time. If the necessary machinery were put in operation many men could be given work. There is no reason why the men of Conception Bay should have to go and dig down in the mines at Sydney. Labor in the city costs four dollars per day and I do not see why men should be compelled to leave this country because of this lack of proper manipulation. If you are in earnest in your promises, if you are in earnest with regard to your obligations to this country, then you should protect those men and keep them in this Colony by having the necessary work done. By employing them and paying them the revenue of this country is increased.

We are here now and it is nearly the first of June and not one act has been passed since the opening of the house which is of any importance to the betterment of this country. You cannot point to one act on the statute books passed up to now by the present government which is of any importance. In the manifesto of the Prime Minister last fall it was promised that this house of assembly would be opened about February and all the necessary legislation would be passed and the house closed before April. It was promised that the railroad would be attended to the first thing, and the Government know and I know, and the country knows that it is in a bad condition, and the country is waiting for the improvement, but they have not done it and there is no reason for not strong enough to do it, or they are afraid to do it. This is the statement I want to voice, but I am getting away from the subject before the chair. Anyway the Government of the day are not arbitrators on this matter.

Many people of the country are solely dependent upon the railroad and it is the duty of the Government to get to work on the railroad and employ those men who are leaving the country for the United States. Surely they ought not to experience any difficulty in getting enough of men to do the job. Labor to-day in certain lines is not at a premium. It is no use waiting till the fall of the year, maybe when there may be a bad fishery to go out and start work on the railroad. No good trying to do the work when a foot of snow is on the ground. If they were sincere in their promises to this country, being now in receip of a lease of power they should get right to work now and remedy the rotten conditions existing.

But I am not entirely in accord with the resolutions from the Board of Trade. I believe when you come down to Water Street and try to get two-thirds of the merchants to agree to anything you are up against something. I would turn right around and vote for one-third instead of two-thirds. I think the minister ought to consider that. You take that committee of five men and you ask us to place the whole matter of the export of codfish from the Colony in their hands. Even with seven men on the committee that is not good enough. The trade should be consulted, and the exporters should be called together when two cargoes are going to a place where one cargo would supply the demand.

I am inclined to hold to the resolutions that if the board is constituted of men who have the confidence of the trade and the fishermen of the colony it will have a beneficial effect. But we can't get those men from the Government ranks, not even in the Executive Government. Mr. Coaker himself is the nearest to it. Then there is not another. He is the only man in the Government who knows anything about the fish business and he would have his own way. We are asked to be satisfied with the appointments of the Governor-in-Council. We are going to leave it in their hands to appoint the board. They don't know anything about fish themselves, and if they don't know anything about fish themselves they don't know anybody who do.

You have no control whatever in the matter; the law of supply and demand will take care of that. The Frenchmen, you must remember, were practically out of business since 1914, but they are coming back now and they are to be more dreaded than ever before. This year they will have sixty or seventy steam trawlers operating on the Grand Banks, and besides the old square riggers will again be in operation. To my mind the Frenchman is going to prove a dangerous competitor for us, and if their fishery operations are a success this year, they will have as many more steam trawlers operating next year, and in the space of four or five years they will have two or three hundred of such vessels fishing on the Banks. They are also beginning to look to the scientific side of the question and are in that way becoming more and more proficient each year. Last year there were two or three trawlers out, and during the months of June and July they found fish scarce, but were at a loss to account for it as they had found fish plentiful early in the spring on the Quero and Western Banks. The answer to it was this. During the season there are three schools of cod in over the Banks. The herring school in the early part of the season, the caplin school in June and July and in the fall the fish that come in after the squid. Now during the herring school these trawlers got a good deal of fish, but when the caplin came in they were unable to get any because while their nets, which are lowered to the bottom and dragged along by wire cables, were sweeping the bottom, the fish had come to the surface after the caplin and the line and bull-tow men, using what are known as floating trawls, were getting all the fish they wanted. Later in the season, however, when the weather got cold, the fish were again on the bottom after another kind of bait, what are known as wrinkles, and the Frenchmen, who still carried on were again successful. Last November one of those modern trawlers went out from St. Pierre and in eight days she was back again from the Banks with 4,000 qtls. of fish. She had a crew of twenty-four men and the trip was made more or less as a sort of experiment. They worked two nets and as fast as they could be lowered and hauled up the fish was taken in.

Now the day is sure to come when that kind of thing will be general. We may doubt it as we will; we smiled to ourselves when people spoke of crossing the Atlantic in airplanes, but it was done, nevertheless, and if others are making these strides and we stand still where are we going to be left. The United States is not behind France and in a few years the use of bait will be done away with altogether. We must keep all these things before us and not discount the value of our own fisheries. I am prepared to do anything that will help to improve them and I shall support any measure, with that object in view, that might be brought in here, regardless of what side of the house it may emanate from.

The fishery is our one great heritage; there may be side issues, but the fishery is to this generation the principal industry, and it will be such for a great many years to come. We should also remember that our fish is now at top notch; it is a luxury in the countries where it is sold, and we are getting big prices for it, and if our fishermen are not able to make a living out of it there is something wrong somewhere. So far we have been fortunate, as a matter of fact, during the war I think we were the most fortunate country concerned in the struggle. When the war broke out we were practically on the rocks, but good prices for our fish helped us to get on the top wave of prosperity. Therefore why cannot we come in here now and put party politics aside in the interests of the country as a whole. I would vote for this entire bill now if I thought that it would not impose a hardship upon our people, in other words if I thought it would be a success, but I don't think it will be a success. It might be all right for the big man who has a choice of markets, but it is bound to block the small man and it is the small man we must help, because it is he we have to thank to a very great extent for getting us where we are to-day. I remember in the old days when the few merchants on Water Street fixed the price in the old commercial rooms. There were only a few of them who had everything in their own hands and they made prices to suit themselves, but to-day we have a hundred and one exporters, and the small men have been responsible for finding new markets and thereby getting for the fishermen a decent price for their fish.

I agree with the hon. introducer of these resolutions that something should be done to improve the marketing of our fish, but he has gone beyond the limit when he tries to take charge of a whole big indusrty and put it into the hands of five or six ment. That is not considered good enough by anybody and here is the proof of it. When he put his regulations into force under the old War Measures Act the Water Street merchants, or a great many of them thought the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was the New Messiah come to save them from the dire results of their transgressions, but now the same men are shouting "Away with him, crucify him!" It's only a matter of history repeating itself. These men don't want this measure and they are going to oppose it as vigorcusly as they can. I know that. I have talked with many of them, and when this bill goes before the upper house you know what will happen.

If you pass it in this house you won't pass it in the upper house. The men on Water St. are up there and if they are honest and you are wrong they won't pass these resolutions. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to go slow. Why not form a committee from both this and the upper house; let them take these rules and regulations and let them discuss them. Take them apart from the house altogether and let them try and reach some logical agreement. These resolutions are going to block the whole export of fish from Newfoundland. The regulations last fall made it compulsory for the young man to follow his fish right up after it had been delivered into the hands of the man on the other side. To-day there is no secrecy in trade. You have to come in here and make an open confession to the board. If the merchants on Water Street are not going to make as much money on their exports of fish as they have done in the past then you will very soon find them dropping out of the trade altogether.

But it is not the merchant on Water Street that I am thinking of. I am thinking of the small man who is at the bottom of the ladder and who is trying to work up. The young men who are in the export business today north and south have no opportunity of climbing the ladder with these regulations in force. I see no reason why you don't appoint a select committee from both houses and let them take the resolutions in and let them come down here with their finding after careful consideration, and if they find them acceptable, there is no man more anxious in this house today than myself to pass them. I was in the fish business 35 years ago. I have sold fish from two dollars a qtl. to seventeen dollars a qtl. I fought my battle all down through these years, and although I say it myself I was one of those that helped the young fisherman of this country to become independent, but I wasn't going to come in here and tell everybody how I did it.

Take Mr. Cheeseman over there, he didn't get up the ladder through the merchant on Water Street. He was independent of them, and isn't that what we want? I state right now that we ought to have a select committee of both houses and analyze these resolutions and those of the Board of Trade, and if we find that it is absolutely necessary to make rules and regulations as laid down here then I am prepared to vote for them.

I wish to remark that last year when making the financial statement for the House of Assembly I recommended to the Government the very idea introduced here to-day in this bill (Business Profit Tax). That is the tax of one half of one per cent. on all moneys remaining on savings deposits in the banks of the colony, but I did not recommend it on the current account deposits, as on these the banks made little profit. I recommended this because of the simple reason it was an easy way of arriving at the tax. There is, as a rule, a lot of inconvenience, friction and all kinds of trouble when a bank is making up its statement at the end of the year. It has to consult the head office. So we figured out that a tax of about one quarter or one half of one per cent. and I suppose the financial minister has figured out what this tax will mean when compared with the amount received last year from the banks. But when he states that there are about thirty millions of dollars on deposit in the banks he is incorrect, because last year we discovered that about sixteen millions were there. A lot of money was withdrawn from the banks last year and debentures were purchased instead.

Now when the Finance Minister puts down the tax at one half of one per cent, I guess he has figured out what he is going to receive. According to the statement last year he received something over seventy thousand dollars in taxes. Now the reason why it was recommended was because it was a business way of getting at it, and you could not go in and demand the money at any time, and there could not be any getting behind the screens about it. I believe it is the right thing to do, but I would not like to see it injure the trade of the Colony as it may, according to the statement of the gentleman on the other side. If it is injurious to the trade what the bank is called upon to pay, well then the whole thing will come back upon the taxpayers and it will be seen that the goods will rise maybe fifteen per cent. in price. But I do not think it should include deposits on current account. The Bank of Montreal handles all the money of the Government departments, and it would make a great difference if the current accounts were included. I agree with the Finance Minister that that is the right thing to do if the tax of one half of one per cent is not too much. I am not prepared to say that it is or not. In spector O'Rielly last year had no trouble in collecting the taxes. All he had to do was to send along the bill and the whole matter was easily accomplished.

MR. SULLIVAN—In rising, Mr. Chairman, to discuss the bill now before the house, I want to preface my remarks by saying that I will be brief and that I am not going to oppose the bill on the whole. Last November or December when the resolutions were sprung upon us I was opposed to them because, like many others, I did not understand them. But since that time a change has taken place and the men who were then lauding the resolutions to the skies are to-day denouncing them. What then has made these people change their opinions so quickly? I don't know. I am however prepared to support any legislation that will better the masses of this country. I believe that some kind of fish regulations are absolutely necessary and that it is the general consensus of opinion, but where we seem to fall down is how we are going to carry out these regulations.

Yesterday I listened to the speech made by Sir John Crosbie, and if I wished to think as he did I could easily fall in line with him. Then the hon. minister of marine and fisheries also made a speech dealing with the regulations from his point of view, and if I were not well balanced I would have found it difficult to keep an open mind, but I have done so. We are here in this house to vote as we think best. Now sir, I was opposed to some of the clauses in this bill when it first came in here, but now the hon. minister has seen fit to amend the last portion of Section 1. He reads as follows: (Reads section).

The last part I took exception to. I consider it is not right to give the President of the Board of Trade the appointing of the nominee of the Board of Trade to the commission. After all, there's nobody infallible, and I do not think it would be wise to give the president of the Board of Trade the privilege of appointing the nominees. This winter while in London and at a time when the people in this country were being told that the fish regulations were ruining our trade, I lunched with a London broker. This man had been knocking the fish regulations when they were introduced, but he admitted that if it had not been for the fish regulations the price of fish would probably be down fifteen or twenty shillings below what it was at that time. This man had no direct interest in exporting from Newfoundland, but had been doing a brokerage business with some of the fish exporters. When he admitted that the regulations were beneficial I was prepared to take his word.

Now then, I see no reason why I should not give the introducer of this bill an opportunity to carry out his ideas as outlined in the bill before the house. As head of that great organization of fishermen known as the F. P. U., he has had several opportunities of visiting the foreign fish markets and familiarizing himself with the requirements of the different markets, and I am prepared to give him a trial. He is not leaping in the dark and is prepared to stand or fall by the regulations. There is no person stands to lose more if the regulations are a failure; his whole future depends on the regulations being a success. If he is wrong and the regulations fail, then his public career is very likely over. Let us give him a chance to make good. Having followed his work closely for many years I have yet to learn that he is wanting in common sense, and I say again give the hon. minister of marine and fisheries an opportunity to carry out his program.

I have no interest in the fish regulations, no interest in the exportation of codfish, except that I want to see the fishermen of the colony get a fair show. The minister of marine nad fisheries stated here yesterday evening that he is beginning to get suspicious of the obstruction he is meeting with in regard to these resolutions from the merchants who supported them so strongly last fall. I am wondering myself what is the reason for it. Those men were with him heart and soul last autumn, and if I went down and discussed the regulations with them, I would be told I was wrong, because of the view I held. Have they changed because they think they will not be able to make as much profit off the fish? They know that the minister of marine and fisheries will know the proper price of fish in the foreign markets, and that he will stand behind the fishermen of the country, and especially the fishermen of the north, who sent him here. They know that he will give these men the best price he can for fish. Are they afraid they might not make sixty thousand dollars on three or four small cargoes, as some did last year? I think any man should be satisfied with a profit of a dollar on a quintal. Is that the reason that they are now knocking these resolutions?

I believe that the rules and regulations governing the standardization and export of codfish will go far to help us to sell all our codfish, and increase our exportation to the foreign markets. I have listened to the speech made by Sir Michael Cashin, and he has talked of the sending of trade commissioners abroad, and the impression I gathered from his remarks was that a man is not allowed to send his own representative abroad. However, I am glad to hear from him now that that was not his meaning and that an exporter has a perfect right to send his own men to the foreign markets to get the best price he can. With the new cull it should be easy to get a good price for fish, and to keep our prices up, and if we once get our name up in the foreign markets for delivering the good article, we will have no trouble to find a market. What we want the members of this advisory board to have when they are appointed is a little common sense and discrimination, and not to stick always to the hard and fast rule laid down. If they find that a man is able to sell his fish at a shilling or two less than they are prepared to allow him, then let them use that discrimination, and do not let them crush that man and cause his ruin, when it is unnecessary. Let them give him a chance to sell his fish at a fair profit.

I do not see how this measure is blocking the small man. After all any man who is an exporter, will ship five hundred quintals of fish, and pay a tax of ten cents a qtl. on it. That is only fifty dollars; it is not much; and any man who is not able to export five hundred quintals, had better stay out altogether. The fisherman who only ships 100 quintals pays no license fee, only ten cents per quintal. Now why should we not control our prices? As far as I can see, the most of the articles imported into this country, the price is controlled. When we want to buy from Canada or the United States, they tell us this is our price on flour, pork, or beef, as the case may be; you may take it or leave it. We get the article and we have to pay cash against documents for it. I know when we bought sugar in New York last year we had to pay cash in New York for it before wegot the sugar, and we did not get it afterwards. Now take molasses from Barbados. It is a dollar and eighty-five cents a gallon wholesale C. I. F. here. They do not ask us what we are prepared to pay for it.

We do not want to stay in the groove that we have been in for the past, that we were in one hundred years ago. If people want to buy your commodities, let us insist on the same terms as we get when we buy theirs.

As far as the advisory board is concerned, I cannot see that we are injuring the fishery of the colony by giving the control into the hands of seven or eight men, as has been stated. From my experience in the past I was led to believe, that the whole fishery exportation of the colony was in the hands of eight or nine men, and it would be no more to-day under the commission. How many exporters have we in this country? We have nine or ten in St. John's and outside these, we have Harris of Grand Bank, and Ashbourne in Twillingate, and a few large exporters who control the exports of fish. Now under this act we will have seven men on the board, and the men on this board will be exporters of fish, men who know all the details in connection with our fish trade. If the board is not composed of those men, then the minister is not the man I think he is, but I fail to see why we should allow the fish exporters to nominate six men for the Board. I, for one, would not approve of that. Now it is very difficult to come to an opinion on this matter. The man who is presenting this bill is an exporter of codfish. He has travelled year after year to the foreign markets and has delved deep into these matters, and he tells us that this is a good measure. If this is not a good measure, he will be ruined, and the union he represents, will snow him under, and he knows that. Now this man is not a fool, and if he is prepared to take that chance, then I think that we should give him a chance to make good, if after another year these regulations prove no good, then we can turn them down. Personally, I am prepared to give him a chance. This bill may not be perfect, there is nothing perfect. Let us get together and forget politics and try to work this thing out to a satisfactory conclusion. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has told us that he will grant us concessions that are reasonable, and in consideration of this, I cannot see very much objection to these resolutions. I do not know if it is the intention to fix a price for the purchase of fish in Newfoundland. I think it is only right to fix a minimum price for the purchase of fish, and tell the fishermen of the colony what price they can demand. With reference to the men going away, I do not look on that with very much alarm. The most of these men who have been overseas, and they are not prepared to stay here, They have no intention of going fishing, they have different ideas since they were across the water, and we need not be alarmed very much over that. I am sorry to see them go. There is plenty of labor in the country, but they want a change, and that is why they are going. If there are fishermen going away and there may be a few, well it may reduce our catch somewhat. If there is any amendment that can be brought into this bill that will be for the betterment of the people, I will certainly support it, but before I support it I want to be convinced and I will be convinced that it is in the interest of the masses, and not the classes. Last fall there was a more of optimism running over this country, with regard to the fish regulations. Now, pessimism has taken its look on the bright side of things. Let us give these fish regulations a chance. If they are to give the fishermen of the country a better price for their fish then it is incumbent upon every member of this house to support these resolutions and I believe that they will do that, and for that reason I am prepared to give them my hearty support.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—The district I represent is one of the greatest fish producing districts in this Island and I have therefore been most anxious to do what I thought best for the interest of the exporter as well as the fishermen. I fear that if this bill is not passed by this house news of its rejection would be cabled to the markets abroad and the price of fish would drop from 10 to 15 shillings per qtl. As far as I can learn the people who are objecting to the regulations give no thought to the exporters who have fish at the present time in the foreign markets on the way, and in Newfoundland about to be exported. The objectors being a few in St. John's who have no fish on hand or in the foreign markets; the object apparently being to do everything possible to bring about a reduction in price in the foreign markets so that fish would drop to a low figure this year in the home market and thereby give a chance to the buyers at St. John's to reap a big harvest on a sale of the next production. The hon. leader of the opposition mentioned in his speech that in the year 1897 fish was down to $2.00 a quintal and some had the audacity to state that it is the wish of some merchants in St. John's to see that fish does drop again to a low figure so as to give them a chance to make a big haul the coming season. It is further rumored some of the objectors against the regulations are interested with brokers abroad, particularly in London, who sell as agents our people's fish in the foreign markets and thereby participate in the earnings of the brokers to the amount some years of twenty-five to fifty thousand dollars. If such is the case some people at least contend that they have good reason to fight this bill particularly in view of the position that if this bill is passed brokers on the other side will have no longer the opportunity of selling as agents our fish abroad.

The members of the opposition have shown their stupidity and ignorance in stating that not one member of the executive council had any knowledge whatever about fish except the Hon. Mr. Coaker. Now I want to inform the house that I know as much about fish and more than any other member on the opposition side, excepting the leader of the opposition and Sir John Crosbie.

MR. MOORE:—I never heard that before.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—I have caught, salted, helped to wash out, cured, culled and participated in the sale of fish in the foreign markets.

MR. MOORE:—Some fisherman, oh: it must have been a long time ago.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—I know enough about fish to believe in this bill. At the present time there is quite a quantity of fish in the foreign markets, but very little in the stores of this town owned by the people of St. John's. There is therefore very little interest taken by the merchants at the present time to protect present prices to enable the fish now in the foreign markets and in the outports to be exported and sold for reasonable prices abroad. When the regulations of last fall were put in force I felt somewhat diffident as to the advisibility of supporting them as the policy was rather against my ideas (being perhaps somewhat conservative) particularly as the issue and operations of such regulations rather conflicted with the principles of political economy and my idea of the best principles of the trade, but having been instructed of the true facts which showed that the abnormal conditions existing at that time I concluded that in the best interests of all concerned we had no alternative but to enforce such regulations. I therefore supported the regulations and am pleased to know that the course I took at that time was for and in the best interests of all concerned.

MR. WALSH:—Up to the time I took up the paper this afternoon and saw the resolutions passed by the Board of Trade I was opposed to the resolutions that are now under discussion. By going contrary to the resolutions passed by the Board of Trade we will support the best interests of the people of the country, and it is the people, the fishermen, that I am interested in. For that reason I support these resolutions. I want to congratulate the hon. leader of the opposition on the splendid speech that he made here this afternoon. He has shown that he is familiar with every detail, and has a thorough knowledge of the subject. I want to join with the hon. leader of the opposition in asking the hon. the introducer of this bill to take the suggestion that has been offered and amend the bill accordingly. There is no interest so far as I am concerned in obstructing or hampering the legislation of the House, but I think the suggestion ought to be given every every consideration. Another reason why I support this bill is because of the fact that were we now to dispose of the regulations a large amount of last year's catch might be jeopardized. I understand that there are 150,000 quintals of our fish on the other side not yet sold, and that there are about 90,000 quintals in Newfoundland, making altogether 240,000 quintals yet to be sold. If the regulations were taken away I am afraid there would be a great slump. It may put a lot of small outport merchants out of business.

A statement was made here last night by the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he knew one exporter who made a clear profit of $60,000 on three cargoes of fish. I have no doubt that the hon. minister is correct, but if he is correct it is too much. It should be more equitably divided and the fishermen get a greater profit. Almost every year all the catch is in after the first of December there is a rise in price. But these regulations, by the wise council that might be brought to bear in this bill, will give the fisherman a better show, and he will get a better price for his fish. I am of oponion that we must go some where Water Street to look for friends of the fishermen. I have often differed in opinion, and undoubtedly will again, from the hon. introducer of this bill, but if he can secure better prices abroad better prices will be obtained at home and it is the man that catches the fish that I am most interested in.

With regard to the steam trawlers and the work of the French government I would be glad if instead of voting $55,000 for a model farm a half million dollars were voted to develop the fishing industry. I would heartily support such a bill. It is not my intention to delay the House further. If the hon. introducer of the bill will follow the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition and submit the resolutions to a select committee I think the bill will receive the unanimous support of the lower house. I care not what the attitude of the upper house might be We had an instance a couple of years ago where a bill was turned down by the upper house because it pinched some of the gentlemen there a little.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to deal with these resolutions, I would like to ask the question, which was prompted by the remarks of the hon. member for Burin, as apparently he knows the personnel of this advisory board, has that board already been decided on and who are the members of it?

HON. MR. FOOTE:—The board has not yet been appointed.

MR. MacDONNELL:—You stated that you knew that the north and west would be well represented on the board.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—I know that they will be although the appointment have not yet been made.

MR. MacDONNELL:—If you do not know who are going to be on that board how do you know where the would be members of it belong? I think that it is a pity that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries did not embody the names in the resolutions. I thought that the Hon. Mr. Foote knew more about the board and the likely members thereof than the minister himself. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the Hon. Mr. Foote airing his views about his practical and theoretical knowledge of fish but I dare say that his whole knowledge of fish is about as limited as mine, and all I know is that I can tell the different species of trout and salmon. However, I do not think it altogether necessary to have any specific knowledge of fish generally to talk on these resolutions. As regards the statement that there were not five members in the house who knew whether or not tomcod developed into a codfish and the rejoinder of the hon. Mr. Archibald that the person who made that statement was speaking scientifically, let me say that I will go five better and out the challenge that there is not a single member in this house who can talk about codfish at all from a scientific standpoint and with your permission, Mr. Chairman, let me point out the difference between art knowledge and scientific knowledge. The knowledge derived from the practical handling of codfish is the art knowledge, but the scientific knowledge is acquired by the scientist who can tell the life and habits of the codfish without ever seeing it just as the scientist knows the different kinds of mineral without ever having seen the stuff. The hon. Mr. Vinnicombe was perfectly right in the interjection that he made. The statement that there were not five men in the house who knew whether or not a tomcod developed into a codfish came from the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself. Now although I have no practical knowledge of the codfishery I am going to talk on the fishery regulations and whether I support them or not I am going to put forward arguments that are sound and if they are to be objected to by any hon. gentleman he will have to give reasons to show that they are not sound. I have heard a deal of alk about the inconsistencies of some people because of their objectionable attitude towards these regulations. Now I know people in this house and I could name them if I wanted to, who have dsiplayed every characteristic of inconsistency, except one.

And the people on this side of the House have changed their opinions so often that they have displayed every characteristic of the fact except that they have not had the bigness of mind to justify a change of mind. I found these resolutions both on the platform and in the press and I will not take back anything I then said. They were thrown in on country without any notification or warning and that they had not the right to do. They should have served notice when they intended to force on the country a set of resolutions which dealt with the whole industry of the country. These resolutions were inflicted upon the country in the hasty and ill-judged manner and proof can be given if necessary and I contend according to what has expired these resolutions have not justified themselves as was shown by the decision of the courts when they were declared illegal. Then the government still sitting as executive government instead of acting as Governor in Council and bringing the matter in this house, they dug up an old act which was as extinct as the purposes for which it was discovered and this was the war measures act and under it they inflicted the resolutions on the country. Whether good or bad the method of putting them on the country was rotten and I object to such a kind of legislation and I am entitled to do so. At that time there was diversity of opinion as to whether they were good or bad and many men who up to then supported them and thought them good absolutely condemned them. I was present at a meeting of the board of trade and the resolutions up to that time had been endorsed but at the meeting many of the exporters condemned them. Altho a man may be learned the ordinary man does not know anything about this matter and I ask to be pardoned for talking like this on such a matter. I must admit I have no technical knowledge of the fishery regulations. Now this much I do understand and that is that the minister who introduced tehm said that he introduced them on behalf of the fishermen of the whole country. I am fairly concerned with the interests of the fishermen and very much more so is the hon. minister. But he is not going to protect the interests of the fishermen here this afternoon if this goes through as it is. I have read the bill very carefully and find that certain section (4) and it is upon this very section that I have to make a statement and it is the only one about which I intend to say anything. It particularly affects the fishermen of my district and if you take upon yourselves the passing of this bill you take upon yourselves the responsibility for it. Now with regard to this section four and it reads as follows (reads it). Now I presume that you will insert a exception there and I think it should be. This matter touches the district I represent. I have repeatedly both on the platform and in the press and have already said in this house and I now again call your attention to the fact that we on the west coast do business different in manner from those on the east coast. We have disassociated ourselves with the way in which they do business here. Now in my district many a man procures a catch of anything up to one hundred quintals of fish and exports it in his own name. He exports in any quantity from twenty-five quintals to one hundred. Under the act each man who exports fish without a license is liable to a fine of fifty dollars. The people there do not sell to the exporter here. They will sell the fish and have it consigned to Halifax either to Farquhar, Smith or Burke, or some one else. Now surely it is not the intention of the government to penalize the poor fishermen who export quantities of fish up to one hundred quintals. Surely you are not going to charge them fifty dollars for a license. And I suggest to the honorable introducer of the bill to put in a covering note to the section something like this. With special regard to the particular conditions appertaining to the west coast which I am sure the hon. member for Burgeo, Mr. Small, will endorse, I would ask that this be inserted and whether or not it will be a sufficient test whether the hon. minister is altogether working in the interest of the fishermen (Reads exception to section).

I am not in this house to speak for the whole country, I am not concerned with the whole country but this closely touches my district and I take a colloquial view of this measure which I suppose will pass this house and become an act of parliament and if it goes through in its present stage it will mean a hardship upon the people of my district and it is my duty to point out this hardship and suggest a remedy. With regard to the other parts of the bill which will become an act of parliament in short I am not competent to voice an opinion. I have had no experience and I would want some practical experience to give an opinion on this matter. I have never been afraid to take a stand for the people I represent and will not be afraid to do so now and if the cover I suggested is inserted I will give my support to the measure.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Well I am prepared to accede to the demand of the honorable member ofr St. George's, Mr. MacDonnell, that the section four shall have an exception that this fifty dollars for license shall not be collected from the fishermen who export fish up to one hundred quintals. But the ten cents per quintal will be collected from them.

MR. MacDONNELL:—As this is done I give my support to the bill (fish regulations).

MR. SCAMMELL:—I would like to ask the hon. member for St. George's if he is referring to both classes of fish, the dry fish and the slop.

MR. MacDONNELL:—I am referring primarily to the dried fish. The other kind of fish does not come under the notice of the exporters of my district.

MR. WALSH:—While I am not able to display any particular experience in the export of codfish I represent one of the largest fishing sections in the country and it is my duty to take part in this discussion before the chair, and I want to announce to the chair my intention to support every part of the regulations and I do so because I am absolutely convinced that the interests of the fishermen can be best served by the passing of those measures.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—Mr. Chairman I just want to say a few words on this bill. About twenty men were at the board of trade meeting to-day. In view of the fact that there are about seventy exporters in the country I want to ask if in your opinion twenty men are a fair representation of seventy? How about the outports? There are a few men here in St. John's who appear to have an idea that they are running the whole show. But the time has come when St. John's must recognize the fact that she must work in co-operation with the outports and must consider the outports in any measure that affects the entire trade of the country. The resolutions sent in by the board of trade or rather the twenty members who met to-day says something of three days notice being given to the trade when this matter is to be discussed. What can most of the outport exporters do with getting to St. John's in three days. That was calculating without the outport men but the time has come when St. John's must recognize the outport men. The sooner this is done the better will it be for all concerned.

With reference to the bill itself and the resolutions they have been very ably handled and debated by members of both sides of the house. In my opinion the hon. Mr. Coaker has more at stake than any other man in the country. He realizes all that he has at stake and I am sure that he is doing what he believes is for the best interest of the country. There is a big difference of opinion between Hon. Mr. Coaker and Sir John Crosbie. Each is entitled to his opinion, and I see no reason why any member of this house should be governed by either. Every man should be governed by his own honest opinion, especially on this matter that effects the entire country. Personally I am in full accord with the objects of this bill and have much pleasure in giving it my heartiest support. In conclusion I would ask for a closer co-operation between the St. John's and outport business men.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Chairman, there is one feature of the debate on the matter now before the chair which to my mind does not seem to be a desirable one. I refer now to the tendency displayed by some hon. gentlemen to draw a line beteween the merchant and the fisherman, and in my opinion, if we want to give proper consideration to the merits or demerits of the question under consideration we must at the very beginning free our minds from any such bias as has been so freely indicated in this discussion. There is one thing, and only one to be taken into account in our efforts to arrive at a satisfactory settlement of this matter and that is the effect that this measure will have upon Newfoundland as a whole. It must be remembered that we are depending for the development of our fishing industry as much on the exporters as on the fishermen, while at the same time the exporter is as helpless without the fisherman as the fisherman is without the exporter, and for that reason I think that we ought discuss this bill without prejudice, bias or heat.

I fully endorse what my hon. friend, the member for Burin, Mr. Foote, has said of his extensive knowledge of fishery matters, for only a few days ago I had occasion to visit the law office of the Hon. Minister of Justice, and I saw there a picture of Mr. Foote, properly attired in the regulation fishing garb, making a strenuous attempt to land a twenty-pound salmon, and surely no other evidence is needed of his exceptional qualifications as an authority on questions pertaining to the fishery.

With reference to these resolutions, I endorse the suggestions made by the hon. leader of the opposition, that they be submitted to the consideration of a select committee of a number of hon.

gentlemen of both houses to see if by that means we cannot adopt some conciliatory course that will meet the views of all concerned. There are many things in the resolutions that I object to and in my opinion too much cannot be said in condemnation of the principle of restraint of trade and government interference which this measure involves. Such restraint and such interference tend in no way to the advantage of the interests of the people and to prove this I have only to draw your attention to the occasion two or three years ago when the first concerted attempt was made to keep prices down by govermental interference. The very moment the food control board put its regulations into force prices began to soar and I think that in every case where the government interferes in this way the same thing happens. After all the exporters have taken a very sane view of this matter. They say in effect that we are entitled to market the articles of commerce for which we have paid, as we see fit. For instance, take the attempt a few months ago to control prices in the European markets. I know from actual experience that men in the trade of this colony suffered because of these regeulations by the loss of thousands of dollars and all because they were not permitted to do their business in their own way.

As to the constitution of the board, I agree with previous speakers on the point that there should be a larger representation of the trade, and another thing, I should like to draw the attention of hon. gentlemen to is this: With all due respect to the gentlemen sitting on that board, they will become possessed of a knowledge of the affairs of those who have, in their dealings with the board, to give away what may be regarded as business secrets. I do not say for a moment that these gentlemen would take advantage of this knowledge but nevertheless, I think it is unfair that exporters should be expected to give it, and so far as the head ex-officio of that body is concerned it seems to me that he is doing something which he should not do when he sits on that board while he himself directs the affairs of one of the largest exporting concerns in the country. All the information with regard to the transactions of his competitors comes in to his department and he has the benefit of it all and in effect it means simply this. I might have spent 20 or 30 years in working up a trade and by my own brain and energy acquired a knowledge of the markets or even found new markets which other men, not so fortunate, not so capable, not so energetic as I, have not attained, and I must come in and give all the information thus gained to my competitors in the trade. In other words it places the captain of industry on the same level with the inexperienced beginner.

This kind of thing can have but one result, the curtailment of personal initiative, the hampering of trade and commerce and the killing of competition because the same thing applies in the giving of information as to the quantity of fish an exporter has on hand as to the giving away of trade secrets of any other kind. For example, I might know from various sources or perhaps through agents whom I have employed for the purpose, that some particular market requires a considerable lot of a certain quality of fish. Acting upon this information I purchase largely of this quality but under this measure I must give information to the board as to the stocks I am holding.

Now one does need to have that wide experience in fishery matters possessed by the hon. member for Burin to know that if the exporters who are members of the board see that I have twenty or thirty thousand quintals of Brazil fish in my store it is natural to suppose that they will follow my example in buying this quality, nor is it impossible to imagine them allowing the personal element to intervene by curtailing my shipments to that market in order that they themselves might take advantage of the demand indicated by my holdings. It is all very well for the hon. minister to talk of controlling markets but his arguments in this regard are by no means convincing. The premises are wrong and therefore the conclusion must be wrong. If we had a monopoly on the markets into which we are sending our fish, if we had no competitors there we might induce these buyers to agree to our terms by saying to them, If you do not pay us the price we ask, you cannot get our fish. But our position is an entirely different one. We are going into open markets where we have as competitors such countries as Norway, Iceland, France and Japan, and therefore what chance have we to obtain the prices we want except by having a good article placed in a good fashion and so retaining the high opinion of the market that wants a good article.

Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned for recess at 6.30, I was numerating certain objections to the bill before the house, and briefly they are, first of all, on principle, I fear any attempt to curtail trade, second, I do not like the idea of giving control of the principal industry into the hands of a few men; thirdly, I do not like the unconstitutional procedure of allowing taxes to be collected and distributed without legislative authority, and fourthly, I don't think the regulations ought to be entered upon at all, without the cooperation of the exporters of the country. I know that it is not the intention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to aleniate the sympathies of the exporting classes of the country, that it is not his intention to do anything injurious to them, but I think that some effort should be made to meet the requirements of both classes, the fishermen and the exporters upon whom the fisheries depend for their success.

Now I address myself to these resolutions in as unbiased a spirit as I am capable of. They are worthy of our best consideration, and we should not allow ourselves to have any political ideas or views upon them. We should not look at them in the light of political expediency, an dthrefore I wish to look at them from the broadest possible viewpoint. When my hon. friend stated that he thought the minister of marine and fisheries was sincere, I endorsed that statement. I do so now. It is three or four years since I came into contact with him, and the impression I gained of him was that his outstanding characteristics were sincerity of purpose and the honest desire to better conditions for the men he represents in the Fishermen's Protective Union. I believe that he has their interests at heart, and that he has an honest desire to do the proper thing with regard to these resolutions. I admire him for that, but at the same time he should not forget the right of the exporting classes. As I said before, the country would be as helpless without the exporters as without the fishermen and therefore the interests of both parties should be looked after. I think that some compromise should be effected to meet the wishes of both classes that would tend to improve conditions. I suggest that he meet the exporters half way.

As some of the older members of the house will remember, in my early days I was apt to be loquacious, and more or less commentative, but I have learned the benefit to be derived from a conciliatory viewpoint. We are here as representatives of the people, to look after the interests of the country, and anything we do should have that object in view. Therefore I suggest that if the minister of marine and fisheries thinks it desirable to have a board with power to make regulations, then let him give the exporters a fair representation on that board, and make no such regulations without first conferring with the exporters of the country. I suggest these facts to the hon. the minister of marine and fisheries, and ask that he give them consideraiton. You must have men on that board who are familiar with the work which that board will have to do.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES:—You could not take an ordinary man and put him in the position of minister of marine and fisheries. Only an exporter, one with practical knowledge, who was engaged in and knew something of the business, should be in charge, otherwisc all our work will be in vain. As an exporter of fish, I gleaned considerable knowledge within the past two cr three years as to the requirements of the different markets. I have gone through the different markets and I know the business in connection with the exportation of fish pretty thorcughly. It has been suggested that someone on the advisory board may get information from time to time and use it at the expense of someone else. Well the position is this: We have a minister of finance and customs who is in charge of the business profits tax and income tax. There is no other official in the executive council, not even the prime minister, who knows the confidential business of that department. Similarly, the business of the Fishery Regulations will go through the hands of the minister of marine and fisheries, and if someone did use private information deliberately, we would find a way to deal with him no doubt. But I cannot see how this business is going to be injurious to exporters on the board and all with an equal knowledge of circumstances in connection with the carrying out of the regulations. I cannot see, how the regulations could be productive of much good unless in the hands of a minister who is an exporter, and if he is bad enough to use information, we will soon show his hand. If we had six representatives on the board beside the minister, not one of them being under the thumb of the minister, as some people imagine, how can harm come to the trade. If I put agents of the Union Trading Company on the board, you would have some justification for complaint, but where you have a number of men, the largest exporters of fish, on the board, who will see that everything done is fair to the trade, then all reasonable ground for objection are removed. I must say this for the advisory board, that there has not been a single instance in any shape or form in which one man has used confidential knowledge for his own benefit. Absolutely nothing has come to my knowledge thus far.

My hon. friend, Mr. Fox, has stated that it is unconstitutional for the department to collect moneys under the regulations. If he will look closely into the act, he will find that under Section (6) moneys collected by the minister of marine and fisheries are to be handed over to the treasury of the Colony. We collect the fees as we collect the tax on Scotch herring and hand them over to the treasury department, and, furthermore, all moneys will be paid out by cheque. We do not want to have, say, a hundred thousand dollars paid into the fisheries department and then spent as we would wish ourselves, accounting to none, but rather we are making provision to have it passed over to the treasury. A suggestion had been made in the shape of an amendment regarding the holding of conferences with the exporters. I accept the suggestion and I am quite willing to have a conference of all exporters convened in St. John's at the beginning of the season so that we could have plenty of time to thrash out the regulations, not that I hope to do as they might decide, but for consultative purposes. The entire board could be present and we would have an opportunity of listening to the various speakers and note suggestions and objections made concerning the regulations from time to time, with a view to the bettering of the regulations. As I said before, we would not be bound by what the conference would decide.

I have also got a clause in this bill for the fixing of price and terms of sale. This will have the effect of doing away with the shipping of fish on consignment, which I believe is a very necessary step. This is a matter that could be discussed at a conference of exporters. I think it would be necessary to give two or three weeks' notice to outport merchants when convening a meeting in order to give them time to get there. I do not think that any big number of conferences held during the year would be found workable, because after holding a couple people would be inclined to get tired and disinterested, but we could have one or two general conferences annually which would be well attended. You must have confidence in your board. The minister is here to represent that board and to put these regulations on trial in this house. If we adopt a regulation, that regulation will only be adopted by the government, when the government are clear about the necessity for such. This is the first precaution. The next precaution is that there will be a subcommittee of exporters appointed by, I hope, an association of exporters ready to give us advice with these regulations.

I believe that before long the fish exporters themselves will become an association. The association can select a committee of say half a dozen men who will always be avilable to advise us and we can discuss matters regarding the markets at a meeting which could be convened within twenty-four hours. We intend to take the trade into our confidence.

I must certainly express my appreciation of the manner in which the opposition have discussed this matter. I am especially thankful to the hon. leader of the opposition for the way he has dealt with this subject. His remarks were very fair, very instructive and very helpful. It was probably too much to expect him to stand up here and endorse these resolutions in every respect. I am sure that the house has seen that he is a big enough and broad enough man to deal with this matter this evening as he has. On behalf of this side of the house I must offer him my congratulations. I am sure that the regulations will eventually work out successfully. I shall try to meet the wishes of the house in these resolutions, and my only regret is that I cannot consent to have this matter submitted to a select committee for the reason that we have already gone as far as it is possible to go to give the exporters a fair and reasonable participation in the making of these regulations. We have made our committee seven men instead of five. We have insisted that all members of the board should be exporters of fish. On the other hand you must expect that the fisheries department in future will be presided over by the most capable and experienced men in the government. The day for small men occupying the position of head of the fisheries department has passed. In future the very best men must be selected for that position, therefore this in itself will be a safeguard with regard to the carrying out of the fishery regulations and control. If we have a select committee what can come out of it? We will not be able to arrive at any better solution than we have. We cannot do any better. We have in the bill given all concerned enough power and means of finding out information as to what we are doing.

Then on the other hand every member is an exporter, and the interest of every member of the board is the same and they are doing this work of regulating the export of fish, it is true, for the benefit of themselves, and that being so it will surely be for the benefit of all the exporters. And they will not be able to take advantage of these regulations if the plans which I have inaugurated are put into operation. On several occasions I have stood for outright sales. But the whole of our efforts will be killed if the consignment system is still continued. Under the regulations, all fish shipped to Oporto, Spain, or Italy should be on an outright sale basis and every exporter will therefore be on equal footing. There may be advantages if the fish is sold on consignment. Then the business man can utilise the tricks of the trade and his personal influence over some people and somewhat help himself. But if the price of the fish is fixed at 80|— and the terms are outright sales and cash against documents, every exporter will have the same advantage.

Every exporter will have the same advantages, but each will have to look for orders for fish and have his private agents abroad seeking business. We are not going to do anything as to the filling of orders in our department. We will simply fix the conditions under which the fish is to be exported. Every exporter who has been accustomed to sell fish for instance in Oporto, will have an agent there to secure orders for his fish. Mr. Duder and Mr. Monroe represent some big firms buy fish in Brazil. These firms are going to buy the fish from the people with whom they have been dealing in the past. The firms who have bought fish from Baird, Barr or Monroe in the past and have found their fish of good quality, will still give them the continuance of their orders. There is no advantage by being on the board in this respect. The terms of export are all alike. Every exporter will be on equal footing and no one will have an advantage over another. The only thing left to be done by the private individual is to get the orde for his fish. For Oporto the sales will be outright and not on consignment and the agent there will go round among the twenty fish dealers and ask them for cargo orders. He will ask, "Will you give me an order for a cargo from the Trading Company?" "Will you give me an order for Bowring Brothers, for Baird, or for whom he may represent?" The price of the fish will be all the same. The fish will be standardized, say eightty shillings for No. 1 seventy-five for No. 2 and seventy for No. 3 When a man gives an order for one thousand of each quality he knows what he is going to get. All will have the same advantage as the members of the board. The board deliberated on these regulations night after night and attended meetings night after night, and our thanks is criticism and misunderstanding.

There is no pay for anyone on the board. Those on the board will have enormous responsibility and lots of work, but no pay. I see no way to have it more perfect. Give it one year's trial. If then any imperfections are discovered, the regulations can be easily altered. If the exporters will co-operate for one year, we shall see what good will result. These regulations may not have to be put into force unless we get a fairly good catch of fish. We shall. I hope, have no sales but outright sales and the buyer shall give a guarantee of payment in London, or as the case may be.

The exporters will make fair profits from the operation of the regulations, but they are afraid they will not make profits big enough in the early part of the season as they have been doing in the past. The buyers are afraid that the prices will be bigger than they are prepared to pay, but that cannot be except in the case of clean markets. These regulations are going to prove a revolution in fish buying. The fishermen will figure according to the regulations and will be able to tell what they are going to get for their fish. They will be able to sit down and calculate what they will secure for their products. My interests are chiefly the interests of the producers in Newfoundland. But considering the exporters generally, I sincerely believe they will profit by the regulations. I want all who export fish to do so on a sound business basis and I believe they will make money and they will not have any claims. They will not want big prices to make up for their losses because they will not have any claims under these regulations. The fish will be standardized. There will not be any losses because of their fish being rotten, inferior or uncured. I feel sure that all cargoes of fish shipped under the regulations will be good. There will be a tremendous revolution under these regulations in buying fish. But they are not going to injure Newfoundland in any conceivable way. I would not welcome these changes if I saw they were going to be detrimental to the trade. But if the trade backs them it will be in the interests of all concerned and I firmly believe that good will accrue to the trade. As pointed cut by the hon. member for Placentia, Mr. Sullivan, that if I should make a mistake here, it will fall severly on myself, and if the regulations prove detrimental to the country, I will be the nearest sufferer.

MR. FOX:—I am sure that we have all attempted to be very fair. We recognize that he is willing to be fair, but there is one part that struck us with some force. He said it is I who takes the risk. Now he is only one of the party that takes the risk. The whole country takes very great chances. In 1920 can Newfoundland afford to take a chance? The recognition is general that the same prosperous condition cannot follow. We ought to be particularly careful. I say with all due respect to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that it is Newfoundland's risk. He trade will be strangled if the regulations are ruinous. I do not think that the regulations have produced such success as our hon. friend claims for them. Why should they be so unpopular with the trade of the colony, with the exporters, if they were so successful? I recognize the great personal ability of my hon. friend, and I tell him now as I told him the other night that when the names of most of us are forgotten his name will be fresh in the minds of the fishermen of the country. I say to the members of the F.P.U. who are here you may have presidents but only one W. F. Coaker. But, sir, because of the very fact that you have that power I ask you not to abuse it. Take the veil from your eyes. There are men on Water Street who will have their all at stake if these regulations are put in force. I do not believe that you will do this. I believe you have too much respect for the country, and for the interests of the country. I have appealed to you, and appeal to you again, to do nothing in haste. We cannot afford to risk the interests of the people of Newfoundland. If we want to do our duty we must meet the two classes halfway. Newfoundland cannot afford to take a chance. We can say that the resolutions will be for only one year, but we don't know what will happen in one year. One week may be positively ruinous to Newfoundland.

It would be altogether different if we had a monopoly of the markets of the world. But I want to say that Japan is a serious competitor of Newfoundland in the Mediterranean. If the markets finds that she can get a better product from Japan she will soon take it. We find that the hon. minister says that shipment on consignment will cease. Does he mean that he can say to the trade of this country that Newfoundland shipments on consignment must cease because I believe that shipment on consignment is wrong, is injurious? Is not this a free country where every citizen has the right to conduct his own business? Continuing along the lines that we have been going is the only sound principle under which Newfoundland can progress. This is a free country, and I do not think that the hon. gentleman wants to see the day dawn when this country will be autocratic. Why should the hon. minister be able to say to the exporters of codfish: "You may be able to make $5.00 per quintal profit, but I say that you cannot make more than $1.00." They do it on sound business principle. They have to make the best possible turnover so as to offset possible loss in the future. Under no condition should he be able to say you shall make a profit of so much and no more. I am going to see that you do not make above a certain profit. I am going to bind you to certain definite regulations. There is no possible play for personal initiative or business ability. There is too great a chance. I am not willing to play with the financial standing of Newfoundland.

The Board of Trade represents the exporting class of Newfoundland. Two men of the trade are not enough on the fishery board. I suggest that the resolutions do not come into force until a conference with the trade. A number of men on Water Street are nervous over their business. Why not let this matter stand over until a conference has been arranged with the trade, so that a happy medium may be reached? I think the hon. gentleman will see that I am not taking an antagonistic attitude. I ask him not to take too much on his shoulders. Let the exporters of the country help him in this undertaking.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to say very much with regard to this matter. As a matter of fact I had not intended speaking at all, but when I heard the hon. minister placed in the class of John the Baptist and described as a voice crying for help in the wilderness, I thought it time somebody came to his assistance.

So far as this measure is concerned, I want to say that whatever the results of it may be, whether good or ill, they will be his. To those of us who are not exporters or who have not that vast knowledge of fishery matters which my hon. friend has shown himself to be possessed of, the only result of the debate on the subject has been to leave us in exactly the same position that we were in before. We have heard it stated that the regulations which were put into effect last winter were detrimental to the country and we have o nthe contrary heard the hon. minister state that not alone were the regulations not detrimental but that great losses would have ensued had they not been put into force.

Of course, the basic principle that should be adopted for the determination of this whole question, is what will prove to be the greatest good for the greatest number. I support the theme of the first resolutions of the Board of Trade, those in which they desired no regulations at all, because I do think that the business of exporting can best be carried on without government control or interference of any kind, and although some of us can only view the principle involved from the academic standpoint, more or less, it does not seem that that principle is in line with the ideas of the ordinary individual; but when we find ourselves confronted with the alternative of amending this bill to hand over complete control of the regulations to the exporters as we are asked to do by these later resolutions, then I think we should chose the lesser evil by adopting the bill as it is now amended, because no government can for a moment consider the principle of placing a law on the statute book and then give control of its administration into the hands of private individuals. If we are to have regulations, and personally I do not see the necessity for them, it is better that we let these regulations go through as they are now amended and make the board more largely representative of the interests concerned. I do think that if the hon. minister has taken his chance and staked his all on putting this measure into effect and if he asks us to stake the interests we represent, the best we can do under the circumstances is to pass it as it is now. I think that even the exporters themselves would see that it would be an abrogation of the rights of this house if we were to fall in with the suggestion made in the latest resolutions passed by the Board of Trade. In other words it would but be legalizing an attempt to kill trade competition. It would be all right if these regulations were not law, for the trade to have the privileges for which they now ask, but if we are to put them on the statute book, it would be a vicious principle for us to have people outside this house to control and mould the law to their own will and pleasure.

The one important point is that whatever our avocations, we are all dependent upon the fisheries, and if the hon. minister is prepared to stake the future of the fisheries of this colony upon his judgment in this matter we can only hope that the results will be what he looks for. It may be that those who now think there should be no regulations are wrong. Time alone will tell, and it will be only in the years to come that we will be able to say whether we were right or wrong. I do say that I pray, not for hte sake of the hon. minister nor for the sake of his followers, but on behalf of the country, that his judgment is right. He has stkaed his judgment and his interests on the result of the step he is about to take. I have no doubt of his bona fides and I am satisfied that he is perfectly honest in what he is doing and I only hope that his policy will have the successful outcome which he predicts for it. I have but to repeat that I am opposed to regulations at all, but there are to be regulations than I would prefer the board to be constituted as in the amended bill than as requested by the last resolution of the exporters.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Chairman, I feel that the house should be satisfied with the able manner in which this measure has been debated and I think my hon. friends on both sides of the house may congratulate themselves on the thoroughness with which the matter has been considered. The hon. minister in charge of the resolutions has made reference to the excellent way in which the leader of the opposition dealt with the subject under discussion and I am sure sir that compliment is well merited. We on this side appreciate his remarks very highly and we reciprocate the compliment to him.

It is not my intention or my purpose to further labor the question as it has already been exhaustively dealt with by my colleagues on this side of the house, but before giving my vote I should like to refer to the impressions left on my mind by previous considerations of this important matter. Last fall when the fishery regulations were put into effect the whole country was puzzled as to what they meant for the time being and when their true inwardness was borne on the minds of the people, dread of the possible results became broadcast, particularly in St. John's. It has been argued that the regulations have had a detrimental effect on the marketing of our fish. This contention is strengthened by the fact that since then fish has fallen price and a general depression has overtaken the markets. On the other hand the contention is that if there was no regulations a very much more serious condition would have occurred. Our convictions in this respect will be governed by the facts as we view them.

Conditions are worse than they have been in the past twenty years, and we should not do anything that might possibly make them worse still. We have the working classes to-day in a mind that is not at all pleasant to contemplate. Everything is at the highest price. The necessaries of life are almost beyond the reach of the ordinary workers, employment is not too plentiful, and the men find it almost impossible to sustain themselves and their families, and if work is going to be still further curtailed through any legislation in regard to the fish regulations, then we should give grave consideration to those regulations which might have such far-reaching effects on the laboring classes. Should not matters turn out as the wise head of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries hopes, and thinks that they will, it will be too late for us to say, "Well, I had no idea such a thing would happen." We cannot take the chance, and, for one, am not prepared to take the chance of such a condition of things coming to pass, without registering my vote against the bill we are now considering. As I said before, I believe the minister is sincere; I believe that he has given this matter serious study, but he is only human, and might fall. Please God he will not fail in this undertaking. If he does not, then all credit to him; but if he does, be the penalty on his own shoulders. I therefore desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that when this bill comes before the house, I will oppose it for the reasons that I have just given, and in doing so, I feel that I am merely fulfilling the obligations I owe to the people who sent me here, because I think this is a chance that we cannot afford to take at the present time.

I think that the man who is strong enough to take upon his shoulders such responsibility will deserve the praise of the whole country if he succeeds. We hope he will succeed and achieve everything he is working for, and if he does, I am sure everybody will give him due credit for what he has done. But the trouble is, can we afford to take a chance? It has been pointed out, that if the minister fails in this undertaking, that it will spell disaster for him in the union that he represents. It is then a very serious matter, and if things turn out wrong, then on his own head be the responsibility. As a representative of St. John's, whose duty it is to voice the sentiments of the people of St. John's, and in view of the conditions that existed last year, that were pointed out by Sir John Crosbie, that there was a loss to this town, in labor, of something in the vicinity of one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, through the fish regulations, and I rely on Sir John Crosbie's statement. If that is so; if the merchants cannot see their way clear to supply for the fishery, and we have a very small catch of fish this year or next, and if the necessary labor is not forthcoming, well then, sir, I see nothing but ruin and disaster for the laborers of St. John's. If the merchants won't supply, the laborers suffer, and when they suffer the whole community suffers. Are we going to antagonize the men who have the money and capital to carry on the industries of the country? I know that if they stop that others will be found to take their places; but that will take some time, at least two or three years. If these regulations are going to have any such effect on the laboring classes of Newfoundland, then sir I would be neglecting my duty if I did not protest against such a step being taken that would bring about such results. As I have stated, then I want to go on record that it was not done with my approval and support.

Certain remarks fell from the lips of an honorable member on the other side of the house that started me thinking. We have arrived at a crucial period, a period perhaps never approached before in the history of the colony. The whole trade of St. John's practically considered as representative of the country has resolved that this condition of things is dangerous under the present circumstances. The people who passed these resolutions are representatives of a very large portion of the trade of the country, and unless they are irytng to put something over on this legislative there may be some doubt as to the wisdom of proceeding further with these resolutions. I have no brief or reason to speak on their behalf, but knowing the great influence they have in the commercial life of the country the ersults foreshadowed may have serious and far-reaching effect. I certainly think they had gone too far when they asked the legislature to be allowed to nominate the whole board. They want to be one dominating factor and this would be out of the question, seeing that there are other interests and factors in the country to be considered in this matter. I know that the regulations are going to pass and all the members of the government and some of the members of the opposition are going to vote for them in part if not in their entirety, and on their heads be the responsibility. I hope and pray, as our friend Mr. Higgins has said, that they will be alright and that they will turn out as desired, but I cannot help but feel that this will not be so and that disaster may come upon us and we may rue the day that we passed such regulations in this house.

I am perfectly satisfied that the hon. minister is sincere in his contentions that the resolutions before the chair will be of great benefit to the whole country. I congratulate him for an address that he delivered here before this assembly some time ago in which he told of the different fish markets that he had visited in Europe recently. This was probably the first time that the people of this country were enlightened as to how our cargoes of fish were handled and how our cargoes have been sold. The house listened with rapt attention to the speech of the hon. minister and it was certainly appreciated. And I say that it was unfortunate that former ministers of this department did not have the same opportunity. The resolutions that are now in operation, from hearing the minister speak one would feel that they will be of enormous advantage to the country. This may be or may not be so. The situation that we are faced with since the exporters meeting this morning has taken a different aspect altogether. In consequence the minister has now made the board more elastic. Having seen the danger that might ensue from the establishment of such a board as first intended, he has gone out of his way to give an opportunity to the Board of Trade to nominate certain members on that board. The great danger we have to realize is the giving of authority to a board the component parts of which we know not nor do we know that it would be representative of men from the different districts in the country.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— Mr. Chairman, some of the remarks of the last speaker have brought me to my feet. I had not intended to take part in the debate, but as the hon. member for St. John's West, Mr. Bennett, has reiterated some of the remarks that we made by previous speakers, I think that some one ought to get up and refute them. Now, through the speech of the member for St. John's West, the theme was, that a half dozen men should not control the individual interests of all the others. This was first brought up by Sir John Crosbie. He said that it is not British fair play, that a certain number should not dictate to the whole trade what they are to do with regard to prices for their own fish. This was endorsed by Mr. Bennett. He then went on to say that the law of supply and demand controls the prices which we are to expect for our fish. I quite agree with him that that law has a great deal to do with it, but you can break that law, and this bill is so framed that the law of supply and demand shall not be broken. The exporters themselves have realised that the law of supply and demand controls prices of fish, but they have tried to regulate the supply and demand. Now I will try to explain what I have learned from the short study of the law of supply and demand. The law of supply and demand means that when the supply is small, and the demand is great, then you get a good price. If the demand is great, you will get a good price, and the smaller your supply, the greater the price you will get; but on the contrary, if the supply is great and the demand is small, you cannot get a good price. When the supply is known and the demand is also known, then you have a perfect market. A perfect market exists when a man knows how much he has got to fill the supply. He may never exactly know what the demand is, but he will try to find out, and he has to try to arrange the supply to suit that demand, and when you have on one hand a man who knows his supply exactly, and on the other a man who knows how much is required, then you have a perfect market, and then the law of supply and demand is at its best.

But can it be said that the law of supply and demand is ever used to the best advantage in Newfoundland? No. but we have to try to regulate the law of supply and demand, that we will get the best price for what we can supply.

We have to regulate the supply. If there is a certain demand for fish at a certain time in a certain market, and suddenly the whole or half the catch of Newfoundland is dumped into that market, what becomes of the law of supply and demand? People who, without any correct knowledge of the demand, suddenly flood a market with a whole load of fish, immediately violates all the rules of supply and demand. Now in these resolutions is a sound and honest attempt to try and carry out the rules of supply and demand, which has been so insistently referred to by the members who have spoken before me. Recognizing that principle, recognizing that the laws of supply and demand regulate the price of any article, and recognizing that the merchants themselves have in the past done their very best to regulate the supply, the question before us and the country now to decide is, has our product realised its full value, and has the fishermen got his full value for his catch. These are the main points that weigh with me in voting for these resolutions. In the first place the merchants themselves have realised from time to time that it was necessary to regulate the supply and necessary to see that they get full value for their products and for that purpose they have combined.

In 1901 an Exporters' Association was formed, of which I was secretary. That association composed all the merchants of Water Street, and one of the first jobs I got as a lawyer was to draw a contract by which we could make the fish buyers in Brazil pay cash against documents. I know that this association did not last. Composed in that association were firms such as Bowring Brothers, Goodridge & Sons, Job Brothers, Baine Johnstone & Co., Tessier's and the late Robert Thorburn, and in fact all the big fish buyers on Water Street. Each one of them deposited with me $1,000 that they would stick to the prices that they named for their fish.

The first one to break that agreement was Bowring Brothers, who were fined $1,000. The matter went before the Supreme Court with the result that they had to pay. When I was secretary of that association the merchants tried every means in their power to control the price of fish to Brazil. I think that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries with the help of the advisory board will put the Brazil market price on the firm and sound basis that those gentlemen were trying to put it on nineteen years ago. The nafter that association was broken up, they formed another one, and realising that not only was it necessary that they should have protection as regards the price of fish, but it was necessary that their affairs should be controlled as well in the agreement that they had drafted. Not later than the 16th of January, 1919, they came to agreement and they formed rules and regulations themselves. In order to show you that their claim now that their private interests should not be controlled by a half dozen people, I shall read you a copy of the agreement that was made by them a little over a year ago in which not alone were their private interests controlled, but that their whole individuality was controlled as well; and in binding themselves to carry that agreement into effect they realized the very thing that the government has realised. At that time Sir John Crosbie was asked to form a committee to take charge of the matter in the interests of the trade. (Reads agreement.)

The resolutions now before the chair only provide machinery for the forming of regulations, which must be made in the interest of the trade and the merchants themselves. Still it has been argued here that ti is vicious to allow seven men, including merchants and exporters, to get together and control all the interests, private and individual, of all the other merchants in the light of the following article. (Quotes Section 1 of agreement).

Then we are told that we should not fix the price and that men should go out into the market themselves and get the best price they can for their fish. Here is another part of their agreement. (Quotes Section 6 of agreement).

Is not that a complete answer in their own words to any argument that it is inadvisable to control or fixe the price of fish. Then again listen to the next article. (Quotes Section 8 of agreement).

They wound up the agreement with the last clause, which put into the hands of their committee the sole control for the regulation of supply so that they might get the best price for their article. Now, in the light of an agreement of that sort, can it be said that we are trying to do anything extraordinary. I das down at a meeting of the Board of Trade in January or February last and I heard Sir John Crosbie say there that he thought that at certain times rules and regulations were necessary, but that it was hard from keeping those who signed from kicking over the traces. Realising now that the government has made it impossible for them to kick over the traces, as a result I know that a half a million dollars has been saved to the west coast fish exporters by the innovation of the new regulations. I want to point out that the rules and regulations for the sale of codfish and for the disposal of codfish are not unknown in Newfoundland and are not unknown on Water Street, but it must be remembered, sir, that this bill is purely and simply an experiment. I agree with what the hon. leader of the opposition said this afternoon, that there are big powers being put into the hands of the Governor-in-Council, but I can assure him that the members of the Executive Council, in their deliberations, will be guided by everything that common sense will dictate and by everything that will be for the best advantage of the community, because as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries said himself, the regulations are going to be tried out here, and if they do not work out satisfactory we shall hear about it. Then again all are licensed exporters of fish on the board.

So far as the fish exporters board is concerned, I should imagine that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is going to have it difficult to get that board to work at all.

Because though it is not the main reason I mentioned first it is going to be a labor of love for which they are not going to be paid for and they will undoubtedly come in for wholesale criticism and perhaps abuse. The late advisory board did excellent work and I think they deserved generally and from the community as a whole an expression of sincere thanks for the very useful work they put in.

And sir, I support these resolutions and I want to say this, that when I was canvassing in the district of Fortune Bay I told my constituents there that while we would do our best to check profiteering we would not likely prove very sucecssful because while it may be possible to stop men from overcharging here in Newfoundland it is absolutely impossible to cut down the prices of articles manufactured in other countries. The people here have to charge enough to pay them for their trouble and therefore I whole-heartedly support these resolutions. If we have to pay tremendous prices for the articles the business sections have imported we must realise the cost of production elsewhere, and every fisherman must realise that under these regulations they are going to get an opportunity to procure a decent price for their products. Their turn has come to prosper. Sir John Crosbie said that the merchants should not respect the regulations in selling fish and that they ought to be able to sell on their own terms, but I say they should not. If he thinks a man does not injure the country by underselling I say he is wrong. I want to say that if a man floods the markets with his cargoes of fish he is only bringing down the prices and it is just the same as putting your hand in the fisherman's pocket and taking his money. It is simply stealing other people's money. By seeking to discharge his products on the markets for a low and unwarranted price he is injuring the trade of the community and should be prevented fro mdoing so. For the reason that these resolutions will, I am sure make it worth a man's while to catch fish, I support them.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Chairman, since I previously spoke on these resolutions, a clause has been inserted which alters the situation very considerably. I believed the hon. minister was sincere in trying to do all he could to make the bill as practical and as workable as possible, and I thought that in antagonizing the trade serious consequences might ensue and that the withdrawal of all power from them might bring about an industrial crisis. This clause alters the whole situation considerably and takes into account the suggestions that have been offered from this side of the house. For that reason sir, I withdraw my objections to the resolutions. Although there are still several clauses that are highly objectionable. But on the shoulders of the government is the resopnsibility.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Chairman, as I said this afternoon, I welcome the principle of the whole measure, although I thought that the suggestion of the leader of the opposition should be considered, and now that it has been adopted it is my intention to give my absolute support to every scetion of the bill. As I have already said, we should not look upon bills of such unusual importance as this from the political standpoint, nor have I ever in the past allowed myself to be swayed by such considerations on matters of this kind. If I am convinced that any measure, no matter who introduces it, is for the benefit of the masses, I shall support it, and I think if the day ever comes when any other consideration is sufficient to sway me, I hope that at least I shall have the courage to resign my seat. What L mean is, that if at any time any hon. member of this house could be induced to vote contrary to the dictates of his conscience for monetary considerations, the time has then come for him to hand in his resignation.

As I have intimated, I am now prepared to give these resolutions my absolute support, and as the hon. member for Burin, Mr. Cheeseman, is prepared to stand or fall by them, so am I, and if any of those whom I have the honor to represent in this house should suffer because of the enforcement of this measure, I am satisfied to take my share of the responsibility which my support of it entails, but I anticipate no such results, as I have the fullest confidence that the interests of each and every individual concerned will be safeguarded, and I think that if this measure is put into proper execution and if properly engineered, it will give the common toiler a better opportunity then he ever had before.

I wis hto reiterate sir, the intention I have already announced and I want to add that I accept the bill in its entirety, and by my vote I am prepared to stand or fall.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak on this matter. I thought at first that I wouldn't speak on the matter at all, but I probably know as much about the fish question as a good many who have already spoken. I always try to tell the truth. I don't think I ever split a lie, and I guess that is about as many fish as Mr. Foote split. After listening to Mr. Coaker's speech on the resolutions I feel that I have learnt a lot about fish, and especially about the export of fish. He has the interests of the country at heart. In replying to the speech from the throne I said I hope Mr. Coaker's visit abroad would bear fruit, and I believe he will do the right thing. When Mr. Fox was speaking the Prime Minister told Mr. Coaker not to answer him back or he would be talking all night. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to assure him that I am not going to talk all night. I am going to support the bill before the house.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that in view of the suggestions made by the hon. members of the opposition, we contemplate inserting the following section after section four, as an amendment:

"A meeting of all exporters of codfish shall be convened by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries during the first week in September in each year to consider and discuss with the Codfish Regulations Board all matters relating to the exportation of codfish for the ensuing season. Such meetings shall be held at St. John's and two weeks' notice shall be given."

We insert this to meet the suggestions of friends of the bill on the other side of the house and it will mean that during the first week of September a meeting, of which two weeks' notice will be given for the benefit of outport exporters, will be held here in the city at which all matters relating to the exportation of fish will be discussed. I believe that the hon. members of the opposition are agreeable to support the resolutions before the house now that this section has been inserted and it will be a pleasure to me and I am sure it will be appreciated by the whole country, that this measure has been passed unanimously.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had passed the resolutions with some amendments and recommended that a bill be introduced to give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled "An Act to regulate the Exportation of Salt Codfish" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to Check Profiteering."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee, reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until Tuesday next, the 25th inst., at three of the clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Fox gave notice of question.

The house then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 25th, 1920.

The house met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Princeton, B.B., asking that a postal and telegraph office be placed at Princeton, near the railway station. They also ask that Summerville be connected by telephone with Southern Bay. This petition is signed by fifty or sixty of the inhabitants, and as I think it is a necessity, I give it my hearty support. I ask that this petition be referred to the department to which it relates, and that the government give it due consideration. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the electors of Summerville have petitioned the government three or four times for telephone connection with Southern Bay, but all to no avail. I hope the petitioners' request now will be aceded to.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, on your behalf, and at your request, I ask leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Carbonear against any modification of the Prohibition Act.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from Stock Cove, and Knight's Cove, asking that these two places be connected with King's Cove by telephone. The petitioners also ask that a canal be cut to a pond near the beach at Stock Cove which would serve for the protection of fishing boats in that locality. I ask that this petition be referred to the department to whic hit relates and that it be given due consideration.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Brigus, George's Town, against any modification of the Prohibition Act. They desire that the regulations be made more stringent. It is signed by sixty or seventy of the inhabitants. I wish also to present a similar one from the inhabitants of Bareneed, Port de Grave. They don't want any modification of the act. They want to see it enforced more stringently.

DR. JONES:—I beg leave to present a series of petitions from the inhabitants of Horse Cove, against any modification of the Prohibition Act.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from about fifty of the fishermen of King's Cove, Fermeuse, asking for a public wharf for that place, and I also wish to present a petition from Witless Bay, signed by two hundred of the inhabitants, asking that a grant be allowed them to repair breakwater.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Island Harbor, in Fogo District, asking for telegraphic or telephone communication with the town of Fogo. The people of Island Harbor are isolated. It is a distance of about nine miles from Fogo, and in order to reach there you have to cross Hare Bay, and as in certain seasons of the year it is almost impossible to cross, the people have to go by a circuitous route. If these people had telephone communication with Fogo it would save a lot of trouble and time and would serve their interests greatly. I ask that this petition be referred to the department to which it relates, and that it be given due consideration.

I also wish to present a petition from Victoria, asking for two hundred dollars to construct a road to Dog Bay. There is just now a foot path, and as it is very marshy and boggy ground it will be difficult to construct a road. I think that the importance of the place justifies this sum, and I have great pleasure in supporting this petition.

MR. ABBOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present a petition from Stark Cove, and Knight's Cove, that these two places be connected with King's Cove by telephone. I ask that this petition be referred to the department to which it relates and that it be given due consideration.

Petitions were presented by Sir J. C. Crosbie from Port de Grave, re prohibition; Sir J. C. Crosbie from Bareneed, re prohibition; Dr. Jones from Gasters, re prohibition; Mr. Abbott from Princeton, re postal service; Sir M. P. Cashin from King's Cove re public wharf; Sir M. P. Cashin from Witless Bay, re breakwater; Mr. Small from Burgeo, re prohibition; Mr. Hibbs, from Inland Harbor, re telephone; Mr. Hibbs from Victoria, re road; Hon. Minister of Justice for Mr. Speaker, from Carbonear, re prohibition; Mr. Abbott from Stock Cove, re telephone.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Montreal Trust Company" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. Fox asked the Hon. the Prime Minister what policy the government has under review in reference to the establishment of a Reformatory or House of Correction for juvenile offenders. It is the intention of the government to establish such an institution. If so, when and where? If not, why not?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— In answer to the question of the hon. member for St. John's East in reference to a reformatory, I would say that the matter of a reformatory is but one, and perhaps a minor item, in the general program of social service welfare which the government has had under consideration for some months. Some years ago when Attorney General, I gave considerable thought to the question of the corelation of legislation in the eastern provinces of Canada and Newfoundland so as to make it possible to have delinquent girls transferred from Newfoundland to some suitable reformatory in Eastern Canada and so save Newfoundland the very great expense incidental to the erection and maintenance of a reformatory for certain classes of female juvenile offenders. The matter does not appear to have received any consideration, however, after I resigned from the Department of Justice, but that program, together with a program in relation to a reformatory for boys has been submitted as two of the items discussed with the government during the past few months by the Social Service Council. A committee of the executive government also had the pleasure of receiving a deputation from a representative body of gentlemen consisting of the Rev. Dr. Jones, the nominee of the Lord Bishop of Newfoundland; Rev. Fr. Renouf, the nominee of His Grace the Archbishop of St. John's, an dthe Rev. D. B. Hemmeon, the nominee of the President of the Methodist Conference of Newfoundland, and these gentlemen laid before the committee of council their lives with respect to certain social service problems which they felt should be dealt with by the government. It included within its scope both matters above referred to, and a number of other problems, covering a juvenile court and special legislation to give the police additional authority in certain matters. In addition to these individual items outlined above, the government has been approached in the matter of child welfare, special nursing and medical facilities in the outports, and sundry other items which, if undertaken, would make a very extensive and important social service program. The whole matter has for some time past been receiving the careful consideration of committee of council, and such steps as the government feels it is practicable to take at this session of the legislature towards the carrying out of that program will be undertaken. In the matter of a reformatory for boys it is not proposed to ask a vote for such a purpose at this session of the legislature.

The government feels that while it is bearing the burden of the large expenditure entailed in connection with the necessary work for the civil re-establishment of returned soldiers and sailors, it is impracticable for it to divert any large expenditures in the particular direction indicated by my honorable friend in this question. I can assure the house, however, that the government is fully alive to the importance of the problems which have been presented to them both by the Social Service Council and the Women's Patriotic Association and the special deputation, the personnel of which I have already indicated, and proposed to devote its energies to the carrying out of this program, having due regard to the local conditions and the imperative need for economy in the public service.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— With reference to Sir M. P. Cashin's question re the royal commission, I make the following statement: From the beginning the two judges who had been requested by His Excellency the Governor to serve on the royal commission pointed out that they ought not to be asked to deal with any question of law. His Excellency the Governor did not, however, understand that they had no wish to find upon the facts, though the judges believed they had endeavored to make this clear to him. No draft was submitted to the judges and it was not suggested that the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Kent were responsible for the delay in issuing this commission except so far as there was a misunderstanding as to their functions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 157 of the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Fire Patrol,'" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the Bill entitled "An Act to amend 'The Income War Tax Act, 1918.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to Check Profiteering."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed th echair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Encouragement of Agriculture,'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the Bill entitled "An Act respecting Certificates of Masters and Mates" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:— Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill, in the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I may say that there are a large number of masters and mates who have been unable to obtain certificates of competency by reason of the war, as will be seen in the preamble. This is to provide that they will be able to get certificates until the end of this year. The board appointed under this act will only be able to remain in existence until the first of January of the coming year. The house will notice that the board will comprise the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Harbor Master and Sir John Crosbie, though it will not mean that Sir John will have to go back to Port de Grave for re-election.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs, the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the issue of Certain Debenture Bonds of the Colony," was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the Bill entitled "An Act to Regulate the Exportation of Salt Codfish," was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill to amend Cap. X of 9 and 10 George V, respecting existing tenancies and the ejectment therefrom.

Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill, entitled "An Act respecting Licenses to Cut Hard-wood."

Hon. the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs gave notice that he would on to-morrow move the house into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions on the subject of the postal and telegraph services.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The house then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, May 26th, 1920.

The house met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs tabled report of the Postmaster General for year ended June 30th, 1919.

MR. SINNOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by the residents of Branch, St. Bride's and Cape Shore to ask the government to build a motor road to connect these places with the railroad at Placentia. Owing to the geographical position of that section of the coast line, extending from Branch to Placentia, these people are isolated, and although paying a large share of the taxes, are without steam or rail communication. As there is no harbor from North Harbor in St. Mary's Bay to Placentia, a steamer cannot call, except in fine weather, and on account of those drawbacks the people are put to very great loss, hardships and inconveniences. I know the section in question very well, having had personal knowledge of it all my life, and I can truthfully say that I don't know of any people neglected to such an extent as those of Branch and Cape Shore. Not because they do not deserve better treatment, because they do. They are a hard-working, honest and industrious, farming and fishing people, making a comfortable living in spite of the way they have been neglected by all governments—from the days of the first responsible government down to the present day. All are equally guilty for the disgraceful neglect of this imporant section of our Dominion.

For want of this road these people are obliged to sell the fruits of their toil, both land and sea, much less than in other parts of the country, and it is this very reason that I am here to-day, not to beg but to demand that this road be built, and that without further delay. Whilst I have the honor to represent the important district of Placentia and St. Mary's, anything of benefit to the people in general, and to the fishermen in particular, shall always have my earnest support. The road in question will not alone serve those living along the shore, but the hundreds of others who make Cape St. Mary's and other points nearby their headquarters during the fishing season.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the fishermen from the Drook to Rushoon can always count on my looking after their interests at all times. Cape St. Mary's is, as you know, one of the greatest fishing grounds in the Dominion. Perhaps there is more revenue paid from those grounds than from any other, and it is not a blot on us to have the greatest asset the Dominion possesses, namely, the fishermen, so treated?

I know it will surprise hon. members of this house to hear that to my personal knowledge last year the ridiculous prices of $8 and $9 were paid on this coast for fish, whereas people in other parts of the Dominion received $12 per qtl. I am very sorry to state that this is a fact, which can be very easily proven, and it is certainly a conditio nof affairs that I am not going to stand for.

Yes sir, the fisherman's lot is a hard one. With profiteering grinding him down on the one hand, and $8 for fish on the other, how is he going to pay his bills and support a family? Just think of such a state of serfdom for a people who in their line of work have no superiors in the world. It is unthinkable that men who are such an asset to the country should be treated so badly.

It is time to cry halt. Give them fair play. Put them on an equal footing with others, and the way to do this is to build the road in question. With a good motor road they can take their fish to Placentia for shipment anywhere, and thus get as much for their products as anyone else. This road will also have another great advantage in the incentive it will give to farming and cattle-raising, and the inducements it will offer to hundreds of families to settle down along the route.

It is generally conceded that Cape Shore is second to none as an agricultural district, and in this section is the real independent fisherman-farmer to be found. In no other part of our island home is cattle-raising carried on to such an extent. I don't know of anywhere else in the Dominion that one can meet with herds of 50 heads being driven to market and this sight is common along Cape Shore. When such is possible under present conditions, what may be expected when this section comes into its own and when it gets roads equal to other parts of the country. The cattle-raising and farming possibilities there are so great and such an asset to the country as would justify the expenditure of ten times the amount necessary to build this road.

The road in question will be about 20 miles in length, passing through the best agricultural lands in the Dominion. Along the proposed route are to be found thousands of acres of land suitable for grazing for immense numbers of cattle and sheep, the value of which to the exchequer is not easily estimated. All this can be done for the cost of about one mile of railway. I cannot understand why it has not been done long ago. It is going to be a paying proposition for the government. The people deserve it and it would be a small recognition of the many who answered the call of king and country from that section. Branch, St. Bride's and Cape Shore generally were well represented in the great world war, where they did their part in keeping the old flag flying, and the least they deserve from us is white treatment.

I would respectfully ask that a competent engineer be sent at once to locate this road, so as it can be begun immediately. It is my intention to see this great public benefit constructed. After all it is their own money. They are drawing it from the waters around Cape St. Mary's. The fishermen are the ones we must stand by. In conclusion I trust:

"That luck may be theirs from spring to fall,
And Cape St. Mary's pay for all."

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, I have very much pleasure in supporting the petition presented by my colleague. This is not the first occasion that this house has been petitioned for a road in that particular section. I do not know whether railway problems have been occupying the attention of the government or not, but, as has been stated, the building of one mile of railroad would be the means of saving an immense lot of money for these people, who would be able to get more for their products when marketing same. I hope that if the government proposes to do any railway extension in the near future that they will consider the voting of a sufficient amount of money to build the mile of railway referred to. I notice that the people in the outlying settlements of St. John's West have no difficulty in getting their products to the city and if we had a similar road it would be the means of the saving of a considerable lot of money. I commend this petition to the sympathetic consideration of the government.

MINISTER OF SHIPPING:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a number of petitions from the district of Bay de Verde, as follows: From Western Bay North and Upper Small Point on the subject of roads; another from Freshwater on the subject of a grant for repairs to a wharf; also another from Ochre Pit Cove on the same subject. These petitions are largely signed and the amounts asked for are small in comparison to the work to be done, and I sincerely hope that the government will see its way clear to grant the sums asked for in these requests.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I ask leave to present petitions from Grand Falls and Pilley's Island on the subject of prohibition. These petitions are against any modification of the act. They rather ask for greater stringency in the enforcement of it. It is plain a great many favor a modification and say that a great many evils such as dope, moonshine and smuggling can be laid at the door of prohibition. I rather think the contrary, and the trouble is with those who have made up their minds to get spirits at any cost even if they break the act.

I think a member on the opposition side some time ago in speaking to the address in reply mentioned the troubles that arise in the law courts and said that matters under the prohibition act are far worse than before i twas passed. I think the gentleman was once connected with the legal profession, I went to the trouble to get the figures of the arrests for drunkenness from the Inspector of Constabulary. These figures show a great difference since the passing of the prohibition act and before its passing. There is a big difference and in fact the total arrests for dope and drunenness included since the passing of the act do not come up to those for the last year liquor was sold.

In the year 1916 the number of arrests for drunkenness in St. John's was six hundred and eighteen, and for the three years following seventeen, eighteen and nineteen, the total number of arrests amounted to four hundred and ten. These show that there is a great difference in the troubles brought before the courts of law now and before the passing of the act.

I heartily endorse the prayer of the petitions and particularly with regard to the more stringent enforcement of the law, and trust that those entrusted with the enforcement of the act, if delinquent in their duties, will be handled without gloves. I ask that these petitions be received and referred to the department of the Colonial Secretary and hope that they will receive the consideration they merit.

MR. VINNICOMBE:—I ask leave to present some petitions from the residents of St. John's East asking that there be a modificatio nof the prohibition act. I hope and trust the request of those petitions will be granted. The last speaker was telling us about the difference of arrests for drunkenness before the passing of the act and since its enforcement. I might say in reply to the Hon. Minister of Public Works that before the passing of the act if a man staggered on the street at all the policeman had him arrested, but now since the prohibition was enforced a great many persons who are very drunk are missed altogether, or in other words overlooked. I have great pleasure in supporting the prayer of these petitions and ask that they be referred to the department to which they relate.

CAPTAIN JONES:—I ask leave to present petitions from the residents of Springdale, Little Bay Island, Long Island, Twillingate district, asking that there be no modification of the Prohibition Act. I hope and trust that the act will be enforced and ask to have them referred to the proper authorities and hope they will receive the consideration they deserve.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—If I am not out of order I might say in reply to the hon. member for St. John's East that the policemen also happened to miss certain parties before the passing of the Prohibition Act. I remember well a certain occasion on my way home from the House of Assembly I met a man in a horrible condition, his face covered with blood and his clothes as if he had been rolling in a pig pen, drunk and incapable to the last degree, rolling about the streets. There was no one to look after him so to save his life I played the part of the Good Samaritan, spending about an hour in getting him to his home. This apparently is one of the cases the policemen happened to miss.

HON. MINISTER O FJUSTICE:—I ask leave to present a petition this afternoon which is one of more than ordinary importance. It is from the owners of motor cars and it is signed by over one hundred of them. They ask, although it is somewhat unusual, that a higher tax be placed upon motor cars by increasing the present rate so that the proposed rate would mean that on a car of the type of a Ford or Chevrolet, the tax would be about thirty-five dollars per year; on a car say of the type of the Buick or the Chalmers, it would be about fifty dollars and on the larger type of car the tax would be seventy-five dollars per year. They ask that the revenue derived from these taxes be given to a commission appointed by the Motor Association, a body properly incorporated under the laws of Newfoundland, of the Minister of Public Works will be the chairman. This commission will purchase road-making machinery to build and keep up the roads and will see that they are kept in fit condition. These roads are the ones around St. John's and in the vicinity of Conception Bay. They are prepared and willing to assist in the improvements of the roads and they need funds to defray the cost of the repairs, and as they ask here they are prepared to tax themselves, and they also ask that the government will grant them out of the road grant an amount equal to fifty per cent. of the amount they are prepared to tax themselves.

In doing this work the Motor Association is only doing what has been done, but somewhat more extensively, in other countries, and something which will benefit everybody. The necessity for the improvement of roads has not as yet met with very much consideration in Newfoundland and I would like to point out to the house that in Ontario the provincial government set aside three million dollars to be used in five years for the improvement of highways, and this fund was made up from taxes taken from vehicles of every description under the motor car act. The same thing happened in Prince Edward's Island, which up to a short time ago prohibited motor cars and legislation was introduced to take advantage of the grant of the federal government to improve roads. In British Columbia, Hon. John King, Minister of Public Works, announced that the sum of eight million dollars would be spent in the next three to five years in road building and improvement.

I do not think that in the past our system of improvement and repair of the public roads has been a success. It has failed because of various reasons, and I think all who sit in this house know that one of the chief reasons is that it has not been gone about in a businesslike manner. In recent years the ordinary man who works on the roads does not do his work in a satisfactory manner because of the simple reason that the amount voted for his work is not attractive. And I think the time has come that if we are to get the best benefit and advantage from our roads the work to some extent ought to be handed over to the Motor Association who will keep up and maintain the public highways, and it will see that the work is done properly and will not be influenced by politics.

I see by The Evening Herald of this evening that the Canadian government has voted $50,000,000 for the improvement of a single road from Halifax to Vancouver, and the United States government has voted $50,000,000 for the improvement of roads. I feel sure that the house will grant the prayer of this petition, and give it hearty support.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, while subject of the petition presented by the Minister of Justice is being discussed, I would like to have a word to say on the matter. As far as I can judge from information received, and from my own observation, the ordinary wooden bridges usually built on outport roads are not able to stand the traffic of motor cars, as they are much heavier than the ordinary horse and cart, and a bridge suitable for ordinary use will not stand the wear and tear caused by motor cars. To deal with this matter it would be necessary to introduce the construction of concrete bridges which, I understand, are already being introduced in St. John's East. A great many complaints are continually coming in to the Public Works Department in regard to rotton bridges particularly from Harbor Main, and has led me to the conclusion that in the allocation of public moneys in that district last fall, the bridges must have been entirely neglected, and apparently if any work was done for the money it must have been done on private roads ,and not on the main line.

If the motor cars are come to stay it will be introduced similar to those embodied in the petition now presented. I may say at the same time that I see no reason why this work cannot be done under the supervision of the public works department, even if it does involve the employment of an expert foreman to supervise the work. Whatever may be done in this direction it would be necessary to remember that nothing should be attempted which would rob the outport districts of the necessary grants which they must have in order to have a road fit even to walk over.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting this petition. I quite agree with the hon. minister regarding the condition of our roads. When you take the large number of motor cars in the city, and those that will be here in the next one or two years, we must agree that the roads should be in a better condition. There are now nearly 500 cars in the city. Place their average value at $2,000 each, and the duty practically 50 per cent., the owners pay into the revenue of the country about a half million dollars. Then there is the enormous amount of repair work done, giving a large amount of labor to a number of people. There should be an increased motor tax. I strongly favor such a petition. The motor owner shall pay a higher tax, but he should get something in return in the form of good roads. Take from here to Carbonear. There is a large number of motorists that use that road, although it is entirely unsafe to ride over now. If you put a tax of $50.00 on every car that will mean about $30,000, but that is not sufficient to put the roads in good condition. There are other other sections that would be used by motorists if the roads were fit to use. It would mean that those sections would be rapidly built up. Hotels would be built, and tourists would again patronize those sections and put considerable money in the revenue of the country, besides leaving money in every section visited. I would go further than that petition.

I see no reason why it could not be made 100 per cent. instead of 50 per cent. I would be in favor of turning over the handling of road moneys in my district to a motor association that would undertake the proper expenditure of the money and put the roads in good condition. When we consider the enormous cost of labor and of road building we will realize that the petitioners made a very modest request. I agree with you that machinery should be brought down here and paid for by the government.

We are not getting a proper value for the money expended on the roads. I believe that if we build good roads around Conception Bay it will open up an industry not now in existence. The increase asked is altogether too modest. There is no reason why it should not be doubled. The matter of the expenditure of the road moneys should be taken up with the members with a view to co-operating with the Motor Association. $30,000 is not enough. If the government would pue another $30,000 with that it would put good roads all around to Trinity Bay. We receive more revenue from motor cars than we did from liquor in the past. It is giving us a revenue of over a half million dollars. I have much pleasure in supporting the petition. I hope it will be made 100 per cent. instead of 50 per cent.

DR. JONES:—Mr. Speaker, I have had some little experience in motor driving and I also know something about the Hr. Main roads. Hr. Main has come in for a great deal of censure from the Minister of Public Works, but you will admit sir, that you cannot get very far down the shore, going from St. John's around the bay without passing through Hr. Main district, and I think that any requests coming in from there for repairs are fully justified. On Sunday and Monday there were no less than two hundred motor cars passed through there, and with such traffic as that the demand for repairs must of necessity be very great.

I am in full accord with the idea that something be done to build roads that will be capable of meeting the increasing requirements of the time because the grant at present is practically the same as it was thirty or forty years ago when there was nothing but a few horses and cars or carriages using the roads, and it is but reasonable to suppose that the provision made for bridges now should be very much greater.

There is a bridge going into Avondale that is the longest on the line between St. John's to Carbonear, and this bridge in itself costs an immense amount to keep in repair. It has in my time been rebuilt three times and is now in a very dangerous condition, and in my opinion it should be replaced by a concrete structure. It is not necessary to have a bridge there as long as this one as there is very little water there and the purpose could just as well be served by concrete sections and culverts.

Ibelieve that the Motor Association is an ideal body to take charge of our roads and bridges, but I do not mean that they should have entire control but should act in conjunction with a board appointed by the government. They know best the requirements of the highways and would devise the best means of attending to them. The ordinary person driving around the bay would imagine the roads were fairly good, but let him get in a car that cost a couple of thousand dollars and drive over that road and he will soon discover that it is far from good and the car will show it too. From past experience I know that the government itself is not capable of giving proper attention to the roads of the country and the matter should be placed in the hands of a proper body. I look for good results if the government gives this petition the consideration it deserves.

There are now a couple hundred bridges on the road around Conception Bay and every year these require to be repaired because of the manner in which they are torn up by floods and heavy frosts and particularly all of these are now in a dangerous condition. Apart from this road is not altogether so bad and with a proper expenditure it could be put in good condition.

As Sir Michael Cashin has pointed out, good roads are an asset to any country, and as there are many pretty spots in various sections along the road, and a good motor road from Holyrood to Salmonier, thence to Colinet, to Whitbourne and Brigus and back to St. John's would make an ideal trip. Then one from Carbonear around Trinity Bay and from New Harbor to Whitbourne is another. If we had good roads through those places the tourist traffic would be very great and benefit the whole country. There are already roads through those sections and they need only to be widened and improved to make them good motor roads for all kinds of traffic. I heartily support this movement to make good roads and trust it will receive the favorable consideration of the government.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, the ambition of the petitioners to have better motor roads for the suburbs of St. John's and around Conception Bay is most praiseworthy, and the proposition to tax the owners of motor cars for this purpose will meet with general approval. It is generally recognized that motor cars are very destructive to the roads and bridges over which they run for any considerable time. The motorists should, in justice to their less fortunate neighbors who have no cars, provide funds to keep such roads in a state of repair. I cannot support that section of the petition which asks this legislature for a sum of money, without certain reservations or conditions, for after all any money that would be voted in this way must come out of the public as a whole, and if the government votes money to help make better roads for motorists we must remember the pressing needs of the extern settlements, the real producers of the country, who have from time to time wharves damaged, slips washed away and bridges needing attention in order that they might be able to carry on their work. Those are the people who produce the wealth of the country and they should have the first consideration.

When this or any other government can afford to give to a Motor Association fifty to sixty thousand dollars to make good roads and vote an equivalent amount to the extern settlements for the needs of the fishermen, I will say alright, go ahead! But unless it is made apparent to me that the government can allocate sufficient moneys to give the fishermen and producers of the country the roads, bridges, wharves, breakwaters and slips they so badly need to assist them in producing the wealth of the country, I cannot support this petition. I feel that I should not give my support to anything that has the color of a luxury, when we have so many pressing appeals for money to assist the producers to get the wealth from the sea and land upon which the very existence of the country depends. That is the position I take with regard to this petition.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, I wish to support that petition for the reasons that have been stated by the Hon. Minister of Justice and by the hon. leader of the opposition. I would like to see the Motor Association with some governmental control so that the matter could be dealt with in a business-like way. The Motor Association could have control of motor traffic, with power to penalize those who do not conform to the laws. I certainly think that this is a very modest request. I had occasion a few days ago to motor to Harbor Grace. The condition of the roads is frightful. I never saw anything like it. It is an absolute disgrace. All the bridges are in tumbling down condition. I would like to ask the hon. minister if it would not be possible to give the Motor Association some legislative authority to deal with the matter.

MR. HIBBS:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two on this matter. Personally, I am much in favor of improving our public highways, but at the present time I do not see my way clear to give my support to this petition. I am heartily in accord with the idea of building better roads. It is a matter I have given much attention during recent years, and I would like to see a reasonable tax levied on all motor cars, but that the association should have control over the expenditure of this money is a matter that I shall oppose with all my power. To hand absolute control of the building of our main roads to any private concern, corporation or association is something which should never be done. What I would suggest is that a board be specially appointed to have control of all public highways. I notice the motor owners are willing to be taxed to build the roads they destroy. I am not surprised, for the government should tax them whether they like it or not. Our roads were never exceptionally good, but since they have had to stand the added wear of motor traffic they have been going from bad to worse, and the bridges which were never built to stand this kind of traffic have been found impossible to keep up, and only concrete abutments and culverts will give anything like satisfaction in standing the strain they will be subjected to. I believe we must have some big scheme if we are going to permanently improve our roads in a way that will enable them to meet the demands that will be made upon them in the future.

I can agree with Sir Michael Cashin that the government, if the money can be spared, should put dollar for dollar against that collected from motor taxes, and purchase labor-saving road making machinery, but in my opinion the government should retain the ownership of same, and not allow any combination of men to usurp the functions belonging only to the Department of Public Works.

Although its members are a very desirable class as a whole, the motor owners are only human beings like ourselves, and cannot be expected to know more about road building than any other body of persons, and in fact not as much as the majority who do not own machines, and personally I think that instead of being looked upon as road makers they might be regarded more as road hogs. That is the name I would give, at least some of them. I have had some experience with some of these gentry, having lived the greater part of my time in the country, and I know what it is for a man to have to pull his horse off the road to the ditch in order to escape passing cars, the owners of which had very little regard for the rights of others.

But sir, to get down to the point, who are the Motor Association going to employ to do this proposed work? I suppose they will import men to take charge of it, not deeming Newfoundlanders capable of building roads. For their information I can give the names of at least three Newfoundlanders who are doing road building in Canada, and one who is doing the same work in the United States, and I am quite confident that we could find men to-day who could do the work as well or better than anyone we could get from outside. The Newfoundlanders has always been able to keep up the end of his plank wherever he went, and I know of some very competent men whose services could be secured under a properly constituted board. I am not speaking now of ordinary road boards, but we should have something like a public highways board, one member of which should be an engineer, another a representative of the Motor Association, together with a third competent man, and under such direction the work of road construction or repairs could be well carried out.

With regard to the suggestion of Mr. Fox, that the association should be allowed to regulate traffic, I think that such a step would be the most undesirable of all. Take the farmer for example, who has to come to town with his produce, and in many cases has to send his boy, or even his wife, for that is not unusual. Would he be quite safe in doing that if the Motor Association had the regulating of the traffic? Surely this class of man has some rights and is entitled to some consideration, and in that case I question if he could expect to receive any. As to speed, I understand there is such a thing as the speed law, but it is totally disregarded, and surely we could not hope to have any improvement if the motorists were allowed to make regulations to suit themselves.

In order to improve our roads, I would say import machinery by all means, and an engineer should be secured to give scientific advice, but the public works department should entirely control the work.

In Canada and the United States, and I believe in all other countries, the owners of motor vehicles are taxed in proportion to the power of their cars, and the money is used principally to rebuild and repair the highways over which those machines pass, but no association or club has ever been given power to expend such public funds or purchase and own machinery, as this work is performed by county councils and specially appointed commissions who are responsible to the minister of highways.

Such a proposition as that suggested in this petition is without a precedent in any country, and I do not for a moment think that the government should even consider it here.

If the construction of our public streets and highways was handed over to this body, who themselves have in the main absolutely no experience, or even idea of road-building, it would be tantamount to an admission on the part of the government that it was incompetent of doing the work, and I do not think we have reached that stage yet.

Let us be big enough to copy from other countries, and place this work under the proper responsible department. It has been said that motorists were building roads in Canada. That is not so. I understand that a special boulevard is being constructed in Nova Scotia, but the main highways in use by the general public are not being built under the auspices of any association, but by the proper authorities.

The highways in Canada are under control of the minister of public highways and it is the same in all the provinces where boards usually consisting of five members have control of the roads. Only recently I have received some literature on this matter which I have not yet had time to read up, but which I should be glad to hand to any hon. member who would like to see it.

I have some more observations to make on this subject, but I shall reserve them till a bill is brought down to give effect to this matter. In the meantime I support the request for the fifty per cent., or even a hundred per cent. to augment the motor tax, if such a sum can be spared for the purpose, and I agree that the Motor Association should be represented on the board that expends this money, but to give such a body anything like control is a proposition that will certainly not receive my support.

The Hon. the Prime Minister gives notice of question.

The Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs gives notice of introduction of bill .

SIR J. C. CROSBIE:—Before adjourning may I ask the Prime Minister if he knows anything about the salt question.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—I will have the information to-morrow.

MR. HIGGINS:—I support it on the line that he suggests so far as my district is concerned. Down around Pouch Cove and Flatrock motor trucks are used largely for the transport of fish, and for the information of the Hon. Minister of Public Works, St. John's East during the past three years has initiated concrete bridges owing to the heavy freighting of fish down and up from these settlements because the aristocratic or supposed aristocratic and democratic traffic could not stand the strain that was being brought to bear upon them. It has been found in practice that concrete bridges in the district of St. John's East are most beneficial and today we have, I think, something like twelve of them down there. Five or six of these are huge and immense structures. One I think has been built on Quidi Vidi Road and on Torbay Road three or four were placed. In Torbay itself, where no luxury cars are driven, and where a concrete bridge has been constructed, you will find that it is used practically for fish hauling. Another way in which these bridges have been proved beneficial is that when wooden structures were there the road was often completely tied up, but the concrete bridge has eliminated the possibility of this ever happening again. I support the principle of this bill for broader reasons. I think I understand that the petition submitted requires no matter of conflict methods of expenditure but rather as I take it that they be given the benefit of the allocation that the improvement of these roads would require. I think that if around Conception Bay good highways were built they would be of great benefit not only to car owners but to the whole community. I agree that we ought not undertake to advance to any section of the people the entire control of the roads.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I rise to support the petition presented and in doing so I might say that I think that if some improvements were made in this direction great advantage would be given to the people and, as already pointed out by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, a great number of cars will come into the Colony if good roads are available.

Now I want to reply to a statement made a few minutes ago by the hon. member for Fogo when he classed all motor drivers "road hogs."

MR. HIBBS:—I didn't classify all.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—What about your friend, Mr. Coaker. Did you class him a road hog?

MR. HIBBS:—He can't drive a car.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I'd advise him not to learn.

MR. HIBBS:—I wouldn't class him a road hog.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I'm afraid I doubt you. Mr. Hibbs says that he knows of Newfoundlanders who are building roads in Canada, but, the machinery and the proper expenditure is available there. But in this country we don't even get the value of the expenditure.

MR. WALSH—Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to listen to the debate this afternoon as it shows good spirit in trying to co-operate with the government, and I realize that the time has come when we should find some means of improving the conditions that now exist so far as the roads of this country are concerned. It is a well known fact that the elected road boards should get the public money for the improvement and upkeep of these roads but it would be found impracticable to give the control of these boards to the association. If the department of public works and the Motor Association were to co-operate, I would have very great faith in what would result. But if the Motor Association were given control the sections around St. John's would be well looked after and the remote parts of the Island would get no assistance whatever. I would like the government to seriously consider this.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, this petition from the Motor Association relating to the improvement of the public highways of the colony is one well worthy of the careful consideration of the house. I appreciate the fact that it is a matter of importance to motorists, but the advantage which motorists derive from our highways is but a small proportion of the value of the highways to the country. The very great importance of good roads is fully recognized in all civilized countries. Nor is this merely modern thought. The highways of the Roman Empire of the days of Julius Caesar were world landmarks in the matter good road construction. Great Britain, the United States of America and the Dominion of Canada annually spend a huge sum of money to provide efficient road service to the public. During recent years the United States government and the government of the Dominion of Canada have made appropriations in the many millions for road construction. Newfoundland can never hope to be a country of great highways, just as Newfoundland can never hope to be a great wheat-producing country. The rugged nature of the country itself and the fact that our population live on the seacoast necessarily mean that traffic by sea rather than inland will for many years to come be the most important factor in the development of the trade of the country. Under local conditions the motor-boat takes the place of the motor-car. It is nevertheless important that the past policy of wastefulness in connection with the expenditure of good moneys be abandoned and that the policy of the new administration to secure value in the expenditure of road moneys and to make additional appropriations for main line roads should be immediately put into effect. Some years ago a number of motorists personally subscribed a considerable sum of money and expended it in the improvement of the roads from St. John's to Topsail. Very much better value was secured for the expenditure of private moneys than is ordinarily secured for the expenditure of public road moneys. Competent road foremen were employed, and the operations were conducted on a practical business basis, with the result that the entire section of the public who use that road have for some years past benefited by the activities of the motorists who subscribed their own funds to add to work carried on under their supervision.

For some time the special tax paid by motorists as a license fee for their cars has been appropriated one-half to the St. John's Municipal Council and one-half for the improvement of roads used by motorists. It is difficult to know what the Municipal Council has done with the half of the tax held by them. Everybody knows that the section within the city limits of the roads leading out of town have been permitted by the city council to remain in an abominably unsatisfactory condition. Take, for instance the LeMarchant-Cornwall Avenue road leading to Topsail. One does not get a decent stretch of road until one gets outside the city limits. The traveller then gets within the jurisdiction of the St. John's West road inspector, Mr. Bambrick, and the roads are on the whole reasonably satisfactory. The other half of the motor tax is divided up and forms part ot the road grants of the districts of St. John's East, St. John's West, Ferryland, Harbour Main, Harbor Grace and other sections of the Peninsula of Avalon where motor cars are most frequently used. These moneys, however, have gone into the general road grants, and in the past not more than fifty per cent. value has been secured therefor. The whole matter of the improvement of roads, not merely from the standpoint of increased grants but from the standpoint of increased value for the money expended because of competent direction is the policy of this administration. The exact opposite was the policy of the late administration. It is quite probable that not more than ten per cent. value was secured by the Colony for the expenditure of approximately half a million dollars by the late government during the months of September and October of last year. The huge amount of money expended under the authority of the department of public works when the now notorious Woodford was minister of that department was expended purely for partizan political purposes. Its distribution was a public scandal, and, as I have already said, the Colony did not get more than ten per cent. value for it

The motorists in their petition suggest that they should be submitted to an increased tax and that that tax should be applied to the improvement and repair of roads used by motorists. There can be no possible objection to accepting the views of the members of the Motor Association and placing upon all motor cars an additional tax to be applied for the improvement of roads used by motorists. The motorists also ask that a reasonable sum of money be allocated annually as a special appropriation for roads used by motorists. This is a reasonable request. On importation into the Colony the motor cars pay a tax of approximately forty-five per cent. on the cost of the car. Motor car tires, accessories and supplies pay a similarly heavy tax. The motorist pays a tax of six cents per gallon on every gallon of gasolene consumed. There is no tax on gasolene for use in connection with the fishery. The motorist raises no objection to paying this substantial tax, whether the car be used for pleasure purposes or whether it be used for business purposes such as the use of motor cars by medical men and others, and the use of motor trucks. In addition to these heavy taxes upon motor cars and gasolene used by them, the motorist contributes very largely to the revenue by the employment of drivers whose annual salaries amount to a very large sum, a driver's salary ranging from $20.00 to $30.00 per week. The cost of the upkeep and repair means the existence of many garages, with the consequent considerable employment of labor. It is estimated that the revenue on motor cars, tires and parts during the last fiscal year was approximately $104,748.00. It is also estimated that the import tax paid upon motor cars during the past few years is considerabl in excess of half a million dollars. I consequently feel that the Colony might very reasonably allocate annually a small proportion of the taxes collected annually on motor cars and apply that money to the opening up of new roads and the improvement and repair of existing roads. The new roads which would be opened up would not be opened up would not be opened up for the benefit of motorists as motor roads. They would be opened up in the interests of the whole people. The improvement and repair of existing roads would be an improvement and repair in the interests of all, the motorists, in common with every other user of the roads, getting the advantage of an improved highway. I feel that an annual grant of $10,000, which is an exceedingly small percentage of the special contribution made annually to the revenue of the Colony by motorists might reasonably be appropriated. I do not approve, however, of the suggestion that the expenditure of any such allocation should be placed exclusively in the hands of the association. I would point out that all roads are public highways. For their conditions the department of public works is responsible. The control of the roads and their improvement and repair should consequently not be vested in the Motor Association or any private body, but should be vested in the department of public works. There might be a road commission on which the Motor Association would be properly represented, or a Motor Association committee might be organized to co-operate with the minister of public works, but the ultimate control and responsibility in connection with the opening up of new public roads and the improvement and repair of existing roads must vest in the minister of public works.

When the estimates for the coming year are laid before the house it will be seen that it is the intention of the government to open a highway from Deer Lake to Bonne Bay, and that an initial appropriation is being made for the necessary survey and the beginning of the work. ext year a further appropriation will be sought. It will also be seen that an appropriation is included to provide for a road from Elliston in the district of Trinity to the railway station, and an initial vote is being included in the estimates for such work in connection therewith as it may be possible to undertake during the coming year. The estimates will also provide for an additional percentage increase in road grants throughout the entire Colony. References have been made by Dr. Jones of Avondale, the only sitting representative for the district of Harbor Main with respect to the condition of the roads in his district. The condition is deplorable, due to a considerable extent to the absolute waste of public funds in that district during the past few years. Last autumn while the political contest was in progress thousands of dollars were squandered on the Harbor Main roads by men being employed to dig the mud out of the trenches and throw it in the middle of the road, with the result that in November of last year the roads were in the most fearful condition imaginable. The bridges are bad and the roads generally are in an abominable state. This is not due to a lack expenditure of public funds on these roads. It is due to the dishonest manner in which the late minister of public works, Mr. Woodford, used the large funds provided by the late government for political purposes under the head of "road work."

The money was handed raound to the people as political graft, and in many cases the people understood when they received the money that the board of works cheque was to be regarded as a courteous consideration rather than a sum of money which must be represented by value in road work. Reports come from the Holyrood section that roads in that district are in a horrible condition. Hundreds of thousands of dollars were wasted in the district of Ferryland last autumn for political purposes in connection with road construction, but the entire grants of the district up to the 30th of June with the single exception of a sum of approximately $240.00 were spent in that district for political purposes last autumn. Little, if any, value was secured for the expenditure of that money, unless the leader of the opposition considers that his own election and the election of his colleague were good value for the public expenditure. Just as little, if any value was secured for the expenditure in Harbour Main unless the leader of the opposition considers that the election of his two candidates, the famous Woodford of affidavit notoriety and my friend Dr. Jones of Avondale represented value for the expenditure.

To sum up, I would say, first:

That the policy of the government is to remove from the road expenditure the politcial graft so pronounced under the late administration.

Second, to inaugurate a policy of securing reasonable value for road expenditure.

Third, to provide proper direction, supervision and control of road work.

Fourth, to enable the motorists to tax themselves very considerably so that motor car owners may themselves provide funds for road construction, improvement and repair.

Fifth, to permit the appropriation of a very small proportion of the annual tax paid into the revenue by motorists to be applied for special work in connection with roads used in common with the general public by those who pay these special taxes.

And last, to have the control of road work throughout the entire Island vested in the department of public works, of which Mr. Jennings, the minister, is a very conscientious and highly efficient head.

MR. BENNETT.—Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few words on this subject. I am glad to hear from the Prime Minister this afternoon that he contemplates to, in some way, alter the present process of system of road repairing in the districts of St. John's east and west. I am quite in accord with his remarks that a great deal of money has been wasted in the past in the repairing of roads in these districts. It is the system rather than anything else that we deplore. We are going on a system of road-making to-day that existed 50 years ago. I can speak with the fullest conviction that an absolute change is necessary for the building or roads. Last year the motor association made an effort, as indicated in this petition, to do something and asked the co-operation of the members of the districts as well as the assistance of the minister of public works. Their representations were given sympathetic consideration and as far as the district of St. John's west is concerned, I know that Mr. Bambrick the road inspector a gentleman whose qualification in his position, I have very much pleasure in stating here, is second to none in the community, carried out his orders to the best of his ability. I think that in one or two cases good work was accomplished, but on general lines it was impossible to meet the views of the association, because of the difficulty in procuring help and assistance at the time of the year that it was most desirable to make roads. It is absolutely impossible to get men to go to work at the time it is desirable for the making of roads. The work has got to be done in the early spring, often under adverse weather conditions as once the weather gets fine it is difficult to get men to go to work, practically all of them being employed at their farms, and it is only after they get their crops in the ground that it is at all possible to get them. Then you are up in the middle of the summer and you are driving over newly repaired roads that are not in a fit condition until beaten down and hardened through traffic. Then again our roads are so shallow and lack that necessary bottom that they are often entirely destroyed through the frost of a subsequent winter. If you will notice in passing along our country roads a great many of them are built over marshes. Take for instance the Goulds road. A very large portion of it is built entirely over a marsh. It is merely a gravel path through a marsh and when the frost goes through it, it is thrown out of kilter and requires the same attention each succeeding year. I submit that the petition set forth this afternoon will help to bring about a remedy of present conditions. What you want in the first place is large capital so that when the roads once built can be kept in proper repair. A great deal can be done, as suggested this afternoon, with the introduction of road-making machinery. What we require in the supurbs of St. John's are small steam-rollers for making roads more solid. I think that with the innovation of the necessary machinery a great deal of good can be done. One thing that has not been ventilated to a sufficient degree this afternoon and that is the position of the city council with regard to the increased tax asked for in this petition. Now the motor cars are already taxed and the city itself receives half of this tax but I do not think that the city council will be prepared to relinquish their portion. And if that tax is increased I see no reason why they are not entitled to their portion of the increase. After all the main wear and tear done to city roads is caused by the motor cars more than to the country roads and if the motor association wants roads built entirely for their own purpose let them build a boulevard for themselves with government assistance so that they will not clash with the government or the department in charge of same. It has been suggested that the road leading from Holyrood across to Witless Bay could be used as a highway for motor cars only, and I am sure that if put in condition it would be found to be as good a road for a pleasure drive as there is in the country. But it is nonsensical to be trifling with the question until the motor association have sufficient funds, because the building of a road around Conception Bay is going to cost something like one hundred thousand dollars do anything like what is contemplated without any regard to other roads. It means a large expenditure at the outset in order to have good roads permanently. The roads have to be rebuilt annually and methods, different entirely to what prevails at present will have to be adopted before you will be able to keep the roads in permanent good repair. Therefore I would like to say that before this is taken up by the government that a commission be appointed to enquire into the whole matter. As has been pointed out already this evening, the gentlemen who constitute the motor association know nothing about the technical work of building roads. They merely desire to have good roads. You might have money and you might spend money and not have good roads afterwards. That is my opinion so far as the district of St. John's west is concerned to-day. You will not get the value for the money you spend under present conditions and under present methods, and until such methods are inaugurated and road-making machinery is adopted you are not going to succeed in bringing about any tangible improvements. Some of the roads in the district of St. John's west are in fairly good condition. The Thorburn road was never better probably than at the present time; also the Goulds road is kept in as good a condition as possible, considering the facilities at the disposal of the department of public works and the available labour supply.

I am also perfectly in accord with the idea with regard to concrete bridges. It is the policy adopted with in the past few years. When the old structures were worn out concrete bridges or culverts were substituted. The result is that you will have no further repairs to do in that direction in future. I only hope that the Prime Minister, who has declared in some measure his policy in this respect, will continue to do something tangible, and I feel sure that after a short experience he will be gratified with results. I have every sympathy with the motor association, and I have every desire to assist them and to see that the roads are given a reasonable amount of attention in St. John's, but I certainly think is improper for the Department of Public Works to delegate its authority and its power to any corporation or any individuals who may desire to superintend the roads and their upkeep. The roads are under the supervision of the Minister of Public Works and his two inspectors, Messrs. Bambrick and Parsons, representing St. John's West and East, respectively. Give them a fair show by giving them machinery to improve present methods of road repairing and road building. The motor association as has been said before can assist in a great measure and nothing they can do is too much, because there is no agency that destroy the roads as much as the motor car. It practically sucks the substance out of the road. If one will take notice every car passing over a road tear considerable filling material of the road and leave nothing but stones that is exactly what is destroying the roads.

I desire to discontinue my remarks for the present with a view to having something further to say if the Government decide to bring in any measure dealing with this subject.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—They are willing to be taxed to carry out certain proposals and they also ask that out of the same amount of the fund derived from the motor cars a certain proportion be handed over to the commission, that is fifty per cent. of the revenue and I estimate that the revenue that will come from themselves will be about twenty thousand dollars and therefore the amount given them will be ten thousand and I think we ought to be willing to go as far as that but I think with this proviso that the amount should not exceed that. We mgiht let them have the amount up to $10,000 but not exceeding. Next year they will want to increase this. No doubt there will be a tremendous influx of cars and everybody is going to have one. Well, I think if the revenue has been two hundred and fifty thousand dollars on the importation of cars, we are not committing any great offence in handing over to them ten thousand dollars. When the bill comes before the House and it gets into shape to meet the requirements of all concerned I intend to support it with that simple proviso that the sum shall not exceed ten thousand dollars and I think that ought to be satisfactory to the petitioners and I feel the outport people will welcome this inauguration of road improvement and building of roads. It is a new system and the time has come when we can no longer build roads with spades and the other old-fashioned implements. We have turned two new leaves. One is the petition and the other is the intention of the Government to import motor trucks and other up-to-date machinery to construct and repair roads and when the bill comes before the House I will no doubt give my support to it.

MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Chairman, I notice that Trinity District is conspicuous by its absence in this bill. I think I expressed myself already on this bill when speaking to the petition and I cannot say that I am in favor of it. That part of the bill which asks for government support I do not endorse, but outside of that it strikes me that Trinity District should be included in the bill. Motor cars go to Heart's Content from Carbonear, and St. John's, but they do not go beyond these places. There is a very good road from Heart's Content to New Perlican and it would be a grand thing if that road were improved right down to Lead Cove; in fact, I see no reason why the South Side of the bay should not be included in the bill.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Alright, the south side will be included.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—Mr. Chairman, it might be news to some people perhaps, to know that the District of Burin has got motor cars, and, now that there are going to be special givings out in the way of motor roads, Burin is going to ask for its share. I cannot say that I am in perfect agreement with the object of this bill. If all the districts were compensated in the way of special grants it would be a good idea, but to give grants to districts that have the advantage of a railway and with roads much better than we have in the District of Burin, I cannot see that I would be doing justice to my constituents to support the bill and give money out of the general revenue of the country to the particular sections named in the bill. And, as I said before, we actually have motor cars in burin now.

MR. FOX:—I with the permission of the Speaker beg present a number of petitions from various places in the E. End of St. John's asking that a modification of the prohibition law be granted. The petition is largely signed by thousands of the residents and I commend it to the consideration of the Government and ask that it be referred to the department to which it appertains.

THE HON. PRIME MINISTER:—I beg to lay upon the table of the House various information asked for some days ago.

THE HON. PRIME MINISTER:—I ask to have the matter deferred as the printer has not sent the resolutions up to the House (to move the House to consider certain resolutions with reference to the posts, etc.)

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to Amend Cap. X. of 9-10 Geo.. V. entitled 'An Act with respect to existing Tenancies and the Ejectment Therefrom."' was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act Respecting License to Cut Hardwood" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to Check Profiteering" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be senet to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to amend the Income Tax Act, 1918" was read a third time and passed and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Consolidated Statutes of Nfld. (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Encouragement of Agriculture."'

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the House resolved itself into committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act respecting Certificates of Masters and Mates."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

MR. FOX:—Mr. Speaker, with reference to this bill I would like to say that I do not think the bill is going to have the good effect contemplated. Under the present law and the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Acts certificates can be granted we all know, but the undesirable conditions existing for a number of years past in this Colony has been brought to the notice of the public in the judgment just handed down in the loss of the s.s. Delenac. I know that the Honorable Minister is conversant with the terms of that judgment and I would like to draw attention to some salient sections of it particularly the last paragraph on page seven and eight. The marine court consisting of Judge Morris, Captain Fenn and Captain Edward English, Sr., has handed down this judgment. The sections I refer to are on page seven of the judgment (reads the various sections). The report of the Registrar of Shipping is very important (reads it).

MR. FOX:—Now that probably is one of the most important judgments ever handed down by the courts of Newfoundland. In the past few years our laws with respect to the competency of men in charge of schooners have not been carried out. With respect to the bill and its desire to convenience certain men it is going to have the effect of placing men in charge who are incompetent. The report of the Registrar of Shipping points out that in only one case, of the large number of ships lost, was the master certificated. Men are going across in charge of crews who do not know the starboard from the port. In the case that I have cited the mate did not know the starboard from the port. We allow conditions of that sort to operate in Newfoundland. We have never taken the trouble to enforce the law. We have allowed incompetent men to go across in charge of lives of other men. Now I don't see how we are going to reconcile the conditions of this bill with the proper conditions. I recognize that there are four or five men who because of lack of education and in view of their long and faithful service should be given masters' certificates. But this should not apply to young men who may have been good soldiers, but who have neither the knowledge of navigation or the experience to become either masters or mates. It may be alright for coastal service, but it is not alright when it comes to foreign going. I have had conversation with some of the leading captains with respect to this bill, and this bill does not meet with the requirements that they consider necessary. It will be impossible to entrust vessels, cargoes, and particularly the lives of crews to men who are entirely incompetent. In certain cases men have qualified as naval seamen, and have been promoted to higher offices, and it might be all right to grant certificates under certain provisions. I think men who become mates should have certificates of competency or should not tbe allowed to take the responsible position.

Attempts have been made to hoodwink the authorities by changing the registers of the ships so that the men would be competent. I have known of several such cases. The men have not the sense of security that they should have. The Canadian law was taken advantage of until that law also had to be changed in order to put a stop to the practice. This matter is not receiving the serious consideration that it should receive. We have the most loosely carried out laws that can be found anywhere. Men are allowed to go captains of foreign going schooners who are not fit to be captains of row boats. As a maritime country we must wake up to our responsibility. It is not a mere consideration of dollars and cents, not even of the vessels and the cargoes. In a great many cases the owners may be quite willing to sell to the insurance companies. But it is the lives of the men, who, in some cases, have large families depending upon them. I suggest that the present law be not changed, but that it be enforced. We have certain laws, and it is only necessary that those laws be enforced. Captain English, because of his world-wide experience, and of his highly commendable work some months ago in rsecuing the lives of the people on the Ethie, is recognized as an authority by everybody. I do not believe that he would be in favor of a bill of this sort. I cannot conceive of anybody being in favor of a bill of this sort. I cannot conceive of anybody being in favor of placing incompetent men in charge of vessels. We ought to see that the law is carried out, and that certificates of competency are required of men who are to go in vessels as masters and mates.

The most amusing feature of the whole thing, if amusing it might be termed, is that here in Newfoundland, in spite of its being a purely maritime country, navigation seems to be the last subject that is taken up. Now I would propose that navigation be made a compulsory subject in our schools, at least for those who have any intention of following the sea. The present navigation school, so ably conducted by Mr. Doyle, has worked wonders, but he has to shoulder all the responsibility of fitting men to safeguard the lives of seamen and passengers, on him alone devolves the duty of training our master mariners although he is working under great difficulties. We have not the facilities with which to carry on this important work as it should be carried on and I would propose that the government make some provision in this regard. There is no doubt that the hon. minister sees what he considers to be good reason for this bill and it is not my intention to vexatiously criticise it, but this is a matter which we cannot afford to lightly consider. I notice that the board provided for under this bill ceases to exist after 1921, but we do not know what will happen within the next few months and we cannot take the chance of having that happen which we might reproach ourselves in time to come. No vessel should be allowed to leave this port or any port in Newfoundland without a master who has all the necessary qualifications to ensure the safety of the lives of those in his charge, for no matter how experienced a man may be, if he has not the knowledge that will enable him to successfully meet and cope with any and every situation that might arise, he is not qualified to command a ship. We know, of course, that a man with no knowledge of navigation might do certain things to avert disaster should the occasion arise, but we kno walso that a thorough knowledge of navigation is absolutely necessary, for no amount of experience can avail a man who has not that knowledge when he requires it. We are taking a great responsibility by allowing a course to be adopted which might result in the loss of valuable lives, and unless there is absolutely no other means of overcoming the difficulty that confronts us, I think that we should hesitate in putting this into effect.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Chairman, I've listened with a great deal of attention to the interesting speech of the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Fox, and if there is any better way in which we can overcome the difficulty with which we are faced, I am ready to adopt it. As I have already said, what this bill is intended to do is to improve conditions as they exist at present and to give the best men that we have a chance. There are in Newfoundland altogether 107 foreign going vessels, 62 in St. John's and the remaining 45 in the outports, and out of this number of vessels we have only five certificated captains. Now, if you enforce the law already on the statute book, the position simply is that practically the whole of our foreign going fleet must be tied up because there is no one to man them. What we want to do is to cull the best men out of the number now sailing as masters and eliminate those who are not competent. You will find many men to-day, such as Moore, Rose, Jeans, Fudge, Wakeham, and others, who are as capable of commanding a vessel as any man who ever had master's certificate and under our present law every one of these would be cut out. We want to select from those available men who can be given command of vessels without risk and the men who do not come up to the standard will not be allowed to sail as masters. The situation is no bed of roses I assure you, and attention has been drawn to it by the Board of Trade, while I presume it has also come to the notice of His Excellency the Governor. Almost every time a vessel goes to sea now we are breaking the law, but to put that law in force means that at least ninety vessels are without captains, and under these circumstances what are you going to do? This solution of the difficulty was suggested by the Board of Trade and I talked the matter over with Sir John Crosbie, who has a wide experience, gained not alone from years in the commercial trade of the country, but also from his activities in the department of shipping, and what we thought was that if the matter was placed in the hands of three such men as Capt. English it would be safe to assume that no one would get a ticket who should not get it, but men who are not qualified when the term of this bill expires will have to qualify in the usual way, and when the bill comes into effect we want it strictly enforced, and only men of first class quality will be considered. We have the machinery here for fitting our seamen to qualify as masters and after next year no man will be allowed to take command who does not meet the requirements of the law. If there is any better way I am willing to adopt it; I merely want to do what is best under the circumstances.

Now, as to the outport vessels there are (Reads list).

I have no doubt that this bill will meet the requirements of the case and for that reason I have introduced it. If there is any good and sound reason why it should not pass, I have no objection. But I do not see why men should not be qualified and certificated if they are fully competent and experienced, if they have never lost a vessel, and if they have at all times proved themselves good seamen.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I support the remarks of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the ground that I think I know something about this matter, and I think that if my hon. friend, Mr. Fox, had as much experience in this regard as I have, he would see things differently. If he had been Minister of Shipping during the years of the war and had seen some of the things these men did I do not think he would have any doubt as to the wisdom of this bill. When we had to depend on our vessels to bring us our food supply, these are the men who accomplished the task and by doing so they proved that they were qualified to command. Now I agree with my hon. friend that every young man going to sea should have training in navigation, but that in itself does not necessarily make a man competent. I have had personal experience of that. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has very nicely referred to one of my captains. I took him out of the forecastle and he worked his way up till he became as competent to command a vessel as any man who has a certificate out of this port to-day. When I started business I paid a good deal of attention to this matter because I wanted to know who was the good man and who was not, and I found that the certificated man was not always the best. I had had men in my ships who had certificates, but there was no satisfaction with them and they seldom made more than the one trip. I was driven out of this country, forced to go to Canada and Barbados to register my vessels because of the law which prevented me from putting in command good men because they did not have a captain's ticket. In 1917, when the restrictions were on because the submarine campaign was at its height in the Mediterranean, 15 or 16 of our vessels were held up with cargoes and would have remained tied up indefinitely if one of them had not taken the chance and started, and it was an uncertificated man who took the lead which the others followed. Mr. Coaker has pointed out that there are 107 foreign going vessels in the country with only three or four passed captains amongst them and under these circumstances the only thing to do is to pick out the men who can satisfy the board that they are competent to sail as masters and give them certificates.

MR. FOX:—Words used by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the law should insist that captains carry a certificate of competency. I have here an item taken from a local newspaper headed "Where our vessels are today." It gives a list of 129 ships that are now down on the bottom of the sea, and only one man on that 129 ships carried a certificate of competency. As regards the statement made by Sir John Crosbie that uncertified men have done great work during the past few years that certified captains couldn't do may be quite true. I don't wish to pass any assertions. This is not the time to say nice things about those who go down to the sea in ships. We should see that our law is rigorously enforced. Certified men have been driven out of this country because in many cases preference has been given to others who didn't hold certificates of competency. Whoever is responsible for this position I am not prepared to say. We have men no doubt who are qualified to master a vessel, but they should hold certificates. There is, as has been stated, 107 men competent to take ships across the ocean, but they are not competent to get a certificate. We should not tolerate this condition of things. In a great many cases men have been placed in command of vessels who would not be able to do so if the law was carried out. I can fairly well see the point the hon. Minister has in his mind to rectify but he might just as well leave the present conditions continue. During 1919 and 1920 vessels were lost that would now be afloat if qualified skippers were in command. We should not tolerate the sending to sea of ships without certified men. I think we ought to be totally ashamed of ourselves. No maritime country has been so careless as Newfoundland in the past few years. I think the sooner we realize our responsibilities in this matter and see that the law is carried out the better.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I don't know any other way out of it myself. If these regulations were put into effect to-morrow the whole foreign-going trade would be held up. I think that young men should be given the opportunity to go up to Doyle's and pass their examinations and receive a certificate of competency. I have a man down there with me now who is a practical man without a certificate, but if he were to get down on his knees to me to-morrow and ask for a certificate I wouldn't give it to him. I would say go up to Doyle's and pass your examination and get your certificate. If a man is qualified to command a ship he will get a certificate, but if he is not he won't. My own object is to get over the difficulty with which we are faced. I told Mr. Coaker that I would go on the board, as the position has come about now that we have never before got into. I believe myself that a great many of the ships that went across were not lost through the incompetency of the masters. I have seen ships leave this port to go across the ocean, and they were not fit to go across. A man who has been in the service from 12 to 20 years must be considered a very important man, and having the experience he is no doubt just as competent to be master o fa vessel as a man who carries a certificate.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion for an adjournment of the House, I would like to ask the Hon. Prime Minister for a reply to a question of mine of yesterday as to what is the exact position concerning the salt situation now?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I may say that the salt situation is exceedingly serious in that four steamers have been delayed at Cadiz from ten to fifteen days because of the strike. The Newfoundland government, through His Excellency the Governor, have been in touch with the Imperial government and with Eir Edgar Bowring in London with a view to getting our steamers loaded. The second position is that an effort is being made with Messrs. Bowring Brothers in Liverpool to get one of their steamers to bring a cargo of salt from Liverpool to St. John's, and it is expected that a steamer will leave there within the course of a few days. This matter is being handled by cable between Messrs. Bowring Brothers, St. John's, His Excellency the Governor ,and the various officials both in Spain and in England. It is hoped that the negotiations pending for the securing of a steamer at Liverpool will be satisfactorily matured; also the cargo that will be brought by this steamer will be exceptionally large.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister to lay upon the Table of the House copies of all communications that took place between the Government, His Excellency the Governor and Sir Edgar Bowring; also all messages sent to any authorities in Spain and any information he has in regard to steamers now loading in Europe. If he will table all the correspondence I will be glad.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—That will be done.

MR. HIGGINS:—Some of us find ourselves in a very peculiar situation regarding this What Mr. Fox has said is absolutely sound and it is what out of 107 foreign going ships we have only five certified commanders amongst them, but, the proportion as to the number lost is quite all right. They must of necessity be there. We recognize that the government of to-day is faced with a very serious problem in connection with the certificates of masters and mates. It must be clearly understood that unless you are prepared to put duly certified men on board the ships you are going to make it very hard for the trade. It is a condition of affairs that is going to be very awkward to get over, and the more awkward part is that you practically tell the men who you really are going to give certiflcates to. They are absolutely undoubtedly unqualified men and I am not speaking in a spirt of opposition to the bill because I can't oppose it. But we are going back to the days when masters and mates were given certificates of service for general conduct, and it appears that we are in that position after all the years that have passed. It is practically desirous that this should go on, and the trouble is I cannot see how we are going to put the new law into effect, because if it be a fact that we have to-day a hundred or so vessels without certified commanders we cannot tie up the whole bunch, because that would be serious to the country and therefore we cannot apply the law, therefore I ask is it advisable to enact this legislation. I take it that the object is to cull the crowd and have certificates given to those who have passed their examinations.

If a man is engaged in the local trade and he holds a certificate for that trade he will not be qualified for the foreign trade, and that means that any young man who gets it into his head that Newfoundland trade is good enough for him he is not going to try and qualify for the foreign trade. I still think that it is a pretty difficult position to-day that we are in and that men who have been in the trade so long have now to turn around and take up examinations for certificates of competency. If the law was applied we could tie up the trade because in Newfoundland vessels to-day we have only five certified men to run 107 vessels. In my opinion it is not possible to get certified men. It is unfortunate that in this country the study of navigation in its proper sense has never been brought into it. The man who has been on the seas for years will find it a very hard job now to get down to his trigonometry to-day and get into the technical side of the subject, but I freely support and I am content to support this bill.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN referred to the forest fires and the Prime Minister replied.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I concur in the observations made by the Minister of Public Works and the hon. the leader of the opposition in their criticisms on the Reid Newfoundland Company who are openly and flagrantly defying the law of the land.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I did not make any such statement.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I am aware that my honourable friend did not criticise the Reid Newfoundland Co. He rather criticised the government because of the fact that the Reid Nfld. Co. were setting fire to the country because the spark arrestors on their engines were deficient. I fully appreciate the fine distinction which the honourable the leader of the opposition is drawing in this connection. The Reid Nfld. Co. has been notified on numerous occasions by the government engineer that their spark arrestors must be real arrestors and kept in good condition, and the Minister of Agriculture and Mines has written the government engineer on a number of occasions with respect to the matter. The Reid Nfld. Co. has assured both the Government Engineer and the Minister of Agriculture and Mines that these spark arrestors are efficient and kept in good working order. As a matter of fact, it is now well known that the spark arrestors are insufficient and kept in bad order. One engine, No. 121, I believe, in a few hours journey caused twelve fires. The fact is that the Reid Nfld. Co. engines are mostly junk and find it impossible to get up any pressure of steam. The engineers frequently have to run a crowbar through the spark arrestors, otherwise the engines would not be able to crawl along at all. Every pressure that can be put upon the Reid Nfld. Co. short of legal process has been put to compel them to use every precaution in this regard. Notices have been put up in the trains calling the attention of passengers to the importance of care in the use of matches, cigars and cigarettes. The recent fires which done so much damage have in many instances been due to the Reid Nfld. Co. and their indifference to and defiance of the law. I have only to say that if the Department of Agriculture and Mines and the Government Engineer find that the Reid Nfld. Co. are persistent in defying their instructions, the Reid Nfld. Co. will be prosecuted.

Second reading of bill "An Act to Authorize the Montreal Trust Co. to do Business in the Colony of Newfoundland."

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Speaker, in moving the second reading of this bill I may say that this bill gives powers to the Montreal Trust Co. the same as the Royal Trust Co. and the Eastern Trust Co. to do business in the Colony of Newfoundland.

Second reading of bill, "An Act with Respect to Existing Tenancies and the Ejectment Therefrom."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—This bill is a very brief one. It contains one section only and has the effect of extending the act for a period of one year. The act now on the Statute Book expired on the 7th day of April last. The intention of this bill is to keep the act in force until the seventh day of April, 1921.

Second reading of Council's amendments to "An Act Respecting the Exportation of Codfish."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—I move that the amendments made by the Honorable the Legislative Council to this bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Exportation of Codfish" be now read a second time. As already explained, the amendments are merely verbal and confirm rather than modify the principle involved in the act as it passed this House.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion for an adjournment of the house, I would like to ask the Hon. Prime Minister for a reply to a question of mine of yesterday as to what is the exact position concerning the salt situation now?

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

The remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries tabled the annual report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, 1919.

Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gave notice that he would on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Preservation of Beavers."

Hon. the Minister of Justice gave notice that he would on tomorrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act Respecting Former Enemy Aliens."

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until tomorrow afternoon at three of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 27th, 1920.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER.—In answer to the question which the hon. leader of the opposition asks, I would say that on yesterday I had an interview with the chairman of the Food Control Board, who states that it would be impracticable for him to furnish copies of the correspondence which has taken place between the Food Control Board and the business firms, both local and foreign, with respect to the importation of sugar. The hon. member will appreciate the fact that the correspondence of the Food Control Board in connection with such matters is of a confidential business character and unless under special circumstances should not be disclosed. The hon. member will note that in the Act to Check Profiteering there is a special proviso that while the proceedings before the court in matters of complaint shall be held in public where proceedings are founded on the complaint the information and documents required to be given or produced to the board must be treated as confidential except certainly in cases where legal proceedings are taken and the information has to be used in the course of proceedings. It is essential that the private information concerning private business affairs which is disclosed by business men to the board should be carefully protected from publicity.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS—I ask leave to present a petition from the residents of Catalina and Port Union. The petition asks that immediate steps be taken to remedy the abuses under the present Prohibition Act. I hope it will receive the serious consideration of the Government. I ask leave to also present a petition from the Rev. Mr Young and others of Shoal Harbour, T.B., on the same subject. I ask leave to also present a number of petitions from certain sections of Trinity district asking that certain modifications be made in the Prohibition Act. I notice that some of these petitions have no witness to the signature. Anyway I present them for what they are worth without comment, for the consideration of the government.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE—I ask leave to present a petition from the chairman of the road board of Port de Grave which asks that the allocation of the sum of two thousand dollars be granted for the erection of a public wharf. He says that he would be very glad to have this amount and I might say that to my personal experience the wharf is in a very bad condition. I would like to ask the hon. minister of marine and fisheries to take this matter into his consideration and hope he will grant the request, as there are many fishermen who use this place, and I sincerely trust he will be able to accede to this request.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER.—Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay upon the table of the house the annual report of the General Hospital for the year ending the 31st December, 1919.

MR. HIGGINS—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of the Battery, St. John's East, with respect to the question whether certain territory there is under the control of the Government or under the jurisdiction of the city as it is at the present time. At this stage I do not ask that it receive the serious consideration, as shortly a bill will come before the house dealing with the matter, and I merely ask that the petition be referred to the Colonial Secretary.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS & TELEGRAPHS—I ask leave to present a petition from the electors of Catalina, Little Catalina, and Melrose, Trinity district, on the subject of the erection of a public building at Catalina. There used to be a court house at Catalina, but in the year 1915 the so-called court house was burned down. For some time the court was held in the parish hall. Catalina is of very great importance because of its nearness to Port Union. Port Union is a new town and will lend importance to Trinity district and the whole Dominion because of the prestige it will have in the future. This building is a necessity owing to the importance of Catalina and Port Union. In fact the importance of these two places will grow from year to year because they are becoming thickly populated. I might say that as far back as the year 1912 or 13 the Morris administration being the Government of the day would have readily granted the money for the erection of the public building to be used as a court house, custom house and postal telegraphs, but at the time the site was not decided upon and up to the present time the matter has been in abeyance. The petition is largely signed and include the names of the clergymen of all denominations as well as all the leading citizens, also Rev. Father Dwyer and Hon. Philip Templeman of Bonavista. The petition also has the support of the Morning Star L.O.L. of Catalina, the F. P. U. Council and Caribou Lodge S. U. F. I give this petition my hearty support.

MR. SAMSON—Mr. Speaker, I could not let this opportunity go by without giving this petition presented by the hon. minister of posts and telegraphs, my hearty support. Catalina is a town of very great importance and is what the northern fishermen call the half-way house to St. John's, and I venture to say that there is no other town in the Island of such importance as Catalina, and I think it is time that a public building be erected there. I think the people of Catalina, and in fact the people of the whole district should have had this long ago. From a common point of view there has been a great waste of money in paying high rents and hire. I believe enough money has been expended to build one. I give the petition my hearty support and I think the government would do well to consider that petition and erect a public building in the near future.

MR. TARGETT—Mr. Speaker, I want to give my support to the prayer of the petition presented by the hon. minister of posts and telegraphs. Catalina is a place of great importance and is a worthy place to erect a good public building to be used as court house. I give my hearty support to the prayer of the petition.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES—I beg to support the prayer of the petition presented by the minister of posts and telegraphs and trust that the opponents of Port Union will not be blaming me for asking for the erection of a public building at that place. I have often felt ashamed of the public conditions existing in Catalina, which is a very large town. If the building is erected it will be used as a court house and postal telegraph office, and Port Union wil not benefit thereby. At Catalina at present there is a building of about twelve by fifteen. This is altogether too small for the business of the community. The time has come for the erection of a public building there. I will do all in my power to assist the minister of posts and telegraphs in endeavoring to get the government to grant the sufficient sum of money for the erection of such a building. The present time is not a very suitable time for the erection of it because of the high cost of labor and material, but I have not much faith in the reduction of the prices, and I think when it comes up the members of the districts concerned will do all in their power to assist in the erection of this building.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—I ask leave to present a petition from South River, Clark's Beach, and Salmon Cove. It is signed by one hundred and five persons who ask for the modification of the present Prohibition Act. I would like to say that unlike the petition presented by the minister of posts and telegraphs this petition has a witness to the signatures of the one hundred and five gentlemen appended thereto. I believe the matter is signed in the proper way and that the signatures are absolutely correct, and I reserve my right to talk on the matter when the prime minister, in accordance with his manifesto, brings in the promised bill. Then I will have something to say.

HON. MINISTER FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—Mr. Speaker, when I left the House my desk was clear, but on returning I find that it is covered with petitions for a moderation of the Prohibition Act. I beg leave to present these petitions.

MR. BENNETT:—Like my hon. friend I also beg leave to present a number of petitions for a moderation of the Prohibition Act. These petitions are largely signed by a number of influential men in St. John's West. I trust that the petitions will receive the consideration from the Government that they deserve.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Gambo on the subject of moderation of the Prohibition Act.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave also to present a petition from the people of Carbonear on the same subject.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, Mr. Targett has just presented me with another batch of petitions on the subject of modification of the Prohibition Act from Trinity District. I beg to present these petitions.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen of the House may think it queer that I did not present these petitions myself: but the reason is that I understand that these petitions were sent around and signed by the people, and the people did not know what they meant.

HON. MR. FOOTE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of High Beach asking for telegraph communication from Fortune to Lamaline, a distance of about twenty-five miles. The petition also asks for a sum of money to repair the public highways in that section.

MR. CHEESEMAN:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of the petition just presented by my colleague. The people in that section of the District of Burin are greatly handicapped. There is not a harbor where they can moor a boat. It is a good farming area and there is a number of prosperous fishing settlements. The District of Burin has generally been neglected, but no section more than this one. I hope that the prayer of this petition will be granted.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of (name of place left out) for a sum of money to repair a road there which was opened up sixteen years ago and to which nothing has been done since. This road is very badly in need of repair and I hope the Government will see their way clear to grant the prayer of this petition.

MR. JONES:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the District of Twillingate on the subject of prohibition. Whether this petition was signed by the people or not I don't know.

HON. MINISTER POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present two petitions from the people of New Harbor on the subject of roads. I think the prayer of the petition will be granted.

HON. MINISTER POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the people of Clarenville also on the subject of roads.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—I beg leave to present a petition from the residents of Hodge's Cove, Trinity District, asking for a sum of money to build a public wharf. I support the prayer of the petition and the same be received and referred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from the inhabitants of Norman's Cove concerning telephone or telegraph communication. This is of more than passing interest. Norman's Cove is quite an important settlement, and is entirely cut off from outside places. The nearest telegraph office is 14 miles away. Communication by telegraph is very important. From the standpoint of revenue we stand to lose, but from the humane point of view something should be done. It may be the means of saving life. However, the money can be found I would support petitions coming in from the various settlements for telegraph communication. I know that if Mr. Gosse was in the House he would support this petition. He has been trying to get in touch with some men there for the fishery, and hasn't been able to do so. This whole matter of petitions for more adequate communication should receive the serious consideration of the Government.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this petition.

Mr. Bennett gave notice of question.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to present another petition, this time from the electors of Elliston in the District of Trinity. The petition is signed by Rev. W. W. Cotton and all the voters of Elliston, and asks for the sum of $10,000 to build a road from Elliston to the railway station. The matter of railway connection was taken up with the Government by the people of Elliston last year when they were asking for an extension of some three and a half miles to assist them in getting their produce to market. It seems that they have given up that idea for the present and are now asking for a road so built as to make it fit to operate a motor truck. Elliston is peculiarly situated, it being so rough there that they have no public wharf and they can only put out a stage in the spring which has to be taken in again in the winter. It is not a port of call for the coastal boats and during the past few years it has been difficult to get even schooners to call there. The people are debarred from all the or-their fish to Bonavista, a distance of four or five miles or to the station which is about the same distance away. They are working under grave difficulties and it is only with much labor and expense that they can get their produce and supplies back and forth. Now I had this in mind when I spoke yesterday on the matter of the Government making improvements on the motor roads in the vicinity of St. John's. Here we have a whole community numbering 1000 people, and all fishermen, except perhaps half a dozen storekeepers, and these men have to get their produce to market by means of this road. I am sure, therefore, that the Government will give their request every consideration altho it may seem rather high. We may not be able to give the full amount this year, but half of it could be voted and the balance next year, and when the money is granted a good road should be built. In the past thousands of dollars have been wasted on roads. I trust this petition will receive the most favorable consideration of the Government.

MR. TARGETT:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in supporting the prayer of this petition. I had in mind yesterday when this House was discussing the petition asking for the improvement of motor roads, that if these people could see how hard these fishermen have to work to get their fish off they would remember that there are other demands on the public funds more important than theirs. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that this petition will be given every consideration.

HON. PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I have much pleasure in giving my hearty support to the petition just presented by the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs as senior member for the District of Trinity. I have some personal knowledge of the matter to which the petition relates, having once upon a time been the representative of that constituency and I know that the situation is an exceedingly grave one. There is no harbor at Elliston and for the greater part of the year no vessels can call there. The distance to the railway station is but short, but there is no means of communication and I do think that the amount of taxes these people pay, their thrift, industry and the volumne of their business entitles them to the consideration for which they ask.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Speaker, as this seems to be one o fthe petitions likely to receive the sympathy of the Government, I give it my support, and I would remind the Government at the same time of a petition yesterday from the district which I represent making a similar request. I trust that when the petition now before the House is granted that the amount asked for in the other will also be voted as the need for it is just as great as that which the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs has referred to.

Hon. the Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the Legislative Council, informing him that that body had passed the Marine and Fisheries bill, and the St. Lawrence Pulp and Lumber Co. bill, both without amendment.

Hon. Prime Minister tabled report of General Hospital for year ended December 31st, 1918.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the Legislative Council, acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act to amend Chapter 11 of the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (third series), entitled 'Of the Department of Marine and Fisheries,'" without amendment.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act to Confirm a Contract between the Government and the St. Lawrence Timber, Pulp and Steamship Company, Limited," without amendment.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the bill entitled "An Act for the Preservation of Beavers" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

HON. MINISTER MARINE AND FISHERIES asked leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act respecting the Preservation of Beavers."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, I ask leave to introduce this bill. The last section has reference to state insurance and provides that any beaver skins being confiscated are to be appropriated by the Minister of Finance and Customs and the amount realized for them to be devoted to this purpose. It is the intention of the Government to inaugurate a system of state insurance under which every man from eighteen years upwards may be insured for a nominal amount so that our fishermen and others, when through accident or other cause, they pass out, their dependents will not be left entirely without the means of subsistence.

On motion the bill was read a first time and was ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Justice, the bill entitled "An Act respecting Former Enemy Aliens" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to notice and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider certain resolutions on the subject of the Postal and Telegraph Services.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—The house will have noticed that on the telegraph form now in use there are certain conditions with which the sender of a message has to comply with regard to the non-delivery or loss of telegrams or delays or loss in transmission. It says:

Now as regards the liability of the government for mistakes in messages, or delay in the transmission of messages, I don't think that we are confirmed in that attitude, in the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland, and the object of this bill is to make these conditions legal and whether the person, who sends the message, signs to those conditions or not, he is supposed to know, that the Government is not liable for any mistake in the message or delays in the transmission of the message. It is within the knowledge of the house, that errors have been made in transmission, whereby the sender of the message, or the person to whom it was sent, suffered certain losses, an error was made in numbers, five for fifteen or something like that. Well, it is unfortunate, that these mistakes should happen, but the postal telegraph officials are no mor einfallible than any other people, and I don't think that it would be in the interests of the community that we should be liable for mistakes of that nature.

Now the next section of this bill. section 2 refers to the registration fee. The registration fee at the present time is 3 cents and we are making it 5 cents. Our expenses are increasing day by day. Mails are accumulating, and we have to get more couriers and they are asking for higher wages, and this matter of an increase from three to five cents on the registration fee, will give us an increase in the revenue of fifty five hundred dollars, and this will help to meet the increasing expenses of the department.

The next clause relates to a delivery clause on parcels received from abroad containing dutiable goods. In Great Britain, they have a charge of four cents, or tuppence, on such parcels, and we propose to ask the same amount. This will give us an increase in the revenue of fifteen hundred dollars. The expenses for stationery, in connection with the department are increasing all the time, and this bill is introduced as a means to help these increasing expenses.

MR. BENNETT.—Mr. Chairman, before these resolutions go through I must say that it strikes me that this bill is a retrograde movement. In the establishment of a new department I think that if the house is unanimous that it is a move in the right direction that the head of the Postal Telegraph Department should be a member of the executive government, as the many things that come up it is very difficult for the minister of that department to handle them, unless he is a member of the executive government. Heretofore the Colonial Secretary has been the representative of that department in the executive, but owing to the many onerous duties that he has to perform it is impossible for him to account for the things that come up continually in that connection. The intention to insert a clause regarding the correct delivery of messages is one of a very serious character. It must be appreciated in this country that it is very difficult to get competent operators. While we have a great number who are thoroughly competent and do their work in a very satisfactory manner, I think that the house will agree with me that there have been many glaring instances of incompetency on the part of telegraph operators. My mind goes back to one case in particular, where because a message was incorrectly copied, a serious loss was realized by the sender. Business messages are useless unless they are correctly copied. The sender might be negotiating for fifteen hundred barrels of flour, fifteen hundred hogsheads of salt, and or fifteen hundred barrels of pork, or through some mistake the message might read, fifteen barrels, or one hundred and fifty barrels. Now I quite appreciate that owing to the wording of the telegraph form, that the government would not be liable for any such mistake, but I think that owing to the new order of things, that the government should make a system so perfect as to diminish the possibility of such mistakes, rather than put a premium on them. Under the present wording of the form, if through a mistake in transmission of a message, the sender suffers a serious loss, the government is not liable for any more than the amount of the cost of the message, and the operator is exempt from any blame in the matter. I say, sir, that the government ought to assume liability where it can be proved, that it was the fault of the operator who is incompetent, makes such a mistake, then the government is responsible for having given work to such a person.

Very serious losses have been suffered in the past by people who sent messages that were changed in transmission, and today with the market fluctuations, this is more likely to occur than ever before. I think, Sir, that instead of going back and reducing the liability that the Government, with a new department, which I hope will be so carried out, that the possibilities of mistakes will be diminished, ought to realize their responsibility, and when loss can be traced which is the fault of the operator, the Government should make good any loss that might occur. As to the increase of the registration fee, I think that is only right and proper. The Minister pointed out the need for the fifty-five hundred dollars which will be derived from the registration fee, and I hope that it will be usesful to him in carrying out the projects that I know that he has in view. He jokingly intimated that it would help to pay his salary, but I take that in the spirit in which it was offered, and I hope that he will get his increase, and regarding salaries, I hope that the Government will pay the heads of all departments a sufficient salary for the important work which they are doing. My experience in the past has been that we were paid a pittance for doing the most important work of the country. I don't believe that the people want these officials to work for less than a wage in proportion to their work.

I therefore want to express myself that in view of the inauguration of a new department, I regret that the Government should have found it necessary to lighten their responsibility by the introductiton of this section into the bill.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:— Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure every member of the Government appreciates the opinion expressed by Mr. Bennett, one of the members for St. John's West, when he so emphatically endorses the policy of the present Government in its creation of a Department of Posts and Telegraphs. From the observations which the hon. member and other members of the opposition have made during the past few weeks one would be led to conclude that the post office had been so highly organized and so efficiently run by the late Postmaster-General that improved reorganization and more efficient management were an impossibility. I am glad to note that in this matter, as also in the matter of the fish regulations, Mr. Bennett has changed his opinions and is now supporting the Government in its efforts to reorganize and improve postal and telegraph facilities in the Colony.

I am sure also that the entire House agrees with him in the opinions which he has just expressed on the matter of accuracy in telegraphic communication. It is a fact well known to every member of this chamber that the Postal Telegraph system has not reached to such a state of efficiency as to make it possible for the Government to issue an insurance policy with every telegraph message guaranteeing to indemnify the sender or the receiver, as the case may be, against any possibility of loss as a result of delays or inaccuracies in connection with the transmission and delivery of the telegraph message. During the past year, as will be seen from the Postal Department report recently tabled, there was a loss in operation of the Newfoundland Postal Telegraphs of more than $60,000. We all know that there are in the Island of Newfoundland very many telegraph offices which can never be regarded as paying propositions so far as telegraphy is concerned. At many of the offices there are junior and inexperienced officials and the salary which the services of these offices are worth, having regard to the volumne of business, does not justify payment importance of many of the offices cases does not justify the payment of as large a salary as is now paid, as is evidenced by the fact that there has been such a large loss on operations during the past year. It is necessary that these offices should be kept open for the general public welfare. Newfoundland is a shipping community, and it is highly desirable that telegraph offices should be scatterer all around our coast to aid shipping. In many sections mails ars exceedingly slow and at some seasons of the year the irregularity of mails is very great. The result is that it has been the policy of past administrations and is also the policy of this administration that, so far as possible, telegraph offices should be maintained in as many towns as possible, in spite of the fact that these telegraph offices cannot by any stretch of the imagination be regarded as a paying proposition. The past government, of which the Hon. Mr. Bennett was a member, felt, and this Government feels, that it is better to have a telegraph office in a town served by a very junior official who is not an expert telegraphist but who can manage to handle with reasonable despatch the small volume of business which is transacted at that office, than to have no office at the place. As a matter of public policy it is also desirable that there should be as many offices as possible. Certainly it is also desirable that every telegraph operator should be an efficient and capable official, but the manner. It would not be impossible and the volume of business transacted there are not such as to justify the public of the country in paying such a high-class official as would guarantee absolute accuracy in the receipt and despatch of telegrams.

It is just as well for us as a house to face the actual situation as it is, honestly and in a straightforward way to get high-class telegraph operators to work in such an office, because in many of these offices there is not a half hour's work per day, and an able, efficient and ambitious telegraph operator would not hold such an office, even though that operator were paid twice the salary that he could earn in a busy office, because for an industrious and capable person there is no work more trying than doing nothing. While the postal telegraph service does not pay as a business undertaking, yet from the standpoint of the entire colony and convenience of its people and the general advantages to trade, it does indirectly pay as a public utility, but no government would be justified in putting into a large number of the telegraph offices in this country such highly-paid and efficient officials as the class of telegraph operators employed by the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, the Commercial Cable Company or other cable company at such offices as Heart's Content, Bay Roberts and Carbonear.

If the government had such a class of operators it might be practical for the government to stand behind telegraph messages and guarantee their accuracy in every detail, but if such were attempted the increased expenditure would be enormous and Mr. Bennett would be one of the very first to attack the government for attempting to apply highly expensive methods and machinery to a service the income of which alone does not warrant the expenditures already made. Such a procedure would be just as foolish as that of employing a five-ton truck to deliver a package of needles. It is the policy o fthe present administration to make the telegraph system throughout the country as accurate as possible to make it, having regard to the class of telegraph operators which it is possible for the government to employ in many of the smaller offices, the receipts of which are not sufficient to justify the existence of the office at all, but such offices should as a matter of public policy be kept open to deal with emergency cases, report shipping and handle the occasional commercial transaction requiring a despatch which could not otherwise be secured. It is the policy of the administration to open additional telegraph offices so that as the years go by the various sections of the Island will be less isolated and the people will have greater facilities, but as these offices are opened from time to time there is no hope that the revenue therefrom will be such as to justify the payment of an official of such experience and ability as would justify the people of the colony in guaranteeing that operator's accuracy. My hon. friend, who was for so many years colonial secretary, is well aware of the fact that when it is the intention of the postal department to open up a new office in some small town an experienced operator is sent to that town for a short period of time to give some young man or young woman living in the neighborhood a sufficient smattering of telegraphy to enable that person to handle at a very slow rate o fspeed the small volume of business to be transacted at that place. It frequently happens that as the years pass the volume of business increases, with the result that a more experienced and more highly paid operator is appointed to the post, but there are numerous cases in which young men and young women with but a few months' experience will be handling the small volume of business transacted at such minor offices, with the result that delays and inaccuracies may occur. To guarantee the prompt delivery of a telegraph message is under many circumstances in the outports of Newfoundland impracticable. For the purposes of economy it is impossible to employ a messenger, the telegraph operator is the postal official, telegraph operator and messenger. An effort has been made in the past and is being continued by the present administration to combine under one official in many places the post office and telegraph office for the purposes of public economy, as in many cases there is not enough actual business to be transacted in both offices to employ more than half the time of one official. Certainly my observations do not apply to the more import offices and to the places where there are frequent mail connections, but there are many offices in Newfoundland of the class to which I refer, and it is consequently impossible for the government that is for the taxpayers of the colony, to hold themselves responsible for inaccuracies which might occur under such circumstances. The reason why the Anglo-American Telegraph Company have not any considerable number of offices throughout the country is because that company boasts of its accuracy, and unless there is a sufficient volume of business in a given locality to justify that company in paying a telegraph operator there whose accuracy can be assured, then no office is opened. Such a policy cannot be followed by the government in its postal telegraph system, because that system is not a business proposition, run as a money-making concern. It is an undertaking carried on at a financial loss, having regard to its own income, because of its importance to the colony as a public utility. The conditions under which each message is sent, which conditions must be signed by the sender, include a paragraph expressly relieving the government from liability for non-delivery, delays or inaccuracies in connection with any telegraph message to any amount over the cost of the message. This is not a new provision. Mr. Bennett knows that that provision has been on the postal telegraph form for a long time. As a matter of fact, when he was colonial secretary rules and regulations were made covering that very point, and stating that the government and the postal department were not liable except as above.

Doubts has arisen as to whether rules and regulations in that regard were legal, and it has been questioned as to whether the fact that the sender of the message signs such a declaration is legally binding upon the sender and receiver and does really relieve the postal department and the government from responsibility under certain circumstances. The late government and the postmaster-general, when these regulations were drafted by the postmaster-general and approved of by the late executive government, thought that that was so, but as doubts have arisen the present attorney-general has advised that the matter should be made quite clear by statute. This bill is consequently merely carrying out the decision of the late government put into effect by the late postmaster-general and approved of by Mr. Bennett himself. I would point out that even a commercial company such as the Anglo-American Telegraph Company, an organization whose telegraph officials have the efficiency and worth as telegraph operators which the large salaries which they receive demand, do not guarantee the accuracy of telegraph messages.

If my hon. friend would refer to the wording of the forms which he uses every day he will see that his attention is called to the fact that no guarantee whatever is given with respect to the accuracy of a telegraph message sent over Anglo lines until that message is repeated, which is done at half the cost o fthe original message, and even then the damages are limited to the sum of $50.00 unless a special valuation was put upon the message at the time it was sent. The criticisms of the honorable member are consequently entirely without foundation in fact. It is absurd for him to criticise the present administration for taking a retrograde step, because this step was taken by the late postmaster-general and approved of by Mr. Bennett himself. It was, in my opinion, a correct step. If commercial companies of the standing of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company which have trained officials receiving large salaries, do not guarantee accuracy of messages, then it is absurd to expect a guarantee from the Newfoundland Postal Telegraphs, which is not being run as a business undertaking and is necessarily staffed in many cases by junior officials, because the salaries paid are not such as to justify the services of a highly trained and highly efficient operator. In offices like those in St. John's and the more important outport offices, the staff of the Postal Telegraphs is highly trained and efficient and messages received and transmitted by such officials are liable to no larger percentage of inaccuracies and delays than in any commercial telegraph company in the world, but it is impossible to extend such an assurance to telegraph messages received at and sent from small telegraph offices the total receipts of which may not amount to $20.00 a month.

I fear that Mr. Bennett was talking politics rather than sense when he criticised the government for not asking the taxpayers of this country to guarantee the accuracy of a message under such circumstances. He referred to an ideal state in which good telegraph lines with not too many offices on one line were efficiently maintained by a full and capable staff of line repairers, with offices manned by expert telegraphers. Such ideal conditions do not appertain in Newfoundland, and it will be many years before they do appertain. To make any attempt to put such a system into operation in Newfoundland would mean an enormous reduction in number of telegraph offices throughout the country. That was not the policy of the late administration, of which Mr. Bennett was a member, nor is it the policy of this administration.

I am pleased to note that the other sections of the bill have the support of the hon. members of the opposition, namely, that the registration fee be increased from three cents to five cents and also that there should be a delivery charge of five cents on each foreign package containing dutiable goods. The present registration fee of three cents is not sufficient to cover the cost of the registration branch of the postal service. Still less it is capable of carrying the postal guarantee to refund the loser of any registered letter the value of the letter up to a maximum of $10.00. The volume of foreign parcel post business in very considerable. During recent years the increase has been rapid. A five cents delivery tax is a very small charge, can easily be paid by each person who imports dutiable goods and helps to defray the cost of handling the package.

DR. JONES:—Mr. Chairman, I understand clearly the reason for limiting the liability of the government in this matter, because if all messages that were missent, or incorrectly sent; if the government were to assume liability for all these then it would break the Government. But I think that there should be some means adopted by which these errors would be overcome. I would suggest to the postmaster-general that he should have a sort of check system, whereby when a message is received, a report is sent in to the department by the receiving operator, giving the time it was delivered. This should be simple, and it would be effective. I know of many cases where telegrams have been two days on the way, and have been lying for hours in one of the offices. I think it would simplify matters if a report was sent in, and if there was a delay, the reason for the delay given. I have had telegrams delayed two days, and when I inquired why, the only satisfaction I got was that the line was out of order, and I think that system would eliminate a lot of the trouble in this connection. I suggest this to the minister, and ask him to give it his consideration.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman, I would like to correct the impression which Mr. Bennett has given the house, that this bill is a retrograde movement on the part of the Government. That is not so. We are trying to legalise the rules and regulations that were made by the late postmaster-general. The Postal Telegraph Act contains in Section 8 the following provisions: (Reads provisions). The late post-master-general represented that the government should not be liable for any error in the transmission of any message, in the non-delivery of a message, or delayed delivery of a message, and he advised that rules and regulations tc that effect be published in The Royal Gazette two years ago. When it was brought to my notice. as Attorney General, I came to the conclusion that the postmaster-general under the provisions of Section 118, Consolidated Statutes, had no power to make such regulations, saying that the Government would not be liable for any loss caused by error in transmission or delay, and now, I thought it best to advise the present minister to legalise the regulations made by the late postmaster-general and approved of by the late executive government, and the statement that this is a retrograde movement is not borne out by the facts, and it was only because they were not legal that I suggested to the present minister to have them legalised.

Mr. BENNETT—Mr. Chairman, the hon. the minister of justice has said that I misunderstood the position with regard to the Postal Telegraph department. I wish to inform the house that I did not misunderstand the position. I realise that under conditions laid down, that the government is exempt from any liability for errors in the transmission of messages. As to whether they would stand in law is a matter for a legal mind to decide, but I want to point out that with the establishment of a new department the opening of new offices in such places as outlined by the hon. the prime minister, where the revenue was not sufficient to permit the engagement of competent operators, but times are changing, we see men starting in new lines of business, establishing themselves in the different parts of the Island, and the importance of telegraph offices is greater than ever before.

Efficiency and accuracy is absolutely essential to the people in carrying on of all business. I would suggest to the minister, if at all possible, to have all those smaller offices in certain sections linked up by telephones, that is, where you have a centre with an efficient and capable operator in charge so that you could speak from the one station to any particular locality. But in view of the fact that the department has no funds and that there is no policy like this in contemplation for outport offices, is it not worth while considering. It is a serious matter and going to be more serious as years go by, and I think that the policy of the past has been a mistake. We have in the past been too ready to accede to the wishes of the different districts to open telegraph offices. The whole position is bristling with difficulties. Money is the greatest factor and it is necessary to have to pay for efficient help. I think that some policy should be evolved so that all messages passing over the lines could be carefully and cautiously checked with a view to eliminating inaccuracies.

MR. FOX—Mr. Speaker, naturally I am in support of the resolutions as a whole, but I doubt whether the government can go as far as they liked, under this section (1), and escape all liability, under the circumstances; and I doubt the wisdom of operating the Postal Telegraph lines differently than those operated by the Western Union and Anglo Companies. We have the statement of the prime minister himself that in several outports the Postal Telegraphs are operated by inexperienced, inefficient and underpaid operators to do the business entrusted to them by the public. This is certainly a nice state of affairs, considering the important messages and the risks that have to pass through the hands of such inefficient operators. If that is the way the Postal Telegraphs department intends to continue to do business, it is just as well for them to shut up show now. I fear that as we are going to have a new contract, with far more restrictions, to attempt to operate the lines under it, that we are going to have more business than in the past. We know that the Western Union and Anglo Companies have enjoyed the cream of the business in this country, and we cannot afford to escape all liability and jog along with an efficient service, but rather adopt remedial measures with a view towards establishing more efficiency in this very necessary public department. For example there have been cases brought under my notice where in doubt was cast upon the secrecy of messages that passed through the telegraph offices, and it is only another indication that the business of the Postal Telegraph department is not run as it should be.

Now, I think, that before we attempt to set up the position that the Postal Telegraphs, admittedly inefficient, is going to have the strictest contract in the country, that we ought have a contract, at all events, under which all other companies are operated, because the result is going to have the strictest contract in the country, that we ought have a contract, at all events, under which all other companies are operated, because the result is going to be that we are going to have far more business to do. I think that we ought not be content with complacently admitting the fact that our telegraphs are being inefficiently handled and that we ought, if we are going to provide the outharbors with postal telegraph offices, see that hey are efficiently manned and capable of transmitting messages in an efficient manner. Because, after all, the life of trade depends upon the staff of any particular office. I should think that when this contract is attempted to be formed, under which an attempt will be made to lessen the liability of the government, that we ought not go outside the terms of the ordinary contract provided by the other telegraph companies; and in particular we ought see that the officials provided for the department are up to that stage where the public can depend upon the department for the efficient service required from it.

In connection with sections two and three of these resolutions, may I ask the minister how far this will increase all postal rates, and does it interfere with the international or universal regulations?

MINISTER OF POSTS & TELEGRAPHS—It does not interfere whatever.

MR. FOX—But dealing with the stamp fees, are they not analagous with the universal?

MINISTER OF POSTS & TELEGRAPHS—We will bring in an act to cover that.

MR. FOX—Now as regards the registration fees I would like to ask what is the value of registration in this country. The only value that I know of is that the registered letter gives the tip to any person who wants to rob from the post office. I know of certain cases where letters, arising out of registration, never reached their destination. I have had occasion in the past to send money in the form of bills from remote outharbours to St. John's, and, rather than register them and draw the attention of a would-be thief to them, I put them in an envelope and hardly took the trouble to seal it properly. The precaution only means more trouble for anybody because, I understand, that the mere fact of registration guarantees nothing, beyond the protection of ten dollars. Thus there is no liability on the postal department beyond seeing that there is a hand check on the mail. I know a case in which four hundred dollars was sent by a poor woman from an outharbor to St. John's and that is the last she ever heard of it. I think that particular attention should be given to the more efficient carrying out of the registration system. No benefit is derived from the fact that we are charged more for it. You get no returns, but rather you increase the risk. If there is a hand check why not enforce regulations that will perfect the hand check and guarantee the accuracy of any registered mail so that it will be received and delivered properly. I draw these matters to the attention of the minister, particularly the necessity of the efficiency of the telegraph offices. Unfortunately there has been a looseness in the past as regards the privacy of the business transacted. I would suggest that he tighten up the whole system and guarantee above all else the secrecy of the department.

MINISTER OF POSTS & TELEGRAPHS—Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the remarks that have been made by the members for St. John's East and West, but, really in justice to the Postal Telegraphs department. I cannot admit that there is greater inefficiency in the department than in the Anglo offices. My short experience with the department is that our number of mistakes were not as great as the Anglo's. The inefficiency is not altogether caused by inefficient operators in outports. Perhaps the most experienced and most reputable operator may sometimes make an error, because we have traced one or two errors to head office here, the work of supposedly efficient operators.

I quite appreciate that under the conditions that have obtained in Newfoundland and is obtaining, not only in connection with the Postal Telegraph department, but in all our departments, it is almost impossible to get an efficient service, because there are too much politics in connection with appointments in the civil service. When a position of trust is opened it is not the competent official who gets the appointment, but the person that may be incompetent and who has greater pull with some politician. That is what I have been trying to impress upon my colleagues and I take occasion to mention it now to our friends opposite, although, perhaps, they are not in a similar position just now as they are not in power, as their recommendations now would not have the same weight as coming from the government side Now that is what we have to guard against and I do not see that I should do in that connection any better than has been done in the past, because no matter what opinion I may have as regards the appointment of efficient officials, one is up against importunities and political needs of colleagues. As long as you are up against party politics and political expediency conditions will become no better.

With regard to the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Fox, namely, that the business of the Anglo is carried on with greater efficiency than by the Postal Telegraphs, I think that our business is carried on just as good, but the reason is that the Anglo do a much larger business. If you want to send a message outside this countrw direct you got to go to the Anglo, because the Postal cannot send it since the Commercial Cable Company got out This is a most unfortunate circumstance and we have lost considerable revenue on that account and we are trying to remedy it as much as possible. I quite appreciate that a retrogressive step is detrimental to all concerned to have our liability lessened by statute, but it will not in any way tend to lessen the courtesy on the aprt of the Postal Department.

HON. MINISTER POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS.—Of course we are anxious to make the service of the department as perfect as possible and as has been pointed out by the hon. member for St. John's West Mr. Bennett, that owing to the fact that the population of the Dominion is so scattered there is a very great difficulty in giving facilities for the conduct of the business, and also it is hard to get good work done because of the small salaries. With regard to the telephones, no matter how efficient the employees may be, mistakes are likely to be made in the transmission of the messages. There is always the danger of mistakes being made in the transmission of the messages from one place to another but nevertheless the telephone system is appreciated and the four or five telephone offices we have down Smith Sound, T.B., are working satisfactorily, and even when the operators are most efficient mistakes are bound tc occur. It is our desire to make the service as perfect as possible. I am glad to be able to take note of the suggestion made by Dr. Jones and it may be helpful in getting operators more attentive to their business, and I will accept any suggestion which may cause improvements. The operators no doubt find their work monotonous and may sometimes leave their office longer than they should consequently messages are unduly delayed in delivery. We hope to have this remedied.

MR. HIGGINS:—I do not intend to delay the committee but this is essentially a subject of importance and I appreciate the position the Honorable Minister finds himself in. I am fully in accord with the desire to see the most efficient service possible created. The point I take it of those on this side in offering a word of criticism is in the nature of drawing the attention of the Minister who is primarily the person responsible for the drafting of the resolutions ,to the necessity that the Minister ought to make the regulations as reasonable as possible. I view the matter of the Posts and Telegraphs of the Colony as a matter of quasi utility and commercial enterprise combined, and in other words the immediate idea in having Government control of the telegraph system is that the interests of the country apart from looking upon the commercial interests can be best looked after and the Government of the day may at their wish make any alteratio nor extension. Of course there is a difference between that class of organization and the other organizations that operate here. I agree with the idea that we must of necessity accept the difference. It is peculiar that you will not get out of the people who work under the control of the State the same efficient service as you will derive from a private organization, and for that reason there is sure to be an amount of difficulty experienced and some effort ought to be made to do as good as our competitors. I take it that the idea has been to encourage business people to trust their own service, and I think wherever possible we should try to make it a point that whatever business we have ought to be done through our own service and not the Anglo and that is our duty, and in supporting this I hope the service will warrant the support of the people. I also take the point raised by my colleague Mr. Fox, in drawing the attention of the Minister that under this section the legislation enacted shall not go into force until the next session of the legislature and then only when it has been laid before both Houses within fourteen days after it has been completed, and if not complete during this session well they may be next year. So we shall be able to see that regulations shall be as reasonable as possible. I do ask that the contract be nearly as good as that of our competitors and endeavour to give the public as good a contract as possible and as long as that is being done there will not be very much difficulty. But I think we ought to recognize that some difficulty will be met with as long as the operators are poorly paid and as long as we have State control we are not going to have as good a service as we might otherwise get. I also wish to refer to the question of the safety of registered letters and it is unfortunately a fact and a sad thing that registered letter larcenies are prevalent. And I do hope that some system will be devised by the Hon. Minister whereby he will try to restore the confidence of the public in that branch of the service.

But it is an undeniable fact that registered letters offer no security and the only value now of them is that one is enabled to have his letter traced but beyond that there is no value in having a letter registered. Really that was the intention when the act was originally brought in here. From my long experience I know that the Minister in this matter is going to have an up-hill task. I only make these remarks to remind the House of the difficulty the Minister is at all times laboring under when the system is under State control, but I do want to see as efficient service given to the people as is possible and make the competition with the other systems as reasonable as possible. Personally, in light of my long knowledge of the postal service, I do not find anything objectionable in the resolutions.

MR. BENNETT:—I would like to ask the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs if the work of the Government is still being done by the Anglo and if any steps have been taken by the Government to have connection with Canso Station?

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—I may say that this matter is receiving the attention of the Government at the present time. Some meetings have been held at which deputations from the Anglo have attended and that we are trying to do something to open up that connection.

MR. MacDONNELL:—In connection with registered letters, I wish to make the suggesttion that the Department of Posts should the money orders in this way, that an order for more than fifty dollars ought to be allowed. Fifty dollars is the greatest amount one can remit by money order at present. If you want to send two hundred dollars it will cost you more than you would pay if you could get an order for two hundred. At the present time the largest amount of money that can be sent on a money order is $50.00. I would suggest as one way out of the difficulty that the amount that can be sent on one money order be considerably increased.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS:—Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the remarks that have been made by the members for St. John's East and West, but really in justice to the Postal Telegraphs Department, I cannot admit that there is greater efficiency in the department than in the Anglo offices. My short experience with the department is that our number of mistakes are not as great as the Anglo's. The inefficiency is not altogether caused by inexperienced operators in the outports. Perhaps the most experienced and most reputable operator may sometimes make an error, because we have traced one or two errors to the head office, the work of supposedly efficient operators.

I quite appreciate that under the conditions that have obtained in Newfoundland, not only in connection with the Postal Telegraph Department, but in all our departments, it is almost impossible to get an efficient service, because there are too much politics in connection with appointments in the civil service. When a position of trust is opened it is not always the competent official who gets the appointment, but the person that may be less competent but who has greater pull with some politician. That is what I have been trying to impress upon my colleagues and I take occasion to mention it now to our friends opposite. Now that is what we have to guard against. As long as you are up against party politics and political expediency conditions will become no better.

With regard to the remarks of Mr. Fox, namely, that the business of the Anglo is carried on with greater efficiency than by the Postal Telegraphs, I think that our business is carried on just as good, but the reason the Anglo do a much larger business is because we have no cable communication. If you want to send a message outside this country you must go to the Anglo, because the Postal cannot send a message since we discontinued business with the Commercial Cable Company. This is a most unfortunate circumstance and we have lost considerable revenue on that account and we are trying to remedy it as much as possible.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported, that they had considered the matter to them referred, had passed the resolutions without amendment, and recommended that a bill be introduced to give effect to the same.

On motion this report was received and adopted and the bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Postal and Telegraph Services" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act to Amend the Consolidated Statutes of Newfoundland (Third Series) entitled 'Of the Encouragement of Agriculture,'" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above, and that it be sent to the Legislative Council with a message requesting the amendment of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act Respecting the issue of Certain Debenture Bonds of the Colony."

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received an dadopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ,the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to Regulate the Exportation of Salt Codfish."

Mr. Scammell took the chair of committee.

SIR JOHN CROSBIE:—Mr. Chairman, I do not think that any serious attempt is being made to cope with the salt situation, for if we have to wait ten days for something to be done and at the end of that time find that the only thing accomplished has been the sending of a message to the Secretary of State conditions are indeed in a bad way. Only today I sent to one of our importers for a hundred hogsheads of salt to send to my district and that man begged me to take only fifty hogsheads, and there is not a hundred hogsheads of salt today in that very place, and the same thing applies to the majority of the other places in town. The statement is being made that there is more salt here than there really is, but that is not going to help us in the least; it is just as well for people to know just what they have to contend with. If the Green Bay vessels and the schooners from Trinity Bay and other places should strike in here there would not be a grain of salt left in the city within six or eight days, and these vessels have to ocme here for their supplies so you will see that the only reason why we have any salt at all left today is because the ice is to the northward.

Now does the Government think for one moment that they are doing what they ought to do in this matter or do they think that in their failure to deal with a situation as grave as this that they are playing fair to the people who put them here. Despite the fact that this danger which threatens us has been pointed out to them in all its seriousness, they make absolutely no attempt whatever to do anything beyond havings Bowrings send a message to their people in Liverpool a day or two ago. I have never heard of such way in which the opposition press are unparrelled hypocricy. I admit that the Government are not to blame for the strike in Cadiz, but if the matter had been attended to at the proper time this trouble could have been averted.

I met a prominent exporter to-day (it was not Hon. Walter Baine Grieve either) who told me that here was not enough salt in the city for Placentia Bay, and he knew what he was talking about. What I say is that if the government did not take seriously what I said with regard to the salt situation, they at least ought to have taken the miniser of marine and fisheries at his word when he admitted that the situation was serious but not quite so bad as I had described it, but evidently they have ignored both warnings because there is nothing here whatever to prove that we are going to get a load of salt within the next twenty or thirty days, if we except the message of Bowring Bros. and the request to Sir Edgar Bowring to give what help he can, and worse still. it is only a day or two since that message was sent. Now if they had even done that much the day after I spoke on the matter, there might be some sympathy for them and it would have shown some anxiety or at least willingness on their part to do something. If we get no salt now the government are to blame, and if there is no salt there will be no fish, in which case we will not need to worry ourselves about motor roads or any other kind of roads.

I want to suggest to the government not to pay any attention whatever to exporters, to ignore them in this matter completely, but get down to hard pans and send a good man to Cadiz from England, if necessary, but for goodness sake take the thing seriously and make some effort to avert the disastrous results that must ensue from any further inactivity on their part. The minister of marine and fisheries knows as well as I do that Liverpool salt is absolutely unfit for our requirements, and instead of trying to secure salt from there an effort should be made in some other direction. Send a steamer to Turk's Island and get salt. My idea is not to critcise the government in anything they may be trying to do. I am serious in what I say with regard to the gravity of our position I see the hon. minister of finance and customs smiling I have been watching the smile coming over his face for some time, but this is no joke and he might have reason to cry before we get through with the consequences of the Government's neglect in this matter. The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries knows that the situation is serious, the Prime Minister admitted yesterday that it was serious, and eery hon. member of this House must see it. If the Cadiz strike continues, where are we going to be? And to say in the face of all this that after a warning of what was bound to happen if something was not done immediately, messages are sent out on the 25th and 27th, the latter only today, surely something must be lacking. I want to pass this priate message back to the Phime Minister and in doing so I would say to him and his Government that they should not hesitate to send twenty-five messages like that if they would produce the desired results. It is a matter that we are all in sympathy with, and if I knew at this moment how I could assist in this crisis, I would have no hesitation whatever in offering my help.

I would suggest that the Government try to get a steamer in New York, Halifax or anywhere they can get one and send her to Turk's Island for a cargo of salt even if it does cost a little more. It is no longer a matter of cost and the fishermen must have the salt if it is to be got. If fishermen want 200 hobsheads of salt to go to Labrador, it is no use, as my han. friend Captain Jones knows, for them to put a hundred hogsheads aboard their vessel because they know they have only enough for half a voyage, and they cannot come back for more when that is used.

I repeat that no one knows how long the strike in Cadiz is going to last, and again I enter the plea on behalf of the country that the Government lose no more time in availing of every means at their disposal to secure a sufficient supply of salt to see the fishermen over the season.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Chairman, just a word in reference to the statement of Sir John Crosbie wherein he referred to the fact that a certain section of the press having reported that the fishery export resolutions passed this House unanimously. That statement by the press was hardly correct. We on this side of the House discussed the resolutions fully and criticized them, and while the Leader of the Opposition practically endorsed them, there were sections which neither he nor anyone else on this side was in favor of. We knew, however, that the Government meant to put the resolutions through no matter what objections were raised and that it would be futile for us to argue the thing further, but we did succeed in having an amendment, moved I think by Mr. Fox, added and when that was accomplished we felt that something had been done to improve the resolutions because it gave the exporters a chance to consult with the exportation board before any definite action was decided upon in the autumn.

I agree with what Sir John Crosbie up their minds to put the resolution through and we criticized them according to our light, and finding nothing further could be done, decided to let them pass amended.

I want to put myself on record that I do not agree with the regulations in their entirely. I agree that regulations of some kind are necessary, and I agree with some of the sections, but I don't want it understood that in voting for these regulations, that I endorsed them in their entirety.

MR. WALSH:—Mr. Chairman, I rise to my place this evening to endorse the appeal that has been made by Sir John Crosbie, with regard to the salt question, and with him, I am ready to give any assistance, that may be in my power, in this matter, so that we will not be placed with the conditions that he has referred to. Not only should we use every means in our power to prevent this catastrophe, but we should see to it that the stocks of salt at present in this city, and in this country, are not sold at a higher price. This is one of the foremost planks in the government platform, to see that profiteering was not allowed to continue. There has not been any importation of salt in the last month, and I know of a case where arrangements were made by planters in the district of Placentia and St. Mary's, to buy salt at a certain figure, and a day or two ago they found that salt had already advanced thirty cents per hogshead. We have no indication that it will not advance another dollar, and it is the bounden duty of the house to put a stop to this. If they are going to hold the support of the country, they must protect the interests of the fishermen, and in protecting the fisermen you are protecting the interests of every individual in the country. As has been so well said by hon. members in this house, the whole country is dependent upon the fishery for existence. I think that it is a lamentable state of affairs after the warning that he gave ten days ago, for Sir John Crosbie to have to get up, and make the statement he has made here to-day, and I am sure that nobody will question his knowledge of the conditions.

I want to endorse the appeal that has been made by him to the government to put into action the machinery that will prevent a state of affairs, coming to pass, that may be ruinous to our very existence. I don't offer this as a criticism, and I have no desire to hamper the government. There is one that will be prouder next fall to know that the government made good as to the salt situation. We are facing a situation to-day that we never had to face before. We are paying higher prices for everything to-day than we ever paid before, and for these reasons we should make an honest attempt to see that at least the fishermen, who are going to the fishery, will not be hampered by a lack of salt. Sir John Crosbie has stated that the salt you can get at Liverpool is not as good as it might be, but that it will serve the purpose. I do not pretend to know as much about this as he does, but I am prepared to accept his statement, and if you cannot get salt where you are negotiating for it with the high commissioner in London, why not dispatch the best possible man you can get, where you can get it, even if it cost ten thousand dollars. It would be better to spend ten thousand dollars to prevent this disaster which threatens us, than to come in here and grant that amount for purposes which are not so important. I merely throw these suggestions out, in the hope that some that is taking place with regard to salt this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reports that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs, the bill entitled "An Act to amend 'The Business Profits Tax Act, 1917,'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice, the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Montreal Trust Co.," was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Purusuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. X of 9-10 Geo. V entitled 'An Act with respect to existing Tenancies and Ejectment therefrom,'" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the bill entitled "An Act respecting Licenses to Cut Hardwood" was read a second time, and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move that this bill be now read a second time. It is a well known fact that the country contains a considerable quantity of birch and witch hazel timber. This timber is largely used in connection with the important shipbuilding industry of the country. When a license is given to cut timber under the Crown Lands' Act that license gives the right to cut all timber on land subject to the license. This bill provides that the Governor-in-Council may under certain circumstances grant the right to cut birch and witch hazel only over ungranted crown lands. Certainly it does not confer the right upon the government to grant any such license with respect to timber areas already held under the Crown Lands' Act, but all areas over which private individuals have not secured rights may under this bill be subject to special birch and witch hazel timber cutting licenses. The necessity for this bill arises because of the fact that certain capitalists are prepared to invest large sums of money in the erection of veneer mills. It has been found that Newfoundland birch and witch hazel are most suitable woods for use of veneer. This industry has already been substantially developed because of the progressive business ability of Messrs. Dawe of Bay Roberts. It is their intention to consider the extension of their operations, and it is quite probable that other capitalists are engaged in similar undertakings throughout the country. The bill provides that the applicant shall satisfy the governor in council that he is prepared to establish a factory for the manufacture of veneer and give to the governor-in-council satisfactory proof that he is financially able to carry out the enterprise. No trees of less diameter at the base than eight inches may be cut under licenses under this act. The power to make rules and regulations is vested in the governor-in-council. This is the development of an entirely new enterprise, and I am sure will receive the endorsation of the house.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—Is it the intention to cut this wood on all crown lands?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—The bill makes it possible for the governor-in-council to grant licenses with respect to all crown lands and that includes what is commonly known as the three-mile limit. The governor-in-council would, however, in its discretion, see that licenses were not granted respecting the three-mile limit under circumstances as to interfere with the use of the three-mile limit by the fishermen for shipbuilding purposes.

SIR M. P. CASHIN:—While granting those privileges you should be prepared to see that the fishermen are protected and people may go in and mow down the three-mile limit indiscrimin-ately, besides there is a shortage just now of witch hazel and juniper. That is the only objection I have to the bill.

Mr. Speaker informed the house that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act to amend the Judicature Act," without amendment.

Mr. Speaker informed the house that he had received a message from the Legislative Council acquainting the House of Assembly that they had passed the bill sent up entitled "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Codfish" with some amendments, in which they request the concurrence of the House of Assembly.

On motion the said amendments were read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

It was moved and seconded that when the house rises it adjourn until three of the clock on to-morrow afternoon.

The house then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 28th, 1920.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs tabled the Customs returns, 1918-1919.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—Mr. Speaker, I beg to table a report of customs for the year ending 1919.

MR. SULLIVAN:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition from St. Bride's for a road from St. Bride's to Cape St. Mary's, and from Cape St. Mary's to Lear's Cove, in all about six miles. There is a road now part of the way, but a large part of the distance is unmarked. The people of Fox Harbor and from other places in Placentia Bay have to use this road. They have been asking for this from year to year but nothing has been done. There is also the fact that wrecks occur along this coast and the men cannot find their way to where any people live. I hope, sir, that this petition will receive the careful consideration of the government.

MR. SINNOTT:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to support the prayer of this petition.

MR. GOSSE:—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present six petitions representing 431 voters of Harbor Grace District for a moderation of the Prohibition Act.

MR. BENNETT:—To ask the Hon. Colonial Secretary in the absence of the Minister of the Minister of Militia to lay on the table of the house a statement of all monies paid through the Militia Department to the Board of Review on separation allowances from the 15th November, 1919, to the present date giving the names of those comprising said board and the amount paid to each member, also number of claims considered during the above period.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Tabled this report.

Committee of the whole on bill entitled "An Act to amend the Profits Tax Act of 1917."

On motion the house resolved itself into committee of the whole on this bill.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS:—In section two I would like to make a slight alteration in the reading by striking out the word "pay" and substituting therefor the word "optional" and the word "second" for "first," and by striking out the words "said bank or banking corporation" and substituting the word "minister." The object of this is to have the option with the Minister instead of with the Bank.

The committee rose and reported that they had passed the bill without amendment.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the amendments made by the legislative council in and upon the Bill sent up entitled "An Act to provide for the Standardization of Codfish" were read a second time and concurred in and it was ordered that a message be sent to the legislative council acquainting that body that the said amendments had been agreed to without amendment.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the issue of certain Debenture Bonds of the Colony" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed being entitled as above and that it be sent to the legislative council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the Bill entitled "An Act to regulate the Exportation of Salt Codfish" was read a third time and passed, and it was ordered that it be engrossed being, entitled as above, and that it be sent to the legislative council with a message requesting the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Finance and Customs the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the Bill entitled "An Act to amend 'The Business Profits Tax Act, 1917.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the bill with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole to consider the bill entitled "An Act to amend Cap. X of 9-10 Geo. V entitled 'An Act with respect to Existing Tenancies and Ejectment therefrom.'"

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Hibbs took the chair of committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The chairman from the committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred, and had passed the bill without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the said bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Preservation of Beavers" was read a second time and ordered to be referred to a committee of the whole house on to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—The object of this bill is to permit the killing of Beavers in certain sections of the country where beaver are very numerous. The government has taken up the matter with the Game Board and they have the killing of beavers allowed in certain sections under regulations prepared by the Game Board and submitted to governor-in-council and made law. There is no intention to allow the public to kill all they like. There are some sections that are teeming with beavers, but other sections must be protected. Trappers will receive licenses that will be good for a certain section of the country and for a certain time. There will be a limited number and nobody will probably be allowed to kill more than fifty. These will be sold at a price fixed by the Game Board and will therefore be under the sole control of the board. In America to-day great prices are being received for beavers. They will be exported by the Game Board who will also be the sole exporters. The profits received will go towards a fund of compulsory state insurance.

SIR MICHAEL CASHIN:—I would like to know from the minister how he is going to protect the beaver in the future? What means he is going to adopt to prevent them from being wiped out altogether, and whether he is going to compel a man to sell beaver skins to the Marine and Fisheries Department at his figure? Will not the figure depend upon the value of the skins in the foreign markets? The houses of the beavers are known to trappers all over the country, and when this bill goes through, there will be a general rush for licenses, and beavers will be wiped out, and while we know that they are a nuisance in certain sections of the country, still they are an asset to the country, and should not be allowed to be exterminated.

HON. THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—The points raised by the leader of the opposition are very important ones, and ones which will receive a lot of thought. When these regulations come in force, with the approval of the Game Board all of them will be based upon the points raised by him. We will have some one to look after it, and see that they are not interfered with in their houses. It is not the intention of the government to allow them to be exterminated. Beavers will be given all possible protection. We must protect them as much as possible in order to have a regular revenue from that source. Only a certain number will be allowed to be killed. Licenses will be given only to bona fide trappers. The beavers are very numerous at present in certain parts of the country, and the skins are very valuable, and it would be a pity if the government could not use this as a source of revenue, but I can assure you, that every precaution will be taken for their protection.

The government proposes shortly to appoint a commission and their duty will be to consider the advisability of establishing a state insurance scheme for this colony. It is a matter that has received much attention, but it will involve a large expenditure, and we thought it best to delay this Bill until next year, and then to appoint two or three men to consider the matter carefully, and recommend a scheme that may be made law. In a general sense this scheme will include the men from the age of eighteen to sixty. I hope that this commission will be appointed within a month or so, and by the time that we meet here again that we will have a bill to cover these suggestions, and that we will get a sufficient profit off the sale of beaver skins, to help us to carry out this state insurance scheme, without asking the treasury for too much assistance. This scheme is one that we have given a great deal of thought to in the Fishermen's Protective Union, because we thought for many years that there should be such a scheme, and from the consideration that we have given it, we think the insurance could be given to the amount of five hundred dollars on each life, for a premium to be paid of about five dollars for men from the age of eighteen to thirty, and in no case should it exceed ten dollars for men of 60. This five hundred dollars will be paid to them when they reach the age of seventy-five years. That is the general idea of the scheme, and we want the profit on the sale of beaver skins to be devoted to that purpose.

MR. MOORE:—Do I understand from the minister that the beaver skins must be sold to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries Department.

HON. THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES:—Yes. All beaver skins must be sold to the Marine and Fisheries Department.

MR. BENNETT:—Mr. Speaker, I quite appreciate the position taken by the minister with regard to the disposal of beaver skins. I know that this matter has been given a great deal of attention by the game board. I don't know just what has transpired recently because I have not attended any meeting for some time, but many suggestions have been made as to the best way of getting this matter cleared up. I must agree with the leader of the opposition that there will be great difficulty, with regard to licenses, and it will be hard to discriminate. The thought suggests itself to me, that the game board should take this matter entirely in their own hands. They have preserved the beaver successfully in this country for the past fifteen years, and it would not be fair to let any number of men, who call themselves trappers, reap the harvest sown. The suggestion that recommends itself to my mind is to let the game board take control of this matter, and send out wardens to kill a certain number of beavers each year, and the government will get the full profit on the skins. This especially recommends itself to me, because of the object to which this fund will be devoted. I don't think that any section of the country will find fault with this means of helping the state insurance scheme. It is a policy that will benefit the whole country. The best way to protect the beaver is to put the killing under control of some government department, under the supervision of the superintendent of the game board, and then there will be no danger of their being wiped out. As has been said beaver skins are very valuable now, and the revenue from this source will be a great help towards the state insurance scheme suggested.

I hold in my hand a letter which I received a few days ago from a gentleman in town who is evidently very much interested in this matter and for the benefit of the house I will read the letter, as it might commend itself to the consideration of the hon. minister.

(Reads letter).

This, I think, is a new departure regarding wild animals and appears to me to be very reasonable, and I think that it expresses the opinions generally held as to open seasons for beavers. I know that past governments each year advocated the extension of close seasons, their reasons being that they were very much in dread the killing of those animals, which are absolutely helpless. The indiscriminate killing of beavers, if permissible, would be like the slaughtering of whitecoats—by the thousands—and ere long result in the complete extermination of those very valuable animals. Whilst allowing the killing of beavers to a limited extent, I think we ought to encourage the preservation of them at the same time, in order that we might continue to get the best returns, particularly as the money to be derived therefrom is to be appropriated to that laudable purpose already mentioned.

MR. SCAMMELL:—Mr. Speaker, with the problem exception of the district of St. George's I do not suppose that there is a district in the island where beavers are as plentiful as they are in the district of St. Barbe, which district I have the honor to represent. When campaigning last year this was one of the subjects brought under my notice very frequently, and although throughout the district as a whole beavers are not plentiful, yet there are certain sections in it where they are exceedingly plentiful, particularly in the areas from Parsons' Pond to Flower's Cove, around the vicinity of Hare Bay and around White Bay. I welcome this bill chiefly for the reason that I have in my district a large number of people who are not in the best of circumstances and who could augment their incomes considerably through the killing of beavers if permitted to do so. The restrictions placed upon the killing of beaver for many years past have caused a great deal of hardship to those people. I think, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of those people in St. Barbe to whom I refer, that if they can find a way to add an extra honest dollar to their income that they ought to be allowed to do it.

Now, we may hold divergent views as to the advisability of killing beaver. The object of the bill, as I take it, is to carry out the wishes of the majority of the people, and the majority of the people at least in my district are anxious to see and very much desire the capturing of beaver. I was talking to a man at Port aux Choix last year on this subject, and he told me that beaver had become unprecedently numerous in the district. Speaking of one place, he said, people used to cut seven loads (or tons) of hay there, but owing to the increase of beaver causing the rivers to be dammed and flooding the land, only three or four hundred-weight was obtained instead of seven tons. As a matter of fact beaver have become a nuisance in these areas where they are numerous.

Then again it is a much discussed question as to whether or not beaver exterminate themselves automatically. There is a Micmac Indian by the name of Matthew Mitchell who is probably known to the hon. member for St. George's. Well this Indian holds an affirmative contention on this point. In support of his theory he has stated that in roaming around the country, and he has travelled extensively in the interior, that he not infrequently picked up the teeth of beaver. He was not prepared to say whether or not they shed their teeth, but he seemed strongly inclined to advance the argument that these animals outlived their existence after ten years; in other words they died automatically. I think if that theory is a fact that we are not very wrong in regulating the killing of beaver.

I must support the bill because it is going to mean some extra dollars in the pockets of people who need it so much, and when the prescribed areas over which the beaver shall be hunted are being discussed by the Governor in Council, I shall do my best to see that the beaver areas in my district are included in them. These are the reasons why I am in accord with this bill.

MR. HIGGINS:—Mr. Speaker, I don't think that there can be any disagreement regarding the object of this bill, State Insurance, but I think the minister himself will admit that is a bill that will require a great deal of thought and a certain amount of amendment. I think it is a wise move on the part of the government to introduce state insurance, and I have no intention of opposing this movement, but at the same time it is one that a lot can be said for and against. We realize that the object of this bill is a bona fide one, and I don't think that it will meet with any opposition, apart from any amendment that might be asked.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—Mr. Speaker, there is one thing I would like to mention in connection with this matter and that is this: It is generally reported, and I think with a great deal of truth, that there are a large number of beaver skins, which were taken during close season and contrary to law and held in stock by the owners who were awaiting for an open season in order to put them on the market. I would like to know what steps the Game Board would take against the marketing of those pelts, as I think that there should be some safeguard to protect the men who intend to hunt beavers, according to law.

It is quite true that in some sections of the country beavers are numerous. I remember hearing people in Hall's Bay say last fall that beavers were numerous there. If at all possible, those men who have been guilty of illicit hunting should be watched and the skins put on the market properly examined to determine the length of time since they have been killed.

MR. MacDONNELL:—Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill. As has been mentioned by the hon. member for St. Barbe, beavers are more plentiful in the district of St. George's than in any other part of the country. I remember about a year ago around Grand Lake seeing 150 beavers or more. They gave all sorts of trouble to railroad men in that section by damming the small rivers over night. Going straight up the main river one of the section foremen up there had quite a field of oats destroyed the year before last owing to beaver dams.

I believe that the time is come when the trapper should be permitted to kill a certain number of beaver, but I think that the idea of this bill that there is to be a price fixed which will be a source of revenue to the government is a step in the wrong direction, for the reason which I dare say is no secret to any member in this house, that at the present time a certain portion of beavers are killed every year and smuggled out of this country. Well, if, as is stated here in the bill, the Department of Marine and Fisheries are to be the sole purchasers and exporters of beaver skins and the department expects to get a certain amount of revenue therefrom, that simply means that the department wants to buy from the trapper at less than the market price. That, in my opinion, is a direct incentive to men to smuggle beavers out of the country to get the full market price.

This matter of state insurance is an excellent one. I understood the minister to say to-day that it only took in life insurance only. I do not think this will be found practicable, but if it included health insurance on the lines of the English bill, of which I happen to know something about, it would not only be a source of revenue but would decrease the national debt every year as well. A proper scheme would be to couple sickness and disability with this life plan, then the whole scheme would be a self-supporting and a source of revenue. I think the proper way would be to tackle that proposition right away. It seems to be wrong that we should start out on a very important matter as state insurance in such a petty way as this. The matter of state insurance should take second place to no problems for the consideration of the government. Indemnity for sickness and disability should be provided as well as in the case of death.

I hope when we get this bill that it will be as specific as possible with regard to the areas for the proposed killing of beavers. The Department of Marine and Fisheries should know first where beavers abound mostly in the country. I hope the minister will not content himself in allowing the Game Board or any member thereof to fix the price of skins below the market price. If he does it will defeat the whole object of the bill. It means, as I have already pointed out, that skins will be sent to St. John's at a figure below the market price, because it must be remembered that the department has got to make money out of the transaction. The Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a great believer in the law of supply and demand and he should fix the price of beaver skins on that principle. As a matter of fact I hope that that feature of fixing a price would not appear in the bill at all, although I suppose that is really the reason of section four being in the bill.

Referring to the proposed insurance scheme again, I would strongly advocate that our scheme be made a facsimile of the Lloyd George Act, the working of which I was identified with in Dublin, and I think it will be a paying proposition for us.

Then again, under this bill, there is going to be considerable difficulty in defining trapmen. Iconsider that any man who has been paying license for the past four or five years should receive a permit to kill beavers, but if you discriminate there will likely be endless trouble. And generally speaking you are going to be surrounded with many obstacles. You will want to appoint a large staff of wardens. A considerable number of sportsmen are coming into the country just now and occupying the attention of wardens at the present time.

However, I shall support any bill brought in from any part of this country to kill beavers.

The idea of taxing a few people for the sake of a state insurance is most unjust, and we should not be wasting time with it. We have been here five or six weeks and all we have done is to pass fishery laws. The best thing to do is to cut out this section of the bill altogether. I would suggest to the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that in view of so many safeguards surrounding this bill this section be omitted. I don't see why a man should have to send his furs down here. Why should we penalize a man who shows a knowledge of trapping? Why should we tax him for the benefit of others? They should not be taxed a dollar. Next year we should bring in a bill for the standardization of beavers, and making provisions for a cull.

HON. MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS:—I don't see the force of the statements of the hon. member for St. George's. Very few furs are sent out of the country direct by the people who catch them. They are bought up by agents who travel all over the country. The only difference now is that they will be sent out by the Marine and Fisheries Department, and the department will have a chance to make something on them.

MR. MacDONNELL:—There is a big difference. The man who catches the furs may not get near the price. There will be absolutely no competition, and the price paid will be the very lowest possible. Why should a man be made sell his furs to any one person?
