Proceedings of the House of Assembly of Newfoundland

SESSION 1927

Begun and holden at St. John's in the said Island this eleventh day of May, Anno Domini, One Thousand Nine Hundred and Twenty-Seven, being in the Seventeenth year of the Reign of His Majesty, Our Sovereign Lord, George, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India.

WEDNESDAY, May 11th, 1927.

His Excellency the Administrator having fixed the hour at which he proposed to open the present Session of the Legislature at three o'clock in the afternoon of this Wednesday, the eleventh day of May instant, the Members of the House of Assembly met in the Assembly Room at a quarter to three in the afternoon, when Mr. Speaker took the Chair.

Messrs. W. McKay Chambers, Harris M. Mosdell, and William E. Brophy, Members newly elected and returned for the Districts of Burgeo & La Poile, Fortune Bay and Saint John's East, respectively, were introduced to Mr. Speaker, having first been duly sworn in in the Legislative Council Chamber by the Honourables Sir Patrick T. McGrath, Robert K. Bishop and J. Alexander Robinson, His Excellency's Commissioners duly appointed for that purpose, and having signed the Roll of this House.

At three of the clock a message from His Excellency the Administrator was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, commanding the immediate attendance of Mr. Speaker and the House in the Legislative Council Chamber.

Whereupon Mr. Speaker and the House attended His Excellency in the Council Chamber; and, being returned to the Assembly Room, Mr. Speaker informed the House that when in attendance upon His Excellency in the Council Chamber, His Excellency had been pleased to make a gracious Speech to both Branches of the Legislature, a copy of which for greater accuracy he had obtained and then read to the House as follows:—

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of The Honourable House of Asesmbly:

Since you were last in Session the long existing dispute between the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland as to the boundary between respective territories of the two countries on the Labrador has been brought before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council for adjudication, and has resulted in a judgment for this Colony. Newfoundland now has her right authoritatively recognized to the disputed territory of 110,000 square miles, rich in timber resources and water powers with unexplored possibilities of mineral wealth. The country can now enter upon the unrestricted development of these assets and the confirmation of our title to this vast area cannot fail to materially improve the financial standing of the Colony and enhance our prestige at home and abroad.

The codfishing industry in 1926 suffered considerably through decreased prices prevailing in foreign markets. While the shore fishery was, in point of catch, well up to the average, the Labrador catch was unusually small.

The seal fishery, just concluded, has been above the average of recent years, but the lower values for oil have resulted in poor returns to those who undergo the hardships of this precarious work.

The development of the paper making industry shows a marked progress, and the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company has reached the large output capacity of four hundred and ten tons per day. The Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company has added another paper machine to its plant, reaching the satisfactory capacity of three hundred tons per day.

In the months of October and November the Prime Minister and his asosciates attended the Imperial Conference held in London, at which the status of component parts of the Empire was determined and other important matters of Imperial interest were discussed.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of The Honourable House of Assembly:

There will be a deficit on current account for the financial year 1926-27, owing, largely, to decreased importations and the reduced value of those imports of which cotton is a large constituent. While consumers, therefore, have been getting cheaper goods and paying small duties, the Consolidated Revenue Fund has suffered. The conditions referred to are largely transitory, and do not seem to call for immediate action. The Government considers it would be wiser to await the movements of trade in this Colony before suggesting any drastic remedial measure. Part of the deficit is attributable to the increased sum required to meet interest on the public debt, and another part to the loss incurred in operating the railway system. The latter deficit will be considerably less than in 1925-26.

With a view to avoiding a possible future deficit you will be asked to re-enact, in amended form, the Income Tax Act repealed in 1924.

Estimates for 1927-28 will be submitted to you in due course.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of The Honourable House of Assembly:

In view of the difficulties that have since occurred in connection with the affairs of the British Empire Steel Corporation, it seems fortunate that the Government concluded an Agreement in January for the continuation of work at Bell Island during the current year, and providing for the employment of at least twelve hundred men per day to the end of November.

Several Bills for the promotion of important industrial developments will be placed before you. The first of these seeks the ratification of an agreement made between the Government and the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, with respect to prospecting and mining operations and a proposed mining and ore treating industry in the Red Indian Lake district and for the admission free of duty into the Colony for the period of twenty years provided by the said contract of certain goods and articles therein specified for use in connection with the proposed industry.

A Bill will also have to be introduced in connection with the development of the Gander timber lands it appears that the owners have recently entered into an agreement with a corporation in the United States of America, which contemplates the acquisition of the property by this corporation. The parties will need special legislation during the Session to implement this agreement.

My Ministers propose to submit for your consideration, a Bill providing that applicants for timber or water rights in Labrador should be required in every instance to present their application to the Legislature and that grants should not issue without the approval of the Legislature.

In leaving you to the discharge of your duties, I pray that your deliberations may be blessed by Divine guidance.

RESOLUTION OF SYMPATHY

THE HONORABLE THE PRIME MINISTER—Since this House was last in session two gentlemen who were very closely identified with the Legislature for many years — two gentlemen who occupied the position of Prime Minister of this Colony—have passed to the Great Beyond.

Sir Michael Cashin died at his residence in St. John's just shortly after the session closed last year, and a couple of months ago the Right. Honorable Sir Robert Bond was also called to another world. Sir Michael was a man of big heart and generous spirit and one who always took a very deep and active interest in the welfare of this country. He was a man of ripe experience. For thirty years consecutively he represented the very important district of Ferryland and I think he almost holds a record in that respect; and I think that had Sir Michael Cashin lived for another twenty years he would have been elected for that district continuously by merely putting himself in nomination.

Sir Robert Bond was an outstanding statesman, who, we all know, will never be forgotten in this country. He was Prime Minister for nine years and was a man of rare gifts. His engaging personality, his gift of oratory and his very pleasing manner would have done grace to any Parliament in the world. I remember when Mr. Warren failed to form a Government some time ago that I was among those who very urgently sought Sir Robert Bond to come back into public life and take charge of a Party, but he was in failing health and found he could not undertake the important duties of public life again and so had to refuse. He showed his great public mind and great public spirit by the Will he left, in which he bequeathed to this country a Model Farm in the shape of his residence at Whitbourne where he had spent the declining years of his life and where he had devoted his entire life to the creation and improvement of that particular property. Correspondence which has passed between His Excellency the Governor and the Executor of Sir Robert Bond's Estate I propose to table in this House, and I propose to move the House into Committee of the Whole to discuss as to whether this bequest can be accepted or not by the country. We do not understand the value of this gift but it is left to the counttry in perpetuity, and before we can accept the gift an endowment fund is necessary in order to ensure perpetuity.

I just merely in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, move the following Resolutions:

WHEREAS since the last session of this House there have passed away the Right Honorable Sir Robert Bond, P.C., K.C.M.G., Ll.D., for many years a Member of this House and for nearly nine years Prime Minister; and Sir Michael Cashin, K.B.E., Ll.D., also a Member of this House for many years, and for a period Prime Minister.

BE IT RESOLVED, that this House places on record its sense of regret at the demise of these gentlemen, and that a copy of this Resolution be sent to their families.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Speaker, it is my sad duty this afternoon to second these Resolutions of regret in the passing of two great public men of this country in the persons of Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin. They both filled the chair now occupied by the Prime Minister and they both occupied the chair now filled by myself. Sir Robert Bond was looked upon throughout the whole country as a great statesman. Sir Michael Cashin was also a great statesman and a good citizen. Scarcely a session of this House passes without the Prime Minister is called upon to move Resolutions of this nature, and in the present instance we all very much regret the passing of two great men. Sir Robert Bond lived a very quiet and retired life during his later years but he was respected by all who had known him. He did great work for the Colony in many conferences and he had the distinct honour of being appointed by Her Majesty's Government as a delegate in connection with a fishery conference in the United States many years ago. Sir Michael Cashin was a mercantile man and one who had made a success of his business. He also made a success in political life. He occupied the position of Minister of Finance and Customs for about ten years and during that period he had no deficits and when he vacated the department of Finance and Customs he left a surplus of four million dollars in the Bank of Montreal, which he had saved, and which was put by to offset any contingencies that might arise in connection with the future administration of the affairs of the Colony. Both Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin will be sorely missed. I join with the Prime Minister in his expressions of sympathy and second the Resolution which has been moved by him.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister, seconded by Mr. Hickman, the following Resolution was passed unanimously:

RESOLVED, whereas since the last session of this House there have passed away the Right Honourable Sir Robert Bond, P.C., K.C.M.G., Ll.D., for many years a Member of this House and for nearly nine years Prime Minister; and the Honourable Sir Michael Cashin, K.B.E., Ll.D., also a Member of this House for many years, and for a period Prime Minister.

BE IT RESOLVED, that this House places on record its sense of regret at the demise of these gentlemen, and that a copy of this Resolution be sent to their families.

MOTION FOR ADDRESS IN REPLY

MR. CAHILL—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of proposing that a committee of this House be nominated to draft an address in reply to the gracious speech from the Throne which has just been read, but before offering a formal motion I should like to make some brief comments on the various items referred to in this speech. A few months ago the country hailed with universal delight our magnificent victory in the Labrador boundary dispute whereby as a result of the decision of the Privy Council the colony was confirmed in absolute possession of an immense territory comprising over 110,000 square miles. From all information to hand this great territory is rich in timber resources and water powers, with every hope also that proper survey, investigation and development will disclose great mineral wealth. In fact it was not until the Labrador boundary case had actually come to trial that most people in this country at least began to have an approximate idea of its immense potential value, this possibility being brought home to those directly interested in the case through being made aware of the immense amount of money which had been expended by the Canadian government in exploring and surveying the Labrador territory. It would have been very easy you will agree with me, I am sure, for the Government to have made a false step in this matter and even, perhaps, to have concluded some bargain or arrangement with Canada which, having in mind the final result of the case, would have been a betrayal of the rights of Newfoundland and the selling of our birthright for a mess of pottage. It was indeed fortunate then to have in power men with full confidence in the justice of our cause and the validity of our claim backed by a firm determination to fight to the end for our full and complete rights. Great credit is undoubtedly due the government and in particular the Department of Justice for the prompt and businesslike manner in which this great and important case was handled and brought to a final conclusion, with a special meed of praise to the Minister of Justice, Hon. W. J. Higgins, K.C., who was in charge of the Colony's case whilst it was actually before the Privy Council. The Minister's reputation as an unusually powerful and successful advocate in the courts of Newfoundland has now been extended to higher plains and wider fields, and all patriotic Newfoundlanders may well tender to him their sincere congratulations. In connection with our success in this case also it would be unfair not to mention the great work of Sir Patrick T. McGrath, whose industry and expert information and advice were invaluable in the preparation of Newfoundland's case. That the acquisition of this immense and valuable territory has enhanced the credit of the colony and greatly improved conditions financially and otherwise is admitted by all, and by reason of our success the general outlook which might otherwise have seemed somewhat gloomy has been turned into one of great hope and promise.

The announcement in the Speech from the Throne that applicants for timber or water rights in Labrador shall obtain such grants only through the Legislature will, I am sure, be hailed with relief and satisfaction by all, and is one more piece of evidence that the Government is most vigilant in its guardianship of the rights of the people and is determined that during its regime there will in no case be permitted the shameless dissipation of public assets which formerly prevailed. Whatever benefits, financial and otherwise, result from the Labrador shall be for the people of Newfoundland and their descendants, the rightful owners, and not for individual speculators.

The poor returns from the codfishery last year was a cause of concern to all interested in the welfare of the colony. Whilst calling for the best thought and consideration of those directly interested in this industry and of the Government itself with a view of exploring all possible methods of improvement, the present state of affairs in the codfishery again emphasizes the necessity for and development of and encouragement of other wage-earning industries in Newfoundland. That both these phases of the question are engaging the active and earnest attention of the Government is a matter of record in the Speech from the Throne. According to the old saying troubles never come singly and it is particularly unfortunate that following the poor returns from the codfishery, the sealfishery also, though above the average of late years in numbers, should, owing to the low price of oil, have yielded poor returns to those engaged.

The Speech from the Throne refers to the great developments in recent years of the paper making industry, and naturally Newfoundland with her large untouched forests of timber has benefited greatly by this development. On the West coast we now have, where was formerly the untrodden and virgin forests, the immense plant of the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company and the thriving town of Corner Brook. Here thousands of Newfoundlanders have found remunerative work in the land of their birth, a great proportion of whom would otherwise in all probability have migrated to the United States.

Again it is worthy of note that the Anglo Newfoundland Development Co. after years of successful operation at Grand Falls has only lately increased its plant by the addition of another paper machine, thus showing that this Company has absolute confidence in the future of the paper making industry in Newfoundland. A further important development of this Company's business is also referred to in the Speech from the Throne when it is announced that this House will be asked to ratify an agreement between the Government and the company with respect to prospecting and mining operations and a proposed mining and ore treating industry in the Red Indian Lake District. This refers to what is popularly known as Buchan's Mine, at which several hundred men are already employed, and from all accounts this industry bids fair to be of great value and lasting benefit to the country. Aside from the number of our workmen which it will employ it is interesting and extremely gratifying to learn that under the original grant to the Company of the mineral rights of their properties a royalty of five per cent. on the nett profits of any such operation has to be paid directly to the Government. Developments such as this would seem to show the great benefit likely to result to Newfoundland from the introduction of foreign capital, more especially when such capital is in the hands of large and wealthy corporations of unimpeachable character and standing. It also must bring still more sharply to our attention the wonderful potential value of our great dependency of Labrador and the immense possibilities which the future may hold for us in connection therewith.

Still another important industrial development which the Government has pleasure in announcing, and in connection with which a bill will be brought before this House, is that of the Gander Timber Lands, which it is understood has been acquired by the International Paper Co. Ltd. of the United States. Here again there are wonderful possibilities of the development of an immense industry, larger in volume probably than that of Corner Brook, and providing that much to be desired employment for thousands of our people.

The proceedings of the Imperial Conference held in London during the months of October and November last were followed with great interest all over the British Empire, and perhaps nowhere with more attention than by the citizens of Britain's oldest colony. It was indeed a pleasure to note the able manner in which the reputation of Newfoundland was upheld by the Prime Minister and his Colleagues and how as a result particularly of the Premier's interviews and speeches the loyalty and devotion of this colony to the empire was fully brought home to the people of Great Britain and Ireland, as well as the visitors from overseas. At the same time every opportunity was taken advantage of by the Prime Minister and his associate delegates to place before the British public the advantages and attractions of Newfoundland, as a tourist and sporting resort, and also as a most promising field for the investment of British capital.

A not altogether pleasant announcement in the speech is that there will be a deficit on current account for the financial year 1926-1927. Under all the circumstances this is not altogether unexpected to most people, and in view of the wild rumors that have been spread abroad from time to time, more especially during the recent political contest, when the moderate size of that deficit is announced most sensible people will be more relieved than otherwise. It is pointed out in the speech that it is not considered necessary to adopt any drastic remedial measures, showing, happily, that the Government believe that the unfortunate conditions which have brought about this result are only transitory and are bound to improve. It is further noted that this deficit is caused in part by the increased sum required to meet interest on the public debt and in part by the loss incurred in operating the railway system. Having at the end of its first year turned a deficit of about a million and a half dollars into surplus of several hundred thousand, and having had also a surplus to show at the end of its second year, the Government, to my mind, has now no need to be too apologetic for showing a deficit for its third year especially in view of all the surrounding circumstances. Compared with the record of its predecessors, who showed a deficit each year for four years, totalling in all nearly six million dollars, the record of the present Government seems very bright indeed. Taking prompt steps to avoid a possible future deficit the Government announces the reimposition, in amended form, of the Income Tax Act. Remembering the vociferous opposition to the repeal of this tax by some members on the opposite side of the House, and their references to it on political platforms, I presume I am entitled to assume that here at least we have one piece of Government legislation which will have the enthusiastic support of the opposition, whether of the first, second, or third section. Here at least they will have common ground for uniting together.

In the daily and financial papers of recent months you no doubt have read of the upsets and difficulties in the affairs of the British Empire Steel Corporation, and reading these accounts perhaps wondered what would be the result as far as our mining industry on Bell Island is concerned. It is most pleasing therefore to learn that under an agreement concluded by the Government with the Company in January last at least twelve hundred men per day will be employed on Bell Island till the end of November. Had the Government been less prompt and attentive to the interests of the miners on Bell Island it might well have meant a serious blow, if not absolute disaster, to the people of that settlement.

It was at the second session of this House, I remember, following the return of the Monroe Government to power, that I had the honour and privilege of proposing the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. On that occasion I also remember that at the conclusion of my remarks I voiced an appeal to all members in the House to forget party politics and personal grievances and to unite together in earnest and sincere endeavour to promote the general welfare and prosperity of the country. And it is with all sincerity and earnestness that I repeat the invitation today, but I must candidly admit, as a result of my past three years' experience, not with quite the same confidence as on the last occasion. It is an absolute fact that since its return to power the Monroe Government has made an earnest and determined effort to live up to its promises, to bring order out of chaos in the public departments, to prevent waste and scandal, to effect retrenchments wherever possible, and generally to conduct the affairs of Government in an honest, efficient, and economical manner. All its energies had at first to be directed towards a general clean up of the terrible mess in which most of the public departments and the affairs of the country generally had been allowed to lapse, and following this it was able to devote its attention to considerable legislation of a remedial and beneficial nature. Contending against innumerable obstacles, including, I must point out, the indifference of the public and even the hostility of some sections thereof who were directly affected, it has steadfastly continued in the path of duty, sacrificing possibly its own political future and that of its individual members in the cause of good government. As a result of its efforts no longer is heard in the land, except from the lips of the most untrustworthy and irresponsible, the whispers of Government scandals which were altogether too frequent a few short years ago, for these are now things of the past. Though handicapped by the defection of five of its own members under circumstances which would seem to admit of no justification and which cannot be said to have brought any credit to the malcontents, it has refused to compromise with partisan and Tammany Hall political methods and has determined to stand or fall by the standard of open, honest and clean government.

And with that spirit the Government faces the coming session undauntedly, determined to carry out its programme to the very end, and with full confidence in what the final unprejudiced judgment of the great majority of the people will be. The people may be mislead temporarily—they may appear to be the natural victims and simple tools of the blatant demagogue, of the selfish agitator, of the purveyor of half truths and inuendoes, of the dishonest maker of ridiculous and extravagant promises impossible of fulfilment, of the smooth retailer of unfounded accusations and even deliberate mis-statement against political opponents, of the busy and unscrupulous spreader of unfounded rumours, of the practical exponents of the theory that every man has his price ranging from a dollar or a bottle of rum upwards. But this is only for a time and does not last. Their victory if it comes at all is a false one and only temporary, and like the melodrama on the stage, everything comes right in the end. True friends are once again recognized and appreciated, and those by whom the people have ben deluded and deceived are rejected with scorn and contempt. That honesty is the best policy must be as true in political as it is in private and business life. Newfoundland has many serious problems to face, demanding the very best care and attention of those in charge of Government, who need above all things to be statesmen of broad vision and incorruptible honesty. Heaven defend us, I say, from the man who is prepared to sacrifice his country to see her progress and the prosperity and happiness of her people retarded for years, perhaps for ever, in order to purchase his own political advancement or gratify his personal hatred and spleen. The public, of course, has its own responsibility to the fullest extent. The people must see and realize that such men are false prophets and not their true leaders, that they will lead them not into the land of promise, but rather into the land of disappointment, and disillusion and despair. The people must see to it that such men are relegated to political obscurity and that only those are retained in power who have demonstrated in a practical manner their absolute sincerity of purpose, honesty of conduct, and unselfish devotion to the true interests of the country that gave them birth. That such may be the happy state of affairs which the future holds for Newfoundland must be the ardent wish and prayer of every true patriot and lover of his country.

MR. POWER—Mr. Speaker in rising to second the motion before the House I do so reluctantly, because I feel that there are other members who would better grace the occasion than my humble self, being, as I am, one of the silent knights of the House, or one who has only been conspicuous in the Assembly because of my silence.

However, though being silent I offer no apology, because while not being heard I have been working quietly and constantly for the District which I have the honour to represent, and whatever the District may think of me or the Government or its policy, I can go back to them with assurance that I have done all that was honorable to do.

It affords me great pleasure, Mr. Speaker, to offer my sincerest congratulations to the Hon. Proposer of the Motion for the able and extensive manner in which he has dealt with various matters which the Speech contains; not alone do I congratulate him but I offer him my sincere thanks because he has so intelligently covered the whole programme that it has lifted a weight from my shoulders in not expecting much from me. In a word, the learned and Hon. gentleman has in his address not alone covered what was expected of him but has done it in such a manner that there is but little left for me to say.

However, Mr. Speaker, there are a few points that, with your kind indulgence, I would wish to briefly refer to and in so doing I must humbly pray for your kind consideration because of the fact, that I have had but a few short hours' notice to prepare for this occasion; therefore, I feel that you will not expect of me as much as might be expected had I had more time at my disposal.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with my learned friend, the Proposer, in offering to those who are responsible for the decision which has come to us by the award and the settling of the long and historical dispute of the "Labrador Boundary." I fully concur with the Hon. member in all that he has said regarding it. I know personally that when this Government came into being, that one of its first decisions was to tackle the Labrador Boundary dispute. It was definitely decided to settle it for once and all, regardless of what the outcome would be. We were guaranteed by the Minister of Justice that during his term of office this question would be finally disposed of whether for good or ill. This question has been one of many years standing. It has been one that has had the attention of the most noted "legal lights," not alone of this country but also Canada and England. Each and every gentleman who assisted in bringing this problem to such a successful issue might well feel proud of themselves and the country generally should well feel proud of them, and those who are not conversant with this historic legal battle need not go further than read the Canadian papers and reports of the Quebec Assembly to realize what a grave loss the Labrador territory has been to Canada, and being of grave importance to Canada it must naturally be of greater importance to us.

I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that the public fully realize what has been done by this Government, for if they did I am sure that they would be louder in their rejoicing. I feel that the Minister of Justice, Hon. W. J. Higgins, who steered the case through its last lap should feel justly proud of his accomplishment, and, even if the public do seem ungrateful, he has in himself justified the trust that has been placed in him.

It's regrettable, Mr. Speaker, that the reference made in the Speech from the Throne with regard to fisheries is not of a more encouraging and cheerful nature. Poor fisheries and poor prices have been our fate periodically in years gone by and will happen again in years to come. Most every citizen is to-day looking with asking eyes as to what is going to happen our staple product, namely our cod-fish. I do not propose to dwell on the subject because I feel that I am not an authority on it, but it is quite plain to all of us that we can no longer depend on our fisheries for a livelihood for all our people, whilst I feel that conditions as they happened in recent years have had a tendncy to discourage our people in pursuing the fishery; yet, I contend that the fact of our fishery being discarded does not altogether lie with poor prices or bad fisheries. Practically speaking, I might say that even a major portion of our successful fishermen who have reared families, or are rearing them, do not encourage them to take up and follow along the lines that they pursued. They prefer to see them enter into channels less arduous. One branch of the fishery that I am directly interested in, and one in which I have had quite a deal of experience, is the Herring fishery. To the Marine & Fisheries Department, because of bringing the herring pack to such an excellent standard as we find it to-day, much credit is due. We are putting on the market a herring packed by the Scotch style that is second to none in the world. It has gained a foremost place on the American and Canadian markets, that we may well feel proud of. In connection with this particular style of cure, there is one very severe drawback and that is, the duty we are forced to pay on every pound of herring entering the States. This duty was put on our fish by the introduction of the Fordney Tariff Bill. It is not my intention to enter into any long discussion of this Bill, but I would take this opportunity of asking the House to give this matter its most serious consideration. I merely mention it with the hope that this matter may again be taken up and some means devised whereby arrangements might be made with the American Government for the reconsideration of this barrier to our fisheries. To-day, Mr. Speaker, for every barrel of herring that enters the States we are forced to pay one cent per pound on the gross weight. It is needless for me to remind you of what it means to the shippers of herring.

Since it is quite clear, as I have already stated that some other means must be opened up in order to give employment it is most gratifying to note the reference that has been made to new industries which are being brought into the country. The Buchans Mine is one that is looked upon as one of the most hopeful and most encouraging ventures of its kind in the history of the country. Much greater is the assurance that it is going to be successful is because of the people who are identified in its working as it is generally known that the A. N. D. Co. and the American Smelters are associated in the working of this mine, and as we know well and have absolute faith in the A. N. D. Co. we also know that though the American Smelters are here for the first time, yet their reputation is world-wide and being, as it is, the largest concern of its kind, we surely bid the corporation a hearty welcome to our shores and wish that all the undertakings may be crowned with success. Their success is success for us. The initial work of making a beginning for the opening of this great development has already begun on the first steps that are being taken in the building of a railroad some twenty-two miles long. Already work has begun at the new townsite and permanent houses of modern type, and other necessary structures, are about to be erected. Serious consideration is being given to the erection of a large smelting plant which means if it comes that every possible bit of work connected with it, from the mining to the finished product, is to be done in this country. Newfoundlanders get the benefit of it all. I do not speak authoritatively, but I have the information from reliable sources, that before any actual returns can be had by the development of Buchans Mine an outlay of some millions of dollars will have taken place.

It is not very pleasant for the government or any other government to come into this House and announce to the country that it is to be faced with a deficit. My Honorable friend the mover of the motion has dealt fully with this, but from the present outlook for our railway which has shown such an enormous deficit this year and years passed it looks as if it will during the coming year have a decidedly different and decidedly brighter story to tell, that the whole machinery of the railway will be working to its fullest capacity during the next five or six months is a certainty. The A. N. D. Co. alone not counting on or taking into consideration its regular work have engaged three thousand cars.

By special efforts of the travelling agent of the railway (Mr. Mosdell) who has personally canvassed all the leading importers and by re-arrangement of freight rates induced them to patronize our own means of transport, as a result to-day a fairly large quantity of freight is being daily carried by the Caribou which has been plying back and forth the Gulf the past year practically empty.

The Gander proposition tends to be of great assistance in the future development of the country in the manner of giving employment to many men and of helping to bring prosperity. The outlook for the West Coast is much brighter because of the activity in connection with the St. George's Coal Fields. Mr. Freeman who has been in charge of the work on behalf of the company in conjunction with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines have been instrumental in having boring operations started and the results are of such a nature that they are most gratifying not alone to the Minister and Mr. Freeman and those asociated with him but also to the whole country. Mr. Freeman by the assistance given him by this Government after many years of hard and constant work has proven to the country and the world at large that large deposits of coal are laying awaiting development on the West Coast. It is proof positive we have coal of great commercial value. It is now a question as to what we are to do with it.

Owing to the heavy rains and the absence of frost during the month of January, which made it difficult to move heavy machinery across swollen rivers and very rough ground, drilling operations on the St. George's Coal Fields, Ltd., were not started until late in February. However, we are in a position to announce that, in addition to the estimate made by the late James P. Howley, Esq., F.G.S., two new seams of coal have been located; one at a depth of 244 feet, containing about 5 feet of coal, and another at a depth of 660 feet, containing 3 feet of coal. These new finds, when calculated on the basis of 1,500 tons to the acre-foot, will add 7,680,000 tons per mile to the property, that is, for every mile that may be found to underlie.

The late James P. Howley's estimate which was made from surface measurements of the seams of coal in sight on this property, were about 25,000,000 to 26,000,000 tons of coal to the square mile. Judging from the exploration work carried out by the St. George's Coal Fields, Ltd., and taking into consideration the new discoveries, it is evident, the area contains about 30,000,000 to 35,000,000 tons of coal to the square mile.

The first hole put down was on a site prospected some years ago by the late James P. Howley, and at a depth of 244 feet a seam of coal about 5 feet in width was located. In the second hole, which is now at a depth of 850 feet, a 3 foot seam at a depth of 660 feet was located. Meantime, the drill passed through several other seams at various depths, one seam, evidently the Jukes being cut at a depth of 141 feet, containing 9 feet, 2 inches of coal, thus assuring, at the angle at which it was cut, 6 feet to 7 feet seam of coal.

We are also in a position to state that engineers from Mining Companies of international repute will investigate, with a view to working the property on an extensive scale, as soon as the drilling operations are completed.

During last week I had the pleasure of visiting the Codroy Valley. There I found most active preparations being made by the farmers for the coming season. One of the best signs of the times in that locality was to see the numberless different farming implements that were daily been put off at the stations along the farming sections. Through the efforts of the agricultural department connections have been established all over the island and particularly so on the S. W. Coast, where formerly practically every pound of produce was imported from P. E. I. or some part of Nova Scotia. The farmers have had one of the greatest aids handed them when this government gave them a flat rate along the railway and its coastal service which has made it possible to compete with the imported article and to reach every householder's door with a local article at a reasonable price. The farmers of the West coast ask from this Government just one more request: they have the land, they are farmers, they are prepared to work, they do not ask for one dollar for their own personal benefit. They ask but one thing, that is that immediate attention be paid to their road and at least made passable whereby they market their produce and haul their fertilizer to their lands. On the whole though things may not look too bright, yet I feel that with all the new developments that are within our reach a new era for the country can be confidently loked for, an era which I most humbly pray and trust will soon be with us.

I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in seconding the motion before the House.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION—Mr. Speaker, with your permission I shall make a few remarks regarding the Speech from the Throne, but I shall be brief. This is not the usual Speech from the Throne that the Monroe administration has presented to us since they came into power; it is usually more elaborate and longer—in fact I remember once making the remark that the Speech from the Throne contained nearly everything. If this document had a black border I would say it was the Government's obituary notice.

I must congratulate the mover of the Address in Reply, the junior member for Harbor Main, and I must congratulate him for his openness and frankness. He told us that the Government had "cleaned up," and also that there will be a "modest deficit," which is proof of what he has said. I also congratulate the seconder of the Address, who has indeed made a noble effort—they are both young men, and no doubt have a political future before them. I wish also to congratulate the members who have been elected into this Chamber since we last met—Mr. Chambers, who has been re-elected for Burgeo and La Poile; Dr. Mosdell, who carried Fortune Bay against great odds. The district of Fortune was previously represented by an Independent Member who was returned by a large majority, and who by accepting a position on the Bench was practically purchased by the Government.

MR. SPEAKER—I cannot permit the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition to make a statement of that character, nor can I allow it to pass unchallenged or unreproved. Such a comment is manifestly incorrect, and is entirely out of order, patricularly in view of the fact that it is a most derogatory and unwarranted reference to one who occupies the eminent position of a Judge of the Supreme Court of this Colony.

MR. HICKMAN—I must accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I must say that the member accepted a position from the Government.

MR. SPEAKER—I must ask the Hon. the Leader of the Opposition to refrain from pursuing that subject further.

MR. HICKMAN—I must accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. However the seat was contested and Dr. Mosdell was successful. I congratulate Mr. Brophy on the wonderful election he had in St. John's East. St. John's East is a district which under constitutional rights should have been opened long ago. It should have been opened when Mr. Vinicombe resigned to go into the Liquor Control Board. The district, which was won in 1924 by the Government by a large majority, has now given a seat to the Liberal Candidate, which shows the feeling of the people towards the Government.

Now Mr. Speaker, this Session is opening on May 11th, and it should have been opened and closed long ago. One of the promises made by the Prime Minister was that he would have early sessions, and I suppose this is the latest session under similar circumstances ever. Now we are here, and we are told by the Speech from the Throne that the country faces a deficit, and we are also told that this administration is about to inaugurate measures for development of the country's resources. I am here to support, and I think I can safely say that the members on this side are of the same mind, any measures for the country's good, and they will have the support of this side if they are such. I do not pledge my support to anything that is not in the interests of the people of this country, or anything that enables speculators to make money out of our people—any good legislation we welcome. It seems strange, Mr. Speaker, that a Tory Government should introduce developments, because I think if we look at past Legislatures we will find that no such legislation has been introduced by Tory Governments. The Anglo Nfld. Development Co. came in under Sir Robert Bond, and the Humber was effected by a Liberal administration; in 1923 legislation for the establishment of the enterprise at the Gander was introduced—and so I forecast that when it is put through it will be by a Liberal administration. We are told in the Speech from the Throne that we have a deficit—the member for Harbor Main calls it a "modest" deficit. I haven't any idea what he means by "modest," but we shall see later on. My opinion is that this is not the only year in which there has been a deficit, and that there was one in 1924-25 as well as 26-27. The Minister of Finance and Customs in his Budget Speech of last session told us the following. This is what is contained in his speech. He also stated:

(Reads)

And now we find in the Speech from the Throne there is not a surplus, but what the member for Hr. Main calls a "modest" deficit. Now I don't know whether the Minister of Finance was in earnest last session, and believed what he told us, or whether he was deceiving the House. There was no surplus last year as stated—in fact there was a deficit, which we shall soon discover. Now this "modest deficit" will, I understand, prove to be a substantial sum, probably going into millions of dollars—if that is so the present Minister of Finance will have the honour of bringing down the largest deficit since the days of Responsible Government.

I think it is time now for the Prime Minister to give us plain speech, and to tell us exactly where we stand, and to put his cards on the table.

The Prime Minister will no doubt follow me when I have finished and we will appreciate very much a frank and open statement as to what are the financial conditions of the country at the present time, and how he purposes getting over the Governmental difficulties. I notice from the Speech from the Throne that he purposes putting on the income tax again, and reference has been made by the Member for Harbor Main that it is likely to have the full support of the Opposition. As far as I know it will have the full support of the Opposition if the Income tax bill is properly worded, whereby it will cover all those who are well able to pay income tax. We are prepared if the Government need our help to go into it with the Prime Minister and see that a bill will be brought in that will be in the best interests of all concerned.

I trust that the Government will carry out everything that they have forecasted in the Speech from the Throne. The Mover of the Address in Reply elaborates on the fact that the Government has saved the situation in Belle Isle by making an agreement with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company to carry on the work. The fact of the matter is that this agreement expires in December and must be renewed again in January, and so this Government has only done what every Government has done in the past. I cannot see where the credit comes to the Government for that. There was nothing for the Government to do if they wanted to keep the people working on Belle Isle.

I find in the beginning of this Speech from the Throne that reference was made to the dispute between the Dominion of Canada and Newfoundland on the Boundary question. We now know that the decision has been given in favour of this country. I may say however that this savours of credit to the Government, but there is not much credit due to the present Government for the settling of this question, that has been so long in dispute. An agreement was made in 1920, and signed by the Attorney General of Canada, and of Newfoundland, to have this matter placed before the Privy Council, long before this Government came into power.

(Reads)

The question of status has always been the same. We have only put into writing the practice and principle that has been in force in Newfoundland for years. Newfoundland with its 250,000 people is not supposed to have as much influence as Canada for instance with its nine millions. I notice in the Speech from the Throne that a bill is to be brought in in connection with the Water Rights on Labrador.

I agree with that part of the Speech. I think that what we have gained on Labrador we should hold in the interests of the country, and not allow it to be made the territory for speculators that might come in here and take what we have without giving us adequate returns.

We will have an opportunity later in the discussion of the Speech from the Throne, to make any remarks that we think fit, but we would like now to have a frank expression of opinion from the Prime Minister, as to whether in view of the result of the Bye-Election in St. John's East, it is his intention to carry on the Government or to have an election in the Fall, so that the people may have an opportunity of electing proper representatives to this House of Assembly.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is never expected to throw out bouquets to the compiler of the Speech from the Throne. I remember on one occasion, he said the speech was celebrated for what it did not contain, the second season that I had occasion to sit in this House, the Leader of the Opposition told us that it contained everything except a reference to the eclipse of the sun. To-day he tells us that it is not elaborate enough. I am not surprised to find that the Leader of the Opposition is not particularly pleased with the Speech from the Throne. I don't suppose there ever was a Leader of the Opposition in this country or anywhere else who rose to congratulate the Government on the Speech from the Throne. He has to do his part in that connection.

I want to join with the Leader of the Opposition in congratulating the new members of the House of Assembly. I want to congraulate Mr. Chambers on his victory by a large majority, in the bye-election in his district. I want to congratulate Dr. Mosdell on his victory in Fortune, and Mr. Brophy on his return in St. John's East. I hope that everyone of them will make good use of his seat in this House of Assembly, and that they will devote their entire energy to the interests of the country, and if they do that they will be doing a great deal of good for the Colony.

Mr. Hickman has said that the Opposition is prepared to support wise legislation. We don't propose to bring in or have we ever brought in, in my experience, anything but what we believed to be wise legislation, and we don't propose to bring it in in the future. But the legislation that we are bringing in in connection with these industries, is we think quite worthy of the consideration of the House.

The income Tax has been referred to this afternoon. It is not, as I said when I made the motion in this House to abolish it, a fair tax in this country. And so I still believe. There are numbers of people in this country who have not paid their taxes, and it is a very difficult thing indeed to collect taxes in this country with the same thoroughness, as they are collected in countries where there are a greater number of people and consequently better organisation for the collection of taxes. The tax is also an unjust one as the trade of the country is very hazardous, and sometimes a man who is in the way of doing a large business, makes big profits one year, and the next year perhaps he loses as much again. We have been giving consideration, in putting that Bill back on the Statute Book, as to whether we could make it effective over an average period of three years. But it will be difficult to arrive at any plan in that respect, that could be work satisfactorily.

The Leader of the Opposition has said that we have made no change in our Status, owing to the Imperial Conference ruling. That is not correct, for we are now an autonomous community equal in Status with any other Dominion of the British Empire. We did not ask for it, nor did we want it, and we did not throw our hats in the air when we got it. It is of no value to us. But the important point is this, that should we at any time find that we are incapable of governing ourselves, and should wish to appeal to the King or his Representative, to send out a Royal Commission, we might very well be told "Physician, heal thyself." That is the difference in the Status of the Colony to-day.

The Leader of the Opposition has asked me to give a statement of the financial conditions of the colony. I do not intend to enter into any particulars this afternoon, but in the regular debate, we will leave that matter to be dealt with by the Finance Minister in his budget. There will be a deficit of somewhere about 1½ million dollars. People have been talking about three millions, but a million and a half is what the deficit will be outside of the railway, which will lose about $750,000, the same as last year. It has been a natural losing hazard. Nobody can prevent it. But it has as good a chance of coming back as any other Department. It would only take one or two good industrial propositions along the railway line, to turn the railway from a losing venture into a winning one. In the month of December, for example, which is a bad business month for the railway, we actually made $500 profit. That only goes to show that the railway, put in proper condition, is not going to be a very big and continuous liability to this country. When we got the railway, we got a lot of junk. It was not properly ballasted, and a large amount of the cost incurred in connection with the railway has been caused by the necessity of re-ballasting. When it is fully put in condition, and with Buchan's mine, and other industries in full swing along that railway, I predict that the railway will be a paying proposition.

I may say that I am not at all happy over finding the country with a deficit. I am not at all satisfied that something might not have been done in the way of further retrenchment, by the party in power. But I would like any man listening to me this afternoon to be in my position for twelve months, and find the clamour that is made to the Government for further expenditure of money, and let us see what he would do about it. It is one thing to criticise, but another thing to construct and clean up.

I myself talked about "cleaning up" when I came in to power. But I have not found it quite as easy to clean up as I thought, and that is a great deal the fault of the people of this country. We have spent, we have been obliged to spend in this town during the past two months between $80,000 and $90,000 for poor relief. A large number of people are still in need. What is to be done about it, money does not grow on gooseberry bushes. There are a large number of people of this country who think that the Government chest is a bottomless pit, into which you can dig all day long. Unless people understand that unless we cease to spend in excess of what is coming in, we are going to be in trouble.

Now don't imagine that our position to-day is due to anything that the present Government has done, or, to anything that the past Government has done. The War cost this colony $30,000,000. We insisted on having our own regiment a very fine and patriotic thing to do, but $30,000,000 is what the war cost this colony, and we have got to pay pensions accordingly. That is what really brought the condition of affairs that exist to-day, and it would have been the same no matter what Government had been in power. We were gradually going that way and we had to have a deficit. Unless some big industry is developed, or we sell the Labrador, it seems that we will be constantly faced with a deficit.

The gentlemen on the other side may say "Put us in and we will fix things up." I would be perfectly satisfied to hand over the Government to Mr. Hickman to-morrow if I thought that he could do better than we have done. But I am satisfied that he could not do a bit better. That is the reason why I say when the Leader of the Opposition asks me if there is going to be an election in the coming fall, I cannot tell him that. If we are the Government in power in the fall, why we will decide what is time we will try to carry on and do the best that we can. But we acknowledge that we are not as powerful to do things that we think ought to be done, as we were before we lost six members to the other side. If we had those members we would be able to introduce drastic measures that we don't feel powerful enough to do at the present time. I want to make that point very clear. You can't run a Government as a private business. To do so, you would require somebody to take charge of this country, in the shape of a Mussolini, with an army at his back, to dictate . what had to be done in drastic measures. I don't care what Government you may have, I don't believe that those necessary but drastic measures will ever be carried out by Responsible Government in this country. That is what I feel. There are minor reforms that can be effected, and these we are trying to effect, and we have a great possibility of industrial development in this country at the present moment. That is our great hope.

We have Labrador just given to us. An immense tract of land. But can this country afford to borrow money to investigate it? It sems to me that there are only two alternatives open to us, either to sell it as a "pig in a poke," or else to exploit it. Now the first thing required in respect to Labrador is a legal survey. I was very hopeful that when we got Labrador, we would be finished with lawyers in connection with it, but I am afraid that is not so. We don't know yet whether all the water power rights in Labrador have not been given away. There are hundreds of people who have been promised various concessions when once the Boundary question was settled, by the Government. There are water power rights on the Muskrat Falls given away to a man named Dickey for thirty dollars per year for 99 years, by the Bond Administration. In these days these things were considered of no value. Then the first thing is to make a survey of what is on the Labrador, and when we find what we own there, then to try and turn it into money. But I don't believe that this country will ever be able to develop it.

In the second place we have very great hopes of mineral development in Newfoundland. I consider that the discovery of Buchan's mine is of more importance than what we have gained by the Labrador Boundary award. The Company that has been established at Grand Falls has proved that we are able to turn out the concentrated product in this country out of the already proved enormous quantities of zinc and lead in that mine.

I cannot say as much for the Gander. There are certain proposals coming before us ,in fact, we delayed the opening of this House in order to get those proposals, and we will have them in a few days. It is very possible that we will be asked to build a certain number of miles of railway to the Gander, to connect up with the various industries. If these proposals are worthy of the consideration of this House they will be placed before you to judge as to whether or not it would be a paying proposition to join up these industries with the main line. They may also be asking for concessions in connection with the export of wood in the raw condition, something that I am very much opposed to. Careful consideration will have to be given to any proposal along those lines. But I do not want to enter into any particulars at this time.

We are about to enter on this session of the Legislature. We have a majority in the House. As long as it is so I take it that the Opposition will consider that we are the Government. We want to put through our legislation as soon as possible and get back to business again. If the Opposition have decided on a policy of obstruction of any legislation that we may introduce, then I say that we are able to stay here as long as they are. I suggest to you gentlemen that the Government is still in power and proposes to remain in power unless it is beaten on the floors of this House, and then we will hand over the reins to somebody else. In the meantime we propose to carry on to the best of our ability. We hope that the Members of this Legislature will not find it necessary to discuss every section of the Speech from the Throne. When the various Bills are brought up later on in the session, then it will be time enough to discuss them. Why must every member of the Opposition take part in a long discussion on a bill that has not even been brought before the Legislature. Last year we listened for hours to opinions expressed by members of the Opposition concerning an agreement with Besco. And it never came before the House. I only suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that he organize his forces. If there are two or three parties in the opposition, then have the leader to speak for each particular section. That would save a lot of time in this House. I hope that we have before us a very pleasant and very amiable session of this Legislature.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I would not have risen this afternoon or made any remarks with regard to the speech from the throne were it not the fact that the Prime Minister who has just sat down has intimated to this House that it is the intention of the present administration to continue in office and to attempt to carry out their term of office until 1928. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this country and the members of both sides of this House will agree with me that the majority of the people rule. I contend to-day, sir, that the majority of the people of this country are represented by the members on the Opposition side of this House. The majority of the people of St. John's East in the recent bye-election held there, told the present administration in so many words that it had fallen down on its job and was not wanted any more. That district three years ago gave the Government a majority of from 4,000 to 5,000 votes. To-day that majority has been destroyed, and the Opposition candidate has been returned with a majority of 552. In view of this fact, which expresses in an unmistakable way the attitude of the people of this country towards the present Government, I think that the only course left open to the Prime Minister is to resign. The Prime Minister has suggested that the various leaders on the Opposition side of the House should rise and on behalf of their various parties tell the House what they intend doing with regard to the various measures that are to come before the House. Now I think it would be wise for the various sections on the Government side who have their own leaders to also rise and tell the Opposition what they intend to do during the present session. The Prime Minister stated also that the deficit for 1926-27 will be around 1½ million dollars; but he did not tell that the deficit for 1925-26 is one million dollars, nor is any reference made to that deficit in the Speech from the Throne, and I defy any member of the House to get up and say if what I have stated is not correct. Hints have been thrown out by the proposer of the Motion for an Address in Reply that unfair tactics were employed and wild rumours broadcasted in the bye-election recently regarding the deficit on current account. I tell the House now as I told it last year that the Budget last year was "cooked." A letter appeared in the Government press recently stating that the deficit on current account for 1925-26 was $80,-000.00 I say that the deficit was one million dollars approximately. The Government evidently forgot that the people own the railway that is operated by the Government. Now the loss on the operation of the railway for 1925-26 was over $900,000.00. This added to the $80,000.00 plus the five per cent. interest on the one million dollars borrowed on railway account brings the total deficit for that year up to a million dollars. Whilst we do not intend to obstruct any legislation of a constructive nature, I feel it my duty and it is the duty of every member of the Opposition side to-day to tell the present Government that they are unable to carry on and that we should not allow them to carry on. If they were decent, they would resign because a vote of want of confidence was passed on them by the electors of St. John's East and Fortune Bay. Still they have the gall to attempt to carry on the administration of the affairs of this country. The Prime Minister has claimed that, owing to a depletion in his ranks, no other Government could do any better than the present one. Now what has caused that depletion? It has been stated in the Government press that members who left the Government should have gone back to their districts for approval or disapproval of their actions; but it did not state that the man who left the Opposition side and joined the Government ranks should go back, certainly not, that would be too consistent. I say, Mr. Speaker, we should all go back to our districts next Fall, and if I can do it the Government will be forced to have a general election next Fall because they do not enjoy the confidence of the people. We are told in the Speech from the Throne that the Government proposes to put on the Income Tax again and the Prime Minister stated that he is trying to make a law to put the Act back for three years. If the Government had not repealed the Act in 1924, or had put it on in 1925, as they were advised to do, they would not be up against it financially as they are to-day, and I defy any financial wizard that the Prime Minister may have in his Party to-day to deny that statement. The reason is, of course, that people can only purchase according to their means and they can buy more when goods are low than when they are high. Accordingly, the 15 per cent. extra taxation that the Government put on reduced the purchasing power of the people with the result that there was a falling off in the revenue at the Custom House. The Speech from the Throne states that the deficit was created on account of decreased importations of cotton goods. This is a most ridiculous statement to try and get any people to swallow. I did not intend to get up and speak this afternoon, but the remarks of the Prime Minister made me do so. I intend to make a more lengthy criticism of the Speech from the Throne later.

With regard to this contract with Besco, Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that before this session of the House closes I hope to have the privilege of referring to the Prime Minister's speech in connection with that contract and I intend to occupy as much time as the Prime Minister did when he introduced the Resolutions last year. These Resolutions were brought in here and driven out again. They went to a Party meeting of the Government and never came back since. The Prime Minister said at the time that this contract was one out of ten or twelve that the Government had from Besco and that this one was the best one. This contract was signed, sealed and delivered. It was signed on behalf of the Government by the Colonial Secretary and the Minister of Justice. The Executive had entered into an agreement with Besco and were thrown down because the whole Government Party passed a vote of want of confidence in the Executive. Now what about the contract with Besco for this year? The present Government had nothing whatever to do with the operations of Besco at Bell Island this year. Besco would operate no matter what Government was in power because they had orders in for one million tons of ore. I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that the Speech from the Throne should have a black border around it, denoting the Government's obituary notice. The obituary notice of the present administration has been written by the voters of St. John's East and Fortune Bay. Because they have one or two members in majority in the House—men who are getting concessions and jobs out of the Government—the present administration is holding on to the reins of power. Mr. Speaker, I serve notice now, Sir, that so far as I am able this Government will not put through any legislation this session of the House. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for delaying the time of the House this evening, but as this is the opening day, as the curtain is raised on the annual drama and as certain people who only come here once a year and who are unaware of the doings of the present Government, I hope and trust when they come here again that they will see a different aggregation of politicians guiding the destinies of this our Island home.

It was moved by Mr. Cahill, and seconded by Mr. Power, that an Address of Thanks be presented to His Excellency the Administrator in Reply to the [illegible]ious Speech with which he had been pleased to open the present Session of the Legislature, and that a Select Committee be appointed to draft such Address in Reply.

The Committee to consist of Mr. Cahill, Mr. Power, Mr. Puddister, Dr. Mosdell, Mr. Brophy.

The Prime Minister gave notice that he would on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a Bill dealing with the disposition of land, timber and water powers in Labrador.

Tht Hon. the Colonial Secretary laid on the Table of the House Statement of Expenditure and Revenue of the St. John's Municipal Council for the year 1926.

The Hon. the Prime Minister laid on the Table of the House a copy of the Will of the late Rt. Hon. Sir R. Bond (bequeathing certain lands to the Colony to be used as a Model Farm), together with certain correspondence relating thereto.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of question.

Mr. Moore gave notice of question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

Mr. Godden gave notice of question.

Mr. Lake gave notice of question.

Mr. Bradley gave notice of question.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of question.

Mr. Brophy gave notice of question.

Dr. Mosdell gave notice of question.

Hon. the Prime Minister moves adjournment of House.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Speaker, rising to support the motion to adjourn, I would like to bring to the notice of the Internal Economy Commission, through you, the state of the rooms occupied by the seventeen members on this side of the House. There is no space there, and there are only eight chairs for seventeen men. Might I suggest that there is a room upstairs occupied by the Clerk of the House which we could have, and let him move downstairs. At the present time there is no way to get fresh air —if you open the windows the people in the park can look in. We could also do much better in a room 16 x 16 than in one ten by ten, and it must be remembered that the room never held seventeen members before. We will take good care of it and return it when the session is over.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to Monday, the sixteenth instant, at three of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, May 16th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Halfyard, from Ireland's Eye, re Roads.

Mr. Halfyard, from Caplin Cove, Trinity Bay, re Roads.

Mr. Halfyard, from Winterton, re Roads.

Mr. Halfyard, from Little Heart's Ease, re dismissal of a ferryman.

Mr. Hibbs, from Barred Islands, re setting of cod traps.

Mr. Hibbs, from Fogo, re Roads.

A delegation of unemployed persons appeared at the Bar of the House praying leave to present a petition.

On motion leave was granted.

The petition was then read, asking that employment be provided.

On motion the petition was received. The delegation then retired.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

MR. CAHILL—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to report that the Select Committee formed to draft a reply to the gracious speech with which His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to open this session has drafted the following reply:

To His Excellency, Sir William Henry Horwood, Kt., Administrator of the Government of Newfoundland and its Dependencies.

May It Please Your Excellency:

We the Commons of Newfoundland in Legislative Session assembled, beg to thank Your Excellency for the gracious Speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of the Legislature.

Signed: CYRIL J. CAHILL, THOS. J. POWER,
J. C. PUDDESTER.

Assembly Room, May 16th, 1927.

On motion this report was received.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on the subject matter now before the House. Before considering the speech of His Excellency, I would make a few references to the personnel of the House since last we met here. We all regret that Mr. Mott, the Clerk of the Assembly, is now undergoing treatment at the General Hospital. He is a highly esteemed official and we trust that his treatment will be successful, and that, in a little while he will be able to take his place again and that he will be blessed with complete recovery of his usual health and strength. I notice also that Mr. Duff, the Honourable Member for Carbonear, who possibly considered some of us so good-looking that he would get from the back benches here to the other side so that he would have a good view of the good-looking chaps on this side of the House. Now, I trust he is feeling quite comfortable, basking in the sun of the Government ranks, having moved his seat from the cold shades of Opposition. Mr. Duff is now enjoying the questionable privilege of being a member of His Majesty's Executive Government, but, after all, he must realize that all is not gold that glitters. I trust the zeal the honourable member manifested, when he was a member on this side of the House, will continue, and that the adding of his strength to the Government ranks and his presence there will be a "leaven that will leaven the whole lump." But I fear he has assumed an impossible task. He himself is looking in the pink of condition physically, and we can only say, to use a homely phrase, that he will have to put up with all the discomforts in reclining on the bed that he has made for himself.

Then, in Fortune District, there has been a bye-election rendered necessary by the resignation of Mr. Warren, who took a seat on the Bench, made vacant by the retirement of Mr. Justice Johnson. By the way, I may say that vacancy came as somewhat of a surprise to some of us; for, in answer to a question asked the Prime Minister last session by reference to Hansard the Prime Minister said, "that Mr. Justice Johnson had no intention of retiring to the knowledge of the Government, and that the Government had given no consideration to the appointment of his successor." I regret the absence of Mr. Warren from this House. He was one of the oldest members of the House, in point of the number of years he was a member. He was an experienced parliamentarian, an expert in constitution practice. If any of us had any occasion to ask any questions of Mr. Warren on constitutional usage or the practice of the House, he was always only too glad to give the information. We regret his absence on that account, and it is to be regretted, as the years pass, men of experience are no longer in this House to legislate or advise the younger members.

I congratulate Dr. Mosdell on his victory in Fortune District. Considering that it was a bye-election and that he had to fight one of the strongest opponents that the Government could send to that District at the time, no doubt the victory is due, to a great extent, to the personal popularity of Dr. Mosdell and the strenuous campaign he fought. But it was no doubt principally due to the unpopularity of the present Government. It was impossible for their man to win. Our heartiest congratulations are extended to Mr. Brophy, whose victory in St. John's East, was unique in the political history of Newfoundland. He and his associates put up a whirlwind campaign, a most strenuous and manly fight against the most influential and powerful odds. That is generally recognized by all in this House and those who happened to reside in St. John's at the time of the bye-election. All the Government forces were routed, horse, foot and dragoon. All the artillery at the disposal of the Government during the last lay of the fight was brought into requisition. They even brought the "Big Berthas" into requisition, and there was a regular bombardment in every section and corner of the District. I do not know whether they received an S.O.S. call or not. Anyway, some of us were sent to trail after the Government speakers in the different outlying sections. As we were in the game we had to follow suit, so that the constituents of St. John's East would not consider themselves neglected by us. So we put in an appearance; I put in an appearance at Pouch Cove. The Government were counting on a certain kind of ammunition. Some people said it was the silent ammunition—the silent vote, but that silent vote was very weak when we consider the results. Anyway, our young hero came through unscathed with victory perched on his banner. We welcome Dr. Mosdell and Mr. Brophy to this Assembly. They have a future before them that depends on their own action to a great extent as to what success they will meet, but I trust, like their predecessors in St. John's East, and those who went before them in the District of Fortune, they will tread the straight and narrow road so far as the political road can be travelled. We cannot expect impossibilities, and no doubt they will then get success and the confidence of the people in those districts. I trust that when they put on the armour again, to fight another election, that they will have similar success. While the bye-election in the District of Burgeo and Le Poile did not make any change in the membership of this House, I heartily congratulate Mr. Chambers on his return and the increased vote he received in his district. Mr. Chambers won his seat in spite of the unpopularity of the Government. I had the pleasure of shaking hands with Mr. Chambers on his return from the District, and I gave him my personal congratulations. It showed his strength in that District. No doubt, if there were a General Election, Mr. Chambers would have considered "discretion the better part of valor," unless he had gone to the District under a different party. Then he would have had a chance of being elected because his personal popularity in that District cannot be denied.

According to statements made in the press by some members of the Government during the bye-election in St. John's East, Major Cashin, Mr. Moore, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Little, Mr. Lake, Mr. Russell and Mr. Duff should resign their seats and appeal to their constituents. I suppose it is too late in the season to do that now. I draw the attention of the House to these statements. I do not know why they were made. I suppose it was thought they would have some political effect. But, can you imagine a more deceptive and hypocritical statement from a Government or the supporters of a Government that ignored one of the fundamental principles of constitutional government for over two years in connection with the vacancy for St. John's East and when a writ to fill this vacancy was then only issued to save your Government from further disintegration and ignominous destruction. The writ for an election was then brought about figuratively speaking at the point of the political bayonet of a member of your Government. I just mention this to show that these statements are not sincere. If all those members who have changed their seats from the Government to the Opposition side of the House did resign their seats, what guarantee would they have that the Districts would be opened that they might appeal to their constituencies for a confirmation or otherwise of their actions, and that they would not have been out in the wilderness with the Government carrying on and laughing at those who had resigned their seats? That is patent to everybody. Two years ago numbers of petitions and demands were made that even brought into the matter the representative of the King himself, to have the District of St. John's East opened, all with no avail. And then they say that those members should have resigned their seats and gone to their constituencies. I am inclined to think that St. John's East was opened because the Government could not meet this House otherwise and that is not news to anybody. The Government did not intimate by word or gesture that the seats would be opened if these honourable members had resigned. Now, if there is any honesty or sincerity in such statements, how can they contend that the action of Mr. Duff was perfectly alright. Mr. Duff has become a mem- of the party whose policy he denounced in 1924, in 1925 and right up to the closing hours of the session of 1926. They have now taken him to their bosom though he denounced them in the strongest language at his command. If there is any honesty in those statements, the Prime Minister should have said to Mr. Duff, "Upon principle we cannot take you into our party or into our Council. We should be very glad to have you, but you must resign your seat. We will open the District of Carbonear and you can go back to that district and get the approval or otherwise of your constituents as to whether you shall leave the party with which you were elected and join our ranks." That was not done.

These purely political hypocritical statements cannot go unchallenged by me. Members of the Monroe Government were reported as saying on a public platform: "that if a member is elected on a certain policy and he decides to leave the party in which he has been elected, that he should go back to his constituency to seek re-election." A Daniel came to judgment. Imagine a member of the Government ranks proclaiming that to his hearers at a public meeting in St. John's East. He was condemning the action of the Party with which he was connected. Can you wonder that there is disintegration and dissatisfaction amongst the ranks of the present Government. You could go from Alpha to Omega in their political record and not find anything but inconsistency there. So much for the political inconsistency of the present Government. It is the rule on an occasion like this when we are speaking to the motion for a committee to be appointed to draft a reply to the Speech from the Throne, to refer to the remarks made by the proposer and seconder of that motion. Mr. Cahill, the Honourable Member for Harbor Main did very well in his presentation. We have heard Mr. Cahill on a former occasion with great interest and sometimes with a little irritation, and more often with edification. The Government, no doubt, selected him for the part he had to play because he is a lawyer, and in the course of his practice he sometimes has to defend criminals, and I sympathize with him when he had to plead the case of the Government. He did it well. It is not an enviable position for anyone to occupy when his clients are of such a character that he knows they deserve the penalties of the law. Still he has to put up a case for them. He is paid for doing it. Whether they are honest or dishonest he tries to make out as good a case as he can, and he has made out a good case for the Government, who are political criminals. But I think his speech after all is an echo of a speech made in the recent bye-election. It seems to be back-wash of the speech made in the recent bye-election in St. John's East. It will be alright for the honourable member when he is contesting the District of Harbor Main or for any district that he may be contesting in the near future, but the arguments that Mr. Cahill has used to defend the policy of the present Government, and that jury which is the electorate when it gets an opportunity, that is at the General Election, will record their ballots against the present Government. Their verdict will be political oblivion. I must also congratulate Mr. Power on his effort and now that he has broken the ice as a speech-maker, I trust that we shall hear from him often during the session.

We have been hearing quite a lot for a number of years about coal seams and their probable value to the country. I hope the prospecting that is now going on will be successful, and that coal mines will be starting in Newfoundland, which will be of great commercial value to us. I trust that coal will be found in commercial quantities, which will bring to Newfoundland, no doubt, a great blessing, —if we get that industry started in Newfoundland after all the disappointments in connection with coal mining in this country. Some people are inclined to be a bit pessimistic. Nevertheless, whether it is successful or not, I agree that the Government should spend money on prospecting for coal and put up with the results. It is better to gamble in that respect than to throw away two million dollars on a mad, crazy tourist policy. Mr. Cahill reminded us in the course of his remarks that the honor of proposing that a committee be appointed to draft an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne fell to his lot also in 1925. I looked up the Hansard and I find that Mr. Cahill said: "that it might be a matter of interest "to Newfoundlanders to know that in "having a Winter session the Govern-"ment is following the precedent and "reviving the practice of earlier "years, when the House of Assembly "was always convened in February "month. Of late years expediency and "opportunism have often dictated "otherwise and the present Govern-"ment realizing that a session of the "House in the months of February is "in the best interests of the fisheries "and trade of the country generally, "have reverted to the old and proper custom." Of course, he has made no reference this year to the time the House has been opened, but I feel sure that if he was honest in his observations then, as I believe he was, he will admit that expediency and opportunism is dictating the policy of the Government. The opening of the House at this late date is inconvenient and interferes with the avocations of the Members, especially the members in the Outports who have to come in here at this season when they should be attending to their regular business.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is condemned by the words of its own advocates and supporters. I can't see for the life of me why we are opening the House at this time of the year. In 1917, Sir Edward Morris attended the Imperial Conference. He did not get back to Newfoundland until late in the season and even then it was said that the House should have been opened while he was away. It is against the best interests of this country for the opening of the House to be delayed to this time of the year. There is no excuse for it. The Government know how this House is constituted. They know that the best interests of this country cannot be served as this House is constituted at the present time. There is not sufficient strength of numbers on the Government side, and there is no spirit of determination to put through legislation that this country needs, and is languishing for. This Speech from the Throne ,the only thing tangible about it is the paper on which it is written. I have often heard the expression that the speech is remarkable for what it does not contain. Could anything be more applicable to this Speech. The Leader of the Opposition has said that if it had a black border around it, it would be regarded as an obituary notice of the Government. Mr. Speaker, it is ghostly in its nakedness. There is nothing material about it. It is not even padded. It is a most gloomy document. Those who read this speech and especially the part referring to the industries of this country will abandon all hope. The people residing on the coast will take to the woods. And then they can't stay there, because there are too many there already, seeking employment and finding none. Of course there are many things in connection with the policy of the Government that this Speech from the Throne do not contain and it shall be our privilege to refer to some of these things later on in the session. There are many things that justify criticism and time has told that many of the criticisms of the Opposition side of the House during the last few sessions were amply justified. Last year the Finance Minister gave Mr. Puddester a financial statement which set forth the financial condition of the country. This year nothing like that has been done. Mr. Puddester at that time gave a comparative statement of expenditure for the years 1923-24 and 1924-25. It will be remembered that this Government came into power in 1924 and the House met on July 10th, 1924. In presenting his Budget the Finance Minister stated that he did not have time to make a new Budget but that he had accepted the figures left at his office by Mr. Cave, his predecessor. The expenditure statement for 1924-25 was six hundred thousand dollars less than what it was for 1923-24. But the present Government cannot take any credit for decreasing that expenditure. It was there in black and white for them. On the contrary, every year since this Government came into power expenditure has increased. The Finance Minister's intentions might have been good but he did not have the courage to put them into practice We have been going ahead increasing our expenditure at such a rate that for 1926-27 we actually voted over a million dollars more than what was voted for 1924-25

Increase in Expenditure in two years.

Mr. Puddester can put this comparative statement of expenditure in the Daily News to-morrow for the information of its readers. These are the cold, unvarnished facts. This is the Government, we were told, that was going to reduce expenditure and reduce taxation, and this country was going to be a fishermen's Paradise and fishermen and their families were going to live in peace and contentment. This is what Mr. Monroe circulated throughout the length and breadth of this country in 1924 when he signed a document said to be his Manifesto. Instead of a fishermen's Paradise, the Monroe Government has made this country a fishermen's Purgatory and every bit of manhood and determination men had for the prosecution of the fisheries have been purged out of them. Now if the Daily News wants this comparative statement I have on my desk regarding increased expenditure to print tomorrow they can have it. Having in mind the conditions of this country, I fail to see that any justification can be given for that expenditure. But the people of this country do not want any newspaper to tell them about the burdens they have to bear, in the way of increased cost of living, largely due to increased taxation, and increased public expenditure as a result of the iniquitous policy of the present Government. What is the good for a person who is physically ill, to be told that his condition is serious, unless a medicine is prescribed, or a surgical operation is performed, that will eradicate the roots or cause of the disease? Figuratively speaking, this country requires a surgical operation by the application of the pruning knife to cut out the cancerous growth of waste and extravagance.

The Prime Minister says: "We need drastic legislation," but his Government is too weak and cowardly to introduce that legislation. For newspapers to cajole and apologise for the actions of the Government is absolutely worthless, for the people know by sad experience what the conditions are under which they live. And what are we doing about it? What are we doing about it? And then we wonder—the Honourable Leader of the Government wonders why the people are dissatisfied—the electors are dissatisfied, and the members of his own party are dissatisfied. Is it any wonder? It is said that the men who left the ranks of the Government are held up to ridicule. Called traitors! These men were elected to this House to support a policy. The members of the Monroe administration were elected to support a policy; that was alright, but did the Government try to put that policy in effect? There is a difference in being elected to support a party and being elected to support a policy. They have been elected to support a policy, and that policy has been thrown to the four winds of Heaven, and no attempt made to put it into effect. That brings me to the point as to the policy under which the Monroe Party was elected. I was in an election campaign in St. John's East also and I have an echo of something used there.

Here are extracts from your Manifesto:—

"The cost of the public service must be reduced and efficiency increased."

"I promise that, if given power I shall cause a careful investigation to be made in the financial methods of the country, and I shall enforce a policy of wise economy and retrenchment."

"Public expenditure must be drastically reduced."

Can you wonder at men leaving you, Mr. Leader of the Government, when you promised that, and when instead of reducing you have increased expenditure by one and a quarter millions in three short years? And we don't know where the end is yet. "Expenditure must be drastically reduced,"—and you wonder why you are unpopular and why your men are leaving you! "The House of Assembly should meet in January or February." This is the wrong time to have the House open, and we are not told why the opening is delayed. Some people are unkind enough to say it was because Captain Winsor went to the Ice, and that he said he didn't care whether they opened the House or not, he was going to the Ice.

CAPT. WINSOR—It would be better if some members of the Opposition would go to the Ice and bring some revenue into the country.

MR. HALFYARD—I am tired hearing you get off that trash, as if nobody but a Winsor could successfully command a sealing steamer. Now, if all the Winsors and all the Keans and Barbours, and Halfyards, too, were dropped out, somebody would be found to take their places and go on. Why prolong the agony? It is patent to everyone—the blunders and inconsistencies of the Government. I wouldn't mind a man making a blunder sometimes, but the whole lot of us are suffering for it. We speak of the "Country"—"Save the Country." What do we mean—the hills, trees and rivers? It is nice to live in a country where there is lovely scenery to inspire—the plains are monotonous. But the man who goes out through the Narrows in his boat to drag the wealth from the ocean, it is no inspiration to view the Southside Hills and see its catharacts and streams, if he can't market his fish. And what are we doing about it? We are doing nothing; it is hopeless—but still we are here. Not one of us should be here! We should be out of it and giving our places to better men. We are simply hanging on to get our sessional pay, others to get positions of emolument. The Country is going to the dogs! No beneficial legislation can be brought in, owing to the constitution of the House at the present time, and still we stick to our jobs. But enough of that!

Now let us get down to this document, which is very disappointing, having in mind that which affects the welfare of every man, woman and child in the country, that is ,its staple industry. From that point of view I criticize the Speech, and say that nothing material or promising is in it. Reference is made in the first paragraph to the settlement of the Labrador Boundary question. We are all delighted that the case before the Privy Council was decided in our favor. The potential value of the Labrador may be great; it may run into hundreds of millions, but that is problematic. I am not a prophet, nor the son of a prophet, but I recall that in 1925, when we were considering the Re-Distribution Bill, I took occasion to refer to the Labrador Boundary question, and by reference to Hansard I find that the statements I made then were practically correct, if not critically so. I then took the trouble to look up all the data on the question from the historic point of view, of the commercial value of the Labrador, and the opinions of learned men as to our claims to that piece of territory. I said then the areas involved were about 120 thousand square miles, which was pretty nearly correct, for it turned out to be 110,000, which allowed for a point of territory given to the Canadians at Blanc Sablon. It was said then that one third of the area was timber land; well, one-third of say 120,000 square miles is 40,000 square miles of timber limits—allowing six cords to the acre, and there are 640 acres in a square miles, at $1.00 a cord that would be $153,600,000.00. Then as regards water power, I said that the water power was worth $200,000,000, that is compared with the value given for water power in Ireland and other places, where the data is given. Take electric farming. In some cases power has been transmitted 800 miles, to places where the climate and soil would yield nothing, have been heated by electric power.

Sometimes, you know, in the course of my remarks I take the trouble to repeat something that other people have said that may be of value. Now in 1925, I made some remarks in connection with representation for Labrador. Now we own Labrador and we have no provision for representation in this Assembly. Therefore you will have to amend the Election Act this session, and give Labrador representation. Now you have all this trouble because you did not take my advice. And although I say it myself, if you had taken my advice in other matters also, you would be better off than you are to-day.

I trust that Labrador will be of great value to us. Whether in the years to come conditions will improve ,and we will be able to develop it ourselves, or whether we will turn it into cash, it is a matter of opinion. I am not here to express an opinion on it. But if we can get a $100,000,-000 for it I think that we should get clear of it as quickly as possible.

It is said in the Speech that the Income Tax Act will again be enacted. Now I know the Leader of the Government and more particularly the Minister of Finance, will give me credit if nobody else does for advocating the continuation of that tax. I think we on this side of the House gave our reasons why it should be continued. Then we were increasing our general tariff, which was inconsistent on the part of the Government. Conditions in this country are such that this tax may be an objectionable one. But all taxes are. But when you are leaving the wealthy free from any extra taxation and putting it on those who can least afford to bear it, then I say that that is a very bad and unwise policy. I am sorry to see that conditions in this country are causing you to intimate in the Speech from the Throne, that the Income Tax will again be put on the Statute Book. Last year, and this is worth repeating, I asked a question of the Assessor as to who paid their income tax. In reply to that question I was told who did, not individuals but those who paid according to their income.

I was curious to know whether the tax was paid by men with incomes of one thousand or two thousand dollars or by people or corporations with incomes ranging from six thousand to one hundred thousand dollars. We find that 45 corporations and 1042 individuals paid forty-five thousand dollars on incomes from $1000 to $6000. The total collected for the year, according to the statement given me, was $338,000.00, $45,000 paid by 45 corporations and 1042 individuals. The balance of $292,330.97 was paid by corporations, not many of them, and individuals with incomes ranging from $6.000 to $100,000. I advocated then to the Minister of Finance and Customs to take the schedule of taxes paid in Canada, and increase the exemptions up to $2,000 for a young man and $3,000 or $4,000 for a married man. I hope that is what he is going to do when he brings in the Act. And the sad part of it is that we have lost about one million dollars during the last three years. And it is reported by the Prime Minister that we have a deficit of two and a half million dollars, including the railway. Now I ask you is it right for any individual living in this country under the present conditions to be relieved of a legitimate tax, a just tax. It is just as well to put the money in the Treasury as to have it left as bequests in wills, while the laborer and the fishermen, the sick and the disabled are taxed and taxed out of existence.

There is a reference here in the Speech from the Throne to the codfishery.

Here the fisheries of Newfoundland are dismissed with two short paragraphs. There is nothing said as to what is going to be done to try to remedy this condition of things. Towards the end of the Speech there is reference to the Gander. I trust that when the Bill is presented that it will be of such a nature that it will receive the approval of this House. But we must be very careful. We must not allow slipshod legislation to pass through this House, as it has happened in the last two or three sessions. This has been a great mistake. We must not take anything for granted. I trust that the Minister of Justice will be a little more careful this year, concerning anything coming under his Department. It is ridiculous that Bills are brought into this House and then have to be thrown out again.

We come now to the crux of this Speech from the Throne. That is that there will be a deficit on current account for the year 1926-1927. The Prime Minister said the deficit on the railway was three-quarters of a million, which makes the total deficit two and a quarter million dollars.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing in this Speech as to how we are going to meet this deficit.

Major Cashin's statements of some time ago it appears are not far out we will find when accounts are tabled and we get a true statement of receipts and expenditures. No suggestion is made in the Speech as to how we are going to meet this deficit. The country was never in such a hopeless mess; financially and industrially; when we think of our staple industries, the cod and herring fisheries. There is not a word in the Speech as to how we are going to meet this deficit; not a word about reducing expenditure. We can only come to the conclusion that the Government intends if they stay here long enough, to introduce another loan bill of three or four millions and when they get it to pay off the deficit. How long is this condition of things to last. If you pursue your present policy of expenditure you will certainly have to meet another deficit next year. We cannot go on borrowing indefinitely. Eleven and a half million dollars in three short years. Now, a prospect of four or five millions. Fifteen millions in three years, with interest of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. That is what this poor, down-trodden country that we are all bleeding for will have to pay. Unfortunately the producer is being bled, and you are helping to bleed him as a result of paying an extra seven-hundred and fifty thousand dollars interest on public debt in three short years, what have you to show? You have rerailed the railway, given us a dock ,and a highroads tourist policy. We are not one cent's worth better off than before you spent that money, when we consider the increase in the earning power of the people, not one cent greater income. The dock is operated the same as before. The railway is safer, but has it increased transportation or freight? I am only pointing out conditions in the country as compared to conditions in the country when you took charge. Your highroads policy of spending two million dollars is creating a liability unless you wish the roads to be torn up and the money be gone for nothing. You have spent $2,212,000.00 on roads and now have the liability of spending another half million to keep them in repair and still nothing can be done for the staple industries of this country either by word, act, or gesture, either by the State or the Exporters. The Government and 90 per cent. of the exporters should be marooned on some desert island and made to exist on mussels and seaweed. The men of the country are leaving its shores. Unfortunately not only are the men leaving but they are taking their families with them and leaving their homes. The Prime Minister, no doubt, as a result of his three years' experience is a sadder and a wiser man than when he assumed office and took control of the Government, and if we could read his thoughts and know his feelings, we would see, I do not doubt, that he would wish that he had never attempted to try and lead a party and lead a government. But he assumed the responsibility and now he has come to the conclusion that he can't do anything for the best interests of the country, and he can't get any legislation passed that he knows should be passed, he should resign and let somebody else take charge. Let the country decide. Get a mandate from the country; then I trust that whatever Government comes back shall be sufficiently strong in numbers and determined in spirit to do something for the country by way of legislation. We have been living largely on loans for the last three years, for a number of years, and now we anticipate another one. Is it not time to cry halt? Was it not a miscalculation of the Finance Minister last year? He anticipated a surplus, I understand, and now he has to come in and tell us that there is a deficit of one and a half millions. Of course, it is said that only a member of the Opposition is talking and all he says is only for political purposes. No doubt the Prime Minister was told, "Don't listen to a word that crowd over there say. We are tired listening to them. They don't mean a word they say." You don't want to be a philosopher or prophet, you only want ordinary common-sense and some consideration of the conditions and commercial history of the country, to know that you are going to have some lean years, and what may be regarded as fat years. In 1924, when you assumed office everything seemed rosy and bright. In those days the proposer and seconder of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne said that there was going to be no more unemployment, and generally, spoke of bright prospects. Those things happened when everything looked promising, and it went on so for about twelve months. As a result we got big revenue for 1924-1925, but what caused that revenue was the good price for fish and construction work at the Humber. There you had a big revenue, but it is only the act of irresponsibles that when you have a good year, you spend every cent of your revenue, and increase your liabilities. That is what you did by a policy of spending over two millions on highroads with no idea of getting returns. Money was wasted in every department of the Government. A boat was sent down to Lower Labrador that was not necessary. The Earl of Devon cost about $16,-000.00, in 1925. The Watchful last year cost about $45,000.00. How grave the situation now is we do not know, and will not untli we get a financial statement from the Minister of Finance or a report from the Auditor-General. On Wednesday last the Leader of the Government waxed virtually eloquent in an appeal to the members of this side of the House not to talk too long, and suggested that some two or three members be deputed to present the case for the Opposition. Was there ever heard such a suggestion made by a Prime Minister before? My good friend, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, knows that I am not going to let anybody talk for me any more than he would. I am here to do my duty and to talk for my constituents, and for the country, and I shall do so whether it is July, August or September, or whether it is daylight or dark. If the Opposition are not going to criticize the Government, who is going to do it? It is our privilege to represent our grievances, and we are going to do it whether you like it or not. It is not always very pleasant for us to do so. It is said you cannot have good Government without strong Opposition.

Under our party system of Government you must have an Opposition, and members on this side are expected to criticise because members of the other side will not.

The only criticism that will be made by members on the other side is in the secrecy of the party caucus. I have some little experience and I know what I am talking about. The Hon. the Prime Minister has a misconception of the duties of the members of the Opposition. It is our bounden duty to criticize and one of the most ancient privileges of Parliament even before party Government was introduced into the House of Commons in England, was to make criticisms, present grievances, and ask for redress. The other side of the House abandoned that and this most ancient function of Parliament was left to this side of the House, and it is the bounden duty and privilege of every honourable member on this side of the House to express his opinion on any matter which affects the welfare of the community. Is it because the Government for political expediency has postponed the opening of the Legislature to this season of the year which is most inconvenient to the members and to the country that the rights and privileges of the members of the Opposition are to be curtailed. We know that the Government under the Monroe regime is farcical and is becoming a byword and a reproach, and as time advances the damaging effects of its policy is becoming daily more apparent, which are causing people to say, "We are not fit to govern ourselves," and are talking of Royal Commissions.

What a terrible and appalling position we are in; under a three-year administration of a Monroe Government. A country that was described by the Honourable Leader of the Government in a Manifesto signed by him in May, 1924, as a fisherman's Paradise. Thousands of fishermen are saying if it was a fishermen's Paradise three years ago, it is now a fishermen's Purgatory, and are not only leaving the country themselves but are taking their families with them, and then we are not to make lengthy remarks, and two or three men on this side of the House should be selected to speak on the "Address in Reply" for the whole of the Opposition. I don't want any man to speak for me either on this side of the House or the other side of the House. My constituents expect me to speak my opinion of the Government, and the country demands me to speak, and that applies to every member of the Oppostiion, and I would not insult a member of the Opposition by suggesting that someone else speak for him.

Further, why if any Administration that ever existed in the history of this country deserved criticism surely it is the Administration on the other side of the House, and the trouble is that in the past it has paid no heed to advice or criticism. If they had listened to criticism from this side of the House they would not be in the hole they are to-day. Did not this side of the House tell the Prime Minister in the session of 1925 that the policy of expenditure outlined by him, which means the spending of millions of dollars on visionary projects and public works, would lead you to financial ruin and chaos. What you were told from this side of the House you know, by sad experitnce, was only too true. You were told less than twelve months after you took charge that your policy was a made one; some of us knew what we were talking about, that your policy would bring disaster, debt and difficulty to the country. You did not heed the warning which was given, as far as I was concerned, with sincerity; you were told that the country was disappointed and alarmed. They expected that you would make an attempt to put into effect some of your election promises, and reduce taxation and expenditure; you were elected for this purpose and you fell down on your job; you were told that you were condemned by the country, and you, Mr. Prime Minister, said at the time, "The country would not judge you by nine short months of power." You were told that if you were to bring about the necessary reforms for which you were elected that you should begin at the very beginning of your Administration, and you would have four years to live down the unpopularity that possibly may arise. But for lack of experience you listened to some of your partners in the Executive Government who told you that was part of the game of the Opposition to oppose any policy of the Government. You thought you were sincere yourself, but you gave the Opposition no credit for sincerity and their experience, and scornfully ignored their warnings. What is the result, as I have already said we are now faced with debt, difficulty and disaster. You are a discredited Government, and if the result of the bye-election in St. John's East is any criterion of the feeling of the people of this country, and it is, it is questionable if you were to appeal to the country at the present time whether your candidates would gain a seat in the whole country. The Government must certainly realize this. But you are there and you must carry on or drag along for a few months longer. I presume you intend to vote Supply although you have not told us how you propose to get ways and means to pay your bills after making your commitments, I suppose you intend to ask the House to give you authority to borrow a few million more to pay our account. A private business concern in a similar deplorable financial condition would be put in liquidation overnight. Scores of fishermen planters with 50 per cent. better collateral security than the Government cannot borrow a hundred dollars or get credit to prosecute the fisheries and have to leave the country.

I would like to refer now to a question asked the Leader of the Government by the Leader of the Opposition on opening day, namely, as to what the intention of the Government was with regard to the holding of a General Election next Autumn. I would like to point out to the House that, according to constitutional law, respecting the length of life of a House of Assembly, "The House of Assembly shall continue, notwithstanding the demise of His Majesty, for four years from the day on which it shall by Proclamation be appointed to meet, unless sooner dissolved, and no longer."

The House of Assembly shall continue, notwithstanding the demise of His Majesty for four years, from the day on which it shall by Proclamation be appointed to meet, unless sooner dissolved and no longer. (1) The first session of the 26th General Assembly met on July 10th, 1924. Therefore on July 10th, 1928, there will be no House of Assembly if the present Government intends to hold to office and should continue as a Government until the Autumn of 1928. There will be no House of Assembly until a new House is formed as a result of an appeal in a General Election to the electorate of the country. Should the Government continue in office until the expiration of their four years and no longer, which will terminate July 10th, 1928, the constitution of a new House can only be brought about by a General Election in the Spring of 1928. Is this a desirable condition to anticipate? We have been told by the advocates of the present Government that a Spring election would be a calamity, that it interferes with the general trade and business of the country. At the time when employers and employees, merchants and fishermen should be giving their time and attention in preparation for the prosecution of the fisheries, business is upset by a political turmoil which is detrimental to the best interests of the country. Certainly, after the vociferous protestations against a Spring election by members of the Monroe Government, their supporters and thousands of electors who are opposed to the policy of the present Government, it is inconceivable that the Honorable the Prime Minister and His Executive entertain the idea or propisition of trying to hold on to office until the Spring of 1928, and then issue a proclamation for a Spring election. It would be most glaring inconsistency, and brand the Government as the greatest crowd of political poltroons that ever occupied seats in this Legislature or any other Legislature in a civilized community; not having in mind what is expected from men working under British constitutional Government. Therefore we can reasonably conclude that the present Government has no intention of bringing about by word or act a condition of things in this country for political expediency, which has been proclaimed by them deplorable, causing chaos and instability.

(3) Mr. Monroe, the Hon. the Prime Minister, stated in his speech last Wednesday. "We acknowledge that we are not as powerful to do things that we think ought to be done; we were before we lost some members to the other side. If we had those embers we would be able to introduce drastic measures that we don't feel powerful enough to do at the present time."

We therefrom infer from the remarks of the Prime Minister that the present Government can no longer tion in the best interests of the ntry. The Prime Minister in his lear, emphatic manner states that he annot introduce necessary legislation owing to the depletion of his ranks. agree with the Prime Minister. If e are to retain our independence and h status of a Dominion in the British Empire, that such legislation should not be delayed one hour longer than is absolutely necessary. If he Prime Minister is sincere, and I have no reason to believe he is not, how does he hope to get a Government strong enough in members and determined in spirit to enact legislation which is of vital importance to the country at the present time. Does he expect his ranks to be increased from the members of the Opposition of this House? Would the Prime Minister welcome to his ranks the men he asked to leave his party and others who left his Government? Is the Prime Minister now hoping to strengthen his Government by getting men from the Opposition? If so, I think the Prime Minister is leading a forlorn hope. We canont afford to sit down and be content to collect the revenue and pay the salaries of the officials in the civil service. If we are to continue to be a Dominion that men will continue to make a home in, and not to leave, we must be prepared to deal with matters of pressing importance.

For the reasons I have enumerated I think there is a good and sufficient cause for the holding of a General Election the coming Fall. I agree with the Prime Minister that, if we are to retain our independence as a Dominion of the British Empire, drastic legislation will have to be enacted. At the present time we are unable to meet our financial obligations without going to the money markets and borrowing. I will leave these few remarks for the consideration of the Government and I trust that the Government and Opposition will come to a decision that will bring credit to themselves and bring about some condition that will be better than what obtains at the present time.

It now being 6.30 of the clock, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate, as I propose to continue for a few minutes at the next session.

On motion the debate was adjourned to to-morrow.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister, the bill entitled "An Act to govern the granting of lands and rights in Labrador" was introduced and read a first time and ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Mr. Moore gave notice of question.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of question.

Mr. Russell gave notice of question.

Mr. Brophy gave notice of question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

Mr Brown gave notice of question.

Mr. Lake gave notice of question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that this

House at its rising do adjourn to to-morrow, Tuesday, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 17th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Rev. Geo. J. Bond, LL.D., thanking the House on behalf of the relatives of the late Rt. Hon. Sir R. Bond for the House's Resolution of Sympathy on his death.

The Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs laid on the Table the Public Accounts for 1925-26.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Scammell, from Fleur de Lys, re Coastal Service.

Mr. Moore gave notice of Question.

Mr. Brown gave notice of Question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of Question.

Mr. Bradley gave notice of Question.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of Question.

Mr. Mosdell gave notice of Question.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of Question.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I give notice that I will on to-morrow move the House in Committee of the Whole to consider the bequest to the Colony of the property of the late Sir Robert Bond, P.C., K.C. M.G., and the correspondence in connection therewith. I would call attention to the fact that the Executor is particularly anxious to get an answer regarding this bequest, and I have promised to bright the matter before the House at the first possible opportunity. We may be quite a time discussing the Address in Reply and I shall therefore ask the indulgence of the House to take up this matter to-morrow. The Government has no desire to shirk responsibility, but we felt that we ought to give representatives of all districts an opportunity to express an opinion on this matter, before the Government sends in a reply.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

Answers to the following questions were tabled, Numbers 44, 48, 49, 50, 55, 61, 71.

ADDRESS IN REPLY.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate that any member of the House guilty of making any lengthy remarks should be deprived of the privilege of having a clock to look at, as I notice that the ornament that we have for a clock is not only stopped, but it has lost its hands since yesterday. I trust this is not an indication that the Government is run down and out of commission. I presume there is someone preparing a synopsis of debates for publication in the outport press this year, as the general practice seems to be to take what is published in the daily press and send it along to the outport newspapers. I have no fault to find with the report of the Daily News this morning of my remarks of yesterday. It was better than I expected. I would like to refer to a part of the report, however, in which I think I was misrepresented. I am reported to have said "Mr. Hickman could not be expected to assume all the responsibility of leadership." What I did say was that, in dealing with some remarks made by the leader of the Government, it could not be expected that Mr. Hickman should speak for all the members on the Opposition side of the House. I trust that the reporter who supplied that report to the Daily News will be more careful in future. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Government should remain in power as long as they can function in the best interests of the country and no longer. Whether they have one or two in majority, if in the opinion of the Government they cannot introduce legislation which is in the best interests of the people of the country, the proper course for them to take is to relinquish their power and appeal to the country for a mandate to strengthen their position or for another party to take their places. The House of Assembly according to the Statutes is a House for four years and no longer and according to that the present House of Assembly will cease to function as a House on July 9th, 1928. Secondly, a Spring election is generally regarded as a wrong time in this country because it interferes with trade, as I pointed out yesterday, and I think we can avoid a Spring election under present conditions by having an election next Fall. The Prime Minister told us that he could not introduce drastic legislation, owing to the way the House is constituted, even though the country is in need of such legislation. Therefore, for the three reasons I have mentioned we should have a general election next Fall. When we realise that we cannot function as a House of Assembly there should be a dissolution and an appeal made to the country and I trust that the Government will consider that. The Prime Minister in the course of his speech referred to a deficit on the railway and said that when his Government took over the railway it was a lot of junk. That might have been said with a greater degree of truth in 1920 when the Government at that time had to appoint a Commission to try and carry on the railway in connection with the Reid Newfoundland Company. I happened to be Colonial Secretary in 1918 when the railway was in a frightful state of disrepair. There were run-offs and derailments every other day and there was cause for the travelling public to lose confidence in it. The matter was referred to me in this House and I gave warning as to the unsafe condition of the road. Our Government were very much worried over the condition of the railway at that time because it was only an act of providence that there was no serious loss of life. The condition of the railway in 1920 was in a deplorable condition, as very little money was spent for its maintenance for many years previous to that.

In Mr. Hall's report on the Railway Commission in 1920, he describes the conditions of the railway at that time, and states the amount of money that had been spent to try and put the railway in safe condition for transportation—for life and also for property. We are very unfair in our criticisms of Governments and reference has been made, no doubt, for political reasons to the vast amount of money that was spent by the Railway Commission of 1920 and succeeding commissions. We have been told about the large amount of money the Government had to find to meet the deficit on the railway at that time. We generally compare our doings with the doings of similar businesses and public transactions in Canada. During the year 1919 there was a deficit of $100,000,000 on Railway Account in Canada. At that time the rates charged on our railway were only 52% of Canadian rates. This report goes on to show (Reads): "Great Britain and the United States took over, etc."

I just mention this to give a comparison of what Newfoundland had to put up with in connection with the operation of its railway and also the conditions of trade with regard to railway transportation in Canada, the United States and Great Britain. Unfortunately while these countries are now operating their railways without any loss, in some cases with a surplus, Newfoundland is still operating its railway at a great loss, as referred to in the Speech from the Throne. I understand that the Canadian Railway this year made a surplus of about $35,000,000. They are progressing in trade and it seems that we are going backward, or at a standstill. It is most unfortunate.

The Railway Commission at that time bought six new locomotives.

(Reads.)

That was the condition of the railway when the Commission resigned. For the money that was spent by the Government of 1919-1920, 1921 up to 1923, the railway was in fairly good condition. It was not a lot of junk. It was in very good condition. Further, I may say, the General Manager of the Railway told me that if the money had not been spent on the railway to the extent it was, if improvements had not been made, if ballasting had not gone on to the same etxent, when we entered into a contract with the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company for the construction of the Mills at Corner Brook, he said it would have been just as possible to cross the Atlantic Ocean in a dory as it would be to move the machinery which was required for the construction of the mill at Corner Brook over our railway. Every satisfaction was given by the railway during that construction period, and although money was spent, the result showed that it was a very wise policy. I just mention this because we are liable to make off-hand statements without knowing the difference or without consideration. In the Speech from the Throne, referring to that part which deals with the deficit, there is a reason given for the deficit:

(Reads.)

I do not know what the Government means by referring to conditions being largely transitory. It says that the price of cotton goods is decreased. I do not know whether they are hoping that the price of cotton goods will increase so that we will get a better revenue. That is one meaning we can read from this. It is ambiguous anyhow. It hopes that something turns up and deplores the fact that cotton goods are low. I think we should all rejoice that the price of cotton goods is low. Anyhow, the only hope for increased revenue is if the price of cotton goods goes up in the foreign markets, then our revenue will go up, and we will be happy because we have to pay more for the clothes we wear. Well, we are going to await the movements of trade before taking any drastic remedial measures. The Government shows its weakness in that paragraph. We know we should have drastic legislation, and still our only hope to meet our deficit is to borrow more money. Well, a crowd of school children would do just as well. Anybody at all can sit down in the Custom House of the country and collect the revenue according to schedule. Anybody could come in here and pass supplies for the next fiscal year, not knowing where the money was going to come from to pay for those supplies and merely trust that they would be able to go to the money markets and borrow money and pay off a debt. Still, we are responsible people, supposed to be working under a responsible Government. Responsible for what? Certainly that is a travesty on British Constitutional Government that we cannot find legitimate ways and means to meet our expenditure for public services for carrying on the business of the country. If it was a private individual he would be declared insolvent over night. Our only collateral security we now have, they tell us, is whatever may be derived from Labrador. At present that is only a liability. It will cost thousands of dollars to find out what we own down there. Lawyers' fees in galore will have to be paid for the next three or four years to find out what we own and the boundary line, and we will have to have surveying parties sent down. We have been depending on Canada before to get what bit of information we had. We learned from their surveying parties about timber and water powers and other things. Now we are a responsible people. As the Prime Minister said the other day, if we were to appeal to the British Government at the present time to come to our rescue they could say "Physician, heal thyself." We should cut our garment according to our cloth, and if we cannot afford luxuries, let us cut out the luxuries and try to get along as the people got along years ago. I realize that would be difficult.

That is plain unvarnished truth, we have to admit. But we have done nothing as a Government since 1924 to reduce interest on public debt. We have been "going to it" as hard and as strong as we can to increase the interest on $11,500,000 which was borrowed by this Government; over $575,000 (nearly $600,000) in interest. Next year the amount may be $750,000; that is what we have to look for now. The public debt has increased so much that we will have to find $750,000 extra as interest on public debt. It is said the deficit on the railway will be considerably less than in 1925-26. We all hope it will. The deficit on the railway for 1923-24 was

If all the money spent on the railway had been charged to current account it would be nearer a million dollars. A lot of money spent on the railway has been charged to Capital Account.

That is the condition we are in and still we are helpless and hopeless and do nothing but sit down and hope, according to this Speech, that the price of cotton will go up and by that we will be able to meet our expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, I could continue all this afternoon and then continue, but I cannot see what is the good. Every business house, and I suppose every private individual, has to do a little stock taking, and this is one place, in connection with the business affairs of the country, that we should have a heart to heart talk on conditions that we have to face. We are responsible for the dealing of the country as members of the Legislature. That is one reason why I would speak of conditions that obtain. If legislation could help, let us do something. I know that there is some legislation that would not help matters, but we can do a little to help. I have here some notes on the Budget of 1924 which I found amongst my papers. I notice from them that the Finance Minister in that Budget Speech denounces vigorously the squandermania of the preceding Government and their miscalculations in their budgets. He says there will be much saving in the cost of transportation. I would like to have a comparison, taking into account the cost of coal at the present time and the cost at that time, and then see how great a saving has been made. "If there is a shortage it will be met by enforced economy in some of the public services," he then said. He said this, and now unfortunately he comes in with a deficit. He hoped to cut expendture down to an irreducible minimum. He uses the biggest adjective and the strongest terms in the English language that he has at his command to define exactly what sort of "a minimum."

(Reads.)

One of our most respected statesmen is credited with saying, "By their deeds we shall know them." The Finance Minister now admits his absolute failure to reduce expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, I will now give place to better and more acceptable speakers because the hours unknowingly are quickly passing by. I thank the House for its kind and attentive hearing.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last I listened with close attention, some interest, but no hope to the Speech with which His Excellency the Administrator was pleased to open this session of the Legislature. Close attention, in order that I might ascertain just what that speech contained, just what forecast it might give us of the nature, character and extent of the legislation which the Government proposed to submit to us; some interest, in that, as each paragraph began, there was the anticipation of the succeeding words containing something which might be of service to our Colony; but no hope, when I realised at the end of the paragraph that there was nothing in what preceded that end which could in any way improve conditions in this country. It was a colorless document, as colorless as the water in a glass, as the air that surrounds this House; and it consisted merely in repetitions of facts already known, well known, for they have been dinned into our ears by the present administration on the platform, through the press and elsewhere.

Before proceeding to further discuss this matter I would like to extend to the several members of the House the usual congratulations. In particular I congratulate Mr. Chambers, who, by accepting the office of Minister of Public Works, had necessarily to return to his district for its endorsation of his action. Mr. Chambers was returned by a large majority. I congratulate him on that majority, and I do so all the more heartily because I feel that it was due solely to the popularity of my good friend Mr. Chambers himself and not to the popularity of the administration with which he is associated, though one of the items upon which certain money of the loan of 1926 was expended may possibly be referred to as an indication that there were other causes for the majority which our good friend obtained. I would like to congratulate also my good friend Dr. Mosdell, who defeated the Government candidate in a district in which it at least conceived itself to be firmly entrenched. He took his political life in his hands, resigned his seat in the Upper House and went down into the political whirlpool to fight this strongly entrenched Government in the District of Fortune. It struck me as rather strange to see how quickly the Government opened that district after it had removed its representative, a member sitting on this side of the House in opposition. I don't know the reason why one seat remained closed two years and why the other seat was opened within two months after the vacancy occurred. One might perhaps be forgiven if suspicions as the motives of the Government, not particularly complimentary to them, cross one's mind from time to time in this connection. The facts were that at that time the Government and Opposition were practically even on the floors of the House; that shortly before one member who sat in opposition to the Government had been induced by what means I know not to cross the floors and support that Government. I have heard that gentleman time after time and session after session stand here on this side of the House and condemn the policy and actions of the Monroe administration in the strongest possible terms. He was a member of the Liberal Party, elected, I believe, under the Liberal Party to support the policy of the Liberal Party, and he did carry out his pledges no doubt for three sessions of the Legislature. It may be due to party spirit this afternoon that I regret his presence on the other side of the House. In due course I suppose he will go back to his constituents and answer to them as I will to mine. His conscience is his own and I trust that within himself he is perfectly satisfied with his action. I do congratulate

Dr. Mosdell on his victory. I repeat he took his political life in his hands. He went to a district entirely new to him, a district opened by the Government silently and without other than the usual legal notice. It was, I have no doubt, a great surprise to the present administration that a district upon which I believe they counted confidently had gone against them. It was a blow, a serious blow to the administration. It was a plain statement from the people of Fortune Bay that "we electors of this district have no confidence in the present administration." To Dr. Mosdell a large measure of credit is due for having presented the facts and issues so clearly before the electors of Fortune Bay that the powerful agencies on behalf of the Government against him were of no avail. I repeat my congratulations to him.

I would like also to congratulate the honourable member of St. John's East, Mr. Brophy, upon his recent election to a seat in this House. Mr. Brophy is a young man, younger politically than I am myself. He went down into the whirlpool of politics to fight what appeared to be a forlorn hope in the stronghold of the Government, in a district, sir, where the third candidate who fought that district for the Monroe party in the election of 1924 polled over three times the vote of the highest Liberal candidate of that time; where the lowest candidate of the Monroe party polled more votes than the combined vote of the three Liberal candidates of 1924. And Mr. Brophy emerged from that contest victorious in spite of that tremendous majority, in spite of the heavy artillery which the Government used against him. It was a wonderful fight. I had the honor, the privilege and the pleasure of taking some part in it myself, so I speak from personal knowledge, and I do most heartily congratulate Mr. Brophy who so successfully came out of a fight which, on the face of it, to the ordinary man, would seem to be a hopeless one.

I remember seeing in the Government Press during that campaign a statement to the effect that a defeat of the Government candidate in St. John's East would be tantamount to a vote of want of confidence in the Government. You have got it, sir. The District of St. John's East has given the Government its answer. The answer is "we have no confidence in this Government." I trust that the Government itself will take the verdict of St. John's East as being what its own official organ says it is. I don't know whether it was the intion at the time to stampede the electorate into voting for the Government candidate; but if so that attempt signally failed. If not, then it must have been a truthful statement of what the Government organ believed, and the Government itself believed, and I trust that they will now take that decision in the spirit in which it was given and govern their actions accordingly.

I would like also to congratulate the junior member for Harbor Main and the honourable member for St. George's upon the speeches which they made in moving that an address be sent to His Excellency in reply to the Speech from the Throne. The latter I would congratulate generally, the former merely upon the early part of his speech. It would hardly be expected of me to congratulate Mr. Cahill upon that portion of his speech which had particular reference to those members who sat on the Government side and now find themselves on this side. I did notice this, that while there was apparent sincerity in the early portions of the honourable member's speech, the latter portion did lack that sincerity; so insincere were they that the honourable member felt that it was more than he could do to speak extemporarily, and he was guilty of a venial breach of the rules of debate in that he read the latter portion of his speech. It was high sounding and must have taken some time to compose. I like the rythm of it myself, although it did attempt to cast some reflections on me; but its apparent artificiality convinced me that it was insincere, and therefore in its nature complimentary. Now, sir, this speech, so-called, as every honourable member of this House knows, and indeed as most citizens know, is the emanation of the Government rather than of anybody else. I presume it is our duty to pass such remarks as we may deem proper upon its contents. In order that one may judge with any degree of correctness or with any degree of intelligence of the pronouncements of any particular party or body it is essential that we should have some conceptions of the chracteristics of the party or the body making those particular pronouncements. It would seem, therefore, rather necessary if we are to arrive at a reasonably correct conclusion as to what may be foreshadowed for the Colony in this Speech from the Throne that we should analyze the characteristics of the Monroe party from the day the party was first conceived, and bring our research down to the present moment. If we can with the materials at our disposal arrive at a reasonably correct estimate of its salient features, then perhaps we will be in a position to judge what may be expected from the contents of the speech for the weal or woe of this unfortunate Colony.

I remember in 1924 when I was a member of that party, Mr. Speaker, one of the salient characteristics of the policy which that party undertook to put into effect was retrenchment, the reduction of public expenditure, the stoppage of unnecessary waste of public moneys, the cutting of our coats according to the quantity of cloth which we hapepned to possess, the abolition of the payment of unnecessary salaries. The whole of the public services was to be cleaned up. Having succeeded in doing this, it was to be kept clean. A wise and unquestionably wise policy, one at which no reasonably minded, honest citizen could possibly cavil, one which if it was beleived in must necessarily be voted for by every honest citizen who happened to posses the franchise. There were quite a number of people who did believe in the honest intentions of this party as it was then. In consequence the Monroe party was elected to power. Never before in the history of Newfoundland was an administration in such an advantageous position to bring about the retrenchment and reduction of expenditure which was promised by the Monroe party in 1924. Never in the history of this Colony was public opinion so prepared for the pruning knife and the axe, and never since we received Responsible Government in this country have we seen less of it. Some of us waited in the hope that when things settled down this policy would develop. Naturally a new Government just taking office, even though many of them are experienced politicians, is not in a position to begin with the pruning knife at once. It must find its feet, get what, in the venacular would be called, the hang of things. It was reasonable the Government should be given the opportunity to get this "hang" before expecting anything in the nature of a drastic reform. The Colony looked on and waited for what had been promised, and, sir, I stand here this afternoon quite prepared to receive contradictions, if such can be given, and I am quite prepared to admit that I am wrong if anybody can successfully dispute what I say. I make this statement that since the advent to office of the Monroe administration there has not been a single substantial attempt to reduce any of the expenditure of this Colony.

On the contrary, sir, year after year since this administration came into office we have come down here and witnessed the spectacle of increased votes in practically every department. And I hear, sir, that during last September, down in Bonavista Bay, a constable was going around the settlement enquiring as what old women were receiving the widow's mite, presumably for the purpose of weeding them out. Beyond that I have no knowledge of any retrenchment that this Government has undertaken. That is one fact, sir, from which we judge of the character of the administration which now unfortunately controls the destinies of this Colony. It was fairly crammed down the throats of the electorate that they would, if returned to power, reduce public expenditure, which they claimed to be scandalous, and would wisely expend public moneys which they claimed had been uselessly squandered previously. And yet after a record of three years in office these promises have been so contemptuously flung aside, and expenditure instead of being reduced has been so substantially and disastrously increased, that one might be forgiven perhaps if, with a record of that kind before one, the suggestion comes to one's mind that even at the moment when these promises were given prior to the election in 1924, they were not given honestly. We were promised a "wise" expenditure of public moneys. I suppose that wisdom is a comparative term. Nobody is all-wise, at least on this earth, though some may be wiser than others. If we were to say that that phrase meant a comparatively wise expenditure of public moneys, we would be at least charitable towards the present Government. Iam prepared to ent Government. I am prepared to admit that if the present Government had been comparatively wise in expenditure, they would have gone a little way towards the carrying out of their pre-election promises. But has their expenditure been even comparatively wise I understand that there has been something like $2,212,000 spent on high roads in the past two years. That I believe is the answer to a question that was asked a couple of days ago.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, another answer that was given this afternoon, showing that an amount of $250,000, allocated from a loan in 1926, was appropriated to the Highroads Commission. That I presume was done under the Executive authority which was so described by the present administration before they obtained office. Such is the consistency of the party which was incensed against the methods of the previous Liberal administration because of their alleged government by Minute of Council. And, sir, in spite of its serious objection to that type of government, I have here before me this afternoon an admission by that very Government which so decried Minute of Council Government wherein they admit having appropriated a quarter of a million dollars to a purpose for which this Legislature never intended it. That is a type of Government to which we Newfoundlanders in the peculiar conditions in which the Colony finds itself to-day should no longer entrust our destinies if it at all can be prevented. I believe that some miles of high roads have been built, just how many I don't know. But I do know that last year we got 146 miles of road built and repaired for over one million dollars. I presume that if I were to say 300 miles of road for $2,000,000 I would be fairly correct. Now the question is, was this expenditure a wise one? I should be pleased, sir, to learn just exactly how these roads will benefit the fishermen of this Colony. I do remember a statement as contained in the Manifesto of the Monroe party, wherein it said that the fisheries woud ever be the mainstay and the great support of the people of this Colony. Now one would naturally expect that the expenditure of $2,212,000 would in some way concern this great mainstay of the Colony. One would imagine that these high roads would be of some benefit for instance to the fishermen in the lower end of the district of Port de Grave, who fish from the time that the ice goes off the coast until it comes back again. And yet these roads are not within six miles of these fishermen. The road over which they have to travel to get to the railway is in such a condition that if you took a barrel of flour on a long cart a distance of six miles from Clarke's Beach to Hibbs' Cove you would get there with half the barrel of flour strewn on the road. One would have imagined an expenditure upon such a road to be a reasonable expenditure; that six miles of road is of benefit to this Colony in so far as it concerns the fishermen of that particular district. But one fails to see just how a high road from here to Salmonier can be of any benefit to the fishermen of Harbour Grace, Conception Bay, Labrador, or any part of this Colony, except in so far as it may be of advantage to gentlemen who on a whole or half holiday take their fishing roads and go up their favourite stream to catch the fresh water fish with which our streams abound. But so far from being of advantage to the staple industry of this country, that high roads policy is entirely useless. And it is the fishermen of this Colony that have to pay the piper. They have to pay the interest on the $2,00,000 which has been expended. They have to pay $200,000 or $300,000 for the upkeep of these high roads and they do not derive any benefit whatever from them. High roads are good. I would be delighted to see them running from one end of the island to the other, and touching every village and hamlet on the coast. That would be an excellent thing. But how a number of high roads in the Peninsula of Avalon are going to benefit the fishermen in another part of the Colony is entirely beyond me to conceive. Possibly my intelligence may be limited, but if so my mental condition is similar to that of a large number of people in Newfoundland today, for most of the electors of this Colony agree with my opinion on that point.

Money has been spent, and by Minute of Council, by a Government which formerly condemned such a procedure. It has spent $2,212,000 upon high roads which will be useful only to those seeking pleasure, and who are in a position to possess those vehicles which the ordinary working man of this country cannot possibly hope to have—high roads which will never be of service to the fishermen of this country, a constant expense to them instead. In place of a reduction in favour of the producing interests of this Colony we have increased the expenditure at the cost of those interests.

We were also promised a reduction in taxation. The words sounded very sweet to the average taxpayer of this country, so sweet, indeed, that they dissolved in the mouth before the flavour became palpable; and in fact it is very seldom, so far as I am aware, in the history of this Colony that the public has ever succeeded in enjoying this flavour. I believe that the Liberal administration under Sir Robert Bond was responsible for a reduction in taxation, but just to what extent I do not know, because I am not old enough to remember things of 25 years ago. Reduction is looked upon by the ordinary taxpayer with favor, and any party which comes into power is graciously received by the average elector of this Colony, of any colony or any country, upon a promise to reduce taxation. As I have already remarked in another connection, the majority believed that promise; they felt that they had gotten together an aggregation of gentlemen of character likely to interest themselves in the country, and prepared to see the needs of the fishermen and the other working classes; that they recognized that the conditions under which the fishermen and the other working classes existed were almost impossible ones—men who were in fact satisfied that in order for the fishermen and other working men to gain a decent livelihood it was essential to reduce taxation. No one anticipated that in the session of 1924 the Government would bring into effect any serious reduction of taxation. It was the wrong time of the year to undertake any legislation of a drastic character; it was the wrong time of the year to make any difference in the tariff, and the public was quite satisfied when the Government simply adopted the Estimates which were prepared by the previous Government, and put them through in August of 1924. But it was confidently anticipated that during the session of 1925 a real attempt would be made to remedy the condition of the workingman of this country. It was an accepted fact that the fisheries were not remunerative; it was an accepted fact that fishermen were dissatisfied with conditions under which they prosecuted that industry, and that many young men who under ordinary circumstances would be the fish producers of the future were getting out of the country to seek their fortunes in more favourable climes. I know this, for I have been talking with them. I know the conditions in which they found themselves. I know that it was with regret in many instances that they found they had to leave their country. But the first necessity of man is to live, and to live one must eat, and these young men found themselves in a position where the avocation which their forefathers had pursued for centuries was no longer capable of yielding sufficient remuneration to keep them alive, and wherever possible they got out, and wherever possible they are still getting out. One of the hardest things I have had to do in my short history as a member of this House was to advise a couple of young men, constituents of mine, who placed their situation before me, that there was nothing for them to do but to leave the country. They were prepared to go in the fishing boats to earn their living if it was possible, but they were not prepared to work on the high roads. The people, as I have said, confidently ever since, until the Tory administration in 1925 would introduce legislation which would have the effect of lightening the already too heavy burdens which lay on their shoulders —and they waited to see the tariff that would be brought down. Consternation ran like wildfire throughout this Colony the moment the tariff became known. Instead of the reduction which they had promised, various articles which are essential to the people were taxed more heavily still. The butterine which every fisherman uses—when he can get it—was taxed a further two cents per pound; the cost of his tobacco was increased also; a duty was placed on lines and twines, which were twenty-seven years ago placed on the free list by Sir Robert Bond, and have been free ever since, until the Tory administration taxed them. Not only was there no attempt to lessen the burdens of the people, to lessen the burdens of the fishermen, but that burden was piled more and more heavily still on their shoulders by the very people who had promised to reduce it. It may be that the present Government has some abstruse economic reason which may be explained hereafter, but to ordinary man it would seem to be a first principle of political ecenomy that taxation which affects industry is disastrous. In the words of this administration, the fisheries are the mainstay of this Colony, and if that is so, how can it be contended that taxing them is encouragement. On the other hand it is clear to the merest tyro that every cent of taxation hampers that industry, and that means hampering what the Government itself characterized as the mainstay of the Colony. Can one conceive of anything more contradictory than hampering an industry which the hamperers say is the mainstay of the Colony? It reminds one of the Corn Laws of a century ago. It took fifty years to drill in the minds of English statesmen the fact that protective laws result in a loss of trade. But in this Colony we don't seem to realize that to tax industry is to hamper the fishermen and to hamper the great public of the country. This does not seem to have occurred to us. If it has it is the more culpable, because these actions are not from accident, but design.

(Reads.)

I have yet to learn that these further burdens were placed on the people to meet extraordinary conditions, because in the same breath the Government introduces reduction in taxation in other directions—in fact they effected a reduction in certain taxation, but not of the kind this country was looking for.

Amongst other things there was a reduction of the Bank Tax. I do not pretend to know much about banks; but I do know that they in common with other people in this world dislike taxation, and I have no doubt that they were delighted when the present administration decided to reduce the tax. One of the reasons offered by the Government to justify this reduction was that it would materially benefit the trade of the Colony and that the seven per cent. interest charged by the banks would be reduced to six per cent. Possibly the rate of interest was reduced in some instances, but I know of instances in which it was not. I am not simple enough, sir, to believe for a moment that the banks are prepared to hand over to the business men of this Colony any advantage they may get through the Government. Just what amount the banks profited by this reduction I can not definitely say, but my information is that they benefit in the neighbourhood of $75,000 annually. I speak, of courst, subject to correction. So that we may say, and not illogically, that this additional tax of fifteen per cent. placed upon our tariff and which has to be borne by the ordinary working classes provides the $75,000.00 which has been handed over to the banks by the present administration; and that is the sort of reduction in taxation that the people of this country have been getting during the past three years. I do not know what explanation the Government has to give for their attitude in this connection. I have heard various excuses offered for it. I do not propose to further delay the House in dealing in detail with the Banks because they are not worth wasting time over. I do know that these Canadian banks are here for the purpose of making money. They are not philanthropists in the interests of the people of Newfoundland, and when they get an advantage from the present administration to the extent of $75,000.00 a year, they are not going to hand it back to the people of this Colony. Our Government gave this money to them and taxed the fishermen of this country to get it to give to them. Then, Sir, we had another reduction in taxation. We did have in this country an Act known as the Business Profits Tax Act. I think it was imposed by the Squires administration or the one preceding it during the war years. I am told that that was an unfair tax, although just how that contention can be sustained I do not know. I have not a copy of the Act before me, but I take it as a general principle that if any business or corporation made profits that it should be paid a certain proportion of those profits to the people from whom they obtain them, and that the greater the amount of profits made the greater the amount of taxes which should be paid. Sir, that seems not unreasonable to me. The tax was in effect for several years. It did cause a certain amount of dissatisfaction, as necessarily it would amongst those taxed and it was offered as an excuse for abolishing the tax that it operated unfairly. We were told that in connection with certain fishing concerns of this Colony—those firms who bought and sold fish—the tax operated very unfairly indeed, and the reason given was a plausible one. In fact I will go further and say that it was a reasonable one in some instances, notwithstanding that there were years when those fish buyers made huge profits and upon which they paid considerable taxes, because there were others years when they met with large losses and could not get back any of the profits that they had paid to the Government in the fat years in order to recoup losses in the lean ones. I say the reason is plausible, and perhaps to some extent reasonable, but I do say that on the whole these gentlemen make profits. These concerns and corporations must make profits else why are they in business—for the good of their healths? No firm on Water Street to-day is going to remain in business unless it is making profits on the whole, and, if it is unfair to tax any business concern upon huge profits that it makes this year because of losses next year, then it suggests itself to me that a scheme should be devised so that profits and losses could be added together and proper safeguards instituted whereby a tax should be paid upon the average net profits for every two, three, four or five years. But no attempt whatever was made to do this. No attempt was made to work out any such scheme. The merchant classes were freed from the Business Profits Tax and the fishermen of this Colony paid their fifteen per cent additional to offset the loss of the tax of which these firms and corporations were relieved. Nor does the argument end there. All the corporations doing business in this country are not engaged in the fishing business nor are all the profit making concerns engaged in the fishing business. There are many of them whose profits are as regular as the rise and decline of the Sun. There are some of them whose profits are so large that they have adopted the expedient of watering their stock four or five times in order to conceal huge dividends. There are others whose profits are so large that they adopt even easier methods of concealing the facts from time to time. Yet these people are allowed to go on and make their huge profits and pay no tax on those profits, and in order that they may do this the working classes of this country are called upon to pay an extra fifteen per cent. This is the sort of reduction in the high cost of living the common people have been getting from the Monroe administration during the past three years.

Next we come to the Income Tax, a tax which, perhaps, contained provisions which bore somewhat harshly upon certain sections of the community and which I believe should have been amended in some respects. But the principle of an Income Tax, generally speaking, is right, and the difficulty of its application is no excuse for destroying it, particularly when the country has lost three or four hundred thousand dollars through its abolition, which amount now has to be squeezed out of the fishermen who have been as the lemon for the past three years. I realise that the Government had to increase the tariff by reason of the fact that they removed the taxes from wealthy individuals and corporations. The money had to be made up somewhere unless we got reduction in the public expenditure which the Prime Minister promised to the country in his Manifesto and which is not forthcoming yet. I wonder where does the present Government expect the Colony to land, if we are to go on as we have been during the past three years, borrowing year after year to pay deficits on current account and which deficits are continually increasing. The Prime Minister the other day informed us that the deficit on current revenue was one and a half million dollars. I wonder how much more than that it will be. He told us that the deficit on railway account was $750,000.00. That gives us a deficit of $2,225,000.00. Twelve months ago I made what might be regarded as a guess that the total deficit for 1926-27 would be two and a half million dollars. Already the Government admits $2,225,000.00 of it, according to the Prime Minister's own statement, and I venture the opinion that when all the facts are known that I underestimated rather than overestimated the facts. We were told by the Prime Minister in his Manifesto in 1924 that Newfoundland was going to be made a fisherman's Paradise and that everything that could possibly be done would be undertaken for the prosperity of the fishermen. I do not know whether Newfoundland was actually a fisherman's Paradise at that time, but I know at the present time it is next door to a fisherman's hell. Sir, there is not a fisherman in this Colony to-day who can make two ends meet and give his family a half decent living. I say also that I know from personal knowledge and from information furnished me by my constituents that the great majority of the fishermen in my district last Fall did not have fifty dollars with which to feed themselves and their families throughout last Winter. Is that what some people call a fisherman's Paradise? What has been done, I ask, to encourage in any way the fishermen or the fisheries by the present Government since they assumed office? I have some recollection that a bonus on fish was promised by the Prime Minister in his Manifesto, and I am honest enough to admit the difficulty of applying this bonus on fish.

I am honest enough to admit the difficulty of the application of the idea of giving a bonus on fish. I see that it is likely if applied by giving so much per quintal to work out like some other legislation of the present administration namely to the advantage of those already fairly well situated at the expense of the less fortunate. The man getting most fish would get the biggest bonus and the man getting least would get the smallest. In other words the man needing most gets least and the man needing least gets the most. A bonus on fish would need to be worked out very carefully. Whether it could be worked out at all or not I am not prepared to say at the present moment and after giving the matter some thought I do not think the Monroe administration would be able to work out such a scheme as would be useful to the people of this country. But the promise was there and if something could not be done in the way of giving a direct bonus surely some encouragement of some kind should be given to the fishermen. Some sort of a scheme should have been worked out if it were not practicable to give a direct bonus. If they could not give fifty cents a quintal as a bonus to the fishermen they could take it off the cost of his outfit. Surely some effort could be made whereby this trade might be made more remunerative. The cost of his lines and twines might have been decreased instead of increased. The cost of his clothing might have been decreased instead of increased. The cost of some of his articles of food might have been rendered less. And these are not the only means by which it was possible at least to consider some betterment of conditions for the fishermen of this colony.

We have our problems in connection with the marketing and curing of our fish. Was it not possible for the present administration containing as it does several men who are at least somewhat familiar with the export of codfish to take up the matter and make some effort to market our fish more profitably than has been done heretofore. There was, I know, an act in force some six or seven years ago known as "The Codfish Exportation Act," whereby an effort was made to regulate the shipping of fish. To a large extent it failed. For what reason I do not know, except that probably it contained some conditions that while well intentioned were not suited to the particular conditions that obtained at that time. While I remember it I do desire to draw to the attention of the House the matter of a petition I presented last year, in connection with the export of codfish from the Labrador. I represent a district which comprises at least half the stationers on the Labrador and I have talked with various ones of my constituents dozens of times about conditions which exist in connection with the export of codfish from that coast and they have explained to me just what are these conditions under which that exportation takes place, and the disastrous results which follow. The great bulk of the fish today is taken from Labrador to market by steamers which come there in early September and as many as 100 to 150 boats may be around one steamer in an afternoon all rushing their fish aboard the ship. One doesn't need a very fertile imagination to get some idea of how that fish goes down into the hold of that steamer. In the first place the coal has to be passed out in order to make room for it and then the fishermen, all anxious to get his fish aboard, walk over the coal and cinders and grind it into the fish as it goes down into the hold of the vessel. Not only is that the case but the fish itself is often, very often improperly and insufficiently cured. Now I want you to imagine for a moment what condition that fish can possibly be in when it gets over to the market, having been improperly cured and trodden upon because of the rushed nature of the job, remembering always that the markets are warm countries. The conditions under which fish is taken from the Labrador to-day warrant its being said that it is not treated as an article of food at all. I brought into this Assembly last year a petition signed by every Labrador fishermen in my district, and signed by a number of fishermen in the district of Carbonear and also in Harbor Grace, praying that these conditions be remedied, and absolutely no attention whatever was paid to it after I had read it in the House and it had been referred to the Department to which it relates. When I realized what was going to happen to that petition with the unanimous support of every fisherman in my district I almost took an oath that I would never bring another petition into this Assembly again. The wishes and desires of all the fishermen of Port de Grave district were treated simply as a scrap of paper and went in the waste paper basket at the hands of a body of men who had promised to do everything in their power to minister to the prosperity of those fishermen. The export of codfish from Newfoundland présents a problem which had been engaging the attention of our legislators previous to the advent to office of the Monroe administration. Whether or not that legislation was wise I don't propose to discuss now, but this much can be said at any rate, namely, that it was at least some attempt to do something. Even if it was a blunder it was at least an attempt and for that at least these previous legislators must be given credit. At any rate they have shown us pitfalls into which we need not fall to-day. I am told that one of the great difficulties in connection with the export and marketing of our codfish is that there is no order in the sending out of shipments; that the various firms on Water Street and in some outports in the colony have agents on the other side and down in South America and the other ports and places in which our fish is sold and that from time to time as an opportunity is seen to sell fish in some particular market the agent of every firm in Newfoundland which has an agent is that locality advises the firm he acts for that there is an opening for a sale. (I must say that my information on these matter is merely hearsay and if I say anything improper I am quite ready and willing to take it back if some one who knows better can correct me). As a result of the information sent cargoes are shipped accordingly and go off into these markets for sale, at the same time and because of the fact that several of them start off for the same port at about the same time and then in the ordinary course of events they arrive just about the same time, the result is inevitable. Picture then a large quantity of Newfoundland codfish dumped down in Oporto on the 17th of May, 1927. What is going to happen to the price? I don't suppose there is a child of the age of fourteen who is not able to answer that question, it must fall. First because the market is oversupplied and secondly because the article itself is a perishable one. The conditions which obtain in that foreign port are exactly the same as those that would obtain in St. John's if on the 2nd of July, 1928, some one dumped one hundred thousand cases of oranges in the city. Why, anyone could go down with a wheelbarrow and would be given all he wanted to take out of the storekeeper's way. The result of this manner of shipping fish and consequent overcrowding of the market is that the price falls and the moment the price falls in the foreign market it immediately reflects back on the fishermen of this colony. I don't know the reason why the exporters of this country can't get together and arrange the matter so that the merkets will not be flooded in this way. I have heard from the Government side of the House severe castigation of that body which is called the Board of Trade and the Exporters' Association. If as is suggested each man looks to his own benefit and there is no co-operation amongst them, and if these gentlemen are so blind to their ultimate interest that they will not co-operate, then they should not be allowed to hamper the interest of the fishermen of this colony longer. If they will not cooperate then it is time that the Goverment of this country took them by the throat and made them do it, in the interests of the whole community instead of subjecting the industry to the whims of those men whom we are told are incapable of and antagonistic to co-operation. One does not perhaps need a very deep knowledge of human nature to realize why this is the case. Every man I suppose wants to make money and he wants to make it as quickly as possible. The immediate dollar appeals strongly whereas ultimate good is to the ordinary business man merely a look into the apparently distant future. It is quite natural that Mr. Jones who has a cargo of fish will want to get into the market early, and get a good price for it. Therefore he will attempt to reach it before anybody else can get there. Therefore it becomes a race for profits rather than an organized business campaign. There has been no effort to control the export of fish, or to force those who will not wait for the proper time to send the fish into the market to act sanely. If the gentlemen of Water Street and Bonavista and Trinity Bays, and the other people who are exporting fish from this country are not prepared to voluntarily co-operate, then I say that this legislature should take the matter in hand and see that they do so involuntarly. The idea of co-operative marketing may be somewhat new to these people. It may be contrary to our conservative English ideas, but it is one result of the advance of civilisation that has come to stay. Practically all the potatoes that come from Prince Edward Island comes under some form of co-operative marketing, and the same applies to every egg that comes from Nova Scotia. Every orange that comes from California comes in the same way. In Australia to-day, one of the most progressive of British Commonwealths,—I think it is in the Province of Queensland—the Government took hold of the growers and the exporters, and forced them into cooperation by legislation. They had to do this to save the industry which would otherwise have been irretrievably injured. The same type of legislation has got to be undertaken in this country if we are to save the fisheries. If those who are in charge of the fishing enterprise in this country, the exporters and supplying merchants, are not prepared to adopt those measures which in the long run mean the saving of the industry then they must be forced to do it. If they are not willing to protect themselves, then because of the fact that the people must protect themselves, they must also compel the capitalists to co-operate whether they like it or not.

Lat year I heard various reports from the fishermen in various parts of this country, complaining of the manner in which the fish is being culled. They did complain that the culling was entirely different from what it had been the previous year, and that they did not know how to make fish to suit the merchants of the country to-day. I had a report from one man that I know very well. He belongs to Trinity Bay. He told me that during the Spring of 1926, he was here to get supplies—and by the way he wants no merchant to give him credit. He is able to pay for what he wants—He had a conversation with his merchant in connection with the cure of fish—A big supplying merchant I may say—He was given specific instructions as to the type of fish that would be required that year, and how it should be cured. He cured it accordingly. And he told me—and I believe him, that the fish that he brought into St. John's to sell last October was as good as he had ever brought to any merchant in his life, and as well cured, and he received for it the price of $3.50 a quintal. That was fish sir, which had been cured according to instructions. And it was supposed to be exported some for No. 2, some Maderia, some West Indies, but very little of it was No. 1. And a poorer grade of fish at the hands of another merchant received a different price altogether—a bigger price. The truth was that no fisherman in this country last year knew how to make fish because he did not know what quality was required. Are we so lacking in intelligence in this country that no means can be found whereby fish can be graded. Oranges, apples, potatoes, beef are graded in other countries, but we in this country are not capable of grading our own principle product. No attempt has been made by the Government to remedy this evil. They might at least have made the attempt. I do not say that it would have been successful. Possibly it would not have been. Some would go so far as to say that it probably would not. But sir, that does not excuse them from having failed to make the attempt, particularly in view of the fact that they proposed to do everything which would minister to the prosperity of the fishery. Now sir, I am open to correction, and I would be pleased if any honourable member of this House can give me any information as to what would better minister to the prosperity of the fishery of this country than a scheme whereby the fishermen would obtain a better price for their fish and market it to better advantage. Nothing along this line has been done. Their burdens have been increased from time to time, and not the slightest effort has been made to enable them to bear those additional burdens which the Government has been pleased to put upon their backs. Their taxes have been increased in order to take the place of the taxes which were removed from the backs of those better able to bear them. And now in the last days of a dying Government we find in the Speech from the Throne that they intend to reimpose the income tax. I presume that the people must regard this as in the nature of an admission that their previous action was a mistake, and that now upon their death beds they have come to repentance. I notice further sir, that the measure which should go with that income tax, is absent. I refer to the business Profits Tax. Concerning that I will have more to say when that measure comes down before this House.

So much sir, for the type of legislation that has been proposed by the Monroe Government in the interests of the people, during the past three years. That record coupled with the undertaking which were given to the people afford an approximation of the true value of the Speech from the Throne which was read to this House by you sir on Wednesday afternoon. But after all these are not the only facts upon which we can base an opinion. As to the true meaning of that Speech, the political machinations of the present administrations present facts which will throw considerable light upon what we may expect from them in the future.

Last year this time the situation in this House was that the Government had 17 supporters and there were 17 men in opposition. That is how the House stood when it was prorogued in June. Subsequently one man then sitting in opposition was induced to join forces with the Government and we now see him in the camp of his former enemies. I trust that he is well satisfied with his action in this regard. and that his conscience does not afflict him for his conduct in that respect. Just what love the present administration had for that gentleman I do not know. Shortly after that another member who was sitting in opposition was removed from the floors of this House. He was given by this administration a very prominent and a very honourable position in this Colony, and I trust that he will grace that position. As to the particular motive which actuated the Government in removing a member from this side of the House, that is an entirely different matter—I have yet to learn that it is a common attribute of human nature to hand out plums of that kind to one's enemies, and one might be pardoned in suggesting that members of the Government were not altogether altruistic and unselfish, in this particular case.

MINISTER OF JUSTICE—It was done in the case of Judge Kent.

HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER—I am not going to allow references to that gentleman, so the hon. member will kindly discontinue. I am not going to have it from either side of the House.

MR. BRADLEY—I quite agree with you, Mr. Speaker. I have already drawn to the attention of this House the contrast between the Government's action in connection with that district and St. John's East—in the former they, with undue, almost indecent haste, opened the district vacated by that gentleman. Can it be that they anticipated defeat there? That they were delighted to give the people the opportunity to turn their candidate down? Is that what we could expect from ordniary mortals, or may we be forgiven in believing that the Government was quite confident it would win? But they reckoned without their hosts, namely the people of Fortune District. And then, feeling the effects of the sledge-hammer blow thus dealt them by the electors of Fortune Bay, and in view of the fact that during the winter disruption occurred within their own ranks, they were compelled to open St. John's East, which for two years they refused to open. I am glad to be able to stand on the floors of this House and say without fear of contradiction that I advocated the opening of the District of St. John's East from the start; that I considered it the constitutional right of the District to have its quota of three members and not two merely. And the reason for keeping that district closed was that the Government feared to open it, just as their reason for opening it was that they were compelled to do so, and felt that they couldn't lose under the altered circumstances. Again they reckoned without their hosts, and the people of St. John's East have also given the Government their answer, and that answer was the one given last Fall by the people of Fortune Bay! Sir, in common, brutal English, that answer was "Get out"! The people of no district in the Colony have any confidence in this Government—the people of the whole Colony are in exactly the same frame of mind as those of St. John's East. And the question arises—"What are we going to do about it?" What is the Government going to do? The people have unanimously given their ultimatum—in two districts they have told you clearly that they have no desire for you to remain longer in control of the affairs of this country, that they have no longer any confidence in you; that they want a change—whether for better or worse—they want a change in the conduct of public affairs. They are not satisfied with the way the present administration has dealt with these affairs durnig the past three years! And on the admission of your own official organs we are told that the decision in St. John's East was tantamount to a vote of want of confidence. I wonder if the Government intends to take it as such, or does it intend to hold on like Grim Death, by tooth and by nail, until the last moment? And if the latter is the course they adopt, is it one we can conceive to be honest, to be in accordance with those high and pure motives which the Government apes. Is there any motive other than to hold on to place and pay as long as possible. The Government to-day finds itself in the position of having a majority of one on the floors of the House, a position which is clearly an untenable one. Ever since I have been old enough to understand politics I have heard it said that a Government needs a working majority of four or five members, and if the majority is reduced to less than that the position is such that there is only one thing to do, and that is to go back and see if the electors are prepared to give them a mandate to go on, and make them strong enough to undertake such legislation as is in the interests of the country at large. I repeat that the majority of the Government is one member, clearly far below the standard of a working majority. The Prime Minister himself on Wednesday last admitted that conditions required drastic legislation, that we were faced with a huge deficit and a failing fishery. I would say that fishery and labor conditions are such that we need drastic, if not revolutionary legislation—a situation that needs handling as speedily as possible. The Prime Minister admitted that his forces were not sufficiently strong to do that—these are his own admissions. And we on this side of the House are not simply desirous of casting the Government into outer darkness as far as place or pay is concerned; we have no desire merely to go to the other side of the House. We are prepared to abide by the decision of the electors of this Country, and we want the Prime Minister to take his own remarks to heart and act on the opinion he has formed, namely, that the Government is not sufficiently strong to effect the legislation which the needs of the times require. Let him go back to the polls and see if the people are prepared to put him back in office. If the electors are satisfied to do that we are content.

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was adjourned.

On motion the second reading of the bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador" was deferred until to-morrow.

Mr. Russell gave notice of question.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of question.

Mr. Brophy gave notice of question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that this House at its rising do adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MR. SCAMMELL — Mr. Speaker, with your permission and with the indulgence of the House I would like at this juncture to ask the Hon. the Prime Minister if he is in a position to tell me when the steamer Sagona will be ready for service in the Straits of Belle Isle? The people there are in a bad way and only last evening I received a telegram from Port Saunders to the effect that the people there and at Flowers Cove particularly were in a starving condition,

(Reads telegram)

There is no reason why the people in this section should not get steamboat communication and as good a treatment meted out to them as well as the people in any other section of the Island; but the point I want to make is this: ever since some time in April last I have been asking the management of the railway to get a steamer to go to the Straits of Belle Isle so that the people could get their supplies of provisions and food-stuffs. Only a couple of days ago I discovered that there was something wrong with the Sagona and that she had to go on dock. I consider this is not good enough treatment for people who happen to live in extern portions of this Colony. It seems that it is alright for people who can come here in person and express their claims, but for people who live in extern portions there is nothing thought about and it was just as well they were living at the North Pole. Now I would like to here from the Prime Minister when the Sagona is likely to sail? The Prospero was prevented from visiting the East Coast on the pretext of ice conditions, whereas if the Government had been alive to their responsibilities they would have sent the Kyle there and even if ice conditions were bad there the difficulty could have been gotten over. Now, Sir, I think this is outrageous treatment for the people in my district to get and it is absolute neglect on somebody's part.

THE HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I wish to take exception to the remarks of the honourable member for St. Barbe that the Government have been trying to starve the people. The Government have been just as much concerned about the people of Flowers Cove and vicinity as he has been. We have been doing our best to get a steamer to go to the Straits of Belle Isle and the S. S. Sagona sailed for there this morning.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS gave notice that he will on to-morrow move that Supply be granted to His Majesty.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole upon certain correspondence in relation to the bequest to the Colony of the property at Whitbourne of the laet Rt. Hon. Sir R. Bond.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddister took the Chair of Committee.

THE HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, I mentioned yesterday that by the Will of the Right Honourable Sir Robert Bond valuable property had been left to the people of this country. I then said that the Government did not want to shirk the responsibility of making a reply for the acceptance or otherwise of that bequest because it was felt that as the gift was one to the people of the Colony that the representatives of the people should be consulted before an answer was sent in. I hope, if on no other occasion in this House, that members will try on this particular occasion to forget which side they are sitting on and that we may all be able to treat this particular proposition solely in the interests of the country generally. I have before me, a copy of which I tabled in this House on the opening day, a copy of the last Will and Testament of Sir Robert Bond. I will not weary the House by reading it in full because it does not necessarily concern us. The first part of the Will provides that if several of his relatives, nieces and nephew, die without issue that a large proportion of his estate shall become the property of His Excellency the Governor and Executive Council in Newfoundland in trust for the establishment in Whitbourne aforesaid of an Industrial School in which shall be taught a practical course in different trades. Later on the Will goes on to say: "It is my Will that my Whitbourne Estate consisting of "The Grange" and nearly eight square miles of fee simple land, upon which I have expended large sums of money and years of personal effort to render it an ideal property, shall be immediately transferred to His Excellency the Governor and Executive Council of this Colony to be held in trust by them for the people of Newfoundland as a Model Farm for ever. If deemed advisable the land lying to the railway line may be sold by them, but the lakes and land to the south of the railway line which passes through my property I desire shall be retained as part and parcel of the Model Farm. Unless the Government aforesaid shall be prepared to take over the cattle, horses and farm stock, and the household furniture in "The Grange" paying to my Executor therefor the sum of ten thousand dollars it is my will that the same be removed to St. John's and sold at public auction." When I read this Will I asked the Executor, Reverend Doctor Bond, brother of the Testator, to call and see me and I told him that, having given the matter a great deal of consideration, I wanted to get his views as to whether it would be an infringement in his opinion of the desires of the Testator were the Government to take over that farm and use the very large residence, which is not necessary for a Model Farm and which is on the property, as a Tourist Hotel, and to use the lakes, which are not necessary for a Model Farm, for the purpose of attracting tourists. It occurred to me that if that house was made into a summer hotel and if the people stopping there had the privilege of using the lakes for fishing and boating that enough revenue might possibly be derived to endow the Model Farm or to support it. Rev. Dr. Bond said that he would take the matter into his serious consideration. I asked him for an expression of his opinion as to whether there should be a farmer outside this country take charge of the Farm and I asked him if he would be good enough to express his views in that respect in a letter to His Excellency the Governor. I did not want to make the suggestion that we should have an imported farmer because I felt sure we would be told that we have good enough farmers in this country to take charge of it. The result was that Dr. Bond wrote a letter to His Excellency the Governor. I think that, as there may be a great many members of this House who have not read the correspondence that was tabled, it will not take me very long to give you just what Dr. Bond said in his letter.

St. John's,
April 11th, 1927.

Your Excellency:—

When conversing some days ago with the Hon. the Prime Minister with reference to the Whitbourne Estate, consisting of The Grange and nearly eight square miles of fee-simple land, which my brother, the late Sir Robert Bond, has by his Will bequeathed to the people of Newfoundland for a Model Farm forever, under the Trusteeship of the Governor and Executive Council, the Prime Minister suggested that I should write a letter to Your Excellency stating my own convictions as to the intention of my brother in making the bequest and my own judgment as to the way in which that intention should be secured and carried out by the Trustees under the Will. That, with Your Excellency's permission, I propose now to do so clearly and succinctly as I can.

I wish I could convey to Your Excellency's mind anything like an adequate picture of the extent and beauty of the Estate, its slopes of splendid woodland rising from the shores of a chain of large and romantic lakes mile after mile, where forest growth has been carefully preserved, where fire has not occurred, and where cutting of either large or small timber has not been allowed. Its cultivated portion, close to the Village of Whitbourne, which indeed has been built on land originally part of the Estate and was, I believe, named by its proprietor, forms but a comparatively small part of the whole acreage, which stretches about equally north and south of the railway line about four miles in each direction. Crowning a hill on the west side of Junction Lake and half a mile from the centre of the Village is the residence of the owner "The Grange" embowered in trees and with lawns sloping down to the lakeside, laid out in landscape gardenings interspersed with groups or groves of ornamental trees, upon which park-like space the taste, skill and constant personal labour of Sir Robert Bond have been for all the years of his ownership, till laid aside by the illness which resulted in his death, lavished without stint. To make these lawns as he expressed it, "like a bit of England," to add to their beauty year by year, was an aim in which he spared himself neither toil nor expense. Hundreds of trees, some eight hundred in all, he planted with his own hand or under his personal supervision, and there in the days of spring, summer and autumn you would find him at work, literally manicuring the place he loved so well into a perfection of most careful aboriculture and horticulture which only such personal attention and labour could bring about. Now it is this estate that Sir Robert Bond has given by his Will to the people of Newfoundland as a Model Farm to be held and worked by the Trustees, for that purpose and no other and that in perpetuity. As a matter of fact he has maintained the place as a sort of Model Farm for between thirty and forty years. He broke it out of the original forest; cultivated it and cropped it; erected a commodious residence for his own occupancy and a comfortable lodge for the occupancy of his foreman farmer; constructed suitable barns; purchased in Canada from time to time numbers of registered and high grade cattle; gave away his thoroughbred calves year after year for many years to people in different parts of the Island in order to improve the general stock of the country; sold his milk regularly to a butterine factory in St. John's despite innumerable hindrances and anonyances due to irregularities of transportation; left it as it is to-day a going concern in good working order not merely paying its expenses but yielding a profit. That Estate and that Farm he has left by Will to the people of Newfoundland that it may be taken hold of immediately by the Trustees as a going concern and without any disturbance or dislocation whatever continue to be a Model Farm no longer the property of an individual but the property of the people to be held for them and worked for them by the Trustees never to be alienated to other ownership or diverted in whole or in part to any other purpose whatsoever, but with increased resources and enhanced developments to be maintained and worked in perpetuity for the information of every farmer large or small in the country and for the practical training of young men in agriculture, cattle raising and forestry, that they may be qualified to make farming their vocation and win a living from their country's soil.

To secure this purpose two things are absolutely necessary. First the Estate must be managed by an expert farmer obtained from outside the Colony, a man thoroughly trained, experienced, competent, and conversant with the most modern and most approved and scientific methods, preferably a Canadian expert because conditions in Canada are most similar to our own. Canada has several Agricultural Colleges and Farms in successful operation and in these are to be found men eminently suitable for this proposition which demands a skilled, educated, practical farmer able to work and to train young men to work, and to bring this Estate both farm and forest up the best that it can be.

The second thing that is absolutely essential and imperative is that the general management of the Model Farm be kept from the very beginning entirely outside the control of politics and be placed at once in the hands of a non-political commission, composed of gentlemen chosen for integrity of personal character and for their practical interest in Agriculture. The Commission which need not be large enough to be unwieldy should be at once authorized to secure an expert from Canada or failing that from Scotland, to set him over the property, to visit him from time to time for purposes of direction and encouragement, to receive from him monthly reports as to the progress of his work, and to make an annual report themselves to the Governor and Executive Council.

The points which I have emphasixed having been secured, namely direct management of the Model Farm by a practical expert chosen from outside the Colony, and general management by a completely non-political commission left unhampered and independent to exercise their best judgment in all matters pertaining to it for the sole benefit of the people of Newfoundland, I see prospect of my brother's desires and purposes being brought to fruition.

"The Grange" is a larger residence than would be required for the use of the Manager of the Model Farm alone, but it is admirably suited for the accommodation of farm students residing with him and working the farm under his instruction and superintendence, receiving their board free or at small cost and giving their services in return for their practical training and their certification after two or three years of such training as to competency in modern farming. Openings for the employment of such men, apart from those who would take up land of their own, would not be difficult to find in this country. All who have had anything to do with farming here know the difficulties, annoyances and losses caused by farm owners having been compelled to employ men lacking all real knowledge of their duties. These men after two or three years training would supply a need impossible to supply under present conditions.

Besides the practical training on the farm could be made increasingly efficient by forming a link between it and the technical classes of farm-chemistry and soil-study available at the Memorial University College; every student in turn as he became fitted for it could thus receive the scientific side of instruction in Agriculture, cattle raising and forestry, and haphazard and rule-of-thumb methods give place to reasoned and perfected carrying out of well-based plans. A system of student passes over the Government Railway tenable and usable only for periods of study would make College and Farm practically one.

Further than this it will be recalled that under the contingency that there were no heirs to his property otherwise devised, it was Sir Robert Bond's Will that it should go to support an Industrial School at Whitbourne. Whether it will ever be usable for this purpose no one can predict, of course. One thing is certain and that is that should the Trustees so determine, The Grange would supply the accommodation and the Farm the training ground for a sufficient number of Industrial School pupils to keep its rooms always full and its fields always tilled, while a band of happy, healthy young men are learning by doing—the only way in which real learning can be obtained.

This then is Sir Robert Bond's bequest to the people of Newfoundland. It is for the Trustees under the Will to say whether they will accept the Trust with all that it implies, or whether its acceptance would involve obligation they are unable to meet and they are compelled to return it into the hands of the Executor of the Will.

It must be guaranteed by the Trustees: 1. That the Estate shall be used as the Testator has bequeathed it, as a Model Farm for the people of Newfoundland. 2. That it will never be alienated from that purpose. 3. That it will never for any reason or any pretense come into the hands of a private owner or in any degree under private management or be used for any private emoluments, and that it will be used simply and solely for a Model Farm and not for a Tourist resort or for a Road House for the convenience of motorist week-enders or others or for any other additional subsidiary or supplementary purpose whatever, whether to increase its revenue or make it a convenience for ends not contemplated by the Testator.

I am quite aware of the fact that Model Farms in this country have been made a hissing and a bye-word. They have been made a sink for the wasting of the people's money. To safeguard this bequest to the people of Newfoundland from being or becoming any such scandalous drain upon that people's own resources is above all things in harmony with Sir Robert Bond's desires and intentions and would be, I conceive, the great responsibility of the Trustees under this Will. I believe, and not without advisement, that an annual expenditure with a minimum of about five thousand dollars and a maximum of ten thousand dollars would run this Farm and make a very valuable and increasingly valuable asset to this country, paying its salaries and providing for some development year by year. I think that a non-political and unhampered and practical commission would not spend any more than ten thousand dollars, and could work the Model Farm at least in its beginnings for about Five Thousand Dollars a year. It is of course for the Trustees to say whether they can afford this expenditure or must return the property into the hands of the Executor, as involving obligations beyond their means.

I have the honour to be,
Your Excellency's humble servant,
ESTATE ROBERT BOND,
Per (Sgd.) GEO. J. BOND, Executor.

This letter came into the hands of His Excellency the Governor, and His Excellency first had to decide whether or not he would accept the position of Trustee, and he came to the conclusion, after being legally advised by members of the Government, that he could not accept the position as Trustee with the Executive Government because it will be seen that the Will says that the property is to be held in trust by His Excellency the Governor and the Executive Government for ever. Now Dr. Bond is inclined to interpret this particular wording as used, to keep the management outside political influence, and Sir Robert Bond did not mean it would be the Governor-In-Council; but it was pointed out to Dr. Bond that further on in the Will Sir Robert referred to the "said Government" which goes to show definitely that it cannot be recognized as anything else than that the Governor-In-Council has to take charge of this particular bequest. I have come to the conclusion as well as many of my colleagues that we have no legal authority to accept a trust for the people of Newfoundland which might entail an annual expenditure of public moneys for ever. Such authority can only be given by the Legislature.

Naturally, we as a Government, or any Government, cannot commit their successors to such a proposition, because their successors may not want to operate a Model Farm. If we were anxious to have a Model Farm now, somebody else later on might be anxious to do away with it, and certainly we could not undertake the upkeep of a Model Farm from Sir Robert Bond for ever, unless this Legislature provided this endowment fund and the interest on which could take care of the running of the Model Farm for ever. It would require an endowment fund of two hundred thousand dollars at five per cent. interest to provide ten thousand dollars a year for the upkeep of the Farm, and, it is quite possible and even probable that the expense of running it would be very much more than ten thousand dollars a year. There is also a great difference between running a farm of any kind as a public institution and running it under the management of such a man as the late Sir Robert Bond. Sir Robert Bond with his skill, his keen interest in values, his authority over labour—and he gave his entire time without any charge against the farm—was able to make a small profit out of that farm. He was selling his milk from that farm to butterine factories in St. John's; and I claim that if this farm was run as a public institution now, subsidized by the Government, that we would not have any right to sell milk from that farm in competition with other farmers. And so the position in respect to the Model Farm run by a private individual and run by a Government is entirely different. There are three kinds of farms as I look upon the situation here. One is the ordinary dairy and market farm around St. John's. Then there is the farms in small outports where they grow vegetables for their own use and sell their surplus stocks. Then there is such farms as are in the Codroy Valley. Personally I do not feel that Whitbourne is a very suitable place for a Model Farm. It is out in a wilderness practically and the soil there is nothing extra. It is not a place where people would visit to see a Model Farm, and altogether it does not appear to me to be of the value to the Colony that some people might at first be inclined to think. Then again it must be remembered that Sir Robert Bond's will was made thirteen years ago. He tells us in the Will that we would have to pay a certain sum of ten thousand dollars for the live stock and implements on the farm and for the furniture in the house. These things have been valued by an auctioneer in St. John's who finds that they would not realise more than five thousand dollars, if sold at the present time. We are not called upon to accept that offer because it is expressly stated in the Will that if ten thousand dollars was not considered fair value for the live stock, farming implements and furniture of the house they were to be brought to St. John's and sold by auction. These, Mr. Chairman, are the principal points that appear to me in connection with this bequest and they would certainly make me hesitate before I would accept the gift. We have had a considerable experience in Model Farms in this country. The farm now occupied by Mr. Macpherson was bought by the Government of Sir Robert Bond and the Government of Sir Robert started it.

I don't think it was long in existence when another government came in and they did away with the Model Farm. In that respect it might be interesting to read an extract from a letter from Professor J. B. Reynolds, head of the Guelph Agricultural College. He is a great friend of Mr. Paton, who wrote him asking his opinion as to whether such a thing might be taken up. His letter is an interesting one and in some respects runs parallel to my own opinion expressed prior.

(Reads)

I just mention this in connection with our experience in Model Farming. The first farm I understand dropped something like four thousand dollars a year before the Morris administration decided to close it up. Then under a later administration a Model Farm was started in the West End of St. John's, and some of you gentlemen on the other side of the House know how much it cost the country and whether it was to our advantage or not. I don't want to dwell upon this, or to create a political controversy; I merely want to place before you as clearly as I can the facts regarding the Model Farm as proposed. I have tried to give you the views of several people in connection therewith, and I want to get your opinion as to whether we should accept this offer, take over the farm and make an attempt to run it, or whether we should tell the Executor that we feel it would be a liability rather than an asset, thank him very much for the bequest of Sir Robert, contained in the kindly and gracious terms of his will—a will that was written long before he had any knowledge of what a Model Farm would cost the country and tender a courteous refusal. It is for the House to give its opinion as to what kind of a reply will be sent to Dr. Bond's letter.

CAPT. RANDELL—I should like to ask the Prime Minister one question. Mention has been made of the land of the Estate north of the Railway. I should like to know if there are any people living on that and if they are paying rental?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I am not quite clear as to that. I rather think that there are some people living on part of the estate. I could find out in a short while if it has any bearing on the matter.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, I am not going to offer any opinion as to what the Government should do in this matter; I presume it is the business of the Government to decide that. The Prime Minister has told us that this is non-party and non-political, and that it is open for discussion by both sides of the House—it is non-party as far as we are concerned. The point over which the Prime Minister is exercised is that we have to maintain this bequest, and he is looking for ways and means whereby that can be done if it is taken over. He has very frankly placed the matter before the Assembly. It is a pity that he doesn't place other matters of expenditure before the Assembly, and that he isn't as open about them as he is in this case, instead of minute of Council expenditure: I think this thing has to be thought out before there is some obligation on the Government of the Country with reference to such a gift and foresight of the donor. A man like Sir Robert Bond, who has been held up as a model statesman, should have something to his memory, and I think the Government should consider well before deciding. It is a gift that is to be under the control of the Government. I am rather surprised at the suggestion that it be used as a Tourist Hotel or Road House, because these things would not be patronized without a license, and in view of the attitude of Sir Robert Bond and his brother regarding temperance I think they should have been considered before this proposition was made. If it were possible for the dead to see what is going on in the world, I think that it wouldn't give Sir Robert Bond much pleasure to see tourists fishing the lakes around the "Grange" and have them when catching a trout seeing two or three. My opinion, without deep study, is that this place might be used as a sort of training school for young men who wish to follow the agricultural life. You find in other places schools of agriculture, and in Norway, Holland and adjoining countries we even find schools of fishery and seamanship. If therefore this place at Whitbourne could be properly used as a school for the teaching of agriculture for young men who wish to learn Agriculture it might be of some benefit to the country. There is a reference in Rev. Dr. Bond's letter to making it a link with the Memorial University—the Prime Minister is also Minister of Education, and is the best one to tell the House what he thinks about that. Perhaps it is possible to link the place at Whitbourne with the Memorial University in St. John's, and have it controlled more or less by them. It might be very difficult unless something like that were done to keep it out of politics—no matter who manages it or how non political a commission is appointed you will find that operating anything in connection with the Government is very difficult.

Then there is the question as to what it would cost to run, Dr. Bond suggests from five to ten thousand dollars. If that farm could be run at that expense and no more, and be used as a training school for young men for agriculture I think it would be money well invested. He stated that the residence could be used as a boarding school, and I suppose the furniture now there could be retained by the Government. No doubt there would be a lot of produce raised on the farm .and if it would be unfair to sell the milk to a butterine factory, it could be used for making into butter and the residue fed to pigs. There is really no agricultural policy in this country although many administrations have claimed one. I have no doubt that Newfoundland can produce all the vegetables it needs if they were properly looked after. I have stated in this House before now that if encouragement were given the farmers, the farmers of Trinity Bay, Bonavista Bay and the rest of the Island, particularly in raising potatoes and turnips ,it would be a great asset. At the present time what a man cannot sell in the Fall he has to store away in his cellar and cannot open it again till the Spring, and then he is likely to find the contents half decayed. There is no doubt that the farmers something like that is needed in New-Brunswick there is a Provincial Warehouse, built by the Government, in which farm produce can be stored, and which has cold Storage, and heating facilities sufficient to keep produce during the winter months—something like that is needed in Newfoundland. The large quantities of potatoes, cabbage and turnips imported could be raised in this country, and turned into money—the farm is as productive as the fishery or the produce of the mines of the forest. I do not wish to offer an opinion, but would like to have the opinion of the House—perhaps the Prime Minister would afterwards decide that a large select Committee might be appointed to go into the matter.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Chairman, I regard this as a subject which requires careful consideration; we should give it the very closest attention, before we decide to turn down this very generous bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond. One thing that struck me when the Prime Minister was speaking was that he spoke merely of the cost, and I fully appreciate his desire to reduce the burdens of the Colony. But the Prime Minister left out of his consideration the fact that we cannot look upon this merely from the standpoint of dollars and cents. When we speak of an Experimental Farm, and I prefer that term, and would ask the Prime Minister if there is any difference in a model farm and an experimental farm, as we know it? I notice the term "Model Farm" is used, but don't suppose there is anything in the bequest to interfere with an Experimental Farm or Training School.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— The Will says it is to be a model farm forever. It would require a legal mind to distinguish.

MR. HIBBS—I think the purpose was to secure for young men an elementary education in farming, and if the property were taken for an Experimental Farm I think it would meet the wishes of the testator.

First of all, I am unable to go into this very deeply, because I feel we should have more opportunity to consider and discuss it more fully. But I am going to say that if there is one thing we need it is something to teach farmers, and I am confident that we would augment our output 50% if our farmers had the opportunity to learn the science of agriculture. If we go back we find that the question of agriculture has occupied the attention of the country at times, almost in spasms as far back as 1822, and that the Governor of that day urged the necessity of farming and that an effort was made at the time to inaugurate it. Then in 1842 we find that the first agricultural society was formed and an attempt made to do some practical farming in Newfoundland. Very little was done, and we come down through the years and find the fishermen farmers going along in a slip-shod fashion, until the year 1908, when the matter referred to in the letter to the Principal of the Memorial University was taken up, and the government of Sir Robert Bond inaugurated the policy of the model farm. The idea was to have an experimental farm, that some more practical knowledge might be obtained, where young men might spend one or two years or a shorter time, where practical demonstrations could be given, and men go in and learn the value of the science of farming. As the professor said, that was in 1908; the Bond administration went out in 1909, and the Government of Sir Edward Morris did as so many Governments do to the work of their predecessors, destroyed it. I understand that Professor Murray, who was here then, was a brilliant type of man and not overpaid, but the question was made a political football, and he was roundly abused and driven out. I am afraid that the Professor who wrote that letter to Principal Paton was a little pessimistic and prejudiced by the fact that they made a political football of the former effort, but let us hope that we have gained wisdom through the years, and consider the fact that this is a gift of a man who believed that there was considerable prospects in agriculture in this country, and who made an attempt while in office to inaugurate that policy. We all remember that in 1909 the politicians would go everywhere shouting about the "Model Farm," and the cry took like all political catch-cries, and deceived many. Then in 1910 Sir Edward Morris brought in the Agricultural Societies, constituted of people who had seats in the House of Assembly; at the time legislation had to be brought in to enable them to hold their seats. That policy died a natural death; it wasn't founded on fundamental principles — the people who handled the agricultural policy had no scientific knowledge of their subject, and the result was that considerable money was expended but little progress made. This was the state of affairs in 1919 when the Liberal Government of Sir Richard Squires went into office, with a policy very much akin to that of Sir Robert Bond, but a stock farm instead was established. But that also was made a political football of, and the people who did the most talking were those who had no knowledge of the subject. They did not know what they were talking about. Mr. Chairman, if we are to continue to tear down everything our predecessors have built in the agricultural line or any other policy, it is time to quit the House of Assembly because we are not fit to be in it. I believe the motives that prompted the Head of the Ontario Agricultural College were that he believed this would be made a laughing stock.

I know that stock farm here in St. John's did not accomplish all that was hoped for it, but at the same time, even to-day, there are great results manifested in the large number of farmers who thought that that stock farm was a good thing. A better breed of cattle was imported. There was, to my knowledge ,in the neighbourhood of two hundred young bulls of the finest breed distributed among the farmers. The result was very beneficial. It put new blood into their stock, and now we find a much improved stock of cattle, particularly in the vicinity of St. John's East and West and Harbour Main. I also know that there were about 115 foals of the progeny of one of the finest horses ever imported into this country. Wherever we find foals from that horse they are splendid animals and a credit to the stock farm. The same thing applies to pigs and other animals. So, after all, some good accrued from that stock farm.

But there came a change of Government, or, at least, a change of leadership, and because there was so much criticism, the Government was stampeded into the destroying of that farm. At that time I made this statement, openly and publicly, namely, that some of the people responsible for that deserved to be publicly horse whipped. There was a sale of animals, some of which not worth less than $1,000, going for a paltry sum of $100. The splendid young stock was sent to the block. That has been going on all the time. Now, to come down to the time when this bequest was made. Frankly, I will admit that, as a stock farm, I do not think that it is favourably located. There is not a very great deal of cattle around that vicinity, and certainly not at Whitbourne, and it would be a difficult matter to bring cattle there for breeding purposes, and to keep sires at the farm or horses or bulls, etc. That is a very important part of a stock farm, particularly if you want to combine it with an Experimental Farm. So that would be one of the arguments against making it a stock farm in conjunction with an experimental station, but I see no reason why the Government could not seriously consider the matter of an experimental station, a model farm, .f you will.

When we speak of the expenditure of $10,000, I would like to direct the attention of the Prime Minister to this fact. The Prime Minister is of the opinion that it might cost more than $10,000, but when you come to consider that the Government to-day is engaged in a Tourist Policy of building roads. Now, I don't want to be misunderstood. Whenever I speak of road building, I seem to give the impression that I am opposed to road building, but I am not. But when you come to consider that every mile of road that has been built has cost not less than $10,000, and I am prepared to prove that, then surely you could manage to do without the building of one mile of road per year and instead have a model farm at Whitbourne.

HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER—We have got to do it forever.

MR. HIBBS—I know that. You must carry on. You are not supposed to drop it. I don't think we will have to do that. I think in every other respectable city, except our own, if it is centrally situated, there is a stock farm. There is one thing that I cannot understand and that is the provision that is made there that the man who superintends this undertaking is to be a man from the outside. I take it for granted that the objection is that the Newfoundlander is not as well qualified, because he has not the same training, since there is no special training in this country. There again we are reminded of the fact that this bequest was made some thirteen or fourteen years ago, and, since that time, several Newfoundlanders, one gentleman by the name of Mr. LeDrew has already been mentioned, a graduate I think of MacDonald College, another gentleman of whom I spoke last year, and there are several more besides. Referring to this particular gentleman of whom I spoke last year, I endeavoured to impress upon the Minister of Agriculture and Mines the wisdom of having that young man brought down here and given charge of the agricultural policy of the Government. I dont think the Govt. has done much as far as agriculture is concerned. Instead of that, it is a matter of history that a man by the name of Mr. Steer was appointed and later on in the season his services were dispensed with, because, I suppose, the Department did not feel that he was capable. Then another man was sent out of the country.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—We sent a man from St. George's and paid about $100 towards his education. He qualified for what he went for.

MR. HIBBS—I merely refer to that because those conditions laid down there stipulate that the man in charge of that farm must be from outside. I cannot see why a Newfoundlander, if he is sufficiently qualified, should not take charge of that farm, in preference to a man from the outside.

I don't intend to refer to this matter at any length, because I presume that acting on the advise of the Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister will very likely have a committee appointed to look into it. I think that he should make haste slowly, and not immediately turn it down, because, as Mr. Hickman pointed out, it is almost a sacred bequest. Men who have done less for their country than Sir Robert Bond have had memorials erected to their memories by the state. I feel that if we made a general appeal throughout Newfoundland that the people of this country would contribute largely, and that you would find that the memory of the late Sir Robert Bond is held in such reverence that a memorial would soon be erected. I think also that we could not have any more fitting memorial to his memory than the acceptance of this model farm. So that is one of the reasons why there should be more consideration given to this matter.

Dont let us forget the beneficial side of this thing. A very great number of the farmers residing in this country are not educated; they are very ignorant as far as farming is concerned. People are doing a lot of useless labour, and they are not getting anything like the returns that they should get for the labour that they are performing, because they don't know how to go to work. Agriculture is one of the greatest things in the world. Lord Beaconsfield said that agriculture was the invention of giants and the employment of heroes. So we should make up our minds that we are not going to oppose this because somebody else got a model farm and it was not successful. You must investigate the causes. I think then that you will be satisfied that political prejudice more than anything else caused the destruction of the model farm.

MR. W. J. BROWNE—Mr. Chairman, after the gloomy speech of the Hon. Prime Minister one must have courage to be outspoken in regard to the adoption of a Model Farm in this country.

First of all I should like to venture a few remarks on the legal aspect, with all due defence to the legal gentlemen who have advised the Government on the construction of the

Will of the late Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Bond.

Like other hon. gentlemen who have preceded me I own to a great admiration for the late Rt. Hon. gentleman. I have read his speeches and followed up his Parliamentary career as far as it could be followed up by reference to the official records of this House. If we consider the course of that career we may see that from the outset he was a most remarkable man in many ways. He gave up all thought of a profession and devoted himself exclusively to politics, and the one motive of his life was the welfare of this country. When we look back now and see him sitting in his study at Whitbourne quietly penning his Will almost on the last day of 1914, and remembering the people in his Will, I am sure that we cannot fail to appreciate the very generous offer which he has placed before the people he loved.

Not only did he make that Will and give to the Government which had done a great deal to drive him out of office and out of public life; but, when he considered his bequest after the lapse of eleven years on writing the codicil dated 1925, he still saw no reason to alter it.

Now the Prime Minister has read to the House the particular words in the Will referring to the matter before the Chair, whereby the testator left his "estate and the eight square miles of land that it contained to His Excellency the Governor, and the Executive Council in trust for the people of this country to use it as a model farm for ever." The legal advisers to the Government have construed that phrase to mean that His Excellency the Governor has been mentioned in this will in his personal capacity. Now I say that that will must be construed and interpreted according to the contents of the will itself. There is not a doubt from the terms of that will that it was given to the Government of this country as such, and the Government are the trustees of the people of this country to-day. And it was given to the Government forever. It was given the same as any other conveyance would be made to trustees forever. Now I dont mean to make any reflection on the executor when I say this. And if a gift is given to anybody forever, it is his to dispose of as he sees fit, when he gets it. Therefore I would like to point out that we must now consider what was the intention of the testator. What was the farm to be used for? After we have considered the fact that it is a valid and legal gift, and after we have considered the fact that the Government were entitled to accept it, we shall have to consider what the Testator intended it to be used for. Before going on to that I would like to make one point clear and that is in reference to the fact that the Governor has seen fit to refuse to act as trustee. This gift is a trust, a charitable trust. The practice that prevails in English law and which we have adopted in our law here, is that if the trustee fails to act, or for some reason or other does not wish to act, then the King will step in as the father of his people, to see that the purpose of the testator is not defeated, and he will then as the constitutional trustee appoint someone to manage the trust. As His Excellency the Governor occupies the same position in this colony as His Majesty the King does in Great Britain, I feel that it would be wrong advice if it were represented to His Excellency that this trust should be allowed to fail, merely because he thought that he should not like to accept it. It was not given to His Excellency or the present Government. The Will was made in 1914. We have had several Governments since then. The gentleman administering the affairs of the colony to-day was not the one who answered that letter. His Excellency will not be here forever, and we will have successive Governments. So no particular Governor or Government was intended to be trustee for the operation of this farm.

Now what are we given? We are given a "model" farm. The first point in this connection that we have to consider is the need for a model farm. Has agriculture been developed in this connection that we have to consider is the need for a model farm. Has agriculture been developed in this country to such an extent that there is no more need for encouragement Can we look back, and look back with complacency upon a successful agricultural industry in this country? To say that this country has developed agriculture to the fullest extent is not the opinion of several distinguished men, and I propose to refer to them now, individually. In the first place I would like to quote the distinguished gentleman who presides over the Memorial College, Mr. Paton, who in an article in the Newfoundland Teachers' Journal, which was quoted in the Daily News of May 13th, said that we should like to see Newfoundland developing the wealth of its own soil, growing its own potatoes, wheat, vegetables, and part, at any rate, of its fruit. What an enormous increase, he remarks, that would be to our national income. Our young men should study nature and apply it to our needs. That is the opinion of Mr. Paton. Mr. Blackall in his report 1924-1925 says the same thing. There is no need for me to quote it. Mr. English, the representative of the Roman Catholic Board of Education, also speaks to the same effect. Doctor Curtis spoke particularly strong upon the subject, and said that we were forgetting to apply science to ordinary life with particular reference to agriculture and fishing, and we were importing thousands of dollars worth of agricultural products because Newfoundland had not been able to adopt and maintain a policy of land development.

I took the trouble, Mr. Chairman, yesterday to look up data connected with the imports and exports of this country and I totted up the total value of the agricultural products imported into this country. I found that exclusive of flour and woollen manufactures, the value of the imported products was $5,000,000. Is there no need for farming in this country with such a state of affairs? I submit that there is, and a great deal.

People have said that this country is not a farming country. Now for the year 1924-25 the total value of the fishing products was estimated at $11,000,000. The total farm products for the year 1921, according to the Financial Post Survey, was $17,844,000. Of course, that calculation is very much in error. The number of sheep produced in 1921, according to the same authority, was 86,732, having a value of $300,000; the number of goats in 1921 was 86,732 with a value of $1,300,000. I think, sir, that when these statistics go abroad some people may have an erroneous idea of the great value of agriculture in Newfoundland, and particularly of goat breeding.

Coming to the question of what the model farm should be, I think we could do no better than to refer back to the Act which Sir Robert Bond introduced himself, in 1908, as the culmination of all the years of thought and effort he had devoted to devising a sound agricultural policy. That Act which became a dead letter by the bitterness and the interference of his political opponents was not repealed until 1924. The objects he set out to attain were contained in the 2nd section of that Act, and the farm was called an experimental as well as a model farm. They include the testing of evils, manures and different methods of planting and rotation; the breeding of live stock and conduct of experiments on plants and animals; recording diseases to which our crops are subject, and investigating causes and remedies. These are some of the objects outlined in the Act which he introduced. The Act was only in force one year when the Government appointed an agricultural commission whose first recommendation, (and this recommendation was the basis for the dropping of the model farm), was that this country could not afford to pay $2,400, the annual upkeep of that model farm, whilst at the same time each member of the commission was receiving a salary of $1,800.00 or $5,400 for the three. Now sir, if we look back upon the history that the idea of a model farm has had I don't think that it can be said to have failed. I contend that it has never had a fair show, and even in the administration of Sir Richard Squires, when the Minister of Agriculture and Mines didn't hold a seat in this House, the Department of Agriculture and Mines was not carried on in any worse manner than any other of the Departments, and money spent on agriculture gave back as good returns as money spent on poor relief. I consider that five or ten thousand dollars spent on the Model Farm will give far better returns than the eighty or ninety thousand dollars that are being annually spent on poor relief in St. John's, and it will be doing more than that, it will be following along the lines of every country. In England they are saying "Back to the land." Mr. Hibbs quoted from Sir Robert Bond's address in this House in 1911 a statement of Lord Beaconsfield that "Agriculture was the invention of the gods and the employment of heroes." That means that a man has to be a hero to be a farmer, that he has to go to work with a will and say, "Well, it is going to be hard work, but I will succeed." The work will be hard but it will be satisfying. It will make a man self sufficient, and we ought to be more self-sufficient in this country. We ought to be able to supply all these agricultural products that I mentioned are now being imported.

Having considered whether there is need for a model farm or not, and when we remember that we voted here last year $20,000.00 for encouragement of agriculture and spent $26,000.00 and did it without any policy in view, leaving it entirely to the discretion of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, placing the responsibility with him, and giving him no advice, for what assistance he got I suppose he got from Mr. Bayly—the only official in the Department of Agriculture and Mines who knows much about agriculture,—do we not come to the conclusion that there is need for an agricultural policy, and need to spend money on such a worthy object. Let us say that the Government will decide to accept this model farm, what then can be done with it? what will be done? I agree with the outline stated for its operation; not to begin in a large way. I think that the suggestion of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition a worthy one, that it might be affiliated in some way with the Memorial College. A man to manage the farm may be brought from Canada; whether he be a Newfoundlander or not will make no difference. If we can get a Newfoundlander, so much the better. The suggestion that a man from Scotland or Canada to be manager is only the opinion of the executor. Let us have the instructor as suggested under the direction of Professor Paton, in the same way as the other professors up at the Memorial College. We have men up there, distinguished graduates of Oxford, Cambridge and London Universities lecturing on the history of civilisation, on engineering, on biology, on the foreign languages, on Greek and Latin and numerous other subjects. Is it not possible that we could have a man lecturing on agriculture and instead of having him here in St. John's, could we not have him out at Whitbourne to study under his charge as students now come to St. John's to study the classics or engineering? Begin in a small way. Keep it outside of political influence. I think that then in time, I don't expect it next year, we will have graduate farmers. The country has enough lawyers. It has enough doctors; and has enough men of other professions; and I hope that the Government will accept this gift so that in a short time we will have some graduates in agriculture. Reference was made in a letter to Professor Paton which the Hon. Prime Minister has read to Professor Lavitz. He was a gentleman brought down here by the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Bond to advise the Government of the day upon the idea of model farming in this country. That gentleman retired from active life and his professorship only the other day, and I have brought along with me a clipping which I found in the "Family Herald and Weekly Star" in reference to his retirement, so that in my conclusion I might give you some idea of the expert opinion which Sir Robert Bond had consulted before he started his Model Farm. Professor Zavitz had been experimenting for twenty years before he came here. In Canada he was an inspiration to thousands of students who later helped to make Canada's agriculture so great and he was one of the very few agriculturists to be honoured with a degree for agriculture when he received from the University of Toronto the degree of Doctor of Science for his work

What has this country lost by not carrying out the policy of Sir Robert Bond? We must go back to 1908 and begin all over again. In conclusion, I hope that the Government will see their way clear to accept this gift. No more worthy memorial could be erected to the memory, to the glorious memory, of Sir Robert Bond than the establishment of a model farm within a short distance of that romantic spot where his bones lie buried.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Speaker, I have listened attentively to what the speakers before me have said in reference to the model farm and the matters before the chair, and I heartily concur with them in what they have to say in reference to the very generous gift of Sir Robert Bond. This gift was the outcome of the spirit of a great patriot who was always, as has been stated, considerate of his country's welfare before his personal interests. The wording of the Will shows that he still had within him that high regard for having things conducted in such a way as to appear in the eyes of the people as workable and as worthy of consideration and as worthy of any effort that might be put forward.

The first thing that came to my mind when this matter was introduced was what was the value to Newfoundland to-day of its agricultural trade, and what encouragement has it received.

(Reads)

That shows no advance from thirty or forty years ago. I have looked over the reports of the Department of Agriculture and Mines to see the growth of the agricultural industry. During that period although our population has increased from 160,000 in '89 to 260,000 in 1927 the quantity is not so much as it was way back at that time showing that so far as assistance given by the Government is concerned it has not increased the quantity of agricultural produce in this country. It may perhaps have prevented a further decline, and that is already shown, but it has not increased the quantity. Are we going to leave our agricultural industry in the position it is in to-day Twenty five thousand dollars a year is spent with so little returns. It seems to me that a portion of that money could be utilized to carry out what is expressly stated in the will of Sir Robert Bond. A question that I have asked myself is what are we going to consider a liability and what an asset. We spent $30,000 or $40,000 in connection with the encouragement of shipbuilding and that is a liability to the Govt. They will get nothing in direct returns from the expenditure of the shipbuilding vote ,but the country has benefited considerably and will benefit by the quantity of fish that is caught by the vessels that have been built because of the encouragement of the bounty. We are paying out to different industrial concerns in this country four, five and six thousand dollars a year for interest guaranteed on money for paid up capital, and some of these industries are not working to-day. We have a place called the Newfoundland Knitting Mills in the west end of the city and we are paying the investors in that the sum of $5,000 on paid up capital, and it is not working and employs no one, yet that money must come out of the pockets of the taxpayer. We are quite satisfied to pay four or five thousand on that knitting mill, but if asked to consider paying four or five thousand to establish a model farm, we say, "Well it is a liability that we can't very well place upon the country." I say that is a penny wise and pound foolish policy. If we can find money to pay out to the people who invested money in an industry and see that industry to-day not employing anybody then turn down a proposition of this kind, I say that we have not given the thing the careful consideration that we should. I like very much one thing about the proposition that it is to be free of political influence. That will guarantee that it will be carried on successfully. Another thing I like about the proposition is that it is to be free from political control, and that is a pretty good guarantee that whoever goes in charge of that Model Farm that it is going to be carried through successfully. And why cannot a Model Farm be run successfully in this country as well as Model Farms are run successfully in Canada, Australia, New Zealand and other countries? Have we not got faith in our own people to see that this farm can be properly managed? Truly "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country"; but I think the time has come when we ought to have a little more faith and confidence in ourselves. I spent a few years when a boy on a farm in Brigus. I knew the hard work in connection with a farm and knew a number of young men around Brigus who were engaged in a small way in farming and then it got to where they came in and around St. John's where men come in contact with knowledge of soils that gave considerable growth. And this affords an opportunity to give men in the outports who are interested in farming a chance to acquire knowledge about soils. To-day there are scores of young men in this country who are most anxious to go in for farming, if given an opportunity. I have met people in the districts of Port de Grave and Twillingate who have asked the question as to whether they could get some encouragement from the Government of Newfoundland the same as the Canadians do in Canada in connection with acquiring knowledge for running a farm. It seems that the only answer that could be given these people of ours is that the money could not be found for the establishment of an Agricultural College or Model Farm; but, as has been pointed out by previous speakers, hundreds of thousands of dollars could be found to throw away on projects less worthy than that respecting the development. of agriculture in Newfoundland. The Prime Minister stated that in the running of the Model Farm it may happen that what may be produced there may come in competition with our local farmers. I do not see why a local farmer should be afraid of competition in the matter of selling milk for instance. It has been the custom for several years past amongst the farmers to agree on what price should be charged for milk, and I think it would be an easy matter for the management of a Model Farm to make a similar arrangement. In any case whether the Model Farm is established or not there are more men today going to farming than formerly and competition is becoming greater. We have the Newfoundland Butter Company who are, some people say, in competition with local farmers today, so why should the line be drawn in connection with the Model Farm from a competitive viewpoint. It has also been stated by the Prime Minister that Whitbourne would be a very poor place to have the farm established. I do not profess to know a great deal about Model Farms and Industrial Colleges, but I do know that they have one in the town of Truro, Nova Scotia. There are also a large number of people engaged in farming long distances from the town of Truro, yet they find the time valuable to them to consult with the Professor of the College about soils and to know what is required in order to make soils valuable. Well then if Truro is a suitable town in the Province of Nova Scotia and situated long distances from many farms I cannot see why Whitbourne would be unsuitable and disadvantageous to farmers here, because, after all, Whitbourne is only a few hours run from St. John's, so that as far as distance is concerned Whitbourne is just as suitable as any other place that can be found. Besides we are importing into this country large quantities of foodstuffs which could be raised in this country if proper encouragement was given. We imported last year fresh meats, poultry, oats, turnips, carrots, parsnips, onions, potatoes, hams, eggs and bacon valued at one and a half million dollars and all of these foodstuffs could be raised in this country. I merely point this out to show what little interest is being taken in the matter by the Government and in order to try and get the people of this country to produce for themselves and feed themselves with foodstuffs that they can raise instead of having them imported. The other point that suggests itself to me is that we have before us a splendid opportunity to get that place at Whitbourne for ten thousand dollars and why turn down such a reasonable offer, and when we see all other countries in the world increasing their interest in and encouragement for agriculture why should we be behind the times? Mr. Chairman, I heartily support the proposition before the Committee and I trust that the Government and the entire House will be heartily in favor of the project also.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, as the District which I represent is to be a considerable extent engaged in agriculture, I cannot let this opportunity pass without expressing my views on the question of a Model Farm. I admit that at the moment I am not prepared to express a positive opinion as to whether we should accept the offer from the Estate of Sir Robert Bond; I have not had the opportunity to go into the matter as fully as the Government has, neither am I in possession of the facts regarding agriculture, such as the Minister of Agriculture and Mines is; but at the same time it seems apparent from the history of most countries which have agricultural possibilities that the idea of the Model Farm is a sound one—whether we have or have not an agricultural future to warrant the expenditure of such a sum, I don't know. I am not an agriculturist—I can distinguish a potato from a turnip, but I can't tell potato land from turnip land. I am glad the Prime Minister saw fit to bring this matter before the House, not so much for our decision, because it is the duty of the Government to make the decision, but that the facts might be put before us so that we could know what they might be.

I am sorry the Prime Minister seems to suggest that the members on this side of the House might view the proposal from a party standpoint. In connection with such a proposal, in particular when it emanates from such a great statesman, I do not think the Prime Minister appreciates the respect in which we hold the late Honourable gentleman who is regarded as one of the incorruptible Commoners of our history. Whatever may be said of those who have sat in this House, or who now sit or stand here, there is one thing certain —that Sir Robert Bond placed country before himself, he devoted his life to his country, and whatever remuneration he received, I am satisfied he returned to the people, for whatever he got he distributed among the people again, and he never received the advantage of a single cent. And I believe that when he bequeathed this property to the country he did so sincerely believing the gift would be one of great advantage to the people of this country. For that reason I would hesitate long in turning down this gift from a man so interested in country first. He had nothing to gain when he made the bequest, and he shows that interest to the last when drafting his will. He had been associated with the agricultural policy of 20 or 25 years ago—I am not of such an age that I can recollect that, but I do know that a Model Farm was started, and that it was started with honest intentions Before it had time to work out another Government came in, and whose views were, rightly or wrongly, not in line with those of its predecessor, so they destroyed it It cannot be said that the Model Farm was a failure, for it never had a fair chance, and I think that if anyone in Newfoundland believes there is an agricultural future for the Colony, and I do not know, that something ought to be done other than the course that has been taken for the last fifteen or twenty years I suppose during that time we have spent half a million dollars, and I wonder if anyone here can assert that we have benefited to that extent I understand that annually we spend twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, much of it in seed potatoes that in many instances last long enough to get in the pot for dinner I don't blame the Governments—possibly they were well-intentioned, but their efforts were misdirected, and conditions have improved little since the days of the last Model Farm Now Sir, we spend, I understand, about $25,000.00 in a desultory sort of fashion without any sort of policy, in what we are pleased to call the agricultural policy of Newfoundland, which has produced no results. It is a fact, as has been said by Messrs. Browne and Grimes that huge quantities of agricultural produce are imported into this country—I don't know how much, but think that a value of half a million dollars would not be too great. Now, Sir, if that half a million could be kept in the Colony, many people at present out of employment would find it—and from any indications we have that will continue to go out—and we could produce those things presently imported. The scheme is both excellent and wise. Our money at the present time is going to provide labor for those we import from in the United States and Canada. If we are capable of such production, and the Model Farm would assist in that end, it seems to me that it would be sinful dereliction of duty on the part of the Government to turn down the Farm Measure and let things go on as they have since Newfoundland was Newfoundland.

I repeat that I am particularly interested because Port de Grave district is largely engaged in the growing of the common artciles of the farm, such as potatoes, turnips, cabbage and such like, and I should like to see something done that would enable them to produce to better advantage. We hear suggestions at various times that such things as selling methods and standardization, so frequently heard as applied to the fisheries, but applicable to other industries, must be remedied. But standardization can't make an article better or worse, but a policy of encouragement will possibly, nay probably enable the people who farm to produce more and increase the land capacity. I don't suggest that Newfoundland will ever rival Prince Edward Island in producing potatoes—possibly we have not got the soil, but I do say that, given the opportunities, with proper soil and education, as good a potato can be produced as ever came out of Prince Edward Island. And if that can be done, and we can produce sufficient to avoid importation, won't it be worth while Won't it be of advantage to the people of the Colony generally?

The Prime Minister suggested that the Government had no right to take this gift, entailing expenditure, without legislation. I do not propose to enter into a legal discussion as to that, for I have not considered the point, but I am inclined to agree, because I believe that to be the opinion of the Attorney-General, and I have the greatest respect for his opinion in matters of that kind. One thing is clear, and that is that we can have the property if we are inclined to take it, and I do say that such a gift, coming from a man actuated by such motives should be carefully considered indeed before turning it down. Scientific instruction of the farming classes is one of the greatest needs of this Colony, and farming is one of the greatest, possibly the greatest branch of modern science. I would like to see the scheme tried if it can be done with a reasonable probability of success. I don't know if the Government has asked any farmers for an opinion, but I suggest that there are men engaged in farming around St. John's who are able to give valuable advice and that the Government ought to consult them. I don't propose to delay the House further in connection with this matter, but I presume that it will come up again under the form of a report of committee. But I should like to impress the belief that it would be unwise to reject this without the most careful consideration.

MR. BROWN—Mr. Chairman, in connection with this bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond I should like to say that I agree with the Hon. Members from St. John's West, and from Fogo and Port de Grave, and I might say that in my opinion the Government ought to take over the Model Farm and see what can be done with it. It is no more to spend the money on a farm than anything else, and money has been wasted and squandered by governments—the present government as well as all other governments. I see no reason why this farm should not be taken over and run in the interests of this country. But when it is taken over what will be done with the products. To-day there is no market for produce in Newfoundland. What we need here is a central market in St. John's where the outport farmer can sell his produce. This has not been discussed to my knowledge and has never been tried out. The farmers around St. John's and in the outports cannot find a market for most of their produce. They charge more as a rule than you have to pay for the imported article. That is due to a want of organization. If the farmers would only organize and come down they would see that if they were to sell their products a little below the imported atricle there would not be any trouble about markets in this country. The member for Port de Grave stated that you can grow potatoes in this country equally as good as any country in the world. I firmly believe it. But we have no market for our produce. And unless there is it will be just as well for the farmers to give up growing these things.

There has been a lot said with regard to this model farm. I do not purpose to go on speaking at any length on this matter. Everybody in this country no doubt is glad to learn that Sir Robert Bond has left a large part of his estate at Whitbourne, especially the farm and the residence thereon to the Government. Something should be done with it. And having regard for Sir Robert Bond and realising the good that he has done for the country, I think that something should be done to perpetuate his memory. For years he represented the very important district of Twillingate, that district which today I have the honour to represent. That was the Premier's district for years. Several people in that district, a matter of 20 or 30 people, wrote to me and my colleagues to ask us to see what could be done for the memory of Sir Robert Bond. Though I may be a little bit off the track, I think that now is the important time to speak of it. I think that the Government of Newfoundland should erect a monument to the memory of the late Sir Robert Bond, and I have much pleasure, sir, in asking the Government to give consideration to the erection of that monument.

MR. POWER—Mr. Chairman, before going any further it strikes me that we have very little knowledge of the farm itself. I wonder if the Prime Minister could give us any information as to the amount of land under cultivation?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I think that there are about thirty eight acres.

MR. POWER—I think that we should also have some knowledge of what the farm would be worth regarding its production. We have down in the Department of Agriculture and Mines to-day Mr. Bayly, a man who has given the best years of his life to the study of agriculture, as it may be locally applied. He has had practical experience in such matters and I would suggest that he be sent to Whitbourne and with him several of the most practical farmers around the city, and who would bring back to this House a report of the farm's possibilities generally, and have it read to the House the next time that this subject of debate is on. I also think that this debate should be postponed for a few days so that we could give more consideration to it.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, in reference to this matter under discussion I take it that this model farm was left to the people of Newfoundland as a means of educating the youth with regard to farming and agriculture. Now, Sir, when it comes to the matter of education a few dollars is neither here or there, in my opinion. Thousands and millions hvae been spent on fanciful schemes which perhaps do not afford very great possibilities, and not at all equal to the matter under discussion at the present time. I think that if we believe or if we can see or hope to see that Newfoundland can have an agricultural future, then, now is the opportunity to begin and institute an agricultural policy for Newfoundland which we shall develop and hand down to other generations. Let us see what are the possibilities. We are told that the fishing industry is over-crowded. We are being told that the future of Newfoundland lies in the development of our minerals or in some other direction. Well, if the fisheries are overcrowded and as men are leaving the country, certainly a policy of agriculture, if it were scientifically adopted having regard to the possibilities of Newfoundland as an agricultural country, would be of the utmost importance, and now is the opportunity to begin and experiment with it. Mention has been made of the question of marketing and as to what we are to do with the milk supply. If it could not be sold locally I would suggest that it could be evaporated or condensed, and I feel sure that we would find a ready sale for it here in Newfoundland. I think myself that any difficulties which would arise, would be overcome, if we were given an opportunity to do so. Other countries have difficulties as well as Newfoundland and we too must expect them. I think that we have here in Newfoundland men with foresight and vision and ability who would be able to meet the contingencies when they might arise. I say that that model farm should be received as a lasting memorial to the memory of the late Sir Robert Bond. He was a statesman of remarkably great judgment. Even though his will was made as far back as 1914, he saw no reason up to the time of his death to change that will, and I take it that he had faith in the people of Newfoundland. I think that the model farm, if put under right management, and probably the right way to do that would be to take it clear of party politics would be a success. Get a competent man who has a knowledge of our soil and conditions here, because there is no doubt about it that we have not here the same summer weather as they have in Western Canada. Yet nevertheless I take it that Newfoundland has some agricultural future.

I was reading a few days ago a report that was tabled by the Government geologist. At the end of the report, it was mentioned that as a result of borings in Whitbourne, there was the possibility of finding minerals there. I think that it is ideally situated as regards a place for opening a college for students who might want to take an agricultural course. Men born in Newfoundland as a rule don't want to leave their country unless they are forced out of it. There is no place like home. But there are many men to-day who if they saw a chance of of getting an earning power in Newfoundland on the land would only be too glad to embrace the opportunity.

Now in my opinion a great deal will depend upon the man who will be in charge of that model farm. We find to-day that we are spending $800,000 or more on education here in Newfoundland.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Nearly one million.

MR. ASHBOURNE—We spend nearly a million. Compared to that what is ten thousand dollars. And the question of agriculture is a practical question. I know men who have been farming in Canada and have come back and started in Newfoundland, and they contend that they can make a living out of it. Our population is not large but we have an area of country larger than Ireland. I do not think that we can get an influx of people into this country to go fishing, but if we have an agricultural policy and can show that a living can be made at agriculture in this country I don't think that it will be very long before we shall be exporting produce the same as Prince Edward Island does now We can get the markets. All we have to do is to get men started at farming. The fisherman is not a farmer. To some extent the non-success of fishermen to-day is due to their attempting to devote time to working on the land as well as to their fishing. I maintain that the successful fisherman is a fisherman only: that he requires to fish and fish only and can't afford to spend much time on the land. I think that if we produced a standardised article, as regards the quality of the produce in general and as regards the size of potatoes in particular, which should be properly graded, we could sell a large quantity here in Newfoundland in place of the tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of potatoes and other produce that are imported here annually.

Reference to re-afforestation in Newfoundland has been made by me several times in this House. We have pulp and paper mills at Corner Brook and Grand Falls using up timber and which must be supplied with timber. Perhaps with the Labrador recently confirmed to us with its supply of timber land we feel we now have an unlimited supply, but the question of re-afforestation is one that might be taken up by such a college as has ben suggested would perhaps be in conjunction with the model farm. I think that the suggestion of the Honorable Leader of the Opposition that the model farm be worked in conjunction with the Memorial College is a very sound idea, and whatever educated man under whose direction students will want to take courses at the model farm, might, as I have suggested, give lectures on the subject of re-afforestation.

I know that those people with whom I chatted before coming on to St. John's, when they heard that Sir Robert Bond had left the land at Whitbourne to the people of Newfoundland, hailed it with universal delight and thanks. I myself feel that this is our opportunity; that we should accept it and keep it and see to it that it is kept as a memorial to the memory of the late Sir Robert Bond who did noble service for Newfoundland.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, I don't quite see where the House can get with a discussion conducted under present conditions. I would like to ask the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture and Mines whether we might not get some information as to the possible cost of some of the various suggestions in connection with the working of the Model Farm, or the conduct of a school of agriculture. I think that, before coming to a decision, we should see exactly what we are going to do, and where the accepting of this gift is going to land us.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Following on the remarks of the Honorable Member for Fortune, Dr. Mosdell, I must say that I was just about to rise to suggest that this committee should rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again. It is obviously a mistake to refer the matter at this stage to a select committee. As members will appreciate in a discussion as at present, in open House, sentiment is mixed with the business side of the matter in our speeches, and I think members on both sides of the House will appreciate that in a matter of this kind there are many practical difficulties, and while giving all respect to the memory of the man who has left this gift, at the same time this is one of the things that can't be decided upon by the Government by making up their minds over night. The executor is anxious to have a decision in order to get an early reply, probably amongst other reasons because he wants to make up his mind as to whether he will work the farm this year or not. The Government wants to thoroughly consider the decision, however, and with that idea in view the opportunity might be taken of utilising the time between now and the next sitting of the committee to obtain further and official information on the points raised so that we may consider them with better hope of a good decision in the light of that information. I would suggest to the Prime Minister who made the motion, that he propose the committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again.

MR. SCAMMELL—I concur with the view expressed by the Attorney-General, Mr. Chairman, that this matter should not at the present juncture go to a select committee. We have heard opinions from several members of the House on the matter, but the Minister of Agriculture and Mines has not yet given us his views. He has probably been holding back with a view to obtaining at first the various ideas and opinions of the other members that he may answer them and discuss their suggestions. We would like to hear what he will have to say and we would also like to get further information as referred to by the Attorney General just now. I agree with his motion that the Committee ris and ask leave to sit again.

HON. THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, I also agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Justice, but I want to remark now that I would like to be distinctly understood that this committee should not put too much importance on the speech that the Minister of Agriculture may make. I have no experience myself in model farming, nor have any of my associates in my office any practical experience in this regard. Apart from the statistics at my disposal I do not know that any remarks I may make in connection with this matter may be of any more benefit than those of any other member. I refrained from entering into the discussion in order to obtain the various opinions of the members, and I must say candidly that I have learned a great deal. I subscribe to the suggestion that the committee rise and I want to add that I think that this matter should be considered from every possible angle. The executor is naturally anxious to know whether he ought set his crops, but I do not think that this should rush this House into a decision. To accept the gift and terms binds the colony for ever, and on the other hand if we should decide to turn it down we might be striking a very serious blow at agriculture in this country. I suggest the committee rise and ask leave to sit again to consider the matters before the House.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the motion of the Minister of Justice, but before proposing that the committee rise I would like to quote one item from the letter of Mr. Reynolds, the head of an agricultural college of Guelph, because what he has to say applies to some of the remarks made on the other side of the House.

(Reads)

That is the opinion of a man who is head of an agricultural college. I want members on both sides of the House who talk about instituting a college out there at Whitbourne to bear in mind the opinion of this expert. He says that the proper place for a boy to learn farming is on a farm carried on privately for profit. It would seem natural that if a man wanted to learn farming he would go on a farm being so operated, and I think that a boy going out to a good farm will learn more about farming than at a technical college that might cost this country $25,000 a year at Whitbourne. I have listened with great interest to the various suggestions and opinions on the subject before the chair. I was rather surprised to hear the opposition say that as we had spent so much for the last two or three years, why not spend some more on this. When the money would be spent they would be asking us why it was not spent on the fisheries or something else. One member of the Opposition said this Government and other Governments have wasted money therefore let us keep on wasting money. I think that we should have all the information in connection with this matter obtainable. I think we might get information from the farmers. I want to say that while I appreciate just as much as any member in the House, the gift to this country by Sir Robert Bond, that I am very anxious not to see any more money wasted on model farms, and I am very much afraid I don't care what Government comes in that, if accepted, this thing won't be handled as it ought to be handled. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman for the Committee reported that the Committee had considered the matter to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

The remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE SPEAKER — I should like to refer to the notice of motion given by the Honourable Member for Ferryland, Mr. Cashin, this afternoon, which I do not think is acceptable. The notice is that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee on a question of privilege, arising out of what he terms the refusal of the Prime Minister to answer the Honourable Member's question No. 71, regarding certain correspondence relative to the recent by-election held in St. John's East. I understand from the remarks of the Honourable Mem- that his real object in making the proposed motion is not so much to deal with the specific question raised therein as to discuss, as a matter of privilege, certain statements published in the press during the bye-election in question, and before the House met, which he states imputed to the Opposition Party responsibility for the holding of the election. Is that right?

MR. CASHIN—Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HON. THE SPEAKER—I fear the motion cannot be entertained for several reasons. I need not stress its want of correct form as that is quite apparent; but I should like to point out that it is not accurate to state that the Hon. the Prime Minister refused to answer that question. In fact he replied to the question in the negative, that there was no correspondence as between the parties mentioned by the Honorable Member. Apart from the question itself the Hon. the Prime Minister went on to say that he had received a communication on the subject, but as it was between him and a private member of his party he would not feel required to disclose it even if the question had been properly framed. I would think that such a question as that should not be put on the Order Paper. There is authority for the correctness of this opinion (May P.P. 224). In the next place in my opinion it would not be competent for me to allow the Honourable Member under cover of such a motion to discuss the extraneous matters with which he states it is his real intention to deal nor would it be permissible for him to introduce as he proposes topics irrelevant to the specific subject matter of his motion. I am further of the opinion that the newspaper comments to which he takes exception cannot be discussed as matters of privilege at all, and this is clearly so under the procedure which the Honourable Member has adopted. The general principle is that in order to justify a motion complaining of newspaper references on the ground of privilege, the article complained of must concern the character or conduct of a member in immediate relationship with the House, and must be based on matters arising, (i.e. actions performed or words uttered) in the actual transaction of the business of the House. The correct procedure to follow then would be to have the newspaper produced, and read by the Clerk, when upon motion of the aggrieved member it would be dealt with as a matter of privilege. I must therefore rule the motion out of order.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me to make a remark. I regret that my question is evidently out of order, and that the Prime Minister took it in a different manner than I expected. I asked in all sincerity, and without making a reflection on any gentlemen or newspaper, but in view of the attitude which you have taken there is nothing left for me to do but to bow to your superior decision. But I shall take the first opportunity in public or private to prove that members of the Opposition had nothing to do with the state of things to which my motion referred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow, Thursday, May 19th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 19th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

The Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs tabled the Newfoundland Customs Returns for 1925-26.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Cashin, from Bay Bulls, re public wharf.

Dr. Mosdell, from Garnish, re transfer of Garnish from Burin West District to Fortune Bay District.

The Hon. Colonial Secertary tabled the Report of the Registrar General of Births, Marriages and Deaths for 1925-26.

The Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs tabled the Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General for 1925-26.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of question.

The Hon. Colonial Secretary tabled the Report of the Superintendent of the Poor Asylum.

Pursuant to notice and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs Supply was granted to His Majesty.

Answers to the following questions were tabled, numbers: 108, 109, 114, 116, 117, 119 and 131.

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, when we were last discussing the motion now before the Chair, I was dealing with my views of the record of the present administration with a view to applying that record to the interpretation of the Speech from the Throne with which His Excellency the Administrator opened this session of the Legislature. First of all, while we are discussing speeches, I desire to draw the attention of the House and make some reference to what is presented to the public by certain parties whose business it is, or whose business they themselves conceive it to be, to report the proceedings of this House. I am not looking for any cheap notoriety from any newspaper or other publication. I am not anxious that the remarks I make in this House should be reported by them at all, but if I am to be reported I expect the report to be correct, and I am not satisfied for any aggregation of white livered Pharisees to misrepresent statements that I make here, and to report for me statements that I do not make, particularly when those statements emanate from sources which are supporters of the Government and whose impure, improper and dishonourable motives in doing that kind of thing are apparent on their faces. I say I have not any desire to be reported by these people at all. To have one's words reported through channels of such a type is to besmirch one, and far from being complimentary, is purely a gratuitous insult. My honourable friend, Mr. Halfyard, has had occasion to complain of this already. I have to complain of it to-day. I happen to belong to the profession of the law, and there is in law a principle which we hold in connection with dogs that "every dog is entitled to one bite." I do not suggest that the same principle applies in law to human dogs, but I am prepared to allow the journalistic type to have one bite, and one only, and I want to be clearly understood that henceforth any person who improperly reports any statement that I make in this House or reports me as making any statement that I have not made or so grossly misrepresents any statement as to deprive it of all semblance of its original character and of its original import, I propose then to bring the matter before this House in privilege and have those persons brought before the bar of the House for condemnation and punishment. I trust that those persons to whom I refer will take due notice and govern themselves accordingly. I am not making statements of this kind this afternoon without warrant. I have a copy of the Daily News here on my desk which I am prepared to produce and have read by the Clerk of the House if necessary, and I am prepared to make the motion at the proper time. Now, Sir, having served these parties and any others who may be of evilly disposed mind, with due notice that I intend to ask this House to protect its privileges, I will proceed with the matter before the Chair. I have dealt, I say, with the record of the present administration with a view of ascertaining so far as possible their principal characteristics in order that we may, by the application of the knowledge thus acquired, interpret with some degree of intelligence the various phrases and contents of the document presented here as the Speech from the Throne which presumably foreshadows the legislation which the Government intends to bring down this session, but before I proced to the consideration of the Speech from the Throne in the light of that record, there is one other incident of it to which I desire to make brief reference. I refer to the delay in the opening of this session of the Legislature. From the time when I first had sufficient intelligence to have even the simplest conception of what the House of Assembly and the Legislature meant, I have always heard that the best time to hold the session was in the early months of the year. Some assert that it should be opened as soon after New Year's Day as possible; others that since the month of January is given up to the making up of accounts and the finishing off of the previous year's business that month should be excluded. I think the concensus of opinion, ever since I have been able to discuss the matter, has always been that the Legislature should open some time in the month of February, as early as possible in fact, in the month of February. This was one of the promises that was given to the electorate of this Colony by the Monroe Administration in 1924. Late sessions of this Legislature were condemned in no uncertain terms. It was pointed out that these late sessions interfered with the business of the year at its commencement, and that the proper time was the season which goes between the winding up of one year's business and the commencement of the next year's. In other words betwen the month of January and the month of May. I was very pleased to see in 1925 that this House was opened by the Monroe Administration on the 18th day of February. I was not so pleased when I found that in 1926 it did not open until the 3rd day of March, but the difference was only a matter of a couple of weeks, and, after all, one cannot cavil at small things of that kind; but, Sir, the present session of this Legislature had its opening on the 11th day of May, after the country's business for the year 1927 had begun. It is surely reasonable that we should look for some justification for the action of the Government in going back upon a principle which it had announced before its election and which, for two years, it had carried out, or nearly so. There must be some suspicious causes which actuated them in changing their policy from early sessions of the Legislature to late ones. I have heard it suggested that possibly it was due partly to the absence of my honourable friend, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He has not chosen to deny this; I am not in a position to affirm it. But I, in common with every other citizen of the Colony I can judge for myself as to whether or not this fact had any effect upon the minds of the Government in postponing this session to so late a day. I do recollect that when the Hon. Joseph Long was in England in 1926, the Legislature was opened on the 3rd day of March. At that time the Monroe Administration had 24 seats in this House. I do see before me, at the present moment, 18 men sitting on the Government benches and 17 on the Opposition side, and the absence of the Honourable Minister of Marine and Fisheries would possibly make the situation a little awkward for the Government, and I think that we Newfoundlanders may, perhaps, be pardoned if we have some suspicions about the matter. There is another aspect of this matter more serious than the point to which I have just referred, and that is the fact that many of the men who sit on this side of the House are engaged in some way or another in the prosecution of the staple industry of this Colony, and to bring them here at this late season of the year when they should be attending to those duties, the performance of which is essential in order that the business and industries with which they are connected, some of which are staple industries of the Colony, should not suffer, is not such an action as an administration having the interests of the country and the welfare of its industries at heart should be guilty of. One would think that if the present administration had the interests of this colony at heart that it would give those members an opportunity to perform their duties here in the House of Assembly early in the year and so enable them to get back to their avocations and to forward the country's staple industries. Instead, however, of holding the session at such a time as would not interfere with the prosecution of one of the Colony's staple industries those members are brought here at a time when it is almost imperative that they should be at home. What motive can be behind this action on the part of the Government? Was it in order that they might obtain the decision of the electors in St. John's East? I claim that they waited two years too long before they asked for that decision. I might also be suggested that that object was one not wholly without ulterior motives, in that possibly the Government counted upon the fact that some of these members might not be able to remain in this House during a session of the legislature at this time of the year. As I say though I am not in a position to make any positive statement as to what particular motive or motives actuated the government under all these circumstances, I have my own opinions and so have the people of the Colony, and I will go so far as to say this, that their opinion and mine square exactly.

We have now a brief and possibly a comprehensive view of the record of the Monroe administration from the day when that party was conceived down to the present time, and from it we can judge of two things; firstly its sincerity and secondly its capacity. When one recalls all the emanations of this administration in its promises in 1924; when one recalls all the burdens that were promised to be removed from the backs of those who could ill afford to bear those burdens; when we recall all those promises that were given us of improvement in the management of public affairs of this colony; when we recall all the condemnation of graft and squandermania that emanated from the supporters of this party during the election of 1924; and place on the other side of that particular page the record of the administration itself in that respect; it does not seem to me that it requires a "Daniel come to judgment" in order that we may be enabled to know whether such sincerity existed or did not. If one may have regard only to bald facts of their political history and judge these people by their deeds then by the unanimous voice of any impartial jury they must be condemned utterly and absolutely. No sincerity whatever can be discerned in a record such as I have detailed to you during the past afternon or two. We then are justified, I submit, in approaching the consideration of this Speech from the Throne with a preconceived idea that we must beware at least of possible insincerity as to its contents. And now sir, I propose to deal for a moment with this Government's capacity in view of this record. Let us first look to the expenditure on the dry dock in 1925. We were informed that the dry dock was in extremely dangerous condition; that repairs were absolutely essential and immediately essential as otherwise a catastrophe might occur. I took it for granted that these facts were correct and I assumed that in the main they were. The Government immediately undertok to remedy this condition. It was suggested from this side of the House that substantial repairs might be executed for a comparatively small sum of money, but the Government on the other hand felt that partial repairs to a dry dock of a type already obsolete would be mistaken economy and they undertook therefore to build a modern dock to accommodate large steamers, large tramps or lame ducks as we call them, which come in here sometimes for the reason that they have had a sudden introduction to one of the icebergs that are sometimes to be found off our coasts. Various estimates were obtained by the Government as to the probable cost of building a new dock which would be of increased breadth and depth and of concrete instead of wood; and a decision upon this question was finally made—after having numerous foreign engineers here to consider the matter as well as our own engineers and others expert in that kind of work. The estimated cost was $1,085,000. I do not know exactly what the cost of that dock was, but I think I would not be exaggerating to a very great extent if I said it cost double that amount. That, sir, to me, does not argue any particular business capacity. That does not argue that nobody else could have done any better than the present administration; if there is nobody in Newfoundland who can go nearer the cost of a Government work that to underestimate it by one hundred per cent. then God help this Colony. That is one instance from which we may draw a conclusion as to the capacity of this administration to handle public affairs. Let us look back for a moment and note all the salient features of the policy of the present Government as accomplished since their election took place. I referred yesterday to highroads; during the year 1925 140 odd miles of road were dealt with. A certain number of these miles were of wholly new construction, but a number of them were simply repairs to old and existing roads, and those 146 miles of new and repaired roads cost this colony over a million dollars; a million dollars for 146 miles of new and repaired roads. Mr. Speaker, I am not very good at mental arithmetic but I suggest that that cost is somewhere in the neighbourhood of seven thousand dollars a mile. $7,000 a mile expended to create highroads which are useful for tourists who have money enough to hire a motor car when they come here,—which a great many have not, as I have been told that some come with their tickets and enough to buy a packet of picture post-cards,—useful also to those of our citizens sufficiently fortunate to possess a motor car, but wholly useless to the great bulk of the people of this Colony who will never see them if they live to be a thousand. There are a few miles of road in the lower end of the district of Port de Grave upon which I would be delighted to spend $5,000.00 and give the fishermen of that particular section a road such as they want, but I could not get that small sum. The Government was too busy building seven thousand a mile roads for tourists. $2,212,000 has been expended upon these highroads during the past two years and interest on this will have to be found by the people; from 10 per cent. to 15 per cent. of that cost will have to be found annually in order to keep up these highroads, and we are told that this tourist policy is going to pay the piper. I say that any man who believes that the tourist policy for the next fifty years in this country is going to pay the cost of these highroads speaks very hopefully. It is the staple industries that will have to make it up and these staple industries will never receive any advantage from it. Is that evidence from which we can conclude that the present administration is capable of administering the affairs of the country? Another point in connection with this highroads policy to which I wish to draw attention is that these roads were all built at a time of the year when ordinarily our people would be at the fishery. Who is going to the fishery when there is an opportunity of earning $2.00 or $2.50 at work on highroads? Who is going to the fishery if he sees a reasonable opportunity of getting $2.00 or $2.50 a day working in his own home. I know supplying merchants on the Peninsula of Avalon who told me that men who had been with them in previous years laughed when they were asked if they would ship with them in 1925 and 1926. Of course not! Would any man who can earn more at home, and at the same time do a little in the agricultural line bother with the fisheries? The result was that these men who would otherwise have been producers stayed home, and we can't blame them for that—I would do the same myself. By the act of the Government they were placed in the position of being parasites on the people of this Colony instead of producers. We are living on our vitals to-day and if that is going on it is only a question of time when Newfoundland as an independent entity will cease to exist. Does that demonstrate a capacity on the part of the present administration to conduct the affairs of the Colony It is an admitted fact, for the Government itself says so, that the fishery is the mainstay of Newfoundland, and despite that admission not a single effort has been made in the past three years to help it—I repeat that there has been not a single effort in the past three years to encourage the fishery or to save that declining and dying industry. And unless some effort is made shortly to alter conditions which at present exist in connection with the codfishery, it will cease to exist. I don't know what my Hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries can tell us, but I am informed that out of scores of schooners which last year prosecuted the fishery from the district which he has the honour to represent, not half the number is likely to go this year. That is the information which I have, and I have it from men of Bonavista Bay. I shall be pleased and delighted to hear that the Hon. Member can deny that report. I do know that in my own district if fishermen have anything at all whereby they can earn a dollar or two they will have nothing more to do with the fishery. That I know to be a fact, and I know it from their own lips. As I told the House a few days ago, scores of my constituents who prosecuted the fishery last year, when the season ended didn't have $30.00 per man to support their families during the winter, and many were hopelessly in debt. And in spite of the fact that things grow hourly worse no effort whatever has been made to better conditions. There has been no attempt to improve marketing, no attempt at standardization. At various times efforts have been made to remove evils in connection with exporting, some of which I dealt with in connection with the Labrador, but nothing has been done by this administration. Nothing! No hope held out; nothing offered the fishermen—the whole industry may sink and still the Government worries not. I don't think anyone can even by the utmost stretch of the imagination argue that this shows a capacity on the part of this administration to deal with the affairs of the Colony at the present time.

One might further deal with the question of relief. In the early days of the present Government relief was given by way of the dole. I don't know whether they found that shovelling snow was cheaper, but I do know that when a man is employed he expects to have to give reasonable returns, and I would like somebody to point out what returns the Government have received from the money spent in snow shovelling. I did hear of one case where snow was shovelled off the road, and had to be shovelled back again! I did see snow being shovelled when the sunlight furnished by the Almighty was doing the work faster—not but that the men were doing what they could—but climatic conditions made the work ridiculous. Didn't it suggest itself to the Government that these men might have been more profitably employed. We heard a lot of criticism of the rock sheds during the Squires regime and during the election of 1924, but at least we had the rocks, and to-day we haven't even got the snow. Couldn't something have been done? The Battery, in St. John's East, is sadly in need of aid; I understand that the Municipal Council are unable to do anything because of lack of funds to cope with this situation or give adequate sanitary conditions. It must be admitted by anyone who has ever visited the Battery that improvement is essential and if the Government found that it had to spend ninety or a hundred thousand dollars why couldn't they have spent it there?

HON. PRIME MINISTER—The Municipal Council had the spending of it.

MR. BRADLEY—That is no excuse. You can't get clear of responsibility by attempting to shoulder it on someone else. The Minister of Justice may laugh, but I shall be glad to see him laugh when he goes back to his district in 1928. I did not condemn the expenditure—certainly not. The people had to be looked after, but they were ready to give a reasonable return, and for the money spent in snow shovelling we have no returns at all.

Now, Sir, to deal for a moment with the financial situation. I take it that it is a principle of political economy with which most men will agree that to place an impediment in the way of the progress of an industry is likely to be disastrous. You simply take a step towards killing the goose which lays the golden egg, which in Newfoundland happens to be the fishery. If you tax the fishery so that it becomes unremunerative, it will soon cease to exist; if the cost of producing fish becomes so great that there is no profit in it for the fishermen, they will not fish, and that is exactly the state of things which exists to-day. I do not say the price of fish is wholly due to the action of the Government, (and I don't want that statement misinterpreted in the Press either,) but I do say that the course which the Government has taken, in taxing the things essential to the fishermen, has hampered the fishery—one of the acts of the Government was to increase these taxes. I for one am not prepared to admit the principle that a Government which forces the fishery to the wall is a capable one.

And then, Sir, we have to consider the deficit. We were told last year that there would be a surplus in the neighbourhood of $300,000.00, and in the Government organs during the bye-elections it was admitted, for the purpose of bolstering up their case, that there was a deficit of $80,000.00. Now I wonder how much it really is? We are somewhere near four or five hundred thousands behind the last Estimates, and to-day, although the Government predicted in 1926 that things would be alright, the Prime Minister has admitted that for the fiscal year 1926-27 up to the present time he anticipates a deficit of one and a half millions on general revenue and seven hundred and fifty thousand on the Railway. And how can a Government whose predictions are so far away from actual facts be considered as capable? Sir, I think it is fairly evident from the facts before us that this Administration cannot be considered as wholly sincere or wholly capable. On the other hand I think we are justified in assuming that when we approach any promises which they make for the future, or any indication of what they intend to do in the future, that these promises and these supposed intentions should be approached with grave suspicion as to their sincerity and considerable doubt as to their capability of carrying them out in the interests of the Colony.

Let us consider the Speech as read by His Honour the Speaker on Wednesday last. It is a weak document —what might be termed a "milk and water" document, one which shows no courage, no confidence in its writers that they can do anything under the circumstances to deal with the future. It begins by telling us the story that we have so frequently heard in the Press and on the platform during the past few months, that the dispute between Canada and Newfoundland as to the Labrador has been settled. We are grateful for the reminder, but it offers little information, and no hope for the future. While I am aware that Newfoundland has won the dispute, and I am quite willing to give credit where it is due to those associated in its settlement, I would be the last in the world to deprive any gentleman associated with the present administration of the smallest amount of credit due him for the part which he took with the settlement of the dispute. But it must be remembered that there are some other gentlemen who have been associatd therewith, some of whom are in their graves, and some not in this country at all, and I would like to pay tribute to them, as well as to those closely associated with the dispute at the time of settlement, because their labours were given at a time when things didn't look bright for Newfoundland. I refer to the late Martin W. Furlong, who was associated with the dispute many years ago, and did a tremendous amount of work in connection with the case, which I understand was practically completed in 1924. I think the late Sir James Winter also was associated therewith, and I believe the present Mr. Justice Kent—to them also our thanks are due. And then we have to go outside—and should be grateful to the Government's solicitor's and to that famous counsel, Sir John Simon who pleaded the case before the Privy Council. I am grateful to all these, from the earliest down to the present, including the Minister of Justice. But we must remember that while we are now in legal possession—whether in actual possession or not I don't know—that it will be some time before we can hope for any tangible benefits to accrue to us, though it may have the effect of improving our credit and enable the Government to raise another loan if they want to. It is not an asset that can be immediately developed, because the Prime Minister has already informed us that these gentlemen whom the Prime Minister regards as necessary evils, belonging to the profession of which I have the honour to be a member have yet to get another little slice out of the Labrador, and those lawyers associated with or friendly to the administration can hope for some few plums yet. So much for the value of the announcement in the Speech from the Throne that we have won the Labrador for the people of the Colony.

Now, Sir, we are told that the cod fishing industry in 1926 suffered considerably from prices prevailing in foreign markets.

I suppose these are truisms which we can't dispute. But there doesn't seem to be any attempt whatever by the Government or any suggestion offered to relieve those conditions. A statement of fact is no good to the Colony at the present time; what we want is a constructive policy whereby these unfortunate conditions can be relieved. It is not much use to tell a hungry man that there is no bread—what he wants to know is where it can be obtained. And after three years—after they have had plenty of time to find their feet, the Government comes in here and tells us that the codfishery has suffered. That is all; they might just as well have left it unsaid—we knew it before they told us.

We are told here also,—and here is a distant beam of light,—regarding the development of the paper-making industry.

I am glad to learn it, Sir, very glad indeed, but I have yet to learn that the fact that the output of these factories is slightly increased is going to cure the evils from which this Colony unfortunately suffers at this moment. And the Colonial Conference is referred to by the Prime Minister, who tells us that we are now in a position different from that which we formerly occupied, that we are now an independent unit of the British Empire. It may be that that is correct—I am not prepared to accept it, as my opinion is that no change in status had been made, but that the position of the Colonies was more clearly defined. It was with regret that I heard the Prime Minister state that our status had in fact been changed, because if that is so, and we have to admit a change in status, it is due to the efforts of parts of the Empire which contain elements which are disloyal to the Crown—I refer to Canada and South Africa, where the French and Dutch races are known to be hostile to British influence. If our status has changed, I regret it exceedingly because it is one step, however large or small, which these particular parties or influences have gained towards their desired goal, the disruption of the Empire. That surely is not a matter for congratulation, not that it directly affects this Colony, for I agree with the Prime Minister that it doesn't matter much whether we are regarded as independent or as an ancient and loyal Colony. We know that Great Britain will allow us to hoe our own row, and we don't require that we should be regarded as independent. It is a high sounding phrase and may tickle the vanities of some, but it is of no value to this Colony or any Dependency which is truly loyal to the Crown.

The announcement of the deficit is contained in this Speech from the Throne, and the Prime Minister has given us further figures as to the amount. An effort is then made to explain how this comes about, and we are told that the deficit of 1926-27 is owing largely to the decreased importation and reduced value of imports.

Of course it is due largely to decreased importation. If the importations were as large as ever they were, and the duties are greater than ever they were, then there ought to be more revenue; but in spite of the incrased tariff our people are in such a position financially that they are not able to buy, therefore, the importers have refused to import. The impoverished condition of the people, Sir, is the cause of the decrease in the revenue, and you will never increase that revenue until you increase the people's earning capacity. That will not be done until we take matters in hand and apply a constructive policy to our staple industry.

Then we are told that the reduction in the value of articles in the manufacture of which cotton is a component part is also responsible for the decrease in the revenue. In other words the fact that Newfoundland can buy cotton cheaper in the foreign markets to-day is partly responsible to the deficit in the revenue, or to put it another way, the Government hopes that when the people have to pay more for cotton in the foreign markets they will get the revenue back again. Stuff and nonsense of the worst possible type to lay before the intelligent citizens of this country. It is surely against the best interests of the people of this country to practically announce in the Speech from the Throne that one of the regrettable features in the year's operations is the fact that the people were able to obtain cheaper cotton, and because of that the Government did not obtain as much duty on cotton articles as they did before. If we are to judge from that the nature of the capacity of the present administration to bring Newfoundland out of the slough of despond into which we are now drifting, then, sir, I am afraid that unless a change of administration takes place very soon Newfoundland will have to call her creditors together.

Furthermore it says here that the deficit is caused by the increase in the amount required to meet the interest on the public debt. I quite agree with that. But who is responsible for the increase of the amount required to meet the interest on the public debt. Is it not the Administration itself which borrowed two million dollars to expend on roads and bridges whilst the fisheries and other staple industries in this country languished in poverty. Every difficulty that the Government has to face to-day is caused by its own action, or lack of action. They are caused by its action in undertaking those useless public works, and they are caused by its failure to undertake some remedial legislation for the encouragement of the staple industries of the country. Truly, Sir, they have done those things which they ought not to have done, and have left undone those things which they ought to have done, and in those two statements you can sum up the whole career of the Monroe Administration from June, 1924, to May, 1927.

Down at the bottom of the first page in the Speech from the Throne we first reach something that is tangible. "With a view to a reduction of possible future deficits, etc."

(Reads)

If the Government hopes that it will avoid a future deficit by the re-enactment of the Income Tax, it is greatly mistaken. I suppose that tax annually would not amount to more than half a million dollars. Yet we are faced here to-day with a deficit of two and a half millions, two and a quarter at any rate. We are told that the income tax is to be introduced with a view to avoiding a possible future deficit, but we have not been told here that there is anything which would warrant us in believing that there was even a possibility under the existing conditions, of the deficit being less next year than it is to-day. With the introduction of the income tax, I agree. I am glad to see that the Government has to some extent at last seen the error of its ways; that at last they have realized that the income tax which was repealed in 1925 ought never to have been repealed. I suppose we may regard it in the nature of a death-bed repentance, or possibly some people might be so uncharitable as to suggest that it was the repentance of the thief upon the cross. I agree, sir, with the principle of the income tax, and I trust that the Government will bring down here such a tax, and I assure them if it is properly adjusted so that the burden bears on those well able to support it, that it will have my heartiest support; but I noticed that a tax which is the twin brother of the income tax and which should go with it is not here, namely, the business profits tax. It will be interesting to see how far the incomes of corporations will be covered by this income tax, which the Government proposes to bring in, because, sir, it is a simple matter for me or any other man with a large profitable business to draw therefrom a nominal salary upon which to pay the income tax, and leave the bulk of the profits of the business in that business and pay nothing upon it, unless there is a proper safeguard in the income tax itself, unless it is drafted in such a way that the tax will cover that situation. Unless the one is done the other is useless, because a man who can pay will naturally beat you every time.

And then, Sir, we are informed that the Government were fortunate enough to make an agreement in January with the Bell Island people. Perhaps there was a certain phase of that situation at the time which rendered it almost hopeless for the Government to expect that such an agreement could be made. I take it for granted that this is the annual agreement that has been made every year for the past six or seven years which is referred to here. The Company were forced to consider the employment of a certain number of men and keep them employed during the year in return for a remission of the export tax. No particular credit is due for that contract unless there was extraordinary difficulty due to the peculiar conditions of the time that made it almost hopeless that an agreement could be reached this year with Besco, and by some particularly skilful manipulation the Government managed to trap Besco into this agreement once more.

I do want to make this statement at the outset, when considering this particular part of the program outlined in the Speech from the Throne, that the legislature in past years has been too prone to grant concessions to capitalists. They are too prone, sir, to adopt the attitude that these people have put a gun to our heads and that we have to grant them these concessions or they will run away from us. I have heard that cry of wolf so often that I am very sceptical about it now.

The A N. D. Co. I understand own these areas down there in the neighbourhood of Red Indian Lake. I also understand that they have entered into some sort of an agreement, of the details of which I have no knowledge, with some other corporation in connection with the working of these areas. They have already expended certain sums of money in development, and now they come to this Legislature and ask us to admit duty free, certain articles which they require. Now so far as it concerns articles in the nature of construction materials, it perhaps might be regarded as reasonable, but that they be freed from all tax for a period of twenty years, on certain articles is unfair. What do we get in return for it. That is what we would like to know. If Newfoundland deprives itself of certain customs duties by giving free entry to certain articles, what do we get to pay for that. I suppose that we will be told that we get the labour, and that if we don't give them these concessions, that they will run away and leave the mine alone. Sir, if that mine is any good, if it is capable of being worked at a profit I am of the opinion that the owners will work it anyway, whether they get concessions or not. I would be glad, sir, to learn that any other country on the face of the earth—the United States for instance—is prepared to give concessions to any man that happens to start a mine in any part of that great country, and to give him free entry on any article for a period of twenty years. As I have already said, sir, if they ask for free entry for the materials essential to the construction itself it might be regarded as reasonable, but to continue in the future, as we have in the past, exempting these corporations from the ordinary tax which the ordinary business man in Newfoundland has to pay is not fair, and in particular is it unfair, unless it can be clearly shown that the Colony gets an adequate return.

What advantage is it to the people of this Colony if we permit capitalists to come down here and cut down our raw material and then take it in its raw state to some foreign country to be manufactured. We are simply providing the raw material wherewith these people can find the labour for foreigners in foreign countries, when we need that labour so badly in this country ourselves. We strip our country of its raw material in order that foreign countries may work it up into a marketable commodity, and take the advantage and the profit therefrom. If we have timber in this country that is capable of being manufactured, then I say let that corporation come down and make pulp and paper out of it right here in Newfoundland. It has been done here and it can still be done here. I strongly condemn the idea of allowing the raw material to go out of this country, to the United States to enrich Yankees when we are so badly in need of the labour here ourselves. I propose sir, to oppose that agreement unless it is quite different from what I understand it to be; unless this agreement has some saving clause in it to protect our own labour I propose to fight it tooth and nail.

I do, Sir, in this speech from the Throne, see one piece of legislation with which I am in entire accord, and that is the reserving of our timber areas on Labrador from all foreign speculators. I quite agree with the Government that no grant of any timber in the future should be made out of this territory except by this legislature. In the past people have obtained Crown land for little or nothing, and after taking our valuable property for practically nothing they have grown wealthy upon it. These lands belong to the people of this country and should not be given away for a song to speculators. They are for the people's use and the people should have the benefit of them. I intend, Mr. Speaker, to support that bill.

Now, Sir, there is one more matter to which I wish to draw the attention of this House. I refer to the position existing here to-day. I want to refer to the remarks of the Prime Minister when speaking to the motion for the appointment of the Committee on Wednesday last. He told us that the situation of the country was serious or words to that effect. He told us further that drastic legislation was necessary to meet the exigencies of the times. He admits further that his Government at the present time is not sufficiently strong to introduce that legislation which conditions demand. This matter was referred to by Mr Hickman and I intend to pursue it, because I think that it is of extreme importance. The Government was elected with 25 men in 1924. Rightly or wrongly it has lost the confidence of six of these, in other words twenty-five per cent. of its supporters. Then a shuffle took place and we find ourselves in this House with 18 men on the Government side and 17 in Opposition. The Government has been defeated at the bye-election in Fortune Bay, and it suffered an ignominious and discreditable defeat in the bye-election in St. John's East a month ago. There is not the slightest shadow of doubt about it that the majority of the people of this country to-day have no confidence in the capacity of the Monroe administration to meet the situation. It is also a fact that the people of this conutry to-day expect and want an election this fall, and when I say that, I want also to say that I know what I am talking about. Now I ask you in all sincerity is it consistent with the alleged honest motives of the present administration, that they should continue to hang on to office—for what reason I know not, after the fall of this year, when they know and admit that they have not the strength to bring in that legislation which the condition of the times require. We know that the people of this country have lost their confidence in them as a Government. Is it then consistent with their professions of honesty and integrity that they should still continue in office. Is it not their plain duty as citizens of this country to forget politics at least for the present, and to give some heed to the existing conditions. Is it not their plain duty with the knowledge that they have lost the confidence of the people, with the knowledge that they are too weak to introduce the legislation that the times require, and with the knowledge that the people of this country want and need an opportunity to place in office an administration sufficiently strong to do what is required of them. If they desire to live up to that reputation for honesty which they claim, then there is only one course left open to them and that is to dissolve this House, go back to the people, and answer to them for their deeds during the past three years. If then the people are satisfied with the conditions, if the people are content that they have done their best under the circumstances, if they are quite satisfied with all this, and put the Monroe Government back in office, I am quite satisfied.

The Prime Minister has stated in his Manifesto that there are too many unearned salaries being paid in this country, but what has he done about reducing these unearned salaries? I venture to say that in every part of the Colony to-day, and in the city of St. John's itself there are more employed nominally, than there were when the Monroe administration came into power, and still the Monroe administration comes in and tells us that there are too many unearned salaries being paid in this country and that they were going to reduce them. "Rigid retrenchment and the utmost economy." I have yet to see one iota of retrenchment that was carried out in this Colony by the Monroe administration. There has been no economy whatever. I don't care whether I am elected at the next General Election or not. But what I want to see in this country is what the Monroe administration used to call a "square deal." Now there is another point to which I wish to draw the attention of the Government, and it is this. That this House of Assembly dies in July, 1928. It dies by Act of Parliament, and nothing can save it but another Act of Parliament. That being the case from early July, 1928, until sometime in November, should this present Government decide to hold office, if they can do so, this Colony will be at least three months without a House of Assembly at all. The gentlemen who sit in the Executive Council and occupy departmental office during that period will represent no one. They will not even be trustees of the Colony, but merely private citizens, occupying offices of trust by reason of a constitutional accident. Is it consistent, Sir, with the principles of political good faith, that any administration should remain in office for a period of some months after it has ceased to represent anybody? The other alternative is an election in the spring. I think that upon this point I can speak for 95 per cent. of the people of this country: I think that I can speak for 100 per cent. of the gentlemen on the Government side of this House when I say that a spring election is not in the best interests of the country.

The alternatives then that face the Prime Minister to-day are the dissolving of this House and granting a General Election in the fall of 1927 which the great bulk of the people of the Colony expect him to do, the granting of an election in the spring of 1928 which would be detrimental to the best interests of the Colony, or carrying on by virtue of a constitutional accident until the fall of 1928. In the latter case he and his associates will be usurping by that constitutional accident the positions which they at present occupy, and will represent nobody in the House of Assembly because there will be no House in existence then. It is also very probable that within the next twelve months an occasion may arise making it absolutely necessary to call the House together immediately, and if such an occasion does arise between June and November 1928 we would have a Government in power representing nobody, and no House of Assembly to call together. All consideration of patriotism, all consideration of justice and all consideration of decency demand that there shall be an election during the fall of 1927. I believe and I can speak for members on this side of the House jump into office, we have no desire when I say that it is not our desire to at all at the present moment to root the Government out and occupy their positions. Personally I have no such desire. What I do want is that the Government shall treat the people of the country fairly. I sincerely believe, and I am quite satisfied that the present administration cannot undertake to pass that legislation which is now so essential for Newfoundland. That being the case, their continuance in office is a stumbling block in the path of the people of the Colony who are endeavouring to get out of the mess they are in to-day. Does the present Government desire to go down in history as that stumbling block; and if it is its intention to hold on to office, for what reason does it ask to so continue. As I have already said, every consideration of the constitutional rights of the people demand that there shall be an election the coming fall, and if the Government fails to give the people their just rights then we can only attribute their attitude to such motives that are not particularly complimentary. I am quite satisfied, Sir, that, if any attempt is made by the present administration to continue in office after November next, the common people will put a construction on their conduct which will condemn them to perpetual infamy. I cannot believe that the Prime Minister is prepared to adopt any such course; I cannot believe for a moment that he will go so far as to deprive the people of the country a chance, which they desire, of saying what party of men they require to grapple with the serious condition of affairs that confront this Colony at the present time. I think it is about time to forget party politics. I do not stand here to-day merely as an advocate of the Opposition. I stand here free and untrammelled, and, no matter what motives may be attributed to me, I speak wholeheartedly for the best interests of this Colony, and I sincerely believe that the way the Prime Minister and his associates can best serve the interests of the people of Newfoundland is by granting a dissolution and a General Election in the fall of 1927. I trust, Sir, that the Prime Minister will take this matter into his serious consideration. Possibly he does not see things as I see them, but while I am not always so confident advancing my opinion I feel that what I say now is absolutely correct, and I feel that the Prime Minister believes the same thing. I trust that the conditions under which the people are living to-day will cease and that the Prime Minister of Newfoundland will take the proper, honest and honorable course, grant an election the coming fall and give the people of the Colony a chance to have a strong, stable and capable Government, a Government that will be able to handle our desperate conditions and which is so absolutely essential in the interests of Newfoundland—Newfoundland not merely as an independent unit within the Empire, but Newfoundland as an ancient and loyal Colony of the Empire.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the Address in Reply I wish to first express my regret over the passing of Sir Michael Cashin and Sir Robert Bond; both sad events occurred within the past year and both gentlemen were closely identified with this House for a quarter of a century. These great statesmen were very much admired by the people and we all deeply regret their passing because while they were alive they inspired the younger generation and helped in no small measure to keep the lamp burning in this country. I also regret the absence of Mr. Mott, the Clerk, from this House through illness and I hope to see him back in his old seat before this House closes because he was a very genial and courteous official.

I have to congratulate my friend Mr. Chambers and the district of Burgeo and LaPoile upon his victory. Mr. Chambers was successful after a hard fight and I feel sure that he feels elated upon coming back to this House as Minister of Public Works. I must also congratulate Dr. Mosdell upon winning the election of Fortune Bay against overwhelming odds. In the last general election in Fortune Bay Mr. Warren (now Judge) won a marvellous victory there. Therefore, Dr. Mosdell must feel proud over the wonderful turnover that he made as an Opposition candidate. Last but by no means not the very least I must heartily congratulate Mr. Brophy who won the district of St. John's East in the recent Bye-Election against heavy odds. I understand the Government candidate in 1924 had a majority of 2500 votes and Mr. Brophy, the Liberal candidate won by 500 votes. In other words Mr. Brophy's actual majority over the Government candidate in the Bye-Election was 3000 votes. Therefore, the Government has lost the confidence of the people of St. John's East and Fortune Bay and I think that these districts speak for the whole of this country at the present time. As I know it that is the way the people in the outports are viewing matters just now. I regret Mr. Warren's retirement from public life. He represented the district next to my own and he was a great friend of mine. There was no political enmity between us and were he here this afternoon I suppose he would be termed by the Government members as another faction in the Opposition. I see in the ranks of the Government this afternoon Hon. Mr. Duff, who left the ranks of the Opposition within the past year and joined the Government forces. I think, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Duff's action is unprecedented in the history of this country, in that he left the ranks of the Opposition and went with the ranks of the Government in power and the country wonders why. Was it for an executive seat and the pay he is receiving on the pension board? Mr. Duff did not leave while the House was in session but waited until the House closed. (Enough said).

Mr. Speaker, before I drew your attention to the fact that there was no quorum in the House I was remarking that I thought the action of My friend Mr. Duff for Carbonear was unprecedented in the history of the colony. I have only been a member for the past three years and I cannot of course make this as a definite statement Mr. Duff did not have the courage of his convictions to leave his party while the House was in session and took the opportunity to go over to the Government ranks when it was on the rocks. That as I said I think is unprecedented and I am afraid will look to the people of this country as rather a cowardly action. The members have just had to be called in to make up a quorum and it appears that they are getting tired of sitting here. Well we don't blame them. I myself would rather be at home attending to my business than down here at a session in the month of May. I think that unfair and that we are not being given the square deal that we were promised in 1924 and that we should not be here but back attending to the fisheries and trying to do something for the good of the country. That was one of the promises you made the country Mr. Prime Minister that you would have early sessions and it has not been carried out. You, sir, have offered various reasons for not doing this, one I understand is that the Gander proposition is not ready. If that be so it may be a very good reason but in my humble opinion I do not think that a sufficient reason for the delay in opening this House until the 11th of May in any year. Another reason I understand why this House was not open was that the Hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries decided to go to the seal fishery, and when he decided to go the Government said that they couldn't open the House. That I understand is past history and considering the depletion in your ranks they decided to postpone the Legislature until the Minister should arrive. Another reason I understand is that the question of St. John's East District had not been attended to and the Bye-Election had to be held. For what reason I know not except the opinion of the public, but that went against you and now you stand with nineteen, eighteen on the floors of the House, When you came back to office in 1924 you had twenty-five. You said that in your present position you could not give us any drastic legislation as you thought was required. I think we should have had drastic legislation. I think we should have had it in 1924. I think if you had drastic legislation then you would be in the House with as large a majority as you were at that time, but you decided against drastic legislation, and now you come before us and say that you are unable to pass legislation because of the depletion in your ranks.

I was also going to congratulate the Hon. Minister of Justice, Mr. Higgins, on the victory of Newfoundland on the Labrador Boundary Question. I want to congratulate him in his absence and also any other person who took part in the settlement of that great question. I think that we have won a very valuable asset, and the question arises in my mind, what shall or can we do with that asset. We are a small country, some forty-two thousand square miles, and have now tacked on to us some one hundred and ten thousand more, an area of about two and a half times as large as our island. The question arises what are we going to do with this property? Are we going to give this hard won property away to speculators, or are we going to develop it? The question is, can we develop it? Have we financial status to start it wherely we can develop this undefined, unknown and undeveloped property, or are we going to sell it? I am perhaps not very visionary or far-seeing, like many others, but it seems to me that if we sold the Labrador and tried to reduce our national debt we should have less interest to pay, taxation could be reduced, and our people could be allowed to live. At the present time the fishermen of our country cannot live. It is absolutely imposisble for the fishermen to get the necessities of life with the taxation with which they are burdened. The Labrador should be saved from grafters and politicians. I don't say that as a reflection on the present Government. We have such grafters and speculators who are not in the ranks of the Government or in those of the Opposition, who are outside of the House altogether. I say, what is to be done with this property which has come to us? I notice from the Speech from the Throne that a Bill is to be brought in whereby land will not be given away to speculators and politicians, but at the same time I understand from persons acquainted with the machinery from the Department of Agriculture and Mines that considerable of this land is now alreeady given away. I think this requires the most careful consideration in order that it may be seen whether this property which now belongs to Newfoundland is in reality given away, and if it is given away, is it then rightfully theirs, or in dispute. I think this Colony should go into that matter very carefully, and not give away something which would be of great benefit to us and to future generations. We have the future to consider. We have to consider and we should be very careful that we have Labrador for Newfoundland and that all of us have the benefit. We have the future of Newfoundland and incidentally that of Labrador placed in our hands, and as I said before, we should be very careful and not give away this land to hungry speculators and politicians. We have already given away too much of our little Colony of Newfoundland. I understand to-day that there is scarcely a stick of wood inside the three mile limit that doesn't belong to some one. Unfortunately some of us are not lucky enough to be in a position to grab some of that property. Our interests are taken up with the fisheries of the country. With a debt facing us of seventy millions and a deficit of a million and a half dollars, as stated by the Prime Minister on opening day, and a deficit on the railway of seven hundred and fifty thousand, to make a grand total of two and a quarter millions, I state that we must be very careful with the Labrador. That is a bad financial state in this country, I say. The Prime Minister told us he was going to clean up, but I am afraid instead of cleaning up he has cleaned out, and now in order to pay the current expenses of this Colony we have to borrow. That, I say, is a sad state of affairs, and what the end will be I am not going to forecast. I leave that to greater financial minds than mine; but I am afraid that it is a sorry state of affairs when we can't make two ends meet. Passing on in the Speech from the Throne I see that the codfish industry suffered considerably. That is not any news. The codfishery as always said by all politicians to the people of this country has been the main industry of this Colony, and it is given in this Speech from the Throne but four small paragraphs. I wonder what we have done for the codfishery of this country. I wonder what the present administration has done. Mr. Monroe told us in his Manifesto of 1924 that it would ever be the mainstay of the Colony. With that we agree. Every one agrees that the fishery of the country will ever be its mainstay. He goes on to say that everything that can minister to the prosperity of the fishermen will be undertaken.

Now I would like to know what the Prime Minister has done for the fisheries of this Colony. One thing I know he did was that a duty was placed on lines and twines after being, I understand, 27 years on the free list. If that is working for the encouragement and in the interests of the fisheries then I would like to know what encouragement of the fisheries means. One thing I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that we spent two millions in a highroads policy, and that it took nearly every man in Conception Bay away from the fisheries. I take that from men who have lived in Conception Bay, and men who are still living there, and they can't get the gear now to start fishing. The Government may say that we have fish enough, but these men fished for years and always got enough to support their families for the winter. In my opinion the people who worked on the highroads spent as they earned, week by week, and when the highroads were closed in the fall of the year there was nothing for them to do but get the dole, for they had nothing left. This is a very sad state of affairs, and what the Government is going to do about it is difficult for me to say. Are you going to continue the highroads policy or not? I see from information tabled that $2,213,000 has been spent on highroads, and I should like to know where we are going to get the revenue to pay it. I may say that I do know—you are gonig to get it from the hands of the fishermen, and no other source, for I can't see where the tourist policy is going to pay for an expenditure of over two million dollars. Another thing is that the fishermen in Conception Bay, before the highroads policy started, had lines and twines and were able to carry on from year to year. They spent two years on the highroads and have nothing to show but a pick and shovel, and nothing to pay for their supplies with. I understand they are leaving the country by the hundreds, particularly young men, to seek a livelihood in foreign countries. It is indeed a sad state of affairs when the young blood has to leave in that way, for when the young blood goes, a large majority stay away and don't come lack. Where are we and whither tending? Are we going to depend on the old men and women for our fisheries? No, we have reached the cross roads and unless something is done whereby the fisheries are assisted in some material way I think we are doomed. During the past winter on the West Coast, Mr. Speaker—and I speak with some authority, coming from there — there was something like $100,000.00 worth of halibut caught at Port aux Basques and Rose Blanche, to say nothing of codfish, which no doubt is at least equal numercially. Now I would like to know some small thing the Government has done to assist these men whereby their profits or the lives of these men have been safeguarded. We say we don't want more codfish, but here is a market whereby the fishermen of Rose Blanche and Port aux Basques could fish for halibut and get as high as 14 cents per pound brought in. I think that is a great fishery and one that ought to be encouraged, and I understand that an American came down here and showed us where we could make a profit on it. A hundred thousand dollars is not to be sneered at by the fishermen of Port aux Basques and Rose Blanche.

MR. CHAMBERS—It was more like $150,000.00.

MR. LAKE—I am glad to hear it. I speak from figures rece.ved from the Bank Manager at Channel, and I am modest with my figures. But what I was going to remark for the benefit of Mr. Chambers, and in his hearing, since he was out of the House when I spoke of it before, I congratulate him on his great election in Burgeo and LaPoile. It to my mind was not altogether due to the Government but to his own efforts and his personality and the satisfaction which he has given his district. I give the Government no credit, and I don't think they are entitled to any—another man would have gone down to ignominous defeat as did the Government candidates in Fortune and St. John's East. I say that with all respect, and congratulate him.

One thing I want to bring to the attention of the Government and this House is this—I would like to know what the Government has done to try to encourage the fishery on the South West Coast. During the winter of 1924-25 some sixteen lievs were lost there, and during 1926-27 another five, and almost twenty-five more. I ask what has this Government done to try to save the lives of these men? You have in St. John's all the winter a steamer called the "Daisy," which is lying up, and I understand with a paid captain, and I suppose an engineer and partial staff. Why could she not be sent to the South West Coast during the winter months, so that men can carry on their work more safely and profitably. Any one who knows anything about that fishery knows that the fisherman gets up in the morning and looks at the sky, which is all he needs to tell the sort of day it is likely to be. But weather is very treacherous, and these men leave without hope of getting back in case of a storm. How much anxiety of wives and families could be relieved if the "Daisy" were placed in Port aux Basques, and it wouldn't cost a copepr more than it does now—there are always plenty of volunteers to go if required. No, sir, nothing is done for the fishermen, not even to save the lives of the men who go down to the sea in ships. These are the men who are the life blood of the country, the men to whom you will look for the wherewithal to pay for the highroads and dock.

You have nothing else with which to pay it. And what do they get out of it? I will ask the hon. member for Burgeo & LaPoile how many miles of highroads he has in his district. I will venture to say there is not one all over Fortune District—there was a short piece of road made in Burin last fall These are the people who produce the wealth of this Colony. I take from statistics furnished the following figures: 70,000 quintals of fish last year in Burgeo; Burin, 182,000; Placentia and St. Mary's, 145,000; Fortune Bay, 91,000, and Ferryland, 74,000—562,000 quintals from St. John's to Port aux Basques; over half of the total ctach. These figures have been provided by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries last year. We haven't got a mile of road, with the exception of three or four built by Hon. Mr. Long around Burin, fit to drive a motor car on. It is true that this administration has built several bridges, and I take the credit of that to myself, for making certain statements about these last year, with which everyone who saw them will agree, including the Colonial Secretary who saw them. And one fell down last week, so that the people refuse to bring the doctor and minister back and forth over it. I made the statement that I would hold the Government responsible for any calamity taking place in Grand Bank should the bridge not be built, and I think the Colonial Secretary will agree with me that I wasn't very far out when I made that statement.

That is one case that Hon. Mr. Bennett saw. He also saw what they had to put up with there in the way of getting their vessels in from sea and out to sea. I have made an appeal to the Government about a pier in Fortune which is gone, washed away by a storm over a year ago. I understand that a member of the Government told a gentleman from the town of Fortune a little while ago that if Lake had not left the Government he would have had his pier. All I can say is that I must have been of some value to the Government, and I think also that I have been of some value to the town of Fortune.

Now, sir, we shall have soon to give up fishing from the town of Fortune. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government of the day, or whatever Government happens to be in power during the fall of this year, will see to it that some steamer such as the "Daisy" plies between there and Rose Blanche during the winter months. I would ask the Government to see that the fishermen up there have their lives protected in some small way. As you know, when these men know that they have a steamer watching over them they will be able to prosecute the fishery more efficiently. Most people have no idea of the hardsh ps that these men have to undergo who prosecute the fishery up there in the winter time. I am speaking from personal knowledge, as I have had some experience up there myself. I think that Mr. Chambers told me that during the month of April 20,000 quintals were caught there this year.

MR. CHAMBERS—16,000.

MR. LAKE—That would be worth $100,000.00, to say nothing about the halibut which is taken away for export elsewhere. One of our vessels caught 700 quintals, which is not included in Mr. Chambers' estimate. That same vessel caught $400.00 worth of halibut in one week. I think that this country has a gold mine on the West Coast in the shape of the fishery. We have Buchan's Mine, it is true, and no doubt before very long we will have a Bill brought before us from those interested in that mine, asking us to grant them free entry for many things in connection with that mine. But I know that there are not many free entries for the people of this country. The only free entry that we did have was lines and twines and you put duty on them and make it harder for the people to live.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — You know that lines and twines are cheaper this year.

MR. LAKE—That is due to the fact which has been stated in the Speech from the Throne, and that is the low price of cotton. I may not be as learned as the hon. gentleman who has spoken, but I do know what I am talking about when it comes to catching codfish. I do not profess to know about everything in this country, but I do know that you have lost the confidence of the electorate of St. John's East and Fortune Bay, and you have also lost the confidence of the country in general, as you will find out when you go to the country in the next General Election.

What have you as a Government done for the fisheries of this country? It is very hard to see anything that you have done for the fisheries. When I state here that a vessel which fish could not pay its bills, I know what I am talking about. I believe that the Prime Minister knows that also, though I don't think that he has any connection with it this year, not directly at any rate. He did not prosecute it as an industry because he could not make it pay. Neither can we, except by hard work day in and day out.

In a few days a Bill will be brought in this House in connection with the Humber and Buchan's Mine. But what are you doing for the fisheries of this country? I don't think, sir, that it is fair to come in here and put the duty on lines and twines and remove the income and other taxes from the rich, who should be paying their share. I don't think that it is a square deal. I think that it is anything but a square deal.

It would be well for the Prime Minister and his associates to go and visit some of the outlying districts of this country. Go to Burin. Go back to Fortune Bay and to Burgeo. I won't say anything about the other districts, because I don't know anything about them. But in those districts you will see poorly clad children, almost naked, trying to get to school in the winter time. I wonder would his heart be untouched and whether he would continue to put duties on the necessities of life in order to pay the interest on monies borrowed for highroads on which these people never expect to ride. These are the underdogs who have to pay the upkeep of this country. Only a few minutes ago there were some figures passed down to me here from the Minister of Justice's Department, wherein party lawyers have received $44,613. Who pays the party lawyers, I wonder? The poor as well as the rich. They have to go barefooted, almost naked, with but a scanty education. I have nothing to say against the educational system. No doubt the people in charge of education are trying to do their best. But the people that live in the bays and cannot get an education, these people are the underdogs of the country—slaves you may call them.

The Prime Minister and his associates did not forget to take off the Income Tax. There is no income tax taken off the poor fisherman of this country, who have to haul cod from the water in order that we may get the revenue to pay the interest on the money borrowed for the building of the highroads and the dock. I was going to say something about the hotel, only the Prime Minister has said that we have not had to pay anything on that yet, with the emphasis on the yet, because the day will come when we will have to pay it.

It is not the fishermen but the fishermen's wives that you have to do with now. It wasn't the men of Fortune Bay and the men of St. John's East who licked the Government representatives. It was what they didn't count on. It was the women's silent vote. They are the ones who are going to decide who the future legislators will be, the persons to whom you gave the bottle a day. Perhaps I don't know what I am talking about, but I know what I am talking about now, as you will find out at the next General Election, whenever that may be.

I trust that whatever I may have done by my speech this afternoon, I trust that if nothing else I have done some good if in any measure I induce you to send a steamer to the West Coast of Newfoundland to protect fishermen at sea. Compare protection given our fishermen and the protection Nova Scotia gives to its fishermen, and the Frenchmen. The Nova Scotians have a steamer on the Banks all the year round. The French have a hospital ship, and if one of our men gets sick they are only too glad to minister to them also. But what have you? You have absolutely nothing. And if someone wants to send a man to the hospital, "there isn't room, the hospital is full". That is the answer I have received since I was a member of the Monroe administration. I have told some to send their men along, anyway, and I'd try to get them in if I had to carry them on my back; and I almost had to do that. It is the fishermen who suffer. I trust that the Government will see its way clear to put a ship, whether small or large, in the vicinity of the fishing grounds on the South West Coast during the winter and spring months. Do something to assist the fishermen and help them bring in more revenue, because if we don't get it from our fisheries I don't know where we are going to get it.

(Reads: "low price of fish")

What have you done to enhance the value of fish? You were going to do everything to help the fishermen. I would like to see what you are going to do.

(Reads from Manifesto of Mr. Monroe)

I would like to know what the Prime Minister thinks of that deep down in his heart. If he would state it to me I would believe his statement, but I am afraid his conscience troubles him too much with regard to that statement. The fisheries of this country are, as he said, its main industry, and what are we doing about them? I claim that we are doing absolutely nothing. The fisheries have been neglected and we are devoting time to highroads, docks, and hotels, and what are the fisheries of the country going to benefit by these. I say that they will benefit nothing. The fishermen will have to produce whereby we will procure revenue to pay interest on that debt of highroads, and now we are faced with two and a quarter million dollars of a deficit. That is a bad state of affairs, a very bad state, and now the Prime Minister says in the Speech from the Throne that with a view to avoiding a possible future deficit we will be asked to re-enact the Income Tax Act, repealed in 1924. It never should have been taken off ,and I was very much opposed to it and I am still opposed to its being taken off. I think any man with an income over three thousand dollars should pay. I would be very pleased if I had to pay. I was so fortunate as to have an income that brought me under the Income tax once and I was very pleased to pay.

(Reads from Report of Assessor's Dept.)

Why shouldn't a man pay income tax who is getting six to eight thousand a year? If a fisherman had made six to eight hundred he would be tickled to pay out of it, but the average earning power of the fishermen last year was less than three hundred, and I say that without fear of contradiction. Some of the best fishermen of the country made about six hundred. I would like to know how these men are going to live and pay taxes as well. Why shouldn't a man pay income tax? I am sure that he should but the Government decided that it was not going to tax the rich but the poor. It put a duty on lines and twines and the poor man has to pay it. Is that consistent with the Manifesto of Prime Minister Monroe? It is not. I may not know what I am talking about, but I know that.

(Reads statement receipts Assessor's Dept.)

Just imagine, that amount, on incomes running from six thousand to one hundred thousand. That was removed; they didn't want to pay taxes, they wanted to buy Rolls-Royces and things of that kind; but the poor fisherman with a wife and family, who can't get bread and butter, who are glad to have bread without butter, these are the poor people, the poor underdogs that are to be put down and taxed while taxes are taken off the rich. If I told this House what the people of Burin told me about taxes it would be astounded, and I am talking of the educated people and not the uneducated classes, and I know what I am talking about, although the Prime Minister had the audacity to tell me I didn't know what I was talking about. I have made no statements here, excepting possibly what I offered subject to correction, that was not true. The Prime Minister went back on every promise made in his Manifesto and expects us to come in here and swallow it. I swallowed it for two years until I got out. I did get out and I have no regrets. I say this country is in a bad state when the Government will stand for taxes being taken off the rich and placed on the backs of the poor. That is a very bad state of affairs. You not only took off the income tax but a portion of the bank tax. Bank stocks cost 300 per cent. but the tax must be taken off them, and poor women and children without clothes to wear, it is those who must be taxed.

On motion the debate was adjourned until to-mororw.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that this House at its rising do adjourn until to-morow, Friday, May 20th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 20th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Dr. Mosdell, from Belleoram, redredging.

Dr. Mosdell, from Hermitage, redredging.

The Hon. Minister of Finance tabled the Report of the Board of Liquor Control for the year ended January 31st, 1927.

The Hon. the Prime Minister tabled the Report of Operations of the Newfoundland Railway for the year ending June 30th, 1926.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of Question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of Question.

Dr. Mosdell gave notice of Question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. LAKE—At the last sitting of this House I was trying to draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to this House and I failed to do so. I am pleased to see him now in his seat, as I don't want to say anything behind his back that I would not say to his face. I remarked in the course of debate that the absence of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries possibly had something to do with the delay in the opening of this House. Be that as it may I do not know, but I want to state what I said in his hearing. I also stated that the Government should see its way clear to put a boat such as the "Daisy" on the West Coast to protect the lives of the fishermen over there at sea and relieve the anxiety of those on shore. I feel sure that Capt. Winsor will agree with me as to the soundness and necessity of this suggestion and I trust he will impress upon the Government the need of it and that they will see their way clear to putting the "Daisy" or some other ship over there. If it is done it will be money well spent.

I think, sir, that this would be money well spent. Frequently in the Fall of the year in stormy weather vessels are driven off and very often lives are lost, whereas if we had a ship like the "Daisy" it would help to save lives. A captain, engineer and fireman could be on board the ship the whole year round and it would be an easy matter to pick up a scrap crew in case of an emergency. I hope and trust that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in his wisdom will ask the Government for this concession on behalf of the fishermen of the South West Coast. This is a matter that is really worth while, particularly when we take into consideration that last year one hundred and eighty thousand quintals of fish were produced by the people of Burin. Not being a member of the Executive Government, I do not know just what influence Captain Winsor will have along these lines that I have suggested, but I trust that the Executive will not give a deaf ear to his request. Last year the "Daisy" was engaged on the S. W. Coast, but I do not think that she did anything of a tangible nature, and all last winter she has been laying up doing nothing. Captain Winsor made a trip to the South West Coast in the "Daisy" last summer for the purpose of locating a suitable site for a bait depot. I understand that last session of the House a bait depot was to be erected in Burin. So far the matter has dropped because I have not heard of Captain Winsor's report or what the Government is doing in the matter. I would like to ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what he has done with Dodding Light at Burin. The lighthouse there was burnt down last year and the light was replaced by a light which is no better than an ordinary lantern with which the people are absolutely disgusted.

Now I would like to ask also of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries what correspondence was received from the people of the town of Burin in that connection? This is a matter of great importance and a great many mariners are greatly interested in it. Another matter that Captain Winsor visited the South West Coast last year was to inspect Fortune pier and Fortune breakwater, which was washed away two winters ago. Nothing has been done with this breakwater except a little bulwark has been placed in front to keep the sea from washing it down. Now, Fortune breakwater is the protection for the town of Burin and at present it is in a dilapidated condition. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries inspected that breakwater and I understood was to give me a copy of a report of his finding, but so far I have not seen it. The Colonial Secretary on the visit to the S. W. Coast last year also had occasion to see the wretched condition of this breakwater, and I trust that he and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will see that something is done this year in the way of repairs to provide the people of Fortune with protection for their fishing and coasting veseels. It has been said by a certain gentleman of the Executive Council that if Lake had not left the Government that Fortune pier would have been attended to. I do not think in all sincerity that the Monroe Executive would be small enough to penalize the people of Fortune and hamper them in prosecuting their avocations because I happened to leave the Monroe administration.

Getting back to the matter of bait depots, I understood at last session of the House that Ferryland and the town of Bay Bulls were each to have a bait depot, but for some reason or other they have not been erected. At the same time we fought for a loan here last year. Out of that loan three hundred thousand dollars were spent but not one cent was spent on bait depots or not one cent was spent in any way to promote or encourage the fisheries. We also voted last year one million dollars for special public works and improvements around the Island. Of that amount, I notice by the public accounts, $775,910.14 has been spent. Out of the balance I trust that the Government will see its way clear to repair the breakwater at Fortune and also erect two bridges, one at Lamaline and another at Loires, as both bridges there now are falling down and in an impassable condition for pedestrian traffic. I am very pleased to see that seven thousand dollars were given for the construction of a concrete bridge at Grand Bank, and I must congratulate the Highroads Commission for the excellent work they have done there. The gentleman who went there in charge gave the people of Grand Bank every satisfaction. Regarding bait depots I trust the Government will have a couple of them erected along the South West Coast. Now, some time ago the people of the town of Grand Bank requested the Railway Commission to try and divert the route of the S.S. Portia to North Sydney in order that business people could have their freight brought along by the Government Railway boat. The Portia is supposed to be the S. W. Coast boat, but when some other part of the Island wants her she is taken off the route. I made a trip in the Sebastopol last December from St. John's enroute to Fortune, and I must say that the accommodation on that boat was a disgrace to the Railway Commission and the Railway Management. In the first place the captain was an old wornout man, a Customs official, who was forced aboard that boat. The ship was not as good as a cattle boat. Six people who had come out of hospital in St. John's were travelling second class. Two of them were in a dying condition during the passage, and one of them died on the lounge on which he slept on the ship ,and the other passed away when he reached Lamaline his destination. Whoever is responsible for this neglect ought to be ashamed of themselves. The people who travelled on that boat could not live properly on her and it certainly is a crying shame to have a ship of that sort loaded with passengers during the month of December. I was taken sick on her for absolute want of ventilation and I had to leave her at St. Lawrence and travel over fifty miles to reach my home.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the fish business is fast declining in this country and it is no wonder. I should like the Government to take into their consideration what other countries are doing in the marketing of their products. For instance, look at the way Canada looks after the marketing of their wheat. If we could get the fishermen, merchants and Government to co-operate in the handling of our fish I believe that the fishermen and the country would prosper; but the trouble is that the Government do not give any encouragement to the fisheries in any way, shape or form. I was told here last evening by the Prime Minister that I did not know what I was talking about; but there is one thing I do know that the duty was put on lines and twines to protect an industry already protected and an industry that the Prime Minister is closely identified with. The Bank fishery, Mr. Speaker, cannot survive owing to the low price of fish together with the high prices of articles such as lines and twines that are used in the outfitting of vessels. Owing to increased taxation and the high cost of living generally, fishermen and their families cannot live in this country. It is true that the Government took the duty off flour, pork, beef, kerosene, and gasoline but against that they took off the Income Tax and reduced the Bank Tax in order that large corporations and rich men can make big dividends. This is the kind of class legislation that is going on in the present administration, with the result that the working class of people and their dependents are half starved and half naked. Still we hear a lot of talk about honest Government. I fail to see Mr. Speaker, wherein the honesty lies. I admit that I was a member of the Monroe party who voted for the increased tariff. But why did I vote for it? Because I had to or get out. Eventually I saw my way clear to get out. I am not so blind as not to see that the Government to-day stands condemned in the eyes of the whole country and the only thing that is holding them together is that there are a number of parasites reaping the benefits financially or plucking the cherries off the tree which others are trying to grow. I think I have said almost enough about the codfishery and I trust that the Government will assit the fishermen on the South West coast by giving them a properly equipped steamboat. With regard to the sealfishery I do not propose to say much because I was never at that business. I leave that question to other gentlemen who are better acquainted with it than I am. The speech from the Throne also deals with the paper making industry and says that the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company has reached the large output capacity of four hundred and ten tons per day and that the Anglo-Nfld. Development Company has reached an output of three hundred tons per day. That is very encouraging and it sounds very nice and I trust that these companies will continue to manufacture seven hundred tons per day between them; but I understand that some of the machines at Corner Brook were laid up the past winter and I should like to ask the member for St. George's, who represents the N. P. & P. Company what was the cause. The Speech from the Throne also tells us about the visit of the Prime Minister and his associates to the Imperial Conference in London last October and November. We are hearing almost daily about a Crown Colony and getting three or four men from England to run us. Perhaps it may be a move in the right drection if we had a Crown Colony, although maybe if we asked for it the Home Government would tell us to mind our own business. I was very sorry to hear the Prime Minister state here the other day that we would have a deficit on current account for last year to the extent of $2,225,000.00 while the Speech from the Throne says that that deficit was largely due to the decreased price of cotton.

That is a very lame excuse for a Government and it looks as if the Government did not know what to put down to account for this large deficit. Now I do not think that the decrease in the price of cotton played such a part as the Government would have us believe in the big reduction in the revenue. As a business man, I do not think that the price of a shirt or any other cotton article is any different this year than it was last year. The Speech from the Throne also says, "The Government considers it would be wiser to await the movements of trade in this Colony before suggesting any drastic remedial measure." On the opening of this session the Prime Minister stated he was not in a position owing to the depletion in his ranks to bring in any drastic legislation this year. I trust he will see the wisdom of his remarks and that he will see that we shall all go back to our districts in a General Election the coming Fall.

People who know anything about the Railway are convinced that in 1926-27 it ought to have been operated for less than in 1925-26—there was very little snow shovelling the past winter. I know personally in 1925-26 that I spent about seven days on the Topsais—they must have had to spend thousands of dollars to clear that storm, and I say that during the past winter the railway should have been operated more cheaply. I do not propose to deal at length with the financial conditions of the country—there are people here who know more about that than I, and I shall leave it to them to thrash it out.

The next on the programme, and I suppose I can call the Speech from the Throne a programme, says

(Reads)

That is a pleasant thing to know. This Act is on a line with the Bank Tax—I suppose they don't intend to increase that, as the stock is only about 300 per cent. above par, and they are quite satisfied with their dividends. But the income tax will be put on again, because the burden of that falls upon the laboring man and the fisherman. The Income Tax should have never been repealed but it should have been left on the books, and it should have been properly enforced by the Assessor's Department, and I trust that in the future they will see that it is carried out to its fullest extent, and no one whether he be a farmer or a fisherman be able to get clear, and that politics will not be allowed to play a part as it did in the past.

I see there is nothing in the Speech as regards the Highroads. I suppose the Government of the day thinks it has spent enough on that. Some $2,213,000.00 has been spent on highroads around Conception Bay and I suppose the intention was that the tourists should pay, but the ones who will use them most are the sports and the high mucky-mucks of St. John's. I suppose I shouldn't be quite so hard on the people of St. John's because I come from the outports. I suppose it isn't quite safe with so many car owners around me. But the people have to pay that interest. A few days ago a question was asked here as to what was paid certain men for their work on the highroads. Now I understood when the Bill was being drafted that the Commission was working for nothing, and now in answer to a question of May 16th I see that Mr. Hall got $1400.00; Mr. Milley $1000.00; Mr. Baird $1000.00 and Mr. Bradshaw $1000.00—and I thought they were doing the work free. I guess that few people do work free here for the Government or anyone else. I understood quite clearly at the time how the money was to be spent, and I remember the Prime Minister at the opening of the mills at Corner Brook making the remark as to how patriotic these people were to be giving their work free. Now we see them taking this money. It is a crying shame and the quicker they are dumped the better. I don't know who had authority to give them the money but these people ought to be curbed. I don't see what Hall wants to get $1400.00 for the highroads for, when he gets about $5000.00 as Government Engineer. Isn't that enough for any man to live on?

The other three are merchants who I understood were giving their work for nothing and now they demand a thousand dollars each. No wonder the country is in such a state. No wonder there are so many children who can't get clothing or nourishment. I think that our affairs are rotten to the core. We come here and pass Estimates year after year. It would be interesting to the people to see the Public Accounts and to see the list of parasites sucking the country's blood—I am sorry I am not in a position to give any names. I have had the opportunity during the last few days to examine the Public Accounts and I would like for the people to see them. Talk about packing their bags and getting out. Everyone of them would do it and I must say now that I feel like doing it. The country is rotten to the core and nobody is doing anything for it. The quicker they leave the better it is for them—I say that in all sincerity and that a good deal of the rottenness is due to the Monroe Administration. And they expected a man to come into this House and vote as they told him. Last year we voted a loan of five million dollars, and I would like to know how it was spent. I only read a portion of the public accounts but the part I read was enough to sicken any honest man and fisherman—but not these parasites; I say that in all sincerity—they are living off the life blood of this country. The people have to provide the revenue and have to fill the Government chests for such as these. And the people are forced to the dole—I know that some getting it didn't deserve it but many of our people who couldn't earn enough at the fisheries had to take it, and the men working on the highroads spent all their money and there was nothing left for them. A great many of them have now left the country.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, it pleases the Prime Minister to leave the House while I am speaking. I don't care if he leaves or if he ever comes back but I know he won't come back after the next General Eelction.

The country can't stand present conditions. By figures I have they have paid lawyers $46,000.00 since January 1926. I suppose some of them do the work, but I notice that they are all on the Government side or friendly with it. With all due respect to my friend Mr. Bradley, and to the profession, I am glad I am not a lawyer. And these men on the Highroads Commission getting $1000.00 each and Mr. Hall $100.00 more. No wonder the country is starving—we can't help it. If the outports don't rise up sometime it will be a surprise to me—they will have to do it sometime. Another matter of great interest is the Dock. Now, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian expert was brought in and estimated the Dock would cost $1,086,000.00. It would be very interesting to know what it did cost—I understand Major Cashin has the figures, and they come something over two millions. It would also be interesting to know how much graft was given out on the Dock—I wouldn't be afraid to say it amounted to hundreds of thousands—the figures will never come out. What did the laborers of this country get? I suppose they got a few days work but there was not one man from Burin or Fortune working there, and I am glad to say only one from Burgeo and LaPoile either on the Dock or Highroads or Hotel. What did we get out of the Hotel? I know the gentlemen on the other side will say that we have not paid anything to it but that is only because the time is not ripe for the promoters to put the stock on the market—then we will pay and pay well. It is indeed a sad state of affairs. The fishermen and the laborers are the people who have to pay for the high mucky-mucks with their watered stock, who pay nothing but reap everything. Take the Imperial Tobacco Co., the Ropewalk and the Standard Manufacturing Co.—it is interesting to know how much they have watered their stock in the past few years. I know and I am almost ashamed to tell the people of my district what the Government has done for them. And tell them I will. I am glad I left the Monroe party. I have no regrets. I never have had any and I never will have any—and I know some gentlemen now on the other side who would be glad to find an excuse to come over, because they know they are not playing the game. They are a disgrace to the Colony and to the people who sent them there. Two millions of this country's money spent on highroads. It looks as if our only salvation is the Labrador, and I don't know whether the Hon. Minister of Justice was here last evening when I congratulated him on the result, because the Government members evidently didn't like what I was saying, and left one by one. With all due respect to my friends on the other side, I hope I have created no enemies since I left it, but I am afraid I shall before I am through. I congratulate my hon friend Mr. Higgins—I know he has worked hard. He is one of what he terms "necessary evils"—the lawyers like the undertakers. I suppose we have to get down to the humorous side of things sometimes.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I don't want to interrupt the hon. member but I just want to say that I had a message from Fortune that an aeroplane passed there at 3.30 p.m. flying fairly high.

MR. LAKE—May she come and clean up this House and take us to a fairer clime; it would be the best thing that has happened the country, without exception. Some of the people asked me some questions as to how public money was spent, and asked how it was that the Public Debt has always managed to rise. I have a statement showing the rise since 1901 (Reads). And now, Mr. Speaker, it was increased last year by five million and stands at nearly seventy-three millions, the interest amounting to nearly four millions—I ask how are we going to exist? Do the gentlemen who passed the highroads policy think we are going to pay our debt by that, or that the beautiful Hotel is going to pay the interest on the two millions? Do they think that the lame ducks from the Atlantic are going to pay the interest on a Dock which cost over two millions? I don't think that for one moment we can ever expect it to pay for itself. We must pay our interest out of capital account, and that is a very sad state of affairs. Borrowing money year after year to pay our debts. And we are $2,250,000.-000 short this year, and the price of fish $5.00 a quintal and that of fat less than last year. We can't expect to improve until we are prepared to take drastic steps, until we are prepared to take up the question of reduced expenditure and taxation. I saw somewhere in the Speech from the Throne, or I think it was the Monroe Manifesto this (Reads) We all know of the re-arrangement when he taxed everything possible, even lines and twines, so that the Ropewalk could pay big dividends. I don't want to say much about the Ropewalk, but I am sorry the Prime Minister answered me in such a fashion yesterday, when he said I didn't know what I was talking about. I will bow to the authority of the Speaker, but I don't want anyone else to challenge my statements on the floors of this House, except in a jovial way, and I am not going to stand for it. I can be humorous and I can be bad and I feel badly about the remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday. I say that for one who is supposed to be the most honest kind of a politician, that to put a tax on lines and twines, and put the stock dividends of the Ropewalk up to 100 per cent. and make the stock worth almost three times its former value, does not look honest in his convictions. He is nothing but honest and comes here and tells us that conditions are bad and that the Customs require re-arrangement. We know the kind of re-arrangement it needs, and it is not the kind the Prime Minister used. And that is his idea of re-arranging the tariff, to put a duty on lines, twines and tobacco. We know that the Prime Minister is one of the largest shareholders in both industries—in both the Imperial Tobacco Co. and the Colonial Cordage Co. I would like to know Mr. Speaker, and it would be very interesting for this Colony to-day and the producers in this Colony to-day to know how many unearned salaries are being paid in this country. In this morning's public news I read a statement here which must be very interesting to the taxpayers of this country. There are a number of outports which collect no revenue whatever and still they have officials there drawing salaries. I certainly don't think that the Prime Minister has not got courage enough to advise his Government as to the uselessness of having those offices kept open. What are they there for? It would be better to pension them or to remove them off the map entirely. They have to burn hard coal and soft coal, and they have nice easy chairs to sit down in, in order to go on duty from nine to five. For what? To draw down nothing. Here is the list of what appeared in this morning's paper: St. Anthony $297; collected in 1925-26; Renews $295; St. Mary's $263; Holyrood $233; Conception Hr. $231; Cape Broyle $29; in 1924-25; and $73 in 1925-26, and two customs officials in Cape Broyle are paid the total sum of $2000 a year, and Flat Islands, Glenwood, Isle au Mort, Kelligrews, LaScie, Lord's Cove and Lories, and these offices collected nothing at all. Yet each of these officials was paid salaries ranging from $665 to $146. For what? I suppose (as Mr. Woodford said, "for protection and detective work.')' I have remommended to the Government Mr. Speaker, to remove one and all of those officials whether they may be in my district or not.

The Prime Minister has stated in his Manifesto that there are too many unearned salaries being paid in this country, what has he done about reducing these unearned salaries? I venture to say that in every part of the Colony to-day, and in the city of St. John's itself there are more employed, nominally, then there were when the Monroe administration came into power, and still the Monroe administration comes in and tells us that there are too many unearned salaries being paid in this country and that they were going to reduce them. "Rigid retrenchment and the utmost economy" I have yet to see one iota of retrenchment that was carried out in this Colony by the Monroe administration. There has been no economy whatever.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that there is a Norwegian whaling ship now on its way from Norway bound for the Labrador with a full equipment to carry on whaling. I wonder will that ship make any customs report. I don't suppose Mr. Minister that this is very much news to you. I know that the hon. gentlemen is not in the Executive Council and therefore he does not know everything that is going on, but I do think that they would give him necessary information. I also think that he should be in the Executive Council, because he represents the largest industry in the Colony. I understand that last year he was going to be put in the Executive Council, but a gentleman who sat on this side of the House was in some peculiar manner taken care of. I won't say that he was bought because that would be out of order. But everybody can think anything that they like. But I want to say right here now, that it would be very interesting for the people of this Colony and the people in general, to know exactly the conditions governing that whaling station that the Norweigans are so interested in, and the facts about that ship that is now on its way for the Labrador. I know that the Minister will be only too glad to give me the information when he gets it, but I doubt if he knows it now. Nobody would be more glad to see him with a seat in the Executive Government than your humble servant. I think that when there was a vacancy in the Executive they should have given the Minister the seat, which on good authority I heard was promised to him. But Mr. Duff got it with a few littl things tacked on. I won't say that he was t ought but I can think what I like. That is the kind of pol.tics that we have to-day. When the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the man who should hold the first place in this Colony, is gone away on a holiday the Government appo:nts a memt er from the opposition ranks in his place and then they call that clean Government. "Clean up and keep clean." It is impossible to keep clean when you never tried to house clean.

What has this Government done for the fisheries of this country. I have all that I own in th s country, but I soon won't be able to give my family shoes to wear on their feet, they will have to go t arefoot to school because they won't have the necessaries to wear. And still this is the very Government that told us that they were going to give the fisheries a square dear. They have not even tried to give them a square deal. The Pr me Minister did not give a square deal to this country when he put the duty on lines and twines to protect the Colonial Cordage Company. And the Prime Minister told me yesterday that I did not know what I was talking about. I may not be as educated as other people, but I don't want the Prime Min ster or anyone else to tell me that I don't know what I am talking about when I am discussing the fisheries, that has been my life's work.

But I helped to bring the Monroe Government into power and I will help to put the Monroe Government out of power, and I hope to have the opportunity at an early date. This Government sir, is incapable of coping with the conditions of the country at the present time. They are absolutely incapable. But I will say this that I believe that the Prime Minister was sincere when he started out on his political campaign, though I will not say why I think that he fell down on the job. But he did fall down on the job and he knows it. He admits it. He stated on opening day that his ranks are so depleted that he cannot put through the drastic legislat:on that is necessary for the welfare of this Colony.

Now sir, it would be very interesting to know just why the legislature was held so late this season. I understand from somewhere, sir, that it was because some resolutions were to be drafted .n connection with the Gander deal, and that a bill was going to be put through for the development of the Gander. That is the reason why this House had to postpone this session until this late date. Now it seems to me that we are giving too much consideration to foreign companies in this country. If these concerns have not got their legislation ready why don't they have it ready. I don't see why we should have to wait on them. We are a fishing colony, first, last and all the time. I wonder if I or any concern in any other country went to the Prime M nister of that country to say that they wanted him to delay the opening of the House until they got certain business through, I wonder what answer they would get. I am afraid that they would be told to mind their own business.

"Several bills for the promotion of industr al development, etc." That is the next matter that is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. That Mr. Speaker, is a very important clause. But sir, the next paragraph is I think that most important of all. "Admission free of duty into the Colony for a period of twenty years, etc." I think that we have given away enough of this country and enough of free entries into this country of articles for those concerns who come in here to do business, for a period of twenty years. I think that we should give very careful consideration to the matter before putting a bill through this House that will admit free of duty whatever these concerns think ought to come in free of duty.

For it is one thing sure that they are not going to pay any more wages than they are compelled to pay. I say that, I don't care what industry comes to the country. We should go very carefully as to how we would frame those bills and pass them in this House. In saying that I am not talking alone. There are many people and people of intelligence who are now stating the same thing,—that we should be very careful as to how this bill is drafted and passed. Admission free for twenty years!

(Reads from Speech from Throne.)

I trust that the Government of the day will be very careful with this matter. I don't want to knock any industry, which is for the good of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. But I don't want to vote for anything that is for the foreigner absolutely. I am first, last, and all the time a Newfoundlander. I was born a Newfoundlander and I shall die a Newfoundlander.

(Reads from Speech from the Throne: "A Bill will also have to be introduced," etc.)

That is another very important business, Mr. Speaker. I think we were assured by the Minister of Justice, whether for himself or for the Government I don't know, that nobody admitted the possibility of the export of pulpwood.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I said that surely no one contemplates free export of pulpwood. As a matter of fact we have no knowledge whatever of what they are going to do.

MR. LAKE—I am very glad to hear that from the Honourable Minister of Justice and at the same time I am surprised to hear that he does not know anything about the nature of the bill .I understand we were told that is the reason why this House was delayed in opening until the 11th of May, because you weren't ready with the Gander proposition. As if the House and the people should wait on the Gander. We should be very careful how we handle situations in the future. We have had enough "Ganders" in the past. We haven't got much in the country now. It has been taken up by these, in the past I am afraid too, how things may be with the Labrador. I don't pretend to be a lawyer but at the same time as far as I can gleam from the information which I have received I have my doubts if any of those who have got grants on the Labrador have lived up to their agreements.

MR. SULLIVAN—They could not live up to them when it was not known if we owned Labrador.

MR. LAKE—That is the point. But wily politicians can very easily fix matters so that those interested may not be affected by their not living up to their agreements when it is the friends of those wily politicians who own grants on the Labrador. When Labrador is sold or whatever is done with it I am afraid that these will step forward and demand their rights or claims and I am afraid that a great deal of Labrador will be found to have been given away and I hope that the matter will be dealt with very carefully so that it be ascertained whether those people have any real rights on the Labrador by which Newfoundland may lose so much, especially in view of what I have remarked with regard to their living up to the agreements of their grants.

MR. SULLIVAN—As far as I am concerned they will get justice and that's all.

MR. LAKE—I trust that they will get justice and no more. I want to impress what I am stating indelibly upon this House and this country, that hungry speculators whoever they may be will be dealt with strictly and fairly and according to the best interests of this colony. But I have my doubts. I only wish that I had the gift to eloquently express to this House exactly what I feel about the Labrador from what I have gleaned within the past few months, but words fail me. I trust however that a word to the wise is sufficient and I trust that there are other gentlemen in the House who may handle the situation. I trust it will be handled wisely and well, but I have my doubts because there are hungry speculators and wealthy speculators in this colony and perhaps in this House and they have friends and these are anxious to benefit themselves. If handled properly, instead of losing Labrador to hungry speculators, it might be sold to pay off our national debt and then taxation might be reduced, so that our fishermen could live. I have heard it said that it is impossible for the fishermen to live to-day, and heard it from a business man on Water Street and I think he knew what he was talking about. It is to-day a very sad state of affairs, when that it stated.

It would be very interesting to know just how they are framing that Bill. I suppose they are watching the movements of this House to get its feeling. I understand that there are now in the colony a large number of men interested in the Gander, part of a large corporation, and I trust that the Government of the day has now its detectives out, as it has in Conception Bay, as quoted by the Minister of Posts, I suppose for smuggling business. I trust that the Government is detecting now to find out what is doing about the Gander proposition. I would not like to hinder that concern or any other, from benefiting this colony, so far as it is beneficial to Newfoundland, I am here to assist that or any corporation. But we know from the past what has been done about timber lands in this country. I don't know whether I own the place on which my house is built, so much has been given away, to hungry speculators. I was very glad to hear from Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Higgins that everything possible will be done to protect the rights of Newfoundland on Labrador. I think that it would be very unfortunate, and I think that the Minister of Justice would think it so and very disappointing to him since he has been so much interested, if he were to see or his children were to see, that what he had worked so hard for, and I say this in all sincerity to the minister of Justice, for I do believe he would be very sorry, I say what he had worked so hard for, Newfoundland's rights on the Labrador, were given away to hungry speculators and I trust that while he is Minister of Justice and even when not in his legal capacity, that he will use his best endeavours to see that Labrador is not made away with, so to speak, by hungry speculators and politicians and their friends. I know I have nothing on the Labrador or anywhere else except the land on which my house is built and I don't even know if I own that, I would not be surprised if that has been given away in the past.

(Reads from Speech from Throne.)

It doesn't mention any particular corporation. It says a corporation of the United States of America. When that Bill is submitted I trust that it will be in the best interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders for if it is not I shall oppose it to the best of my ability, as I will oppose anything that is not right. But at the same time I shall vote for any measure that I see fit so long as I have not got to vote for a Prime Minister or a Government who will say to me you will vote this way or will vote that way. Having forgotten it yesterday, I now beg to congratulate Mr. Cahill on the excellent effort he made on proposing the motion for an Address in Reply. It was a very bold effort but there was nothing in his speech whereby I should take off my hat to him. However, if there had been anything in the Speech from the Throne worth while I believe Mr. Cahill would have done better. The Speech from the Throne might be characterized as an apology on the part of the Government, except that it stated that we had acquired 110,000 square miles on the Labrador coast. We all knew that and we also knew that the codfishery suffered considerably through decreased prices . I would also like to congratulate Mr. Power, the seconder of the motion, as I think he did very well. I was hoping that the Speech from the Throne would give us some information as to the development of the paper-making industry on the Humber. I was sorry to hear that the N. P. and P. Company had a very poor year ,despite the fact that we are told in the Speech from the Throne that the company had reached a daily output of four hundred and ten tons daily, the cause being that some of the machines had been closed down. Now I want this country to know that unless the machines at Corner Brook are kept running continuously the quicker will this country be called upon to pay the interest on the ten million dollars which we have guaranteed on the Humber. I trust that when the Gander proposition is brought in here that we will not have any more interest charges to meet. The fishermen of this country have enough taxes to pay already on seventy-three millions of dollars and an extra tariff on lines and twines in order to increase the profits and dividends of the Colonial Cordage Company. I know my friend Mr .Cahill opposite would have done much better if he had a Speech upon which to base his remarks, for as it was he had practically nothing to build on . As the Leader of the Opposition said on the openig day, if there was a black border around this Speech from the Throne one would be inclined to consider it as the Government's obituary notice. Every year since the Monroe Government came into power they have been borrowing money and are going to borrow more this year. Still the Prime Minister of the day told this country in his Manifesto three years ago that he was going to enforce rigid retrenchment and the utmost economy. The Prime Minister in his Manifesto also bitterly assailed and criticized a previous administration for borrowing and referred to the members of that Government at satellites. Now I should like to tell this House and this country that the unbridled waste and extravagance of public moneys since June 1924 was chiefly due to the Prime Minister and his satellite, and the satellite's name I dare not mention here because he is not a member of this House and never can be a member, but we all know who he is too well. The Prime Minister talks a great deal about road-building under the Highroads scheme. Was there ever such a disgrace perpetrated upon the people of this country since we had Responsible Government as this Highroad building. Certain gentlemen, called the Highroads Commission, we are told were working without pay and to-day we have a statement tabled in this House showing that Mr. Hall, Chairman of that Commission, was paid last year $1,000.00, and $400.0- as Commissioner, and this same man is already paid over $5,000.00 a year from the coffers of this country and out of your pocket and mine, Mr Speak.er. I say this is a disgrace and a crying shame. Yet the Prime Minister talked so loudly about the wicket waste of the previous administration in his Manifesto. The hard part about it is that we, every member of the Monroe party in -1924 were supposed to preach that kind of stuff to the poor deluded innocents, who swallowed it all down, bait, hook and sinker. Mr. Speaker, I think it was a wicked waste for the Monroe Government to have ever come into being. We would not be called upon to pay the interest on seventy-three million dollars of a public debt to-day, if we had no Monroe administration in power. It would be very interesting to read what kind of a Manifesto the Prime Minister would write to-day. He did not frame the last one, in my opinion, although he might have written it. I do not think he could have sat down and deliberately write that stuff. He may be changed now, but I believe three years ago he had honest intentions; but he fell, and I do not want to say where or how he fell, to the great cost of the taxpayers of this country. I notice by a statement on my desk that the "Evening Telegram" received $5,457.00 for patronage from the Finance and Customs Department and Liquor Department since January, 1926. No wonder the "Evening Telegram" people would write stuff for the Government. I suppose it would be unparliamentary to say that paper and its management were bought, but I can form my own opinion and the people of this colony can do likewise as to whether the "Evening Telegram" was bought or not by the Government.

I do know that they received $5,457.00 from those directions, and how much more I am not prepared to say. Even the Daily News, and I am sorry Mr. Puddester is not here for this—those paragons of virtue—those men who would not take a drink or touch a bottle of liquor, take $256.85 from the Liquor Department. Talk about hypocrisy.

HON. THE SPEAKER—A member has no right to make satirical remarks in reference to other members of the House. You will kindly abstain from doing so.

MR. LAKE—I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. This paper which prints this advertising, of which Mr. Puddester happens to be a Director, received $256.85 from the Liquor Department. Now that is something for the people to put in their pipes and smoke. I thought the Daily News would sneer at the idea. I know some people whom they have spotted going into the Liquor Control Department, and still they take that sum from its coffers. Before their party came in power they denounced the liquor business for all they were worth. And the Monroe administration were going to cure the evils—as I told the people in my district, and I believed it, that the law was going to be enforced. And while I see something in this Manifesto about Prohibition, it was interpreted to me in the way the Monroe administration then intended, and I didn't see the difference.

(Reads)

I understand, according to my reading of the Monroe Manifesto that Prohibition was going to be enforced, and was convinced that it would be until the Liquor Act was brought in. In fact it was brought in during my absence from the House, so I didn't get a chance to vote. I went home, believing that it wasn't coming up. If I had been here I would have voted according to my conscience, and not cared what the Daily News or anyone else said. The Bill was brought in during the first session, and I understood it wasn't coming in. I would have opposed it, and that meant that I would have left the party two years before I did. And that is going to drive the Monroe administration from office—if not this year, the next, for there are only a few short months left, and one of the things to help in that will be the silent women's vote that they hadn't reckoned on and that did such work in St. John's East.

I was wishing to call the attention of the Hon. Minister of Posts and Telegraphs to the amount voted last year for building branch telegraph lines in this country—$100,000.00. I made the statement here last year, and made several such in the Monroe administration, that we needed some improvements greatly in Burin in the shape of a line from Garnish to Bay L'Argent. I explained the need to my hon. friend, and I believe that he was in accord with my wishes, but nothing has been done, and I trust that this year the Government will see its way clear, in the interests of the fishery of this country, and particularly of Burin district, which is a large producing district, and the revenue accruing will justify the expenditure. I have some figures here, but don't know whether I can locate them or not, which I received from the Postmaster at Grand Bank, as to the amount of revenue collected in Grand Bank last year, and I think something like $3,000.00 was paid in there for postage alone, to say nothing about telegrams; and I think it is due to that important town and district that the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs should do his best to see that this line is built from Garnish to Bay L'Argent. I should like to locate those figures for the benefit of my learned friend.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS—The important thing for you now is to vote us another hundred thousand this year to do that.

MR. LAKE—I should be pleased to do that, and you know that that line is greatly needed, and without it I don't know what they are going to do. I trust the Government will erect it and loop up the district—it has been recommended for years. I feel sure that the Government are not small enough to hold back from the important district of Burin, especially from Grand Bank, which produced 180,000 quintals of fish last year, anything of material advantage, simply because a very small chap like myself left the Monroe administration. . If they do they are smaller than I thought.

I simply mention these points, Mr. Speaker, because I have no other chance to air my views to the Government, except on the floors of the Assembly. I would like to suggest to this Government and to any other Government that the Executive when elected to power should take the yacht "Daisy" and make a trip north or south around the Island, coming back to St. John's again, within one month after their election, visiting the important towns, so that they would know to what they were voting the money. It would be a few weeks well spent, and the people would be very well pleased, and think that the Government is trying to do something in their interests—at the present time we vote money and don't know to what we are voting it. I am sure that the Colonial Secretary is convinced of my statement after his visit to Burin last year, whether that visit was official or not, and that he feels well repaid from the information and knowledge gained on that trip, which could not be gained in any other way. I believe it will have an everlasting effect as long as he is a member of this or any other Government, as he saw at first hand what the district is doing. I feel sure that to-day that hon. gentleman knows what Burin district needs in essentials, and that he is man enough to do it, even though I am in opposition. The hon. gentleman came to me when I was very busy, it was in the summer of 1926. I am very sorry that I could not give him more of my attention. He saw me with my jacket off trying to produce something so that I could pay the taxes in this country. The Colonial Secretary saw the conditions under which the people live night and day. He saw the pier in the town of Fortune in a dilapidated condition, having been washed down by the storm. He saw that the harbour needs dredging, and still when we come in here and ask the Government to give us enough money to build a pier we get very little response, and the people of the town of Fortune must suffer. I hope, sir, that while we are waiting for an election that the Government of the day will see its way clear to help the district of Burin in some small way.

The present administration, Mr. Speaker, came into power in 1924 with the Government 25 members and the Opposition 10 members. In March 1925 the ranks of the Government were depleted by one, that one being my hon. friend Major Cashin. In May 1926 five members left thte Government ranks, of which I happened to be one. In January 1926 an Opposition member was removed from this House, we know not how. In October of the same year an Opposition member was favoured by a seat in the Government ranks, in the person, of Mr. Duff of Carbonear. Mr. Duff did not leave the Opposition ranks and go over with the Government while this House was in session. As I told the gentleman yesterday that I thought it was what I would consider a cowardly act to leave the ranks of the Opposition and go over with the Government while the House was out of session. As I stated here this afternoon he went over to the other side for what reason I know not. But one thing I do know and that is that he received at the hands of the Government an executive seat which had been promised to my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. Then in November the Government sustained further losses when to their great surprise, though not a surprise to the outports of this country, they lost Fortune Bay in the by-election. In April this Government after beating about the bush for two years or more decided to open the district of St. John's East. What was the outcome? St. John's East registered once more against the Government in the person of my hon. friend Mr. Brophy. He was accorded a right royal welcome by the people of St. John's East, who had chosen him as their representative. Now, Mr. Speaker, from all this it is very evident that the people of this country have lost confidence in the Monroe administration, and the whole country is demanding that we have an election in the Fall of 1927. I am sure, sir, that a spring election would be detrimental to the interests of this country. And I want to state here and now, sir, that I told a gentleman in the Government ranks when he asked me the day I left the Government what I was going to do in the event of a want of confidence vote, I told him, sir, and the gentleman is present and can corroborate my statement, that I would vote for the Government as I did not want a spring election. I state that without fear of contradiction. Now, sir, it seems that we are going to be faced with a spring election next year. I do not profess to be up in constitutional law, but I do know that this House must automatically dissolve on July 1928, and this country will be without an Assembly unless there is a general election in the spring. I am convinced this year, as I was convinced last year, that this country does not want a general election in the spring. But, sir, I believe that the people of this country want an election in the fall, and I trust that the Monroe administration, and I believe that the Monroe administration will see that it will carry out the wishes of the people of this country.

This country, Mr. Speaker, is in such a condition at the present time that we should have stable Government, and that we have not. The Government has not a majority strong enough to carry out the drastic legislation that is necessary. As we have been told in the Speech from the Throne that there are several important bills for the promotion of important industries in this country, and the Government should be strong enough to carry them out. I say that, sir, in all sincerity. I do not wish, sir, to cast any reflection on the hon. gentlemen opposite me, but I do think, sir, that this Government is not strong enough to carry through those measures which the welfare of the country demands.

I feel sure that the members of the Government know that they have lost confidence in their own administration and that they would like to see this House close at the earliest opportunity. Personally I would like to get back home to my district and have the business of the country go on as usual, but I do not think we should allow any legislation to be put through here that is not in the best interests of the Colony. The Monroe Government have lost the confidence of the people, as shown in the by-elections in Fortune Bay and St. John's East, and having lost the confidence of the people, if they were manly they would go back to their districts the coming fall and have their constituents pass judgment on their actions for the past three years. This House automatically ceases to exist in July 1928, whilst a spring election in 1928, as has been previously pointed out, is a poor time to hold an election because the fishermen are at the fishery. Therefore, I say, if the Government had the courage of their convictions they would proclaim a general election for the fall of 1927 and have a stable Government elected, whoever they may be. I am prepared to take my chances. If I am defeated I shall be satisfied and probably relieved from the burdens of being an outport representative. I am glad to have the honour of representing in this House the district I was born in. The people of Burin district can decide as to whether or not I made a mistake by leaving the Monroe Government. I feel satisfied as to what their answer will be, because I told them I could not stay with a party which I had no confidence in, and I am sure there are gentlemen on the Government side of the House to-day holding the same view, as I heard them express their thoughts on many occasions. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that I have done my little bit on the motion before the chair, and I trust also that the Monroe Government will see that for the balance of their term tha t the country is treated fairly and squarely. Mr. Monroe in his Manifesto promised that he would clean up, keep clean and give a square deal to all. Mr. Monroe has not kept his word and he knows it. No doubt he found it very hard to clean up and keep clean. It was a difficult task for him and a task greater than he ever anticipated. When of their term that the country is 1924 he had the confidence of the people, and I believe that he intended to make an honest endeavour to make clean the public affairs of this country, but he has failed, through no fault of his own, perhaps. Go to any department in the civil service to-day and you will find all of them overcrowded with officials. The Prime Minister should have cleaned up and cleaned out the useless officials in these departments, and if he had done that and thereby given the fishermen and the working classes a chance to live in this country he would have had no depletion in the ranks of his party, and if he had cleaned up there would be no doubt at all about keeping clean; but when he did not keep his house clean at the start he found it a hard job afterwards, and now he has got it in a terrible mess and he knows it and realises it. I think it would be a square deal to everybody if the Prime Minister would grant a general election in the fall of 1927. The further off he puts this thing the worse off he will be. I believe that Mr. Monroe felt that he had lost the confidence not alone of this country but of his own party in 1926. I do not think he will deny that statement because I believe he is sick and tired of office, not through any cause brought about by himself, but because he was being used in many ways over which he had no control. He stated in his Manifesto that he was an ordinary plain man in public life. Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to be fair to any member on the other side of the House. I do not want to be unfriendly with any member in the Government ranks. I would like to bring under the notice of Mr. Browne, member for St. John's West, the fact that last year he promised to bring in here at this session of the House a new Compensation Act for the protection of woodsmen and labourers, and I trust that the matter has not escaped his mind, as I feel sure that he is quite capable of drafting a Bill such as would be suitable and in the best interests of the men concerned.

No doubt a Compensation Act for these people would be a good thing. I feel satisfied that there would be no objection here about giving Mr. Browne a little compensation too for drafting such a measure, and I presume he would not be lacking in accepting it either. Again, Mr. Speaker, I must repeat that I do feel that the Monroe Government have lost the confidence of the people of this country and the only way they can redeem thmselves is by giving the country a square deal and going back to the polls in the fall of 1927. In conclusion, I hope that the Prime Minister will wind up his political career by giving the people of this country a square deal.

On motion the debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Italian airman, De Pinedo has arrived in Trepassey and I have sent him a message of welcome and congratulation from the people of Newfoundland. I was going to move that this House adjourn until to-morrow, Wednesday, Tuesday being a whole holiday. I thought that some of the members might prefer to get home and might not like to come back until Wednesday. And a day or two won't matter very much, as it seems we shall be here all the summer. It is very evident that the Opposition has decided on a policy of obstruction. Some of the Opposition may find and it seems that they do find it a little difficult to fill up the time while they are on their feet. As far as obstructing goes we can stay here as long as they can, but if they imagine that the policy of obstruction is going to alter our opinion about an election in the fall, and that we are going to be stampeded into deciding to have an election in the fall as a result of their extreme measures, I want to tell them that they are entirely mistaken. We are resolved to stop here as long as it is necessary, to put through the legislation, in spite of the obstruction of the Opposition.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Speaker, I wish to take exception to what has been said by the Prime Minister. There has been no legislation brought before this House yet and therefore there can be no obstruction. Every member in this House, no matter on what side he may be, has the perfect right to speak as long as he likes in reference to any subject that may be brought up before this House, be it the Address in Reply or anything else. But I take exception to what the Prime Minister has said and I wish to contradict it. There has been no obstruction so far because there has not been any legislation brought in to this House, none whatever.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, in speaking to the motion to adjourn, as I have been one of the members of the Opposition who have spoken in this House so far, I want to say that I strongly resent the remarks made by the Leader of the Government. It is a perfect outrage for this House to be meeting at this time of the year and it is another outrage to be adjourning this House over until Wednesday. The Government is playing a scheme of delaying, whatever it may be for. But there is nothing to be gained by it. And you will have to put up with what the Opposition has to say uncomfortable though it may be for you. And if we don't speak now we will have no opportunity to speak otherwise. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries in retorting to the hon. member for Burin, said that if we can stay here others can stay here to. Well sir, why didn't you and your Government open this Legislature at the proper time so that you could remain here.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, as I am one of the members whom it has been inferred have held up the business of this House, and as I am one of the members who spoke for the greater part of two days on the Speech from the Throne, I want to take this occasion to resent the imputation of the Prime Minister that I am here simply for the purpose of obstructoin. If anyone is guilty of obstruction to-day it is the present administration. They have obstructed the meeting of this House for three months, and one cannot see any adequate reason for it except to suit their own purposes and convenience. They are obstructing the progress of the Colony to-day in that they are trying to hang on to office, in spite of the fact that, as they admit themselves, they are not able to control the situation, and not able to deal with the conditions in this Colony today. And then they have the audacity and the impudence to accuse this Opposition of being obstructionists. Sir, if we chose to stop here till the crack of doom, we would be no more than doing our duty to this Colony; we would at least be doing our best to rid this Colony of an administration that is not capable of handling its affairs. And yet we have to sit here and listen to insults thrown across this House by the Prime Minister himself. What the Prime Minister conceives to be the attitude of the Opposition is of very small moment to us. We intend to follow whatever course we may adopt, no matter what he may say about it. He has told us that he is prepared to stay here as long as we are. By that very admission he shows us that he intends to be a stumbling block in the path of progress, that it is his intention to hold on to office like grim death whether his administration is good bad or indifferent; whether he ought to resign or not; whether he ought to go back to the people of this country and answer for his deeds or not. Now sir, we intend to stay here as long as we choose, and I believe that ever member on this side of the House intends to do his duty by this Colony. I am sorry that the same cannot be said of the Prime Minister or his associates. Obstruction: after the Prime Minister announces in his manifesto that this House should be opened early in the year, in order that the public business should be disposed of at such a time that those whose duty it is to be here, and conducting the affairs of this Colony, could get away to their different vocations, we have the spectacle of this House being opened on the 11th day of May, when the fisheries of the Colony are already begun for the season. That is the sort of insult that we have to put up with here in this House. And it is an insult that reflects upon the people of this Colony. If the Prime Minister imagines that his position to-day, is justified I would like to inform him that only he and his immediate associates believe so. And I am satisfied that the people of this Colony today are behind the Opposition in its attitude. We are not trying to hang on to office; we are not trying to get into office; all that we want is that this country be given an opportunity to put into power a Government numerically strong enough to conduct the affairs of this country and to put through that legislation which the Prime Minister himself admits is necessary, and which he further admits his Government is too weak to enact. I trust sir, that we shall not hear any more of this. The obstruction, whatever it may be comes from the Government side of the House and not from the Opposition side.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I regret that I was absent from this House when the Prime Minister stated that the members on the Opposition side were merel yobstructionists. I want to tell the Prime Minister right here now that his Gov't is a disgrace to any self-governing Colony under the British flag. Your Government sir, has been smacked in the face by the people of this country. The members of a Government sir, are the servants of the people not their masters, and the people of this country have told this Government in strong and undeniable language that they don't want a continuation of the disgraceful conduct of this Government that has been going on in this country during the past three years. The present ministers of the Crown have prostituted their positions in every shape and form. I want to state that if the Prime Minister was a cabinet Minister in the British Government he would have been thrown from office inside of twenty four hours. Why? Because he is a Minister and at the same time indirectly accepting profits from the revenue of this country.

HON. THE SPEAKER—These statements are out of order. Confine yourself to the motion before the chair.

MR. CASHIN—I understand sir, that the Prime Minister has stated that the members of the Opposition in this House are obstructing the progress of the Government in this country. Now I want to tell the Prime Minister that I am a better Newfoundlander than he is, or than any member of the Government to-day, that I have done more for Newfoundland than any member in the Government to-day. And I defy the Prime Minister to come in here and accuse me or any member on this side of the House that we are obstructing the progress of this country. The people of this country want an election in the fall and I want to tell the Government that they are going to have an election in the fall, if that is any news to them. I say that every man in the Government to-day, is paid to stay there.

MR. BROWNE—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I want to say that I am one member on the Government side, that is not here because I am being paid for it. I want the member for Ferryland to withdraw that remark, or I will move that he be censured by this House.

HIS HONOR THE SPEAKER—I sustain the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's West. The remarks of the hon. member for Ferryland are most unparliamentary. He has been very intemperate in his language and quite offensive in the expressions he has used towards members of this House. Not alone is this so but he persists in his objectionable course and apparently thinks that he can defy with impunity the Ruling of the Chair. If necessary he will be made realise that the contrary is the case and that his deplorable conduct will not be tolerated under any circumstances. I therefore require him to immediately withdraw the statements he has made.

MR. CASHIN—What procedure is it necessary to take?

HON. THE SPEAKER—I do not intend to enter into any controversy with the hon. member for Ferryland. I make a specific ruling with which I direct him to comply at once. Have I to again impress upon him the fact that one of his duties as a member of this House is to conduct himself with decorum and decency in debate.

MR. CASHIN—I regret very much that I have been indecent. That is the first time I have been told that I acted indecently.

HON. THE SPEAKER—The hon. member will cease further argument and immediately carry out my direction.

MR. CASHIN—Very well, sir, I take back what I said.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. BROWN—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of making a few observations on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I would first like to congratulate the Minister of Public Works on coming from the Burgeo bye-election with victory perched upon his banner. Mr. Chambers won by a substantial majority because of his personal popularity in that district and because it was a bye-election; but if that had been a General Election the tables would have ben turned on him and he would have never came back victorious. I must also congratualte Dr. Mosdell on the splendid vote he polled last Fall in the bye-election in Fortune Bay and thus gained for himself a seat in this House; also I must heartily congratulate Mr. Brophy, the popular boy of to-day, who got such a tremendous vote in the recent bye-election in St. John's East. It was the biggest vote ever polled in any district in this country. All credit to this young man and I hope that he will have a brilliant career and that the electors of St. John's East will have good reason in the forthcoming General Election to again return Mr. Brophy to this House. When this House closed last year it stood 17 to 18, including the Speaker, in favor of the Government. At the present time the House stands: Government, 19; Opposition, 17. Since last session of the House the Government has been successful in landing one man from this side of the House. That episode did not occur on the floors of the House or while the House was in session; it was done between sessions. Mr. Duff criticized the present Government for three years in this House and then saw fit after the House closed last year to cross over and join forces with the Government. For what reason I do not know, but that is best knwn to himself. I know if I had left the Opposition ranks and joined up with the Government without giving my position I would feel ashamed to sit in the House to-day. I consider it was a very unmanly act on the part of Mr. Duff, and while Mr. Duff has the word honourable attached to his name, I think that his act was more dishonorable than honorable.

This is a late season of the year for this House to open. The month of May is no time for this Assembly to meet to transact business. When the Prime Minister came to this country as Leader of a Party in 1924 he promised in his manifesto early sessions of the Legislature, and that we have got an early sesion there is no mistake. Why was not the House opened before May 11th? Was it to allow Captain Winsor to go to the sealfishery? No, sir, rather was it because of the very fact that the Prime Minister and his party were afraid to open the House and were afraid they would not stand throughout the first day's sesion. Mr. Speaker, a big change has taken place since we last met in this House. The Prime Minister came back here in 1924 with twenty-five men and every time he rose from his seat to speak he was lauded by the gallery; but to-day the Prime Minister and his Party is damned by the people in the gallery. It shows how the tide has turned, and it shows how the Prime Minister and his colleagues have been turned down by the people of this country for failing to attempt to carry out what they had promised to do. I remember the summer of 1924 when we sat here. There was then twenty-five men on the Government side, ten members in Opposition and one Independent. When the Opposition members rose in their seats and criticized the Government their remarks went practically unheeded; but when the Prime Minister spoke he got a great ovation from the galleries, in fact he could get up and say almost what he liked, because he had come back fresh from the polls with twenty-five men in his Government, and everything looked rosy. One of the things that made the Monroe Government unpopular was that practically all the money that they borrowed was spent in the Southern Districts of this country. The Highroads went a long distance towards killing the Prime Minister and his Party. They spent two million dollars on Highroads within the past two years, and they spent it on Conception Bay only.

All the influential districts in the north of the country got nothing out of that money. Not only that but you were authorised to spend two million dollars on highroads but you went one better and spent two million two hundred and twelve thousand. Where did that money come from? At the same time we representatives of outport districts, districts in the North, couldn't get one hundred dollars to repair a bridge or put a bridge in a condition safe for traffic, safe for motor cars or teams or anything else. The Govenrment is not only unpopular in St. John's East, but it is unpopular all over the country, partcularly in the North, and were you, Mr. Prime Minister, and Captain Winsor to look for that same support in the North which you did get, you wouldn't get it to-day. I guess you know that, you hear it in letters from the district and on every hand. In Twillingate District since your party came into power we can't get money for anything. We can't get auy money beyond the grants. We can't get any special money. But money can be spent and wasted on highroads. Yet it is in the North that the country gets its revenue. If the men in the North all stayed away from the fishery where would you get your revenue. I wired and asked the Minister of Public Works some time ago to try and get a bridge at Botwood repaired so that motor cars could go over it without running any danger, and the answer came back that there was no money. At least thirty motor cars a day go over it. That is what happens and how the people in the North are treated. The people are not going to stand for this. I, for one, as a representative of the district of Twillingate, am not going to stand for it, even if it is going to end up in an open fight across the House. I mean by that just what I say. Talk about people being dissatisfied; the next thing we will see in this country is a revolution if the people are allowed to half starve as they are to-day. It is a disgrace the way things are handled by the Monroe Administration. You know it; you all know it. There is hardly a member on your side of the House who can say to-day, that he can go and bring back his district; hardly a man. Why is this so? Because you know you haven't done right by the people. St. John's East passed a vote of want of confidenc one month ago and that speaks for the whole country; the whole country says the same. Mr. Speaker, it is pretty hard for representatives on this side of the House, representing large and influential districts to be asking the Government and those in charge of Departments for money for local roads and bridges and not be able to get it, while we know that there are motor roads being built in the southern part of the country just for the benefit of those who can afford to buy a motor car and run over them. It is not good enough. Last year I went down in my district to a place called Round Harbour and it was in wet weather and a large rock rolled out of the cliff and cut off the water supply. It lodged right over the well where the people get the water supply. And we couldn't get one dollar to have that rock removed, in order to let the people get their water. We were told that there was no money left in the grant for the district. We knew that, but that was a case of emergency. I had to tell those men to go and remove the rock themselves and I would try and see if they could not get paid for it afterwards. We are still waiting for the money for that. You have been long enough handing out money for other districts, give ns some to spend in our own. The people of this country to-day want a change. The quicker they can get you out of power the better. If they had an opportunity to go to the polls to-day nothing would please them better. And you, Mr. Prime Minister, knowing that as you do and knowing that the whole country knows it, it is your place to go to the Governor and resign and say that you will give place to some other man, and have a dissolution and go to the country in the Fall and see what happens. But you won't do that. You will hang on to office as long as you can.

What reason you have for this I do not know but I have my own opinion. A great number of people in this country to-day are starving. You have half a thousand people in this city to-day starving and still you will not do anything to help them. They came to the bar of this House the other day to ask for something to be done and nothing is done. They are still in the same position. These people are decent citizens. They want work. They don't want to starve. And we don't want to see them starve. At least the members on this side of the House do not and I think there are some on the other side who do not. Why, then, is something not done for these people. A day of reckoning is coming, however, and you will know it when that day comes. You came to this country with a manifesto by which you promised to clean up and keep clean and give a square deal to all. You were going to give the labourers employment, you were going to have better wages, and make this country a Paradise, but as a speaker said here the other day you have made it a fisherman's hell. Practically everything is stopped; business is almost gone to the wall; everything is gone down. Why even the House of Assembly clock stopped and the hands dropped off a few days ago; everything is going to the bad in the country and that was a sign of the condition everything is in. But we wouldn't dare say that to you in 1924 or any of your party because you would say that we didn't know what we were talking about. You came into power and sat in your places and the first thing you did was to clean out the coastal boats. You cleaned men out of the coastal boats, men who had been there for twenty years, and found to be good men and experienced. Let us take the Prospero first. You removed two officers on that boat who had been there for twenty years; Saunders and Peckford. What did you have against these men that you had to clean them out? What did they do? Did they try to keep you from being elected in Bonavista? No. These men didn't talk politics. No, but somebody else wanted a job and you and Captain Winsor had to make a job for them. Then you went a step further and cleaned out the Malakoff. For instance you went and took Captain George Howlett, the Chief Officer, out of it. He is a man who has several years with the Ethie and one of the finest men the country could produce for the job on that service. He had to go and another man be put in his place who was a heeler of the Monroe party. Then you took out Mr. Way. I heard there was something against Way about his talking politics. But what did he do? You put a rabbit catcher then in his place; a man who came right out of the woods up in Bonavista Bay. That is a nice way to start to do things. Revenge. But don't worry the tables will be turned. The man who supports the Opposition in Bonavista Bay has no more chance than a snowball, you know where I mean. But the man who supports Captain Winsor or Mr. Monroe is good enough. If he wants to go to work or if he wants to go anywhere he gets a pass and he is alright. Down in Bonavista Bay the sum of eleven thousand dollars was given out in able bodied poor relief last Fall. That was on the North side of Bonavista Bay. Is there no man on the South Side of Bonavista Bay who needs relief? And some of the men didn't need it. But some had to half starve because some can get it from Captain Winsor. The sum of ten thousand eight hundred and odd dollars was given out on able bodied relief on the North Side of Bonavista Bay last fall while on the South Side where it was far more needed they got nothing and had to live through the winter and do the best they could. I say to Captain Winsor that he took advantage of his position as a Minister of the Government to help himself politically.

HON. THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point or order; I object to the statement just made.

HON. THE SPEAKER—The Hon. Member for Twillingate is out of order. I request that he address his remarks to the chair and avoid personalities.

MR. BROWN—I would not wish to insult anybody, but what I say is correct because these men got money.

HON. THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES—I rise to a point of order. Mr. Brown stated that I used my office. What I did I was ordered to do by the Executive Government of the colony. It is also an untruth to say that I spent eleven thousand dollars. I didn't spent five thousand and what was spent afterwards was spent under the authority of the Executive Government by relieving officers.

MR. BROWN—I want to ask Captain Winsor if he didn't ask the Executive Government if he could spend that amount of money.

HON. THE SPEAKER—I want to draw the attention of the honourable members to the fact that this is merely an exchange of personalities. Comments of that character are out of order. If the honourable member wishes to discuss the matter of relief expenditure he may bring it up when Supply is before the House.

MR. BROWN—I submit to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. Is it good enough that a man representing one district in the country can, if reports are correct, almost do as he pleases as regards getting men on the coastal boats. Is there no other district in the country bringing in revenue besides the district of Bonavista. I only know of one man from the south side of the bay on the coastal boats. Why can't the representatives of other districts get a chance to put men there as well as Captain Winsor. The whole bay is talking about it. It is time the members on this side of the House put on their war apparel and made a war. There is political demoralization throughout the country. The people are sick of the Monroe Government and are asking us all to bring about an election. If it is not there won't be enough money in the country to go trouting let alone cod-fishing. The "Nerissa" left the other day and couldn't bring all the men out of the country that were ready to go. There was a man from Bonavista going to Boston and they hadn't got room on the boat. The reason men are leaving the country is because of the experience of men who go fishing. There is no encouragement. There is nothing for them only to leave this country, and if things were handled right this country could be made a paradise for fishermen as the Prime Minister stated in his Manifesto. Talk about giving out able-bodied relief. If something is not soon done you won't be able to borrow money fast enough to pay it out in able-bodied relief. I have a reply to a question of mine here now asked in this House as to the amount of able-bodied relief given out in each electoral district, 1926-1927.

(Reads.)

Bay de verde which is represented by my honourable friend Mr. Puddester, got no less than $12,025 and the Highroads Commission spent money down in that district. Work was given on highroads on the one hand and money paid out in able-bodied relief on the other hand in the same district. Bonavista, $16,000,—put the other eleven with that and see what is will come out. That district did quite well on able-bodied relief. In Mr. Sullivan's district there was spent somewhere around $20,000. When are the people of that district going to work Don't they do anything at all? The people of Twillingate don't want to accept able-bodied relief unless they have to. They want to go out and get work. They would go at anything rather than accept able-bodied relief and when they did ask they couldn't get anything. I think it most unfair that districts further south which have got their share of this highroads money that has been spent must now come back and ask the Government to give able-bodied relief. It is not fair to other districts which are greater producers. The No th and Southwest coasts are the most productive parts, and still Placentia, which is not so productive, and other places south which are not, (although Burin may be) can get almost what relief they want. I must say that as far as I am concerned personally, in the matters that I have taken up with the Poor Commissioner, Mr Brownrigg, with regard to relief that I have got every satisfaction and was treated gentlemanly and fairly in every way. I have no kick with him.

But there has been some trouble with one or two of the relieving officers in the district. Men couldn't get relief. And this shows that this important outpo:t district with a population of 20,000, only had $7,579. Bay de Verde with a population of 10,000, got $12,000.

(Reads from statement of relief paid.)

Now, I am coming to a very important part, the logging business. In the summer of 1924 the Opposition introduced into this House a logging Bill, or in other words introduced a Bill to cut out the system known as subcontracting, and I think Mr. Sullivan brought in figures to show that subcontracting was more remunerative than contracting. I want to tell you that it is not; it is, only in very good cases. There are some men who go to the lumber woods and make fairly good money. There are crews of say five, and only one crew out of ten makes a decent wage and they call it a cursed system. The subcontracting system at the lumber woods is nothing short of slavery. It relieves the company of responsibility altogether. The person who contracts to cut may sublet to another. The price paid per cord is such that they can't make any money on it unless they make slaves of themselves. I have been talking with hundreds of men who have come from the lumber woods and they say that all this can be put down to the subcontracting system. A man goes out before day and has to stay till the stars are out before he can make two dollars or two fifty a day. When you consider that, how long can a man stay in the lumber woods and keep at that kind of thing? The people of the country ought to rise up against that. The Government should not allow these companies to be relieved by subcontracting of any kind of responsibility. Some of the camps are not fit for men to live in. They are leaky, and if I may say it, lousy, and everything else. There are inspectors but it is not much use in an inspector reporting a camp in poor condition and going off instead of saying "This camp must be put in proper condition, and I'll return immediately and see that it is." Conditions n the whole in the lumber woods are disgraceful. Here are the reports from the lumber camps.

(Reads.)

"Conditions are very good." There should be no "very good" in a thing of that kind. It should be "good" or nothing and it is the inspector's place to see that it is good and if he doesn't see that it is good, it is the Department's place to kick him out.

(Reads.)

He says, "the quality of food is fairly good." Just imagine a camp inspector putting in a thing like that in his report—"fairly good." A man logging is charged $18 to $20 a month for board and then this man comes and says that the quality of food is fairly good. That is the eastern section of the Humber. And here is another question, Mr. Speaker—these contractors charge the men 50c. a month for a doctor, which is contrary to the Act, which calls for 40c. The men are charged 50c. a month, whether they ever see a doctor or not. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines is not here—I wish he was, for I know that if he knew the conditions he would be one of the first to set them right—I have every faith in Mr. Walsh, and know that he would do anything to set matters right. Nearly everyone coming from the lumber woods brings the same story—if a man is sick he has to stay in camp and never sees a doctor unless he is moved to hospital. Camp inspectors should be wiped out entirely, except for one sound man who cannot be bribed. The greatest kick is about the inspectors going to the camps and living in the "fore peak"—and you know what that is.

The first place they go is the foreman's quarters, and they converse with him instead of going to see the men and see their condition. I have heard of instances this winter where they never see the camp at all, but spend all their time with the foreman until they went away. And that is not good enough—they should be thrown aside and better men put in their places. When the Logging Bill was brought in, I think Mr. Sullivan was one of the first men to criticise it and to help give it its death blow. Then the Prime Minister decided to appoint a Commission to enquire into the problems of the loggers—I thought there would be three or four men from this side on that, and that I would be one of them, having some knowledge of the subject, but when he made his statement and I asked for the personnel of the commission he replied, "Mr. Warren"—one man to be a commission of investigation! That gentleman went out, but didn't see one out of every hundred loggers—did he expect the men to walk eight or ten miles to his private car for nothing? I think it wasn't handled right, and no satisfaction was given to the loggers or to me. The men didn't get a fair show, and the Commission was no good. The men who gave evidence were employers or contractors—if he wanted to find anything about the men, why didn't he get it from the men themselves? That failed, and nothing has been done since to encourage these men; nothing done on their behalf, and the Logging Act is not carried out. I believe if the Minister of Agriculture and Mines knew the conditions they wouldn't stand 24 hours—since I have known that gentleman I can say that I believe him to have sympathy for the working classes. I appeal strongly for these loggers—something should be done to set this right, and that immediately. Camp inspectors shouldn't wait until November to go in the camps, because they are working all the year around. They go in and report that they need to be papered, or that the roofs want to be fixed, and other things of that sort, and I have known where after the report these conditions have been going on all the winter unremedied. Only that it would make it hard for a man who doesn't happen to be a friend or supporter of mine I could mention a name of such a case, where the men had to go on and eke out an existence for the winter in dirty camps.

Getting back to the question of sub-contractors again. I believe they ought to be cut out entirely. They were brought about in the beginning by the A. N. D. Company, of which Mr. Sullivan is aware. In 1921, after the previous year and when a strike took place because of a cut in wages everything looked black for the men in the Fall. The supply of men was greater than the demand, and the men had to get something to do—the A. N. D. Company, seeing men so plentiful, took advantage of it and adopted the sub-contractor system, giving them a small price. The men went in the woods and made no money, in eight cases out of ten. I myself was in Millertown Junction when nine men came down from Millertown, and not one of them had enough money to buy his dinner—I interested myself in getting them over the line, and I think two of them came from Mr. Cramm's district. That has been going on for two or three years, and is still going on and no one is taking any interest in it. There will be a few more millionaires in the Old Country and corpses in this country, for the loggers can't work under present conditions and live another five years. I hope and trust that something will be done in connection with this and if not the loggers will have to do something themselves.

Now to get to another point, something must also be done for the fishermen of this country—for the thousands of starving families in the country. It was just a few years ago when Capt. Winsor said he was going to go to Port Union and bring Coaker and land him right here in town—if he went to-day there would be no fear of not bringing him. What is the cause of the fishermen not going fishing to-day—is it Coaker? Before very long in this country the Government will find out what it is to have our men going to the United States and Canada enriching these countries. Not a man on the other side of the House speaks in the interests of the fisheries, to encourage the men who are the bone and sinew of the country. I am a son of a fisherman and know what I am talking about. I have spent years fishing, both in this country and on the Pacific Coast. These are the men who produce the revenue, and after all they are the only men who are not getting some kind of half decent deal.

Now it is true, Mr. Speaker, that Corner Brook gives employment to a great number of people but conditions there are not what we would like them to be—they are not so good. It was only yesterday that I received a letter from Corner Brook saying that the longshoremen there are working a 13 or 14 hour shift, and at the same time 100 of them can't get employment. Now the Government has something to do with Corner Brook, and Mr. Power is the Government director, and I would like him to get in touch with that Company and ask them if they can't fit these men on in two shifts—two seven or eight hour shifts would give employment to all instead of working one crowd long shifts of 13 or 14 hours. There is a big kick in Corner Brook about it—some of these men out of work are living there with their families. There is very little encouragement in this country for anyone—very few men can start in to work and make any money; there is no encouragement for them. If a man can get a job on the Railway he is alright. I understand the Railway sunk about $750,000 last year—I make no wonder if they sank that much more, because they are losing freight and passengers as fast as they can do it. The freight rates are too high, and it is no use to look for a reduction, but it is not good enough just the same. If a man wants to ship a hundred fish drums from Bonavista Bay he has to pay the "Prospero" 50c. freight on each—it is outrageous. What encouragement is it to have to pay 50c. for an empty cask, when the boat is coming up almost empty and refuses to take them unless they pay that? I have known schooners to come and take the casks, and the railway lose the freight. A man who pays 50c. a cask can't make 30c. clear on his drums. Another thing in connection with the railway is the steamer "Malakoff" running around Bonavista Bay to-day and instead of taking freight she is loading up with railway ties and coming home. What about the passengers who can't catch their train? I came up on the Malakoff two weeks ago last Saturday past and we were eight hours delayed—many miss their trains because of this. And if that ship is bringing passengers and is delayed they have to pay for their meals—then they go to Port Blandford and miss their train. Why not give a schooner a chance to do that work? You are spending your money in the wrong direction. Take 20c. off fish casks coming into St. John's and give schooners a chance to bring in railway ties. Everybody is kicking about it and it is not good enough. When the general public kicks the the thing should be discontinued.

Mr. Speaker, I asked a few days ago for the expenditure of the S.S. "Watchful" on the Labrador service last summer and I got an answer tabled to that question which stated that the "Watchful" cost some $24,000 including the Labrador service. I suppose it is out of order to suggest that is not a complete answer. In an answer from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a question as to how the "Watchful's" expenditure compared with the "Earl of Devon" I learn that she is a cheaper boat to operate. I spent too many years on boats of that kind to have anybody make me swallow that—she is one of the most expensive boats that ever came to the country, and carries a larger crew than the other and burns as much coal again. I spent years on these kind of boats and know just what they can do in speed and coal burning, and for anyone to try to make me believe that the "Watchful" is a cheaper boat than the "Earl of Devon", they are trying to make me believe something that I am not going to swallow. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if there is any other expenditure than that given in the answer.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Absolutely none. That is the answer as Mr. Russell gave it to us.

MR. BROWN—There there is something wrong about the "Watchful" being a cheaper boat than the "Earl of Devon." If she is cheaper why did the Government get rid of her. That is something the Government can't explain.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—We hope to do away with the Northern Labrador service altogether.

MR. BROWN—I am afraid you can't do it; you don't know what pressure will come to bear on you. If she is a cheaper boat why sell her? Why not put her on another route, such as in the position of the "Malakoff?" The reason why she was sold was that she is too expensive to run, and you come back and try to tell us she was cheaper. I won't believe anyone who tells me that.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—I didn't say that. I said she was cheaper than the Earl of Devon the previous year. The figures given are correct.

MR. BROWN—I fail to be convinced, Mr. Speaker. Why was she sold—if she was so cheap to operate? I might have asked someone to go in with me and buy her and make some money. And whatever she cost she gave the Government quite a fright. And they sold her for as little as nothing. If you had to buy any old steam trawler in the Old Country you would have to pay fifty or sixty thousand, and the "Watchful" was sold for $12,500.00. There is a nigger in the wood-pile somewhere.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would say that since the Monroe administration came into power the members of the Opposition have had no show, either in their districts or anywhere else. We naturally resent that, and the people resent it, and the time is not far distant when a change is coming and what is being done now will be undone to some extent. The political heelers placed in positions while men in Opposition are ignored will have to pay the price when that time comes and go back to where they came from, and others put in their places. We will only be giving equal rights to all, but I know that the Government never gave them. It will be champagne to our real friends and real pain to our sham friends.

MR. ASHBOURNE — Mr. Speaker, before taking up the debate on matters contained in the Speech from the Thorne, I wish to voice my disapproval of opening the House of Assembly at such a late date as the 11th day of May. I expected some explanation from the Prime Minister as to why the opening was delayed so long—no such pronouncement has been made and it is up to us to draw our conclusions. It suffices to say that we are here on the 25th day of May and this is the seventh afternoon of sitting. I sincerely hope that the Government will sit on Saturdays and hold night sessions to expediate the business of the House.

Mention has been made of the length of time which speakers have devoted to debating the Address in Reply. I think myself that it is an admirable time for members of the Opposition to speak, in order to show the Government the stand that they have taken upon certain matters, and also to impress upon the Government the prime necessity of carrying out its pledges, even at this late date, that they have given to the people who put them there, and who expect them to carry out their promises. Before going further, I would like to add my congratulations with those which have already been tendeerd, to Mr. Chambers, Dr. Mosdell and Mr. Brophy, for having been returned to this House of Assembly to represent their various districts. To a great many in St. John's, no doubt, Mr. Brophy's return was a surprise, but as regards the outports, it was no surprise, and according to the opinion voiced in the outports to-day, as far as I have heard it, the consensus of opinion seems to be that the Monroe party has been judged as incapable of managing the affairs of the country today. The time has come and rightly so that the people who go to their constitutents and make pledges, and do not carry them out, and are not sincere when they make those pledges he time has come when these people should be driven out of power, and when that Government goes get another Government, and if that Government does not carry out their pledges either, fire them out until we get down to some sort of stable Government in this country. No wonder to-day there is a feeling of pessimism abroad in this land of ours. The people are asking whither we are drifting. What is going to happen to the colony? No wonder! The great duty of a Government is to govern, to carry on the government of the people, by the people and for the people. That is what Newfoundlanders are looking for to-day. They are looking for a Government that will carry on the affairs of this country in the interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. To do that, one of the greatest necessities is retrenchment and to cut down, and that is what the people were expecting from the Monroe Government, when they returned them to power. The Monroe Government had a great chance to hold office in Newfoundland for eight years, but to-day that government is discredited, and the reason is, because they have not carried out their promises to the people. Instead of rigid economy and retrenchment we have seen practically no desire on the part of the government, at least no sincere desire, to retrench or cut down. The trouble with this land of ours is that the cost of carrying on the government is too great altogether, and the people are asking when are we going to get a government who have faith enough in Newfoundland, and who will be sincere enough to go in and apply the axe. To-day it is becoming a vital matter of life and death, a matter of survival. If we find that this country cannot carry on as we are doing now, and it is quite evident that it can not, then the only thing to do is to reduce. Reduce the cost of government, cut down civil servants' salaries if necessary. You will get plenty of men to fill their jobs. I grant you that you may not be popular, but it is what the people of Newfoundland to-day are looking for. The first item in the Speech from the Throne deals with the Labrador. It is too bad, Mr. Speaker, that we shall ever need another loan in this country. I have heard it said that, if it had not been that the Labrador Boundary award was in our favour, it would be very doubtful if we could ever raise another loan. Now we have the Labrador, and the next question is, what we are going to do with it; whether we are to develop it, or whether it is going to be sold. Some people are asking that, if it is sold, won't we be in the same state ten or fifteen years time as we are to-day, and then we will have no Labrador. It seems to me that the Labrador can be just as useful and as profitable to Newfoundland as it could be to Canada. At any rate it should be our greatest concern. It is incumbent on the Government of Newfoundland to-day and on the members of both sides of this House to see that Labrador shall be used for the benefit of Newfoundland, and not for the benefit of speculators.

The next item relates to the codfishery. There is no hope for the codfishery in this document, absolutely no hope. Here this afternoon the Prime Minister says that the chances are that the Government won't send a steamer to Northern Labrador this year. The fishermen of Newfoundland are disheartened. The reason is, because they realize that nothing has been done to aid them, and they expected something from the Monroe Government. The fishermen considered, as Mr. Monroe was a fish exporter and knew something about the fish business, that he would take matters in hand, and that he would see that the fishing industry and the whole codfishing business of Newfoundland would be gone into thorouhly. And now the statement of the Prime Minister that there will likely be no steamer this year for Northern Labrador will not be expected by the toilers of the North who go down to fish in the deep waters. He has not kept faith with them when he promsied that the fishery should be his greatest concern. The trouble today, sir, is that the present government of Newfoundland is not a government for the common people.

We see to-day the codfishery languishing, it is dying, and nothing seems to be done about it. Thousands of our young men, our best men, are leaving the country, and it should be a matter of great concern to the government. I had hoped that this Speech from the Throne would have contained some heartening news to the toilers of Newfoundland. Newfoundland is a fishing country. The fisheries are her mainstay, and you cannot gainsay it, and while practically everything else has been gone into we find that nothing has been done for the fisheries. To-day you find that very many of the supplying merchants on Water Street are very pessimistic as regards giving out supplies for the fisheries. I think that it was Mr. Long who made the remark last year that it does not pay to catch codfish. Why is it? Does it defy solution? I claim that it does not, sir, after the thing has been studied correctly. Standardization and co-operative marketing would to a great extent eliminate some of the evils of the present day in regard to the codfishery industry. I myself am a firm believer in co-operative marketing. I do not see why it cannot be arranged as regards the Shore fishery, it certainly could be arranged as regards the Labrador fishery. The Newfoundland fishery business is a gamble; one of the biggest gambles in the world and the disheartening feature about it is that to-day thousands of our fishermen are abandoning the fisheries, our fishing schooners are going coasting, and our best men are leaving the country, whilst to all intents and purposes that does not interest the Government one iota.

(Reads.)

I would like to bring to the attention of the Government the fact that a great many people in Newfoundland consider that now when seal skins and oil are low in value, it would be a good time to have a close season on the catching of seals by steamers. It might not be practical in that the Norwegians would probably send their steamers over here, and also the Canadians might prosecute the seal fishery while we are having a close season. At any rate, sir, the fact that there are so few seals caught now on the average compared with years ago, seems to indicate that something as regards the seal fishery needs to be done. The wholesale slaughter, the sweeping of the ice floes by the slaughter of the young, is a matter that should be taken cognizance of by the Government. The duty of the Government is to take hold of all the fisheries and do something for them.

I believe that the consigning of our fish abroad is to no little extent responsible for the loss of a great many of the fish exporters of Newfoundland. History has shown us that if a man keeps on long enough at the fish business the chances are that he will eventually go to the wall. Last summer policemen went around to the various firms in the country, asking the merchants whether their cullers were being sworn in as required by law. What is the good of having men sworn in to cull fish if they are not told by what standard to cull it. What would be the standard for a No. 1 article for one market, may not be the standard for some other market. Until a standard is laid down for culling it is my opinion that the culling will be a farce. To-day the outports are in an impoverished condition, and the duty realized by the Customs has fallen off on account of the lower value of cotton we are told. But I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is on account of the small earning power of the people of the outports to-day, and I speak of the outports as being the bulk of Newfoundland, although, no doubt there are many in St. John's to-day who cannot afford to buy the bare necessities of life. Since I came into this House this afternoon I have received a telegram asking me to get some work for some men in the country.

(Reads telegram.)

Men to-day are leaving the fisheries and they want to go to the interior to work. If the Government has no faith in the codfisheries of Newfoundland, or the fisheries in general, then some other avenue of work should be opened up to the people. If they have faith in the fisheries, perhaps some plan might be evolved whereby the men might be encouraged to go fishing, by promising or guaranteeing that they would make as much by going fishing as if they went to the country to work.

The matter of a bonus on codfish has been spoken of . But as regards a bonus on fish the man who gets a lot of fish gets a lot of money so to speak, while the man who gets practically no fish gets very little benefit from the bonus and it is the man who does badly at the fishery that needs the most.

Buchan's Mine seems to be the bright spot on the horizon. But it is doubtful whether that will be able to take care of all the people who are out of employment and who are not willing to go to the fisheries because they cannot make a living out of it. The future of Newfoundland may lie in mining. But we are told here in this Speech from the Throne that in connection with this project, for a period of twenty years certain articles will be allowed in duty free. Imagine a company with the prospects that this company has, as we were told by the Prime Minister himself a few days ago. Imagine giving Buchan's Mine free entry for goods into this country for a period of twenty years. Why, sir, it is ridiculous. Two years, or at the most five, in my opinion, should be ample and no further number of years should be allowed. Here we are in May month, and it looks as if we are going to be here for some time to come, and I should have thought that some pronouncement would have been made by the Prime Minister, as regards the intentions of the Government, as to the time the people of this country may look for a General Election. In 1924 this House was called into being on the 9th day of July. The House can function for four years. Therefore on the 8th of July, 1928, this House of Assembly exists no longer. If the Government does not intend to have an election in the fall then you evidently have made up your minds to have a spring election. A spring election is very undesirable and unpopular. Nobody wants a spring election; it disturbs trade. I think that to-day it would be very wise for the Government and the Executive to get together and let the country have some statement as to when they can expect a General Election.

I am very sorry to inform this House that as regards the herring industry the prospects are very poor indeed. It seems that there are fewer herrings being consumed every year, and as far as Green Bay is concerned the herring has been the means of giving a good many dollars to a good many fishermen. Unfortunately, there is practically no demand today for split herring, and the fishermen are not being encouraged to put them up. In fact I have been told that if the men do put them up they may not get any more than $2.50 or $3.00 a barrel for them. In fact one man who had split herring here during the winter has not been able to dispose of them up to the present, and a few days ago was offered only $3.00 a barrel for them in trade; no cash at all. There is one thing that I hope will not be in the estimates this year, and that is the vote for inspectors going around inspecting split herring. I would suggest that the Government would do well to take the advice of the Opposition sometimes. It can't hurt them. Of course the Government will say that that is for the members of the Fishery Board to decide. A few men go down and meet for a few hours during the year, and the Government is only too ready to throw all the difficulties and r sponsibilities on the shoulders of the Fishery Board, problems that they should face and solve themselves.

MR. SULLIVAN—Is it not necessa y to have inspectors?

MR. ASHBOURNE—I maintain it is not, because I do not consider it enhances the value of split herring, and exporters have to pay money when the herring are exported that could be paid to the people who pack them.

MR. SULLIVAN—Do you think that it will be any better without them

MR. ASHBOURNE—They can be sold just as readily I believe.

Mr. SULLIVAN—Then inspectors are not good for anything.

MR. ASHBOURNE—That does not follow at all. As regards the products that are put up in tins it is only right that it should be inspected. But the man that buys split herring can have the barrel opened on the wharf himself and see the quality whether it is good or bad, and if it is certified as No. 1, and the man opens it and finds that it is not No. 1, the inspector's certificate is not worth a snap of your fingers. It is a farce. So therefore I hope that the salaries of the split herring inspectors will be cut out of the estimates this year. I understand that the Canadians are taking up the matter of standardization as regards codfish, and I do not see for the life of me why it is that this Government that was elected by the fishermen of this country has done nothing for them as regards that industry. It may be because the Executive Council has not the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in it. As I said before, I think that is a grievous error. Here we are a fishing country and very few people seem to have faith in the fishing industry. What are we coming to? We don't know where we are. It does not pay to catch fish, but what are we going to do? And still the Government seems to be content to do nothing about it.

The fishermen of Newfoundland are not looking for a fortune out of fish. But what they do want is a living. That is what they are not getting to-day. He does not mind paying $10 for a barrel of flour if he can get $10 for a quintal of fish. But what hits him very hard is to have to pay $10 for a barrel of flour and only get $4.50 for a quintal of fish. Why is it? We are told that a great many of the fish exporters of Iceland are losing money. Some people claim that there is too much fish being caught. The fisheries of Newfoundland are as good as they are in any part of the world, but the trouble is that the cost of living is too high here and naturally that reacts upon the price of fish. It is not so much the amount of money that the fisherman has to pay in duty for his outfit, as pork, beef, gasoline, flour and kerosene are on the free list; but it is the general high cost of living. For instance, take a fish exporter in St. John's. Look what it costs them to pack a cask of fish on account of the high cost of living. Say they pay $4.50 a quintal for fish and it costs them 50c. a quintal to pack that fish, but if the high cost of living could be brought down to such an extent that the firm could manage to pack that fish for 30c. a quintal, then the difference could go to the fishermen, and instead of getting $4.50 a quintal for their fish they could get $4.70. But there are a great many people who do not see it in that light. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of our Government to tackle our codfish problem right away. The Government may make mistakes in grappling with this matter, but it is better to have tried and lost than never to have tried at all; and to-day the people of the country are looking to the Government to lead the way and do something that would be advantageous for the fisheries and the fishermen. We are told by the Prime Minister that it is a very difficult matter to retrench and that there are a great many people around Government departments looking for money. But, Mr. Speaker, the Government is supposed to be as a watch-dog for the people, and the Government has no right to give out money to this fellow or that fellow who happens along upon request. We should cut our garment according to our cloth, and as the country cannot bear the present high cost of Government it is time to cut down expenses. Reduce the salaries of civil servants and do away with some of the officials entirely. If you are sincere in your desires to run the Government in the best interests of the people, now is your chance to show it; but the sad part about the whole situation is that the Prime Minister knows full well that drastic legislation should be enforced in the way of retrenchment and he admits that he cannot do it, and the reason, I maintain, is that he has put it off until it is too late. According to the report of the Chairman of the Liquor Control Board, tabled in the House, we are spending over a million dollars for liquor. Now, Mr. Speaker, can we in Newfoundland afford to spend such a huge amount of money for booze? I contend that we cannot. In my opinion the granting of the franchise to women is going to have a tremendous effect upon the liquor question in Newfoundland. The women are going to make their influence felt, and to-day instead of making it easy for people to get liquor and spend their money, we should try and get them to see that the money spent for liquor is money thrown away. There is no wonder that in the outports to-day there is such a cry and clamour against the present Government.

There are a great many people in this country at the present time looking for work and cannot find any. They ask for bread but they are not even given a stone. A few days ago a delegation from St. John's appeared before the Bar of this House asking that something be done for them in the nature of employment. I wonder what the people outside of Newfoundland think of us when they read in the papers that between 100 and 200 motor cars have been imported into St. John's so far this year and that about $90,000.00 were given out in relief in St. John's a few months ago? There would be many delegations to come to the Bar of this House if all the people of Newfoundland who are out of employment were able to put in an appearance here. The fishermen of the outports are not looking for fortunes from the fishery, but they are looking for some relief or help at the present time as regards the fisheries. Time and conditions have altered and circumstances have made it necessary when even an industry such as the codfishery should receive some consideration and support; and where can the Government spend money that will give better returns than on the codfishery? Since the opening of the House the remark was made that it was hoped that the leaders of the different groups would find out from their groups their ideas and talk for them. I consider that we have had a one-man Government in Newfoundland too long already. The time has passed when you can have much faith in any one man and the quicker we realize it the better. One man may be sincere, but unless he has others behind him who are prepared to back up the stand he may take he is only fighting a lone fight. In Newfoundland I think we have been too apt to look at the leader of a party and expect great things from him and say that because such and such a man is a party leader that we are going to be in for good times. What we want and what the people are asking for is retrenchment and a Government that will retrench and cut down expenses drastically and not fear going back to the people to give an account of their stewardship. I believe that any person that comes into power and carries on the Government for the people and has that singleness of purpose and sincerity in his heart to do the right, that the people of the country will reward him according to his deeds. There is no use going out and talking to the people and telling them what you promise. It is what you do that counts, and we are to be judged by our deeds, not by our creeds, both here and in the hereafter. That is why the Monroe Government is so unpopular to-day throughout the country. They have not done what the people were expecting them to do. We have too many non-producers in Newfoundland to-day and the cost of the Government is too great. But how is that situation to be overcome? I think in this House that the first thing to be done is to have the Budget brought in to see how much money this little country can raise by fair taxation, not harsh taxation or class taxation, and then bring in your Estimates afterwards and see how you are going to spend it; not bring in your Estimates and then take chances of getting it. It is very easy to sit in your offices in St. John's and think everything is going along nicely in Newfoundland, but, according to the outports that I have come in contact with, by the producers of this country, there is going to be a rude awakening for the present Government, as things are far from rosy hued. I believe that the Government to-day is unaware of conditions in the outports in the main. There are not enough outport representatives in this House There are too many men belonging to St. John's and it is time that the outport men got together and got men from the outports to represent outport districts.

We come to the Gander. I had hoped to see that something would have been done as regards the Gander before this time. It is in proximity to Twillingate District. I sincerely hope that if the Government has to build a railway down to the Gander that there will be put there a pulp and paper plant, because then the timber from the Labrador could be freighted down there. I maintain that not another stick of timber should be exported from Newfoundland or Labrador in its raw state.

There are men out in the outports to-day who feel that they cannot go fishing this year. They have families to maintain, and what is $200 to $300 to keep a family going for twelve months and feed, clothe and educate them? How far would it go with the honourable members here?—$200 or $300? And still that is about the average earnings of the fishermen of this country. The cost of Government, as I said before, is excessive and the people don't seem to be able to get anybody to come in here and cut it down; but a time is coming when they will. In times of great national crisis there are not lacking men who will be found to step in any breach, and I myself have faith that there is a Providence that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we may, and if it were not for that, to-day I should be very pessimistic myself indeed.

The people of Newfoundland sent us here to look after their interests and to work on their behalf, and what are we doing about it? The Prime Minister must not hand out money to people because they come and ask for it and become persistent. We can't afford to have a lot of these expenditures being carried on to-day, and why does the Government do it? It is time that this sorry scheme of things were changed. I believe myself that the crux of the matter here with us in Newfoundland is, that as regards the fisheries, the people of Newfoundland, and the fishermen especially, expected Mr. Monroe, being a fish merchant, to influence the Government to do something for the good of the fisheries. I maintain that practically nothing has been done and the people are greatly disappointed to-day with Mr. Monroe. As I said before, the Monroe Government had a chance to be in office in this country for eight years, but I don't believe to-day that it could go to the country and get half a dozen men returned.

There is not very much in the Speech from the Throne to talk about anyway.

People can't afford to get enough to eat for themselves and their families to-day of the necessities of life and here we are launching out on big schemes, such as the tourist policy, building a big dock, a big hotel, and the fishery is being neglected. I am sorry that the Colonial Secretary is not here because a few days ago I had a message from the Relieving Officer of Twillingate asking me if there were any free passes that I could get in order to get men into the country to work; that they couldn't go in there unless they had free passes. The men are anxious to work if they can get work. They do not want to live on the Government or by relief if they can get honest work instead. Many of these men have been to the fishery but have been so discouraged that now they want to get work in the country, and the only other alternative is for them to leave the country.

I don't know whether or not some plan might be evolved whereby men might be encouraged to go back to the fisheries. It would revive hope if it could be shown to them that in case they didn't do well at the fishery that their earnings might be brought up on a parity with what their earnings would be in the country for the same length of time. I merely make that as a suggestion.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Speaker, I beg to say a few words on the subject matter before the chair. Before entering upon the main subject I would like to remark one matter. It is not very pleasant to be here on the 25th of May speaking on the Speech from the Throne. I am sure in saying that I voice a feeling on both sides of the House. No one wants to sit here and talk when it is coming on to midsummer, on the Speech from the Throne. Yet is the long established prerogative, almost, of the Opposition to talk on this I regret that the Prime Minister did not avail of the first opportunity to give an understanding to the House that an election will be held in the fall. It mustn't be supposed that an opposition constituted as we are with seventeen members is going to sit down and allow legislation which the Government may find necessary to bring in to pass unchallenged. That would be a matter without precedent in the history of this House. I was not here on Friday but I understand that the Prime Minister stated that he thought the Opposition was bent upon obstruction. I don't know what brought it up or why he said it, as I was not here at the time, but I understand some who spoke last spoke at some length and it looked to him like obstruction tactics. I would like the Prime Minister to put himself in the place of the Leader of the Opposition and consider himself for a moment on this side of the House and consider conditions as they are. I wonder would he be willing to let the Government of the day come in with whatever legislation they liked; pass it and close the House, while he sat stlil and offered no criticism. I don't think that would happen. The Prime Minister and the Government must expect criticism from this side of the House. I don't want to be classed as an obstructionist. I don't like obstructionists. I would much prefer to be attending to my business than to be in here talking on the Speech from the Throne; but I feel it incumbent upon me as representative of a district and as a member of this House, to take my place here and criticise, when it is honest and just criticism, and I think we have ample reason to criticise the present administration. I may say to the Prime Minister if you are really in earnest in your assurance that you want to serve this country, as it is said you are, and as a great many people believe you are, if you are, I see no better way than to give an assurance that this House will dissolve when prorogation will take place. It is the manly thing to do, and the straight thing to do, and I cannot see that you can find any argument against doing so. I have not the slightest doubt that every member of the Opposition will co-operate in every way in passing legislation and passing supplies. But you must remember that, perhaps through no fault of yours, a very serious condit on has arisen as regards the position of the Government. The composition of the Government to-day is not what it was two years ago. It is not what it was one year ago. The Prime Minister was honest in stating he was not in a position to bring forward any drastic legislation. I presume the Prime Minister felt that we needed drastic legislation, and I agree with him. In serving the country, it will be necessary to bring in drastic legislation. The Prime Minister admits that he is not in a position to bring in and pass drastic legislation. That is a serious admission and a serious state of affairs in this country. Does he then wish to carry on in office if he cannot pass drastic legislation?

And I can't see for the life of me what purpose can be served by the Leader of the Government, and by the Government generally in attempting to pursue that course—absolutely no good purpose. You have to appeal to the electors sooner or latter, and a few months here or there can't matter so why not do the right thing. No one would begrudge the Government staying in power if they were strong enough numerically, it would be the right thing to do, and I say that it is a pity that a Government in any country cannot stay until the end of its term, but if the position arises that they can't do so, as it has under the present administration, what is it going to do. I sympathize with the Prime Minister; I know that he is not in a position to bring in legislation, not even necessary legislation, and being in that position why does not a gentleman like the Prime Minister, who is an independent man himself—after all I don't want to be personal, but I do think he is sufficiently strong-willed if he made up his mind to do it—accede to the request of the Leader of the Opposition to go to the country, and all his troubles will disappear. I don't say that in the form of threat that we are going to hold things up, but we are going to do the natural thing, and take advantage of our strength. What does it matter whether we go to the country in the fall of 1927 or the spring of 1928, you will have forgotten it ten years from now, and will have the consciousness of having done what is right in the best interests of the country. It might be said that it is only natural for us on this side to want a general election, and that may be true, but it must be remembered that we are the servants of our constituents, and it is what they expect of us; if I were to consult my own personal feelings, I don't care very much whether the election is in the fall or the spring, I can manage to live, and perhaps when the election comes I shall be defeated and not have a seat at all. There is no greater calamity, politically, that a Government cannot bring down legislation which it deems necessary and expedient—it is a very serious state of affairs. We can't help it, we can only challenge this course. It is our duty to criticize legislation, and if we wanted to we could stay here all the summer—I understand the Prime Minister intimated that he could stay here as long as we, but I think he would get very very tired in a short time. I think the constitutional aspect has been pointed out before, the life of the Government would expire some time about the 9th of July, 1928; I think the election Act provides for four years from the date of the Proclamation as the life of Parliament, which means that if there is no election in the fall of 1927, we will have to have an election in the spring of 1928, or there will be a period during the summer of 1928 when there will be no existing Parliament; that is undesirable, perhaps if there was some great crisis, such as a War, it could be covered by such a measure as the War Measures Act. But here is a Government not able to pass ordinary legislation, not even able to pass Supply if the Opposition so wishes, and I don't think that is going to happen—we don't want to obstruct the Government, but we feel that it is our duty to see that that assurance is given this House before we are prepared to assent to legislation that otherwise we might not possibly concur in.

I desire, Mr. Speaker, like others who have gone before me, to refer to the personality subject of the Assembly as compared with when we closed this House last year. First, I am reminded that an old friend of mine, Mr. Duff, who was sitting over here last year, is now sitting—I won't say comfortably—in a chair over there by the grate. It was a great disappointment to me when he decided to forsake the good old Liberal party; I thought he was the last man to forsake it and join his erstwhile opponents; no man was stronger in his condemnation and criticism of the actions of the present administration, and even at our last meeting we had no reason to believe but that one of our most loyal members was Mr. Duff. A day or so afterwards, however, I saw him in company which suggested that possibly he would be sitting in new company when we sat again, and his appointment was gazetted a few days later. I am sorry for his own sake because I don't see how he could better his position by joining them. It must be admitted that the present administration is a dying one, and how could Mr. Duff go over to a dying administration. Imagine any person getting aboard an old ship that is scuttled and sinking, and jumping off a new ship to do so.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—It is not launched yet.

MR. HIBBS—No, but we propose to launch it in the fall of 1927. I am sure that Mr. Duff's constituents in Carbonear had every faith in him prior to his conversion, but if I am to judge by what I heard from some of his best friends, I am sure his position is a very very unhappy one; sometimes in an unguarded moment we do things that we afterwards regret, and if we only knew what is in his heart just now I know that he would be over sitting in his old seat that he was in the last time we sat. It is customary to congratulate the Mover and Seconder of the Speech from the Throne, but before doing so I think perhaps I should follow the precedent set me and congratulate the new members on this side of the House. I don't know whether they think these are all sincere or not, but they might place a wrong construction on it if I did not do so. Dr. Mosdell has secured a great victory in Fortune Bay, particularly so because the gentleman who had the honour of representing that district and now holds an exalted position threw in, I understand, his weight with the Government candidate previous to his appointment. Now I will say that if Fortune Bay had voted for Mr. Dunfield as far as he is personally concerned they would have made no mistake because he would have made a worthy representative, but unfortunately he was on the wrong side, and I can't conceive of any man, no matter how popular or clever he is, going in any district, with the exception of Burgeo and LaPoile, and winning for the present administration. Mr. Chambers won there, and I would be scared if he went to Fogo against me, for he is a very popular man. He did a great deal for his district, and while they knew that the Government of which he is a member was dying, and that he would die with it if he didn't do the right thing and leave them, they said to themselves that he was the Minister of Public Works and they could get as much as possible out of the Government; however, he has won, and I congratulate him. It must also be remembered that it was a three-cornered fight in that district, and that the independent candidate mixed things up, that if he had not been there the Government majority would have been considerably reduced. I had much pleasure in being identified with campaign in St. John's East where Mr. Brophy won what I regard as the greatest victory in the history of Newfoundland politics. It was a hard fight—it was in close proximity to St. John's, and all the prestige of the Government was thrown in. It was a whirlwind campaign, and a hard fought one, but the one outstanding thing is that the people expressed their sentiments through the ballots, and that is one of the things which the Government and the Prime Minister should take into consideration. Mr. Brophy, I feel sure, will do honour to that old and historic district, and to the memories of the members who preceded him.

I feel sure, sir, that he will prove a worthy colleague of the two gentlemen who represent that district at the present time in the persons of the Hon. Minister of Justice and yourself, sir, and I am sure that the same harmony will prevail because his interests are your interests. I want to congratulate Mr. Cahill, the mover of the Address in Reply. I do congratulate him, sir, because I say that any man, and gentlemen on the other side of the House, who could under similar circumstances muster up sufficient courage to come in here and apologise for that speech from the Throne deserves to be congratulated. In fact I will go further and say that he deserves to be decorated. Mr. Cahill, no doubt, was selected because he did so well on a former occasion. As Mr. Halfyard said the other day, when a person commits an offence against the law, he gets a good criminal lawyer to defend him, and I don't think the Government made any mistake in their selection. I think that Mr. Cahill did very well considering the material he had to work on.

There is much, however, in the speech that I would like to criticise, particularly the latter part of the speech. It is very well when everything is going alright and under ordinary conditions, and even then it is quite an ordeal to get somebody on opening day to propose the Reply to the Speech from the Throne. Usually a gentleman is selected to make his maiden speech on that occasion. But the Government would not take any risks so they selected Mr. Cahill.

Mr. Power who, I think, was making his maiden speech, did very well. There is not very much to criticise about his speech because it had industrial tendencies. He talked about St. George's coal fields. He has an interests in that particularly as he represents that district. Now I want to say a word or two about this Speech from the Throne.

The Speech from the Throne opens by telling the country or telling this House at least that since last session the dispute between the Canadians and Newfoundland in connection with the Labrador boundary had been settled. Well, we know all about that. That is no news. I would like for something with more interest in it than that to be presented to us in the Speech from the Throne. It has been traditional, Mr. Speaker, for the Speech to be delivered on opening day, and usually containing a forecast of what the Government proposes doing that session. But this is absolutely a barren, meaningless thing. Nothing in it what ever. It merely tells something that we already know. It does not open up some hopeful vista for the future. It doesn't tell us what the policy of the Government is going to be, or what we are to expect from the Government. In past years the Spech from the Throne did tell us these things, but recently the Speech from the Throne is similar to the Budget Speech. The budget speech, as everybody knows, in this House of Assembly for the past few years has been nothing more or less than a political document—Propaganda. It is not meant to convey to the House of Assembly and to the House of Parliament, any idea of the proper state of the finances of the country, it is merely used to prop up and bolster up the Government that the Finance Mminister happens to be a member of, regardless of whether it has any foundation in fact. So is the Speech from the Throne. The whole traditional purpose and objective seems to be lost sight of. For the Speech from the Throne we get something that does not contain anything in it and is not worth reading.

Reference is made here to the Labrador dispute. The Government through their papers have taken great credit to themselves for the favourable decision on the Labrador question. I want to say right here that it would be far from me to discredit in any way the gentlemen who have been associated with that award. I would congratulate his Honor the Minister of Justice, because it happened that during his regime it was his place to sit at that great court. It was an historical occasion, something that his name will be connected with down through the ages, and so I congratulate him, and I feel that the case was well handled by him. He is a very able man, and I feel surer that he availed of that one opportunity which only comes once in a lifetime, to do credit to himself and the country he represented. But, sir, I would also like to point out that all the credit does not belong to this Government. As a matter of fact very little credit when we are honest about it.

Of course it would take some little time to review the history of the Labrador boundary dispute. It covers more than a quarter of a century. I think it is only fair that in this House to-day we should pay tribute to the memory of the late Martin Furlong. I did not have the honour of his acquaintance, as he was before my time in politics. But I do know that he played a very important part, and got very modest remuneration for his services. I also wish to speak of the part played in this great controversy by the late administration of which I happened to be a member. I think that it is only fair that today we should review what was done by that administration in this respect. In 1920 the administration of Sir Richard Squires decided that an effort should be made to gather data and evidence to support Newfoundland's case, that had been going on for some time before. But they decided that there should be more energy put into it and that it should be more determined. The recent evidence shows the wisdom of that action. Well it will be remembered, Mr. Speaker, that on that occasion we engaged the services of the Hon. Sir Patrick McGrath. Newfoundland's case from this date was practically placed in his hands. I remember how much criticism that Government was subjected to at that time because they selected Sir Patrick who was a political opponent of that administration, and it was the opinion of a great many of our friends that we should not have placed the matter in his hands. However that may be, sir, it is to the credit of that administration that they placed principle before politics in that case. That went on until 1922 when the present Administration came into power. And I say, sir, that the present Administration was not deserving of very much credit in connection with that. The reason is this, that the present Administration came into office in 1924. They evidently did not have a great deal of faith in our cause. However, probably the Canadians also had not much faith in their case. It was in the lap of the gods, so to speak. But the evidence of the facts shows that they were somewhat sceptical, because the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and the Colonial Secretary proceeded to Canada for the purpose of negotiating with the Canadian Government with a view to the sale of Labrador. In fact we have had correspondence tabled in this House showing that the Prime Minister and the Government made an offer to Canada of the entire Labrador peninsular for the sum of $15,000,000.

This correspondence showed that an offer was made for the sum of $15,000,000.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Oh, no! All that was said was that if they should choose to make any offer, it would be brought before the Executive Government, and, if the Executive approved, it would be brought before the Legislature. It was not the entire peninsula, but that portion whch came under dispute.

MR. HIBBS—Was not the sum of $15,000,000 suggested by you?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —It was spoken of by them; never by us.

MR. HIBBS—I suppose then, I will have to blame Mr. Puddester as Editor of the Hansard. If I remember rightly, I read in the Hansard quite recently that letter with an offer of $15,000,000. Was that amount mentioned originally or suggested by them?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Yes.

MR. HIBBS—I will see the correspondence at the earliest opportunity and see if I am so far misled as it would appear. The impression I received, I feel sure, was that negotiations were on that basis. I think we are in a much better position than we would be if we had sold Labrador. The point I desire to make was that the Government can take no credit for the favourable decision with regard to the Labrador. It is a fact that if any kind of a reasonable amount had been given at that time, the proposition would have been brought before the House to sell the Labrador.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —Terms would never have been come to, because the Canadians wanted to include the entire coast, and the Newfoundland Legislature would never consider that.

MR. HIBBS—Then your visit to Canada was fruitless and absolutely hopeless from the beginning!

I notice that another paragraph in the Speech refers to the Codfishery, and this year we have been given three and a half lines, whereas last year you did much better and gave four lines to the most important industry of Newfoundland. That is a matter that has been referred to by other members on this side of the House, and Mr. Ashbourne, who has just sat down, is a member, as competent perhaps as any man on this side of the House to speak on the fisheries. It would then be superfluous for me to repeat what has been said. In talking on the Speech from the Throne, if one talks at any length, one can only repeat what has been said before. As the Opposition has no intention to merely talk against time and hold up this House, there is not much purpose to be served in my repeating other people's remarks. I cannot, however, pass over the fact that the fishery has been dismised in the Speech from the Throne with a mere four lines.

(Reads from Speech from Throne)

I wonder what object is there in having that paragraph in the Speech from the Throne. That is something we all know. It is insulting; almost disgusting to the fishermen of this country to find a Government that promised those fishermen so much for the fisheries in 1924, coming in in 1927 with a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne making such a reference as that. We all know that. "The fishermen suffered considerably from decreased prices." But what did the Government do to enhance prices. I am not one to say that a Government could merely by a snap of the finger raise the price of fish, but I do think that some effort could be made by the present administration more than has been made. Last year in speaking on that subject I went into it at some length and repeated the history of the fisheries down through the last 125 years, and I did suggest at that time to the Prime Minister the advisability of doing something that we have never done before. We have gone along so long in the old rut. Surely then it is only reasonable to suppose that like other countries we should make an effort to get markets for our produce. I suggested that Mr. Aaron Shapiro, perhaps the greatest expert on co-operative marketing in the world, be invited down here. I can say now with authority that Mr. Aaron Shapiro would be very glad to come to Newfoundland. The expense would be very small, and we are not so wise but that we might benefit by advice. I think the Prime Minister might consider the matter of bringing this expert down and getting advice.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—A man was procured.

MR. HIBBS—I understand that another man did come down and before this House closes I hope the Prime Minister will give the benefit of the advice given by that expert to us. I think it is only right that the people should know what he has done. I am somewhat of a layman as far as the codfishery is concerned, but I think a mistake was made by not getting Mr. Shapiro. He is recognised all over the American continent as being a great expert on co-operative marketing. Nova Scotia has seen fit to invite him there to get the benefit of his advice in connection with the marketing of apples from Annapolis Valley, and I think that they are acting on his advice, and they find the advice given very practical. I feel sure what applies to the province of Nova Scotia in connection with the marketing of the apples also applies to Newfoundland with regard to its fish.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—The Province of Nova Scotia did not engage him with regard to its fish, did it?

MR. HIBBS—The marketing of fish is not in the same position with them as with us. I do feel that if the Province of Nova Scotia were as dependent on the codfish industry as we are, that they would have invited him to consult with regard to codfish as well as with regard to the apples from the Annapolis Valley.

I understood from the Prime Minister that negotiations were going on between this Government and the United States with a view to getting our fish into the United States and removing the tariff wall placed by the Fordney Tariff. I don't expect at the present juncture he will give away all the information he has got, but I do hope that before the House closes he will be able to give out some information.

I will, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, go back to the matter we were discussing a few moments ago. Some one has just sent along a copy of Hansard, and I want to see if the Prime Minister's statement is critically correct. With your permisison, Mr. Speaker, I will read.

(Reads from Hansard)

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that nobody will blame me, in view of that, for saying here this evening that the suggestion of $15,000,000 came from the Prime Minister.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—What we were remarking was that it was not from the Government.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move adjournment of the debate.

On motion the debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remainder of the Orders of the Day were deferred.

On motion the following members were appointed a Library Committee for the session: Mr. Puddester, Mr. Cahill, Mr. W. J. Browne, Mr. Ashbourne, Dr. Mosdell.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— I beg to move that the House rise and do now adjourn until to-morrow at three o'clock.

MR. SCAMMELL—On the motion to adjourn, may I ask the Prime Minister on what date the increased rates came into effect on the coastal boats, and what notice was given to the general public? I rise on this particular point because I have just received a telegram from sixty men on the "Prospero" at Exploits, bound for Hampden and Sopp's Arm. They had no notice of the increased rates, and they are anxious to know if something cannot be done about it. These men came some distance to Exploits and only when they got on board they found out about the increased rates, and I think it very unfair and hard on them if notice has not been given. I ask the Prime Minister to find out the facts re this matter and let us know them.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER.—I shall answer the question to-morrow.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow, Thursday, May 26th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, May 26th, 1927.

The House met at three o'clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Lake, from Grand Bank, re roads.

Dr. Mosdell, from Morrisville, re roads.

The Hon. the Colonial Secretary tabled the Report of the Highroads Commission for the year ending February 28th, 1927.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. HIBBS.—Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to resume my remarks of last evening before adjournment. When we adjourned last evening I was making some reference to negotiations that were carried on between the Prime Minister of Newfoundland and the Prime Minister of Quebec with reference to the sale of Labrador, and statements which I made were challenged by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice who thought I was incorrect in some degree. I will read for the benefit of the House a letter dated March 4th, 1925, from the Hon. the Prime Minister to the Hon. Mr. L. A. Taschereau, Prime Minister and Attorney General of Quebec. I wish to pursue the matter with your permission, Mr. Speaker, as I don't wish to be misunderstood, and I want to endeavour to make the point which I started out to make when I took up that subject last evening. On March 16th, 1925, according to correspondence tabled by the Prime Minister last year the following letter was received from the Attorney General at Ottawa, of Canada; this is a reply to the letter which I read last evening:

(Reads)

It would seem from that letter, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General at Ottawa was of the same opinion as I, that the proposal was made by the Prime Minister and Attorney General and Colonial Secretary to sell the Lebrador. The matter, it is true, would have to come before the Executive Council and before the Legislature but that doesn't alter the fact that the Prime Minister had in his mind that the sum of $15,000,000 would be a fair and equitable figure to charge Canada for our possessions on Labrador.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE.—Not for our possessions; for the territory in dispute.

MR. HIBBS.—If we were to sell Labrador to-day I presume it would be always considered that no sale would be made except subject to our fishermen's rights on the coast. I know the present Government is just as desirous as any Government in the past to protect the fishermen's rights on Labrador, but the point I wanted to make is this that you would not to-day think of selling that portion of Labrador for fifteen millions.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE.—It was not known that it was the property of Newfoundland then and it was a very delicate question that had to be decided as will be seen when we go into that matter later on.

MR. HIBBS.—At the same time in fact it was our property then as it is now and it was only a matter of having the despute decided. I received some correspondence some time ago speaking of the possible value of the Labrador. We all want to get some idea of what this vast territory would be worth in the event of our disposing of it and that is a matter of interest to us all. The man writing it comes from————, and he sent me this letter unsolicited, thinking that I would be interested in getting his personal opinion on the lumber on Labrador on that part of it with which he was acquainted.

(Reads extracts from letter.)

When one comes to take into consideration the fact that people, who are more familiar with the Labrador than anybody in this House, are of the opinion that not less than sixty thousand square miles of Labrador is well wooded, to say nothing of the vast water power which that territory possesses, it is not unreasonable to say that the territory in dispute would be worth one hundred million dollars I k.now it is not wise to make a rash statement, but I would like to point out that during the past few months the American and Canadian papers have been shouting that the Labrador was worth between two hundred and two hundred and fifty million dollars. Supposing we were to boil down to say one hundred millions. then my point is that the offer made by the Prime Minister and delegates from the Prime Minister's office in which the sum of fifteen million dollars was mentioned as a basis on which negotiations might take place was an exceedingly low one and the Prime Minister and his associates made a mistake. It shows how short-sighted they were and it shows possibly that they had no conception of what they were dealing with when they offered for fifteen million dollars such a vast territory which is now estimated to be worth between two hundred and two hundred and fifty million dollars. I believe the Prime Minister is honest enough to admit that he made a mistake and I know that he dreads to hear the words fifteen millions mentioned; but if Canada had been wise to accept that offer of fifteen millions as a basis of settlement, they would be eighty million dollars better off than what they are to-day, that is, provided the property would be sold to them. Last evening after referring to the Labrador and before I had the Hansard brought in which caused me to resume that Labrador question I was dealing with the sealfishery. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few more words with regard to that once great fishery. I referred to it last year at length and quoted some official figures down through the years from 1825 to 1925. I pointed out then that that fishery was fast declining and within a few years from now the sealfishery will be a thing of the past, if the catch drops off as it has during the past twenty-five years. In dealing with the sealfishery the Speech from the Throne says: "The sealfishery, just concluded, has been above the average of recent years, but the lower values for oil have resulted in poor returns to those who undergo the hardships of this precarious work." That paragraph is absolutely meaningless. Last year and each since the present Government came into power something similar was said about this industry in the Speech from the Throne. We merely get a bald statement this year and one that we are all familiar with. What the Government and the trade must do is to get down to business and try and revive that great industry and try to bring it back to something near the magnitude that it had reached in former years. As far back as 1830, almost 100 years ago, one of the greatest sealfisheries on record was enoyed in Newfoundland when a catch of 683,836 were brought into the country. When you come to compa e this with this year's catch of 180,000, a catch which the Speech from the Throne says, "Has been above the average of recent years," then you will see how far this industry has fallen back. For a number of years after 1830 the annual sealing catch reached an average of 500,000 seals, whilst in recent years we had the catches as follows: in 1924 the amount of seals brought in was 129,000; in 1925 the total catch was 127,000; in 1926 we had 200,000 and this year 180,000. The next paragraph in the Speech from the Throne refers to the paper-making industry and says: "The development of the paper-making industry shows a marked progress, and the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company has reached the large output capacity of four hundred and ten tons per days. The Anlo Newfoundland Development Company has added another paper machine to its plant, reaching the satisfactory capacity of three hundred tons per day." Now I want to point out to the Government that a daily output of four hundred tons per day had been reached a year ago and there is nothing new about what they tell us in that paragraph. I would like for the Government to be more progressive and give us some hope for the future and not what happened in the past when next they present a Speech from the Throne. If the Government has got a policy, let us hear what it is. We are sick and tired of hearing the same old thing over and over again. Do not be padding out what has happened in the past and use it as a kind of propaganda. If you have nothing to put in the Speech better abandon it altogether. Mr. Speaker I would like to know what is going to be done in connection with the Gander proposition. I understand that a Bill will be brought before the House later on in the session when we will have a chance of discussing it fully but, as one who is interested very much in the Gander proect and because it happens to be in the district that I have the honour to represent, my attitude will be to oppose any attempt whatever to export raw pulp wood from those areas, as I think if such were permitted it would be a crime against Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. Nothing short of a mill such as we have at the Humber and nothing short of a town such as we have at Corner Brook should satisfy the Government when that Bill is brought in here. They should not submit to anything else and if the Government is unwise enough to bring in a Bill giving that corporation the right to export raw pulp wood from that centre I believe that it will meet with the strongest opposition from the members on this side of the House. I have not discussed the matter with my colleagues, but I know they will oppose it as will also many honourable gentlemen on the Government side. Our people in Newfoundland have been slaves long enough by being hewers of wood and drawers of water for other people. The Humber, although having one of the greatest mills in the world erected there and although it is one of the greatest industrial centres in Newfoundland, has fallen far short of what was expected of it. Newfoundlanders have not got the square deal which they were promised and if there was one place more than another in which the Prime Minister promised a square deal it was in connection with the industrial matters at the Humber. The place up there has been swarming with Canadians, Englishmen and Americans to whom every job worth while has been given. It is only recently that a Newfoundlander has been able to get a job there at all. A statement to that effect was made in this House last session and the previous one. The Government attempted to disprove it but it has never been successfully contradicted. I am in receipt of dozens of communications telling of the gross discrimination practised at the Humber and how outsiders are given all the choice jobs and superior positions—positions which Newfoundlanders are quite capable of filling. Newfoundlanders have been barred out in order to give place to the foreigners. I have no animosity towards foreigners coming in here just as they go in any other country; but I do say that if Newfoundland has pledged her security to the extent of ten million dollars to start an industry for Newfoundlanders, surely it is Newfoundlanders who should reap the benefit and not people from other lands. Now in the case of the Gander conditions are going to be worse, if present reports are true. I understand that before this session closes a Bill will be brought in here and in which the people who are about to operate in the Gander areas are asking for the right to export raw material. I repeat again that as far as I am concerned I feel it my duty to oppose that measure, and I have not the slightest doubt that if the Government takes a firm stand in connection with that proposed enterprise that the company will erect a mill there. I presume, however, that they have mills in the United States and Canada and that it would be much better for them to use the timber of the Gander to feed their mills abroad. That will mean that our people will cut the wood and be the slaves and get the smallest pay for their toil under the pernicious subcontracting system. If such conditions obtain, the result will be that all that valuable timber will be denuded in a few years, there will be no mill there, and Newfoundland will have nothing, but the people in Canada and elsewhere will be the richer out of our natural wealth, which is, after all, Newfoundland's heritage.

Mr. Speaker, I have not read anything in the Speech from the Throne respecting this much talked of retrenchment. That was a thing the Government used to be very strong on. They promised three years ago before they took office and since that they were going to administer the affairs of the country with the utmost economy and that they were going to cut out all useless officials. I remember distinctly that some members of the present administration claimed that the Post Office was the dumping ground for a lot of political heelers of the late administration, that two officials were doing the work of one and that as soon as they would get in power they would start weeding out in the different offices. Now I happen to have a few figures here to show how this weeding out process was carried on by the present Government. It will be interesting to know that when they came in power there were as sub-heads in the different departments sixteen officials. The Government were not in office one year when that number was increased to twenty-four officials. I have another list which shows that the number of officials in a department was increased from eighteen to twenty-four. Altogether there was a total increase of officials in the Post Office of twenty, twenty more had their salaries increased and we also find that promotions were made on the recommendation of that Commission which comprised the Finance Minister, the Minister of Posts and Mr. Berteau, Auditor General. Take the East End Post Office for instance. During the term of the Liberal administration four or five officials did the work. To-day there are eight people doing it. Three years ago eight mail clerks did the work on the main line of railway. To-day there are fifteen officials doing it. Now has the trade with the Post Office in the handling of mail matter increased to such an extent as to warrant such an increase of employees and expenditure, or is this what the Government meant by retrenchment? I am inclined to think that the present Prime Minister was no more honest than those who preceded him.

MINISTER OF POSTS & TELEGRAPHS—We have less officials to-day than we had when I took charge and I will bring here a statement to prove my assertion.

MR. HIBBS—I shall be glad if the hon. minister will bring along that statement and noboby will be more happy to see it than myself. I have the names of the officials that I have referred to and I could read out their names to this House; but as long as the minister is prepared to bring down an official statement I shall refrain from reading the names, and, perhaps it may be that the Minister did grow a bit repentant. We were disagreeably surprised on opening day to hear from the Prime Minister that this country is to be faced at the end of the fiscal year with a large deficit. Of course, we had heard that before, but the Government press repudiated this and said it was wrong and tried to convince the people of this country that practically no deficit whatever existed. It was astounding to some of us to hear the Prime Minister admit that there would be a deficit of $1,500,000.-00 on current account together with a deficit of $750,000.00 on railway account, or a total deficit of $2,225,000.-00. Now the only person in this House who it seems is unconcerned about that deficit is Mr. Cahill because he referred to it in his speech as a modest deficit. Well, if Mr. Cahill considers that a modest deficit, I would like to know what he would call an immodest one. Certainly any man who would get up and make such a statement is not a very modest man. Now I regard the Speech from the Throne as being somewhat similar to the Budget Speech and both these documents have been abused within recent years, in my opinion. There was a time when the Budget used to give a fair outline of the country's finances and a fair estimate of the revenue and expenditure for the ensuing year, but last year's Budget estimated the revenue for 1925-26 at $10,806,283.30 and expenditure $10,744,761.00. During the recent political campaign in St. John's the "Evening Telegram" newspaper, trying to offset the argument that had been used in connection with the financial condition of the country, came out with a statement, supposed to be on the authority of the Auditor General, showing that there was a deficit at the end of that year of $81,000.00, which added to the surplus that the Finance Minister estimated last year, namely, $61,000.00 makes a total deficit, apart from the deficit on the railway of $750,000.00, of over $140,-000.00. So that in reality we had a total deficit for that year of roughly a million dollars. It shows very clearly how absolutely unreliable Budget statements are. Speaking of the year 1926-27 the Finance Minister stated here that we would have an expenditure of $9,764,394.84 and he estimated the revenue at $10,365,000.00. He estimated a surplus of $300,000.00, but according to the statement of the Prime Minister in this House on opening day this surplus has been converted into a deficit of $1,500,000.00, not including the deficit on the railway. The time has come when the country should know the truth about its financial position and if our revenue has fallen short the problem has got to be grappled with.

Now, in spite of the fact that you have increased the duties on commodities in the country 15 per cent., that is the condition to-day. You have the same vast deficit. I might name a few facts. Not only do we find taxed commodities of life, but material used by every fisherman. Take lines, twines and such like. There was a matter brought to my notice a few days ago showing very clearly how the tariff affects other fishing implements—I refer to grapnels, anchors and other such articles used almost exclusively by the fishermen. The old tariff duty on anchors, grapnels, chains and that sort of thing was 10 per cent. The present tariff has increased it to 14 per cent. That is not the worst. Here in St. John's a few years past two or three iron working factories, we might call them, I refer to iron workers like Mr. G. Snow and Mr. Feaver, carried on, during the winter months, the work of making grapnels, and the price called for, under the tariff, made it absolutely impossible to carry on at that business.

MR. BROWNE—Mr. Snow carries on his business still.

MR. HIBBS—I know he carries on business, but Mr. Browne cannot tell from walking along the street how many workmen are employed and does not know what kind of work they do. There was a time when they made grapnels in the winter. They cannot do so now.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Does the hon. member state that they are prevented from doing business by the tariff?

MR. HIBBS—What I want to point out is that the raw material is taxed 20 per cent., in spite of the fact that there is 10 per cent. to 14 per cent. still on raw material. Take a firm like Bowrings. They can import grapnels and sell them cheaper than they can be made here.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Do they pay 14 per cent. or do they pay 10 per cent.?

MR. HIBBS—The point is that the charge was 10 per cent. for raw material and it was increased from 10 per cent to 20 per cent.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Do you claim that there is no protection for the local market?

MR. HIBBS—The point which I wish to make is that on account of the increase from 10% to 20% they have been unable to carry on the business.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—It was 10% and is now 20%.

MR. HIBBS—Yes and when the matter of cost was figured out it was found that the business could not be carried on at all and it was impossible to find any workmen that will make grapnels. It is of no advantage to the fisherman for they can't get grapnels made at St. John's and have to buy the imported ones. Another point I would like to mention is that the duty on the whole thing has gone up 4%. I think the attention of the Minister of Finance should be called to this and ask him to give the matter his earnest consideration and I would ask the Prime Minister—as the Minister of Finance is not present—when you are going through the tariff not to fail to consider this and look into the matter and have the increase reduced down to the original duty of 10% because it will give these people a chance.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I can promise the hon. gentleman that we will look into it.

MR. HIBBS—Thank you. I have not had an opportunity to look into the report of the Board of Liquor Control as only this afternoon I glanced at it in the publication of the daily press but I notice that the revenue derived during last year show an increase in duties paid to the Commission I think something like $850,000. There is $395,675 of profit to which is added $450,000 duty, making a total of $845,000.00. I would like to ask the Leader of the Government if he will kindly state if he regards the liquor system has been a blessing to the country or the reverse.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—It would hardly be a blessing to any country, I think.

MR. HIBBS—I think, I consider the Government has been committing a crime to collect $850,000.00 for liquor. It is an outrage. I am convinced that if a private individual carried on such a business he would be put in jail. The Government should take immediate steps to bring in a bill to revise the act. It is an outrage.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —What would you suggest?

MR. HIBBS—Reduce the consumption, say from a bottle a day to a bottle a week. You will not require such a large staff and the expenses will consequenty be reduced and the Government will have done some good for the people of Newfoundland. You know the effect of liquor on the city and the country. You trade upon the weak minded people of the city and elsewhere and the Government reaps a profit of upwards of $845,000.00 for something we could do without. It is not a necessity, you cannot call it a luxury, because it is not. I am not a prohibition fanatic but at the same time I am not a hypocrite. Now in the report Mr. Mifflen, Chairman of the Board of Liquor Control, makes the following statements:

(Reads)

Well I want to say something about that. What right has Mr. Mifflen to use such words outside of his office and to talk that way in a report. He is making insinuations, he is casting reflections. The liquor that is sold at the controllers is not fit to sell. They are buying stuff that is worth 10c. and selling it for $1.50. It is plain profiteering. When you import such liquor and make such a vast profit off it I say it is profiteering. Most of the liquor imported by the Board of Liquor control is not good—most of the stuff that is brought into this country is not fit to drink. And then I don't think you should allow the Liquor Board to do as they please and we find so and so on the paper and we are to swallow it. During the past few months there is not any doubt but that several deaths occurred in the city of St. John's as a result of consumption of liquor, and it is reported that that liquor was purchased at the Board of Liquor Control. A well known doctor of this city made a statement a short time ago that several of his patients died as a consequence of drinking liquor. In fact, in one case a bottle of liquor was found in the bed with the patient where she lay dying.

MR. BROWNE—If you found a medicine bottle there you wouldn't say that she died of drinking medicine, would you?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —But seriously speaking, I have heard of cases where it is said that liquor has saved lives.

MR. HIBBS—That may be true in some cases but there is no doubt that most of the liquor imported into this country is bad. And it is upon the weak minded and poorest people in the country that the burden falls. You issue a report and show that you have taken out of the pockets of 80% of the people of this country the sum of $850,000.00 Then the large sum of $65,000 or thereabouts was taken from the people through the courts for fines. I would like to know how much of this sum was taken from the citizens of St. John's.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Very small proportion. Most of it was collected from the people of the West Coast for smuggling.

MR. HIBBS—Small percentage but still it was out of the pockets of the people.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —These people on the West Coast can well afford to pay.

MR. HIBBS—I do hope that the Prime Minister will make up his mind to bring in active legislation to reduce the system of a bottle a day to a bottle a week and I think I express the sentiments of this side of the House when I say, though I have not discussed it with them, that by so doing you will be doing something worth while for the people of this country. God knows but the people may return you again some day. I noticed from the statement of the revenue in Canada, I haven't the figures here now, but by the reduction of taxation in Canada an increase in the revenue was brought about. That is brought about by the fact that when duties were lowered many commodities were purchased by the people. The people found that they could purchase more. Our profits and revenue are low because of the increased duties—it is working the other way. The question is whether it is better to pile on duties and taxes or not. Very few people are in a position to put money aside but they spend all the money they earn, over and above fifty per cent of the people at any rate. You spend every cent you have to buy the commodities and necessities of life and even they are taxed 50%.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Speaker, I want to make a reference to a portion of the Speech from the Throne with reference to which there has been much talking—I refer to the Highroads Commission. In my opinion the Government well realize, if not this year then in a year or so, the road policy upon which they have based their hopes has not turned out as hoped. I do not mean to knock the policy of road-making but I do intend to refer to the system. We have been too extravagant—too much money has been spent in building roads in this country. We have not expended the money efficiently. If you were to look up the expenditure in connection with the Highroads Commission to date and take an estimate of the figures you will find that no one mile of reconstruction of the roads has cost less than about $7000.00. It is out of all proportion. Then ,again, there is another instance of extravagance. An enoromus amount has been spent by the Commission for the hire of cars to take the persons in connection with the supervising over the road. Why could they not buy small motor cars instead of hiring expensive cars. In one case $3,700.00 was paid for the hire of a motor car—enough to pay for four motors cars. Why not the Highroads Commission or the Eexecutive Government arrange to purchase a Rugby or Ford Sedan for this purpose and thus save this heavy expenditure of hiring a powerful car and paying from $30 to $40 a day to drive them all over Newfoundland. They would not do that in the United States. They would regard it as extravagant. This is only one of the many instances of extravagance taking place during the past two or three years. I would like to see good roads throughout Newfoundland. When you come to make them, you find that it is a very expensive proposition. To keep these roads in repair will cost about $400 a mile, and when you come to consider the number of miles, it will be about a quarter of a million dollars to keep them. Perhaps not this year, but next year or the year after. Each succcessive year will cost more. This does not include the interest on the $2,000,000. The expenditure was $220,000 over the amount allowed. I want to know by whose authority that was done. I understand that the Act of 1924-25 allowed $2,000,000.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — An extra $160,000 was allowed.

MR. HIBBS—Still there is a difference between $220,000 and $160,000 to be explained.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE.—The report on the table of the House, I think, will explain that and sets it out in full.

MR. HIBBS.—I have not had an opportunity as yet to go into the Report, but, with your permission, sir,

I shall have more to say on this subject later.

One word in connection with the Dock. When we go up there we find that it is a very fine job, but when you consider the cost, it is going to be a difficult proposition to make it pay. I heard a statement made that if the Dock was filled every day of the year, 300 days, and a reasonable profit made, it would not pay.

With the tremendous overhead expense, the interest on the two and a quarter million dollars, I think it is from two and a quarter to two and a half million dollars, and running expenses of the dock, it is absolutely impossible to make it a paying proposition. I remember I was in favour of it when it was introduced. The Prime Minister pointed out that in the opinion of the experts, that it would cost from $100,000 to $500,000 to repair the old dock, and then it is the same size and he explained that we would not be much better off. We were told that the Dock could be rebuilt for about $1,080,000, and would then be capable of taking very large steamers. It looked to me as if it would be useless to spend from $100,00 to $500,000 to repair the dock when it would bring no one any good, but since for the sum of $1,080,000 the dock could be re-constructed and could become a source of revenue for the Colony, it seemed at the time advisable to proceed with the re-construction and burden us with a two and a half million dollar dock that we can never pay, and on which the people of this country must pay the interest. It shows no business foresight whatever. If every action of the Government is bringing the same returns as the dock then it is little wonder that Newfoundland is in the position that she is in at the present time. It shows that bad business management, that the present Government came into office to do away with. They have deceived the people. Now I don't propose to take up the time of this House any longer, but before taking my seat I just want to say a word or two about the dissolution of this House that was discussed yesterday. Now I feel that the Prime Minister and every member of his party is anxious to dispatch the business of this House as quickly as possible. That is what we came in here for. But at the same time every member also owes it as a duty to the country and the people who sent him here, to express himself with regard to public affairs. But if a member talks and is not listened to and his recommendations are not accepted by the Government what is the use talking.

Now I feel that the conduct of this Chamber during the next two or three months rests with the Prime Minister. If the Prime Minister will be fair and reasonable not only to the Opposition but also to the country at large, and also to himself, he will give the assurance to the House that this session will be the last session of this Government unless, of course, they are returned again by the people. Nobody, as I said before, wants to embarass the Government, or to come in here and hold them up by preventing the passing of legislation. We want to co-operate with them. But we can't do that if the Prime Minister intends to hold on to office as long as he has one solitary man of a majority on his side of the House. I think it is sheer folly. He admits himself that he is not strong enough to pass drastic legislation. I presume he means by drastic legislation that is contentious. That is a frightful position for the Government to be placed in, to see their duty and not to be able to perform it. This is going to reflect down through the ages, and the Prime Minister's name will be tarnished by that. What does it matter to him whether we have an election in the all of 1927 or the Fall of 1928, or rather the Spring of 1928. Of course it is out of the question to talk of an election in the Fall of 1928 because then we will have four or five months when this House wil be without a parliament. No matter what crisis might arise no parliament can be called. That is not constitutional.

And as it has been said so often before the spring is an unsuitable time for an election in this country. The people don't want it, and after all the people rule. The voice of the people is the voice of God. And it must be respected. What reason is there for trying to cling on to office. No one will say that the Prime Minister is trying to hold on to office for the mere salary. because we all know what sacrifices he has made in taking over this office of premier. The people want an election; why not give them an election? Nobody knows how it is going to result. Maybe he will come back again with a majority. I hope then that he will stay in for four years, and I hope that whatever government gets in that they will be able to remain for their full term of office. But under the present circumstances there is nothing else to do. The Squires Government might have stayed in office until the fall of 1923, but they choose to go to the country in the spring of 1923, because the legislation which the Government bad to pass needed a mandate from the people. They went to the country and the country sent them back again.

I heard a gentleman state the other day that the Government had the rattles in its throat. Indicating that it was on its last legs. It is sufficient to say that the Government to-day finds itself in a very awkward position. The Government has got to come in here to-day and pass legislation at the suffrance of the Opposition, because there are sufficient men on this side of the House to hold up legislation if they so choose; and Mr. Halfyard reminds me that some of the members of the Prime Minister's own party would not support him if he tried to pass any drastic legislation.

However, the Prime Minister is a very sensible man and he knows what is the best to do. Since he finds himself in a critical position, then I would say that he should take the earliest opportunity of showing this House what he is going to do, and not keep us in suspense. Otherwise the Opposition would not be inclined to assist you very much in putting legislation through. It would not be in their interests or the interests of their constituents to do it. I hope that the Prime Minister will make some definite statement in this House as to what he intends to do. On opening day he made such a statement, but I think that it would be nothing short of folly to try to hold on to office under the present circumstances.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I propose to make a few observations in regard to the subject matter now before the House for discussion. Annually we are treated with the Speech from the Throne which is supposed to contain the policy or the future policy of the Government. Before dealing with the Speech from the Throne, I feel that I should fall in line with the other gentlemen who preceded me in this debate and extend first to my friend the Minister of Public Works my very hearty congratulations on his re-election to the position of Minister of Public Works. No doubt the Minister will agree with me that the cause of his re-election did not depend so much on the popularity of the Government which constitutes the dominating factor in Newfoundland to-day, but was due principally to his own personal popularity. Secondly, I would like to extend my congratulations to Dr. Mosdell, the newly-elected member for Fortune, who has taken up the duty once performed by the present Judge Warren. Thirdly, I feel that it behoves me to extend to my friend Mr. Brophy my hearty congratulations on his election in St. John's East. I feel that I a better prepared to extend my congratulations to Mr. Brophy in view of the fact that I personally took a prominent part in the bye-election which took place in St. John's East. No doubt, Mr. Speaker, that bye-election should have taken place two years ago, and it would have taken place two years ago if the circumstances existing to-day had existed two years ago. But the Government found themselves in an unhappy predicament that unless they opened St. John's East and held a bye-election there the Government would not be a Government to-day, that unless they opened St. John's East and had a bye-election there a breach would come from within their own ranks, and I would like to draw attention of the House, and with your permission Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few short comments on the procedure leading up to the bye-election in connection with St. John's East, and during the bye-election it was stated on public platforms by those who took a prominent part on the Government side, and it was also stated in the public press which are the Government organs, that the bye-election was principally brought about by members sitting in opposition to the Government. To prove my point with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will just read a short article which appeared in the "Evening Telegram" on March 8th. The peculiar coincidence about the article is this, that March 8th happened to be my birthday, and I thought that possibly the "Evening Telegram" in an indirect way would be extending me compliments of the day.

(Reads.)

Mr. Speaker, as I read that article I take it that the Government in that paper thrown to the public and insinuates that the Opposition, the members who are sitting on this side of the House were responsible in bringing about a bye-election in St. John's East. And I tell the author of that article now through the medium of this House, that the article is a deliberate falsehood. Two years ago, in 1925, a vacancy first existed in St. John's East. A petition was presented to this House by members of the Opposition asking that this district be opened, and the Government turned it down and we let it go at that. Two years expired. I say now that if it was constitutional to open the district in 1927 why was it not constitutional to open it in 1925? The Answer was simply that whilst in 1925, in the early part anyhow, shortly after Mr. Vinnicombe got the position of Commissioner on the Board of Liquor Control, the Government had a majority in this House of 25 to 11. They were afraid to open it then. But things happened between 1925 and 1927. And they thought that after that obstacle had been put away, that they could open the district and win it hands down. Consequently the author of this article comes out and insults every member on this side of the House. And I want to tell them through the medium of this House, that this evening I am able to throw that insult back in their face because we licked them in the election in St. John's East. Why? It is just as well to tell you. Because you came into power in 1924 pledged to certain promises not one of which the Government or the members of the district of St. John's East attempted to perform. Consequently on going through the district I found nothing but broken promises from beginning to end. That, sir, is the reason why the Government to-day has been defeated in St. John's East. Some one may say that it was because it was that Morine was in the party. I exone:ate that gentleman to-day. Mr. Morine is not half as unpopular today as the representatives of St. John's East themselves. And I have canvassed practically every house in the district. We have been told of the tactics that took place in connection with that election.

Two articles appeared, one after another in the "Telegram" and it is quite evident that both of them were inspired by the Minister of Fnance and Customs who by the way is not here this afternoon, because the articles published co:respondence between him and the firm of which I was a member, and they would not have been published unless they had been received from his department. It was followed up the next day by an attack on one of my family who has passed away. That article is here and I am going to refer to it now. That matter is going to be b:ought to the attention of the House this afternoon. I refer to the item of $1,100 which was paid by me to the Customs and which was owed by my father. A most contemptible act to attempt to dig him out of Belvedere ,and drag him in as an influence in the election in St. John's East. The article goes one scurrilously.

(Reads.)

Mr. Speaker, the author of this article, in the person of the editor of the "Telegram," who is responsible for it because he is the editor at the present time, is a civil servant in the employ of the Government. He fills a position in the Upper House and knocks at the door three or four times a year, to summon the members of this House to the Upper House, and when he is not doing that he is dragging people who are dead and gone into disrepute, and trying to ridicule them before the public. And then we are told that this Government is decent.

This is the most indecent Government that ever took charge of affairs in this country, and there is the proof of it. If I, sir, to-morrow was in any way connected with a Government that attempted to desecrate the dead I would sever my connection with that Government immediately. My father was in politics in Newfoundlaid for thirty-five years and the least they might have done was to let him rest, when he had passed away. Mr. Speaker, I regret that on opening day I was unable to extend the usual congratulations to the Mover and the Seconder of the Address in Reply. I would be out of order if I read the speech made by the Member for Harbour Main. But I take personal objection to the last part of it. I refer to what is called there Tammany tactics. I am not quite conversant with the history of Tammany. But it is sufficient to know that Tammany is an institution composed mostly of Irishmen, and they have produced such men as the present Governor of New York State and the Mayor of New York City, and if their tactics are disreputable then the people of New York State should not ask them to continue in office. Furthermore, Governor Smith who is now running for the highest office in the United States and that is President, has always stood by the Irish race and tries to promote their welfare. I am surprised that the Prime Minister himself an Irishman by birth, allowed the hon. member to get away with that kind of a slur on the country. Then he goes on to denounce the tactics of that type of people in St. John's East.

MR. CAHILL—Mr. Speaker, I did not speak of any particular people, I spoke in general, and if there is any gentleman in this House who is foolish enough to make the cap fit his own head I cannot help that.

MR. CASHIN—I am going to make the cap fit your own head. The people may be mislead sometimes. The people were misled in 1924, and I helped to mislead them, because I was a member of that administration that went to the country pledged to do certain things, and not only did they not do them when they arrived back into power, but they did quite the contrary, and now the cap fits your own head.

(Reads.)

The members of the Monroe administration have made fools and tools of the people, and the people have realised it to-day. They realised it three or four months ago, and, Mr. Speaker, I venture to prophesy that if any member of the Government ranks went back to his district to-day, outside one or two, to represent the Monroe administration, he would be driven from it. And I am sure that every member on both sides of the House will agree with me in that. Then we are told by the Prime Minister that the object of the Opposition is to obstruct and not to construct. But I will be sporty with the Prime Minister. If he can show me one constructive sentence uttered by any member of the Monroe party I will go out and let them put through their legislation without any further controversy. They talked a lot about legislation when they tried to delude, and succeeded in deluding, the people of this country in 1924.

Now we have heard a lot about deficits. I am going to spring one on the House now and I will challenge contradiction.

When I speak on deficits, I may remark, and on revenue, I feel that the Minister of Finance should be here. If he is not interested in what takes place here he might learn something by coming in here.

In 1925-26 you had a deficit of over two million dollars apart from the railway, and I can prove it, according to your own figures, and there is not a member on the Government side of the House who will contradict me, and I am going to prove it now.

According to figures tabled in this House last year and this year by the Finance Minister, according to their own figures, and if they are not correct it is the Government's fault and not mine, the deficit exclusive of railway operation for the year 1925-26 totalled the amazing sum of $2,025,-299.45. That is exclusive of railway operation. $2,025,299.45 and contradiction defied. In addition to that you have a deficit of over $700,000 on the railway.

I am glad to see the Prime Minister just coming in and I will repeat for his information what I have been saying. I stated that the deficit which you have been publishing in the papers as $81,000 on current account for the year 1925-26 is absolutely false and that the actual deficit according to figures tabled in this House by the Minister of Finance and Customs for the fiscal year 1925-26 is $2,025,299.45 exclusive of the deficit on the railway. And as I said a moment ago, contradiction defied, and according to your own figures. How do I arrive at that? In answer to a question asked by me during the last session of the House, on April 9th, 1926, the total revenue received from all sources, exclusive of the railway, from July 1st, 1925, to Dec. 31, 1925, was $4,652,807.53. And for the same period the total expenditure was $3,-789,905.00. We had a surplus then for that six months. Now in reply to a question asked there was tabled in the House yesterday by the Minister of Finance a statement showing that the total revenue from all sources, exclusive of the railway, for the period from January 1, 1925, to June 30th, 1926, amounted to the sum of $5,099,-743.75. Now having added this amount to the total revenue for the previous six months what do we find? We get a total revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, of $9,752,551.28. That is the total revenue, according to your own figures. Now we have got to get at the expenditure for the period from Jan. 1, 1926, to June 31, 1926. We get a total expenditure on current account of $7,987,945.73. Add that amount to the total expenditure of the previous six months, that is from July 1, 1925, to Dec. 31, 1926, the amount of $3,789,905.00. Add these two amounts together and we find that the total expenditure for 1925-26 was $11,777,850.73. It is a very simple sum in subtraction now. The revenue amounted to over 9 million and the expenditure to over 11 million. Subtract one from the other and we get a deficit of $2,025,299.45.

Around this country some time ago $81,000 was published. For the same fiscal year 1925-26 the deficit on the operation of the railway on current account was $741,557.73, which gives the modest deficit for all business affairs of the country, including railway and everything else, of $2,766,857.18, and according to figures tabled by the Government in this House, I defy successful contradiction. Think then of the Prime Minister coming in here on opening day and forgetting that we have any such deficit as existed in 1925-26, and telling us that we are going to have a deficit of a million and a half. I say that we are going to have a deficit of over 3 million for 1926-27, and that makes up over six million for two or three years. $81,-000! And then we are told by the Prime Minister himself that he is unable to bring in drastic legislation. No more drastic legislation can be brought in by the present Government because as a result of their administration during two years there was lost six and three-quarter millions, practically in this country, and they have got to borrow seven millions to what they owe, to-morrow. And I make this point right here and now that my estimate is absolutely conservative and below what actually will be the amount. I am going to show how I arrive at it. You had a deficit for 1924-25 but you didn't show it. You took a bite from 1925-26 to make a surplus for 1924-25 but you can't take another bite this year and you were found out then. But I will go on in connection with the year 1926-27. In the budget speech delivered last year in the cooked budget last year, the Finance Minister estimated the revenue for the fiscal year 1925-26 at $10,069,000. Therefore we find him short on his estimate over three hundred thousand dollars. He estimated the expenditure for the same period at $10,007,000, leaving him a surplus of something like $61,000, whereas actual figures show that the expenditure was over eleven millions or he was out in his estimate one million eight hundred thousand dollars on last year's budget, or a total under estimation of two million eight hundred thousand in one year. And then we don't need any new Government and don't need anyone to tell the present administration how the finances of this country should be run. No, they know it all. Let us take the fiscal year that is going to end in two months time. We discover that the total revenue received to April 30, 1927, amounted to $6,490,961.39 while the total expenditure for the same period was $7,309,765.72 or at the end of April 1927 we are in debt with a modest deficit to the tune of $818,-804.39. Let us suppose for argument's sake that the months of May and June will give for 1927 the same amount of revenue as in 1926, then where are we going to find ourselves. We won't get the same amount but let us suppose for arguments sake that we will and we find in that case that our revenue will be $6,490,961.33 plus $2,400,450.39 or a total revenue of $8,891,411.72, then in order to estimate the expenditure let us suppose for the sake of argument that the expenditure for May and June will be the same as for May and June last year. What do we find then? As a matter of fact we will have the additional payment this year of interest on five million dollars, but for argument's sake let us forget the interest. The expenditure for these two months was $4,435,932.36, and the expenditure up to April 30 which we must add to this was as I said $7,-309,765.72, giving us a total expenditure at the end of next June of $11,-745,698.08. Consequently we are going to get another deficit for the year 1926-27 exclusive of railway of $2,-854,286.36. Figures were tabled by the Prime Minister, here, in answer to questions asked regarding the operation of the railway up to February last year which showed a deficit of $418,830.22 and the Prime Minister estimated that $750,000 wil be lost on the railway this year. Let us say for arguments sake that only seven hundred thousand is lost. We will give them the benefit of any doubt to the extent of fifty thousand. Where are we going to be then? We will be approximately three and a half millions short on current revenue for 1926-27. Add these two years, last year and the present year, and we find that in two years the present administration have gone back six milion dollars and haven't told the Opposition anything about it but came in and said that they had a modest deficit of $81,000. I would like to know what they would call an immodest deficit. I don't need any gentleman in this House to tell me anything about the revenue of this country. Here are the figures and I defy anyone to contradict them including the mover and seconder of the address in reply. What are we going to do about it?

"What has happened since this time last year?" We left the House last year with seventeen on each side of the House exclusive of the Speaker. Since that transpired one member who sat on the Opposition side has crossed to the Government side. He did not cross. I am wrong. If he had crossed this House while it was open I would have admired him because he would have done it on principal, but he waited until the House closed and then took advantage of the fact and sneaked across after telling Mr. Hickman the previous evening in my presence that he would stand by him 'til the cows came home. Evidently the cows came home pretty early.

We have had since this House closed last year a very poor fishery and we are told in so many words that this country can no longer depend on the fisheries. The Prime Minister in his manifesto of 1924 very distinctly states that the fisheries will ever be the mainstay of the country. In 1924 the Prime Minister stated in his manifesto, which was broadcasted to the people of Newfoundland, that if conditions warranted he would be favorable to giving a bounty on fish. How that bounty was to be paid he was prepared to leave it to a Select Committee. To-day the question arises was it necessary or unnecessary for the fishermen of this country to receive a bounty on their catch of fish for the year 1926. Now let us compare the year 1926 with the year 1925 and see where we get off. In 1925 the shore fishermen caught somewhere in the vicinity of eight hundred thousand quintals and the Labrador fishermen caught about four hundred thousand quintals. The total value of these two catches would approximately be eleven million dollars, or in other words the fishermen of Newfoundland earned eleven million dollars. In 1926 the shore fishery was worth five and a half million dollars in round figures and the Labrador fishery was valued at about one and a half million dollars. That means that the fishermen of Newfoundland earned about seven million dollars for the year 1926 and it means that for that year the fishermen earned four million dollars less than they earned for 1925. Now did conditions arise during that period whereby the high cost of living was reduced by the Government to the extent of four million dollars? No, I think that every person within hearing of my voice this evening will admit that no such conditions arose, but that rather did the cost of living increase. Consequently, the Prime Minister, because of what he had promised in his manifesto and because of the decrease in the catch of fish last year, should have taken this matter into his serious consideration with a view to helping out the fishermen, but instead he did not even suggest or attempt anything that would in any way help to tide them over their difficulties. Rather did the Prime Minister and his colleagues slap the fishermen in the face so to speak and told them "we used you in 1924 and we are finished with you until the next general election."

I think, Mr. Speaker, that I am voicing the sentiments and the feelnig of the entire electorate of this country when I say that not a single Monroe member will ever again dare look at the fishermen straight in the face when a general election comes round. If they do they deserve all that they get. Now, what happened to the fisheries of this country? Instead of encouraging them the present Government discouraged them by their Revenue Bill of 1925. The other day when Mr. Lake made a statement about lines and twines the Prime Minister told him he did not know what he was talking about. In 1925 an extra duty of fifteen per cent was put on lines and twines—ten per cent duty and five per cent sales tax. I know that to-day I can import lines and twines, provided that the duty was off, considerably cheaper than the Ropewalk people are selling them for by fourteen per cent. The other day I cabled abroad for a quotation for one hundred dozen of eighteen pound steam tarred cotton lines for handlining and eighteen lines for trawls and I got an answer for $770.00; whereas for the same article the Ropewalk quoted $900.00. Now I am not attacking that corporation because the Prime Minister happens to be a Director or a Shareholder, but I am attacking them on the grounds that that Company was making large profits prior to getting extra fifteen per cent protection, and any Company that can water its stock so frequently does not deserve encouragement at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. This Company was incorporated about twenty-eight years ago when a man received six shares for $200.00. To-day these shares are worth $2,700.00 for the $1,200.00 invested. So it figures out that if a man on the street who bought a watered stock received fifteen per cent on his investment, the original shareholders receive forty per cent. and to that fact I also defy successful contradiction. Now, sir, I consider that this is indecent legislation no matter what corporation or concern is involved. The Government is encouraging the fisheries by giving this huge sum of sixty thousand dollars a year to this Corporation as further protection and then tell the country they are having decent Government. I have heard and know something about plutocratic Government and I think the cap fits the present administration. Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to put forward a suggestion, one which I feel will not meet with the approval of the Prime Minister. If I were in power to-morrow, I would bring in regulations regarding the exportation of salt codfish. Why? In order to keep the merchants of Water Street from becoming commercially insane. Twenty five years ago the greatest bulk of our codfish went to the different markets abroad in sailing vessels. To-day the fish go in steamers and on which there is decreased insurance and freight rates. But the great trouble is that the steamers, each take a cargo of between twenty and thirty thousand quintals and they sail with n a week or two of each other. The whole lot of this fish is sold on consignment and practically arrive together with the result that the price slumps. What happens today if Pr nce Edward Island sends here two hundred thousand barrels of potatoes on consignment? The price would go down of course. The same applies to the price of fish or any other product, and, as I have already said, I would enforce regulations regarding the exportation of codfish in order that the markets would not be flooded l ke they are at the present time. That would tend to keep up the price rather than lower it, and the fishermen indirectly would receive the benefit from it. Now with regard to the cull of fish. A great controversy arose last year over this much vexed question and there is not a merchant on Water Street to-day who seems to know when a fish is number one or number two. They all seem to differ in their opinions, but when they are exporting the fish they do not differ. I would enforce regulations that fish should be culled because under existing rules I can buy fish as number two or three and there is no law to prohibit me from exporting it as number one and this kind of thing is being done on Water Street to-day and I know it. Now, Sir, that tends to degenerate the markets abroad and the merchants here are responsible and not the cure which the fishermen here are supposed to give it. The fisherman brings his product to the local market and tries to get the best price he can for it, and he is not to blame in the least for what happens that fish after he disposes of it. Last year it happened—what never occurred before in this country—that many fishermen who came to St. John's with their fish could not sell at any price and they had to take their cargoes home again. A fisherman's Paradise how are you? It was truly termed the other day by a member of the Opposition a fisherman's hell and I entirely concur with that gentleman's statement. It would have been much better if the Prime Minister in his speech the other day had been frank to both sides of the House and told us the truth about the financial condition of the country. if he did we would all be prepared to get together in endeavouring to bring about some constructive policy that might upright the old ship of state; but instead of that he told us that our financial condition was not half as bad as it actually is. The first paragraph of the Speech from the Throne deals with the Labrador Boundary. The question has already been ably dealt with by several gentlemen from this side of the House and it is unnecessary for me to comment on it. Some gentlemen differ as to who was responsible or who was not responsible for winning it. I say that the present administration, by accident, were in power when the decision was awarded, but this Government and the newspapers supporting them did not give one word of praise, after the award had been given, to those who had been connected with the Labrador Boundary before the present administration were thought of—I refer to the late Mr. M. W. Furlong. Mr. Furlong spent a number of years working on that case and the press never said a word about it. The only intimation of him was a letter that appeared from Ferryland district and drew attention to the fact that Mr. Furlong had done considerable with winning, but the present Government, true to their record, ignored and forgot the great deeds done by those people who have since passed away. The Government wanted to take all the credit to themselves in spite of the fact that they were prepared to sell the Labrador territory a few years ago for fifteen million dollars. Now you have got the Labrador Boundary what are you going to do with it? We will hear from the financial papers that our borrowing powers will be enhanced by the acquisition of the Labrador, but under the circumstances will our paying qualities be enhanced to enable the fishermen to pay the national debt or would it be better if the Labrador had gone to Canada. The question now is what future Governments should attempt to do with regard to the Labrador Boundary.

During the recent by-election in St. John's East, the Prime Minister heard me, I said that if I could do it to-morrow I would let Canada have the Labrador Boundary, exclusive of the three mile limit, for the national debt of Newfoundland; and I would do so to-morrow and what would happen? You would have about $400,000.00 duty taken off and the result would be a reduction of 4 or 5 per cent. taxes, and then the Government, even the Monroe Government, would have something to feel proud of. But if we hold on to it and hold out for a price, what will be the result? What of the people of this country? Look at the present financial position. Here we are $6,000,000.00 in the hole. You could borrow money to pay that and increase the national debt. You will have to raise a loan of $8,000,000.00 if you want to have anything, and part of this amount at any rate should be placed on the local market. In reply to a letter which I received from the Minister of Finance & Customs, in which he states that it was useless to consider placing a loan on the local market because it wouldn't sell, I wish to place on record now that that statement is absolutely false and untrue. In 1918 or 1919 the Coalition Government raised a loan or two, I know there was at least one, and had no trouble to sell it. Last year $5,000,000 loan was not advertised in the public press of this country but sold, and as far as the people are concerned, was sold secretly to the Bank of Montreal at 96 and five eights and was sold on the following day in London at ninety nine. This means that $225,000 was lost to the people of Newfoundland. Why wasn't a loan of $1,000,000 at any rate raised on the local market. I know one party who was anxious to buy some of this stock and went to Mr. Paddon and he told him that they had already sold it in London and it was sold in London at ninety nine. You could get ninety nine for a loan here because of the advantages which it offers. But the people of this country were not given the chance to save the money for the country, but it was allowed to be sold to outside investors. Still you say that you are square and tell us that you are a trustworthy Government. Why, if you can point out one decent action that you have done I will take back everything I said before.

I notice that in the Speech from the Throne it is stated that the Income Tax is going to be re-imposed. That is one piece of legislation that I have advocated from the beginning. When the Tax was removed in 1924 I opposed it from the start. I opposed it on the grounds that it was class legislation. And why? In 1924 when the Bank Tax and Income Tax were removed by this administration, the Bank Tax was bringing into the revenue of the country about $125,000, or these two taxes together brought into the revenue in the vicinity of $400,000 to $500,000. And where did you get then? The Budget would not balance: it was made to balance. You had to get money somewhere, so in place of the Bank Tax and the Income Tax there were taxes put on all the commodities of life—lines, twines, tobacco, clothes and everything else that is used by the common people of the country and still you find yourselves $6,000,000 short, and you come in here with long faces and first tell us, in so many words, that you are up against it, then plead for mercy and then tell us untruths regarding the finances of this country. The Auditor General's Report, Mr. Speaker, is a farce from beginning to end. That is one department that, under the existing circumstances, should be wiped out because it is its duty to tell the correct financial position of the country, and that it has not done.

The Government intends to have the Income Tax re-imposed. I am in favour of the re-imposing of that tax in this form and subject to the condition that you do not tax the man with a salary of $2,000.00 and a family—start with $2,500.00 and upwards. These are the men that you should collect from—somewhere in the vicinity of $400,000.00. The Dominion Government of Canada for Income Tax alone has added $57,000,000 to the revenue of the country. What we want is not to bring about this class distinction. The Government of a country should be of, by and for the people, and instead of that we have a crowd of plutocrats.

It is a fact that during the recent by-election in the East End, the Government sent into the out-lying fishing settlements and told the inhabitants that unless they voted for the Government candidate that they would get no supplies this year. A clean Government, how are you. Why, it is enough to sicken any decent man —to keep him from going into public life again. Actually sent agents into these fishing districts of Newfoundland and said that.

That reminds me of the Besco Contract. The contract which the Prime Minister himself says he never saw. He read his speech when introducing it to the House last year and still he says that he never saw it.

At the present juncture it will be impossible to go into details in connection with this matter because one is accused of obstructing legislation. There is no legislation here to obstruct. Up to the moment, and after the legislature was called together to face the country this year there was no legislation drawn up. You opened the House three months after it should have been opened. You opened it at that late date because it suited you, politically.

In the Fall of last year when your candidate was defeated in Fortune Bay the challenge to open up the East End was not accepted. And when it was announced in March that the by-election was to take place April 21st, no legislation had been gotten ready. You went down to ignominious defeat and suffered condemnation at the hands of the people. You went into this District in 1924 and made all sorts of promises which you have not attempted to carry out and this is the result. The people are having none of it.

If I was employed in the service of the Prime Minister for four years and stipulated that provided I carried out my duties in an honest and trustworthy way my employ was secured for four years, and if I fell down on the job what would he do with me? He would fire me.

The Prime Minister and his Government have fallen down on the job. They went to the country in 1924 and made elaborate promises which they told the people that if they were elected to office they would carry out. But they have failed. Why, they have not attempted to carry out one promise contained in their elaborate manifesto. Expenditure and taxes have increased, and the Prime Minister is going to have to contend with an increased expenditure of a quarter of a million more, and what is he going to do about it? Does this Government want to stay there, or is this the reason for the present administration staying there. May be there is some reason and I would like to hear it. The only reason that the Prime Minister threw out on opening day was: "I have found out that it is a difficult job to clean up, but I consider that we are as good as you fellows over there. We are going to stay here and we are not going to give them the Government." I want to ask him who asked him for the Government? I would not take it as as it stands at the present time. The present Government is in the greatest financial mess and I make this statement that there are a great number in it to-day who don't know and don't care. And I will assert that the statement made here this evening was unknown to any member outside the Executive Government, the statement concerning the financial conditions of this country.

Let us take the loan that was raised here last year. What happened to it? And then you brought in an item that you will not have to pay for the next twenty years, perhaps not even then. You brought in a loan bill for five million dollars and it was voted for specific purposes.

(Reads)

Reference to this Railway purchase loan will show you that you did not know what you were talking about, because the railway purchase loan is this, that when the loan bill went through this House for a $2,000,000 guarantee of bonds, we were told that these bonds could be raised in sterling or in our own currency. These people took the position afterwards that they would be raised in sterling on the other side. And each year it depends on what the sterling pound is worth as to what interest will be paid on it. And they came in here and had a great hurrah about this.

The Labrador Boundary question had taken $75,000, and that I suppose has been taken out of the million dollars voted for Public Works. Mr. Speaker, when we voted for that Bill last year we were given to understand that the amounts voted were to be devoted to specific work. The Colonial Secretary was asked that a sum of money equivalent in proportion to what my district was entitled to be allocated, and it was turned down. The excuse was that it had been received through the avenue of the High Roads Commission. But when that money was voted there we were told in this House that recommendations were going to be considered from the representatives of the various districts, as to how that money was going to be spent in the various districts. That was ignored once those doors were closed. Some districts got it. Burgeo and La Poile did not fare off bad. It was easy to know that there was a by-election in the air. That district received between fifteen and twenty thousand dollars. Five or six thousand dollars was spent on snow shovelling in St. John's East.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—And $90,000 in the city.

MR. CASHIN—But where is the balance. What is the proper routine when moneys are voted in that way in this House. Accounts should be opened for these various works, and the money spent after the loan has been raised should be charged in these accounts, which is not done. The only excuse is that it has been done by previous Governments. And then they talk about carrying out the affairs of the country. in an honest, industrious and intelligent manner. I say now sir, without fear of contradiction that no minister of the Crown at the present time knows the first thing about the management of the affairs of this country. Surely they would not give me as an example of a good business man, the Finance Minister who estimated a surplus last year of $61,000 and it turned out to be a deficit of $3,000,000, and for the previous year he estimated a surplus and he had a deficit of nearly another $3,000,000. Now, Sir, with regard to this revenue and expenditure, and there are few members in this House that have followed this matter up as closely as I have. That is one big thing that I have followed up very closely since I became a member of this House. I have asked peculiar questions in peculiar ways in order to check up and find out whether the sums are correct. And I make that statement again, and I make it with regret, that this country is in a financial mess. If so why does not the Prime Minister and the Government come in here and lay the facts before us, and say "It is up to you to help us." But instead of that the Prime Minister came in here the other day and told the members of this side of the House that they were obstructionists, and were hindering the promotion of legislation on this side of the House. Who has hindered the progress of the country during the past three years? Who has brought about the conditions of affairs where we have a $6,000,000 deficit to-day to face? I am going to tell you.

When you came into power in 1924 you had a dificit of one and a half millions to pick up. You picked it up out of a loan. Then you borrowed $6,000,000. You have to pay five or five and a half per cent. on that. That is over $300,000 more interest annually. Last year you borrowed another $6,000,000. That is another $300,000. Every year since you have been in office you have been borrowing money. Last year you borrowed $5,000,000. That means another quarter of a million interest, which makes over one million dollars in interest alone since you came into power. This year you will have to borrow another seven or eight millions at five per cent. According to the figures before us to-night there has been a public expenditure of one and a half million dollars for three years. And the revenue has decreased accordingly. And why? Because every member of this House will agree with me when I state that people buy goods when the market is down. When the prices are up then they buy just sufficient to keep body and soul together. And the people are not purchasing as they did before the new tariff came into existence, and that is why the revenue is gone down and the expenditure is gone up.

Now as regards Besco. One would gather from this Speech from the Throne, that it was the Government to whom the credit was due for having made a contract with Besco this year. As a matter of fact they only renewed a contract that has been going on for years. Besco would not have kept that mine open if they could not sell the products of that mine. But with regard to the Besco contract it was a most iniquitous contract.

The Executive Government brought a Bill into this House, but a vote of want of confidence was passed on them by their own Party and the Bill was thrown out. Then there was a Bye-Election in St. John's East and during which attempts were made by the Government to threaten the miners of Bell Island. The Government told them through their press that unless Barter was elected there would be no more work at Bell Island and they thought the miners were gullible enough to swallow it. The Government had nothing whatever to do with that contract, but they evidently forget the fact that Besco to-day is in the hands of a liquidator and that any contract they make with Besco is made with a defunct Company and not worth the paper it is written on. Still the Government are prepared to give all kinds of concessions to Besco any day. Why? Is it because they get a superior article of coal? No, because there is nothing worse than the coal that they purchase from Besco. The Prime Minister told us that their coal contains six per cent. ash. I contend it is more like twelve per cent. ash, and to supplement my statement ask the engineers and firemen of the locomotives and coastal steamers. Still we have the Government stating that they are going to stay here and continue that class of iniquitous legislation and giving away the taxapayers money. Now I maintain that the railway, sir, if properly handled and efficiently and economically operated, can pay this year, notwithstanding the fact that it was $400,000.00 short at the end of February and that $50,000.00 was thrown away a few days ago on coal to supply the railway. Now what have the Government done to improve the railway? They re-railed the first division to Clarenville and I must say we did not get too good a bargain in the purchase of those rails. The ones you are getting from Besco are not too desirable either, and it would be advisable to see that they are properly inspected. The steamboats get a subsidy of between $350,000 and $400,000 for operating for the Post Office, and last year they only showed profits of about $20,000.00; whilst yesterday passenger rates for fishermen going north were increased by fifty per cent. Only this morning I met a man at my office. He said that last year it cost $7 for a man to go to the Groais Islands and to-day he said it cost him $10.20 per man. Still yesterday the Prime Minister could not tell Mr. Scammell whether that kind of thing had been going on or not. I feel, Sir, that the Minister of Finance and Customs owes to this House and to this country to come here and attend to the debates of this House. I want to give him a few lessons, and if he refuses to come in here now probably he will refuse to come in here if a vote is taken. I want to knock in his head the large deficit that exists. I hate to be saying anything behind a man's back that I would not say to his face. I take it now, Mr. Speaker, that he is afraid to come in. Well, I am going to wait until he does come, supposing we stay here until Christmas. It is a lovely state of affairs when a Finance Minister is either ashamed or afraid to come into the House, and still you want to continue your degrading legislation. In my opinion, if the members of the Opposition did what was right they would not allow an item of legislation to be touched until the Finance Minister is told the truth, and if he does not come to hear it we should leave our seats and let the Government do as they like. As long as the Finance Minister can sit outside in the Government room and play cards I intend to stand here reading books until he puts in an appearance. I want to tell the country the correct financial position, although the Finance Minister is the one supposed to do it. When I criticized last year's Budget the Prime Minister called me a financial wizard, but neither he nor any of his party can sneer at me to-day because they are not able to do it and because they know that what I said of last year's Budget is unfortunately only too true. It is very evident, Mr. Speaker, that the Finance Minister is not going to be asked to come into the House and it is evident that my request has been ignored, and I will leave it to those who are in the House at the present time to take notice that the Finance Minister is too cowardly to come in and hear the truth. I realise that the Government has taken a defiant attitude towards my remarks. Why? Because I helped to trim them from the big chief down. I presume the Finance Minister will be in his seat to-morrow and I will be here too and I intend to repeat to-morrow what I have said this afternoon. I have a lot more to say but I am not going to say it while he is absent from the House; but I am going to say that he inspired that article that appeared in the "Evening Telegram" against one not able to defend himself, and also threatening that if I said anything derogatory to the Government to-day that other stuff would be dragged up against me. They can drag up all they like for what I care. I am here now and the Finance Minister is afraid to face me. He would be in the same position if he were facing someone in an election in St. John's West. We were told in the bye-election in St. John's East that some of us were too cowardly to face a Government on a platform. I do not know whether the Prime Minister would say that to-day or not because I think he and his party got their medicine in that fight. If I am in order, Mr. Speaker, I say that the present administration are the most dishonest bunch that ever took office in this country, and as such should be immediately thrown out, not by the Opposition but by the people of the country as a whole, because they are absolutely incapable of transacting the affairs of the country. They have made an ignominious mess of Newfoundland. A few years ago this country was in fairly good circumstances, comparatively speaking, but the present Government came into power and deliberately went to work and used their positions for their own personal advantage. It is very easy to see why the Government do not want at the present juncture to go to the polls and ask the people of Newfoundland for a free entry and a further lease of life. They feel now that by sitting still and saying nothing while Finance Minister is afraid to come in here they will tire us out. The Prime Minister made an assertion to that effect the other evening. But two can play that game. They ought to be proud of themselves to know that their Finance Minister is afraid of a poor little creature like me. I wish they had to bring him to Bell Island. There are people in the Government who are laughing at me to-day, but they have every reason to cry in some respects. The people who are laughing were behind the "Evening Telegram" in their attack, and that paper should be the last in Newfoundland to attack that gentleman. But stabbing in the back is all they are able to do. We were sneered at last year in this House by the Minister of Justice retorted that the Opposition candidate would be snowed under. I want to tell the Minister of Justice now that he and his associates did not know how to run a campaign. The results showed it, but the Minister did not figure that out. Why? He was afraid to open the district in 1925 or last year, but he waited until 1927 to do it, and even then it was not through his good wishes it was opened. It was done when he was forced to open it and his Finance Minister was betting against him at the end of the campaign. In moving the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker, I promise the Finance Minister that, whilst I am only half finished with him, I will give him a good many lessons before I am through.

On motion the debate was adjourned to to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Friday, May 27th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, May 27th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Scammell, from La Scie, re a telephone line.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of question.

Mr. Randall gave notice of question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, when the debate adjourned last evening I was speaking to the House with regard to the deficit on revenue for the year 1925-26 and for the year 1926-27. The Minister of Finance and Customs did not see his way clear to attend and listen to my remarks, but I see this evening that he is present, so I propose for his benefit to reiterate some of the statements that I made yesterday. We notice in the Speech from the Throne delivered here on May 11th a paragraph dealing with a deficit which reads as follows:

(Reads: "There will be a deficit on current account, etc., ...to cotton."

The Speech then goes on to say what methods the Government may take in order to try, or not to try, as the case may be, to offset that deficit. During the recent bye-election in St. John's East assertions were made on the public platform, as a matter of fact I personally made them, that there would be a deficit on current account of over three millions. Today I propose, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, to read to the House a letter inserted in the Evening Telegram and signed by Sir John Crosbie, Minister of Finance and Customs, in which he states that the deficit on current account for 1925-26 was only $81,896.51, and I make a statement here now that that statement is false and I propose to prove it. With your permission, sir, I will read parts of this letter.

(Reads)

It is unnecessary for me to go much further with that letter, but I recommend that statement made by that famous British statesman to the very earnest consideration of the Honourable Minister of Finance and Customs and the Members of the Monroe Administration. As I mentioned the letter states that the deficit was $81,000 and odd, and I make the statement here now without fear of successful contradiction that the actual deficit exclusive of railway amounted to $2,025,299.45 for that year, and I shall prove it by the Minister of Finance's own figures tabled in this House. So I propose to reiterate my statements of yesterday for that gentleman's consideration. According to figures tabled by the Minister of Finance and Customs the deficit as I said a moment ago reached the amazing amount of $2,025,299.45, made up as follows. In answer to questions asked by me on April 9th, 1926, which answer I have kept since last year, the total revenue for the six months of the last half of 1925 amounted to $4,652,807.53 and the total expenditure to $3,789,905.00. Consequently we had a surplus for that six months. In reply to a question on the order paper of the opening day of this House I was informed that the total revenue from all sources exclusive of railway from January 1, 1926, to June 30, 1926, amounted to $5,099,743.75. Add that five million and odd to the total revenue for the previous six months of the last half of 1925 and you will get your gross revenue which I may say is correct according to the Auditor General's statement in the Minister of Finance's letter, that is $9,752,551.28. Now for the period from Jan. 1 to June 1926 the total expenditure on current revenue was $7,987,945.73. These figures were tabled in this House by the Finance Minister himself and in spite of that this letter appeared to attempt to mislead the people of the country. Now we will go further. For the period from Jan.

1 to June 30, 1926, the total expenditure was seven millions odd as I said, and we add to this the total expenditure of the previous six months, and we get the gross expenditure on current account for the fiscal year 1925-26, that is $7,987,945.73 plus $3,789,-905, or $11,777,850.73.

The Auditor General knows to-day that that statement is incorrect and the Finance Minister knows that that statement is incorrect.

We found that the gross revenue was $9,752,551.28. We therefore get a deficit exclusive of railway mind you, by subtracting this nine millions and odd from the eleven and odd expenditure of $2,025,299.45. The railway lost for the fiscal year 1925-26 $741,557.73, and so we get a gross deficit on all business affairs of the country for the fiscal year 1925-26 of $2,766,857.18, and and I defy the Minister of Finance and the Auditor General and any other general responsible to the present Monroe administration to contradict it. The Finance Minister in his budget speech last year estimated the revenue for the fiscal year 1925-26 at ten million and sixty nine thousand. He estimated the expenditure at ten million and seven thousand, and I think he is a little short in his estimate regarding the expenditure. His estimate would leave a surplus of somewhere around 61,000. The Finance Minister's figures show that the gross expenditure was over eleven millions, or he was out in his estimate one million eight hundred thousand on last year's budget, or a total underestimate of two million eight hundred thousand approximately.

Let us take the fiscal year ending June 30th a month and a half from now. We have been told that the total revenue received to April 30th, 1927 was $6,490,961.33, and the total expenditure for the same period amounted to $7,309,755.72. At the end of April therefore you had a deficit of $818,794.39. You have another two months to go from that. For the sake of argument to judge where we will be let us say that you will get the same revenue and have the same expenditure as last year. There will be more expenditure amounting to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars interest on your loan last year, but I will give you the benefit of the doubt. We find then, calculating on that basis, that your revenue will be $8,891,411.72 and your total expenditure $11,745,-698.08. Therefore you will have a deficit for the year 1926-27 exclusive of railway of $2,854,286.36. On opening day of this House the Prime Minister stated that he estimated the loss on railway for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1927, would be approximately $750,000. I am going to take fifty thousand off and make it seven hundred thousand. Add that to the $2,-854,286.36 and we find we are going to get a deficit for 1926-27 of approximately $3,554,286.36. That is a modest deficit. There is a modest deficit of over six million in two and a half years. I feel that a thorough investigation of the work of the Government and of our present state of affairs should be held at the present time and at once because they have deceived and attempted to deceive the people. I defy the Minister of Finance and Customs to deny my statements, and I will ask him directly now, through you Mr. Speaker , if these statements are correct or incorrect?

HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—They are absolutely untrue.

MR. CASHIN—I say that according to your own figures.

HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS — It doesn't make any difference what you say.

MR. CASHIN—I say that that deficit is correct according to your own figures and I will prove it. If the Auditor General's report of the revenue agrees with mine, it proves that I am correct there. But in order to show a small deficit the expenditure of one month was withheld and let go into the next year and the Auditor General's report tabled in the House these days is a mere farce because it doesn't show a correct statement of the country. I put it to you that if an ordinary business man hired an auditor who found out that a book-keeper was doing something that could be regarded as crooked with the books, then the Auditor would be in just as bad a position as the man who did cook the books. The Minister of Finance knows and the Prime Minister knows that my statements are correct, and this letter, under the signature of the Minister of Finance, published on April 13th, was done in an attempt to deceive the people of this country, the same as the Prime Minister's Manifesto of 1924, and they did not get away with it this time. Then we find that same paper, at the instigation, I might say, of the Minister of Finance, attacking people who have long since passed out of the world.

HONOURABLE THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS — Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I did not happen to be in the House yesterday, but I heard that the honourable gentleman, speaking, remarked that there appeared in the Evening Telegram certain communications instigated by me. I state that is untrue, and I ask him to withdraw.

MR. CASHIN—What I stated is true, because there appeared correspondence between the Finance Minister and the firm with which I am connected, and that could not be got otherwise but through him.

HONOURABLE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—That correspondence was tabled in the House last year, and I think you will find it in G. N. Read, Son & Watson's report.

HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER—The Honourable Minister of Finance has denied the allegation made by the honourable member for Ferryland, and he will therefore withdraw his statement.

MR. CASHIN—I regret that, while I might have to withdraw my statement to be in order here, the impression created in my own individual mind cannot be changed. To continue with my remarks regarding the deficit, I should have stated that I hope and trust that before this Assembly closes, it will take the necessary steps to bring before the Bar of this House the Auditor General of this country and ask him to lay the bald facts before the members of the House. Now, I am going to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt, according to the figures tabled by the Minister of Finance, what I have been stating that that $81,000 is incorrect. Here are his own figures. Last year on April 8th, 1926, in reply to a question of mine on the Order Paper, the total revenue from July 1st to 31st December, 1925, was $4,652,807.53, and the total expenditure for the same period was $3,789,905.00. The other day I asked a similar question directed to different months, and here are the Minister of Finance's own figures, and I will read them month for month, and I will ask any individual member of the House to take them down, if he should wish to do so, and see for his own benefit if I am correct or incorrect.

(Reads: Revenue and Expenditure for months of January to June, 1926).

Now, from my question last year, $4,652,807.53 was the total revenue for the half year previous to that. We now find that the total revenue from January to June, 1926, by adding up the amounts on the statement I have just read, was $5,099,743.75. By adding these two amounts, we find our total revenue to be $9,752,551.28, and that is correct, as stated by the Auditor General. Now the total expenditure of these same six months, from the statement I have read, comes to $7,987,945.73. We add to that $3,789,905.00, the expenditure for the previous six months, which we got in an answer to a question tabled by the Finance Minister last year. The total expenditure for the year is then $11,777,850.73, and then subtracting the amount of the revenue, we find the deficit of $2,025,299.45, and I state that and defy contradiction, or else the Minister of Finance has ben tabling incorrect formation in this House, and if the Minister of Finance gets up now and says that he has tabled incorrect information in the House, I will take back all I have said with regard to his incorrect statement of defiicit, so it is one thing or the other. Now, while the Honourable Minister is in his seat, I would like to remind him of the fact that last year there was passed a Loan Bill of $5,000,000, to be spent in various ways, and to be devoted to various purposes, and I say it was spent illegally and wrongfully by the present Executive Government, and I might say that at the time that Loan Bill was being put through I strongly advocated on the floors of this House that at least one million should be put on the local market in this city. In reply to a question, asked the other day, the Minister of Finance said that considerable difficulty had been encountered previously in placing other loans in Newfoundland, and consequently he did not attempt to place any of it on the local market. I don't know what time the difficulty was encountered on the local market. I think during the Coalition Government the Loan was underwritten in a couple of weeks. We have $28,000,000 in the Savings Bank, which would be as safe in Government Bonds paying 5 per cent. as it is in the Bank at 3 per cent. This Loan was not advertised as is usual and as it should have been.

But this loan which was raised last year was sold, as far as the people were concerned, secretly, to the Bank of Montreal at ninety-six and five-eighths, and they sold it in London for ninety-nine, an increase of two and three-eighths, which multiplied by five million comes to between $120,000 and $125,000. The people of this country were not given the chance to save that money for the country, but it was put into the hands of the Bank for whose benefit the bank tax was removed in 1924. We were told by the Prime Minister at the opening day of this session that they intended to carry on, and would not give up the reins of office because the Opposition were not fit to take it. I say without hesitation that any party would be more capable of looking after the affairs of any country than they are. In view of the existing desperate condition of affairs, financial and otherwise, it is time we got together and see what can be done, show up the present state of affairs, have the cold facts laid on the table of this House, and make them tell the Opposition members the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth about the finances of the country. In spite of that, they come in here, and have to raise a loan within the next two months for at least a sum of $7,000,000. And why? Because you are $6,000,000 in the hole. You may have one and a half millions to your credit, which brings it down to $5,000,000, but judging by the way things are managed, there must be a number of outstanding bills to pay, and you will have to come in here and ask for a loan to pay these bills, which it should not be necessary to do, if you had carried out the promises which you made when you came in in 1924.

Let us look over their record, and show them up in the true light. I was a member of the Monroe Government in 1924, and we brought in an elaborate Speech from the Throne, and promised wonderful legislation. We were going to take off the Income Tax. Off of whom, you ask. Was it off the fishermen? No, it was off the wealthy merchants of Water Street. Very well. We carried on for a year, then it was discovered that we had no money to pay our bills, and we said we have got to put on extra taxes. We took up the tariff, and, as one of the Ministers has said, we would have to eat it before we could understand it. Even the Minister of Finance did not understand it. There was 15 p.c. on lines and twines, extra duty on tobacco, and two cents a pound on oleomargarine and butter; extra duty on clothing, and on every other article needed absolutely by the common people to enable them to live. These taxes were put on to reduce the deficit caused by dropping the Income Tax and Bank Tax.

MR. BROWNE—We did not take off the Income Tax that year. The Income Tax was taken off in 1925.

MR. CASHIN—I may be incorrect in the year, but I am not incorrect in principle. In the first year we discovered we could not balance the budget, and as I said just now, we put a tax of 15 per cent. on lines and twines, two cents a pound on butter, extra tax on tobacco, clothing, and everything necessary to enable the common people to live. And what happened? Under the existing circumstances the common people found it difficult almost to live, and consequently had to cut their garment according to the cloth, and do without necessities of life in many cases, and live on a decreased scale by not buying as much goods, for the simple reason that the prices had gone up too much. If they had not removed the Income Tax they would not be in such a mess, because they would have collected one and one-half million dollars from that source in a year and a half. Now let us see the consequences. I may tread on the corns of the Prime Minister, because he may be a director or shareholder of the Colonial Cordage Company, but that is not my concern. The tariff put a duty of 15 p.c. on lines and twines which is an additional 15 p.c. protection for the Colonial Cordage Co.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—You acknowledged yesterday there was a Sales Tax, why go over the same ground again?

MR. CASHIN—Yes, I am going over the same ground again. I am going over it every day, until the tax on lines and twines is taken off, because I don't consider it is right. For now the people who invested money in that concern are reaping the benefit. For example, a person who has six shares paid $1,200, and they are now worth $2,7000. This concern can put watered stock on the market and pay a dividend of 35 per cent. or 40 per cent., and still we had to give them an extra 15 per cent. protection. Let us look at the Butetrine Factory. The Minister of Finance knows all about that. An extra protection of two cents a pound, added to the previous four cents, made it six, and we consume six million pounds a year. At two cents a pound the profit will be $120,000. This much is divided between three Butterine Factories, making $40,000 each from the pockets of the taxpayers, from the poor and common people, and I am correct when I say that it is a class legislation Government, undoubtedly and undeniably so. Although the Minister of Finance and Customs did not control one of these factories, he got in the business since, and I notice that nearly every public institution in this country is supplied by his factory. He supplied between $16,000 and $17,0000 worth to the railway last year, and the other factories did not supply $5,000 worth. I imagine there would be a lot of butter sold, but the Minister of Finance and Customs might thank the Government for the extra two cents a pound. Let us look at another industry, the Tobacco Factory, and let us see what protection they are receiving. Thirty million cigarettes are used in Newfoundland a year, and there is a protection of five cents a hundred on them, or $150,000 a year, which was put on by the Government, and why? Fifty per cent. of the capital stock is out of the country, and provides an easy catch for American capitalists. Secondly, because a company which has watered its stock during the past three years, and can pay a dividend of 23 per cent. to 33 per cent., should not be given protection by any Government. It is the people who are fleeced—taxes are to be paid by those who are not capable of paying them to enrich those who do not require it. These are facts which cannot be contradicted. The same thing applies in practically every institution in which the present administration is interested. The members of the Board of Works take all the patronage to themselves. I find that Mr. Whiteway received $35,000 during the past year, that Mr. Gould was well paid for his services in connection with the by-election and received, in addition to his salary as a member of the Board, something like $3,435, and he has not got an office or a shop, but goes somewhere and buys goods and sells them and makes a profit. Then the large firm of Ayre & Sons, on account of Mr. Ayre's presence on the Board, has made directly $17,000 or $18,000 during last year. It is clear, because they are receiving direct or indirect patronage, and that is the reason why the present Government did not wish to face the people whom they had so deceived.

With regard to the fisheries. I want to impress upon this House that it is most important that the present or future members of this House see to it that proper regulations, which have to be made law, are introduced, otherwise we shall have to forget that there is such an industry as the fishery. We speak of several new industries which may crop up, but even if all these industries are started to-morrow, the people who will derive a living from them will number about 50,000, and the remainder of about 200,000 people will have to depend on the results of the fisheries. It is our duty, and the duty of the Government in power to give some attention to the matter, and at least to see that that great industry is not neglected, and the only way is to go into the matter and attack it from this standpoint, not thinking of how many you harm, but how many you serve. You may harm ten or twelve. How many are you going to relieve? The present administration was ardently backed up by the merchants on Water Street. Why? Because they knew that when they did everything possible to keep the Government in power that they would help them. They adopted filthy methods in their treatment of the people of this country. I refer to one particular. During the recent by-election in the East End, Mr. Berrigan of James Baird, Ltd., and Baine Johnston Co., Ltd., went into the fishing settlements and told the people that unless they voted for the Government they would get no supplies this summer. You would think they gave supplies for the good of their health. These are some of the filthy methods adopted by the supporters of the Monroe Government.

I have been accused, Mr. Speaker, of attempting to draw the line between the two classes. I absolutely repudiate that statement. I believe that capital is the child of labour, and unless both go hand in hand and work for the common good, there will be no prosperity in any country. But when you have dissatisfaction, and the people write to you to do something to break the present Government, there is something rotten somewhere. It would not be for my interests alone to break the Government, it is the people who put me here, who put every member here, that are bawling to do something to break this iniquitous Government. To-day you find yourselves up against it. You are faced with a proposition which is very difficult to handle. We have had men come here to the Bar of this House to ask for work. I have not heard, but Dame Rumour has told me, that the Government has passed the responsibility over to the Council; but I would say this, that I blame the Monroe Government for the present state of affairs. I blame them for having so many unemployed all over the country. Why? Because they have not attempted to carry out their promises. On the contrary. When they came back to power in 1924, if they had tried to attend to business, to say no, and mean no, and say yes, and mean yes, we would have found a different state of affairs. But they seem to understand every other word in the dictionary but the words "yes" and "no,"" and the result is, they are in the present predicament. There is one thing that I pride myself upon, in being able to say "yes" and mean "yes," and say "no" and mean "no," and I have said that is the reason of the defeat of the Government in the recent by-election in St. John's East. In 1924 the Government candidates made all sorts of promises to the people, but they have fallen down on the job, and the consequence was that they did not return their member. The gentleman cannot complain, however, as the tabled accounts show that he has received the sum of $5,500 and has not gone altogether unrewarded.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Did you say that information was tabled.

MR. CASHIN—Yes, it has been tabled.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I would like to see it substantiated.

MR. CASHIN—That is not difficult. He received $1,500 from the $1,000,000 which should have gone to repair the roads in Ferryland, and he received $4,125 as Supervisor of Construction at the Hotel, making a total of $5,625. He was well paid for being a Government candidate for the East End. I am sorry, Mr. Prime Minister, that you were not aware of the fact. There seems to be a lot going on in your Government which you do not know anything about. You have to come to the House to find it out.

Now that the Minister of Public Works has returned, I will repeat what I said just now about his department. I never say anything behind a man's back that I will not say before his face. The members of the Board of Works have been using their positions this year to get Government patronage for themselves. I refer particularly to Mr. Whiteway, Mr. Gould and the firm of Ayre & Sons.

But they paid them $96,000 or $97,000 out of that amount and we found that their associates benefited considerably. And the sum of $7,500 was paid to Mr. Tait for his services in the United States in connection with tourist work. In Mr. Halfyard's district they only gave him back the four thousand dollars that they took from him last year. Now I wonder if it is not out of order if the Hon. Minister could tell me where the balance of that money is at present.

MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS—I could not tell you.

MR. CASHIN—I do not want to be personal, Mr. Speaker, but I think that it is an awkward position for the Minister of Public Works to be in to have to say that after he has been given one million dollars and after paying $75,000 to lawyers he does not know where the balance is.

Before this House closes, Mr. Speaker, I propose to put a question on the order paper, and it will be rather interesting, asking that the Ministers of the Crown place on the table of this House all the petitions that have been presented to them by members of both sides of this House since they came into power. I imagine that it will be a very hard job, and they will probably have to hire a couple of taxi companies to carry them up here, if they are not already destroyed.

I noticed in the public papers of a few weeks ago that a death had occurred and that the blame had been laid at the door of bad liquor. I asked the Minister of Finance and Customs if the present liquor commission had mixed smuggled rum with imported rum, and the answer was that they had not. I make the statement today, Mr. Speaker, that they have mixed it. And before this House closes I propose to find out the necessary means of bringing that commission to the Bar of this House to answer for that. Why, Mr. Speaker, in other countries to-day, if a man died on account of bad liquor, the person who sold him that liquor or was responsible for selling it, would be arrested on a charge of manslaughter. During the time that the saloons were in vogue in this town, if a man died on account of bad liquor, why the owner of the shop that sold him that liquor would be arrested on a charge of manslaughter the following day. I understand that the authorities have made an investigation attempting to find out who did sell that unfortunate man bad liquor. They canont succeed. There is only one conclusion to be drawn. The responsibility for the sale of that bad liquor lies with the liquor commission, because I say and I can prove it, and I am going to prove it now that they have mixed bad liquor with good liquor. I propose to give an analysis, which by the way I did not receive in this House. But I have interested myself sufficiently in this case to find out things regarding that aggregation down there. Here is the proof. This is the report of a British analyst in England of samples that were sent over by me.

(Reads.)

Is not that sufficient proof from an expert in England that that liquor was dickered with. And they are mixing it to-day, and that is not all that is going on there. Questions have been asked regarding the samples of liquor that have been imported or sent into this country. What became of them? But it would be interesting if the commission were brought up here and made to tell who received these samples. And I propose before this House closes to bring them up here and make them tell it. We were told the other day that the sample bottles were only small. In answer to a question I was informed that some of them were 26 ounces, imported in cases and distributed in case lots. And the Liquor Control Department went so far itself as to play politics. They ordered the employees to vote for Barter in the by-election in St. John's East. A commission that is supposed to be non-political. I want to tell them now that it is all politics. If I were in power to-morrow I would use every effort to annihilate them. They don't know their jobs to begin with. While they have made huge profits they should have been considerably more. I propose now to give them a few hints . I would like the Prime Minister and his Cabinet to listen to them and to recommend them to Mr. Miffiin, who seems to be the autocrat in charge of that department. There is somewhere around 50,000 bottles of rum consumed in this country annually, and on each bottle there is a wrapper, on which you pay twenty cents each. There is a chance to make $10,000 a year. Wipe them out because they are discarded as soon as they are bought. One thousand bottles go to the outports. They get extra protection—twenty-five cents each. There is another $25,000 you could save. There is $35,000 you could save without going any further into the administration of that department. And then they tell us that they are doing everything in their power to cut down expenditure and increase the revenue. Why it would make a person sick to come in here and listen to the Government talking about what they have done and that they have done the best they could; when, as a matter of fact, they have done absolutely nothing and now all they are doing is trying to take out something else.

Yesterday I proposed to deal with the Address in Reply, and I got mixed up in financial troubles. I only half finished it. I was commenting on the first part of Mr. Cahill's speech, which reads—

(Reads.)

All of which the present administration are guilty of. He told me that the cap evidently fitted him, but I made the cap fit him.

(Reads.)

I agree with him in that respect. And I am going to say here now that the present Government or their agents during the recent by-election in St. John's East offered money for votes. They went from one hundred dollars to ten dollars. A hundred dollars was the highest they offered, and they did not even come down to the simple dollar. And the rum was well looked after too.

(Reads.)

It certainly did not last. And I am glad that the hon. member in making that speech realised that the inuendoes, the false promises and the false prophets were within his own ranks. Why no greater false prophets than the present administration ever went to the country. And I was with them. But I dissociated myself from them as soon as I could. But I have to accept a certain amount of the responsibility for being asked to join them. They have fallen down on every promise. What about reduced expenditure? What about a bounty to fishermen on the amount of fish caught? Was not that part of their programme? Mr. Cahill's speech refers absolutely to his own administration. And the hon. member knows himself to-day that he would not have a ghost of a chance to be elected to-day under the present administration.

(Reads.)

Absolutely correct, and in 1927 or 1928, whenever there is a general election, and as far as I am personally concerned I do not care whether there will ever be one, but as far as the people are concerned I feel that it is my duty to have one, and I will use every effort to bring it about. I feel that when I return to my district that they shall vindicate me for my action in 1924. I feel that I have been vindicated already, inasmuch as I took a prominent part in the by-election in St. John's East, and the people by electing Mr. Brophy, with whom I was associated, have exonerated me for my action in the past.

(Reads.)

They promised everything on the face of the earth and the result is your defeat to-day. And you find yourselves in a ridiculous position. You come in here with a deficit of $6,000,000 for two years. And you canont deny that statement to-day, because I have calculated that from the figures that were given me by the Finance Minister himself, month by month. The duty of your Government was to go to the people and tell them what you have done, and that is the one thing that this Government failed to do. When they went back to the people to seek their confidence they should have told them what they had done. Instead it was a case of telling them what they did not do. They were unable to tell them that, but they told them what they were going to do.

They took upon themselves the credit of having won the Labrador case, for the establishment of Buchan's Mine, which was quite ridiculous; the Gander, which has not yet arrived. And in the Speech from the Throne to-day they say that every paper machine in the country is working at full capacity; and I say without fear of contradiction that owing to the demand for paper in the United States decreasing to such an extent, they have found it necesary to cut out one of the machines at Corner Brook.

And that is another problem that will have to be dealt with very soon. What is the Government's position regarding the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company to-day I was a member of this Legislature in 1923—that was my first step in public life. I voted for that deal; but I regret to say that the outcome on the Humber has not been what we thought it would be at the time.

In the early construction period the Armstrong Company spent lavishly and unnecessarily. And I feel that we as a Government erred at that time in not seeing that a proper representative in the way of an experienced engineer was sent there to see that Newfoundland's interests were protected. Because to-day we are placed in a very critical position with regard to this, and if any one loses apart from the principal shareholders, it will be the Newfoundland Government. And goodness only knows after the report of that company is tabled in this House whether it will not be found that Newfoundland is responsible for five million more in the way of guaranteed stock in that company, for which we are responsible. I would not say a word in this House about these matters if you had to be honest with us and told us the truth. But I do say this, that far from telling us the truth they have endeavoured to deceive the public as well. The Auditor General's Department in my opinion is nothing more or less than a farce and it should be wiped out, if they do not carry out their duties in a more satisfactory manner than at the present time. Evidently anything that the Government puts before these people is certified and a proper audit is not conducted. No Auditor General in the face of the figures that have been tabled here by the Department of Finance and Customs can come in here and tell us that the report was proper that was tabled the other day. We cannot any more depend upon the reliability of that office in view of the fact that it has deceived, and has helped the Government to attempt to deceive, the members on this side of the House as well as the people at large. I regret to have to speak in this strain but I actually feel that way inclined.

Yesterday I drew the attention of the House to the fact that the railway had squandered $50,000. They threw it away so to speak to Besco. I proved my point. To-day in speaking of the contract with Besco, which the Government took the credit for when this contract was tabled the other day, we discovered that this contract was merely renewed, that the present Government had no more to do with keeping the Bell Island Mines open this year than I had. As a matter of fact there was a market for six thousand tons of ore in Germany and the mines would have opened even if the Monroe Government never existed. And I want to draw the attention of this House to the fact that this company is attempting, and has succeeded so far, a combination in the coal business of this country, and the Government have not carried out their duty and made them do the right thing according to this contract.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would also like to give the Government some suggestions regarding the coastal service and the railway service, which I know they won't take, but at the same time a stray word here or there may be remembered by some of the individual members later on. I want to say to them to-day that the coastal service is in a demoralised condition. Last year it showed a profit according to the figures tabled in this House of $20,000, after receiving a subsidy of $50,000 from the Postal Department. I want to say here now that people in the Government have availed of their position to place their friends in positions on these boats. I want to say right here now that the boat operating around Labrador is nothing more or less than a trading boat. People go up there, policemen, magistrates and everything—men selling goods or for certain merchants in the city, and the Government pay their salaries as well. Butterine included. Sold by policemen. And I understand also, and I would like the Government to think the matter over, that even a policeman who was sent down there with a rifle sold the rifle.

Whilst speaking of policemen, I understand that the present Inspector General of Police, who received a raise last year of four hundred dollars, employed some of the policemen cultivating his land, and after cultivating some vegetables he sent them to sell in the Newfoundland Hotel. Probably the Inspector General of Police is going to be sometime Minister of Agriculture and Mines, but I hope he will have more success in the farming industry than he had in the mining industry. But speaking of the coastal boats again. As they are at present operated they cannot pay. Why? Any member or gentleman who is prominently identified with politics to-day might want a boat to call at a certain place. The first thing naturally for him to do is to get in touch with the railway management and use his influence to get a steamer to call at a place out of her regular run where she may be detained for a couple of days. We all know what the result and the loss is. I know that the "Prospero" and the "Portia", plying on the North and the South Coasts, respectively, do not keep up to the schedule they used to when operated by a private concern in the city, and I feel that the trade have not been receiving that consideration from the Railway Commission, because these boats, especially the western boats, sail from here often and never handled the freight that should be handled. Rather have the Government and the Railway Commission encouraged outside concerns to come in and cater to the trade of the West Coast. The consequence is that to-day we are losing the trade of the West Coast which is going to Halifax. The same applies to Corner Brook, as the Clarke Steamship Company have evidently cornered all the freight traffic practically of that centre. The result is that the railway does not get the freight from Port aux Basques that they should get and I have not seen any effort made by any one to attempt to get back that which we have lost. As a matter of fact the Government and the members thereof do not appear to care where the country is drifting. Last year in reply to various questions put by the Opposition it was learned that the railway was operating between nine hundred and a thousand miles of road and employing about two thousand two hundred men. No doubt a great number of these were engaged at the Dry Dock. Now I feel, especially in view of the figures tabled here showing a net loss of about four hundred thousand dollars up to the end of February last, that with proper, economical, business-like handling the railway can be operated at a loss at not more than a quarter of a million dollars per year. To begin with if the Monroe administration, when they started out squandering money, had re-railed the railway which they are doing to-day and had spent some of the money which they spent in other directions on the railway and have it re-railed with seventy pound steel from here to Port aux Basques, it would be very much easier to handle freight trains and passenger traffic than it is to-day, and the chances are that the public would avail of the travelling facilities more so than they do at the present time. As one of those who happened to travel across this country considerably, I almost dred when we arrive at Clarenville, and I think the public are educated to be in the same position and consequently they try to get to their respective destinations by any other means than the railway. I feel to-day that considerable axe cutting could be used in connection with the railway, provided you have the proper people to do it. But I regret to say we have not got that type of people running the railway to-day who knows how to say "yes" or "no." These are probably the only two words in the English language that they do not want to understand. But some one will have to do something in the way of axe using in the not distant future. I would like to again ask the Prime Minister if he meant what he said regarding the intention of members of this side of the House obstructing legislation? I would also like to ask him, after I sit down, to tell the House and the country the intention and the programme of the Government for the future? I would like for him to be frank and honest and if he wishes let us forget past differences and try and do something to bring about a different and more wholesome state of affairs in this country. I want to be fair and I ask the Prime Minister if he does not consider that the people of this Colony demand a show down and want to put in power a Government which the Government press were placed to designate in the recent bye-election in St. John's East, a stable Government? I feel, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister's only answer is that to have and hear the voice of the people under present financial circumstances is absolutely necessary. When it is considered that this Government finds itself six and a half million dollars in debt, then the adjective stable would be far from suitable or grave enough to define what we actually require, but I say that the country right now needs a sound, solid and stable Government which she has not got and which every Minister of the Crown within hearing of my voice knows she has not got. I feel and I know that within the ranks of the Government to-day there are gentlemen who want a stable Government and who desire that the people be given the first opportunity to elect a stable Government, and these same gentlemen are to-day sitting in the Prime Minister's Cabinet. It is unnecessary for me to mention names because to quote the words of the senior member for Hr. Main "they know the cap fits them"; but why does not the Prime Minister get up at the adjournment of the House this evening and give a clean, clear cut statement as to what the intention of the Government is? I do not intend to dictate to him what he should do or say. The Government finds itself in the position that they are unable to bring in the drastic legislation promised by the Prime Minister. Now the natural construction some people put on that statement at first blush is that the Opposition would be opposed to drastic legislation, but on going into the matter more closely the only conclusion one could come to is that the Prime Minister cannot bring in drastic legislation on account of objection within his own ranks, because no member on this side have attempted to do anything that would suggest to the Prime Minister that we were opposed to any such drastic legislation. Consequently, the proof is absolute that, since he made the statement that he did on opening day, he knew evidently from party meetings that his own Government and party followers that they were not in favor of drastic legislation. I say, Sir, it is the duty of the Prime Minister, a duty that he owes to this House and to the country at large, that if drastic legislation, as he has stated, is necessary it should be introduced and a Government sufficiently strong should be in power to introduce it.

I may utter these statements because they are the Prime Minister's own words spoken here in the House and the Opposition sitting in this House have made no statement whatever; no member who has spoken has; that they would be opposed to drastic legislation, and I agree that drastic legislation has to be introduced and has to be carried out and why? Our national debt will be approximately 80 millions at the end of the fiscal year that terminates in a couple of months. Interest of approximately 4 millions has to be paid on this, and the finding of this will take some better and more capable gentlemen to occupy the position as cashier of this country in my opinion, and I feel that that can only be arrived at by the people of this country whose business it is after all to see that its affairs are carried out as they desire by the people selecting men of their choice to carry on their affairs. We are to-day merely representatives of the people who told us to do certain things which I may add the Monroe administration have not done. This is what one would call a shareholders' meeting—a general shareholders' meeting, and we have the proxy, so to speak of the people of this country. We know that at various large corporation meetings where it is discovered that the executive of that corporation are not carrying out their duties properly, new directors and presidents and vice-presidents are elected; and a general meeting of shareholders is necessary now for we find that we are in the financial position that we can't pay bills without borrowing money; and we have to call upon the shareholders to endorse our note so to speak. If shareholders say that the Government that they have representing them have failed and that you can't carry on they will elect new directors and new presidents and vice-presidents. I say that it is your duty to ask for a general shareholders' meeting in the shape of a general election in Newfoundland in the Autumn and then let them speak and say whom they wish to carry on their affairs, because after all they are the people whom we are serving and who own this country. If the people of the country want this country to go insolvent let them say so, but if the people don't want the country to go insolvent they must devise other ways and other means to recoup their finances and pay the bills. How that is to be done is a problem for future Governments that will take the gravest consideration and gravest thought. I would not off hand outline a policy for the present administration to carry out because every suggstion from this side of the House has been absolutely ignored and it would only be wasting my breath and wasting my time to offer a suggestion regarding the future welfare of this country, to be left in the hands of the present administration to carry out, and if I made a suggestion I would like to feel that it might be carried out, and that this Government are capable which I personally do not think it is. In the event then of this general election, it is up to the people to return men to power, and then if I should happen to occupy a seat on any side of the House it is my duty to attempt to help that Government elected by the people to carry out their interests.

I would make this suggestion to you; a suggestion whereby taxation could be reduced 15 p.c. even with the deficit; although I know the suggestion is falling on deaf ears, and I feel you are incompetent to carry it out. You are attempting to-day, I understand, to induce the American Government to repeal the Fordney Tariff. I tell the Monroe Administration now that that can be done in 24 hours, and if they are unable to do it there are people in this country who can do it. If they have tried during the past six or twelve months and have failed then they do not know their business. I have correspondence in my possession to-day assuring me that under certain circumstances Newfoundland fish would be allowed into the country practically free of duty; I doubt if the Monroe Administration has even arrived at that stage. What would it mean if our fish were allowed in free or even at 25c. per quintal. It would mean the future of this country. America consumes millions of fish annually. They have practically four fishing ports in America; two or three on the Atlantic; to-day American vessels cannot get bait or supplies here or employ men to fish round our shores, because in 1925 Sir Robert Bond's Administration repealed or brought in a bill in this country, which forbade foreign vessels from taking bait or supplies from this country and from fishing round our shores or employing our men to fish in our waters.

I have every reason to believe that if these restrictions were removed by a bill to be brought in by the present Government the American Government would consider taking off the duty off our fish. If you have offered them that and you haven't succeeded it is a proof that you are incompetent. I have correspondence from Gloucester.

HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER—The United States Government is not at Gloucester.

MR. CASHIN—No, but representivs of Gloucester representing the fishermen go to Congress and they work for their fishermen which this Administration hasn't done for our fishermen, and so do the representatives of the Canadian fishermen. The Canadian Government have given the fishermen every advantage on the Grand Banks. They have even helped our fishermen. Mr. Lake told the House the other day that the hospital ship on the Grand Banks for the Canadians has often cared for our sick people. This Government never thinks of them. All this Government has done is to attempt to enslave the fishermen. This country under the present Administration is some fisherman's paradise. I say it is an industrialist's paradise, a country where people can invest capital, huge amounts of money, and then be recompsensed through the avenues of the Customs of this country, and I say now that this country is an industrialist's paradise far from being a fishermen's paradise. It is interesting to see how some individuals represent the common people of this country and there is no more sincerity in it than in a flip of my finger. It is the Prime Minister's duty to-day to say that in view of the present position of the Government that a general election must be held in the fall.

During my four years in this House, I have attempted to carry out my duties in a proper and official manner, and during that four years I have had the privilege of crossing swords in debate with the Prime Minister. I have had the privilege of meeting him in open debate where the people of the country were the judges, and one could say what one pleased, and I feel that the Prime Minister to-day realizes that although I may only be insignificant in his eye, that I was particularly responsible for putting one all over him. It is unnecessary for me to mention these various occasions for we might stray too far from the argument on the Speech from the Throne. I am glad that I have drawn a little fire from the Prime Minister, but I feel as I said before regarding the fishery of this country, that he should be able to arrange with the United States Government to have $1.40 taken off our fish, or even fifty cents, and if he can't do that he should get out. If that were done, we would have a market for half a million quintals of salt bulk fish, and that would mean there would be only another half million left to go to the Mediterranean. It would mean a better price for that fish, and it would mean a better price in the Mediterranean.

There is not one law on our Statute Book to-day with regard to the fisheries of the country. The laws to-day for the Fishery are made by those interested in the purchase and sale of fish to the foreign market, and they are commercially insane, because each one attempts to beat the other instead of co-operating for the good of all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have proved to the Prime Minister and his administration that the duty he owes to this country is to bring up the Legislation that he accused us the other day of obstructing and lay it on the table of the House, to bring up this drastic legislation that he says his own party will not let him put through, and we will help him to do it. If he has drastic legislation and his own party won't put it through, bring in your Estimates reducing expenditure, and we will help put them through. But you won't do that. I say that Estimates will be brought in a quarter of a million in advance of the one last year. I could almost mention now the various amounts extra to various departments. There was only one department last year that any way economized and that was the Postal Telegraphs. The Marine and Fisheries Department was side swiped on every side; telephones in practically every house at public expense; money spent that was not voted, and we don't hear any comments from the Government side of the House as regards that.

But if one member of the Opposition attempts to speak he is doing so for his own personal advantage or perhaps, as the Honourable Member for Harbour Main pointed out, in order to get square with some one.

Why, Mr. Speaker, it must appear evident to the gentlemen and ladies who visit these Chambers that the members of the Government display very little interest in any proceedings. Important Ministers of the Crown do not sit here.

In speaking of the fisheries, and to return again to my experience of the election campaign in St. John's East, I visited a place called Flatrock. The people there have been promised by every government since Responsible Government, I think, that a breakwater would be built if the government was elected to office. The Government candidate told them that a breakwater would be built, and I told them that when I returned to the House I would bring the matter up.

HONOURABLE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The present representative is here.

MR. CASHIN—Yes, but I told them that I would bring this matter before the House.

MR. BROWNE—You told them a lot of good things, I think.

MR. CASHIN—You told them a good many things too. What I said outside I am not afraid to say inside too. Mr. Speaker, I don't think the Honourable members reception at Flatrock was any too good. It is good for us to have a little joke now and then, it bucks us up.

A few years ago something like $10,500 was allowed for the purpose of building that breakwater at Flatrock; they built a bridge and spent some money to dredge it out. The men there think that a breakwater should be built across the north entrance of the Gut at Flatrock, as a protection against the north-east and south-east winds for the fishermen who bring their boats in through the gap. In Flatrock this is necessary, and if the $10,500 had been properly used it would have been there.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—As a matter of fact, for the past four years, plans have been in the Government Engineer's Office. It was thought best to excavate inside first.

MR. CASHIN—If the breakwater had been put there it would have been some use to them, and that would be doing something in the interests of the fishermen, but for the $10,500 they only got a bridge.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—We spent $5,000 to $10,000 in excavating, and spent the rest on the bridge.

MR. CASHIN—There is a lot of sand there.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—They are a sandy crowd. Don't believe everything they tell you at Flatrock.

MR. CASHIN — Indeed I do not. Coming back to the fisheries. I ask the Government now, and I'll put a question on the Order Paper to-morrow, if I am here, regarding anything that took place between our Government and that of the United States with regard to the removal of the duty on our fish going into the United States, and in that way do some good for the fishermen of the country.

At the present time, a company, the Hudson's Bay Company, prepare fresh frozen salmon, take it across to England, and make good money. If some scheme could be brought in whereby we would be able to take fresh frozen cod off our shores, we should be able to sell it in England as well as the Hudson's Bay Company. It is necessary, Mr. Speaker, in view of the present financial condition of this country, to do something. In 1924 the Prime Minister said the present condition of the finances is very bad. If it was bad in 1924, how is it now? Better or worse? In 1924 when the Prime Minister and his party came into power the deficit was one and one-half million dollars—to-day it is six and one-half. The Budget was cooked last year. Now we find there is a deficit of six and one half million. How are you going to meet it? Are you going to bring in a loan? Certainly. Are you going to raise it outside the country, or are you going to let the people of this country have a chance to invest their money, or are we to be told that it is a difficult matter to raise a loan here. It is not a difficult matter. As a matter of fact there was no difficulty in 1918 or 1919 when the Coalition Government raised a loan on the local market. After you bring in a loan of six and one-half millions where are you going to be? Are you going to be in a better position? First, the Directors of the Company, the Company of Newfoundland, Incorporated, will have to call a meeting and see how we are getting on. You will have to pay interest of $325,000 a year, more money added to the public expenses of this country. Where will you get the revenue? Certainly, somewhere. Now what is our ability of paying the hundred million dollars national debt? Can we do it? I say, no. At the present time our national debt is eighty millions. At this rate of going in another four years we will be at breaking point. A receiver is called in, just the same as a company 'going up the spout.' He collars everything in the country. A man's house is not safe. There is a mortgage on this country for one hundred million dollars and our creditors can come and sell it. I am not well up in the law business but I think that is the position. Now then, what are we going to do to try and stop it.

As regards selling the Labrador to Canada, someone may say "hold off and you will get a better price, but two can play that game. Canada can play that game. They might also say: "Let us hold off until Newfoundland goes insolvent and then we will get it when it is put up to the hammer." But if we could make a deal with them to take over Newfoundland's shares we would relieve the tax-payers to the tune of $4,000,000, and reduce public expenditure to by that amount. What would not that mean to the colony and the people of this country to-day. In the case of flour, pork or beef it would not matter one iota, but in a country where large duties are charged at the present time on clothes, boots, shoes and articles of wear. If you reduced taxation on these articles, which you cannot to-day I agree, then I say that this country would be a financial paradise. But even you, Sir, as Prime Minister of Newfoundland, even when you found the financial conditions of the country very bad, it was your duty and the duty of your administration, not when they went into power the first year, that the first item was to borrow 6½ millions. You attempted to borrow ten millions. You should have merely borrowed enough to pay the deficit of 1½ millions. Where would you be now? You could have got along very well. And it would not be necessary to-day to bring in another loan bill. You would not have the deficit which you have at the present time, provided that you got down to business. But instead you indulged in wild cat schemes.

I must say now that I was associated with one wild cat scheme, and I am not trying to take the responsibility off my shoulders. When the contract for the dock was made, the contract was for $1,086,000, it cost 2½ millions. I was clear of the Government after it cost that. Consequently no onus could be placed on me for the additional cost. I also say that we would have been better off if we had not expended that $1,086,000, although I was an advocate of the dock at that time. You would have saved 2¼ millions if you had got down to doing things as they should have been done. Consequently we would have been relieved of the interest in that direction alone of about $125,000 a year. I say that you can put a 16,000 ton ship on that, and let her pay off all the men on the dock and incur no further expenditure, and the interest on what the dock cost would not be paid by the revenue received from the docking of a 16,000 ton ship for a year.

Mr. Speaker, returning to the dock question, I think I made the remark before regarding that dock, regarding the shed there, they may look very nice, but I think that the remark was made last year by the Leader of the Opposition, that we might all like gold watches but we have not all got the money to purchase them. Sir, 2½ millions would have been sufficient to borrow when you came into power if you had meant what you said, when you came into office in 1924. So your indebtedness would be anywhere in the vicinity of $70,000. You would have saved the interest of a half million on the other ten thousand which you will have to borrow. Naturally your expenditure would be down, and taxation would be reduced accordingly because under the trying conditions of the present time it is not necessary to put aside a new surplus. I must apologise to the Hon. Member for even attempting to intimate to the present Minister of Finance that he ever thought of a surplus. Because he does not understand that. Deficit is all that he understands. Then the Minister of Finance gets up here and tells me that my statement is incorrect. For the life of me why does he table incorrect information in this House. I am not so well acquainted with the procedure of this House as to know what to do when incorrect information is tabled in this House, but I do know this that if incorrect information is tabled in this House, you have not heard the last of it. And I say here now that before this House closes, I intend to use the proper methods to introduce the Auditor General to this House of Assembly.

Now Mr. Speaker, I am about to close my remarks, but before doing so I would make the suggestion to the Minister of Finance, that in future when he comes into this Legislature, or the Government comes into this Legislature, that it is his duty to tell the truth regarding the finances of this country and not attempt to deceive the public as to the actual state of affairs in Newfoundland. Though their idea may be good in one way, namely that they did not want to let the financial world know the actual state of affairs existing in the country at the present time, as they may want to raise another loan. But do they remember that by doing so, and raising money in that way, they are raising money under false pretences. I say that a Government that does that just as with an ordinary business man, should be impeached and driven from office, because the truth, Mr. Speaker, lives, but falsehood cannot live. It dies eventually. It would have been alright for the Government in their first year in office to take $200,000 from the accounts of the following year, in the hope of getting a higher revenue the next year, to make it up. But as a matter of fact you got less. So you find yourselves 6½ millions in the hole to-day. And I say here now, Mr. Speaker, without fear of contradiction that the loan raised last year by the present Government was raised under false pretences.

I trust that the people who bought the loan knew the true state of how we stand, and I feel that they do because the people that bought that loan can tell us more about the affairs of this country than we can ourselves, so it is probably a good sign to see the bank buy the loan. It is questionable if the Bank of Montreal gave an absolutely correct statement regarding the affairs of this country when it sold the loan to underwriters in London. I want to state now that the Government knowing that budget last year was cooked and the Bank of Montreal, if they knew it were procuring money under false pretenses.

Now, Sir, I have one last word to say to the Prime Minister in the way of a slight lecture, I say again, as I have said before that a vote of want of confidence is unnecessary for the present Administration to have to retire. That was moved in St. John's East and passed some two or three months ago. It was moved by the Government and seconded by the members of the Opposition and carried by the electors of St. John's East, and consequently the Government to-day find themselves in the position that a vote of want of confidence has not only been passed by the people of the country who three or four years ago pledged themselves to stand by them provided they carried out the promises contained in the Prime Minister's manifesto which they failed to do, and I say now that it is the Prime Minister's duty this evening, or any other evening to admit his failure, and in order to help matters in this House to give to the members on this side an absolutely correct statement of our financial position.

It is the Prime Minister's duty today to say that in view of the present position of the country and of the present position of the Government that a general election must be held in the fall to see if the country still wishes his party to remain in power or for someone else to take charge. He should do that and give the opportunity for something to be done for the good of the common people.

MR. RANDELL—Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the few words I have to say will be somewhat brief. I just want to make a few comments on what is known as the Speech from the Throne; but before doing that I would, as is customary, offer my congratulations to the Honorable mover and seconder of the Address in Reply. I also extend congratulations to the Honorable gentlemen who have been elected to this House since last the assembly was in session. It is quite in order for me to do that, but I am not inclined to think occasionally that it is a matter for congratulation. I have often felt that it is questionable whether or not it is. Anyway since it is customary I, along with the other gentlemen who have spoken already tender my congratulations to those gentlemen who have been elected.

In commenting on the Speech I will just mention a few of the paragraphs. It is a document that comes along annually, and it is supposed to be a resume of the year past and more or less a forecast of the coming year. It sometimes fills the bill in that respect and sometimes it doesn't. With regard to the opening paragraph that deals with the settlement of the dispute of the Labrador Boundary, I would like to make a few remarks. It is a matter for congratulation I suppose to this country that we have that dispute aparently settled. I say apparently because in my opinion that boundary line is not yet settled. This Labrador Boundary question has in the past been a means whereby lawyers and others in this country and other countries have obtained very fat fees for their services in connection therewith, and in my opinion somebody has got to get some fat fees yet. As far as the Boundary is concerned we know approximately what it is, but until that is defined and properly surveyed we don't know where we are with regard to the boundary, and I claim that there must be a lot of money spent on that boundary yet before it is finally defined. There must be a proper survey. It is amazing what we don't know about Labrador. Look at the coast line—that isn't surveyed as far as I know. It is surveyed as far as Hamilton Inlet and north of that there is no survey so far as I know.

There is no geological and no marine survey. We know very little about it. I have heard it said that we should get surveyors to come here and have them survey that boundary and find out where our limits are. I don't think we need go outside the country to get surveyors to define those limits. If we can't do a thing like that ourselves we are not fit to have the award given us. Why should we go outside the country to get men to do anything for us? We have men in the country who could have built the dock just as well and probably cheaper than the people who did build it. We have men in connection with the High Roads Commission who know as much about concrete ,if we can judge by the work done as the W. I. Bishop Company. We should not go outside the country to get surveyors to define these limits. If we get a fair amount for that land I say that we should sell it. Personally I am of the opinion that it is not going to do this country very much good. Timber will be got there and grants will be taken out for certain holdings, and what we will get out of it is perhaps a little labour. Outsiders come in and get the best of things is what has happened in this country while our men get perhaps $2.50 per day. As to that it has been stated by some of the outsiders that come in here that we have not men sufficient enough to take hold of the jobs that bring down a decent salary. I will now show where we have got efficient men and they didn't get the jobs. There are two ships ,the "Corner Brook," and the "Humber Arm" on the West Coast. Now everybody will agree that we have men in this country above all things else who can man a ship from the captain down to the mess boy. In these two ships there never have been more than two Newfoundlanders, and the personnel comprises 80 odd men. That is typical of what is done in this country. Our people get the slack end of it. So I say if we got the chance to sell that territory over which the dispute has just been settled I say that we should sell it and wipe out our national debt if we can, and wipe it out with this proviso that we never borrow another cent. Let us reserve our rights for the fishermen so far as the fishermen are concerned on the Coast and hand the rest of it over to Canada as long as we can get rid of this incubus that is hanging round our necks. I just have a word to say about the codfishery. I am sorry the time draws near for closure as I would like to speak on one or two points that haven't been commented on, but the most I can say has been commented on before, and I don't suppose I can raise many new points.

With regard to the cod fishery it has been stated in this House, more especially by members of the Government who stand up and greet the Government of the day and talk of the lack of interest taken in the cod fishery, but they never put forward any propositions that might be put through to better the existing conditions. What we need in this country, and need soon ,is regulations with regard to the shipment of cod fish. Regular shipments should be made, as was stated by one of my Honourable friends. When you flood the market down goes the price. That is quite natural, it is the natural course of events. When you send large argoes that is the result. Cargoes of forty, fifty and sixty thousand quintals of fish have been known to have left these shores inside of five days. At another time one hundred and twenty thousand quintals of fish were shipped within three weeks. Now that is a state of affairs that should not exist. The Government should see to it that legislation is brought into this House to insure regulations of shipment. As regards the price, I don't think we would regulate that, but we can have standardization of cull, other than we have at present. I have heard a lot of talk, and one writer stated that Great Britain could get a lot of our fish. Great Britain is one of our competitors in most of our markets. More fish crossed from Aberdeen to Rio last year than we have shipped during the last five years. I want to suggest that we standardize our cull according to size, so as to contain twenty, fifty or a hundred as the case may be. Then you could have the fish analyzed with regard to its salinity, whether there is sufficient salt in it or not. Then the fish could be analyzed as regards its moisture. If the Government would take steps to have these things done.

HONOURABLE THE PRIME MINISTER — Would you analyze every fish?

MR. RANDELL—Not every fish, a certain number out of every shipment should be analyzed. Now in the inspection of lobsters, one or two are taken out of each case, and in the case of herring the top one or two layers are examined, still we have inspection and I don't know but that it is alright and we could do the same with the cod fish. Water Street may not agree to it, but the merchants will have to conform to the law ,and when a thing is good for the country generally I don't see why anybody should object to it.

The sealfishery also is referred to in the Speech from the Throne. The sealfishery has been below the average and that is a thing to be deplored. In my opinion the herd is becoming depleted. That is the opinion of a great many people. No matter what class of animal you attack, even if it is the mosquito, if they are killed at the rate of five hundred thousand a year for forty or fifty years, that animal will in time become obliterated.

MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS—That would be a national blessing in the case of the mosquito.

MR. RANDELL—If you get after any animal for a hundred years then you will find that the animal will become extinct in time.

Before taking my seat, Mr. Speaker, I would like to endorse what has already been mentioned by several members. I refer to the references made to members of this House by one of the daily papers. About two years ago I made a statement that the climate of this country is not one that would attract tourists to come here, and I still hold that view. Some honourable gentleman of the Government side of the House took occasion to disagree with me and an editorial appeared in one of the daily papers, headed "Boost your country." Though no names were mentioned it was evident that it referred to what I had said and you might know that that paper received Government patronage. What struck me was the heading "Boost you country." In 1923 when that paper was given no protection by the Squires Government, in commenting on the fisheries it went on to tell how many fishermen were leaving our shores and going to some other country and said, amongst other things that there were 50 p.c. less fishing on our shores and 100 p.c. less on the Labrador. Of course, that might have been an error. It rated our tax at £7 10 per head for year. That might have been copied from some foreign periodical, but there was nothing to show that it was copied. Again last year an article appeared in this paper showing that three hundred and fifty thousand people in this country were criminals by profession. That is what I call boosting the country. If that paper calls that boosting the country I would much rather have what I said published. Fancy a foreigner reading that three hundred and fifty thousand people are criminals by profession in Newfoundland. That paper is the "Evening Telegram."

MR. PUDDESTER — Thought he was going to say the "Daily News," didn't you?

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION—Wouldn't have been surprised.

MR. RANDELL—I haven't much use for that kind of journalism, even though it may be alright to look after the affairs of the government.

Before I sit down,—I shall not delay the House much longer,—I would just like to make a few remarks with regard to the report of the Liquor Control. I am sorry that I was not in this House when that Act was brought into the House. I would have added my objections to having any such Bill brought in. I do not approve of it. This bottle a day business in my opinion should be stopped. Where a man would take a drink in years under the old system now buys a bottle, and if he likes it he drinks it all and gets drunk. Few people have had as much trouble through booze as I have. I have seen men go to their death through it and I want to express my views here. I do not agree with making $850,000 of revenue which was produced through the sale of liquor during the past year. Who was it that paid this amount? If it was coming from outside it wouldn't be so bad, but it is paid by the taxpayer of this country. It is a crime against the homes and children of this country to have a liquor bill like that.

Just one word more, I have heard a lot about the financial condition of the country. Some people advocate a Royal Commission. Of course as some people mean when they talk of a Royal Commission it is unthinkable, but I will appoint a Royal Commission now if you will allow me. A little while ago I had the privilege of reading a charter party made out between the British Government and the owners of a ship in 1881. The ship was supposed to carry troops and convicts from England to Australia. In that charter party there was a clause that no Member of Parliament should be in any way a party to benefit by anything contained in it; no Member of Parliament would benefit directly or indirectly; no Member of Parliament would have any influence or anything whatever to do with it. Now then I will appoint a Royal Commission. Let the people of this country elect Members of this House of Assembly without any remuneration at all if you like, but principally let them come here and make the laws and rules for the country and let them have no voice in any contract in connection with government and have no say and no benefit in any possible way in connection with any contract or have any influence in making contracts. Let them come here and do the business of the country. Give them proper remuneration if you like, but I say now let them have no voice in making and no benefit from contracts, and we will have clean government and will very likely be able to get this country out of the hole; otherwise I see very little hope.

On motion the debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

Mr. Russell gave notice of question.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Speaker, on the motion to adjourn, I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the statement made here this afternoon by the member for Ferryland in his address; he made the statement that for the year 1926-1927 there will be a deficit of $2,225,297, and this information was derived from the information furnished to this House by the Minister of Finance and Customs. We have before us the Budget Speech and we do know now what that contained in reference to the year 1925-26. But Mr. Cashin also made the statement that that budget was also padded, and instead of having a surplus that year we had a deficit. Now last year when this House was in session, the Minister of Finance brought a budget in here, and told us that we had a surplus for 1925-26, and he estimated a surplus of $300,000 for 1925-26. After the budget speech was read, in this House, then a loan bill was brought in here for the raising of $5,000,000. Anyhow the correspondence which I have before me furnished by the Minister of Finance and Customs, in it I notice that the information he gave to the underwriters of bonds are as follows:

(Reads)

Presumably this is the information on which the loan was raised. Now one of the statements are incorrect. It would be impossible for the Minister of Finance to come in here and estimate a surplus of $300,000 and then to have a deficit of $2,025,297. Either the other statement is untrue or this statement issued by the Auditor General under his name, is absolutely false.

I am bringing this matter before the Prime Minister, because both statements have been made, and it is due to this House and the people to know which of these statements is correct. And I think that before we consider any more legislation in this House, that this thing should be cleared up. The authenticity of the Auditor General's statement has been questioned. It has been stated here that to make accounts appear better he has charged up one month's expenditure to a previous year. I do not make any charge against the Auditor General, but I only say that if that statement is correct made by the Member for Ferryland, then we can no longer place any faith in the figures tabled here by the man who does such a thing.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I don't understand whether the Leader of the Opposition says that he does not take the Auditor General's statements, because the Auditor General, in this country, is supposed to be immune from any bribery or any suggestion of wrong doing. But if he makes statements that are incorrect and has not got the confidence of the House of Assembly, then he ought not to hold office. If members of the Opposition have clearly determined that the Auditor General has not got the confidence of both sides of this House, then I would like to know it. and if his statement of the affairs of this country is not to be received as being correct then he certainly ought no longer to hold office.

The Leader of the Opposition has asked me to furnish him with a statement showing whether the statement made by a certain member in this House is correct, or whether the statement made by the Finance Minister is correct, and I propose to bring down the statement from the Auditor General as the only authority I know by which to correct any statement made in this House regarding finance. I ask him whether that will be acceptable to him.

MR. CASHIN — Mr. Speaker ,in speaking to the motion to adjourn, as I was responsible for bringing about this state of affairs. I made this statement to-day and yesterday distinctly sir that if correct information had been tabled in this House by the Minister of Finance and Customs, in answer to a question asked by me, then sir, that deficit of two million and odd dollars did exist, and that budget speech is wrong as I still contend it is. If the Finance Minister has been given incorrect information that is not my fault. But I asked for a monthly statement of revenue and expenditure from all sources exclusive of the railway operation, and each month I get the amount of expenditure and revenue and add them up. And if for the twelve months and the revenue exceeds expenditure then we have a surplus, but if it is the other way around then we have a deficit, and any schoolboy can understand that.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE & CUSTOMS—Mr. Speaker, it is rather amusing to hear some of the statements that are made in this House. They are so amusing sometimes that I don't pay any attention to them. I am Minister of Finance, and the Auditor General is absolutely in charge. Any figures that are asked from me, I ask Mr. Keating and he sends them to me. Whether they are correct or not I don't go to check them. And I want to tell the Leader of the Opposition now, and I want him to bear it in mind, that I fear no investigation in that Department as Finance Minister. And I say that a deficit of $6,500,000 is absolutely ridiculous, just as ridiculous as to tell this House that we have borrowed $18,000,000 since we have been in charge. The Hon. Member for Ferryland made the statement that the dock cost 2½ million dollars. If anyone gave him those figures, they are absolutely wrong. The cost including the wharves and the whole outfit was $1,988,000. That is what it cost. Of course I don't check up those figures. it is not my job. But I court that enquiry to see whether the figures I brought in here are correct or not. And if I were a couple of hundred thousand dollars out in my estimates last year, I want to say that it would be a very clever man that could make an estimate within $200,000 of that amount. And I have not met him yet. What the deficit will be this year I will let you know shortly, but there will be no surplus. But when people talk about borrowing six and a half million dollars to pay the deficit it is like child's play.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to Monday, May 30th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourend accordingly.

MONDAY, May 30th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

THE HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE tabled the following:

Fire Loss Returns for St. John's, for year ending December 31st, 1926.

Fire Loss Returns for Outports, for year ending December 31st, 1926.

Constabulary Returns for the year ending December 31st, 1926.

THE HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE & CUSTOMS tabled:

Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General under Section 33 (b) of the Audit Act for the period ending 31st March, 1927.

Report of the Comptroller and Auditor General on the Accounts of the St. John's Municipal Council for the year ending December 31st, 1926.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Russell gave notice of question.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of question.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Before going into the Orders of the Day, I crave the privilege of the House in connection with the discussion that took place in this House just before adjournment on Friday in connection with our financial affairs, when a statement was made by the Leader of the Opposition, in which he insinuated that from the figures quoted by Mr. Cashin that it looked to him that the Budget for 1925-26 had been padded. I want now to say, as I said on Friday, that the financial statement laid before this House by me was the correct and true financial statement of the country. In his remarks the Honorable Leader of the Opposition insinuated that I had deceived the public in my statement in getting a loan. That insinuation is absolutely untrue and for the information of the House, and without attempting to go very far into the matter of the financial affairs of the Colony, I intend to make a few simple remarks and let the matter stand, as I hope in the near future to be in this House when it goes into Supply, and I shall then be able to deal with the matter much better than at the present moment. It is true that as the Member for Ferryland said the figures he had would show a deficit of about two million and they were tabled in this House. In honesty and fairness to the Auditor General I may say that these figures were not given to me by him, but by Mr. John Keating, my Deputy Minister, in whom I have implicit confidence. I have great pleasure in having a man such as Mr. Keating as Deputy Minister, and I am quite convinced that Mr. Keating would not even to please me pad a Budget, and what figures he gives me he gives believing them in all sincerity to be correct, and I know the figures were correct. In the figures tabled for June the expenditure was quoted to be $3,994,258.01. As I have said in this House if I were to check every question asked in the Finance Department and go through them all I would be a very busy man. When I ask my deputies or the Auditor General for statements in answer to questions I take it as a matter of fact that they are correct, and as a matter of fact this answer of Mr. Keating was correct except that a typographical error was made and instead of the expenditure being $3,994,258.01 as was in that statement it should be $2,418,511.63, and that makes all the difference. It is possible even for the most brilliant men to make mistakes. It is possible even for the Leader of the Opposition, who I believe understands finance very well, to have his typewriters make a mistake. That is the explanation of that.

Further, we find this position: that Mr. Keating in giving the expenditure for the year included amounts which had been charged to Exchequer Account and which belonged to Loan Accounts as the Loan had not been raised at the time. This means that we had to borrow from Exchequer Account temporarily month by month on Loan Account, thus abnormally swelling this account until the loan was raised and a cheque to cover the expenditure was available. This was done during the year 1925-26 and has been done for purposes of book-keeping long before Mr. Hickman and I were in this House. I may say that neither I nor my officials have any object in deceiving the House what avail is it to us to do so?

Now what was the position for the year 1924-25? Do you mean to infer that the Auditor General would be part and parcel in assisting a Finance Minister to pad accounts? That is a very serious charge; it is an unfair charge and there is one way always to clear it up, and that is by going down and examining the Bank of Montreal's accounts, which should compare with those of the Auditor General. If they do they must be correct, and there is no doubt about it they are correct, as both accounts tally. Take the report of the Auditor General for 1924-25. He says the expenditure on current account was $9,436,185.23. The revenue on current account was $9,783,188.46, leaving a surplus of $347,003.23 in favour of the Colony. That is in his report for 1925. Do you mean to tell me that the Auditor General is foolish enough to write his report to suit the Finance Minister or the Government? I do not think so; I know him long enough to be certain that you cannot influence him in that fashion. Some men question the Audit system, but let me tell them that it takes a mighty clever man to catch a rogue. The Auditor can be fooled and the rogue often goes free for a long while before he is caught. We mercantile men know that; we have been often fooled ourselves even with audits for a long while before the rogues were caught.

That statement for 1924-25 can be verified by the Bank of Montreal, and surely honourable members of this House, even the Honourable Leader of the Opposition will not for one moment question that statement.

Coming along to the year 1925-26. The total revenue for that year was $9,752,551.28 and the total expenditure for that year, including Loan Account expenditure, which Mr. Keating shows in his monthly totals, was $10,285,225.78. Before the Loan of 1926 was raised, as already stated to the House, the amount transferred to Loan Acount was $420,058.44. Deducting this amount from the gross expenditure of $10,285,225.78 leaves an expenditure of $9,865,167.34. Take the revenue of $9,752,551.28 from this expenditure and you have a deficit for the Colony for the year 1925-26, which can be verified at the Bank of Montreal, of $112,616.06, which includes $30,719.65 being amount carried over by the Customs Department to 1926-27 by Order-in-Council, as it was found to be outstanding after accounts were closed. By adding the $81,000.00 shown to this $30,719.65, a simple bit of addition, you arrive at the actual deficit for 1925-26.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the charge made was a very serious one, but I am sure that there is no longer any doubt in anyone's mind in this House that figures were juggled with. In any cause I am not worried over any investigation that may be held on the financial affairs of the country since I have had control of the Department of Finance and Customs. I court the fullest enquiry. In fact I want it, because I have no fear as to what the result will be. I do not think, Mr. Speaker ,that there is any occasion for me to proceed any further with this statement. I am satisfied that the people of Newfoundland who know me will accept my statement, but as a matter of fact they do not have to acept my statement alone because the Auditor General is behind it, and the Bank of Montreal has the proof, and the best answer I can give to this House and to the country at large is that these balances stand and are to be seen to-day in the accounts at the Bank.

But, Mr. Speaker, statements such as these to which I have referred are injurious to Newfoundland; that the man who makes them and broadcasts them to this and other countries and claims he is a Newfoundlander, has lost the respect for the country in which he lives. I leave this matter now, Mr. Speaker, and hope to have an opportunity of going into it more fully in the very near future.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Speaker, the Finance Minister this afternoon made a statement which goes to prove there was plenty of room for my stating on Friday last that there was a difference between the figures given the House by him and these figures supplied the member for Ferryland, and the Minister has corroborated what I said by telling us now that a typographical error occurred in making up the statement. The Minister says that some one made a charge. I do not know whether he refers to myself or Major Cashin or somebody else on this side of the House. Personally I made no charge against anyone. As I sat here and listened to the member for Ferryland on Friday last and heard that the figures he had received from the Finance Minister were vastly different to the figures given out to the House and through a letter in the press by the Minister, and showing a marked difference in the actual postiion of the finances of the country, I thought it my duty as Leader of the Oposition—it would be my duty no matter what position I held in this House—to ask for an explanation because an explanation is due to this House and to this country. The Finance Minister with considerable bluff and bluster made remarks this afternoon which I consider were not necessary. All we want is a statement of facts and when we have that we are satisfied. I have made no charge or made no insinuation against anybody. I simply said that if the figures furnished Major Cashin were correct, then the figures supplied by the Finance Minister in his Budget and also in a letter to the press must be incorrect. The figures which he had given shows a difference of one million dollars in the statement of his Deputy Minister. Therefore, no blame can be laid to the member for Ferryland for the statement he made because he had facts to corroborate his statement. I just want to put myself on record this afternoon as not having made any charge against anyone by asking for what this House should have and that is a statement of facts so that the entire matter can be cleared up.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, as it was your humble servant who brought about this discussion and after listening to the Finance Minister this afternoon, I feel that I should make a few remarks in return. The Finance Minister stated that a typographical error was made in the figures by his Deputy, Mr. Keating. Looking at the figures, it appears to me that it was something different to a typographical error. I can understand a 3 being made for a 2 or vice versa and I can understand how a mistake of 1 or 2 millions could be made, but the Finance Minister stated that there was a mistake of $2,418,511.63 By deducting that amount from $3,994,228.01 you get a difference of $1,575,716.38.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE—You will find it comes nearer two millions when you add to it $420,000.00, which Mr. Keating shows is his monthly expenditure for a year. This $420,000.00 is money borrowed from Exchequer Account to be transferred back to Loan Account.

MR. CASHIN—If that $420,000.00 represents the monthly expenditure for twelve months on Loan Account, I take it that the Minister cannot tell the actual expenditure correctly of his department each month. Last year I asked for the revenue for the current year 1924-25 and I had to wait and get it from the Budget. Now I take the Auditor General's report in this way. We were told recently in the press by the Finance Minister that the deficit on current account would be eighty one thousand and odd dollars. To-day the Minister tells us that the deficit is $112,000.00. Why was not the thirty thousand and odd added on to the $81,000 before. In my opinion the Auditor General should have added that on before. So that now the actual deficit is $112,-000.00 instead of two millions, although two millions were the figures tabled in this House in answer to my question a few days ago. The Minister of Finance is the gentleman in charge of the Department of Finance and Customs and as such he is responsible for financial statements to this House whether they are correct or incorrect. Now I think this is a serious matter, a matter that your own figures showed that you were $2,025,000.00 short, and when I made the statement here the other day the Finance Minister had right to be here and correct me and told me that there had been a mistake made. The fact is that the Finance Minister is the reponsible party and he cannot throw the blame over on Mr. Keating or the Auditor General or anyone else, although he tried to shift the blame this evening. It is only a matter of adding up ten lines of figures and I am sure the Finance Minister is able to do that. But the Finance Minister has not explained the deficit up to April 30th. The statement he gave does not satisfy me at all. The system of having four hundred thousand dollars distributed over various months is not right, and I want a further investigation of the affairs of that Department. Deficits have occurred and were paid out of Loans. I have put a question on the Order Paper asking for details as to how the various loans were spent and when I get a reply we will be able to discuss the matter further. The great trouble is that we cannot depend upon any information we get from that department because the Minister in charge does not take the responsibility upon himself that he should. I don't think that I can be blamed for what has happened, as there is no one who wants to see a surplus better than your humble servant.

HON. FINISTER OF FINANCE—Mr. Speaker, just a few words in response to the honourable member for Ferryland who in the course of his remarks said that I have not explained the deficit up to the 30th of April. I do not intend to. When the Budget is brought down in this House he will know the deficit or surplus, whatever it may be, up to the 30th of June. I would also like to state for the information of the same member that I have a hazy recollection that moneys were taken from loans to pay deficits in the past.

MR. CASHIN—I grant you.

HON. MINIISITER OF FINANCE—I do not intend to discuss this matter further this afternoon, as I shall have an opportunity of dealing with it fully when the Estimates come before the House.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. RUSSELL—Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a few words to say in connection with the Speech from the Throne, which I take it indicates the policy of the Government and indicates also the legislation that the Government proposes to introduce during the present session of the House. I want anything that I may say to be taken in a broad general way. Now, I consider that the country, its people and its interests are far more important and of greater consequence than any political party or government or any individual member of this House. The country and its interests should be our first and foremost consideration. Unfortunately, in this country Party and its interests and the interests of individual members of that Party receive first consideration very often to the detriment of the country. During the course of my remarks if I have to refer to any individual member of the Government it will be in his official capacity, as it is not my intention to be personal.

The most important items in the Speech from the Throne that I can notice are the Labrador Boundary Question, the deficit in the revenue, and the paragraph which deals with future industrial development. I am disappointed that nothing is said in the Speech from the Throne about the fisheries of the country, which have been so often referred to as the mainstay of the Colony, the staple industry, the industry upon which every other industry practically depends. I regret that no future policy regarding the fisheries is outlined in the Speech. I regret, also, like other speakers who have preceded me, that the Government saw fit to postpone the opening of the House until the 11th day of May, when members of the Government as well as members of the Opposition should be attending to other business. Time was when members of this House, particularly the Prime Minister, seriously deplored the late opening of the Legislature. Preceding governments were criticized and almost damned because it was contended that the legislatue should open earlier in the season so that the public business of the country could be transacted. We are now in the latter part of May and the business of the House is scarcely started.

I want to congratulate Mr. Chambers on his election in Burgeo and LaPoile, although for one reason I am not doing it with very good grace. Mr. Chambers happened to take the position I formerly held. I was told to get out bag and baggage, without a hearing, and Mr. Chambers after a few weeks saw fit to take that position. But I want to tell the Prime Minister and this House that Mr. Chambers at one time was just as dissatisfied and disgrauntled over the way the Government was acting as any of the five men that left the Government ranks. I hope I am not giving away any secrets on Mr. Chambers when I say that. However, Mr. Chambers is in charge of the Department of Public Works now and I hope he will find conditions there more congenial than I found them. Personally, I do not think he will find them very congenial unless he makes up his mind to become a "figure head" or a "rubber stamp." I remember in 1923 Sir John Bennett in his Manifesto deplored the fact that there were members in the Squires Government who were in charge of departments and who were not taking that share of responsibility which the importance of the office warranted. Well, I may say that when I was in charge of the Department of Public Works I tried to do my job well, and to do my very best to practice economy and retrenchment. I was talking my share of responsibility. With what result? Dr. Mosdell is not in his seat this afternoon, but I would also like to congratulate him on his victory in Fortune Bay against exceedingly great odds. It was an indication, to my mind, of the unpopularity of the Government, and vindicated the views which myself and others expressed from time to time. Particularly do I want to congratulate Mr. Brophy on his election in St. John's East. I was a member of the Government for two years, and I want to say that any time the matter of opening the district for a bye-election was discussed with me I took the stand that the spirit of that section of the Election Act, which states that when a vacancy occurs in any district, an election shall be held within six months, should be carried out. As the Old Country sets the pace for Canada and the other Dominions, I thought that Newfoundland should be just as good, and not do what previous governments had done. When I became a member of the Monroe Government, I understood the actions of past governments were not going to influence us. We were not going to follow in the footsteps of any party, or in the footsteps of past governments.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, the absence of my old friend, Mr. Mott, the Clerk of the House, but I am happy to know that he is quickly recovering from his recent operation. Mr. Mott, though not a native, has lived here many years, and is a man of sterling worth and character, and has served his adopted country in a very capable manner. I hope his recovery will be complete.

The Prime Minister, on opening day, made reference to the deaths of Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin. I wish to concur in the expressions of sympathy. I did not do so at the time. I feel it my duty to my constituency to endorse the letters of condolence to the relatives of these two deceased gentlemen. I need not say anything to impress or emphasize the public worth of these two gentlemen. Sir Robert Bond was a leader in the political life of this country for years. He was well-known, not only in Newfoundland, but throughout the world, as a man of sterling character. I remember well the political demonstrations that were held in his honour at St. John's over thirty years ago. Sir Michael Cashin was also well-known in Newfoundland, as well as other countries. Sir John Bennett in his Manifesto of 1923, said that Sir Michael Cashin was the most successful Finance Minister this country ever had.

Then we have had during the past year, in connection with the Government of this country, four Deputy Ministers pass from this world to the other. I refer to Mr. Turner, Deputy Minister of Agriculture and Mines; Mr. Summers and Mr. McGrath, Deputy Ministers of Justice, and Mr. Alan Goodridge, who recently passed away. I think I should say a word about Mr. Goodridge, for I knew him best, and very often discussed fishery matters with him. He was very much interested in the success of the fisheries of this country, but particularly in the matter of oils. If Mr. Goodridge had been given a freer hand and had been permitted to carry out his plans, the fishery, and particularly the oil industry, would have reached an even more advanced position in the markets to-day. Great credit is due to Mr. Goodridge, for it is owing to his efforts that our oil, especially refined cod liver oil, holds such a high position in the markets of the world to-day.

Now I want to congratulate Messrs. Cahill and Power, who moved and seconded a motion that a committee be appointed to draft an Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. I must congratulate these two gentlemen on their efforts. You never know what's in a man until you put him to the test. The two junior members of the Monroe party acquitted themselves very well, indeed. Mr. Cahill, in reference to the deficit, used these words: "It is pointd out in the Speech that it is not considered necessary to adopt any drastic remedial measures, showing, happily, that the Government believes that the unfortunate conditions which have brought about this result are only transitory and are bound to improve." Now, when the Prime Minister spoke on opening day, he made reference to the fact that certain members of his party had crossed the floors of the House, and that, as a result, he could not bring in the "drastic remedial legislation" which he thought necessary. This is what he said: "We acknowledge that we are not as powerful to do things that we think ought to be done as we were before we lost some members to the other side. If we had those members we would be able to introduce drastic measures that we don't feel powerful to do at the present time. I don't believe those necessary but drastic measures will ever be carried out by Responsible Government in this country."

Mr. Cahill's remarks, Mr. Speaker, and the Prime Minister's do not seem to agree. Mr. Cahill said that the Government did not consider it necessary to adopt immediate drastic measures, and the Prime Minister says it is necessary, but cannot be done by reason of the weakness of the Government in regard to numbers.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I do not wish to interrupt the speaker, but the point I want to make is that the Hon. Member is misquoting. The Prime Minister was referring to drastic measures in connection with the tariff.

MR. RUSSELL—Mr. Speaker, I submit that the Prime Minister may have had drastic remedial measures in mind with regard to other matters as well as the tariff. The Prime Minister said he do not think those drastic measures will ever be carried out by Responsible Givernment in this country. Then if they cannot be carried out by Responsible Government in this country, who is going to carry them out? The Prime Minister, referring to the doing of the Imperial Conference, said that we have a certain independent status not previously enjoyed by us, and if we applied to the Imperial Government for a Commission they would say to us, "Physician, heal thyself."

In my opinion, it is only a miracle that will save this country from insolvency, and if the Labrador Boundary Question had not been settled in our favour God knows where we would be and how we would be feeling to-day. The decision, however, has been given and awarded in our favour, and a considerable asset has been added to the assets we already have. I trust the Government will not, on the strength of our assets, raise more money to be spent on questionable ventures, and add more burdens to the already overburdened taxpayers.

Now, with reference to the latter part of Mr. Cahill's speech. I cannot agree with Mr. Cahill in his references to the defections from the Monroe Party. I happen to be one of the "malcontents" that he referred to. If he means by "malcontents" men who represent the people, and are determined to voice their opinions as members of a government, then I am willing to be dubbed a 'malcontent," but not otherwise. Independence of members is talked of from time to time. The F. P. U. members, a few years ago, were accused of not being independent enough, but of being mouth-pieces of Mr. Coaker. Now, Mr. Speaker, when you are with a Government and shows a little sign of independence, you are no longer wanted, and you are told you do not know what you are talking about, and if you don't like it you can get out. The very idea of Responsible Government to my mind, is that the humblest member of the Government as the choice of the people, has just as much right to speak his mind and express his opinion as the biggest man there. Mr. Cahill's insinuations were cast on the members who happened to be once in the Monroe Party, but are now seated on this side of the House. For myself I had no choice. Five of us held a meeting to discuss public matters and certain grievances, rumours were spread, and as a consequence two of us were dismissed. We did not have a chance to come to the House and cross the floors. Mr. Duff had that chance, but did not avail himself of the opportunity. It is reported, I don't know whether it is true or not, that the Prime Minister has stated that the men who left his Party were the most Honest and sane-minded he had in his party. I do not know if the Prime Minister said that or not, but I hope it is true.

Referring again to the deficit. I not only as a member of this House, but as a citizen of this country, with all that I own in the country, regret to hear that there is a deficit of two and one-half million dollars (including the railway deficit). Now, what is the cause of it? First, the low-earning power of the people. Hundreds of men in the outports are very glad if they can earn $150 in twelve months, and, but for the fact that they own their own homes and a certain amount of land from which they can raise vegetables and keep sheep, a cow or other live-stock, a large number of the people in the outports would perish. Secondly, the comparatively small number of people engaged at really productive work, and the large number living off the producers. And thirdly, the heavy interest charges on the public debt and unnecessary and unprofitable expenditures. The position we find ourselves in to-day is that we have to borrow money partly to pay the interest on the debt we already owe. Any man in business will tell you that when a business gets to the point where you have to borrow to pay the interest on money already borrowed, that business is not very sound and not very promising.

Now with reference to the Labrador Boundary Settlement. I want to congratulate those concerned, including the Minister of Justice, who took part in the negotiations which ended in our favour. I congratulate those who took part in the negotiations in the past. This matter has been going on for a long time. I was not very old when the Labrador Boundary Question was started. It must have cost this country an immense amount of money, and I would like to know, and I think the country would like to know, the total cost of the Labrador Boundary Question to date. If it can be obtained I shall ask a question at a future time. We have gained 110,000 square miles, rich in water powers, timbers and minerals. But now that we have it what are we going to do with it? Some people consider the wining of the Labrador a curse rather than a blessing. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that will not prove to be true. The danger is that, because of the additional asset, we may be tempted to borrow more money on the strength of it. I think that if we could get enough for it to pay our national debt, that it would probably be best to sell it, or Newfoundland is going to get the worst end of the thing. Retain the coastline for our fishermen, that must not be disposed of.

Very little is said about the codfishery in the Speech from the Throne. There is no future fishery policy outlined. As a matter of fact, in the House and out of it, any reference made in connection with the fishery of the country is considered a joke, because we have talked about the fishery so long and done so little. Certain fishermen of the District which I represent told me recently that the next time a candidate came to them soliciting votes and says anything regarding the fishery, they will tell him to get out quick, and I don't blame them. There is no subject that is so much discussed in this country as the fisheries, and yet there is very little done to foster and encourage it. It is probable that nothing can be done. It is probable, I say, that nothing can be done. Mr. Speaker, if that is so, it is time that the people and the fishermen of the country were told that nothing can be done. It is not fair to the fisherman to string him along from year to year. There are hundreds to-day looking for supplies, anxious to go to the fishery, but cannot succeed in securing supplies. I have heard that a number of fishermen intend to visit St. John's and interview the Government to see what can be done in this respect. The leaders of all political parties in their manifestoes usually refer especially to the fisheries. Mr. Bennett, in his manifesto in 1923, rerered to a bonus, I'll read it for you:—

"But while ready to support this Humber industry I and my Party are not unmindful that the fisheries are the mainstay of the Island and its people, and that it will need more than a paper making enerprise on which at most only 2000 or 1500 people can obtain employment to make up for the loss which any decline in our fishery will involve for the fifty or sixty thousand people shown by the last census to depend for their support on the pursuit practiced by their forebears for generations. During late years, though the mills at Grand Falls and the mines at Bell Island have helped somewhat to solve our industrial problem, they have been at best only auxiliaries to the fishery. Greater catches of fish were made, and higher prices realized, during the war years than ever before, and a return to those conditions as far as that can be brought about, is what the country needs most to-day.

We propose, therfore, to give those directly engaged in the fishing industry—not to exceed one dollar a quintal—under conditions to be worked out as soon as possible after taking office, if we are elected; and to which the widest publicity will be given so as to be available in connection with this season's catch. Other countries have found it feasible to grant bounties or bounses to their fishermen and I am satisfied that Newfoundland can do the same. I recognize that it will be contended by those against us that this is an impossible plan, but surely it would be better to spend public money in this way then to waste it on the Badger-Halls Bay road, or the Deer Lake-Bonne Bay road, as two years ago, or on any of the other 'wildcat" schemes on which this Government has wasted the substance of the taxpayers the past two or three years."

Now, in speaking of the result of such a bonus, he says this:—

"The result of such a bonus, judiciously and properly applied should be to stimulate the production of a better quality of fish, which in turn should mean increased prices of our product in the foreign markets, and this, again, should mean a larger return to the revenue through the purchase made by the fishermen; and as the status of the industry improved and prices advanced the bonus could be gradually reduced and in time withdrawn altogether."

That was Mr. Bennett's idea at that time.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—And they did not believe it.

MR. RUSSELL—At least they did not accept it. Finally, Mr. Bennett said:—

"Finally, we propose to summon a Convention of Merchants, Planters and Fishermen to meet in St. John's next autumn to discuss all fishery matters and to concert measures whereby the experience of practical men of all these classes can be utilized in working out a fishery policy that will prove of general advantage."

If that had been done since, as Mr. Bennett suggested it would have been a great benefit to the fishermen. There has been plenty of time to do it since. That was in 1923. It is now 1927. Sir Richard Squires ,in 1923, used these words:—

(Reads)

I will not say this both for Mr. Bennett and Sir Richard Squires, that Mr. Bennett was not endorsed by the electors and therefore did not have a chance to put his policy into operation, and Sir Richard Squires whatever his intentions were, did not have the time after the election of 1923 to carry them out with reference to the encouragement of the fisheries or the payment of a bonus.

And now we come to the 1924 Manifesto of Mr. Monroe. This is the Manifesto that I am particularly interested in because I was with that party, and I went to the country with Mr. Monroe on that policy. We told the people that if they gave us the necessary votes so that we could be elected and become the Government that we would do thus and thus. Here is the agreement or the contract with which we went to the people and asked them to endorse, and I for one and other members of that party at the time took it for granted that something would be done.

I think it was Mr. Halfyard who remarked the other day that this country instead of being a "fishermen's paradise" was a "fishermen's purgatory"

(Reads)

These are nice sentiments. Possibly every one of the gentlemen who wrote these words meant what they said at that time. But none of them have been carried out. As I said before, probably nothing can be done. Then if so it is time, in my opinion, to take the mask off and tell the people and the fishermen to go about their own business and solve their own problems. Tell them that the Government can't do anything, and don't intend to do anything, and tell them practically to paddle their own canoes. I remember Mr. Higgins speaking in the Star Hall in April, 1923. Mr. Higgins was referring not to merchants but to politicians. These are his words:—

(Reads)

I don't want to refer to the membership of the Bennett party at that time, but the ranks of the Monroe party consists of men just as capable as the men who filled the ranks of the Bennett party. It is reasonable to suppose that if there were men in the ranks of the Bennett party who could carry out their projects, because they were successful men, surely there are men in the ranks of the Monroe party who could do the same thing to-day. I was remarkably struck by a statement made by the American Trade Commissioner, Mr. Meek.ns, in Bulletin Number 40. This is the report of an outsider. He was sent to Newfoundland by the American Government as a special Trade Commissioner, to report on the trade possibilities of this country. His report, sir, is this:

(Reads)

We hear a lot about intensive farming nowadays. But we do not hear very much about the intensive cultivation of the fisheries. He offers this as the explanation:

(Reads)

I say that any single industry which employs from forty to fifty thousand men, women and children, as does the fisheries of this country, and from which such a large number of other people, directly or indirectly, derive their living, ought to receive the first consideration, and we should not, as the representatives of the people, throw away the substance for the shadow. It is a fact that the fishing Industry is the basic industry of this country. We may have paper mills which employ a few thousand people who are settled in towns like Grand Falls or Corner Brook, but let the fishing industry once be given up and you will find practically the whole country deserted. Because the people have nothing to live out of but the fisheries.

The trouble is that we have been chasing rainbows. We have been dropping the substance like the dog when he looked down into the water with a bone in his mouth. He saw the shadow of the bone.

MR. BROWNE—The reflection.

MR. RUSSELL—The reflection. I thank you, Mr. Browne. When he saw the reflection he dropped the bone and lost both the reflection and the bone. It is just like a man with a good business giving an ear to somebody who comes along with another proposition. He goes into something that he knows nothing about. His own business, well-established and paying, is neglected and goes down, and the new business fails. He eventually loses both.

Hundreds of men in this country and in Conception Bay to-day cannot get employment or supplies for the fisheries. Job Brothers served notice on men in my own district that if they wanted supplies they had to pay cash. And if they took the supplies and paid the cash even then Job Brothers could not guarantee to take the fish when it was caught. But they also stipulated that if they bought the supplies and caught the fish they would have to get the first chance of purchasing it. But I understand that the supplying merchants on Water Street are not very anxious to supply this year, and therefore hundreds of men who are anxious to go to the fisheries and can do nothing else will be unable to obtain supplies. There are hundreds of men who, even if they wanted to go to Boston, New York, Philadelphia or elsewhere, could not go there. There are some who can, but most men must prosecute the fisheries or starve. There is not enough employment on public works to go around. You are pretty well through with the highroads, I suppose. These highroads are all right if we could afford it; a tourist traffic is a nice thing to contemplate, but a lot of these things are visionary. There is no guarantee that you are going to develop it or profit by it. You take a big chance. If this country could afford to take a chance speculation would be all very well, but this country cannot afford to speculate. That is the position which Newfoundland is in to-day. We cannot afford to speculate and should not.

There is one firm that I wish to refer to, and that is the Hudson's Bay Company. A ray of hope seems to be there. It is good to see a company like that with resources developing the fresh frozen and the smoked fish business. What I have got to suggest in connection with the fisheries is this: Adopt a practical and definite policy of developing the fisheries, find new markets, regulate shipments and run the affairs of the country half decently, and we can all live like princes provided too much damage has not already been done. I notice in the Meekin report reference to codoil, and I think that I will read the section here.

(Reads)

It is not all sunshine as we know for the men prosecuting the fisheries. Outside of the chances that they take, in not being able to get the fish, there is also th eelement of danger, of loss of life and hardship. And then when he comes to sell his fish the low price that he gets is often very discouraging, so that the men in the outports and throughout the country are finding it more profitable and more congenial to get out to other countries when they cannot find employment in their own country. I am not an authority on fish matters no more than is Mr. Bradley, but living in the outports as I do you get some general knowledge of the difficulties and problems which the fishermen have got to contend with. I have thought it possible that we are marking too many rules and regulations in connection with the codfishery, and even in connection with the seal fishery. My idea is that in general we should allow the fishermen to catch fish when and how they can.

Reference has been made to the paper industry. I am glad to see such a large production taking place in that industry. Between Grand Falls and Corner Brook they produce 700 tons daily at a value of over $50,000. I want to say to the Prime Minister and the Government that I stand ready to give my support to the Gander project provided that every consideration is given to the interests of the country and the people. I am opposed, like the Prime Minister himself, to the exportation of pulpwood. I do not think that one foot of wood should be exported from this country in an unmanufactured state. We are consuming and using in this country already too many articles manufactured in other countries and by other workmen, to the detriment of our own people from year to year. The Gander project is about all the paper mills Newfoundland can support.

Referring to the other bills in connection with industrial development, I want to say to the Government that I will give these my hearty support, provided they do not contain unreasonable concessions and are not detrimental to the taxpayers of this country.

Our people want labour. Not only in the city, where there are hundreds of men out of employment, but in the outports as well. Some labour must be provided if the fisheries cannot take them all. Then you should welcome anybody with an industrial proposition. In connection with the Gander measure which was passed by the Government in 1924. There was the condition that the Gander people had to begin the actual construction work within three years from August 16, 1924, and that the sum of five million dollars were to be spent in Newfoundland within six years. And now I understand the Gander people are asking the Government to extend the time. Is that correct?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I think that I told the House that the Government had no proposition from the Gander people.

MR. RUSSELL—Now coming back to the Manifesto of the Prime Minister of 1924. I said early in my remarks sir, that I was one of the members who composed your party and went to the country with a policy not only in connection with the fisheries, but also a policy of economy and retrenchment. I took it very seriously myself. And while I was head of the Department of Public Works, I did everything possible to assist the Prime Minister and the Government in carrying out that policy of economy and retrenchment. Mr. Morine, who is a member of the Executive Government at the present time, in delivering two addresses in this city sometime previous to 1924 claimed that if he were in charge of the affairs of this country he could reduce taxation by $2,000,000? Mr. Morine has been a very prominent member of the Executive Government in this country. I don't know to what extent he has tried to bring about a reduction in taxation. Anyway I don't think that we have had a reduction yet. In reference to economy and retrenchment the leader of the party said:

(Reads)

As I said before I was in charge of one department and I practised retrenchment and economy even to my own political detriment, because I was trying to carry out the policy of the Prime Minister by buying goods as cheap as I possibly could. When demands were made upon me which I thought were wrong I refused to grant them. In connection with the buying of butter. I was trying to practise economy, and the truth about that butter business is simply this: That in the fall of 1925 I decided to call for tenders for provisions and groceries. Various tenders came in for provisions generally but only one for butter. Sir John Crosbie was the butterine man who sent in his tender for the supplying of butter to the various institutions. The Board did not accept any tender either for provisions or groceries. But after that happened Sir John Crosbie came to me and made me an offer. Previous to this I had been buying the butter in a retail way. But he made an offer, and I think that it is only fair to him for me to say that his offer seemed so good that I did not hesitate to accept it. He agreed to sell us the butter at the regular factory price, and in addition to give the Department a ten and a two per cent. discount. My reward was dismissal for doing these things. The Prime Minister saw fit because I attended a meeting with four other members of his party to dismiss me.

I think the Prime Minister has been sorry since for doing it. I think if the Prime Minister had his time over again he would not be hasty, because it has brought a lot of political trouble on his own head, and the end is not yet. Because I will say this, and I don't care who hears me say is, that when Mr. Monroe was elected he had as fine and loyal a crowd of men around him as any political leader could reasonably expect to have in this country, and I believe that every man in that party was imbued with the same sense of duty and obligation to the people of this country. I believe that every man in that party was willing to co-operate and do his best, if treated right and given a show and given a chance. Some members of the party have said to me since we moved out, "Now that you fellows are gone I suppose we will get better treatment." Quite a number have made that remark. It appears that they too realized that it was not much use in the rank and file expecting much, and that they thought it might be better with the majority reduced.

In that policy, I submit, which Mr. Monroe submitted to the people of this country there was no mention made of the things that a vast amount of money has been spent on. There was no mention of Highroads which have cost over two million dollars, and no mention made of the Dock that cost nearly two million; no mention of re-railing the Railway, or of a new steamer on the Port aux Basques-Sydney route. There was certainly a definite policy in connection with the fisheries, but as far as those other things were concerned, which meant a large expenditure of money and consequently increased taxation, and also meant the deficit which we have to-day, these things and these expenditures were afterthoughts. The Government decided on the road and other policies after the election, and I believe that if the country had been asked to endorse such a policy as the Government has carried out since they would not have been prepared to do it, because if you remember the tendency then was, because of expenditures previous to that, very strongly against large expenditures that would mean increased burdens and increased taxation, and the people were in no mood to endorse such a policy because of previous raising of loans and those previous expenditures. As a matter of fact on our election campaign we condemned the Squires Government for raising eighteen million in loans, and gave the people to understand that we didn't intend to raise any more loans. It was not mentioned in the manifesto, I will admit, but that was what we were given to understand that the party stood for, the raising of no more loans, and no more large expenditures of money. Do you ask me if I favour good roads? Certainly I favour good roads, in the same way as I favour a mansion to a cottage, and would rather live in a mansion than in a hovel; but I have got to live in the hovel if I can't afford a mansion; in the same way as I would rather drive in a limousine than a Ford, but must choose the Ford if I can't afford the other. That is just about the position of this country to-day. We are driving in a Rolls Royce to-day, and we can only afford to be driving in a Ford.

Another thing I condemn in the present administration is the appointment of commissions and boards comprised of private individuals drawing big salaries. The commissions and Boards are nothing but minature departments adding to the expense of Government, and we are on a policy of retrenchment. My honourable friend, Mr. Duff, when he was on this side of the House, was never done talking about the appointment of the Highroads Commission, and he used to make me feel very nice sometimes when I was sitting in the Government ranks in Mr. Chambers' position, and he used to say that the Highroads Commission should be put under the Public Works Department. And he was right, absolutely right, and thousands of dollars could be saved if that department was made a sub-department of the Department of Public Works. Mr. Duff said a whole lot of things about highroads and expenditure on the highroads, and condemned the Monroe Government for the waste of money. I wish I had my Hansard here to read some of the things he did say. Another thing the Prime Minister stated is this, that if he can't succeed in saving the country nobody else can. That is a big statement to make. How does Mr. Monroe know that nobody else can It is not sufficient for any man to have good intentions. One writer has said that "the road to hell is paved with good intentions," and another has said that it is "paved with sanctimonious pretensions." Honesty of purpose and honesty of self is not good enough. Sound judgment, born of experience, is the essential thing in managing the affairs of a country. Men are not judged by what they say but by what they do. I am going to refer to the speech the Colonial Secretary made during the bye-election campaign. I think it was delivered in the Gaiety Hall, in which, referring to some men who left the Monroe Party, he called them "apprentices." In other words, the men who went out were inexperienced men, had swelled heads, and should have been seen and not heard.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—I didn't say that.

MR. RUSSELL—The inference was that because certain men had entered politics for the first time they were apprentices and should have been seen and not heard. I dissent from that view, because when I was elected for a district and the electors of that district expected that the Government should not only see me but hear me, and that I should have a voice in the government as well as others. If the Colonial Secretary speaks of us as apprentices he would have to include the Prime Minister. He is just as much an apprentice, perhaps more so, because in his position of Prime Minister he has greater responsibilities. We are the representatives of the people and we are here to manage their affairs and to work in their interests. Are we doing it? We make all kinds of statements during election campaigns, and make all kinds of promises and we come back and forget practically all that we promised and all that we said. We are up against a very serious proposition. I realize that this is no time for playing politics. I have enough interest in this country, because everything I own is here, to put the country first and the interests of the country first. I am not a know-all. I am not a grab-all, and I am not a superman. I have not got the ability that some men have, but at least I have some experience and I have an opinion, and anything that I can do to forward the interests of this country through the Government of this country I am prepared to do it; but I would ask the Prime Minister to quit playing ducks and drakes with the country. I would like to see the Prime Minister get in a repentant mood for anything that has been done that may be considered wrong, whether it was intentional or not. We have all made mistakes; I have made mistakes and every one of us has. Business men make mistakes. They decide on certain courses that look feasible and rational at the time but they turn out to be wrong. If the Prime Minister thinks that certain things the Government have done in the past were wrong and have not been for the benefit of the country and have made it harder for the people and increased taxation, why not admit it? As a result of the bye-election in St. John's East it has been contended that the country has no longer any confidence in the Government. I think the election proves that contention to be correct, and but for the one or two majority which the Government has to-day they could not carry on, and as the Prime Minister stated, no drastic or remedial legislation can be put through. The financial and commercial position of the country to-day I fear is at the breaking point. I don't believe that we know to-day just how bad we are. Every man we meet is talking about the future in the darkest kind of a way. I am no pessimist. I don't want to be suggesting anything that will bring about a condition of things that will mean red flags flying, but I do say that it is necessary at this particular time for the Government to get down to serious business. When conditions in a country are bad there are some people who need not take it seriously. They have got their money made and they are secure, no matter how things go, with their investments or with their business or with their money.

The Prime Minister on opening day in this House was inclined to blame the people for existing conditions. Now I do not absolve the people altogether, but when men are in charge of the affairs of a country they are in a position to know the true position, and if I may use the illustration they should act toward the people of Newfoundland as a parent acts toward his child. That would be adopting a drastic attitude, and that is what the country needs to-day if she is going to be saved. It is not the fault of the people that large expenditures have been made. That is the Government's own policy which was not endorsed by the people. The general feeling and accepted as a fact is that when the country has dropped from the heights of prosperity to the depths of adversity the fault lies with the Government, and I would ask the Prime Minister what he is going to do about it? If the legislation which the Government proposes to introduce this session does not turn out to be any more successful than the legislation introduced at previous sessions then I fear for the future. I would suggest to the Prime Minister to take this House into his confidence and state definitely what our true position is and what he proposes to do and I for one will give my support to any measure that I consider to be in the best interests of the country and the people no matter how drastic it is.

In conclusion I would suggest to the Government to bring in a Bill regulating the exportation of fish; encourage and support any Newfoundlander with a practical and reasonable proposition in connection with industrial development; enforce the Crown Lands Act, whereby enough employment could be had for all, and reserve all timber limits for the people of the country and not give them to any private speculators and do something that will help the fishermen and the fisheries.

MR. GODDEN—Mr. Speaker, since this debate started I have listened to the speeches of the different members with considerable interest. The subject has been so thoroughly discussed that there is very little left for one to talk about. I suppose we all have our own individual ideas as to just what legislation should or should not be passed at this session. But I do believe that every member of the House is agreed on one point, and that is that the Government of the day has not a sufficient majority whereby essential legislation is possible. Anyone reading the Speech from the Throne must become at once aware of the pessimistic atmosphere pervading it, and just why that should be so I am at a loss to understand. I am not pessimistic because I believe that never before in the history of Newfoundland were we in a better position than we are now to achieve success and prosperity—success for the people and prosperity for the country. One might ask what is there to give us an optimistic outlook for the future. Well, there are various things. The first thing is our mineral wealth which for a number of years past has been discussed so much and talked about perhaps too lightly. Various important industrial concerns are interested in our mining possibilities and the activities which we see to-day at Buchan's mine is a concrete example of what we can expect in the way of development from now on regarding our mineral resources. Then there is the paper industry which year by year is increasing in importance in Newfoundland and the eyes of capitalists on both sides of the Atlantic are centred on our paper-making possibilities by reason of our plenteous water powers and vast timber limits, which have been considerably added to since the settlement of the Labrador Boundary dispute. Then again there are the fisheries. I believe that a "come back" will be staged in connection with our fisheries even though serious losses were met with the past couple of years by the fishermen as well as by the exporters. Times have changed and as the times change we must change with the times. If the markets of the world require fish cured or packed in a different manner to the way it has been done in the past we must be up-to-date and find uot the best method of meeting the requirements of our customers. The Hudson Bay Company are at present engaged in doing something in that direction and I believe that what they are doing is the thin end of the wedge as to what we can expect in the way of development for fresh frozen fish. We have the fish in our waters and all that is needed is development to the best possible extent by devising the best means of minimizing the cost of catching it for the fishermen and to understand the different kinds of fish that are to-day required by the various markets abroad. But whatever happens the fisheries should be encouraged. Then we have Agriculture. The other day while discussing the bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond of revered memory one or two members dealt with the agricultural outlook for the country and from what I could gather they were favorably inclined to the idea that agriculture could be developed satisfactorily in this country. I know there are a great many farm products that cannot be grown here successfully and we have to import them for consumption, but there are many things that can be grown here and to our distinct advantage. Take potatoes, for instance, a chief product of our local farms. The Prime Minister stated here a few days ago that local farmers find it difficult to sell potatoes after producing them. There is a reason for that and we should first find out the reason and then provide the remedy. Now I think, Mr. Speaker, we can do that. Nearly every year in the early Fall our local farmers are up against keen competition from Canada, particularly from the Maritime Provinces. These outsiders send down their potatoes into this market and dump thousands of barrels here and at prices that are lower than our local farmers can hope to sell for, and the worst feature of it is that a large proportion of the consumers prefer to buy the imported article apart from the low price. Now there must be a reason for that. I am given to understand that the Canadian potatoes have better keeping qualities than ours but I believe that Mr. Bayly of the Agricultural Department in this city can give the necessary information whereby the local potatoes can have better keeping qualities, as good as the imported, so that it is now up to the Government to provide the remedy. About two years ago I suggested that a protective tariff should be put into effect on certain products of farm and dairy and that suggestion was carried out, to some extent. I think the duty was increased on cabbage at a certain time of the year; and I say now that at certain times of the year, say from the early Fall until the early Spring, a certain protective tariff should be put on imported potatoes.

It will be thought by some members that if you do that the local farmers are going to take advantage of it and charge more than they would otherwise have done, but if you let it be known that the protection is on the understanding that the local prices are to compare with the C.I.F. value of the imported article and if the prices are more than that the protection will be withdrawn. I feel confident that the farmers of this country, who are in most cases just as intelligent as we are, will look out for their future interests, and do the right thing as regards prices.

What applies to potatoes is true of other things that can be produced in large quantities in this country. Eggs are imported in large shipments from Canada, America and even from faraway China into Newfoundland. I know that we can get all the eggs we want in our own country and I would suggest that the same protective tariff be put on eggs. If we adopt a wise protective policy we will find more action amongst the local agriculturists.

So then we have the mines, paper industry, fishery, agriculture and other industries that have been hinted at, and with these in view I am optimistic and think and speak optimistically for the future. We can, and if we pull together, we will bring success and these things can be brought about. Only some of us will have to put our country first and ourselves in the background for a little while.

The Speech from the Throne has been greatly criticised. A lot of what has been said cannot be too forcibly expressed. Criticism is necessary but it should be of a constructive nature.

The first paragraph in the Speech from the Throne refers to the Privy Council award and when reading it we see that Newfoundland now has the right to legislate for an additional one hundred and ten thousand square miles, and suggests we can now proceed with the unrestricted development of the Labrador assets, this of course call for considerable financial outlay. I wonder if this sentiment is echoed by the Minister of Finance.

In any case the question of the Labrador Boundary is going to be a very important one in the near future and it will be up to this Government or some other government to discover just how they are going to dispose of it. Some of the previous speakers have expressed their view or at any rate conveyed the impression that they thought the best thing to do was to sell it for the best sum that could be obtained. We must keep in view the fact that once you sell it for a lump sum it is out of hands for all time and before doing so it is wise to look at another side. I think that the most of the Honourable Members know the story of the 'prodigal son' and it has occurred to me that perhaps the moral of that parable might be aplpicable to the Labrador. If we sell it for a lump sum of money, that will be spent within a very short time, we shall have spent everything and have nothing left of our heritage. Perhaps we can develop the Labrador assets ourselves, and gain a yearly revenue for all time by reason of the labour used which will make the revenues.

At any rate it is a very important question and should be looked at from every angle when the time comes.

The reference to the cod fishing industry is disposed of in three and a half lines and reference is also made to the seal fishery. I have often thought that those who prosecute the seal fishery, that is the common sealers, always did get very little returns for the hardships which they undergo. These sealers who go out to the ice in the spring of the year for three weeks or two months, come in and are very lucky if they receive thirty to seventy dollars for all the hardships which they have undergone. I think that this is one case where a minimum wage bill could be very well applied.

The previous speakers have omitted to say anything about the Imperial Conference or its importance. They have congratulated several members of this House, on their success in the by-elections or with reference to the Address in Reply. I would also like to congratulate these gentlemen, but I am also going to congratulate another member. It may seem strange coming from the Opposition side of the House but I think the Prime Minister deserves to be congratulated upon the way in which he performed his duties as representative of Newfoundland at the Imperial Conference. From official reports and from private letters which I have received, it is evident that he held his own against representatives of larger and more powerful countries and brought credit not only to himself but to Newfoundland through the happy eloquence and general bearing.

Now we come to that part of the Speech from the Throne in connection with the deficit. A deficit whether large or small is something to feel down in the mouth about. Various suggestions have been made as to why we have this deficit, but it is significant that at the present time that about one-third the value of our imports is on the free list and it will require a great deal of courage for any politician to atempt to remedy that, but supposing that we struck out the free list altogether and reduced the amount of duty upon the other two-thirds. Level up the whole. I don't know if this sugestion is worth anything or not but I think it could be considered a little more fully when going into the tariff question.

It is mentioned here that the deficit on the railway will be considerably less this year than it was last year. It is quite probable that it will be so, and it is great to know it. In connection with this the railway, freight department is showing a good deal of commendable active and further receipts can be expected due chiefly to the fact that a new freight tariff has been compiled by Mr. Rolls, who deserves to be congratulated. It will induce the importers to route more shipments over the railway than they have been sending during past years and the result will be an increased revenue due to the new tariff.

I am sorry to see mentioned in the speech from the Throne that the Government intends to re-impose the Income Tax. I am in favour of this tax, if it can be applied fairly. We all know what happened when it was applied before. Just a few of us paid it. When I was giving in my returns there were men within a stone's throw of me who hadn't even been asked to give in their returns. Unless the new bill convinces me that a better method is suggested of collecting and compelling men to give an account of their incomes than before, I shall have to vote against it. I am only one, it is true, but there may be others who have the same views. The assessor before could go to the mercantile firms and ask for a list of the employees' salaries and Mr. Employee would have to pay the assessed amount whether he had any intention of paying it or not. There are many business men who will not tell you how much they are making and though you examine their books it is difficult to tell. There are many other business men in this country who make big incomes and who do not keep any books, at all.

I contend there are a thousand more people well able to afford to pay income tax. Many are not even asked to give returns and even if they are asked to give them they would purposely make a very small showing. I hope that when the new bill comes in it will have a new method of collection, and of obtaining information.

I don't know how much it cost to collect the income tax and the business profits tax when they were in force. The chances are that the returns that were gotten in did not warrant the expenditure.

A Bill will be brought in here in connection with Buchan's Mine and I notice that we shall be asked to admit into this country free of duty certain articles in connection with this mine for a period of 20 years. This is not the time to discuss that now, but I venture to say that we should not consider giving free entry for such a long period to articles coming into this country. There will also be a Bill in connection with the Gander. That is something that we cannot criticise unless we see the bill. That territory is very valuable to those interested in the pulp and paper manufacture and the legislation that I would like to see in this House in connection with the Gander area would call for the erection of paper mills in the Gander area. If one listens to rumour, I understand that owners of paper mills in other countries are contemplating the purchase of the Humber industry, and also the timber area on the Gander, and that they propose the erection of two more machines at Corner Brook which will be fed by timber and brought in from the Gander. If we can get that we are adding another source of labor which we very much want, but we must not cater to the wishes of the buyers too much. We must consider whether the companies that wish to purchase are desirable from every point of view.

Before taking my seat I shall just refer to the present unpopularity of the present Governent. The reason that the Government is so unpopular to-day, is because, their promises have not been fulfilled. I do not say that any blame can be attached to any individual. That is one of the reasons why the Government to-day is unpopular, and as evidence of their unpopularity we have the example of five or six gentlemen leaving their ranks, and who came to this side of the House last year, and the result of the recent by-elections have shown public sentiment in that respect, and in view of this condition I think that it is due to the people of this country and not particularly to the Opposition, the Opposition cannot be expected to be considered, but it is only fair to the people that they should be given a chance to say what Government they wish to have after this Session. The elections should not be deferred, in my opinion, until next year. I am not one who desires to be in the ranks of the Government. Those who are cracking their necks to gain a position in the Government and a seat in the place of power do not realize perhaps the responsibility of Government, but I do think this, that the country should have a General Election this fall.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Speaker, when the House opened resolutions of condolence were passed to be sent to the relatives of the late Sir Michael Cashin and Sir Robert Bond. There were members of this House who spoke on these resolutions, and what they had to say I entirely endorse. Both these men played a very conspicuous part in the public life of this country. They have left their names indelibly written on the pages of the history of Newfoundland, and anyone who has followed their careers can see for themselves that the examples that they had set during their public career, all of us could well strive to emulate. I shall speak of Sir Michael Cashin first. He was a man who came from the bottom of the ladder to the top. From the fishing boat to the Premiership of Newfoundland. Anyone who has made a record like that must have had ability, and his career is well worth studying. Not only that sir, but during his public career he had done things which were useful for the country. He was sometime Minister of Finance, and during that period while he filled that position he did actually accumulate a little nest-egg which should be an example for all Finance Ministers to follow, and leave us in a better position than we are to-day, and when we are up against the stress of circumstances we would have something to fall back upon.

Speaking of Sir Robert, I think that every man in this House will agree with me that he was, without doubt, the greatest statesman that Newfoundland has produced. He was a man who had strong convictions, and he never hesitated to express them, and if he could not carry these convictions out he would sacrifice his position and everything else rather than compromise with anything that was wrong. He was in a very independent position on account of the large estate that was left to him, a fortune which enabled him to devote all his life to the interests of this country. He would not naturally be subject to the same temptations as a man who had to struggle hard for a living and would under certain conditions be ready to compromise here and there in order to be able to progress in his path through life. But there are men with means, and perhaps with larger means than he had who would compromise with anything that came along in order to increase their income, or further their advancement by their position or in some other way. We don't have to go outside Newfoundland to find examples of these, and so naturally we honour any man who will stand up, and will bravely carry out anything that he believes to be beneficial to his country, and will not stop at anything that would have for its object the advancement of his country. Sir Robert Bond was a great patriot. When I speak of patriotism I speak of patriotism in its truest phase, the man who is willing to sacrifice his own private fortune ir order to save the country from disaster. Such a man I say is the truest patriot that could be found. When we think of a man of that description we certainly have cause to feel proud that Newfoundland produced that type of public man. We have seen it in his bequest that he made to the people of Newfoundland and I hope that the country and the Government, and particularly the Minister of Agriculture and Mines in whom I have faith enough to believe that he is interested in the development of the agricultural resources of this country, I hope that he will do his utmost to assist that industry, even if it does mean that he will have to establish that model farm. I don't see why it should be any additional expenditure to the colony. Perhaps an amount of money voted for the agricultural grant may be allocated to that purpose.

My congratulations must also be given to the member for Burgeo and LaPoile. He no doubt was elected on his own popularity, and no doubt also because he had a nice comfortable fund behind him. It is only natural to expect that when you have twenty or thirty thousand dollars at your disposal from the different departments of the Government, and those are distributed through that district that they are going to have some weight in electing you in that district. And if the fight is closely contested it is going to swing it from one side to the other. He was in the happy position of being Minister of Public Works and was able to have that amount at his disposal in order to help him to win that district.

Doctor Mosdell was sent up to Fortune and was elected as a member of the Opposition and no doubt if he takes part in the debates of this House he can bring a lot of information that will be valuable to this House. He has the knack of being able to assemble a lot of facts. The part that he played in the Upper House was ample proof of his ability as a speaker.

In referring to the Speech from the Throne, it is remarkable as somtone has said for what it does not contain. I say that it was the most vacuous document that was ever read in this House of Assembly. You can say that on looking into the document. You cannot say that it would buoy up the hopes of the people of Newfoundland. Y ou cannot say that it would give encouragement to the producers of this country to go ahead and work harder than ever to help bring about a better condition of things in this country. I say now, Mr. Speaker, that this country is up against a very hard proposition. The failure of the fisheries of last year means a deficit in the earning power of the fishermen. The result has been a decline in the trade that has been done in this country this fall and it was felt hardest this spring. And we cannot put out of sight the fact that conditions are hard at the present time. But all the same we were up against just as hard conditions in Newfoundland before, and if anyone peruses the history of Newfoundland from the earliest times down to the present he cannot help but see there that Newfoundland has passed through very hard times, harder than they are to-day perhaps, and got over them. And if our forefathers had the courage and will and the determination to carry it through then surely we as their sons have the same will and the same determination to do the same.

Well sir, these are the conditions that we are facing in Newfoundland to-day. When I read the Speech from the Throne, I almost began to think that the leader of the government had lost faith in this country, because if he had not, or if he had some programme, he would have said that the conditions were hard alright. He would have said that the revenue was declining, that there was a large deficit. But Newfoundland has gone through that before and is going to get through it this time. He would have mapped out a programme, whereby this country would see itself fetting over these difficulties in a year or two. Take the fisheries for example. There is no mention in the Speech from the Throne as to what is going to be done for the restoration of the confidence in the fisheries. If there had been some statement like that in the Speech from the Throne it is not likely that we would have so many men leaving the fisheries and going away to Canada and the United States to-day. Every steamer that has left this country since the month of March is loaded with fishermen, chiefly, who are going to Canada and the States because there was no hope given out that would induce them to stay in their own country, and stay at the fisheries for another year.

According to those people who are connected with the supplying merchants, there is very little hope of seeing anything better done at the fishery this year than was done last year. In consequence, a large number of men are so discouraged that they are not troubling about going to the fishery this season. It was pointed out by the Prime Minister in his Manifesto in 1924 and supported by every member on the Government side that the codfishery was the mainstay of the country. Well I cannot understand how a man or men prominently identified with the fishery have not got the Government to make some pronouncement as to what they promise to do to carry out their promise of 1924. After being three years in office the Government have not yet made a move to formulate some fishery policy. Even the Colonial Secertary in 1923 said in his Manifesto that he was going to have a convention of the merchants of St John's and the outports and representative fishermen to discuss ways and means to try and improve fishing conditions, but still the convention was never called and nothing has been done since. Surely, sir, under conditions of that kind and with promises made galore, you cannot expect the fishermen of the country to retain their confidence in the fishery? If no interest is manifested by those who have large investments in the fishery, how can you expect the ordinary fishermen, who only operate for about six months out of the year and do not get sufficient out of it to support their families, to take an interest in it? Now the question of the cull of fish has been alluded to here already by previous speakers. Last year the cull was the most discouraging feature of the fishery. I know a man who sold his cargo of fish to a merchant and was congratulated upon the splendid quality of the article. A day or two afterwards another man came along with a cargo of fish of inferior quality and sold it to the same merchant.

The man with the inferior article was paid the same price as the man who had produced a better cured article. The result is that the man who took care with his fish has given up the fishery entirely, as he said if he had been given only twenty cents more per quintal for the superior article it would have encouraged him to continue fishing, and he also said that he knew scores of other men who were treated similarly to him and who had decided to abandon the industry altogether. Now what has the Government done or what are they going to do in the matter? It is not only to-day they were made aware of that condition of things. That was known to the Prime Minister and his colleagues last Fall when so much dissatisfaction prevailed. Yet no attempt has been made up to the present to remedy that condition. For a long while the Board of Trade has been endeavouring to get a number of fish merchants to meet them at their rooms to discuss the situation and they had the greatest difficulty to get any one supplying merchant to become a member of their Council until the Prime Minister's son came along and became a member of it, so that we have one member of the supplying merchants on the Council of the Board of Trade to-day, but up to now there has been nothing done to restore the confidence of the fishermen of the country and no effort has been made to improve the conditions which are confronting the fishing industry of the country to-day.

On motion the debate was adjourned to to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of Question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Tuesday, May 31st, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, May 31st, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Brown, from Botwood, re construction of a road.

Mr. Brown, from Bishop's Falls, re roads.

Mr. Ashbourne, from Birchy Bay, re roads.

Mr. Scammell, from Pacquet and Woodstock, re telephone communication.

Dr. Mosdell, from St. Jacques, Belleoram, Pool's Cove, Bay du Nord and Rencontre East, re herring fishery.

Mr. Brown gave notice of Question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of Question.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of Question.

Mr. Winsor gave notice of Question.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of Question.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of Question.

Dr. Mosdell gave notice of Question.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a statement made in the Daily News this morning before we go on to the Address in Reply, and also to add a few remarks to the question of financial difficulties that has arisen during the past few days. In giving a synopsis of the Minister of Finance's speech this morning the Daily News says: "In the course of his remarks Mr. Cashin had said that from figures supplied him by the Auditor General the deficit for the year 1925-26 was really two million dollars." That statement is incorrect. I never made any such statement. I said that from figures tabled by the Minister of Finance and Customs that that deficit was there. I never attributed it to the Auditor General that he tabled figures in this House because he can't. This misrepresents what I said, and I don't think the Minister of Finance made that statement that he is quoted for either, because he couldn't. I want to draw attention to that error for the Auditor General would think I was after his scalp in connection with that affair from the News this morning. Furthermore, I would like to draw the Finance Minister's attention to the figures he quoted in connection with that deficit. The Finance Minister states, "If you take June month, the expenditure is quoted at $3,994,258.01. This amount should have read $2,418,511.63, which makes all the difference." By correcting that error we lessen the deficit $1,575,746.38; that is the deficit which I had figured on from figures tabled in this House by the Minister of Finance would become $449,502.07. Further on, the Finance Minister mentions the amount of $420,058.44, which must be deducted from the total expenditure. By subtracting this amount from the deficit which I had figured on, we find the deficit only twenty-nine thousand instead of one hundred and twelve thousand. I would like to hear the Minister of Finance explain that.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

MR. GRIMES—The reply of the Colonial Secretary this afternoon in relation to the conversation that has taken place on the matter of getting a reduction on the duty or removal of the duy on our fish going to the United States was very interesting, and it is good to see that some step has been taken to try and get that tariff removed and help the fisheries of this country, but it is going to take some time before that is arranged, if it is done, to the satisfaction of either Newfoundland or Canada. For, I presume, that the Canadian Government will take good care to look out for the interests of the Nova Scotia fishermen, and before any satisfactory decision is made in Newfoundland, the United States Government will have to deal with that country as well. In the meantime, we have to deal with the situation that exists in our own country. I stated yesterday that large numbers of fishermen were leaving the country and had left the country already in their thousands, and that those who were left behind, or a large number of those left behind had given up the fishery and were seeking other avenues of employment. It is appalling to think that this industry which we all regard in this House as the most important industry in the country is so little attended to by the Government, at least so little effort is being made in order to help to improve the conditions with which that industry is faced. I learned from a man, who is well versed with the North, that there are sixty schooners now lying up, or they are not at least following the fishery the same as last year, some probably going in fo rcoasting, while others are lying up. Along with that are the large numbers of men who went in to Corner Brook, Millertown, Grand Falls and Buchan's Mine to look for employment. There are, I understand, now about 700 working at Buchan's Mine and Millertown. Some of these are fishermen and some belong to the West Coast; some are labourers, but a large number of men had to turn back again and these men have come to St. John's hoping that they will be able to get somebody to go security for them in order to get supplies to prosecute the fishery, and the answer to all of them is: "Well! We don't know where we are going to get off in connection with the fishery this year." A great many have no intention whatever of following the fishery. If they can get employment elsewhere they will do it, and if they can't, they will say: Well! The Government has got to get work for us. Well! That is a very sorry position to be in to-day, and quite a large number of men round the coast of this Island who are taking this attitude, and if we ask them why, they will say they have been discouraged by the small price last year and the fact that even if they had a catch they were able to square accounts, and if not, they were in debt to the merchant or the supplier, and here we have to-day all these men looking for employment and not finding any, with wives and children depending upon them, and a great many of them now looking to the Relieving Officer to see what he can do in order to provide for their families. A great many of these men have been going on the Labrador, and some of the men who have supplied them have joined with them in saying that there is no possibility whatever of making the Labrador fishery a success with the price of Labrador fish at $4.00. They give you an array of figures showing the cost of outfitting for the Labrador and they place it side by side with what a full catch or the fill of a schooner will bring to go to cover the cost; or they will show you the value of each return which will not cover the cost of the fishing outfit. When they bring that before us,

Mr. Speaker, we cannot hep but be convinced that they have a case, and that it is up to the Government of this country to find some way of dealing with a situation of that kind. I have said that no, or very little attempt, has been made by the Government to do anything to help out the situation. They have not done anything in the way of opening up employment, presumably because they cannot get money to do it. All the moneys raised for the purpose of building Highroads have been expended and there is no hope of getting employment in that direction this year. At any rate, if the statement of Prime Minister is to be taken that work on the High Roads has been stopped for the year. Well, what are we going to do? Aren't you going to do something? What will renew hope and restore confidence in this country which is fast waning away. Take the condition of some of the people who are living in the outports to-day. They have gone back there, as I say, from Buchan's Mine and other places seeking supplies, and they hope to get them from the small merchant of the place to which they belong, some little help in the way of supplies to go to the shore fishery, but these men say that they can't do it, that there is nothing to justify them in advancing any supplies no matter how small for the fishery when they see no hope held out that it is going to be a profitable venture this year. The question may be asked why should the Government interfere in the management of the fishing industry. Well, my reply would be that it is a national industry, and when private enterprise fails to carry on that industry profitably for the people, then it is time that the Government should step in to help out in a solution of the problems. We have precedent for that in other countries. We can take Italy at the present time and compare its condition with what it was several years ago. Italy was practically on the verge of bankruptcy, but the Government of that country decided or a later government called the Fascisti Government decided that it would discourage in every way possible the importation into the country of any goods that were manufactured in the country and the result has been that the exports and imports about balance and that the heavy deficits with which the Italian Government was faced a few years ago have been practically wiped out, and the value of the lira has gone from 150 in the pound to 90 to-day, because the Government interfered in connection with the business of the country. It took hold of certain industries and said that it was going to give assistance in connection with manufacturing industries in Italy. We intend to impose certain taxes on imports and we expect you to employ a greater number of men because of the increased trade that will come to you.

Now, as I said before, Italy has taken the same position in connection with the Government of that country. They are helping out industry, they are not leaving it to private enterprise alone to look after the welfare of the people when they have failed to do it ,but said that we are ready to assist you in every way possible in order that these industries may be made useful to the people of the country; and here we are after all the experience we have, after the last three years doing nothing to help the important industry of this country. Suggestions have been made to the Government time and again to do something with regard to the regulation of shipments. Every mercantile man concerned with the fisheries of this country that I have had conversation with has agreed that that is one of the means in which we could help out the fishing industry of the country. Still the Government has made no attempt whatever to try and bring in regulations of shipments of fish and again no attempt has been made with regard to standardisation although we find that every other fish-producing country has done something in order that they may popularize the sale of fish and increase it. In the Evening Telegram a few weeks ago practically a whole page was devoted to rules and regulations concerning the fishery which are carried out by the Norwegian Government. They have been fostering in every way possible the fishing industries of that country and only recently I find that the Canadian Government have also taken steps in a similar way. Recently I said the Canadian Government have taken steps in a similar way as was evidenced by the publication of a communication sent out by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to various fishing ports in Nova Scotia and others of the provinces of Canada that export fish to various countries, and in that communication were laid down certain rules and regulations governing the cure of fish. What has the Fisheries Department of this country done in order to get the co-operation of the trade and get from them suggestions as to what will be beneficial in order to improve the quality, and once having improved it see that rules are carried out to keep it so. They have suggested this according to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries of Canada for the purpose of having an inspection of all fish exported from Canada where any fisherman desires to see that he has got the proper cull placed on his fish. For instance, if a contract is entered into by a fisherman for the supply of a certain quality and if he feels that contract is not being carried out he is privileged according to Canadian Law to call in an inspector of fish to say whether there is an appeal and state the position with regard to it. We had nothing like that last year in connection with the cull of fish in this country. Dissatisfaction was great. Hundreds of fishermen were discontented with the cull and there was no appeal from the culler of the merchant.

Let us go a little further into the matter, Mr. Speaker, and see if anything has been done to encourage the sale of fish in our country.

A good many people smile at the suggestion that you ask a fish eating people to eat more fish. I consider that there could be fifty or sixty thousand more quintals of fish consumed here between the months of November and June than there are at present, if we go the right way about it. I am just as confident that it can be done as I am of standing here this afternoon. I think it is admitted by all present that outside of Fridays very little fish is used in this country. At the present time and during the summer when the fish are in season it is more often found on the tables in every home, but after the fall season begins we very seldom see fish on the table other than on Fridays. We have in this country—(reads a list of families)—altogether about twelve thouand families.

Now I think everyone here will agree when I say that when you go into any settlement—and I have been in them all and have taken part in the work and spent three and four days at a time in the homes of the fishermen and never seen fish on the table at any time—that very little fish is consumed by the outport people. They have any amount of foreign foods such as tinned meat, but the one product on which the livelihood of thousands in this country depends, receives only a secondary consideration. What is the cause of this? It is because the people are not alive to the needs of our most important industry and the Government should take the lead in the matter. The Government should call a meeting and with the co-operation of the exporting merchants arrange to do something in the way of a system of propaganda in order to get the people to eat more fish. The question will undoubtedly be raised as to where we are going to get the money. If we follow the example set by Canada and, I think, last year by the United States Government, I feel sure that we would be able to find a few thousand dollars to spend in order to induce the people to eat more fish, than they do at the present time. The desired result was brought about in Quebec, New York, Boston, Philadelphia and a great many of the seaport towns of the States. I remember reading an article in one of the New York fish magazines of the work of a Mrs. McPherson who had visited several cities and an enquiry was made as to the result, and the report showed that all the fish dealers without exception reported that the sales of fish had increased. If they could do that in the United States and in the province of Quebec, I don't see why it couldn't be done in Newfoundland. There is very little doubt whatever that if the Government called on representatives of exporting merchants and representative men from the fishermen they would find these men, if they got together at a round table and talked over the matter, willing and ready to do what they could to boost the sale of fish in this country.

I visited the logging camps in 1923 all up and down the Exploits River and I never saw fish on the table more than once a week, and that was on Friday, and I asked the camp steward why there was not more fish consumed and he told me that the men preferred fresh meat, pork and beef, and when it came to fish some of them wanted the Labrador and some didn't and he really didn't know what they wanted. So they only got a small quantity of fish for the logging camps. I am convinced that if you could get thees men in the logging camps at a round table conference and point out to them how much the people of the outports are depending on the amount of fish consumed, this produce of our own country, they would say send it along and we will do our share.

The trouble to-day is to get the fish cooked in a way that will make it appetizing. There are many people who declare that they do not eat fish because they cannot get it cooked in a way that will appeal to their taste. I think I am safe in saying that there are only six or seven different ways of cooking fish in Newfoundland. If you will take up the recipe book of the Gorton Pew Company you will find that there are at least a hundred different ways of cooking the fish in order to appeal to the different tastes of the people of the United States.

If the merchants and the fishermen got together and got some women and men, for there are a good many men who are good cooks, and obtain from them some recipes of different ways in which the fish could be cooked there would be sufficient to satisfy all tastes.

I was speaking to a gentleman who returned from Norway a few weeks ago and he told me that in every restaurant and at every hotel you found that fish was always on the menu. In fact at many places fish formed the whole of the menu—that is different kinds of fish. They are always boosting their fish and keep it ever before the people of Norway, with the result that you find it on every menu and used extensively throughout the whole country.

If we do not boost our fish we cannot expect other people to boost it for us. Every time we bring a friend to our homes or to a hotel we have a chance to do a great deal of good for the country or a good deal of harm. If everybody would only be a booster of the country it would be of great benefit to the fishing industry.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if the Government intends to do anything in connection with the fishery this year. I feel that they can do something along the lines I have already suggested. The first thing to do will be to call a meeting of the merchants and other people and make arrangements to do something to boost the fishery of this country.

If we could have one hundred thousand quintals consumed in the city this year it would be a great thing for the fishery. Now the Government has great opportunities and if it does not do something then we will know that it is the most incapable, incompetent and in efficient Government that has ever held the reins of office, considering all the opportunities it has. So much for the fisheries.

With regard to the high roads policy of the Government. I agree, to some extent with Captain Randell, that the climate of this country is not inviting to tourists. Some summers the weather is splendid, while other summers the climate is bad. But there is one part of the Island where the climate is fine every year and that is the section known as the "Fog Free Zone." From Hall's Bay to Badger and to Rushy Pond, there you would have a strip of road about one hundred miles long running through the most beautiful part of the country. There is a good deal of road already there—there is a road from Hall's Bay to Badger and part of the way from Grand Falls to Rushy Pond. If the Government would erect a road from Rushy Pond to Badger there would be a road of a hundred miles running from Hall's Bay to Rushy Pond. This is the prettiest section of Newfoundland, where lakes abound and where there are innumerable fish to be caught. It is a paradise for tourists. One or two of them were down to Hall's Bay last year and though they admired the scenery very much they complained of the condition of the road. It will be worse this year unless the Government intends to make any improvement.

If the Government could make a road through that section that I have just mentioned it will be another boost to the coutnry because, as I have said before, the country up there is delightful and the scenery all that could be desired. Instead of that all the money has been spent on the Avalon Peninsula, and I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the Government has any money to use on the roads this year that they take that part of the country into consideration.

There is one other matter that was referred to in the Speech from the Throne, and that is the matter of retrenchment.

That was promised in the manifesto of the present administration three years ago, and three years have gone by and the expense of carrying on the Government to-day is greater than ever before. The policy of retrenchment has not been carried out. If it had the expenses would have been less than we find them to-day. The Government has seen fit to carry on in the same old way, to run the departments in the same way as of old. During its term of office several vacancies have occurred in the public departments which could have been left alone, but they were filled and the revenue suffered to that extent. At the present time the accounts show that the revenue has suffered a loss of about two million dollars. Knowing all this there can be no other way to save the country from destruction than to adopt some form of retrenchment. A good many petitions have been presented to this House with regard to roads and bridges and other public matters. Where is the money coming from? Are we still going to continue more borrowing? Are you going to raise the necessary funds by increased taxation? Or have you got some industrial policy before you that will increase importation and increase the revenue. Unless that is done, Mr. Speaker, I contend that we are headed for destruction.

There is one other matter that I would like to refer to and that is the report of the Board of Liquor Control. The report shows that there have been one hundred and seventy more convictions for breaches of the liquor law than the previous year. When reference was made to this some years ago when the present liquor act was introduced to bring the law into existence, it was stated that if we brought in this law we would have no further moon-shining and illicit sales of liquor. Still we have in the liquor report the number of convictions during the past year for boot-legging and a large number for illicit sales of liquor. Apparently the law has made no improvement in that direction. My information, and I have it from a particularly good source, tells me that there is more liquor consumed in the outports to-day under the present liquor law than ever before. I submit that to have one and a half million dollars spent on liquor is a very poor way of encouraging the people to be thrifty and care for their families. We ought to think here of the women and children whose lives have been ruined by the large distributions of liquor that are going on.

I understand that in Norway a few years ago the Government gave a bonus to every clerk showing an increase in the sale of beer and wines in preference to strong drink, and a still larger bonus if he could show an increase in the sale of temperance drinks. The Premier should call his party together and arrange to make a better law and one more in keeping with the wishes of the people. I would say that a large number of the people in this country are dissatisfied with the present law and some means should be found to better the existing conditions. Call a meeting of representative people to-gether and go into the whole question and devise a better law that we have at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, reference has been made to the matter of having a general election this fall. I think it ought to be clearly understood by the Government that they no longer retain the confidence of the people. At any rate recent by-elections have shown that their candidates have been defeated by a large majority of the people, though they hold a majority in the House.

I remember reading a statement made by the Minister of Justice of Canada referring to the same question, when he said that the supremacy of the people is greater than the supremacy of the party, and he felt that a general election should take place, and it did.

It is well known throughout the country and well known in this House that the Government do not hold the confidence of the people to-day as they did in 1924. That feeling has been shown by the two recent by-elections. It is now the duty of the Government to go to the country and stand by their old policy or draw up a new one and take a mandate from the people. I think that is the way for the Government to act in connection with the questions which have been brought before this House.

In connection with the deficit that has taken place the Speech from the Throne says:

(Reads)

I looked up the Customs records for 1925 and 1926 to see how much the reduction on cotton goods affected the revenue. These are the figures:

(Reads)

The total duty collected on cotton has not been more than twenty per cent. It is $514,583.75. In fact it is safe to say that the reduction of cotton goods does not average more than 15 per cent. But we will give the Government the benefit of the doubt. If there was a twenty per cent. decline in the city on all cotton goods imported into this country, the duty would be about $96,739. So that low price of goods imported into this country has little to do with the decline in the revenue of this country.

I think that the Government are acting very wisely in reimposing that income tax, but as Major Cashin said in this House a few days ago, I don't think that it should apply to people in this country whose incomes are around $1500 or $2,000. It should be mainly for persons getting $3,000 or over.

Reference has been made in the Speech from the Throne to the Labrador boundary dispute. A great many people have been concerned with the Labrador Boundary question for a great many years passed. Those gentlemen who have been associated with the settlement of that boundary dispute from Martin Furlong down to the present Minister of Justice deserve to be complimented. I hope Mr. Speaker, that the Government will in a few days do something in the way of a fishery policy. It is quite evident to every member in this House that until we restore a better condition of things in connection with the fisheries that we are going to be up against pretty hard times. So I think that the Government should make some pronouncement or another to help that out.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Speaker, in rising to make a few remarks in connection with the subject that has occupied the attention of the House for the last two weeks, I want to say at the outset that I have no desire whatever to delay the business of this House or to be classed as an obstructionist. I am quite prepared now to help the Government put through any legislation that they will bring to this House, but at the present time we have no legislation, concerning which to ask for our assistance. There is one bill I know on the Order Paper, then why not go ahead with it. I don't want to be in this House longer than is necessary to pass legislation, anymore than any member here. It is not because I crossed over to this side of the House that I have got to oppose any legislation that is brought in here.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those who have spoken before me have offered their congratulations to those members who have come in here since last this House was prorogued. I first must offer my congratulations to the mover and the seconder for a committee to be formed to draft a reply to the Speech from the Throne. To the seconder I offer my hearty congratulations, but to the mover I only go half way, because he could have well left the latter part of his speech unsaid. There were certain things in his remarks that I as one of the people who helped Mr. Brophy in St. John's East take exception to. I also offer my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Burgeo and La Poile, and I welcome him back here. He is a friend of mine and sat next to me on that side of the House and I may say that I made it possible for you to become Minister of Public Works. If I had not moved over here you would still be bringing water to the elephants like I was when I was on that side of the House. He went to the district as I thought with his bare knuckles, but low and behold when the public accounts were tabled we found that it cost twenty thousand dollars to elect Mr. Chambers for the District of Burgeo and La Poile. However I have no fault to find with him, and I hope that he will enjoy his seat there whether long or short. Since the last session of this House a gentleman who sat on this side has got away somehow or other. On that day we closed 17 to 17. But Mr. Duff saw fit to go to the other side of the House.

There was another gentleman who sat here and now is gone. I do not know what caused him to get out so quick, but some say that he struck a job.

I will pass on and come now to my friend, Doctor Mosdell, who went to the district of Fortune, never saw the district before, and came back victorious. I congratulate him, and I welcome him to our gang. He is going to be a great acquisition to us. I did not have the pleasure of helping in the fight in Fortune Bay to win that seat for Doctor Mosdell, but I did have the extreme pleasure of participating in the campaign in St. John's East, that gave Mr. Brophy the biggest victory, bar none, that has ever been recorded in Newfoundland. And when the history of that campaign is written, Mr. Speaker, it will be told there, how, there never was and never will be again a member with the backing of the Executive Government, every departmental head and every piece of artillery brought into the fray, so ridiculed by the votes of the common people, men and women alike.

When the Government were forced to open St. John's East by some members of their party they were on the horns of a dilemma. The next day a gentleman who edits a paper in this city thought fit to make the statement that the only two gentlemen that wanted the district opened were myself and Major Cashin. Now neither Major Cashin or myself had anything to do with the opening of the district. As far as I am concerned I would have been satisfied to see the district closed. But this gentleman who receives a salary in the upper House thought fit to insult the representatives of the people who occupy seats in this Chamber. And as far as his influence is concerned it is practialcly nil. In fact he lost the fight for you in the East End, and also the other paper that supports you. We had a little paper, a rag they termed it, edited by my friend Mr. Grimes, who put it all over the big dailies and won out in the battle in St. John's East. Now I took a prominent part in that fight in St. John's East. When the campaign was opened and the Prime Minister made a speech in the Gaiety Hall, it was reported to me afterwards that he made the statement that nobody wanted that district opend but Phil Moore. He discovered that there were five thousand others in the district against him and his Government. The fight went on and we got our committee working. Every thing went along fine until two days befort polling day. Major Cashin was on Bell Island and he sent me a long distance phone message to say that Mr. Monroe had hired the hall over on the Island and that he was coming over. "What will I do," he asked. And I sent back the reply "Hold the fort and we got them licked," and there are men in this Chamber this day who know what happened on Bell Island. Now I am going to give you a little of the history of what happened in town. They asked me about down the shore, and I said leave that to me. Next day an S.O.S. call was sent from the Prime Minister, and every member of the Executive answered the call, except Mr. Woodford, who refused to go. So I left here at 2 o'clock and went down the shore to lay my plans for the evening performance. Certain men who came down from the city will never forget it as long as there is breath in their bodies.

However we were up early on polling day and first we went to the booth rooms. At one place there was a gentleman who went down from the city to spread reports. He went into one House and said that there would be no supplies this year if they didn't vote for Monroe. I had a great deal to do to counteract that. After 8 o'clock that night I was never so tired in all my life. But I felt that we had done a great work. Then when the first count came out it was 100 to 61 in favor of Brophy. The second day the supporters of the Government were looking for two votes, the silent vote and the intelligent vote. They never got them. And that is the history of the fight, and I am glad that I was in the fight and I am glad of the part I took in that fight.

And now I will pass on to take up the Speech from the Throne. This epistle that has been handed to His Excellency to read to this House who ever is responsible for it is the most laughable thing that has ever been brought into this House, since the days of Responsible Government. The Finance Minister cannot balance his budget owing to the falling off of the imports of cotton. But a few nights before the Minister of Finance had a dream and it would have been a good thing if he had to rush down to the bank on Monday morning and deposit that surplus.

Now I would like to refer to the labour question as I see it to-day in this city. I understand that there is going to be a meeting to-night called by men out of employment, I understand 700 or 800 of them. I know most of these men. I have known them all my life-time. I don't see the Ramsay MacDonald in his seat now. The labour candidate who promised to look after them. They gave him their votes and put them where he is to-day, and now he has turned his back on them. All he need do to-day is to stand up there in his seat and demand a certain amount of money to be expended in connection with these men who are out of employment, and he has got to get it, or else leave the party.

I am sorry to say that I represent an outport constituency and I brought them in here. When the Dry Dock was getting built they came to St. John's. Some of them lived in boats while here and some of them lived under the houses of certain members of this House. They have never gone back to their homes, and if the Government would make an allocation this evening to allow those men who are hungry to earn a few dollars, they would be only distributing the money amongst the outports of this country, because every outport in Newfoundland almost is represented among the unemployed of St. John's East and West, I will give it my unqualified support. Mr. Speaker, the Monroe Government went to the country with a fishery policy, and my colleague and myself were elected by the people of the district of Ferryland on that policy. But I am sorry to say that at the first party meeting I need not tell you what happened, Mr. Speaker. I asked for one millllion dollars to be devoted towards roads and the encouragement of the fishery and I was sneered at by the Leader of the Government. The only member of the Monroe party who supported my proposition was my colleague, Major Cashin. The Monroe Government went to the country and shouted from the hill tops that they were going to make this country a fisherman's paradise; but they came back and they made it a lawyer's paradise. I represent a district that has sixty miles of a coastline and almost every man in that district depends entirely on the fishery for a living. Now I do not profess to know anything about fish, but what I wonder at is that every year between three and four hundred men cross the Gulf and go to Lunenburg and there man Lunenburg banking vessels, which come to our very doors and take the fish and bring it back to Lunenburg, cure it and market it at remunerative prices; whilst there are Newfoundland fishermen to-night who cannot support their families. I cannot understand why there were ninety sail of vessels left Lunenburg last year, as against that there is a marked falling off in our banking fleet. I do not know the reason, although there may be some explanation to it; but surely if the Lunenburg people are able to make the bank fishery pay by operating at our doors, we ought to be able to do something. However, it is not much use for me to be stressing the point because the present Government is not interested in the fishery or the fishermen. Therefore, we shall have to wait until the new Government comes in power—and thank God it is not far off—and then I hope that the district that gave me its confidence for nearly twenty years will come into its own. The member for Harbour Main referred to the "blatant demagogue" that existed in St. John's East. For over thirty years my late lamented colleague, Sir Michael Cashin, represented the district of Ferryland in this House of Assembly. He was refused the honour of being elected for the district which was recently won by my friend Mr. Brophy. Was it a "blatant demagogue" that crushed the heart out of that gentleman? The Daily News said that across the forehead of that man his political sins were written. Let me tell them that across the forehead of the "blatant demagogue" that crushed the heart out of that deceased gentleman ingratitude is written in letters of fire. I shared the honour of representing the district of Ferryland with Sir Michael Cashin for nearly twenty years. To-day I share a similar honour with his talented son. He is dead and is sleeping in lonely Belvidere this evening and might I be permitted to say in a room where he pleaded the people's cause for thirty years "May the Lord have mercy on his soul and may perpetual light shine upon him."

In conclusion I want to ask the Prime Minister if he will get up and tell the House whether or not it is the intention of the Government to hold a general election the coming fall. If you are going to grant an election you will have no further difficulty in putting all your business through in ten days. As far as I am personally concerned, I am prepared to help you out day and night until you finish up, because, after all, the people throughout the country want, and are clamouring for, an election next fall. I was speaking to a business man to-day in the Board of Trade rooms and he said, "Why are you delaying the business of the House?" I replied that we were not delaying any business because the Government had no business ready yet to delay, and that the trouble is that the Prime Minister does not seem inclined to the idea of having an election this fall. "Well," he said, "it is your place to keep the House open until he submits to the wishes of the people." "We will play the game with the Prime Minister when he plays it with us," I added. However, I believe that when the business of the House gets working properly and when he gets in a good mood he will agree to a general election this year, but then we will have to get a guarantee to that effect.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I may say I have been handed a few lines from a friend of the Prime Minister and a friend who worked and voted for the Prime Minister in the past. Here are the words:

"The old ship Terra Nova is drifting to her doom,
You have rifled her and scuttled her and brought her near to ruin;
The people shout you must get out,
we will trust you not again,
So pack your grip and leave the ship and give place to better men."

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, I rise to avail of the opportunity of saying a few words to the motion which is now before the chair and which is, as I understand it, a motion to the effect that this House will thank His Excellency the Administrator for the Speech with which he opened the proceedings of this Legislature on the eleventh day of this month. I feel that it is the duty of every member of this House who were elected to this House by the voice of the people, and representing free and independent people, to stand up here and give an expression of opinion as to whether or not we, as the representatives of the people, can find it possible or compatible with all that is just and right and proper to thank the Government for that Speech, which was put into the hands of His Excellency on opening day. I say, sir, that we should give an expression of opinion and an expression of opinion not as obstructionists but as the free and outspoken representatives of the people of this country. It is our duty as representatives of constituencies in this House to speak, to discover if there was any cause for thankfulness on our part for the policy or for the record of the Government, as presumed to be outlined to us in the Speech to which I am referring. That is the position I take this afternoon in standing up here and speaking to the motion before the chair. I feel it my duty as the representative of one of the most important constituencies in the country, a constituency that has honoured me with its confidence in three general elections and a constituency which I have had the honour to represent for eight years, to give an expression of opinion, not only to what I may consider to be my individual opinion on the policy and record of the Government, but to what I consider to be the thoughts and feelings of the people that I represent in this House. It is in that spirit that I address the chair this evening and not at all in the spirit of attempting to obstruct or delay the proceedings. I am merely fulfilling, in other words, that manifest duty that I owe to my constituents. A man who comes into Parliament, I care not with what political party he may be associated, and does not recognise at the time that there is a duty devolving upon him to give a free and untrammelled expression of opinion on public matters and who has failed to measure up to that duty, is, in my opinion, in no sense fit to be trusted or to be honoured with a seat in this House, no matter what section of the country he may represent. I am under the impression, of course, that our attitude from this side of the House since the day when we first came, man after man making speeches, may in some quarters of the Government side be regarded as tactics of obstruction. For my own point of view I have been actuated and prompted solely by motives of sincerity and I have no intention for a moment to obstruct. I have only one idea in the back of my mind and that is the one to which I have given expression. But I do feel that there is a condition of things obtaining in this country to-day which dictates to members of the Opposition that they should remain in this House as long as their health and numerical strength permits them, and until such time as the Prime Minister makes some definite pronouncement regarding a general election.

I do feel that a situation has developed in this country and that there is a trend of feeling in this country to-day which dictates to the Opposition in this House that they shall remain here as long as health and circumstances permit them until the Executive Government makes some pronouncement in this Chamber as to what intention they have with regard to an election in the coming fall. We feel that we are doing our duty in sitting here discussing your proposals and your record in tearing piecemeal if necessary everything you lay before us until such time as you give us that pronouncement. Throughout the length and breadth of the country the people are expecting a general election and they are expecting us that if we can't get a pronouncement with regard to it from you in a fair way they expect this Opposition to remain firm until other ways and means are brought to get that pronouncement from you. Before proceeding further with the discussion of the situation of the Government and the Government's record and the Speech from the Throne I will go back to some of the proceedings on opening day. I think that in justice to the Leader of the Opposition that when the House opened here he made his position and the position of this Opposition absolutely clear. I think he threw across to the Prime Minister a plain and deliberate invitation to give us some kind of a pronouncement as to whether or not his Government proposed to have a dissolution at the end of this session and that the business of this Legislature would be forthwith facilitated. So far I regret to find that neither the Prime Minister nor any one speaking for him has seen fit to make any pronouncement, so I presume we are to understand that no decision has been arrived at. I say that the country today is expecting that pronouncement on the question of a general election, and I stand firm in my position that I feel it my duty to stay in this House as long as health and circumstances permit me to stay and to try and bring the Government round to it that they will make that pronouncement that the country is expecting. You, honorable members, on your side of the House, although you may be firmly entrenched, to some extent, in office and although you count with a good deal of certitude to holding on by constitutional means perhaps for another eighteen months, I feel sure that there must be in your ranks, in the ranks of the Government, some who feel that they are only prolonging the day of reckoning and flying in the face of public opinion by remaining in office a day longer than the day we complete proceedings here this session, I therefore would appeal to honorable members in the rank and file of the party if you in your very hearts feel that at least a part of what I am saying in this connection is correct, you ought to give the matter serious thought and try tto bring pressure to bear on the Government also to get a decision as early as possible on this all important subject.

I went back and began with the proceedings on opening day, and first of all it is my duty in a sense I suppose to congratulate the mover and seconder of the Address in Reply on that day, Mr. Cahill and Mr. Power. Personally I offer them my congratulations, but from the standpoint of the job they had to perform I can offer them no congratulations. They were in the position of having to get up on opening day and bolster up the position and outlook of a Government that if not entirely defunct was morally so. I congratulate them on getting out of a difficult position and handling a very delicate situation in the best way they could. On opening day on coming into this House resolutions of condolence were passed with regard to the passing of two statesmen who have passed away since last we met here as a Legislature. I refer to the demise of Sir Robert Bond and that of Sir Michael Cashin. I feel that I would like to give some expression of opinion to add to those given in praise of these two departed statesmen on opening day. I did not feel then that it was my place to do so but I feel now that I should and that this is a proper opportunity. I never had the pleasure of meeting Sir Robert Bond personally. My entry into political life came long after he had passed out of politics, but from the day I was old enough to take an interest in political affairs of this country I have been an admirer of Sir Robert Bond and all those associated with me were supporters of his. I sat in the galleries of this House as a schoolboy and watched many a battle across the floors of the House between Sir Robert Bond and Lord Morris, and all those who had the pleasure of listening to him will agree that it was an education to come here and listen to the learned dissertations which Sir Robert Bond delivered in the debates on various matters touching the welfare of the country. I think that we have probably lost our greatest statesman but he has left a record of integrity in public life behind him for those of us who remain to emulate as best we can. I feel that if the men to whom the destinies of Newfoundland are to be entrusted in coming years will model their lives on his record and his ideals the country will have nothing to fear from those in whose hands it has left the working out of its destinies. With regard to Sir Michael Cashin, I knew him very well. I came into this House when he came in here as Leader of the Opposition and I admired him then as a fighter. Then in later days I had the pleasure of knowing him still more intimately. I feel that in him this coutnry has lost a splendid type of man, a man who by sheer perseverance and dint of hard work rose to the topmost rung of the ladder, and I join in the expression of sympathy given out here on opening day because of his death.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that since we came into this House that the Government has made some additions to the Upper House, and if I am not out of order I would like to take occasion to refer to these appointments. I wish particularly this afternoon through the reporter's box to congratulate one gentleman who has been appointed to that House; I refer to Captain Kean. I cannot say that Captain Kean and I have been personal friends; I certainly can say we have not been personal enemies. We had been political opponents in a hard fought contest in 1919 and I then found Captain Kean a clean and honorable opponent. Politically, perhaps, we have not been in the same boat, but I have always had for him a great deal of admiration. Like Sir Michael Cashin, he was a man who sprang from the lowest rung of the ladder and in my opinion he well deserves the honor conferred on him by the country in his appointment to the Upper House. I feel sure that with his mature years and broad experience, particularly in connection with the fisheries of this country and marine matters as well, that he will bring to the debates in the other Chamber information and advice that cannot fail to be of lasting good and cannot fail to have a good effect on such legislation as will from time to time go before that Chamber. I trust that Captain Kean will be spared many years to enjoy this honor and will always give to matters coming before the Upper House a full consideration in a spirit of fairness and without any bias or prejudice whatsoever. I feel it a pleasure this afternoon to congratulate one who has been a political opponent but whom I have always respected and had a good deal of admiration for. I have mentioned here before that, as regards the Upper House, I hold some strong opinions on it, and I say now that I think it would be a good step to have it abolished. I fail to see its necessity in our legislative make-up. I do not see why that institution remains, and I feel that if we tried,as time goes on, to get more progressive statesmen appointed in that Chamber and to occupy seats on the floors of this Assembly, may we soon be saying goodbye to the Upper House. It is part of the machinery of legislation now, and we have to make the best of it, and by putting practical men in the Upper House is the only way to make it an efficient instrument.

Since we last came to this House I notice there has been a decided change in the complexion of affairs; in fact I feel safe in saying that every year since the Monroe party came into power we have noticed some change in the complexion of things. In 1924 you came in with a Government composed of 25 members. You had on this side of the House ten, and you had one gentleman as an independent. In the session of 1926 you wound up with 18, and something like 17, including independents, on the Opposition side of the House. We now see 19 in the Government and 17 sitting here as a united Opposition. These figures, of course, in themselves are trifling, but when viewed from the standpoint of what they convey, they are not at all to be regarded as trivial. The lesson I learn from these figures and the lesson that the country intends the Government to learn is that to-day confidence has been shaken in the Monroe administration. Members of that administration who came with it in 1924 lost confidence in it, and I take it it cannot be said to-day that you represent the feelings or wishes or the will of the majority of the people in this country. Among other changes that I notice here is that a gentleman who, during the last session, sat on my right now occupies the seat immediately facing me. I refer to the member for Carbonear. I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to be personal with the honourable member. I can ascribe to the honourable member various reasons for the step which he took when he decided to sever his connection with one party after the House was closed and go over to his erstwhile political opponents. I see in his position to-day something more than the mere fact of his sitting where he is. I see in it something that I have considered it to be of a menace to the interests and the welfare of the people of this country. I see in it a representation of what the Monroe administration has been from the day it came into power. In effect I see in it a movement to stand by to substantiate or uphold big interests in this country. I am not going to be uncharitable enough to say that Mr. Duff left the ranks of the Opposition because of personal benefit to be derived. It is said that the public accounts might show something different, but I don't intend to ascribe that to him for the step that he has taken.

The true position of the matter, when looked at in the true light, was that he went over to substantiate the Government, to help along the big interests that were to be served and could not be served by a tottering and shaking Government. And that is where I see a menace to the public life of this country. When a member is elected to this House it is his duty to look after the affairs of the district that has placed him there, but instead of that we find some men who become the tools of big interests, which from the first the Monroe administration has stood for and as a result of which they are no longer trusted by a majority of the people of this country. Possibly Mr. Duff only went over to the other side of the House to carry out and strengthen that policy.

What is the use of going to the country for a general election, to be appealing to the electorate, to be going up and down the country and along the shores asking the people to send you to the Legislature to look after their interests and see that they are protected, when the men whom they elect later cross over and become the willing tools in the hands of the opposing party. That is one of the things that is responsible for so much trouble, politically, at the present time in this country, and for the dissatisfied state of the people's minds. The men elected to Parliament seem to lose sight of the interests of the people and become the agents of big interests, interests of the wealthy, of the rich business man, and not the interests of the common people of this country. The Government has aimed exclusively at bringing about such interests which benefit the classes and not the masses in this country.

Mr. Duff has crossed over to that party, has become a part and parcel of the Monroe Government to strengthen and assist them to produce big interests to satisfy the merchants of this country. I was amused last year when some defectors from the Government ranks crossed over to this side of the House, to read in one of the local papers that Mr. Monroe was the sort of man who would have neither truck nor truce with traitors. I would be only too happy to think of Mr. Monroe as such a man, but in view of the position of Mr. Duff I feel that the attribute can no longer be applied to Mr. Monroe—that he has neither truck nor truce with traitors.

Passing on we come to a subject which during the last few days, has been more commented upon and talked of than any other subject—I refer to the by-election in St. John's East. Just as Mr. Duff crossed to the other side of the House to help the Government to prosecute its policy for the classes against the masses, so the result of this election shows the feeling of the masses towards the present administration.

For two years the Government stood out against the opening of the East End and took the stand that the district was well represented as there were already two city representatives and it was not necessary on that account, nor was there any need to put the country to the considerable expense that a by-election in the East End of the City would involve.

We on this side of the House insisted that, constitutionally, under the Election Law, there should be a by-election in the East End. We wanted to see the law carried out, we wanted to see the contest on foot. In my opinion, if the Government had held the by-election when the vacancy first occurred, there might have been three representatives of that district on the Government side of the House to-day. But they set their faces and refused to open the East End for the election, and as a consequence the prestige of the Government began to fail and the whole country was as anxious to have the by-election as the people of the district concerned. So much so, that when the district of St. John's East was opened, thousands and tens of thousands of people all over the Island, went down on their knees and prayed to God Almighty, that the Government would be defeated in the election.

Mr. Brophy has not only got to thank the five thousand people who voted for him, but, and I say it in all seriousness, he has also got to thank the prayers that went up from thousands and tens of thousands of hearts all over Newfoundland for his success in the recent by-election. It was a contest in which the people of Newfoundland entered as if they had come in their thousands into the city and taken part personally on election day, because the people expected and thought that with the defeat of the Monroe candidate in St. John's East that the downfall of the Government was certain. That was what the people wanted. And still the Monroe party sits tight and robs the people of what they want. The whole country prayed for the result as it was, and want to see the utter rout and defeat of the Government from the floors of this assembly. When news of Mr. Brophy's election was published it was received throughout the length and breadth of the country with acclamation of delight, and even some of the Government supporters were thankful for the result.

I understand that we have in Newfoundland a gentleman who acts as a special correspondent of the "Times" incidentally is a great friend of the present Government. After the result of the by-election in the East End was announced this gentleman cabled to the newspaper that the Government had received a severe blow as a result of the election, and in the publication of the London "Times" for April 28th we find the following:

(Reads)

So says one of the men who is supposed to be a guide, philosopher and friend of the Government. I wonder if all the Government supporters have been as uncharitable as that particular gentleman has been.

I have heard it said that Mr. Monroe is a man of some courage, I have heard him referred to as a man who does not balk at meeting a difficult situation. I say now, Mr. Speaker, that the decent thing and the courageous thing for the administration to have done was to have had a general election or to have gone and immediately placed their resignation in the hands of His Excellency the Governor. You cannot hope to deceive public opinion, and it is certainly no use going on because you no longer hold the confidence of the majority of the people of this country.

I congratulate Mr. Brophy personally. It was a splendid victory that he won, and the moral effect of that victory is going to amount to this: that as far as the honourable member is concerned if he goes back to that district as opposed to the Monroe Government, he need have no further worry about finding a seat on the floors of this House. I congratulate Mr. Brophy, and I trust that he will long be spared to sit in this Assembly, and I trust that he will long be honoured with the confidence of the people of St. John's East, and I trust that during the time that he sits in this Legislature either on the Government side or on the Opposition that he will seek at all times to advance the interests of the people, and stand up for those principles which the electorate had in mind when they placed him in the position that he occupies to-day. Those principles are well defined. During that contest the Government papers would have us believe that no real issue was at stake, but I submit, Sir, that issues were at stake and worthy ones. One of the greatest issues at stake was this, that the interests of any one class in this country should not be exclusively catered to to the detriment of the welfare of the toilers of the Colony.

To go further back I take occasion also to congratulate the Hon. Dr. Mosdell, member for Fortune Bay, who went up there practically as a stranger and won in that district a splendid victory. Mr. Cashin, speaking here to the address in reply stated the other day that it was unnecessary to have to move in this House a vote of confidence against the Government; that Fortune Bay and St. John's East had registered a vote of want of confidence in this Government by electing two men to this side of the House. I congratulate Dr. Mosdell. He represents a very important district, perhaps the most important district in the country from the standpoint of the fisheries. I trust that he will long be honored with a seat in this Legislature and that he will do his utmost at all times to advance the interests of the fishery, especially in that District. St. John's East and Fortune Bay have spoken. If you were given a choice to open two districts in the country in order to find out the opinion of the whole you could not have had a better opportunity, for view it from whatever way you like in these two districts you have the laboring man and the fishermen in one campaign, and you have got an expression of opinion from both sides of the slate.

Now, Sir, I come to another subject which I wish to make some reference to. I don't care whether the precedent has been created by a government with which I was associated with in politics or not. I want to say that I utterly disagree with this present practice of delaying the session so late in the year. I don't consider that such a course of conduct is fair to the man who represents the outport constituents in this House. It is not fair to call outport business men into this House at this late time of the year and expect them to be able to sit in their places here to-day and expect them to give the best attention to the study of the various matters that have to come up before this House. I want to protest against the conduct of the Government in delaying the session so late. The Prime Minister had to make some kind of show on opening day, and so he stated here that the delay was largely due to the fact that the Government was awaiting the proposed Gander legislation. We opened on May 11th, and yesterday the Prime Minister informed the House that even then the proposed Gander legislation had not come to the purview of the Government. Now, sir, nobody is going to force it down my throat or down the throats of the people in the outports that that was the reason for the delay. No sir, the fact is that this House was delayed in opening in order to permit the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to go to the ice as the captain of one of the steamers, and make a few thousand dollars and then come in here and make another thousand. And the business of this country has got to be delayed for that. This legislature has got to be delayed, and the outport men have got to be called in here when their proper place is in the outports, in order that Captain Winsor is permitted to go to the icefields and make $2,000. There is not much necessity for me to say much else on this subject, but I cannot help subscribing to the opinion expressed by my hon. friend, Mr. Halfyard, who said that if there never was a Captain Winsor, the steamer would probably have gone to the icefields and brought in a load of seals just as well. Captain Winsor is not indispensible to the seal fishery and I don't presume that he is indispensible to the firm that employs him. Besides the first duty of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries he owes to this country and not to the firm that employs him, and sends him to the icefields. Again I want to say that I am strongly opposed to the idea of having the session of the legislature so late in the year. And in fact I would like to see a law placed on the Statute Book setting forth a day for the opening of this Legislature and a day from which there could be no ecape. No Government would then be able to come into this House after delaying the session for purposes of political expediency. And then in the dying hours of the session we found some important legislation brought down on the table of this House, and hurriedly put through. The next day we hear it criticised on the street. We are asked what we know about it and we have to say in justice to ourselves we are no wiser than if we never had seen it at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am coming down to the document itself, the Speech from the Throne. That document, which as everybody knows now, is placed in the hands of His Excellency the Governor on opening day. Not only this legislature but the people of this country as a whole look to this document for some outline as to what the achievement of the Government has been or what their proposed policy is going to be. I think, Sir, that never in the history of Newfoundland since we have had responsible Government, and since it has been the practice for the Speech from the Throne to be read to the members of this Assembly as the country looked forward to the Speech from the Throne with as much interest as it looked forward to the Speech from the Throne with which the Government opened this session. This country looked forward to that Speech from the Throne as the one with which the Government would open the present session, and hoped that it would contain something of good promise. All over Newfoundland to-day there is a feeling of depression; the lives, the body and soul, the heart seems to be gone out of the people. Days are dark and dreary. Turmoil is in evidence; and the people looked to the Government in this Speech from the Throne to throw out some ray of hope that if not in the immediate present at least in the near future something would be done to materially brighten the aspect. Mr. Hickman, the Leader of the Opposition, on opening day talking of this Speech from the Throne said that all that was needed to make it the Govenment's obituary notice was a black border. If any man entered the Legislative Council on the day the Speech was read and had gone there with the idea of getting some hope of better things, he would have come away and told his friends to abandon all hope. Never I say did the people look so confidently or anxiously toward a Speech as towards this. They expect the Government to show them a ray of hope. After all that was not unreasonable, for the Government was pledged to make conditions better; it was pledged to reform things and it was pledged to hand out a helping hand to the people and to make Newfoundland a paradise politically. This Government then having pledged themselves to do all those things were expected at a time when hope had almost died in the people to have ome hope for them, some encouragement and some slight assurance at least that it would be able to make things better and brighter throughout the country in the near future. When that Speech from the Throne was read and published then I say the people of the country received an absolute shock because there was nothing in the way of hope of paving the way to better times in the immediate present. It doesn't even tell us anything that the Government has done or has been trying to do in order to make conditions better or brighter. The one subject which the people and in particular the fishermen were I think expecting to find some reference to in the Speech from the Throne was the subject of the fisheries. If there is one subject in Newfoundland today more talked of than another; one subject to which the common people to-day are giving more attention than another; one subject generally considered of the utmost importance to the whole country; that subject is the fisheries. Still to-day we find a Government in power over three years and pledged to make this a fisherman's paradise, has not considered the subject of this trade or industry, even in view of the condition of things obtaining in the country, of sufficient importance or of sufficient relevancy to the matter in hand, to make even a mere passing reference to it in the Speech from the Throne outside of the fact that it states that the fishery was not so productive last year as the price was low.

The Prime Minister whether deliberately or not on opening day avoided any reference to the subject in the course of his remarks. I am going to say now that the Prime Minister is not going to make any reference to the fisheries if he can possibly avoid it. Things needed to help the fisheries and regulate matters connected with them whereby to benefit them will never be done in my opinion while this Legislature holds the complexion that it now does. I was astounded when I think it was a year ago the Honorable Member for Port de Grave presented from his seat on the other side of the House a petition signed by the fishermen of Conception Bay in large numbers. I think all the fishermen of Port de Grave and many fishermen from other districts concerned with the Labrador fishery. This petition asked that some regulations be enforced with regard to the sailing of vessels with codfish from the Labrador. Here was a petition presented by the fishermen themselves. These fishermen found themselves in a position that they saw evils that should be remedied in the exporting of their fish. They felt that the time had come to take cognisance of it themselves, that it could no longer be left to the merchants to deal with or those in politics. So they drafted a petition themselves and got it well signed and sent it here to this legislature praying that this House or this Government would take steps to prevent the export of codfish from the Labrador by steamer. I have never yet been able to discover, and I don't think Mr. Bradley who presented it has either, what happened that petition. In my opinion that was one of the most important petitions that ever came to this legislature. The reason I mention it now is to illustrate my point that I don't believe that there is going to be anything done in matters of that kind by a Government directed by men too closely connected with the exportation of our fish. Were we ever able to find out exactly what did happen that petition I believe it would make very interesting reading, if a report contained an account of what consideration it received and its fate. I will go so far as to say, though I speak subject to correction, and will withdraw if I am wong, that that petition found its way down on Water Street and those men who had to do with the shipping of fish by steamer from the Labrador advised the Prime Minister or the Government not to have anything to do with it and so the petition that the fishermen of Conception Bay conceived to be of the utmost importance to them and their livelihood found its way at last to some pigeon hole because the plutocrats of Water Street thought that by giving effect to the petition their own business would be hurt in some way or other. On the subject of the merits or demerits of that petition I am not concerned at the present time. I only mention it to show that when anything in the way of legislation conflicts with the interests of the plutocrats of Water Street we are up against a stone wall. When I say that nothing will be done for the fisheries while this Chamber has its present complexion I mean that no legislation passing this Chamber, until the fishermen get as representatives here fishermen having experience and education, if possible, and place them here on the floors of the House in a controlling body, will be the legislation that the fishermen need. Not till then can the fishermen hope to have anything done for them in a practical and efficient way. We are not going to have things done for the fishermen and labourers as long as the classes that give the men to fill the seats in this House are the mercantile and legal and those other than these I mentioned. I am not opposed to mercantile or legal men sitting here. It is the proper place for some of them but I do say that until the main body comes from ranks of common people and not till then can the common people hope to see practical effect given to their wishes, and I think the same principal that prevented the Prime Minister from making any pronouncement as regards the fisheries or the outlook for them, was the principal that caused the mysterious disappearance of that petition. One reason the Prime Minister was boosting the country was because he was a large business man and had large experience in connection with the main industry of the country. But I have sat here for three sessions on this side of the House and I have yet to hear any pronouncement such as would result from his vast experiences as a business man, and I very much doubt if the Prime Minister has brought his experience and knowledge to bear on fishing problems with his party in such a way that we can hope for helpful legislation from him. The fishermen of this country to-day are in a very bad position. They have lost hope, some of them, and are disheartened, and the sad thing about it is this, that we are losing from the country the young men. We are losing the men who to-morrow ought to be the men interesting themselves in procuring motor boats and cod traps and becoming masters of schooners and things of that kind. I was brought up as a boy in a large fishing outport, and in my day it was the boys' ambition to be able to serve as second hand, and if some young man got control of a schooner as master at eighteen years imbue them with ambition to-day to become masters of schooners and owners of property or other things of that sort.

On motion the Debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I move that this House at its rising do adjourn until to-morrow at three o'clock.

HON. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the motion I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister to the fact that the figures given by the Minister of Finance show a discrepancy and are not satisfactory to the Opposition members of this House.

He stated yesterday that the deficit was $112,000, making the difference by adding $30,000 which should have been added nine months ago, but really appears only in the past two or three months.

We must have a correct statement of the finance of the country, and it is the duty of the Minister of Finance to see that the figures which he gives us are correct. At the present time there is good cause for an investigation.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—In reply to the Hon. Leader of the Opposition I would say that I undertook yesterday to furnish this House with a written statement from the Auditor General. Some of the members of this House have made certain statements and used rather strong wards against the Auditor General ,intimating that he should be turned out of his office. The Leader of the Opposition himself made rather a nasty insinuation, — which he withdrew afterwards, I think—still it was a serious charge, and I am not quite clear as to whether, in answer to this question, he will accept a statement from the Auditor General or not. If that is required I will have one prepared and bring it into the House tomorrow showing the exact deficit.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I regret this whole affair. I was responsible for bringing about this controversy, and my contention in connection with the whole affairs is that you cannot look to the heads of the different departments for correct information. I made certain statements a few days ago on the assumption that the Minister of Finance's figures were correct, and nothing mentioned by the Finance Minister serves to change my mind regarding the deficit. I repeat, and this is the last time that I will say it in this House, that I would not take stock from any civil servant in regard to the deficit or anything else. I want ,in order to satisfy me, a proper investigation into all the affairs of the Customs and the other departments from June 1924 to date. Nothing else will satisfy me and I tell the public generally and I tell this House that this is the last time that I am going to say it.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, it appears that from certain information tabled here by the Minister of Finance and Customs in reply to a question asked by the junior member for Ferryland, and statements made by the Honourable Minister of Finance and Customs, that the junior member for Ferryland made certain calculations. I took occasion, Mr. Speaker, to check up his calculations myself and I find that his figuring is correct. When the matter was brought into question by the member for Ferryland, the Minister of Finance—who I notice persistently absents himself fom this House—was asked for an explanation, and came in here yesterday afternoon, and, in rather a flippant manner, offered what he claims to be an explanation of the discrepancy. Again, Mr. Speaker, I checked up the figures that were given us yesterday afternoon and the calculation shows that they do not agree with the Finance Minister's statement. The deficit that he makes out is not the same as that given the House. I am responsible, as a member of this country for the expenditure of money collected through the revenue. This matter has got to be sifted and I, personally, am prepared to stand on the floor of this House until I get an explanation. It is not a matter for the Auditor General. He is only a checker of the accounts. It is the duty of the Minister of Finance to provide correct statements, and that has not been done. It is an insult to this House and an outrage to the people to sit here and not offer an explanation.

MR. BROWNE — It was explained yesterday.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, I say there was no explanation given, and I repeat for the benefit of the Honourable member, that there was no explanation because that which was offered was not correct and an explanation that is not correct is not an explanation.

I do not want to delay the House on this matter except to say that the matter has got to be sifted and there is only one way to get it. It is the duty of the Finance Minister to come in here and give an explanation not to put the blame on the shoulders of his subordinate in office. We do not know any subordinate. We don't' care whether there is a sub-ordinate. He is responsible to this House for the finances of this country.

I have to say this in his absence because, as I have said, he is not here to hear me. It ill becomes a Finance Minister to shift the blame unto the shoulders of a man who is not here to defend himself. It is time this kind of thing stopped. Much has gone on during the past three years which is unsatisfactory to the people of this country, unsatisfactory to many members of this House, and if their true opinions were given, unsatisfactoy to the majority of this House. There is something like a deficit of two million dollars this year. The discrepancy must be explained and it is the duty of the Finance Minister to come in here and place the correct statements before this House, and if he is incapable of doing that let him admit that he is incapable and resign.

MR. BROWNE—Mr. Speaker, I feel that I cannot allow this opportunity to pass without making a few remarks in reply to the statements made by my Honourable and learned friend. He made a statement that he will have to give an explanation of, that the figures given by the Minister of Finance did not agree. With what did they not agree?

MR. BRADLEY—Did not agree with the Deficit.

MR. BROWNE—That was explained yesterday.

MR. BRADLEY—Would you like me to explain the situation. Well, the deficit which the Minister of Finance & Customs told the House yesterday for the year ending 1926 was about one hundred and twelve thousand dollars and on which he calculated that there were various duties which would make a difference of twenty thousand dollars.

MR. BROWNE — I for one do not quite see what the Honourable Member expects or is objecting to. If I remember rightly the Honourable Member for Port de Grave was not here the other day when this matter was being discussed. I do not think it necessary to act as apologist for my honouable friend the Minister of Finance and Customs, but I might say in reference to the Hon. Member's remarks on his absence that I have a recollection that the honourable member himself was not always perfect in attendance here, and even while he was a Minister of the Crown was generally conspicuous by his absence.

Surely if there is one official whose word we must take with regard to the financial affairs of this country it is that of the Auditor General, and I have been greatly surprised by the statements made with regard to this matter by the hon. members on the other side. It is hard to see what they desire or what will satisfy them, it is hard for the Government to see what to get to corroborate it. As I see it the figures, as tabled by the Finance Minister and the figures of the Auditor General are in accord.

MR. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the following communication from His Excellency the Administrator of the Government, which he then read:

The Administrator of the Government has the pleasure to communicate to the Honourable House of Assembly the appointment of the Commissioners of Internal Economy of the Legislature in accordance with the provisions of Section 4, Cap. 7. Consolidated Statutes, as set forth in the accompanying certified copy of a Minute of the Honourable Executive Council approved on the 30th of May.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Grimes, from Summerford, re a public wharf.

The Minister of Marine & Fisheries tabled the Report of the Department of Marine & Fisheries for the year 1926.

Mr. Hickman gave notice of question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. SCAMMELL — Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of the debate on this matter yesterday I was making some reference to the tragic turn of events in this country as presented to us in the spectacle of the decline of the codfishery, and I was pointing out that despite the fact that this subject more than any other at this present time is the one which is most animating the minds of the general public of the country, the Government scarcely saw fit to make reference to it in the document placed in His Excellency's hands on the day of the opening of this Legislature and which he then read, and that the Prime Minister didn't see fit to refer to this subject in his own remarks on opening day.

I was trying to point out furthermore that so far as the Speech from the Throne is concerned, and in so far as the Prime Minister in his personal remarks on opening day avoided any specific or general reference to the subject of the codfish industry, that document could only be regarded as hopeless; and that as far as the people of the country were concerned, it was practically useless for them to expect anything from the Government in the way of legislation that would be of assistance to them and that would tend to improve conditions in this country respecting the codfishing industry. To get down to brass tacks, I had thought that the Speech from the Throne at least would have contained some reference to the fact that last year in this Legislature the Prime Minister moved for the appointment of a Fisheries Commission, and that subsequently that Fisheries Commission was appointed. I had expected to hear something as to the work of that Commission. I had also expected to hear in the Speech from the Throne, and the country had expected to hear that that Fisheries Commission had been meeting, and that it had been on the job and had completed its labors and found itself in the position to have made some recommendations to the Government as to the proper steps to be taken and the proper course to pursue to obviate the decline of the fishing industry. I am not oblivious to the fact that in approaching the subject of this Fisheries Commission, I lay myself open to a certain amount of criticism from the Government side. The Prime Minister and his Government did myself and the Leader of the Opposition the courtesy of an invitation to act upon that commission. I declined to act. But I did not decline to do so without first giving the matter very serious thought and very serious consideration. I took the position for declining to act upon that Commission, that in 1924 the Government themselves came into power and charged with a responsibility of doing something for the fishermen and the fishing industry in this country; in fact I go further and say that the Government had from the fishermen and electors of this country a mandate to do something in a practical way for that industry. In other words they had a mandate to carry out a policy which would mean the payment of a bonus on every quintal of fish caught in this country. I took the position that for three years the Government had been in office, and for three years they had declined to give any attention whatever to the pledges they had made to the electorate regarding the fishing industry. It looked very much to me—and I do not want to be over uncharitable—that the move of the Prime Minister last year in this House to have a Fisheries Commission was something in the nature of what I might call political kite-flying. In any case my point of view in the main was this, that the responsibility for any fishery policy that was necessary or that might have developed to enhance and to help forward the fishing industry primarily rested upon the shoulders of the Administration in power. It could be scarcely thought reasonable—and I do not think the majority of the people of the country would have it so—that the Prime Minister had to come in this House and ask the Members of the Opposition to share with him or his Government the responsibility for any fishery policy that would result as the workings of such a commission. The responsibility was the Government's because three years ago the Government made it clear to the fishermen and to the majority of the people of Newfoundland that they were prepared to come into this House and assume such a responsibility. They felt themselves able and capable of coming in and doing something for the fishermen. Consequently, the position I take is this, that if the Government after three years in office feels that they are not in a position or are not strong enough or able enough to tackle that proposition, then it is their duty to give place to men who have sufficient confidence in themselves and who are able and capable to tackle propositions which the pressing need of the hour dictates. I fear no criticism or no attack for declining to act on that Commission. There was no other course consistently up to me than the course I took, and without labouring the question further I will reiterate the position I took at that time, namely, that the responsibility for a fishery policy devolved in the main on the Government because the Government had a mandate from the people to evolve such a policy as would meet the pressing needs of the fishermen throughout the country. But the fact that myself and the Leader of the Opposition were invited to serve and work upon that Commission and that we declined that invitation is in my opinion no justification whatsoever as to why the Commission ought not have pursued its labors in the interests of the fishermen throughout the length and breadth of this country, as there are members on both sides of the House who confidently expected that when the Speech from the Throne was brought in some reference would be made in it to the labors of that Commission, and that as a result of such labors some definite step would be taken at this session of the legislature towards bringing into being something in the nature of a fishery policy. I very much doubt, as I stated here yesterday, as to whether the present Government is, in the first place willing and in the second place ,able to evolve any such policy such as the state of the fishing industry at present would seem to necessitate. Honorable Members, I am sure, will believe me when I say that I stand here to-day in a rather fair position to judge and to give an expression of opinion as to what the majority of the fishermen in the North are thinking along these lines. Since last session of the House I travelled the northern section of this country from Bonne Bay to Bonavista, and during my tour I addressed public meetings and dealt principally with this same subject. I gave an expression of the views and opinions of my own, but opinions which I gathered from the ideas which I formulated as a result of coming in contact with those who are well able to size up the whole situation. One thing that struck me forcibly when I was fortunately addressing those public meetings was the unanimous acceptance of the views I set forth, not alone from our own supporters but from supporters of the Prime Minister and his colleagues as well. And I have every reason to believe that thousands of people in other sections of the country see eye to eye to-day with the views entertained by the people of the North. Politically the Government may be inclined to lead us to believe that they are dead to all sense of public feeling as regards the position they occupy in this country to-day, but I do not for one moment believe that any member on the Government side of the House, at least, no honourable member who represents a fishing constituency, but who knows that there is among the fishermen a tremendous feeling of depression, of agitation, of dissatisfaction and of discontent. And why is this so? Because last year saw the culmination of a series of events which practically drove fifty per cent. of the fishermen to absolute ruin. Now when you come down to actual facts and figures and you take into consideration that during the past two years the earning power of the fishermen decreased, as exemplified from the returns which showed that the catch decreased to the extent of four million dollars, you can very well understand that there is reason for thought in the position I take that the fishermen are discontented and that there is depression and general mistrust abroad. To revert to the year of 1923. A general election was fought in this country and a party was led by Sir John Bennett and with which party the present Prime Minister was identified. In that election the subject of a bonus on fish was made a live issue. Now I am not ashamed nor afraid to say that in 1923 I was opposed to the idea of a bounty on codfish because the party with which I was associated did not think it an economically sound proposition. In 1924 I was in the same position, but I was certainly greatly interested with the experiment that was about to be performed when the present Government took office in that connection. If the Prime Minister wishes he could square one on me this afternoon by saying that he only made the promise in 1924 contingent upon two circumstances, one of which was that the fishery needed it, and secondly that the condition of public finances was such as to warrant it? The Minister of Marine and Fisheries—and I am going to take his memory back to a conversation I had with him in late October last just previous to the time when he started out on that famous trip to Bonavista Bay and when he went down and satisfied the crowd who were thinking about coming to St. John's and starting an agitation last Fall about the price of fish—discussed with me the question of a bonus on fish. He will also remember that I pointed out to him that, after giving the Government an allowance for everything they had done in the way of expenditure of public moneys, and that for the things they had undertaken to do had been efficiently and economically performed, there would still remain over a sufficient margin to pay a bonus of one dollar a quintal on one million quintals of fish within the past two years. I go further and say that I believe that at the time he was somewhat impressed by the position I set up. To substantiate that position take the matter of the Dry Dock which the Government said would cost one million dollars. You asked for legislation in that connection and we voted the money. To-day, according to the Finance Minister and Auditor General, the dock cost two millions. Even that was a monstrous proposition to come in here and ask for a million dollars, although we told you that the dock could not be built for a million, but, even at that, had you kept within your own estimate in that undertaking you would have saved one million dollars and with which amount you would have been enabled to pay a bonus on fish. I contend that there is no weight in the argument that the condition of public finances during the past few years has not warranted the payment of a bonus on fish and I doubt whether any gentleman on the other side would dare have the hardihood here or elsewhere to stand up and refute my assertion. It may have been that no pressing necessity arose for you to give serious consideration to this important matter before last autumn; but I submit that if ever there was a time when you as a Government, pledged to have given some consideration to the needs of the fishermen and their affairs it was last Autumn. Some activity on the part of the Government last year might have brought about a condition of affairs in this country that would have saved $1,500,000.00 Yet you are down here to-day bemoaning your fate as regards deficits and you are trying to tell the people of the country that one of the reasons that caused the enormous deficit in your financial affairs is that the cost of goods in which cotton is entered as a large constituent has considerably declined in price. No such nonsense. If I had occasion to I could stand here and tell a very interesting story about what happened to the cotton industry abroad and of how a Government tries to prevent it from going to the wall when it sees an industry of that kind tottering. If you have read the foreign papers, you will have observed what the American Government did to revive and resuscitate the cotton trade in that country, and in that you got an object lession as to what the Monroe Government should do to save the fisheries. You were short in your revenue and you are facing an enormous defiicit because the earnings of the fishermen have been less by four millions of dollars during the past two years and of which sum $1,500,000.00 could have been saved for the fishermen of this country. The Prime Minister does not want me to tell him they cannot exist on $4.50 per quintal for Labrador fish. They cannot make two ends meet; whilst the owners of small schooners cannot bring home enough fish to square accounts on the basis of $4.50 a quintal. Before I came here this afternoon I talked with a man, Captain Roberts, one of the biggest fish-killers in the district of Bonavista. He told me that he considered that, under present conditions, any less than $5.00 a quintal would not pay, although I do not agree with him. Last year if there had been shown some legislation or some activity, as between the Government on the one hand and the exporters on the other, there would have been brought about a condition of affairs, which, to some extent, would have prevented the demoralization that existed in our foreign markets after exporting. I gave some consideration to this subject last year, and Sir John Bennett, who was Acting Prime Minister at the time will recall that he received a letter from myself and currently another one from Sir William Coaker on the subject, and I am going to tell the story this evening of that correspondence because it will again serve to show what consideration can be expected at the hands of an administration such as we have at the present time in power. Sir John Bennett, a man for whom I have the utmost respect and veneration, and I think every one else has, was Acting Prime Minister in October last when I considered it of sufficient importance to bring to his notice a trend of affairs in connection with the exportation of codfish. Sir William Coaker, directing a large exporting concern, also considered the matter of sufficient importance as well to bring it to the notice of Sir John. We both pointed out in our letters that if things went on as they were going the tendency would be that the price of fish would have to decline rather than enhance, and that as a result of the voyage fifty per cent. of the fishermen would not be able to square accounts and that the following Spring would likely witness a big influx of the best fishing families in the country going out. We pointed out the issue in the main to Mr. Bennett and asked him if he would use his good graces and try and get the exporters to co-operate in order to bring about certain regulations and certain agreements that we felt would remedy conditions as regards exporting fish, particularly with respect to sailings to foreign markets. Sir William Coaker left his business at Port Union and came and personally interested himself in the matter. Sir John Bennett, seeing some justice in the representations that were made to him, did try to get the exporters together to consider the situation. The only criticism I have to urge now against Sir John is that in my opinion he was not firm enough in the stand he took, because he was on the spot and knew the circumstances of the case. However, after a week of a series of deliberations and correspondence being exchanged, the sum total of the answer of the Acting Prime Minister was that the exporters felt that it was the duty of the Board of Trade to convene a meeting to deal with the matter of regulating the exportation of codfish. And there the matter rested. Contingent with that suggestion that Sir John Bennett should get the exporters to co-operate we suggested that the matter was of such pressing importance that if the exporters would not co-operate that the Legislature might be convened to deal with the situation, and the response we got was that the idea could not be entertained. But, if a crowd of capitalists came here from the United States, Canada or England and they had a proposition of pressing importance to be legislated upon, they would bring pressure to bear upon the Government and it would not be long before the Government would call the Legislature to meet to deal with the matter, but when it came to dealing with something affecting the vital welfare of the fishermen of this country, the opening of the Legislature would not be contemplated by the Government. I admit, Sir John Bennett, was in a rather awkward position, as the Prime Minister and Minister of Justice were out of the country, although we, on behalf of the Opposition, gave an assurance that no attempt would be made to take advantage or to deliberate on political matters. The Legislature was not convened, and again our request did not meet with the approval of Sir John Bennett and the matter dropped. I sincerely regret, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Mr. Long is not in his seat this afternoon because I had some very pertinent remarks to address to him, as he was President of the Board of Trade at the time I refer to.

These fishermen met and they telegraphed the following message to Hon. J. J. Long, President of the Board of Trade:

And still, Sir, I am pleased to say that ,in my opinion, despite that message, there was no feeling in St. John's last autumn that the fishermen were dissatisfied with prices.

It is signed by supporters of members of this House, some sit on this side and some on the other side of the House, a very representative gathering. This message was merely addressed to the President of the Board of Trade, simply and straightly to ask him, in effect, the price of fish; if it was going up or down. After all, even if Mr.

Long had not been President of the Board of Trade, he might have been a very fit and proper person for the gathering to telegraph to, because he is a prominent member of the Executive Government, who is pledged to assist the people of this country. Let us see how Mr. Long deals with this matter. He says:

(Reads)

Is it any wonder that the gathering of fishermen telegraphed back to Mr. Long and told him that they were disgusted with the answer. Had the fishermen even telegraphed to the meanest commercial agent on Water Street, all he would have had to do was to go down the street, ask the prices of fish and telegraph to these men. Instead of that, the President of the Board of Trade and forsooth member of the Legislature took no notice, but sent back an answer dealing with the composition, make up and duties of that august body known as the Board of Trade.

On the one hand the Colonial Secretary, then acting Prime Minister tells them that it is not the duty of the exporters but the duty of the Board of Trade and on the other hand there is a message from the President of the Board of Trade in which he states that it is not the duty of the Board of Trade but of the exporters. I am not good at comparisons, but would like to be able to put that situation in very choice language. I would say this that the outcome of the situation last autumn amounted to this. The fishermen were left, between the nether millstones, as it were, of selfish exporters on the one hand and a supine Government on the other hand. The Government was too supine and the exporters too selfish to co-operate, and the result was that the prices went down, and though in some cases when a man got here early he got a good price for his fish, still the prices did not rally and were never really sufficient to pay the men for their produce.

Mr. Speaker, it is a condition of affairs such as that that has driven hope out of the hearts of the fishermen ,it is a condition of affairs such as that that forces them to despair and they are at their wits end to know just what they ought to do. It forces them to do what they least want to do, to abandon the calling with which they are accustomed and which they love, and go and seek a living in a foreign land. I asked the Colonial Secretary the question as to how many Newfoundlanders of the male sex had left Newfoundland since March last. It was stated by some gentleman that we were having a nice time of it in Newfoundland, and all the people were living under comfortable and in many cases luxurious circumstances, that is the common people of this country. These figures speak for themselves and tell their own story. From the figures given to me by the Colonial Secretary we find that nine thousand three hundred and fifty Newfoundlanders, of the male sex, left this country since March 31st last. And the exodus continues.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—Read the other figures. Tell how many came back.

MR. SCAMMELL — The Colonial Secretary has added that some five thousand of these have returned. I send back a reply that to balance that probably more have left the country during the past spring. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have not been content to confine my remarks merely to a criticism of the Government and the existing state of affairs, but I have been seeking to discover if there are any facts that the Government may take cognizance of.

I may say again that I was disappointed to find that the commission appointed at the suggestion of the Prime Minister last year did not function and we got no report from it.

We are all at our wits end to know what to do in connection with the fisheries, but certainly goodness if we were to look in one direction more than another for enlightenment we would look to that body, that august body, the Board of Trade. I read with some interest the report of that body given through the columns of the "Trade Review." I read it looking for light and looking for information because I felt that such a body could not meet without giving some official recognition to the conditions that existed. It is illuminating comments that you would expect from men supposed to stand top-notch when it comes to dealing with matters of this sort. The report states

(Reads)

Mr. Long is speaking

(Reads)

He outlines some of the things by which we are handicapped; exchange conditions, Fordney tariff, bounty on the fish of our French competitors. "These matters are beyond our control," but it is very interesting to note that the reduction of taxation was within their control—the reduction of taxation was within the control of that body and the President of the Board of Trade who is also a member of the Government, pledged to serve the people. He says in the Board of Trade that one of the reasons for the present state of conditions is because of the high taxation, and that that matter is within their control. It is within his control. If he was sincere and want to give practical effect to his speech he could have done a good deal towards the reduction of taxation.

"The matter of taxation," the Board of Trade report says, "weighs heavily upon the fishermen of this country." Of course it does. And the Government by its policy has made it still heavier. By imposing large taxes of 15 p.c. on various articles, as has been so ably expressed by Major Cashin, to benefit such concerns as the Ropewalk, Butterine Factory, Tobacco Factory and goodness knows what else. And the report goes on Mr. Speaker, the fishermen do not want the Board of Trade or Mr. Long to get up and speak such trash—to tell them that they are going to suffer from the taxes. They know it all too well. But what they do expect is that those gentlemen will tell them that they are immediately going to get to work and reduce the taxes and try to lighten their burdens in that respect. Here is another comment on the situation—"The Government are lamenting the fact that there is going to be a very immodest—not modest deficit as Mr. Cahill suggests—but an immodest deficit this year. How could it be otherwise.

The Finance Minister in his Budget Speech last year anticipated a revenue of about ten million dollars and bases his expenditure upon a calculation that the revenue will be such an amount. I put down the total catch of the shore fishery at a million quintals, commanding a price of $6.00 per quintal. The Board of Trade puts the price down at $5.50 per quintal and you take into account the way the fish was culled ,etc., it is hardly likely that you would get much more than $5.50, but we will give it the benefit of the doubt and say $6.00. That means that the shore fishery brought in a revenue of six million dollars and allowing for a catch of two hundred and fifty thousand quintals on the Labrador, at $4.50 a quintal, the value would be one million one hundred and twenty five thousand dollars. Thus making a grand total of $7,125,000. And the Finance Minister anticipated in the Budget Speech in this House that there would be a revenue of $10,500,000. The position is the same as if the fishermen took every quintal of fish and dumped it down at the doors of the Customs House and said "Here, Sir John, take the fish and make what revenue you can." He would answer "Thank you, gentlemen, but I want three million dollars more." It is certainly a dangerous state of affairs when the total catch is not sufficient to meet the estimated revenue by three million dollars.

If we are not tottering to a fall or going headlong to destruction then I would like to know what we are doing. And here, Mr. Speaker, arises what I have been inclined to regard as a matter that warrants some serious thought. I was under the impression, and I was wrong, that when the Humber deal and the Gander deal got under way that we would have a cure for all our ills. It appears that this is meant to be a fishing country. And if we wish to remain a country ,then everything possible must be done to improve, encourage, and mage a success of the fisheries of this country.

Hundreds of men are employed at the Humber and at Grand Falls, but outside of their wages they are bringing nothing worth while into the revenue of this country, nothing like the proportion as could be obtained from the fisheries. You can go to work in Grand Falls and make paper worth seventy to seventy-five dollars a ton. Does any man mean to argue that we get say $56.00 of that $75 that the ton of paper is worth. No. But for every quintal of fish that is exported there comes back at least seven eights of the value of every quintal sent out. So there is nothing that we can get such returns from or that will be more beneficial to the country than the fishery—no other production of any kind whatever can produce such returns.

Now, what are some of the things that could be done to encourage the fishing industry.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, now, seeing that the thing has gone as far as it has that last year the Government should have taken steps to put a bounty on fish. Of course, we expected a bounty to be paid when the present Government was returned in 1924, but if there was one time more than another during the years that have gone by since the Government took office, last year was that time. A difference of even fifty cents a quintal on codfish put out as a bounty would have had a good effect all round. Last year, again, there was no end of trouble and grumbling in connection with the cull of fish. Sometime in August, we were informed through the "Postal Telegraphs" in the outports that several fish firms in St. John's had decided to agree together and institute a cull on fish. At that time it was thought a good idea, but each firm set its own standard and the result was that there were as many culls as there were merchants. There was no such a thing as a standard cull all round. It was stricter in St. John's in the main than in the outports but there was general dissatisfaction that was caused by there being no standard cull.

To standardize the cull of fish is a somewhat difficult thing for any Government to institute but, to my mind, it is one thing that has got to come in this country very soon. There are many fishermen who to-day are anxious to have standardized cull who will talk differently when it is put into effect. It is a difficult thing to institute and even the gentlemen of the Board of Trade seem to have no definite idea. One of them suggests, Mr. Job, that one way would be to have wax models of the fish made and in that way the cull could be put into operation. I suppose that if the culler was not sure what kind of a fish he was handling he would run to the show case and look at the wax model and so be able to determine.

If that is as far as we are towards a standard cull of fish, having wax models of the fish made ,then I am afraid it will be a long time before we have standardized cull of fish. I do not mention, this instance in the way of criticism but merely to show that even the biggest men don't seem to be able to discover the best way to get to work to better the present conditions.

There seems to be a growing feeling, Mr. Prime Minister,—I am addressing you, Sir, through the Speaker,—amongst the fishermen in favour of standardization and if you were to go and come into contact with the fishermen you would find that there seems to be a feeling that standardization ought to be brought into effect. It has been tried by other Governments but they could not come to any decision as to the best way to regulate the matter. But standardization is something that will have to come and the Government should consider the thing and acquire some laws of standardization. As a matter of fact there is no need for you to worry about drawing up an Act, for there is already an Act on the Statute Book, the Standardization Act of 1921, which has never been repealed. All that you would have to do would be to make any changes that would be necessary to suit present conditions, and amend the Act accordingly.

Give standardization a fair trial and I think great good will result in export of codfish.

I firmly believe in it myself and would advocate that the Government give the matter their immediate attention, and consideration ,and serious consideration at that.

I have heard a lot, Mr. Speaker, about a gentleman named Professor Sleggs who went down to Trinity Bay in August and spent all his time throwing bottles overboard in order to find out the temperature of the water.

I notice to-day in the report of the Department of Marine and Fisheries that the Minister or at least his deputy made some reference to Professor Sleggs. He says here talking about some of the things that he has done.

(Reads)

Did he go down to Bonavista and talk to 500 fishermen there about the cause and the prevention of bad fish. Did he go down to Fogo or any other places and do the same. No, but I presume from what I gather that he delivered a lecture to some school boys up in the Memorial College But if you are a reasonable and fair-minded man you will admit that while scientific research may be alright, if we wanted to increase the catch of codfish, and if there was any doubt in our minds that the codfishery was being depleted. This very man was sent up to Halifax by the Government, and I propose to find out what his expenses were. He was sent up there to attend a fishing Commission there. This august assembly which was under the auspices of the fishery board at Washington, had a meeting up there to have a chat about things connected with the fisheries, and one learned gentleman, whose words I read in the Halifax Chronicle a couple of days ago, said that there was no need to worry about the codfishery being depleted. There were millions left yet he said. Well, if that is the case and we need not worry about a surplus of codfish, why cannot we get our heads together and see if we cannot bring about a better condition of affairs in connection with the curing of codfish. No, sir, the slogan "catch more fish" is not going to solve our troubles. In fact in my opinion the statistics of the codfishery in recent years if anything show that we are catching too much fish. It would be better, perhaps, if we caught one quarter of a million or 500,000 less fish than we have been catching.

Now, sir, I am associated with an organization known as the ishermen's Protective Union, and an organization which seriously concerns itself with measures pertaining to the fishermen's interests, and at our convention in Port Union last year we went thoroughly into every aspect of the subject from the fisherman's standpoint to-day. It was decided that we would have to take some practical steps to see whether we could not have a change of conditions. We drafted a petition at that convention and we circulated it throughout the North. I am pleased to say that the petition was well received. It was signed not only by men in the north who are adherents of the Union but also by men outside of Port Union. Next week when we get down to business I am going to ask from the Prime Minister and the Government for their serious consideration for the subject matter to which these petitions refer. I hold in my hand a draft copy of the petition to which I am referring, and from it I will now read whatever may be relevant to the subject matter before the chair.

(Reads)

Let me state again, sir, that this petition is largely signed by thousands of fishermen, and when it comes up before this House I ask that it receive the serious consideration of the Government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. Brown, the other day made strong reference to the conditions of things in the logging industry. I do not propose to delay this House by going very deeply into this matter. Suffice it to say that I consider that the present logging act must be amended. We have got to-day in the lumber woods a condition of things, the coming of the sub-contractor, and he in turn taking the control out of the hands of the company more or less. That has created a condition of things in the logging industry at the present time that the logging act is not competent to deal with. The conditions are nothing short of outrageous. I had considerable correspondence with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines on the subject as he knows. Every time I got a prompt reply and I believe that the Minister has done all in his power to make the inspectors do their duty in seeing the enforcement of the logging act. That act was placed on the Statute Book only after a hard fight. And it is our duty to see that it is carried out. That the men are treated as human beings in the lumber woods. And I say that if you dispense with the inspectors and appoint a number of able-bodied men to do the work you will have better returns and there will be more satisfaction to the men. But certainly sooner or later that act got to be amended.

I was also sorry to learn of the conditions of the food supply at the sealfishery. That is another act that we will have to overhaul and put some teeth into and make it more perfect than it is at the present time. The sub-contractors in the lumber woods have got to go. Even if we find among the men themselves a number that still want to hold on to the sub-contractors. The people have got to be protected against themselves.

Now I propose to say a few words about taxation and expenditure, and revenue. And, Mr. Speaker, the figures are certainly interesting. I have tried to overhaul these public accounts and the various statements placed at the disposal of the members since this Legislature opened, and they show how the idol is shattered and fallen. My mind goes back to the days of 1924 when we were told of the terrible squandermania of the Squires Government. We were told of the terrible deeds that were done overnight by what is called Minute of Council Government. All these things were going to be done away with. Expenditure, said the Prime Minister, or the Finance Minister, for him must be kept within the limits of the estimates. There is going to be no Minute of Council Government. We are going to come into this Legislature and put our cards on the table and when the House of Assembly closes the story will be told. We have been here now since the 11th of May and we have not yet got from the Government of this Colony a correct statement of the true financial position.

We have in this country as regards the financial position of this Colony a kind of jig saw puzzle, with three points to it. We have been told in the Auditor General's statement that the deficit was only $81,000. We have been told by the Finance Minister in answer to a question tabled in this House that the deficit was $2,000,000, and then again we have been told by the Finance Minister in explanation that the deficit was only $112,000. But I want the members of the Government to understand that the people of this country are taking the situation that has arisen over these figures very seriously, and they mean to get from this Government a proper statement wherever it comes from of the correct financial condition of the country to-day. And this Opposition feels itself in duty bound to see that that financial statement is forthcoming before voting on a dollar of supplies.

Now what is the Government's record. The Government was going to balance the expenditure with the estimates. Let us see. The total expenditure of the Government for 1924-1925 was $10,522,000. The revenue for the same year was only $9,783,188.46. On in that year you spent $739,000 more than the revenue. For 1925-1926 the expenditure was $11,960,000 and for the same year the revenue was $9,834,000. Therefore last year on that account you spent $2,125,000 more than the revenue, yet you were going to keep the expenditure below the revenue. You have spent during the three years, $41,000,000. That is you came into power in effect for the record of the Government that was going to reduce expenditure and keep within the estimates. No doubt that when these figures go to the country that it will be astounded. That organisation talked about the expenditure of the Squires Government and yet on looking into the figures you can find that the expenditure of the present Government was $41,000 more than the last year of the Squires Administration.

You are not in the position to come in and tell us that you can't do any better. You have got to undo the things that you have already done. The income tax that you removed from the shoulders of the rich, you are compelled to put back now. But I venture to say that you are not going to put back the $500,000 income tax. And you are not going to bring in a law as strong as the one that you repealed from the Statute Book when you came into power. And the country has to be taxed to make up for your blunders.

Bad as the Squires administration was it would have been better if it had gone on in power. To-day from Cape Bauld to Cape Race, every section of the country feels that they have been hopelessly betrayed. And, sir, and I am going to talk to the Prime Minister through the Speaker, you cannot any more ask approval for your conduct for the way in which you handled the affairs of this country. The idea of the Government making a contract to build the dock for one million and then to find that it cost two millions.

Two and a quarter million dollars spent on Highroads. This will cost you an annual interest of a hundred thousand, and I venture to say an annual charge of two hundred and fifty thousand for maintenance. What have we got down in the District of St. Barbe? Before I left town last year

I went to the Prime Minister's office. I told the Prime Minister what I wanted of him. I told him that there were certain moneys in the Public Works Department to the credit of the District of St. Barbe, and I said that I wanted to be recognized in connection with the distribution of this money. I got a tentative answer from the Prime Minister and went off. Then I communicated with the Public Works Department by telegraph and, before I was through, spent dollars in getting my rights and recognition as the representative of St. Barbe District in saying how some of this money should be distributed. I had found that my opponent had as much to say as I about it and a good mess he made of it.

I read the other day that the Relieving Officer at Harbour Grace was giving out some five hundred passes to men who were going to White Bay. A few days ago I had occasion to ask for a pass for a man to go to the French Shore. A letter was given the man from the Colonial Secretary's Department to the Commissioner of Public Charities. The Commissioner of Public Charities, I was told by the man, tore up the letter and stamped it under his foot. I got Mr. Brownrigg's explanation and I got a letter from the Colonial Secretary's Department that they considered Mr. Brownrigg's explanation was all right. It is all very well for the Deputy Colonial Secretary to say the explanation is all right. He can go down and get $280 for extra services as he did last year. Though civil servants who treated that man in that way are being supported by the taxpayers of the country.

We have in our country to-day a Publicity Bureau that I suppose is going to make Newfoundland a veritable paradise for tourists. I notice that a man named Meehan is Chairman, and every time he took occasion to ask for a thousand dollars he got it. He got some seven or eight thousand. A young lawyer in Boston got away with another seventy-five hundred out of the million dollars we voted under protest last year. St. Barbe got a paltry twenty-five hundred dollars—thanks to the man who interferred in my work and in my district, but Mr. Meehan gets thousands to spend on publicity and Mr. Tait gets seventy-five hundred more. Again if a district is within a hundred miles of St. John's they can get what they like. We did not get anything out of the Highroads. That is the way the people of the outports are being fooled to-day. St. Barbe is one of the most important fishing districts in the country, not only from the standpoint of the fish caught, but from the fish brought out of it. Fishermen come from Bonavista Bay and bring tens of thousands of quintals of fish out of it.

I have got a message here now I received from a prominent citizen at Flower's Cove (reads) . . . and they are absolutely right. But I wonder are they going to get it! I propose to bring this matter before the Government in another form and see what answer I will get. I am going to try and get out of the Government what I consider as a fair share of that million dollar loan.

A word or two more and I am finished. I want to say a few words on the subject of the Imperial Conference and the Labrador Boundary question. I was amazed to hear the Prime Minister stand up here the other day and say in connection with the decision of the Imperial Conference in granting equality of status to the various dominions within the Empire that as far as he was concerned he did not see what good it was to us. The thing that seemed to impress him most was that if ever we wanted to go back to be a Crown Colony, the British Government might not take part in that desire. His opinion seemed to be that as far as we were concerned that it was a matter of small importance. I want to tell the Prime Minister that it was a matter of the utmost importance, and if he came away with that impression, he came away with an impression different from many others who have expressed their views on this, such as different representatives and prominent newspaper men. I suppose there is no more eminent journalist on the continent of Europe to-day than ————————, the Editor of the Review of Reviews. Writing on the decisions of the Imperial Conference he says: (Reads) . . . The decision of the Imperial Conference was a most momentous decision for Newfoundland, coming as it did, practically synchronizing with the decision of the Privy Council which confirmed beyond the shadow of a doubt Newfoundland's right to Labrador. If I understand those two decisions correctly Newfoundland is fully entitled to the disposal of Labrador in whatever way she chooses. In fact, I will go so far as to say that the way I read that decision, and I would only allow myself to be corrected by legal men, is that we can, if we choose, sell that territory to the United States without any interference from the Home Government. In view of that, I cannot see why the Prime Minister could say that that decision was not of much importance to Newfoundland.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Not much benefit I said.

MR. SCAMMELL—Of course, if the Prime Minister used that word his remarks are open to a different construction. With regard to the settlement of the dispute and the acquisition of the territory on the Labrador, it was painful to learn the other day that the lawyers are not finished with the Labrador yet. We have got to have what the Prime Minister designated as a legal survey. I can fancy the countenance of our legal friends in the Government lightening up when that announcement was made. I wonder how much of the Labrador is going to be left when the lawyers are finished with it. It was interesting to notice in the Royal Gazette just after the decision was announced to see the effect of certain parties immediately becoming interested. In every issue you would see applications for some thousands of square miles of timber land. I understand that a considerable number of square miles are held already. The Government are bringing in a Bill with regard to grants on the Labrador, and they have put a paragraph in it to make sure that those who have land there can by no means lose it. I am going to oppose the second section of that Bill, and try to work up opinions to oppose it.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—That is not the purpose of the section at all.

MR. SCAMMELL—You know that the Canadians are feeling badly over this thing, but I have no doubt that they want the Labrador and what is on it. Then again the United States are interested in other matters besides the fishing industry. To-day we cannot get the American Government to alter the Fordney tariff, so why not get in touch with those people whereby you could play off one proposition against the other; or get the Canadians interested and get them to pay the price for the Labrador. We have no means of developing the Labrador because we have no money to do it with. Therefore, negotiate and sell the the Labrador and get the best price possible for it. No doubt the price you would get for it would pay off the national debt of Newfoundland. As far as the water power down there is concerned, its potential value is not possible at present to estimate, as I suppose it is only a matter of a short time when electricity through the air will be an accomplished fact and then the value of the Labrador will be increased a hundred fold.

In conclusion I would remind the Government again that their bounden duty, in view of the conditions that ol ta n in the country at the present juncture, is to give consideration to the grantnig of a general election the coming Fall. I reiterate that you have lost the confidence of the people of this country. You lost it in the Bye-elections of Fortune Bay and St. John's East. You have betrayed the people. You have been weighed in the balance and found want ng. You have cast their money and their interests to the four winds of Heaven and you have to get out or give the people a chance to put you out in the early Autumn.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that on my first occasion of addressing this House I must strike a note of condolence and make more than passing reference to the remarks already made regarding the passing of the late Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin. There are a variety of reasons why I should do this. I come from a settlement and from a family that for a long period boasted of their connections with the Liberal Party. With them the names of Whiteway, Bond and other old chieftains of the Liberal Party were household forms. It meant something good to them in principle and in practical politics, so that when I speak of the late Sir Robert Bond and of his loss to th s country I speak of the loss of a man with whom my family, my settlement and myself personally were closely connected with both as followers of that Party in an election and as supporters of that Party in general. There is something about the name of Bond that possesses a great deal of magic for the people of this country, and a magic about the name that calls for explanation—a kind of a magic of that name that suggests the greatness of a character of a late Liberal Leader, the recognition of a signal service that had been rendered by him to this country in his many years of office and the value of a shining example that he set during his lifetime and what it meant to the men who were his followers. There is something of a contrast, perhaps, as between the times of Sir Robert Bond and our own times, with the policy he considered and the policy we are pursuing to-day and it is because of that the people of this country hold such veneration, affection and respect for the late Sir Robert Bond to-day. I feet that it is a tribute from the common people, a tribute from the intelligence of the common people and a tribute to a man who set country above self and who set service to country above self-interest and self-recognition; and it is because of that that the people of this country are anxious above all things, particularly in times such as these, to think so highly of Sir Robert Bond and to revere his name. It was only the other day I was reading a book containing a biography of Sir Robert Bond and in his biography was a foreward written by himself, and the point made by Sir Robert in that foreward that struck me most forcibly and that appealed to me most deeply was his statement that the true estimate of the greatness or the value of a man depended upon the extent to which that man had done yeoman and beneficial service for his fellows, and taking Sir Robert Bond's own estimate of the value of a man and applying it to himself we feel that he realised his ideal in his own life and service to the very highest degree, because, after all as far as Sir Robert Bond is concerned, there was really nothing very brilliant about his personality, there was nothing so very brilliant about his undertakings, but the outstanding phase of his career was the value and the quality of service that he did for his country and for the people of the country's interest. It was only the other day I was speaking to a former Minister of Sir Robert Bond's Cabinet and he said to me that during the election of 1908 a member of his Party asked to have a public expenditure made of $25 or $30 with which to establish a Post Office in a small extern settlement and that if the request was acceded to it would mean the winning of the whole district. It had been urged upon Sir Robert Bond that it ought to be done; but Sir Robert took the position that the Post Office was unnecessary and that the expenditure should not be made no matter what votes were lost. Compare that position and that attitude with the position and the attitude of to-day when tens of thousands of dollars are flung away, with waste and extravagance prevailing in so many of our public departments, purely for political purposes and for political advantages. No wonder that people are anxious to return to the times of Sir Robert Bond so that when men are trusted with the responsibility of protecting the finances of the people that they are to safeguard them as jealously as if they are their own private or commercial businesses. So I say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a universal feeling of regret throughout the country and a general feeling of sorrow over the passing of Sir Robert Bond in respect to the man, in respect to his personality, in respect to his honesty, in respect to his example and in respect to a regime that the people wish to see continue to their own benefit and to the benefit of the country.

The other gentleman whose passing I wish to refer to is Sir Michael Cashin. I have not had the same intimate connection with him that I had with Sir Robert Bond and his Party, although when I became a supporter of Sir Robert Bond Sir Michael Cashin was associated with him. More recently when I was a candidate of Sir Robert Bond, Sir Michael was not an associate of his. For a number of years I was an opponent of Sir Michael Cashin, but, although an opponent, I learned to admire and respect him. He was a hard hitter, handed out his weapons, flung them out unmercifully and dealt many severe blows politically. That is why I had admiration and respect for him. He believed in playing the game and he believed in playing the game for those on his side and for his Party. Later I got to know something of his bigness, his tolerance, his greatness of heart and of his generosity. A year or two before he died I learned more fully of his bigness. I grew to like him, I grew to esteem him and I grew to form an opinion of his able and admirable qualities. Here are the two contrasts. The one, Sir Robert Bond, who sprung from a highly educated family. The other, Sir Michael Cashin, the product of a son of the soil, a son of a fisherman, a self-made man and one who grew up with the most difficult circumstances to overcome;a man who refused to allow difficulties to stand in the way of his progress and a man who won that degree of success that would do credit to any citizens of Newfoundland or to any citizens of any country. One thing about Sir Michael Cashin that appealed to me was the splendid adaptedness displayed by the man himself in the circumstances he was placed from time to time. We hear a great deal said about the ordinary Newfoundlanders in other lands, how they are able to adapt themselves to any position of usefulness and of their earning ability. Well, to my mind, Sir Michael Cashin was a particular exemplification of that type of man. He came from a fishing settlement, sprung from a fishing family and won his way to become a Knight of the realm. He was placed in charge of the most important department in the public service of Newfoundland and fitted in there in the manner born. While administrating the finances of the Colony he made a name and a record for himself and he left that department with the highest and best records of any other statesman of Newfoundland since we have had self-Government; and I firmly believe that Sir Michael Cashin in any other department of the Government of the Crown would have done as much credit to himself, to his country and to his fellow-countrymen as he did in the Custom House. These two gentlemen referred to have now "Passed to that bourne from whence no traveller returns" and we can only speak with deepest regret of the loss of men of that type, and pass on our message of condolence to their families and trust that in our present and future hours of need that Newfoundland will always, in her times of trials or troubles, have men who had achieved such greatness as Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin.

Mr. Speaker, the gentlemen who have preceded me on this side of the House were very profuse in their congratulations to certain members of the House who won success in the recent two Bye-Elections. I want to follow suit, with the exception, of course, that I do not want to congratulate myself. But I do want to extend heartiest congratulations to Mr. Brophy and to those who were associated with him in the recent Bye-Election.

During that campaign I was acting the roll of a sort of political prophet and that is something that I happened to be somewhat associated with and something that I could always eschew, because I know enough about politics to have a fair idea of what is going to happen, but I would not know with certainty until the ballots were counted. Well I put the situation this way that, if the same feeling against the Government was in evidence in St. John's East as was in evidence in the Fortune Bay election, there was no question about it that our friend Mr. Brophy was going to be elected.

Public feeling took the form of decided hostility of the people against the Government of the day. And that feeling developed into what was really class feeling from an industrial standpoint. The ordinary working men made up their minds that their interests were not at one with the interests of the Monroe Government and for that reason, and not because of any special ability of mine, they voted against the Government in Fortune Bay and in St. John's East the same thing happened. I would congratulate Mr. Brophy on being elected with a large majority of something like five hundred votes on the other side of the chart and upon being given a mandate by the electorate of the district to now sit in this august assembly.

I would like also to congratulate the Minister of Public Works. I know something of the personal popularity of that gentleman in the district of Burgeo and LaPoile. I know that he worked hard for the district and during the election even the gentlemen who went up there as his opponents helped towards his election; they each thought that the other should not be elected while they both thought that Mr. Chambers should be elected and the people elected Mr. Chambers as a member of this House and Minister of Public Works. I am glad to see Mr. Chambers here and am very anixous to do bsuiness with him in connection with the district of Fortune Bay. I believe that Mr. Chambers is going to discover the half million dollars in connection with the Board of Works because there are several things needed in that matter. Mr. Chambers is the sort of happy Minister of the Crown who doesn't know how to say no ,and I am quite sure that he is going to prove just the sort that we require.

I think, too, Mr. Speaker, that I would congratulate those who have preceded me in speaking on this side of the House. They deserve the congratulations of the House, but I am afraid to say too much about the brilliancy of their speches because there will be such an outburst of applause from the Government side of the house that the Honourable Speaker will have to call the House to order. But speaking seriously, during the last three weeks I have sat here and listened to man after man speaking from this side of the House, discussing many different subjects, much general and outstanding ability has been displayed. And I think it is a pity that the newspapers have not seen fit to publish these speeches which are examples of such ability and are evidence of thorough understanding of certain subjects and the amount of research that must have been made into the public accounts and public matters generally. And the thing looked at from that standpoint must be a matter for congratulation because all these men are men of this country, born and bred here and conduct their business here.

The newspapers would be doing a good stroke of business for themselves if they published these speeches, because the people are interested in the accounts of the proceedings here. They like to know more about such matters and it is only fair that they should get a full and not prejudiced account.

The Government does not dream how much it can accomplish when it has such an opposition composed of such an aggregation of men. For a Government is as good as the strength of its Opposition, and the Prime Minister must look across at the Opposition and thank Providence for having such a number of gentlemen ready and willing to assist him by offering helpful suggestions as to how to legislate for this Colony, and more than that, the gentlemen on this side of the House are ready to relieve him of that great burden and take up and manage the affairs and legislation of this country so much better than the Government of to-day.

Now in reply to the congratulations extended to myself I must express my extreme pleasure at the tenor of these congratulations. Not that I think it was anything very much to do with my personal efforts but it was just as in the District of St. John's East, the majority of the people took occasion and the opportunity to express their hostility to the Government by voting against the Govern candidate , so in Fortune Bay the same feeling prevailed. I happened to be the lucky member representing the Opposition and there was nothing else for them to do but vote for me, because they were voting against the Governmnet.

I would like to say that the Government could not have sent a more gentlemanly candidate to represent them, one who worked hard for his cause, leaving no stone unturned, nor one who fought more squarely than did that gentleman in question.

Now something has been said in respect of the matter of that fight in the district of Fortune Bay. Well, I want to say here, Mr. Speaker, that the fight in that district was purely and simply on the issue of the day. I went there and found the fishermen of the district dissatisfied with conditions, feeling that things were some how or other all wrong, that the fishing industry was not being treated properly, that locally, they had not got a square show of improvement necessary to carry on the fishery, felt they were overburdened with taxes, could not condust the fishery so as to make it pay, felt that they had been discriminated against in favour of other districts and that waste and extravagance too were predominant; and on the strength of these feelings was the district won for the Liberal Party.

Now in being done the honour being made the elected member for that district I only hope that I shall be able to live up to the standard established by the former representatives of the district.

If I can gain for myself for services within the district the same sort of admiration and respect that was accorded my predecessor I will be immediately satisfied with my record in that respect, and, Mr. Speaker, if I can gain for myself within this House of Assembly the sort of reputation, both as capable with regard to the rules, regulations and proceedings and take as creditable a part in the debates and help as much in public affairs, as he did then I will be satisfied on that score.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is just one point that I want to emphasise, and that is this, that throughout the whole country there is a feeling against the Government and that feeling of hostility is particularly noticeable in fishing places such as Fortune is.

I have often noticed when sitting in that place the sounds of discussion coming through the walls very often, and they were disturbing to the peace and quietitude of that other place. Still I am glad to be over here and glad to take part in the proceedings of that chamber which gives to the country it's practical legislation. I am glad to be able to get away from the formality of the dotting of I's and the crossing of T's, and I am glad to have an opportunity to play some small part in helping along the enactment of legislation beneficial to the country.

Now s.r, the topic of topics is the Speech from the Throne. It has been discussed by gentlemen from this side of the House, in practically all moods and tenses. I have yet to hear anybody from these benches say anything complimentary about it. The nearest approach to a compliment in respect to the Speech from the Throne was that it was empty. I may say that the gentlemen on this side of the House have done a great deal to fill up that void, but really as far as I am concerned personally my intention is to address myself solely and simply to the topics that are cognate to the Speech from the Throne, and to endeavor to advance some criticism constructive I hope in respect to this document. Of course, I may say there was a great deal of justification for the extent to wh ch the Opposition members have delivered themselves in respect to that Speech. It was so absolutely disappointing, so absolutely not what this side of the House expected, so absolutely not what was expected by the country generally that there was no need for surprize at the expression of general disappointment and disapproval.

Now it has been said from the other side of the House that the gentlemen over here have engaged in tactics of obstruction or what appeared to the other side as tactics of obstruction. As far as that is concerned, I know of no arrangement or no such understanding. The general idea was that as long as the Government seemed unprepared with legislation, as long as the Government brought in here nothing of outstanding importance that there was no reason why the Opposition should not take the Speech from the Throne as their text and supplying the omissions in it in order to complete that text should discuss the record of the Government and the affairs of the country at the greatest possible length hoping to show the Government that they were derelict in their duty, next that they have lost the confidence of the people, and next the desire of the people that the whole matter be referred to the voters at the earliest possible time, which should be this Fall.

Now I was surprised at the gentleman, the mover of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, who took a different view, an entirely different view from that which has been entertained by the gentlemen on this side of the House, and so expresed by them in their various speches to the House during the last three weeks. The gentleman who moved that Address in Reply had a great deal to say about the Labrador Question and the Gander, and he also said something about the fisheries. There is one particular expresion used by that gentleman in connection with that Speech that I want to refer to particularly and that is the discussion of government scandals. Of course, the gentleman was referring to the alleged scandals in connection with the procedure of the present Government, and he was trying to make the House believe that by comparison the present Government had a very clean record in office, and proposed to continue according to him along the straight and narrow path.

Now it is my personal opinion that during the last few years a great deal has been said in this country, in this House and in the public press regarding scandals real or imaginary. And only a very few months past I have heard about defalcation, alleged wrongdoing, this, that and the other thing ,condemning the righteousness of the present Government. And where has it got us.

Where has all this washing of dirty linen got us, to-day. What good has it done us. What benefit has accrued to us. Is it not a fact that as far as we are concerned, that we simply blinked our eyes, and set ourselves up as a spectacle for outsiders to laugh at and contemn. Members of our Legislature, members of the journalistic profession of Newfoundland, went out of their way, laboured assiduously hard and continuously, to endeavour to strip from Newfoundland, and the Government every semblance of decency. What good has it done us. And I say that when honourable gentlemen on that side of the House or on this, go out of their way to make childish insinuations of that kind they are not only doing themselves no good, but they are continuing to do the country an injury. There is no point in such references. Nothing but harm will come from such references. And I take it that every gentleman in this House agrees with me when I say this. I don't care how honest; I don't care how good the intentions of the Leader of the Government may be, I don't care how close a supervision he may keep over public affairs, that come under his purview, wrong doing is almost certain to occur, in spite of his supervision. Things are bound to happen without his cognizance. Things are bound to take place that he does not condone, and does not agree with, but of which he is ignorant. But it ill becomes the people of Newfoundland and the public journals of Newfoundland, and above all this legislature of Newfoundland, to endeavour to besmirch this country generally and the public men particularly because some irregularity of that sort has taken place in respect to one or two parties. The idea that must be abroad with regard to Newfoundland politics when brought up for discussion is that this Newfoundland of ours is simply a sink of corruption. That politicians and the public are anything but dependable, and that if you scraped Newfoundland with a fine toothcomb you might find a few honest men. And if you put an honest man in power he was liable to be corrupted by his dishonest associates. And who is responsible but ourselves. We went out of our way in times past to give that idea to the outside world, and the men carrying on the administration of the affairs of the Colony to-day are suffering from this. So I say let us forget it. What has happened is bound to happen and will continue to happen, until we eliminate the dishonest man in public life, the irregularities in the Government, men exploiting their place in the public life to the detriment of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. Of course if we can get the balance on the side of decency and good government, so much the better for us, but at least I think that we can pride ourselves on being in that position of ordinary decency to-day.

That gentleman who moved the address in reply also made some reference to the spirit of the Government. Now I want to say this about the member for Harbour Main that he put up such a magnificent case for the Government, in the position in which they are at present, he made such a splendid show with such a hard subject to handle that I am wondering just how well would have been his pronouncement, if he had something worth while extolling. Because the address of the Hon. Member for Harbour Main was one of the finest presentations that I have ever heard ,and certainly does credit to him and the constituency that sent him here, even if some of his remarks and some of his conclusions were not in accord with the facts. Now the Hon. Member for Harbour Main in speaking about the spirit of the Government, talked along lines rather different from that of the Hon. the Prime Minister. The gentleman who moved that address in reply, stated that the intention of the Government was to batter its way through in spite of obstructions ,in spite of the difficulties that the opposition might put in its way; in spite of the fact that the Government majority was so near the vanishing point, they intended to carry on, and complete its programme. The Government was not in a position to carry out such a legislative programme as the season of the year and the condition of the country demand to-day. Now let me speak of that spirit of the Government for a few months? The Prime Minister was elected as Leader of a Government with a direct and a definite mandate from the people of Newfoundland in 1924. He went to the country giving certain specific undertakings to the electors. He received the support of these electors because they believed that under his Premiership these undertakings would be carried out. Now I think it has been made fairly plain by the members on this side of the House who have preceded me that the record of the Government has been anything but consonant with the undertakings that were given by the Leader of the Government in 1924. As a matter of fact, in very striking contrast are the record of the Government in office with the undertakings of the Government previous to its accession to office. Already the electors of certain districts of the country have refused to endorse the record of the Government and they have refused to continue their support of the representatives of that Government and the outstanding instance occurred very recently in the by-election in St. John's East. The same thing, of course, had previously occurred in the district of Fortune Bay. I take it then that, if the Prime Minister, as a business man, arranges a contract with some other man in respect to his business or any portion of his undertakings and that man fails to keep the terms of that contract that the Prime Minister on his part is not bound to keep his side of the contract. Similarly, therefore, the people of this country feel that the Prime Minister has not kept his side of the agreement with them. They are absolved from loyalty to him and he should return to them the mandate they gave him and which mandate he failed to carry out during the last three years in office. Frequent changes of Government none of us are anxious to see because it does no good; on the contrary it does considerable harm both at home and abroad. It is essential, however, to get down to a stable Government and I think we should achieve it as quickly as possible, but under present conditions you cannot have stability of Government within this country because you have restlessness, restiveness and unsettlement obtaining throughout the country. The whole matter of policy should be referred to the country whereby the people could give a mandate to some other leader to endeavour to carry on and reduce expenditure and taxation and to make it easier for the people to live in the country. The people want to get away from the condition of things existing in the country to-day ,as is evident from the expressions of regret paid to the memory of the late Sir Robert Bond. They want to get away from that waste and extravagance that prevails in our public affairs at the present time. They gave the present Prime Minister a mandate to abolish that sort of thing and that mandate has not been carried out. The people are prepared and are anxious to pass on that mandate to some other leader, hoping against hope, perhaps, to get faith in a Government and which the Government of to-day do not enjoy. One of the curses of this country was achieved in a most outstanding manner by Sir Edward Morris. When Sir Edward Morris came into the field with a Party, the result of his advent was a breaking down of Party lines within this country. Men no longer owed themselves to any Party, Liberal or Conservative, and men were prepared to disassociate themselves from one Party and another because the Party line was wiped out. There was very little difference between the Party principles ,and unless you get a return to the Party line and get people to belong to a Party and stick to a Party because of the political faith that is in them there can be no hope for stability of Government and just so long will you have a state of unrest in this country. The Prime Minister may think that by holding on to office and showing his loyalty to his associates that he is playing a game that he is doing something to restore political stability to this country; but greater than his obligation to his Party associates, greater than his desire to a restoration of stable Government and greater than he or I can conjure up is his obligation to the people of this country to keep faith with them and to perform the mandate given to him by the people of this country. I could sympathize with the Prime Minister in his display of anxiety to remain where he is and play the game by his Party associates. I sympathize with him in trying to prevent political confusion before the ordinary time for a general election; but I cannot sympathize with him because of his stubbornness as against the will and desire of the people of the country, as expressed in the by-elections which we have had recently. The Prime Minister came into power on a wave of popularity, a wave of popular support based upon his personal reputation, faith in his integrity, his courage and his determination. The country does not hold the Prime Minister as a man in that same same spirit to-day. I would like to see the Prime Minister face the issue courageously, fairly and squarely; I would like to see him reject all advice to the contrary, and he would be a bigger man and a more influential man than he is by kicking against the pricks and ignoring the expressed anxiety of the people of Newfoundland which the districts of Fortune Bay and St. John's East showed they wished to have recently. In 1924 there is no man who had as much faith in the Prime Minister as I did myself. That was a bold, big broad policy as set out in that Manifesto of 1924 and if it had been put in force there was some hope for Newfoundland. There was a chance of getting away from the irregularities and from the waste and extravgance of past administrations, and getting down to an expenditure that we could afford and having public affairs generally put in such a position that whoever succeeded the Monroe Party would have an easy time of it. As a Newfoundlander, nobody is more disappointed than myself and nobody more sorry than I am because of the present Prime Minister's failure to adhere to that policy because the Government came into office when such reforms were necessary in the public expenditure and reforms were necessary in every department of the Government. The need for such reforms is even greater to-day, the people are anxious to have them, and the time is opportune to have them put into force. But the question is are you going to get the people as eager, as anxious and as ready to accept the word of a leader that will do the right thing, because to-day there is a feeling of synicism and scepticism among the people owing to the failure of the present Leader of the Government to do the right thing. But despite the moral feelings of the people of the country, has the attitude and his Government given a set back to the reforms that were then necessary for an improvement in the conduct of our public affairs. As the hour for closing is reached, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay upon the table of the House a detailed statement of the Surplus for the year 1924-25; also a statement of the loan account and current account for the year 1925-26; also a statement of the revenue and expenditure for the fiscal year up to April 30th, 1927. These statements are all signed by the Auditor General and certified by the Bank of Montreal.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Brown gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Thursday, June 2nd, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, June 2nd, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Ashbourne, from Virgin Arm, re Roads.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Brown gave notice of question.

Answer to question No. 242 was tabled.

HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER—I wish to call attention to some questions placed on to-day's Order Paper by the Honourable Member for Ferryland, Mr. Cashin. These questions cover a period of over eighteen years and on that ground are in my opinion unreasonable. Some limit in point of time should be set which should not be exceeded in asking questions. If no such restrictions were imposed a most undesirable, if not impossible, state of affairs would be created: questions might be asked involving the search of disused and ancient records, thereby not alone unduly imposing upon the officials of the departments concerned but preventing them from giving proper attention to the ordinary duties of their office, quite possibly to the serious prejudice of public business. The administrative services of the Colony have to be carried on; but it is patent that these would be gravely interfered with and impeded if the departmental staffs had to devote their time to the compiling of information extending over lengthy periods in reply to questions in the House. The inherent right of Members of the Assembly to obtain information on matters of public concern must be confined within reasonable limits; and this is particularly so in reference to the period covered by the questions. Modern Parliamentary usage is very much averse to this type of question which should really be the subject of private research. Last year I made a ruling in reference to questions generally to which I would redirect the attention of the House. In passing I would like to say that it is a salient principle that information which can be obtained from ordinarily available sources should not be made the subject of questions. It very often happens that after the Public Accounts have been tabled questions are directed to Ministers concerning items of expenditure under their departments; and it is supposed that they must recompile data already set out in these official records and which is readily obtainable by the Members asking the questions if they but referred to the Accounts placed at their disposal in the House. This is not so; such questions are unnecessary and should not be asked. I feel sure the Honorable Member for Ferryland will appreciate the position and realise the desirability in the public interests of avoiding this type of queston. Under the circumstances I must refrain from calling the questions referred to.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Speaker, taking up the actual first paragraph of the Speech from the Throne, I want, in common with all other Newfoundlanders without exception, to congratulate this Legislature and Government and all concerned on the splendid result achieved in connection with our case in respect of the Labrador Boundary and the territory on the Labrador. It is a good many years ago, I think twenty years, since Quebec first disputed our claim to own the territory beyond the coast line. Since that time a good many Newfoundlanders have been connected nected with the fighting of the case on behalf of Newfoundland Sir Robert Bond set a great deal of store by fighting and proving the claim of Newfoundland to the ownerhips of that territory. Another prominent man then Sir Edward now Lord Morris was also of that mind and greatly instrumental in the preparation of the case. The late Martin Furlong, one of the cleverest and most outstanding of our lawyers, also did noble service in connection with the case and planned the outline of the course the case should take. Coming down to present days I am also glad to see the present Minister of Justice a Newfoundlander born and bred identified with the last stages and the final success of that case before my Lords of the Privy Council. It is a source of extreme gratification to me and I think also to every Member of this Legislature and the country generally that the outstanding men connected with our victory in respect of the Labrador have been almost exclusively Newfoundlanders, and that in spite of the fact that our great legal representative thought very little of our chances of success in that case that the matter provided by the gentlemen I have mentioned was so handled by the gentlemen in charge of the later stages of the case that Newfoundland won a great and complete victory in this case; and no matter who won that case the size and extent of the victory ensuring our undisputed possession of an area practically three times the size of our own island is something for us all to be proud of and to be extremely grateful for. But, now, Mr. Speaker, that we have undisputed possession of this territory and the undisputed right to the disposal of it, what are we going to do in connection with that property? The Speech from the Throne refers to the result of the appeal to the Privy Council and says that the country can now enter upon the unrestricted development of these areas. Here we have been assured of our undisputed right to the possession of an area of 110,000 square miles; half of that reported to be wooded and 30,000 undisputed to be well wooded and capable of profitable exploitation and development. The area is so large; the size so great that it almost staggers one's imagination to get a complete grasp of it. The mere matter of surveying these resources, of getting a complete stock taking made of these resources is one to stagger the financial resources of this country. A good deal of it can only properly be surveyed by aeroplane and then to have a proper cruise made and to send specialists over that area would involve an outlay of money of an amount which under the best of circumstances we could scarcely afor and certainly cannot in the state of our finances to-day. Of course I feel this about the case, at this juncture in respect of the Labrador, that the circumstances under which the case was staged because of the hundreds of references and the amount of discussion that has been carried on in papers of the Old Country, in Canada and in the United States, have won for this area and Newfoundland a tremendous amount of free publicity of an incalculable value and benefit to the present owners of the Labrador. I remember it was only the other day or a very few weeks ago that the "Literary Digest" came out with a full page of reference to this case shortly after we won it. I understand that the amount that the "Literary Digest" would charge for publicity purposes or for advertising is $10,000 or $15,000 a page. We can multiply that a good many times over for similar references and discussion in other publications, and then will realise how much Newfoundland has obtained in the way of free publicity in respect of this area. The area then is well known ,throughout the civilised world, and a great deal of attention has been attracted to that area by those interested in that sort of timberland. Supposing we had an inquiry on the basis of a complete sale what could we say? What information could we give? We would not be in a position to entertain a strict business proposition for the sale of the timber lands area as a whole. As a matter of fact when it comes to a disposal of them in that way I think it is absolutely hopeless for us to be buoying ourselves up with the idea that at any time within the near future there is a practical possibility of anybody making us an offer for Labrador. We have heard a great deal on selling the Labrador for amounts ranging as high as 150 million. I take it that any investors or capitalists who are going to invest to that extent would have to have the most complete knowledge of the property in question and a most definite idea of what they were getting for such a huge sum of money. The great extent and the difficulty of development of the area; the fact that the area will be resorted to for the most part when other supplies are exhausted; these do away with the idea that anybody now or in the near future will make any bid for an area of such an extent. But there is this fact to be borne in mind in respect of that Labrador territory, that while the area is so large and so much of it is somewhat far removed there are small areas within the same territory that are more accessible than the bulk of it that can be disposed of profitably and to the practical advantage of the Colony. Reading over some of the exceptionally interesting dissertations of the President of the other House in this connection, I notice that he claims that certain territory is easily accessible from the coast for the purpose of surveying and easily accessible for those who might want to exploit that area.

(Reads)

It might therefore be suggested that if the Government saw fit it could concentrate on the surveying of an area such as that; concentrate on giving the greatest possible publicity to an area such as that and on getting the utmost in returns therefrom. Then it may be that while some of our hopes with regard to large realisations from the Labrador today may be disappointed we may as year succeeds year be able to secure from the sale of nearer lands sufficient money to meet our expenses of the surveying of larger portions of the territory so that while those of us of the present decade or of the present generation may not be likely to see the realisation of our hopes of great financial returns from the Labrador those of the succeeding one will and the country will therefore be so much the better off in years to come. It looks however very much as if the Government has made up its mind not to do anything drastic with regard to the exploitation of that area because I notice that while the most assuring sort of references regarding the disposal of the territory are made in the Speech from the Throne the undertakings the Government proposes to enter into don't bear out these assurances. We have in years past in Newfoundland disposed of timberlands of a maximum of benefit to the speculator and a minimum to the country or in other words we have given out licenses under our old Crown Lands Act at $2 per square mile. I was hoping personally that when the Government brought in its Bill regulating licenses on the Labrador that it would in respect to that territory at any rate depart from the regulations of the old Crown Lands Act because if any one thing was emphasised following our victory it was that it seemed that the neighbouring provinces of the Dominion of Canada are obtaining returns from their timber lands far in excess of anything we have been getting from similar resources in Newfoundland. Such an authority as the President of the Legislative Council has supplied us with regard to what Quebec for instance gets from timber lands and water powers.

I notice in the series of lectures that that gentleman delivered in respect of the Labrador and what it means to us that he stated that where we get that $2 bonus per square mile for timber lands with some little additional for royalty Quebec obtains for timber lands $2.75 for stumpage per square mile and $3.35 for square mile as tax. In addition to that $2.75 and $3.35 a royalty is paid that varies. The difference is a remarkable one. I don't claim necessarily that we could do the same in the way of rates charged. There may not perhaps be the same demand, but with an area so near as Quebec paying that much we should certainly approximate those figures so that where they get $150,000 for a similar area I think we should at least get $100,000 or $475,000 instead of $60,000 as under our present rates of timber charge. That is $60,000 for 30,000 square miles. Again, we come to the question of water powers. These water powers are going to become valuable as they are developed in connection with industries established on the Labrador. These can only be established as the land is surveyed and the resources made accessible to capitalists. It is interesting to remark the series of figures given by Sir Patrick McGrath in connection with water powers in this colony and in the Province of Quebec. Take the water power on the Exploits River in connection with Grand Falls. Then there is horse power. Under our rates of charging we only get $10,000 per year. He takes in Quebes, a river in that province and points out that in leasing that river Quebec first set the amount of rental at a price of $6,000 per year for all developed but makes a graduated charge as royalty, for the first ten years 50c. per horse power and $1.50 for the next ten and perhaps $2.50 for the third ten. Newfoundland would earn a quarter of a million in a quarter century while Quebec would get for the lease almost 1½ million. Again, I am not saying that the example of Quebec is one that we can or should follow, but it shows that we have been setting too low an estimate on the value of such natural resources as we possess and have been disposing of from time to time, and the point I want to make is this that in disposing of these Labrador areas we should not adhere so rigidly to the rates and terms set down in the old Crown Lands Act. We have acquired a territory geographically separated from us, of the utmost potential value and in disposing of it there is no reason why we should not make special rules and regulations and enact them. As a matter of fact I hope that the new bill will be amended to provide that we get something more commensurate with the immense value of the territory in question and in keeping with what is got in other countries. Another question that in common with other Newfoundlanders I would like to see cleared up is that of the ultimate disposal of licenses that have been already granted in past years on the Labrador but of which the rentals are very much in arrears. I understand that arrears on some run up to $300,000. A lot of people wonder if those who got those licenses for speculation may be allowed to plead that they allowed the rentals to lapse because a dispute arose a certain number of years ago, and that the dispute being now settled they should now be allowed to pay up the arrears. I think the position every man of ordinary intelligence takes is that persons who took licenses on the Labrador took them on and paid for them and paid rentals for a certain number of years, came there simply as a speculation. With them it was a gamble. There are a whole lot of people who gambled in that way. I don't see why if these people have failed to keep up their leases now that Newfoundland has brought the case to a successful conclusion that these people should be allowed to have the major portion of the benefits from that territory belonging to the people as a whole. In dealing with that area everything that savours of speculation should be cut out, and again we should try and get a good deal more per square mile for rental than we have been getting. I can quite see, Mr. Speaker, that while there is no possibility of immediate returns in actual terms of dollars and cents on this Labrador territory, where it still may be utilised to our own embarrassment because it undoubtedly has increased to an enormous extent the assets of the colony and to that same extent has enhanced the financial prestige and credit of Newfoundland as I think the Speech from the Throne remarks. Here then without actual possibility of being able to realise on that territory in terms of dollars and cents through its sale, we are up against the possibility of the value of the territory being used for the raising of further loans on the credit of the colony. I say that, I don't care what Government is in power ,at a juncture like this, with an asset of that value to pledge, and with the financial position of the country as it is to-day, with so many demands on the public finances and expenditure, it is bound to be a sore temptation to take the easiest way out and raise money by using the Labrador as a pledge for the raising of money. I argue that such is the case, Mr.

Speaker, and I desire to pass over a warning to the Government in that repect, that the country having reached a pass to-day with regard to borrowed money, being now in debt practically to the extent of 70 millions or so, we have to go very slow before going into the money markets and raising further loans. Let me go over the position in that respect without intending to weary the House. Some 14 years ago this country was being financed on a total expenditure on current account of something like $3,900,000 and we are now to-day spending almost that amount in interest year by year on our public debt. We have got round to a position where we are spending over a third, making over a third of our annual expenditure in connection with interest on public debt for loans raised on the credit of the colony. Obviously then we are in the position that we have one third of our expenditure absolutely irreducible, unless we are going to default on our interest. There is an amount of taxation without any hope of reducing it for the tax-payer and it is unthinkable that the proportion of expenditure on interest on loans to total expenditure should be increased any greater. All of that gets us down to the consideration of the present position of the country financially; and that position with regard to the manifesto of the Prime Minister for the election of 1924 in terms something like this: that the conditions of the public finances at that writing were very bad, and public expenditure must be drastically reduced; that everything must be done with a view especially to encourage the prosecution of the fisheries; that the cost of public service must be reduced; that the cost of government was too high and there were too many unearned salaries. Today in opposition to this is the Speech from the Throne which says when we are facing a position with taxation much higher than ever previously that we have to cope with a deficit of 1½ millions in respect of revenue, and further to meet a condition in which the railway is placed of having a deficit of $750,000 or about 2¼ millions to be raised in addition to ordinary revenue. Surely then the pronouncement of the Prime Minister in respect of the public finances as made in 1924 is even more applicable to the conditions as they obtain to-day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, at the last session of this Legislature there was appointed a Commission to go into the public finances of the country with a view to considering every reasonable ways and means whereby expenditure and taxation might be reduced.

Obviously that Commission has resulted in nothing particular being done because the Speech from the Throne has referred to the deficit in the following manner:

(Reads)

The statements appear to me, Mr. Speaker, as being very peculiar, in view of the present circumstances; here you have conditions in this country ,where you have fishermen doing nothing, an army of unemployed throughout the whole country; here you have conditions under which scores of men are telegraphing to the Members in St. John's, appealing for relief, appealing for work, for some opportunity of finding employment, for some means of earning a living. Still the Government says that no immediate action seems to be called for.

The Statement that the Government purposes to use the movement of trade does not appeal to the ordinary man because at the present time trade in this country is stagnate, is practically paralyzed and cannot function to the same extent of action.

No immediate action is to be taken when the public moneys are being spent to the extent and in the manner revealed by the public accounts tabled in this House. No immediate action is to be taken when such waste and squander in the public departments as has already been referred to, is taking place.

I took occasion to go carefully into the public accounts with a view to finding where the trouble was, with an idea of getting together some information as to money collected and to get some idea as to where money goes and giving due attention to what will be the possibility of reducing expenses and so lower the taxes in this country. I came across some figures, which I copied from the public accounts, and to which I would now call the attention of the House. I am not trying to anticipate anything that might come up in respect of the amounts which I mention. There are many payments of money scattered all through the public accounts and there seems to be no attempt to give a systematic account of expenditure, and I feel that the Prime Minister does not dream of some of the amounts that are expended in certain connections. I am sure that the leader of the Government would not stand for certain expenditure that appears in the public accounts if he was aware to the extent that some of the expenditure is being made. Now, not because it was a matter that concerns me personally but because it was pointed out to me, I would first of all call the attention of the House to the amount expended for medical attention on certain paupers and the amount is no less than $80,000 for last year.

Now when you come to consider our healthy climate and the hardihood of the people ,and take into consideration the expense is only for part time services for a handful of doctors, then I think you will agree with me, Mr. Speaker, when I say that if that expenditure had been properly regulated and the conditions had been properly considered, the amount expended need not be more than $25,000 to $30,000 a year. Now I don't want to be misunderstood, I do not begrudge any person who is sick and needs relief from the Government, but I do claim that this country cannot spend one cent more than is absolutely neecssary on paupers or anyone else because we cannot afford it. But here you have $1,634.00 for one doctor, for another $2,300.00 for another doctor $2,400.00, another $3,000.00 and for another doctor $2,304.00. And the greatest amounts are charged up for services in the most populated centres where the people are fairly well-to-do and not secluded sections of the country where the doctors would have to drive a long distance and pile up expenses in connection with travelling. The sum total of all this sort of expense is over $70,000. I have not gone into the accounts very carefully and there are probably many others which I have overlooked and would bring the total up to about $80,000 a year in respect of medical services paid to a few doctors.

And that led me on to see where we get off in respect of medical services for the people at the expense of the Government, and that means the hospitals, the Sanitarium, Sudbury, Poor Asylum, Lunatic Asylum and so on must be considered, and I discovered that in these various connections something like $812,000 was expended last year. In addition to the $80,000 paid to the doctors I mentioned there is another $80,000 paid to the hospitals just for people who come to the hospital at St. John's and are not able to pay for themselves. We are paying about $800,000 a year to look after helpless paupers. I say that I regard that expense as out of all proportion and quite unnecessary, and I do not want to be misunderstood—I do not begrudge medical service free to those who really need it and cannot afford to pay for a doctor, but I am claiming that the present expense in this connection is far too great and under the circumstances is altogether unjustifiable. Why even the Auditor General in his report makes reference to the Financial Commission and in speaking of the Public Charities says that some investigation should be conducted into the department.

(Reads)

People from all over the Island are coming here to stay at the Hospital and I am of the opinion that the doctors should do something to stop this. The number is increasing and will increase every year and something should be done to stop it in view of the conditions of the finances of the country to-day. We are spending what we cannot afford and not only that, but we are spending it unnecessarily in connection with some of the several larger institutions, and as the Auditor General has said, we must do something to cut down the expenditure.

The ordinary man who goes down town and sees something selling at an attractive price in a store buys it, not because he needs it but because he hasn't to pay much for it, because it is easy to get. If the people are given the idea that it is easy to get into the Hospital if they want to they will ask for it—so and so got so and so there and they ask their member for it and too often get it. The difficulty of the matter is that at present it is so easy to get into the hospital and as a result the people take advantage of it. Now I know that the Government, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Government and each member must be well tired of hearing that "something must be done." You hear a lot of criticism, destructive criticism, from this side of the House and little in the way of constructive criticism. Well let me make a few comments and offer a few suggestions to the Government in this connection. I am not going to point out shortcomings without being prepared to offer some suggestions.

Take the General Hospital. That institution costs the country about $180,000 a year to maintain and what is being done to reduce the cost there? Let us suppose that every patient there deserved to be taken in, needs to be taken in. There are lot of people who are brought to the Hospital who would be better at home but are taken unnecessarily at Government expense and have a holiday at Government expense. This sort of thing should be stopped. It would be some satisfaction if we could discover something going on in that direction —there should be a regulation of admission. Why, last year, here you had $83,000 charged up to the Department of Public Charities to pay for people who couldn't afford to pay for themselves. I feel that that amount should be less than $20,000. Are the people pauperised to that extent? It is an insult to the country to make any such claim. Two thirds of the people have to be absolutely dependent on charity ,if such was the case.

My claim is that if we make it more difficult for people to get into the Hospital the expenditure, that is unnecessary expenditure, will be considerably reduced. Confine it to cases of absolute need of immediate relief, real hospital cases, and concentrate on collection of fees and the result will be an increase of the revenue of the Hospital and even if you do not reduce the expenditure one cent the country is going to profit.

You have in the road ,the Lunatic Asylum, which costs the country about $150,000 a year. There is no place in there where a person can put a member of his family who is mentally deranged, for private treatment. Is not a cent of fees collected in connection with this institution? Here we have an industrial department which might be made to provide a quarter of the cost of maintenance of that institution; instead of that you only get $10,000 a year from the department. The industrial training forms part of the treatment in practically every such Asylum outside of this country, for in many cases the patients are cured by doing some work whereby their minds are taken off their troubles. I remember some years ago when in Canada spending several weeks at an Asylum just outside Toronto studying some cases, and one day when walking around the grounds with the doctor he explained to us the success which had been achieved through their industrial department and how very many of the patients became cured because by means of their work their minds were taken off their troubles. There was one patient, he explained, at one time who gave the staff a lot of trouble. For weeks they were puzzled to know what to get him to do. He didn't seem to take any interest in anything, but one day when he was walking through the grounds with the doctor he bumped his head off a low branch of one of the trees, he stopped and looked at the tree in a puzzled way, and the doctor had an idea and set him to work pruning the tree and in three weeks he was home on probation, and he was apparently cured, for they never heard of him after.

We can do the same thing in this country, for they have the opportunity here to introduce a proper system whereby the men can follow their trades and will be able to earn something and thereby reduce the expenditure in connection with the maintenance of the institution.

You have a $150,000 institution in there with absolutely no operative treatment and the inmates instead of paying nominal amounts of money are living at the expense of the Government and the country. If you could get them to raise $10 to $40 each a year it would be something towards paying for their maintenance.

You have at Sudbury, a place which costs $17,000 to $18,000 a year to run, a splendid X-ray outfit. The sort of thing that a man has to pay the highest prices to avail of in Canada and the States. In my opinion if Sudbury was run properly by a proper management it could be made self-supporting.

The Sanitarium costs another $92,000. Here again there is no industrial institution which could easily be established as an occupation for the patients. The same thing applies to this institution as in the case of the Lunatic Asylum. If one of you gentlemen takes occasion to go into the Sanatarium Dr. Rendell will probably take pride in showing you a magnificent motor boat which was made by some men who were staying at the Sanatarium. I think that there should be some industrial system in this instittution in order that there may be something for the patients to work at, such light work as making baskets, etc., and in this way the revenue of the institution could be increased and continue to run the institution at the least cost.

How are you going to do it? The only way, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and I offer it to the Government as a suggestion ,is to make the services and management of the institutions much better than at present.

Take the General Hospital, what have you got down there? I will admit that you have in charge one of the finest doctors on this side of the Atlantic, but you haven't got a business head there. Every Tom, Dick and Harry who wants to sell some supplies can do so, and so on. There is no proper business management.

You have in that institution down there an operating room that cost the country $20,000 or $30,000 to instal. It is a beauty. It is one of the best that I have ever seen and I have seen some pretty good operating rooms. It is used day after day for operations which cost from $20 up to $150 and the hospital doesn't get a cent of it. We put it up to the Executive Government when I was a member of the Board of Governors, but they took no notice, then the Board of Governors decided to collect the sum of $5.00 or $10.00 for each operation—but the hospital never got it. The patient paid their fees to the doctors, but there were no returns made to the hospital in respect of the use of the operating room, by the doctors.

You have down there at the General Hospital an institution that has cost this country a huge sum of money to build and equip and staff, and do you know that it is run on such a loose system that it is not able to qualify for the minimum grade of efficiency set for the hospitals of Canada and the United States. A hospital that is not well up in the standard of efficiency in these countries is not recognized, and ours does not reach the lowest grade. The same remarks apply to other things. The asylum is a place of detention only. If a man is strong enough to overcome his mental disability he will get out of it, if not he stays there. It is a case of "Hope abandon ye who enter here." I know of institutions of that kind where such a simple thing as extraction of teeth has taken a patient from a lunatic asylum, and has made him a strong and sane man, and enabled him to go back to his ordinary occupation.

(Reads)

So that the Superintendent at the Lunatic Asylum pulls down $8,000 from the Government, not reckoning his profitable practice outside the asylum. The Auditor General suggests in his report, that the Superintendent is sadly overburdened, and should get some assistance. If Mr. Speaker, you have officials connected with these institutions, by all means pay them well, but insist that they attend strictly to the business of the public service, and get better satisfaction from them. You have got health institution after health institution but each run on its own. Duplication of equipment, and duplication of expenditure. You are expending hundreds of thousands of dollars every year, for the lack of scientific organisation of that service. What have we got. A Board of Health charged with the superintending of all the health problems of this city. This is the only body in connection with health that has a medical man on it. He is kept as busy as he possibly can, with bacteriological cases from the hospitals. We have a Board of Lunacy commissioners with no power whatever to interfere in the management of the Lunatic Asylum. We have got all these bodies and yet no controlling general body, to look after the maintenance and management of these institutions, and yet we are surprised that we don't get the value for the expenditure in connection with these services. Now if the Prime Minister wants to tackle these problems in a way that will prevent the exploiting of the funds by the medical doctors he will have a chance to do something if he falls in with the suggestion that was made at the Doctors' Convention last year. It is this, that there is no way to get economic management of the public medical health institutions except by having some responsible official to look after these institutions. That does not involve a political appointment, it does not mean an elected member of this House if you do not want it. But it certainly demands such a man at the head of these institutions. The burden is not only great but is on the increase. You will say to me, sir, that I am asking for another salary to be created. But that is not the point. You have not anybody responsible for these expenditures now. A man responsible for these expenditures can save his salary, no matter what it is. Even if it is $10,000, he can save his salary ten times over.

And that brings me along to the consideration of another department of the Government. I refer to the railroad. An institution that is costing this country from a quarter of a million to one and a half millions to run annually. Last year you had a capital expenditure of one and a half millions. Who is responsible for that? You have not got a practical business man in charge of that railroad. You have got a gentleman in charge of that railroad who is a first class man from the standpoint of general business needs. But he is not a practical railroad man. There is no co-relation between the outside and the inside affairs. There is no effort made to create an intimate touch as between headquarters and the man on the move. You have got to the position where the man on the outside finds that it is no use for him to take any interest in the affairs of the railroad because when promotion comes it is going to come to the gentleman in St. John's who moves up a step according as the man above him or is promoted or gets out. To maintain discipline and efficiency and loyalty in a department of that size you must have a practical man at the head of that Department and answerable to the House. Another new salary you will say. Granted. But if the $4,000 salary is going to save you ten times the amount or more in efficiency and reduction, why not go to it. The outcry that will be made against you will be only temporary. Because after a short while you will be in a position to show the advantages from the undertaking. What is said to-day is forgotten to-morrow, but what you do to-day will continue through a great many to-morrows. And you will have your severest criticis rise up before long to call you blessed for the benefits that you have bestowed on them.

While we are on this subject I want to consider a little more about the department of Public Charities. And you know that that Department spends 11 p.c. of the total expenditure of the colony, as against eight p.c. for education. Now let us consider this department not this time to find fault with the indiscriminate giving out of charity, but to discover for ourselves what showing is being made with the money which we are voting year by year to be spent on that department. You have in this country ninety relieving officers. These officers have charge of the expenditure both in permanent and casual matters of $217,000. Now here is why I object to the system by which this relief is being granted. In the first place it cannot be such that the relief that is granted is always going to the deserving cases for the reason that firstly the appointment of your relieving officers is political and naturally they are going to do all they can to please the people who put them in their positions. In the second place they are local men, men who are not anxious to be at outs with their neighbours. They are prepared very often to O.K. demands for relief so that they may keep in good friends with their associates.

The Auditor General makes the complaint in his report this year that the expenditure of public money for purposes of charity through the department of public charities have become so outrageous that he considers that there should be a departure from this system, and that instead of the present system there should be inspectors appointed; men who can be called in to investigate and consider the cases of application for relief, and men who are calculated to get down and consider these applications on their own merits and on that basis alone. You have enough already voted in respect to the salaries for these relieving officers to pay two or three efficient inspectors. Competent men who should be placed outside the realm of politics, men of ability and independence.

Now take the case of another institution that could be made more selfsupporting, than it is at the present time. The penitentiary. There is an institution that is costing over thirty thousand dollars a year to maintain; an institution in respect to the revenue producing possibilities of which the Auditor has some remarks to make. He refers to the broom department of that institution:

(Reads)

That is taken from the Auditor General's report. I think as a general principle where a public institution or a group of such institutions by co-operative management and arrangement can be made self-supporting they should be made so. I don't say that the products of these institutions should be put in the open market in competition with legitimate trade. But where you can produce an article in one institution that can be used in another institution, and thereby you are enabled to reduce expenditure on this department, it should be done. The other system of supplying public institutions is clearly the wrong sort of thing that should obtain in a country that is as little blessed with finance as we are to-day. You have the Board of Works down there presiding over the granting of supplies in respect to certain institutions, and three men down there last year voted themselves, or got their associates to vote themselves or their firms $80,000. A small bunch of druggists got another $28,000 out of the Government institutions. I am of the opinion that the contract system should be used wherever possible in the matter of purchasing supplies, and monthly price lists should be furnished to the heads of all the departments. This is what the Auditor General says:

(Reads)

I take it that his remarks lend point to what I have said in reference to the expenditure or otherwise of public institutions in this city. And before I pass on from that so that they may not feel that I have been neglecting them, let me congratulate the firms of lawyers in this city that last year shared $12,000 between them. I was afraid that they might feel they were neglected after what the Medical Profession got out of it.

Now Mr. Speaker, when I got on my feet I did not think that I would be anything like this length of time discussing the various items in the Speech from the Throne. But I feel that because of the fact that I come from a fishing district that I cannot close without some more or less extended reference to the fisheries, around which the whole interest of Fortune Bay centres, and which is also the staple industry of this country, that possibly something maye be done of a remedial nature in connection therewith. Do you know, Sir, that it appears to me, Newfoundlanders generally are losing sight, to a great extent, of the dignity and stability of our fishing industry? A great many people seem to have got the impression that it is anything but dignified to do anything that belongs to the fishing classes. Our children are being educated to-day under a false system that leaves them to get away from the fishing boats and they look for those soft jobs, particularly jobs in the Government. I think there is something wrong about all that. You had a similar movement in Canada and the United States during the last few years in respect to agricultural pursuits. Young men and young women deserted the farms and went to the cities looking for easy jobs, and the position became so intolerable within those cities with respect to the surplus of labor that educationalists of Canada and the States introduced a system by turning the young people into food producers. The movement was successful and it had the effect of driving the young people from the cities back to the farms. You want to do something of that sort for the people of this country. Here you have an educational system under which all reference to fisheries is avoided and where you seek to turn the children from the occupation to which they are adapted to give service, and very necessary service, to other occupations which do not require much energy. I am firmly convinced that, if your Department of Education instructed the children within the schools respecting the dignity of manual labor, whether it be fishing, pick and shovel or anything else, to get away from this false shame that prevails throughout the country, it must do a tremendous amount of benefit. After all, what is the position to-day with respect to the fisheries generally? The whole world is turning to-day to the fisheries in order to obtain foodstuffs for its ever-increasing population. You have to-day in all countries something like one billion dollars worth of food fishes produced and you have in England, Japan, United States and Canada an annual production of one hundred million dollars worth of fish foods produced. You have in our own country a condition under which the products of fish foods constitute seven-eighths of the value of your exports. You have an industry here giving employment to about twenty thousand workers and a living to the bulk of your population. Surely then an industry of such relative importance deserves the utmost consideration of the Government, and surely an industry upon which this country depends to a very large extent and an industry from which people get their means of livelihood and which have been and should be to-day above all others in every way possible. Yet you have a position to-day in which your fishermen are deserting the fisheries by thousands. We had an answer from the Colonial Secretary to a question asked for by Mr. Scammel tabled the other day to the effect that within a year you had nine thousand people gone out of the country. It is true that some of them came back again. But is it not the case that thousands of Newfoundlanders have gone abroad to reside permanently to get their living abroad, and is it not true that thousands are leaving the fisheries, their ordinary avocations, every year and going to Canada and the States and who come home during the Christmas season to spend a holiday and who go back again to earn their living abroad? There is the unfortunate position and where is your Government. You have men who could produce things economically and to the utmost value to Newfoundland, but because of no encouragement given to them in their native land they are mere transient residents here and they are of more value to Canada and the United States and Newfoundland is the loser. I know that the Prime Minister is as interested in this subject as anybody can possibly be; for it is a fact that, while the common men engaged in the fisheries have failed to make a living here and were forced by thousands to seek a livelihood elsewhere, the Prime Minister and numerous other members of fish exporting firms, have had losses to meet in respect to the exportation of fish. I was very much interested the other day in reading a list of the number of fish exporting firms that had gone out of business, firms that had been destroyed by outfitting for the fishery during the past thirty or forty years. There were some fifty or sixty in the list and those were men who had a common cause in the fisheries with the fishermen of the country, and men who had taken a losing gamble on the fisheries and eventually were driven out of business. Well what is the trouble with the fisheries then? Why is it that our own fishermen fail to get a living from the fisheries and why is it that our business men fail to get the ordinary profits out of the fisheries sufficient to keep their businesses running? The people to whom the fish is consigned to in the markets do not have that experience. The buyers of our fish abroad have made large fortunes out of our Newfoundland fish. Outsiders have profited from our business and are still piling up great fortunes therefrom, while our fishermen and our business people are impoverished. What is wrong with the situation? Why is it that our people, the producers of that commodity, get nothing but the skimmed milk out of the profits of that business and the outsiders get all the cream? In the first place the fisheries have not been given that due consideration, that assistance and that encouragement that were particularly promised them by the Prime Minister in his Manifesto of 1924; and in which Manifesto the Prime Minister also referred to making Newfoundland fisheries a "Paradise"—it is Paradise lost today. If the Prime Minister thought conditions under which the fisheries were carried on were so bad, as presented by him then, they are infinitely worse to-day, because the cost of Government has increased, because taxation has increased to a large extent and because the extra burdens imposed upon the people have become so great. You have had inaugurated since this Government came into power three or four undertakings that mean increased taxation to the amount of about $400,000.00 and two of them you must put in the problematical class as far as general benefits from them are concerned. You have the Highroads Commission which spent two and a quarter million dollars on tourist roads and you have the Dry Dock on which you spent in the neighbourhood of two million dollars. You have also spent and are going on spending on Capital Account on your railroad and every dollar you spent on these things increases the public debt and inevitably increases taxation on the ordinary men in the country of whom the fishermen are in the majority. I really cannot understand, except on one basis of explanation, how the Government ever could or ever can justify that Highroads expenditure. It has been said that the expenditure on the railroad ,the expenditure on the Highroads and the undertakings in connection with the new hotel were all designed towards one end and that was the development of the tourist traffic. Take the position that has actually developed through the expenditure of all that money. You spent two and a quarter million dollars on Highroads, mostly on this side of the Island. You have placed on the Cabot Straits a new steamer, the "Caribou," a ship that cost a half million dollars and a ship that was especially designed for the tourist traffic and with accommodation for carrying motor cars to that section of the country where you have no motor roads. Your system, in other words, does not feed your tourist traffic. Then you have a big hotel that cost a million dollars. It is true you got the hotel going in the eastern part of St. John's, but beyond that there is absolutely no accommodation for the sort of tourist that you want to arrive in this country and remain here to spend his money. There is no system about the thing. There has been a steady expenditure of money. If you had a headquarters hotel here such as proposed under the original scheme and subsidiary hotels at the various fishing places and suitable tourist resorts you could have constructed your highroads leading to them. Now we have nothing of the kind. We have nothing beyond the accommodation at the hotel to suit tourists, to suit sportsmen and those who come here for rest and diversion away from a city. With these expenditures and with increased taxation you have had additional burdens imposed upon the fishermen and they are disheartened and the fisheries are languishing. I am not a bit surprised that in view of this radical departure of the Prime Minister from the program as outlined in his manifesto in respect of the fisheries I am not a little bit surprised that some of his party found it necessary to sever their connections with him. I know that representing a fishing district myself with such a change of face on the part of a leader I would feel that there would be nothing left for me but to keep faith with my constituents by putting up a protest of that kind. Other men connected with the Government also felt it incumbent upon them to protest against the dock, highroads and other expenditures and they were invited to go out. I don't see what else they could have done. I don't see what the representatives of any outport district could do representing fishing interests, but put up a protest of that nature. So, we are in a position that the fishermen are languishing and suffering because of taxes and increased burdens imposed upon them, and because so many industries in the country can be described as industries that are parasites on the fisheries of the country. Where we take part in the establishment of large industries and where we look forward to the development of the Gander industry and that of the mining industry around Buchan's Mine, and we think of the other industries that may be opening up, isn't it a fact that we have got to face the position that capitalists can only be induced to come here and make expenditures here at the ultimate expense of the fisheries of the country. We have got to give free concessions of one sort and another, duty concessions, and guarantees, and ultimately I say it imposes a further intolerable burden on the fishermen of the country. Well then, why instead of concentrating on those things, why not concentrate somewhat on the fisheries of the country. In reference to your high roads policy I say that there may be one explanation of your expenditure on the dock and on high roads that would fit the case, and that is, the idea that it was necessary to look after employment to some extent and that these things were undertaken really and truly to relieve; they were glorified by the names of high-roads and tourist and dock facilities policies and in truth beneath it was the necessity of relieving so that the Government had to embark on it, and instead of facing facts they simply camouflaged their actions in that way. If that is so it is alright. If it is so admit it. If the Government would admit it a great deal said of an unkind nature would have not been said. You have not admitted it but at any rate it may be offered to you as an easy way out of an awkward position.

What are you going to do to revive the fisheries of this country? One thing that might be done is make some effort to regain the hold we have lost on some of our old markets. We have in Brazil a market that took 400,000 quintals of fish annually and in 1925 took 135,000 and in 1926 212,000. We have been frozen out there by competition. We have had the same sort of experience in markets like Italy; competitors putting up fish either different or imitation article that appeals more to the people there than our own article and unless we find the demands of those people and meet them and unless some other effort is made to regain our old hold and lost position that market is going to slip away from us like other markets.

It has been said that there is not much use in looking for new markets in respect of dry salt cod fish. Perhaps that is right. I read a statement of a Canadian fish expert Mr.———— ————that as far as the worlds markets are concerned all the salt dry cod fish that can possibly be disposed of was being done so on the markets that were open. He made a statement that even in the West Indies where the colored population has become possessed of more cash than it used to be possessed of, that they are turning away from the salt codfish and are using the fresh article in frozen form or canned form instead. He advised the export of that form of fish frozen or flaked ,and he said that it was necessary to produce and provide for the consumer the best possible article that could be given him. If the consumer were satisfied at the markets the necessary steps would have been taken to hold the markets and avail themselves of any increase that might offer. It has been stated that in respect to S. Africa there is a feeling that Newfoundland might export there and exploit that market now only being availed of by the Norwegians and Scotch; the Argentine Republic. But there is this much about new markets as well as old markets that unless our people and business men are prepared to adjust themselves and adopt the methods to prepare the particular kind of fish needed by these people we cannot hope to make any progress in business in the way of increasing the markets for our fish.

I may make reference to Mr. Davies going to Wembley. He submitted a report with regard to his experiences at Wembley and he said in reference to inquiries regarding our fishing industries that he could discover no interest in regard to the ordinary salt fish but that the fish products that people were interested in were fish put up in cartons, flaked fish and boneless fish; that people from South Africa were interested in these products; that people from Africa had called attention to the fact that there was quite a colored population likely to be interested in a large supply of dry salt cod fish; one of the countries Nigeria has a population of eight or ten million and Norway was already sending large shipments of dry salt cod there. Surely these are opportunities that Newfoundland might avail of.

The question as to whether or not we improve the position of our fisheries is going to depend also on whether we improve the quality of fish we offer to our customers. All exporters and those who consume the fish seem always to say that Newfoundland has the best quality of fish but very few are prepared to say that Newfoundland makes the utmost use of the outstanding natural qualities of the fish or that Newfoundland cures it and makes it most attractive to the people consuming the fish in different countries. A good many objections have been made to a general movement towards outstanding improvements of our codfish. I think we can be assured by reference to what has happened in countries that have adopted standardization in the cure of codfish. One instance that appears to my mind is Iceland. Ten years ago they had a catch of 250,00 quintals and about that time they adopted a system of standardization of cure of fish. They introduced a fish inspection allowing no fish to be exported that did not come up to standard and they sent inspectors to the markets to discover just what these markets wanted; how to prepare it and to put it up. Since then, Iceland has been going ahead by leaps and bounds and they are now our chief competitor in these old markets. Even Canada has been considering methods to hold their previous position and enhance the value of their fisheries productions. I saw the other day a statement of standards submitted to the various provinces and it contained a much more elaborate list of standards than we ever consider here.

This points cut that Canada has been struck by the necessity for the improvement of the standard of the cure of salt cod. We seem, however, to be doing practically nothing because it appears to be impossible to get those interested in trade those people concerned to agree on the questions. It doesn't seem to be possible to establish a common point of operations as between the various firms which handle the exporting of our codfish to the markets. We talk about our competition in the foreign markets; what we have to be up against through foreign competition is as nothing to local competition as between the various fish exporters who instead of working together are working in their own interests.

If you want proof of the value of standardization consider what has happened in the case of the local cod liver oil There is an official inspection of every gallon that you have brought here and to-day our cod liver oil is worth more than any other in the world. Then again you will find that the local fish cannot command the same price as the Norweigan can.

If we could produce such results in the markets for cod liver oil why not try it on fish? It might not be easy but still where the fish is shipped in such bulk there should be some ways and means of devising and employing some inspection of fish, to the advantage of fishermen and exporter alike.

I have been speaking entirely on the fisheries in respect of our staple industry and product but there is another aspect of the fisheries that should receive the earnest and immediate consideration of the Government of today or any Government that may be in power.

In the export of fish we are on the verge of a possible industry. At the present time we are preparing our fish for the poorer classes of Europe and South America at the lowest possible prices. This fresh fish trade may prove more important to the country than the salt fish has ever been. That was the experience of Canada. Thirty or forty years ago the main produce was cod fish now the production of fresh fish, salmon, smelts, and even caplin, far and away exceeds the production of salt cod fish.

Last year there was tabled in this House a report from a gentleman, Mr. Chambers, who came down here from British Columbia for the purpose of ascertaining whether we would be able to carry on a salmon exporting industry. He was explicit in stating that we had the right kind of salmon and the quantity of salmon to justify production of salmon. He states that from a river like the Salmonier River we could produce forty thousand cases annually. In the district of Mr. Power the salmon industry might be made of the utmost importance to the country. Here could be produced every year something like twenty to thirty thousand tons of salmon which could be exported. This matter is worthy of the careful consideration of this House, because as we have seen Canada made such a success of it financially and in every other way, so we might be able to do the same and it would be something worth while on behalf of the fisheries and would help along the salt fish industry as well. It would increase the advantages of the fishery and improve the value of the fishery generally for the people of this country.

There are other aspects of the subject of the fisheries that might be gone into, such as general management and certain fishery conditions, but I feel that I have kept the House already overlong and thank the members for their kind attention.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Speaker, although this subject of the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne has been well handled by my colleagues there are a few particulars which I wish to make that I could not speak about on opening day.

I want to speak first on the fisheries as that should be the main topic of this House of Assembly at every session of the Legislature.

We are all at the present time dependant more or less on the fisheries. We have other avenues of employment but the main industry and our main revenue comes from the fishery and that should be the most important topic for discussion on the floors of this Legislature at every session.

The fishery question has been handled very well by some of the members of this side of the House, particularly by Mr. Scammell, the member for St. Barbe and by Dr. Mosdell, member for Fortune Bay.

Now, I want to give a little explanation. During the last session of the House we urged upon the Government the necessity of giving more attention to the fisheries and if necessary introduce a fish cull, and in the dying hours of the session it was proposed that a commission be formed to go into the fishery matters.

The commission was appointed of which I was one and so was Mr. Scammell, the member for St. Barbe. I was prepared to do anything I possibly could to give any assistance that I could command to assist the fisheries but to my surprise after the House closed I found upon looking through the "Newfoundland Gazette" that I had been classed as a Commissioner of the Government and not wishing at that time to hold any Government position I declined to take any part on the Commission and resigned. I offer that as an explanation as the Prime Minister may have something to say in connection with this matter.

Although Dr. Mosdell is not a fish exporter or a fisherman he has handled the subject very well indeed and often an outsider can see the mistakes of the game better than the person who is in the game. He has made reference to the fresh fish industry. The Prime Minister has often stated in this house and so have other members that we have never offered anything practical and I would suggest now to the Prime Minister, that in view of the present situation, his Government encourage a fresh fish industry and if necessary pay a bonus on fresh fish that is exported, particularly fish that are of very little commercial value such as smelts, soles and other fish, and even herring.

Now the fishery report which I received yesterday tells us that the export of salt herring in barrels was ten thousand barrels less in 1926 than in 1925—a falling off of ten thousand barrels. It must be evident to everyone that the herring industry is a dying one and certainly must be from the report which shows such a great falling off, in a comparatively small output of ten thousand barrels and this matter should be brought to the attention of the Prime Minister and he should investigate and see what the trouble is. Since the Government came into power the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has introduced some fishery rules which have greatly affected the herring industry. They are probably justifiable from his standpoint but they are bad for the herring industry. I claim and I said so at first, that the inspection is altogether too rigid. Most of the sale of herring in this country is caught in the spring of the year when the herring are spawning and are in very poor condition and are put up particularly for West Indian markets. There is very little difference in the herring and in the northern part of the Island, particularly in Green Bay, the fishermen during the winter months make herring barrels and in the spring of the year when the herring strike the coast they put out their nets and catch the herring and put them into barrels. There is only little cost which is for salt and that is not very much,

They produce a commodity that has been a source of revenue to the people of Green Bay especially during the Spring. A law was introduced that every fisherman who wanted to put up herrings had to obtain a license from the Government and had to have a branding iron. When it is considered that these people live around the bays of Newfoundland, and the people of one section scarcely come into contact with anyone except those in the immediate vicinity, the fact of caling upon those peope to get a license is going to have the effect of frightening them away from the industry altogether. Then again the fishermen used to utilise their hard-wood beef and pork barrels to pack their herring in. Now the Government has one law, sir, which says that these herrings should not be exported in hardwood barrels such as are used for beef and pork. To the man who can gather up his herring in those barrels it means perhaps an increase in his income of $20 or $30. These things have been introduced by the Government and it has a much greater effect on the herring industry than can be imagined. My opinion is that a great deal of the reasons for the falling off to the extent of 10,000 barrels of split herring in this country for export is on account of that. Some of the reasons for the falling off I must admit is on account of the duty placed on herring coming into the United States on account of the tariff. It is also due to the preferential tariff enjoyed by Canada with the West Indies, which we Newfoundlanders do not enjoy. Now the Prime Minister told us a few days ago that he and those in his Government had made some effort to get the tariff in the United States taken off in reference to Newfoundland or at least to get it reduced. But I gather from his remarks that apparently he has given up the case as hopeless.

Now I think that the Prime Minister should still keep on trying to get some returns from the United States, and get something working that will be effective in getting the United States to reduce the tariff on herring and codfish going into that country. There are many things that we could reciprocate. Many years ago there were large shipments of fresh and split herring from Newfoundland, particularly from Fortune Bay. The schooners came down there in the fall of the year, large numbers of them. They brought down American gold and paid it out for the herring. It was really a warfare for the purchase of herring around Bay St. George and Fortune Bay years ago. This has somehow fallen off, and we can also offer to the United States fishermen coming into this country better harbor and port regulations, that would induce them to come here. Then there is a large quantity of imports and food stuffs which we receive annually from the United States, and I am sure that if we persisted, eventually, they would come to some understanding whereby Newfoundland would reap the benefit. We are also at a loss and up against a strong wall by the preferential tariff that Canada has with the West Indies, under the Canada-West Indies agreement. I have now before me a bill that was brought into the House of Assembly at Jamaica, and no doubt it makes Mr. Puddester feel good to see how large that Bill is. In this bill enacted by the legislature of Jamaica, the duties on fish are given and they are as follows.

(Reads)

This is a great drawback to the fishermen of Newfoundland in respect to the shipments of fish from this country. Now this Canada agreement was put into force two years ago, but under certain conditions, that certain shipping connections had to be furnished by Canada to the West Indies. But up to the present I don't think that the steam service is in operation.

Still Canada enjoys the preferential tariff. It should be one of the foremost things of the Government, even the Prime Minister himself or some one in his Government to see if they cannot make some kind of arrangement with the West Indies. If necessary spend some money by sending some capable man to the West Indies and the United States to see if something cannot be done because it would mean so very much to us at the present time, when we are going through a period of declining fisheries and declining country. Newfoundland was never in such a condition financially as she is at the present time. I am not now referring to the revenue and the finance department. I am referring to the general conditions in Newfoundland, in every department to-day. The fishermen have not been able to catch sufficient codfish to live. They have been unable to pay their accounts and therefore the merchants in the outports have had to suffer. The merchants themselves during the past two years have taken fish from their dealers which they have had to sell at a price less than they paid for it, and used up their surplus. The condition of Newfoundland to-day is a great deal worse than a great many people think. The question is what can be done to improve it. Is there anything that can be done. The Government must foster the fisheries in some way. Every country fosters the industry that looks to be a dying industry. Anything that cannot support itself the Government takes hold of it and helps it out. Take the fisheries of France for example. These fisheries of France have been fostered by the French Government for years. They pay a bounty sufficient to keep the fishermen at the industry. This year ninety craft left St. Malo to fish on the Grand Banks, and in other waters around Newfoundland. The Government of this country got to make it their business just as the Government of France is looking after the codfish. The fisheries of Newfoundland means more than any industry that I know of to the future of this country. The population is so small and so scattered that we must of necessity look after the fishing industry. If we encourage the development it is going to take some time before the development is going to take place. What we must do now is to look after the fishing industry no matter what it costs. It would have been far better if the Government had spent that two million and a half dollars that they spent on the high roads, in fostering the fisheries of Newfoundland.

Now some time ago in this House a discussion took place in reference to the estate of the late Sir Robert Bond which was willed to Newfoundland, and the Prime Minister brought the matter before this House with the intion of getting its opinion as to whether it should make an outlay of a certain amount of money in order to lay out that estate as a model farm or let it go to the trustees to be sold. My opinion was expressed at that time that we should utilize that farm and if necessary make it a school of instruction for agriculture. It is all very well to say that model farms have been started in this country and they have been a failure. Perhaps this one will not be a failure, and if the expense of that is small, then I say we ought to have schools of agriculture and also of fisheries. I have come round now to a school of fisheries. In Norway they have schools of fisheries and of seamanship; in Holland they have some; and in Halifax, Nova Scotia, our next door neighbours, they have a school in which there were 52 pupils attending a few months ago. During the winter months they were there, learning everything in connection with fisheries. They are taught not just how to split a fish and a few main principles, but numerous things in connection with the fisheries. They a e taught such matters as are connected with refrigerating and canning and things like that as well. The people who attended that school were not all young men either. They were men ranging in age from eighteen to fifty, who go there to learn and get instructions in reference to the fisheries in a school of fisheries under Mr. ————. I say if we can start something, a school for agriculture or fisheries we should do that. Young men are leaving the country because they don't want to prosecute the fisheries. The reason is they don't want to take schooners down on the Labrador like their fathers did and come back and not be able to make the two ends meet. We should try to have these men stay home and be instructed in preparing fresh fish. That is the coming industry in Newfoundland as well as elsewhere, and the Government should immediately take some steps to encourage the packing and export of fresh fish. In the Speech from the Throne delivered by His Excellency on opening day, there was nothing whatever said about the hardship of taxation. Now, we all know, the people sitting in this House as well as those outside, that at this moment this country is bleeding in every limb from the burdens imposed upon it by the p esent Government by taxation. If the present load upon the people of this country who prosecute the fisheries is increased, matters will get worse. Expenditure at the present time is staggering, and taxes have risen to so extravagant a figure that the resources of the country cannot stand it. Something has to be done, and there is only one thing, and this is to foster the fisheries and cut down expenditure. There must be a merciless cutting of expenditure in this country if we are going to make a success of things. At the present time the country is existing by death and disease absolutely. It would not get along at all if the people did not die. Last year we got $150,000 out of death duties and got $350,000 out of rum, and over $400,000 out of duty that was paid to the Government by the Liquor Department. That is over $900,000, one-tenth of our revenue that is received at the present time, from death and disease. Where would we be only for these two incomes. The country, financially, is as bad as it can possibly be, and I am very sorry to have to make that statement upon the floors of the House of Assembly. Now, as I said before, we have to foster the fisheries, and if necessary to have to pay a bonus on fresh fish, if we want to keep the industry alive. Last year the total exports of the Colony was $27,563,213, out of which the fisheries produced $14,000,000; so that is another reason why we should use every possible effort to encourage the fisheries. You are expending money which the country can ill afford. The Government, I see, propose to re-rail another part of the railway at a cost of $1,000,000 to this country, and where is that money coming from unless we borrow it. It is all very well to have the railway fixed and to have new rails laid down from here to Port aux Basques, but we must cut our garment according to our cloth and expenditures of that kind must not go on. If the Prime Minister, when he came in to power in this country had taken the same attitude as the Mayor of St. John's when he was elected five or six years ago and said we would spend our income and that is all, Newfoundland would be in a much better position to-day than it is, and instead of going out and borrowing eleven and a half millions and spending it and squandering a lot of it and wasting a lot of it and taxing the people from $350,000 to $600,000 annually in interest, had said we would live within our income, then the Prime Minister would have been Prime Minister of this country for the rest of his life. The railway system has to be changed, and while we need have it, perhaps, re-railed, we cannot afford going in to any such expenditures because it is all, after all, at the expense of the fisheries. One of the things that affects the value of our fishery at the present time is that the counries or the foreign markets where the fish is sold, that we have as customers for our fish, are mostly bankrupt countries, and that is another reason why the fishery should be fostered on this end.

On motion the debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to Monday, June 6th, 1927, at 3 o'clock.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, June 6th, 1927.

The House met a three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of quesion.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. HICKMAN — At the adjournment of the Debate I was talking on the fisheries and showing the importance of fostering the fisheries on this end on account of the countries with which we trade being more or less in financial troubles or with exchange so low that they are unable to purchase this and other commodities at a reasonable price. To prove what I am saying I will give the rates of currency of the different countries prior to the Great War and at the present time. In Italy before the War the working gold basis was 25 lire to the £ sterling now it takes 90 lire: Our salt fish is sold on the other side in sterling and half the difference in exchange makes it three times as much so that the customer has to find three and a half times as much of the currency to buy a quintal of fish than when the war started. If a quintal during the War cost $8.00 it would now be worth in the vicinity of $30.00. The Bank rate in Italy at the present time is about 7%. In Greece pre War working gold basis was twenty-five drachmas to the £ and now 396. to the £ and the bank rate in Greece is 11%. In Italy the currency is increasing in value because of the present administration or the present Prime Minister at Italy having started out with an effort to make Italy a self supporting country. So there is no advantage from the increasing rate of exchange in that country. In Spain the rate of exchange was 24 escyedis to the pound now it is twenty-seven and a half. And the Bank rate is 5%. Spain was not effected very much by the War. In Portugal pre war working gold basis was five shillings five pence halfpenny to the escuedo which is worth two pence halfpenny. In our country where it was worth $1.35 it is now only worth five cents. That shows the great difference in the cost of goods imported into these countries whether fish or any other goods and for that reason it is almost impossible for exchange to improve in these.

In reference to the new customers for salt fish. Take for instance the cargo of fish that was taken by the "Escasoni" a few years ago and sold to the Roumanian Government. According to reports that came back that fish was destroyed on account of those people not knowing how to cook it. Mr. Hepburn went over at that time from here and from the way he saw the fish being cooked the people were not accustomed to salt fish. In one particular case he saw people trying to fry it in a pan. The result was that the fish was unpalatable and was not consumed.

I referred on Thursday last to the West India agreement and the Fordney Tariff and showed how necessary it was for the Government to take greater interest in those agreements. In Canada the West India agreement was talked about for a long time, and when the Prime Minister and other delegates were in Canada a few years ago in connection with the Labrador Boundary he took the matter up, so he reported on his return here, but I would be interested to know if he followed that up because the West India Agreement did not come into effect until May 1st, this year, and there was ample time for an effort to be made to try and get Newfoundland included in that agreement of Canada. This Treaty is now open to effect Bermuda, Jamaica, Trinidad, Tobago and several other West India places and all the other West Indies will be included in the near future. I read for the information of the House a copy of a Bill that was introduced in the Jamaica Legislature putting Canada under the preferential tariff, which was fifty per cent of the ordinary tariff other countries had to pay. Canada for a long time has been engaged fostering her trade with the West Indies. As far back as 1903 Hon. W. S. Fielding made a Treaty with the West Indies pointing out the importance of an outlet for fish and other products of Canada. In 1900 the trade between Canada and the West Indies amounted to two and a half millions of dollars. In 1925 the trade between these countries had increased to thirty-seven millions of dollars. A Treaty introduced by Hon. W. S. Fielding, Minister of Finance, placed a duty upon German sugar of 33⅓ per cent. Canada at that time used to receive a large quantity of raw sugar from Germany. The result of putting on that 33⅓ per cent. diverted the purchasers of Canada to the West Indies and that helped to increase the trade between Canada and the West Indies from two and a half millions of dollars to thirty-seven millions. Canada also had a duty upon bananas coming into that country through the United States. There are four and a half million dollars worth of bananas consumed in Canada each year and most of that amount had been coming from the United States, but Canada has now taken off the duty for direct importation, and, perhaps, that might have been more or less influential in putting on the Fordney Tariff and including Newfoundland as well as Canada. While we are an independent colony, at the same time a great many people in the United States yet look upon Canada as a part of Newfoundland, and linked up with Newfoundland. Even that opinion is held in the Senate. I remember last year in Detroit I was sitting at a table with some twelve or fifteen people and not one of them would believe that Newfoundland was not a part of Canada until I explained to them our position. Canada in this West India Agreement has ceded to the West Indies preferential duties on most of their commodities, such as sugar, cocoa, coffee, bananas, ginger, spices, rum, $2.00 per gallon, Angoslor $5.00 per gallon, bitters and other articles. I pointed out here last year that it would be no hardship on Nfld. to give preference to rum, particularly on rum coming from Jamaica, if we are to get any benefits by having a preferential tariff on our fish going in those markets. It would be no hardship whatever to Newfoundland to place rum on the free list or give them the same as Canada, namely, two dollars per gallon preference.

After all a great deal of the rum that comes here is watered, the water is cheap and the profits would be made out of the sale instead of through the Customs. If we can gain anything by that, I think the matter would be well worth taking up. Then again, take the matter of fresh fruits that are coming from the West Indies into this country. These are important articles of diet, and we would be doing well here if we put certain kinds of fresh fruits on the free list the same as we did with Spain a few years ago and in which we were included. The West Indies ceded to Canada preferential tariff on flour, cordage, lumber, confectionery, butter, cheese etc. Nearly every one of these commodities could be had in Newfoundland as they are manufactured here. There is no reason in the world why we could not get some of them if we started out. We produce now some of those commodities and they could be sold to the West Indies if we had a preferential tariff. I am giving these points to show the great necessity there is for fostering the fisheries in this country. Something has to be done on this, and because we cannot expect anything from the other end in the way of improvement in the very near future.

In reference to Agriculture, a great deal of discussion took place here, on the farm that the late Sir Robert Bond bequeathed to the Newfoundland Government, although nothing has come out of that discussion thus far. At that time I was in favor of taking over the farm, but to-day I am stronger than ever of taking it over to run, as I belive much good will come out of it, particularly if it is linked up with a Memorial College or something of that sort, and provided it gets proper oversight. The products of this country, principally turnips and potatoes, are to be had in large quantities, but it is no use producing them unless the demand is good for them; and it is no use for a man in Trinity Bay, for instance, to produce a large quantity of potatoes, selling fifty barrels say, and have to put the remainder in his cellar in the Fall of the year and find them all decayed in the Spring. There has to be some encouragement given for farmers just as there has for the fishery. We should have in St. John's warehouses with a right temperature to keep vegetables, and such warehouses could be built out of the money that is wasted on snow-shovelling and stone-breaking.

Every year I think that the Government should take the matter of building about a half dozen warehouses into their serious consideration for a variety of reasons. People who are out of work could get employment and besides the Government would have something to show for the money expended. Besides vegetables, eggs, poultry and everything of that kind could be raised in this country in large quantities and kept in warehouses all the year round. A great quantity of these foodstuffs are imported into this country and there is no necessity for it because I believe all our requirements can be obtained in the country Now this country is particularly adaptable to hog raising. A hog is an animal that lives on fodder, clover, barley, oats and things like that, so that hog raising could be carried on extensively in this country. The statistics of Quebec show that a 200-pound hog costs $8.50, and at the present time there are one million pigs in Quebec. Sheep raising could also be done along this coast the same as in other countries where the climate is even a great deal colder than our own. Sheep raising is done on a large scale in the Falkland Islands, and in Batavia and other foreign countries. The late Mr. H. Smith, one time manager of the Knitting Mills here, stated that Newfoundland was a typical sheep raising country and it could be made a profitable industry here. Now the Government could arrange the tariffs to give further protection for our vegetables and the other products of our own country. The Prime Minister stated that the members of this side of the House criticised everything and offered no suggestions. Well I would now suggest to the Government to build a centrally located cold storage for vegetables out of the next money that is handed out for relief work. Put the Long Bride to the west of the Railway Station and dredge the harbour to where the present cold storage plant is and then have your farm products as well as you fish products in cold storage. In Canada they have certain methods for chicken raising as they grow up, and outside of Montreal they have the raising of poultry down to a science. Ducks are killed when they are ten weeks old because they find that is the age when it is most profitable to kill a duck. After that age it is found not so profitable. The same applies to chicken. I heard that when the Prime Minister was in England attending the Imperial Conference he offered a blank cheque for Newfoundland. I presume that is why England wanted us. But I do not think that everybody in this country would be satisfied to give England or any other country a blank cheque, and no doubt they would all like to see the cheque and see what Government apparently have been running their business their own way without consulting the Executive Government or the Prime Minister. The Auditor General in his report, tabled a few days ago, referring to the Marine and Fisheries Department, states: "As far as the Marine and Fisheries Department is concerned the rule is honoured in the breach more than in observance." That is a wide statement for the Auditor General to make for the record of the House and for the Government. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries has held the office up for a number of weeks by going to the sealfishery and going with the consent of the Prime Minister who considered it was more in the interests of the country to have him go to the sealfishery than it was to have outport members, who are also connected with fisheries, sit here in the summer time when the codfishery is going on and neglecting their own business. I think that, in view of the statement of the Prime Minister in the past, the House should have been opened at the proper time and have the business put through instead of holding up the House for the convenience of his own party. A few days ago accounting were asked by an Opposition member for material given out on the Labrador a year ago to people who had lost property. We find that the accounts are not in any of the Government offices, and, as far as we know the Purser of the Labrador steamer is the only person who knows anything about the disposition of the material which the Government of this colony paid for. Now we were very much surprised also to hear that the members of the Highroads Commission received last year one thousand dollars each for their services last year. I am not saying that the members of that Commission or of any other Commission should not be remunerated for their work, but the Prime Minister eulogized at one time in this House and also at a luncheon of the Highroads Commission by saying that he had discovered three Rotarians who would gladly give their services for nothing and he led the country to believe that these gentlemen were doing the work for nothing, and now we find that they were each paid one thousand dollars for last year's work. If they were to be paid, why not have arranged for their remuneration, instead of announcing to the House and to the country generally that these men were working for nothing. The same applies to the new hotel. The Prime Minister told us in the House two years ago that his Government would not guarantee interest on bonds for the construction of the hotel and a few months afterwards he comes in and advocates a guaranteed interest of six per cent. on the bonds. Why were we not told by the Prime Minister in the first instance that it was the intention of the Government to guarantee the interest on the bonds. I think this side of the House would have sanctioned it, because the hotel in St. John's, is, no doubt, an acquisition to the town. But what we object to is the inconsistency of telling us one thing and doing something different. Arguments took place in this House a few days ago in reference to the deficit of the Colony for 1925-26 and to the deficit for 1926-27, arguments that were probably warranted. Now it is not our intention to make any noise about anything that is not necessary, but the figures placed upon the table of the House three different times did not compare and so it makes us think that everything is not alright and that we cannot depend upon the information we receive, particularly upon information coming from the Finance Department. We are not yet satisfied and I think it is the duty of the Prime Minister to satisfy the House with a statement as to what the real financial position of the country is, and I think also that we should have a special audit of the accounts made by some person who could tell us exactly what the correct position is. We do not want to make the position any worse than what it is, but it only is right we should know. Nobody on this side of the House has accused the Auditor General of intentionally giving a wrong statement to the House; but the ability of the Auditor General and his department to give us a proper statement is what concerns us, and, we doubt whether the department of the Auditor General at the present time is able to give a proper statement of the country's finances or in fact of any department of the Government. What we should have now is the information concerning the disposition of all loans, balances if any, the amount of temporary loans in the Bank of Montreal and a statement showing all outstanding amounts owed by the Colony. I think the member for Ferryland was right in questioning the figures brought down, and we are still without the information we sought and it is necessary that we should have that information. In short the Estimates will be tabled and before we vote on the Estimates it will be necessary for us to have the Budget brought down so that both can be dealt with at the same time, so that we can see where the money we vote is coming from. I tell the Prime Minister now that we want the Budget after it is delivered, tabled with the Estimates so that we can know where we stand exactly. We want to know the position of the Colony in relation to borrowing, as you have always had to borrow ever since you have been in office. Some of the members from this side of the House speaking on the Address in Reply asked the Prime Minister, and I ask him now, if it is the intention of the Government to hold a General Election the coming autumn, or is it the intention of the Government to hold on to office. Holding the Government with finances as they are to-day, and with a great number out of employment is not an enviable position, but with the small majority they have they are not able to put through any legislation that will be of any benefit to the country, unless they get the support of the Opposition—that is they are placed in a position where they cannot properly administer the affairs of the country; they have not got the support or sympathy of a majority in the House of Assembly, or of the country. Now it would be statesmanship for the Prime Minister to go to the country and give it a chance to elect the party it wants. A few years ago the Prime Minister of Australia, Mr. Bruce, whom the Prime Minister met at the Imperial Conference, had the Government with a good working majority, but on the labor question alone he went to the country—he resigned from his position and let the people say who they wanted, and the result was that he came back with a substantial majority. Mr. Baldwin, on the defeat of the Ramsay MacDonald Party could have carried on the Government for a couple of years, and no doubt finished his term without going to the country, but he preferred to let the people decide whom they wanted to control the affairs of the State. McKenzie King, although in a different position from the other two, still went to the country and came back victorious, and let the Prime Minister allow the people to decide whom they want, this fall, as their representatives in the House of Assembly. I am told that Sir Robert Bond in his day lost an election in Port de Grave on account of refusing to give a $30.00 grant, whereas the present administration spent from twenty to forty thousand during a bye-election. It was found on enquiry that during the bye-election in Bonavista Bay they spent that amount, with no other object, it seems, than that of getting political support. Twenty thousand was spent in Burgeo and LaPoile, and so much more in St. John's East. It shows the difference in the calibre of this administration from that of Sir Robert Bond — he wouldn't squander from twenty to forty thousand dollars to have a candidate elected. The proper thing for a man in the position of the Prime Minister to do is to put country first and self afterwards. Newfoundland at the present time—and I regret to have to say it—is in a position where something has to be done, and unless it is done, we shall find ourselves on the rocks.

Now, I think it was during the first session of the Legislature that the Prime Minister told us that all timber areas (and I presume these would include Labrador) were to be reserved for the Government and sold on account of the Government. I think that last year two licenses were given, and if that is so it does not appear to have been in the interests of the country. I have the particulars somewhere and will give them later.

Referring to the Railway—I am not a railroad man, nor do I pretend to say what should be done, but I do say that something should be done, because the railway costs a great deal more each year than it should. The facilities for carrying freight and passengers, particularly on the Carbonear Branch, and on the Bay de Verde, Placentia and Southern Shore Branches, are altogether wrong. The people today are not travelling by the Railway between here and Conception Bay points. If they can get there by the "Pawnee" they go by hundreds; every chance they get to travel by motor car they take, and pay the same fares as on the train, do it in quicker time and get better accommodation — if the Railway wants to compete they have to wake up. Someone has to be put in charge—I am not saying that the present Manager is no good, but after all he is only a servant for this Government, but there must be a man to arrange cheaper transportation. I was compelled to make a trip to Harbour Grace before the roads were open, and there were some important passengers, such as the Chief Justice aboard, and the time taken in shunting about and changing trains was, to say the least, monotonous. Anyone travelling that way would come immediately to the conclusion that they would do it because they couldn't help it. It would be a good thing for the Prime Minister and the Executive to make a trip to Carbonear on some nice warm day and see how they like it. The Railway has to devise some cheaper means of taking people over its lines, and giving better accommodation; they should travel more quickly, and have trains leave St. John's, in the evening, so that people could get their work done and go out. I am fully convinced that we must get someone in charge who will get cheaper means of travelling. It is not necessary to have huge engines and long freight trains and their tenders and shunting, and things of that sort, while passengers are waiting; you have to get means such as cheaply operated gasolene engines to hold on to the traffic and get more revenue. And the same thing applies to the freight traffic all over the coast —.f we don't compete with Farquhar and the other boats trading on the coast we will suffer. If the Government were to go into the thing, and cut rates or do whatever they can to meet such competition, they would be wise. I presume that the Railway Commission, like every other Commission in the Government ,is not capable of handling this. I do not doubt the individual ability of the members, if they had nothing else to do but they are like a man who attends a directors meeting for one hour a week—he can't know much of how affairs are going on. I suggest that the Government take some immediate steps, for from $750,000 to $1,000,000 is too much to lose annually—our resources can't stand it, with all the expenses of official and maintaining the Departments, with the interest on our enormous debt.

In the Speech from the Throne we have a forecast of some legislation, and I understand that legislation regarding the Gander, and Buchan's Mine will be introduced. We have been waiting a long time for some legislation of this sort, because it can be very better for the Government to make it public, and in a few days it will have been finished. But if they let it run on it will increase as it goes around the street.

Mr. Speaker, in the Speech from the Throne there was no mention of a reduction in taxation, and no doubt the Government will ask how they can reduce when they have such an awful amount to find for different things. Well, if taxation can't be reduced for the fishermen the industry cannot be carried on, and there must be some way of getting over this. Now some years ago when the motor car industries were declining one of the big motor car manufacturers increased the pay of all his employees from four to six dollars per day and dropped the price of the cars and the result was that the great output got by reducing prices paid the increase, and the industry became very profitable indeed. Perhaps the Government by reducing taxes can help the fishermen and laborers in the same way.

Now Mr. Speaker, I am going to propose an amendment to the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, which I shall read. (Reads). The Articles I have mentioned are all essentials for the fishery. While tobacco is not an article of food the fishermen consume it to a large extent and can't do without it. Dry cell batteries they use in motor engines, and butterine is an essential. The profits of some of these industries have been enormous, and taxes ought to be placed on them. It is very well and proper to protect labor-giving industries so as to allow for a dividend of 10 per cent.. but not to an extent where they pay 15, 20 and 30 per cent. and still put by big reserves in government bonds. When we come to tariff affairs, I think we should enquire into the affairs of every manfacturing concern in the country, and if a labor-giving industry has to work short-time they should be protected, and the tariff put up to give them further employment, but it should also be provided that exorbitant profits should not be made at the expense of the country. These reductions must be made before the fishery can be successfully operated. I therefore beg to propose the amendment.

MR. BROPHY—Mr. Speaker, little did I think when I assumed the responsibility of contesting the bye-election in St. John's East that I should have to go through the ordeal of standing on the floors of the House of Assembly to make a speech. I trust however that you will accept my apolog.es, if I do not measure up to the mark required of members of this House.

My first duty is to extend my thanks to all those who gave me such a hearty welcome here. I assure each and every one that as far as I am concerned I intend to play the game as fairly as it is possible toward any legislation brought into these Chambers ,if beneficial to the District which I have the honor to represent or to the country at large, it will have my hearty support. I should also like to join with those who have preceded me in offering my congratulations to Mr. Chambers, the genial Minister of Public Works, who has been elected for Burgeo and LaPoile, and to my fr.end Dr. Mosdell, elected in Fortune. Anyone who knows Mr. Chambers knows that he possesses the popularity that goes with the crowd, and with the amount of money spent ni the District it was natural that the District would not do any other than elect him. I trust that before long he will see the error of his ways, and join the ranks of those who without doubt have the sympathy of the people. Dr. Mosdell had certainly something up against him in the form of the Government, and I am sure that Fortune in electing Dr. Mosdell will have one no doubt who will interest himself in regard to h:s District. I would also Mr. Speaker, like to congratulate the hon. member for Harbor Main, Mr. Cahill for the able way in which he handled the Address in Reply on opening day in this House. I felt that that speech was one which any lawyer or any gentleman might well be proud of. His masterful way of handling the various subjects of the Speech from the Throne was excellent. But the ending of the Speech I do not think was worthy of the rest of the speech. I am of the opinion that in writing that part of the speech he was under the influence of somebody else, whether a member of this House or not does not matter, and that is why he referred to the recent bye-election in St. John's East. I may tell Mr. Cahill that as far as I am concerned and those connected with me in regard to that recent bye-election, that if I may be permitted to use that word, never in the history of the political life of this country, has a general election or a bye-election been fought with cleanliness so free from personalities as was that recent bye-election in St. John's East. Surely to goodness that gentleman should have known otherwise than to refer to the reception that he got and the hon. the Colonial Secretary got on that historical night in loyal old Torbay. It ought to be sufficient for him to know that it was unnecessary for us to do or say anything, only to play the game as far as possible. If the hon. member was not satisfied with the reception that he got at Torbay surely to goodness he could have consulted the Hon. Minister of F.nance and Customs and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and they could have told him of the reception that they got at Portugal Cove. And if he was not satisfied with the opinion of those gentlemen he could have consulted those who visited Bell Island, they would have informed him of the conditions over on the Island.

It is unnecessary for me to delay further on that Mr. Speaker. I would also, Mr. Speaker, like to tender my congratulations to my friend the Hon. member for Bay St. George. I quite understand his position in regard to the remarks that he passed about himself in reference to his being the silent knight. A lot of us would like to be the silent knight, at certain times. I feel that the ordeal that he had to go through was something beyond his expectations. One would like to be able to say a lot, but not being in the habit of making speeches of any kind, his actions generally speak louder than words. I congratulate again the hon. member for Bay St. George. He certainly must have thought that St. John's was going to elect your humble servant anyway as he was good enough not to mention anything about the bye-election in St. John's East.

Now being elected in St. John's East it is only natural that my constituents are looking to me, your humble servant and towards the Government as well. Conditions in the city to-day are deplorable. Not alone in the city but in fact all over the island. As far as the district of St. John's East is concerned never to my mind were there cases of need more pressing or more deserving than these are at the present time. Practically every day, in fact four or five times a day in my small way of business down there, I have callers asking me in the name of God to try and do something for them. No later than this morning I had an individual down there who had a wife and five children and his conditions are such that if something is not done, not alone he but in the case of many others as well, God only knows where the results will be. I think, Mr. Speaker, that something should be done to try and relieve the unemployment to-day. True it is that a few months ago $89,000 was spent in the relief of unemployment, and I think that as far as that money was concerned it was spent well. The results may not have been equal to what one expected, but in comparison with the results that were obtained before that I think that money was well spent. Somewhere in the vicinity of 15 or 17 hundred unemployed received help. I think that the average amounted to about fifty dollars a man. That is all right. I think for that $89,000 better value was given than was gotten out of the $120,000 that was distributed amongst the lawyers in this city. And something further should be done, Mr. Speaker, to try and cope with the situation in the city at the present time.

Although a lot has been said in connection with a general election in the fall, I don't think that any person can speak with more authority in regard to this bye-election, than your humble servant. I think that the main plank in that platform in the bye-election down in St. John's East, was that a vote for Mr. Barter was a vote for stable Government. I think that the people of St. John's East have thought differently. And I think that in justice to those people who have sent me here, they have sent me here to ask if you are going to grant them their request next fall. No better proof could have been given than the results of that bye-election. I hope that it will receive the consideration of the Government and will not be consigned to the waste paper basket as it were, like the petition of the six thousand voters of St. John's East, when they made the request to have the vacancy filled that was created by the appointment of Mr. Vinnicombe to the Controller's Dept. I would also like to say a few words in regard to the death of Sir Robert Bond and Sir Michael Cashin, both of whom were great losses to this country. I did not know Sir Robert Bond personally, but from what I can gather and from the information that I have received from other sources he was one whom this country could ill afford to lose at the present time. In regard to Sir Michael the old saying, "To know him was to love him," is most applicable to him. It was mainly through the influence that he brought to bear in St. John's East that I can attribute my election. I certainly sympathise with Lady Cashin and his two sons, and I trust that both he and Sir Robert Bond are now enjoying eternal peace. I have much pleasure, Mr. Speaker, in seconding the amendment made by the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Hickman, and I trust that it will be granted.

Mr. Hickman moved, and Mr. Brophy seconded, that the following paragraph be added after the word "legislature" in the Report of the Select Committee appointed to draft a reply to His Excellency's Speech:—

"This House regrets that the Speech with which Your Excellency was pleased to open this session of the Legislature contains no reference to a proposal to reduce the taxation with which certain articles essential to the fishermen of this Colony are at present burdened, and is of opinion that the cost to the fishermen of such essentials as lines and twines, oil-clothing, rubber suits, dry cell batteries, tobacco and butterine should be immediately reduced in order that a better opportunity may be afforded the fishermen to make a living out of the present unremunerative fishing industry and that a tax be imposed upon gasolene used in motor cars to help recoup the loss to the revenue occasioned thereby."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— Mr. Speaker, when I was framing the Speech from the Throne, I thought that if I made it as short as possible and kept out of it as much contentious matter as I could reasonably do, I would, to some extent, curtail the debate on this particular subject so that we would be able to proceed to business earlier than we usually do, but, as one man said the other day whatever was lacking in the Speech from the Throne, the Opposition would be quite well able to make it up, and, as a result, we have had a debate lasting nearly a month. I suggested that the leaders of the various groups would speak for this particular group, and I think they have done so. We have had 16 speeches, and each speaker has represented his own particular group.

The Opposition claim to be united under their leader, Mr. Hickman, but on the other hand, we have had a pronouncement from the member for Fortune Bay that he bore no allegiance to Mr. Hickman; Mr. Lake, in his correspondence to his colleague, said that he bore no allegiance to Mr. Hickman, and we have had the statement from Mr. Bradley on the floors of this House of Assembly that he bore no allegiance to anyone. Generally speaking then, the gentlemen on the other side of the House are united in one thing only, and that is, in their opposition to the present Government.

There have been various speeches, all containing some repetition as to the results of the various bye-elections, congratulations and regrets, but there has not been a very great deal of constructive suggestions, although I think more than usual.

The honourable member for Fortune Bay, perhaps, stands out more distinctly than other members in the speech that he made, which was somewhat constructive, very well delivered to the House and which in my opinion is proof that Dr. Mosdell will contribute largely and beneficially to the debates in this House in the future. I am glad to hear the statement coming from him that he hoped that the press would cease raking up scandal and do away with personalities as far as the public men were concerned. It is certainly pleasant to hear a statement of that kind coming from a man who at one time was responsible, or at least, the community considered him responsible for conducting a press that was not altogether immune from personal references.

There are a few comments in connection with the Speech from the Throne that have been made from the other side which I would like to refer to. Mr. Lake made one of the first constructive suggestions that I heard in the House this season, and that was that the Daisy should be taken from St. John's and kept in Port aux Basques with all steam up and the crew on board in case some of the fishermen, in prosecuting the fisheries, should get astray on the grounds. While I have a great admiration for the fishermen on the South West Coast, and I think that the Government should do all they possibly can to assist them, yet I rather think that the fishermen themselves would not be desirous of incurring such an expense as that in case of fishermen going astray. The Government would be prepared to provide a boat for that purpose, if necessary, but the fishermen all over the world have to run risks and they do run risks, and they understand they are running risks when they are prosecuting that noble pursuit.

Some reference has been made to the purchasing of goods by the Board of Works, and a great many questions have been asked as to how much so and so got, and how much somebody else got. I saw an article in the Advocate some months ago, which largely emphasized the amount of money that Mr. Brophy had received from the Public Works. Mr. Brophy was then supposed to be a supporter of the present Government and was supplying Public Institutions. Now Mr. Speaker, I think the position is this, that it does not matter a bit how much money a man gets in the shape of patronage as long as he gives value for the money. The important point is whether the goods are required and whether he has given value for the money he receives, not how much money he did receive.

My firm has always refused to take patronage from the Government. I don't take any credit for that. On the other hand, I don't see any particular harm in a man taking patronage as long as he gives value and better results than somebody else does. Mr. Brophy had to give value to the Board of Works for the patronage he received, and I claim that he did give value, if he did not, it would have been a reflection on the Board of Works for purchasing from him. And I claim that all goods from the time that I have been a member of the Board of Works and before that have been bought for best value. The member for Fortune criticised a gentleman the other day who happened to be a member of the Board of Works. That gentleman's name is Mr. Gould, and he said that he had to go and buy goods from others in order to sell them to the Government again. I make this statement to-day before this House and I can prove that I am correct, that there are no goods better bought than the goods bought from Mr. Gould. But if he sells fifty barrels of pork at a low price the amount of money should not be considered by this House. The point is what value does he give for the money. Mr. Godden it was who referred to the advisability of having protection on potatoes, eggs and various other local products. I quite agree with him. I asked the Minister of Finance some time ago if he could not consider bringing in some proposition in respect to that. But I understand that there are more vegetables produced in this country than there are markets for, not because there are no people who want them, but because there are thousands of purchasers not properly organized. The Minister of Agriculture has during the past year arranged for the transfer of large quantities of vegetables from one end of the island to the other and no doubt he can do so again. I belive it is right to have a protective tariff on these things, more particularly at certain times of the year. But in this connection I want to say that the importation of eggs is a matter that gave me great concern at the Board of Works. I found that most of the eggs were being imported and I found that it was largely because the local eggs were not satisfactory.

We were getting eggs from Conception Bay and other places and the public departments were complaining that a large number of the eggs were bad. And we came to the conclusion that it would not do to buy eggs from the collectors and the traders in Conception Bay. At the prest time we are buying eggs from Mr. Earle and we will buy them from any farm than can guarantee them, but we figured that to buy eggs from the various shopkeepers was not satisfactory and more expensive than if we imported them. I wrote to the Poultry Association and I have not got a satisfactory explanation from them yet. But if the Poultry Association is encouraging the production of eggs why is it that they cannot get them properly standardized so that the Government can buy its eggs in the country. I think that the standardization of eggs is one of the things that has to be looked into as well as the standardization of other things.

Dr. Mosdell referred to the General Hospital and to the improvement that was necessary in that institution, and at the same time he told this House that he sat on the Hospital Board for some years, and he was not able during that time to get anything effected in the way of alterations or retrenchment. We have got a scheme for the enlargement of the buildings of the sanatorium with a view to taking out the tubercular bone cases that have been lying in the General Hospital for many years and transferring them to the Sanatorium. In order to make more room in the General Hospital. I feel that $50,000 spent on that building would give returns in a very short time. That is a matter that is having the careful consideration of the Government. He also referred to the Charities Expenditure, and I want to say this that the commission that has been going into that matter, have not made any report yet, but that when they do make a report that it will be beneficial. I don't say that we can save much money in the distribution of charitable relief, or in assisting the poor, but I do say that we can have the money distributed in a much better way than at present by placing the relieving officers in various sections. And those most in need will get more and those less in need will get less.

Some references were made to the Hon. Mr. Duff. I think that Mr. Duff will speak for himself but I would like to say on his behalf that I think it was very unfair of the hon. member for Ferryland at a meeting on Bell Island where I was present, to get up and tell the people that Mr. Duff was bought body and soul by this Government. I asked the hon. member on the platform if he would explain what buying a man body and soul meant. He told me that it meant giving him a seat in the Executive Council and an influential position on the Board of Pensions Commissioners. The hon. member for Port de Grave has told us in this House that he hoped that Mr. Duff's conscience did not prick him. I don't think that the Hon. Mr. Duff's conscience is more likely to prick him than that of the hon. member for Port de Grave. Mr. Duff sat on the other side of the House and after six members crossed over, and while he was on that side of the House himself, he told these gentlemen that he thought their proper place was to stay where they were. I could see the disgust written on his face, and it did not require any persuasion on my part, or on anyone's part to bring him to this side of the House. Some members on the other side of the House, I am sorry to say, cannot think of any way of drawing a man from one side of the House to the other except by pay or bribery. And I want those honourable gentlemen to understand that the Hon. Mr. Duff is not in my opinion on this side of the House for any money that he has got or is to get on account of his action.

Now I want to say a few words about the fisheries more particularly because Mr. Scammell the hon. member for St. Barbe and the Leader of the Opposition and I think Mr. Bradley made reference to the fact that I had made certain announcements before about the fisheries and that some explanation was necessary. I am perfectly aware that the fisheries of Newfoundland are in a distressful position to-day. But Newfoundland fisheries are not the only fisheries in a distressful position to-day. The fisheries of Norway and Iceland are suffering just as much as our fisheries and in many ways are in greater distress. The fisheries have not been remunerative and the fishermen who have to send their fish to a salt cured fish market are suffering and are bound to suffer. Things will get better I have no doubt. If I had any doubt I would not be issuing supplies to-day. Gentlemen on the other side of the House have got up here and read my pronouncement in which I said that when the fisheries prospered I prospered, and when they suffered I suffered. That is perfectly true. In the giving out of supplies now for three or four years past, one-fifth of the capital of the Monroe Export Company has disappeared.

I have no doubt that other exporters have found exactly the same thing and those that are in the fishery trade have got to suffer with the fishermen, but the time is coming when that will go the other way. Supply and demand have got to take their course in the meantime. If I did not believe that it was coming back I would not be supplying to-day like I am. I am not in business for my health and I do believe that times are coming when fish markets will prove remunerative and when a man can get returns for his outlay. There has been a great deal of talk about taxation on fishermen. I would like to remove all taxation from all the people of Newfoundland, but let me say that the fishermen are possibly less taxed directly than any other portion of the community. They get a large amount of goods duty free; and two independent fish merchants made up only last year just exactly what taxes are paid on fishery supplies. One made it ten per cent and the other eleven per cent. It is certainly not over twelve per cent. that the fishermen has to pay to the Government on his supplies. I think that the fishermen really recognise that they have got to pay something towards the revenue. Only the other day I found it very refreshing to have a man of my district in conversation with me in my office tell me: "Well, Mr. Monroe, we were figuring up that we have got a telegraph line repairer and a post office and a telegraph office and this thing and the other and when we think of all the various Government officials and various Government expenses in this particular part of the district and figure up what returns the revenue gets for them, we wonder how the Government is able to do it." It is very refreshing to find that there is somebody who feels that after all he is not contributing more than his share in that respect.

The hon. member for St. Barbe made reference and so did the Leader of the Opposition to a Commission appointed by this House to inquire into the fishery situation. I think it was a very poor excuse from the Leader of the Opposition that because he was called a "Commissioner" he coud not sit on that Commision. I want to make it plain that there was no suggestion that these Commissioners should be paid and they were only gazetted in order to give a status in order to deal with the situation. The hon. member for St. Barbe refused to sit on the Commission too for reasons which he has given. It is not very encouraging for a Government desirous to get the best assistance it can to look into the fisheries situation, to find that members of the Opposition refuse to consider the question of sitting on a commission to see what can be done for the interest of the fisheries at a time when they haven't very much else to do. A committee in Catalina have themselves been looking into the questions too, very seriously, and they have got some system. The hon. member for St. Barbe gave me a copy of a petition which is being largely signed asking for various things to be done. I have the copy here. Mainly it asks to establish a system that would procure higher prices abroad. We would all like to be able to establish a system, and nobody more so than the export merchants. But I have been looking into systems from various points for my own benefit as well as for the benefit of the country and I can't see exactly what can be done.

With regard to a bounty on fish which you talk about us having promised before we came in power, and somebody called it a political kite and said that we didn't mean to give a bounty on fish. I really believed in it when I came in power and it was a fact that the fishermen were giving up fishing and I said naturally we had to consider the fisheries first and give a bounty where we could. The position may not be much better now, but the country is not in a financial position to give a bounty on fish. Then if we did give a bounty on fish as a member on the other side has said, it means that you give something to the man who catches a lot of fish and nothing to the man who doesn't, and you will have a large amount of poor relief in spite of the bounty on fish.

My firm has this year begun a venturn down at Badgers Quay and it has been commended by the committee with which Mr. Scammell is associated. And it is that there is to be built by our firm at Badger's Quay a drying station and when the fishermen return to Bonavista Bay with their loads they put off the fish at Badger's Quay and we buy it green so that they can return to the fishing grounds with trawls or anything else and get more fish. We cure the fish at our station. There are in my district I may say, the very best fishermen in the world; men who cannot be excelled in any portion of the world as fish catchers; who go down to Labrador and take all sorts of risks and who have got some kind of instinct for catching fish where perhaps other men would not find it, and are absolutely certain to bring home a voyage. What these men do when it comes round to October, after curing a few quintals or handing it out to somebody else to cure for them is that they come on to St. John's using a good deal of time and expense carrying it at that juncture. If he can get rid of it and go fishing without loss of time surely it is a good thing. In that way something can be done for the fishery. A suggestion has been made by the committee that a bounty might be given on merchantable fish and many a man in my party said that was a splendid idea. But as any member must ask if he stops to consider, how that can be worked out, who is to get it? Surely the fishermen that has caught it and made it. And how are we to give it from government funds Sometimes it is sold by a storekeeper, sometimes by traders and sometimes it passes through two or three hands before it gets to St. John's, if it ever gets there, and the difficulty of sending a culler to cull it as between merchants and fishermen and fix the quality so far as they are concerned is almost impossible.

I don't see and have not been able to find any way in which such a scheme can be worked out. I do think that to a certain extent there can be a classification of fish for export, and export only, and even that is particularly difficult. I told the House last year that our firm and several others were bringing an expert here. He wasn't Aaron Shapiro as Mr. Hibbs mentioned, but I think he was just as good. He has given very practical advice as regards the standardization of various articles in various parts of the world and this gentleman made a study for two or three months at our expense, not the Government's, with a view to trying whether he could initiate any scheme that would bring about standardization that would be used here and I think he failed entirely. Mr. Grimes, I think, has suggested on many occasions that people be got together to take things up; that the merchants and fishermen be got together. The Leader of the Opposition knows how hopeless it is to get these people together to take things up and arrive at any conclusions. I feel, for instance, that the Leader of the Opposition and my friend the Minister of Finance would not be on a board that would be at all likely to come to conclusions beneficial to themselves and the fisheries, and I have found out through my connection with the fish exporting business that the general tendency at all these meetings is to arrive at nothing.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Why do you make that statement?

HON. PRIME MINISTER—Because I generally found that you were on opposite sides of the argument on all occasions when meetings were held to discuss these matters. The suggestion has been made that it is ridiculous to talk about a plaster model as Mr. Job suggested. As a matter of fact if we had standards that would probably be the proper mode of showing what the standard of fish would be; to show it in plaster so that it could be referred to. It would not be necessary for one to be in every fishing port, but there might be one on every mercantile premises. So that suggestion of Mr. Job's is not in my opinion so ridiculous. The honourable member for St. Barbe referred to the fact that we had got a commission together in connection with the fisheries, and called it political kite flying. I think the fact that those gentlemen refused to sit on that commission, and talk about what the Government ought to do is more an indication of kite flying politics than the appointment of the Commission. I want to say that the commission didn't effect very much. They did succeed in getting to the Board of Trade and in getting several exporters to agree to the culling of fish over the board and making three qualities of it, but there were not many firms that practiced that very long and I am still unable to find a means of government compulsion of what the merchants themselves are unwilling to have.

Mr. Bradley referred to the petition which he had presented from his district to prevent steamers carrying fish from the Labrador and I notice that the petition which Mr. Scammell tells us will be most largely signed is also calling for the same thing. I think the Leader of the Opposition would agree with me to-day that it would not be good legislation to prevent steamers from loading on the Labrador coast. Sailing vessels are fast becoming a thing of the past and if we passed an act to prevent the use of steamers we might possibly find ourselves in the position that we were without conveyances to take the fish away after it was caught.

Reference has been made by the member for St. Barbe to the fact that last Fall when I was away Sir William Coaker and himself represented to the Government that something must be done in connection with the price of fish and in connection with the marketing of fish in the interest of the fishermen b;ut he did not explain what the main proposition was that Sir William Coaker put before the Government and which he asked that the House of Assembly be called together to consider. The proposition was that the Government should buy two hundred thousand quintals of fish which had been caught in excess of the quantities which markets for salt codfish could consume. I want to say, sir, right now that if there were two hundred thousand quintals of fish produced more than was wanted, why in the name of fortune is all this talk about giving a bounty to catch more fish. But the fact is that there were not two hundred thousand quintals of fish caught more than was wanted and that is clearly demonstrated by the statement which I now make that there are less stocks of salt codfish on hand in Newfoundland to-day than there have been for a great many years. The Government should never be called upon to buy any stocks of fish. How could it benefit the outside situation to have the Government holding two hundred thousand quintals of fish instead of having the merchants holding it? Are not the buyers of fish in the foreign markets made aware and is it not their business to know what stocks there are in Newfoundland? And if there are stocks here, does it benefit the situation any to have stocks held by the Government instead of by the merchants? Any school boy knows that it makes no difference whatever unless the Government was buying that fish for the purpose of destroying it and so reduce the quant.ty on hand. That is the only way in which any benefit could be derived had we bought two hundred thousand quintals of fish at the time we were told that there were two hundred thousand quintals of fish in the country more than was wanted, and if we had bought it, it would be a serious thing for this country to-day.

Reference has been made to the Highroads Commission and to the unemployed. Mr. Brophy, the new member for St. John's East, in addressing a meeting of the unemployed the other day said that he and the Municipal Council were of the opinion that it was the business of the Government to build a Highroad through the city of St. John's, and the way the highroad, according to the Municipal Council, was to be built was through Duckworth St. in the middle of the town. In other words, the Council wanted the country to pave Duckworth Street instead of the city do:ng it themselves. Now, sir, I do not think that the new member for St. John's East would go to Torbay or Bell Island and tell the people at these places that he thought that the moneys of the taxpayers generally should be used to pave Duckworth Street from one end to the other in order to make a highroad; and I am perfectly satisfied that the members for Ferryland, if they expressed their real opinions; or any member on the other side of the House representing outport constituencies, would not think that it was their duty to spend tthe public moneys in paving Duckworth Street from one end to the other and putting down new sidewalks. Surely to goodness it is the duty of the Munic pal Council to undertake such city work and Mr. Brophy well knows, as a member of this House and he knows as a member of the Municipal Council, that it is unfair for him to take an attitude of that kind. I would recommend to Mr. Brophy that he be fair and manly in his opinion, that the St. John's Municipal Council has got to look after the affairs of St. John's and that the taxpayers of St. John's city have got to take care of the paving of Duckworth Street.

I believe that the Highroads Commission was probably very largely responsible for the fact that we lost St. John's East in the recent bye-election, because we had men who were employed by the Highroads Commission in many sections of the district on roads and the greater majority of them were entirely opposed to us politically. If we had played the political game and employed men who were our followers and adherents we probably would have very different results; but we appointed an independent Highroads Commission, we did not interfere with them and they employed men, who, in many cases, are not now and were not our supporters at the last General Election. The other day I heard that two men who worked on the Pouch Cove Road belong to Fogo District. I do not know whether this is true or not but the fact is that we might have benefitted ourselves immensely, if the men to build these roads had been engaged by the Government rather than by the Highroads Commission. However, I take the position all the same, whether it was politically disastrous for us or not, we would not have the roads around the country that we have to-day at the expense we had gone to or anything like it, if we did not have an independent Highroads Commission, which I think has justified its existence.

In that respect I would like to make an observation on the new hotel, which has been referred to by members on the other side of the House and on which we are often told that a big expenditure and a big liability has been incurred by the Government. The Leader of the Opposition referred to the fact that we stated we would not give bonds and then that we would give bonds. The member for St. Barbe told us last year in this House that when he fought another election he was going to tour the country from end to end and condemn us for the policy of building that hotel. Shortly after the House closed I found a Minute-of-Council of a former government, which Mr. Scammell was a supporter of, in which was a proposition, put forward by Mr. B. B. Stafford for the building of a hotel in St. John's. At a Council meeting a letter was read from Sir William Coaker and the letter was considered of such importance that it was embodied in the Minute-of-Council. The letter distinctly said that Sir William Coaker was preparing to back a hotel to the extent of one million dollars for a bond issue. I merely mention this incident to show that before the member for St. Barbe goes touring the country from end to end condemning the policy of building a hotel, he ought to make sure that he gets his chief to assure him first that he has changed his mind. The hotel bonds have not been guaranteed so far by anybody. We said that bonds would be issued when the Government Engineer, through his chief of works, vised that a certain amount of work was done with no prior lien on the building. Before any application was made to the Government a prior lien was put on the building. The Royal Bank of Canada advanced the money and these are the only people who have any need to worry; they have to pay off the lien and discharge the liabilities before the Government has anything to do with the issue of the Bonds. Even then the Government will be only guaranteeing $450,000.00 in bonds, and, according to the excellent paying business done at the hotel all last winter, the dullest time of the year, you may rest assured that the Government will not have much to guarantee by the time the Company is arranged.

In most of the speeches delivered from the Opposition side the one outstanding desire on the part of the speakers was that I would give up and announce that a general election would be held next Fall. That was the one thing more than anything else troubling their minds. An election is their burning desire. They told us we were a dying administration. One gentleman told us that he could hear the death rattle in our throats and in most cold-blooded terms told us to publish our own obituary notice. I think that I have already explained to the House that as long as we are a Government it is our duty to carry on as a Government, and we would not be a Government if we were to accept the dictation of the Oppospition. If we are to be a Government it is for us to say whether or not a general election this year would be in the interests of the people. That is my position as regards a general election. I might say that I am not desirous of remaining here any longer than is necessary in the interests of the country. And neither the members of my Executive nor of my party are seking the fruits of office but, as they have shipped under me to try and fulfil their duty to their country, as a Government and a party are prepared to carry on. So I say it is for us to decide if a general election is to be held and for us to advise His Excellency the Governor to that effect on his return to Newfoundland. An election is not what Newfoundland needs.

But there are matters concerning me to-day more important than the date of an election. Only last week I got a notification from Mr. Smith, General Manager of the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company at Corner Brook telling me that on the 15th of July next we have to provide $267,000.-00 to pay six months interest on the N. P. and P. Co's Bonds. The N. P. and P. Company informed the Government that they are unable to meet the July interest and we have got to do it. Now it is for this Government to immediately ascertain what the position of the N. P. and P. Company is. Our liability is there and if the Paper Company do not meet it, we have got to meet it, or the credit of the country suffers, so we have got to be prepared with the money to meet the interest. As a financial proposition, it was suggested to have the International Paper Company, whose representatives are here, make a deal with the Government, but the proposition, as outlined by Mr. Smith, seemed so preposterous that I immediately sent a message to the Secretary of State for the Colonies asking why we should be called upon so suddenly and without warning to pay this interest and be kept in the dark up to this time, and I pointed out that some means had to be provided for the Company to pay that interest until such time as we were able. Our representative of the Board has been attending meetings, but the N.P. and P. Company has refused to give information to the Board. Mr. Reid, the Vice-President of the Company, who it is claimed is largely interested in the Gander proposition states he has not been able to get a statement for the Board. There are also other reasons which we are not aware of at present, at any rate we have not got the information we require and we protested against the position that was put up to us. I do not want to say anything more about this thing this evening as the Government are having a meeting with the various parties interested to-night. All the correspondence will be tabled here and nothing will be hidden in the transaction that takes place. The Gander property, it seems to appear, will have to be inked up with the Corner Brook proposition now, but whatever it may be, the full statement of affairs will be placed before this House at the earliest posible moment. I mention this to show that a General Election is not one of the points that is concerning the Government at the present time—there are lots of things that are giving us graver concern, and I assure this House that if I could get rid of this responsibility, and give it to the gentlemen on the other side, knowing that they could do better than we, I would do it tomorrow. We are not going to stop in office one moment longer than we feel it is for the country's good.

MR. HICKMAN—Might I ask the Prime Minister if he did not make a mistake last year in giving away our security?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—We made no mistake—all that will be threshed out later. The Leader of the Opposition has brought forward an amendment which seems intended only to embarass us—it is not reasonable to suppose that we could consider any amendment of that kind. Any alterations in the tariff will be considered when the tariff is before us for consideration. The fisheries have been stressed, and I am in compelte sympathy with them—my interests are all wrapped up in the fishery, but the fishermen are not suffering more than the mechanics in St. John's, and I cannot support any such proposition as the amendment.

HON. MR. DUFF—Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on the matter in hand. I should first like to congratulate the Mover and the Seconder of the Address in Reply. We knew Mr. Cahill and expected something from him and we received a fine address; the seconder, Mr. Power, was unknown as a speaker, but we found that he possessed fine qualities. The Opposition can see that if it ever befalls us to get in Opposition we too will be able to make speeches. I also congratulate the new members on the other side of the House; I didn't know that I played such a part in the return of Mr. Brophy as has been claimed here this afternoon—however I give him my blessing and hope he will be an acquisition to the House and to the country. I was a member of the Opposition for a long time and enjoyed sitting on that side and criticising the Government, and could still do it, I think. After all is said and done, I don't know of any Government that is perfect—some members now in Opposition have been in Governments before and they can ask themselves what did they do for the country—when they ask that they might come to the conclusion that we can't do much better than we are doing at the present time. The members of the Opposition have not agreed on the propositions brought before the House. For instance some wanted the Herring Inspectors done away with, while others were in favor of them. And the Opposition must remember the large amount of unemployment, and that 1500 men were employed by the Government—that is a fairly sufficient reason for such work.

The Opposition is still asking for impossible things, and wondering why they are not given. A member the other day asked for a breakwater for Flat Rock—there are a hundred Flat Rocks looking for such things, and when they come before the House one wonders how ridiculous they are. I was pleased to see the members of the Opposition asking so many questions, and noticed one especially on the content of ash and carbon in coal. It reminds me of a cargo of coal sold by a gentleman now on the other side, and which was discharged at Humbermouth, which was the veriest filth and dirt, and when the wind blew it turned the whole countryside black—one man had a black and white cow, and thought he had lost it, until a rainstorm revealed it again; if the gentleman would get an analysis of that cargo of coal it would be something worth reading.

I sat on the other side of the House and was supposed to be Liberal; now I come across to this side and find some who left it telling me I am a Tory. Not so many years ago I stood on a platform with the Leader of the Opposition and the Colonial Secretary—I don't know what we were then, but think it was something like Liberal Progressives. What I do know is that the only distinction to be drawn for the last fifteeen years is between the inns and outs—and those out are always waiting to get in. I didn't cross the floors for my own benefit—I wasn't bought. One paper said that I succumbed to the lure of an Executive seat—I didn't ask for an Executive seat, nor was I offered one. There was also some talk of letters from the Prime Minister to members of the Opposition, and a member of the Opposition is quoted as saying that Duff got caught. I don't know how they found out about any letter from the Prime Minister to me—I did get a letter, but it was about something in Carbonear. I never received a letter asking me to move across, nor did I receive any suggestions from members of this Government that I move across—as I said, I don't understand where they got anything about letters. I went to the gentlemen whom I heard were going to the Opposition side, last year and asked them to remain where they were—if they had I should be where I was when we sat here last year. One of them said he was afraid it was too late, and with another I knew it was too late—if I had seen them before, I should have still been in Opposition criticising the Government. The member for Port de Grave hoped my conscience was not pricking me. I have to deal with an effusion in the Advocate, sometime last year. I will read it.

(Reads)

That is a hard thing to say about a person without good grounds. I have not had an opportunity previous to this of refuting that charge. It is unfortunate that a paper in this country should run riot in that way. Now the gallant Major Cashin made the remark on Bell Island that I was bought body and soul. He must have known in his own mind that it was not correct. He also said that I was Chairman of the Pension's Board last year; so I was. Dr. Parsons had to go away for an operation and I was asked to take his place, but I suppose Major Cashin considered that as I represent an Outport, I had no business there. I received $440.00 for that, but I think that I gave value for it.

There has been a great deal said about the fisheries. After all we are selling our fish products in the same old way as we have been doing for hundreds of years past and we have to get new ideas. They are coming. Here we find that in one place this year one hundred and fifty or two hundred thousand dollars worth of halibut was sent out of the country, and the Hudson Bay Company are exporting salmon from this country and the fishermen are getting remunerative rates, and the same thing can be done with the other fisheries. It is only a matter of time, and we have to change with the times. There was one gentleman on the other side who gave us a very brief and optimistic address ,and that was my friend Mr. Godden, and after all is said and done some of us have no optimism, and yet that gentleman spoke so nicely in regard to the affairs of this country, it ought to put hope in us. Consider what a saving can be effected with these modern ideas applied to the fisheries, and when we consider the great possibilities there are in the future of Newfoundland in Buchan's mine for instance we are told we have one of the greatest mines in the world, so that we have perhaps turned over the top. In conclusion I would just like to say that I came over to the Government with a clear conscience. I am quite satisfied in my own mind that I was not bought, and I hope that the Members of the Opposition and the Government will do what they consider the best in the interests of the country.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House at any length with regard to the amendment before the chair, but I just simply want to make a few brief remarks regarding the amendment itself and the possibilities of bringing about the state of conditions so that the various items outlined in that amendment would be carried into effect, and I notice that one of the first items refers to the duty on lines and twines, and asks that the duty be taken off those articles, and also off butter, oilclothes and rubber boots, and I feel this evening in speaking to this amendment that I am performing a certain duty that I owe to my constituents who represent a certain section of the fishermen of this country, to see that their interests are properly protected.

Mr. Speaker, the fishing conditions of this country at the present moment warrant a reduction in taxation on these various items. It will be remembered that in the Speech from the Throne this year we are told, that the income tax is to be reimposed. I feel that with the imposition of that income tax about four hundred thousnad dollars can be collected by way of revenue. An item such as lines and twines which is absolutely essential to the successful prosecution of the fisheries had to be taxed in order to make up for the amount of money that was lost when the Government took the income tax off. I have on very many occasions in this Chamber expressed my opinion in connection with that industry that manufactures lines and twines, and whilst I would be one of the first to encourage the fostering of an industry that required fostering yet at the same time I am in no way in accord with the project of protecting an industry that is making huge profits, and at the same time these articles most necessary to the fishermen of this country, are taxed. And I consider it my duty and the duty of every member in this House especially those who represent fishing districts in this country to see that those small items mentioned in this amendment should be allowed in this country duty free. During the past quarter of a century that corporation watered its stock two or three times. It is paying to-day on the original investment about forty per cent. and then why should we as a legislature vote them extra protection. I say, Sir, it is vicious legislation, it is class legislation of the first character at the expense of the people who are the producers in this country. On the other hand we are told by the Prime Minister that in July next we will be faced with another obligation of $267,000.00, interest on guaranteed bonds for the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company. This information is new to this House, and, no doubt, as time goes on we shall receive further information in that connection. But I feel that even if that additional expenditure will be added to us, and I question whether we are liable for it under the circumstances, the extra fifteen per cent. placed on lines and twines two years ago should be reduced. It does not matter whether any member on the Government side does not agree with our policy. It is the duty they owe to the people who put them here, if they want to foster the fisheries of the country ,to vote for the taking off of that extra fifteen per cent., because the industry which is getting fifteen per cent. protection does not require it, and, secondly because the people, who are catching the fish which goes to pay that extra fifteen per cent. to the corporation which gets that protection, have to pay into the Treasury to-day in order to enrich plutocrats in this Newfoundland of ours. We are not here to represent any class in the community; but to represent the people as a whole, and if we do not represent the people as a whole, whether we are on the Government side or on the Opposition side, then I say it is our duty to resign our seats in this Legislature and return to private life. Comment has been made this afternoon by the Prime Minister regarding speeches that were made from this side of the House, speeches which were made in good faith and attitudes which were taken on principle. Last year I remember a similar amendment being made to the one now before the Chair and I remember it being voted for by Mr. Duff, who is now a member of the Executive Government. It will be interesting when the amendment is put how Mr. Duff will vote this time. And then we are told by that same gentleman that our consciences may or may not prick us. Now so far as I am personally concerned the remarks I made on the subject of the debate have been made with honest intentions. The Prime Minister stated that we comprise sixteen political parties and which statement is absolutely uncalled for. Well, if we comprise sixteen parties, I feel that some gentlemen on the Government side are in the same position and no doubt when this amendment is put each will be able to vote for his own party and the parties they represent are the fishermen of this country, and, as I said before, it will be interesting to see how Mr. Duff will vote and it will be equally interesting to see who have the conscience and the consistency. Now with regard to the duties on butter. In 1925 an extra duty of two cents per pound was put on that article. As there are six million pounds of butter produced in this country annually, that gives the different butterine factories operating in this city extra protection of $120,-000.00 a year. Is it not the duty of every member in this House, provided we have the interest of the country at heart, although from casual observation one is inclined to doubt it, to see to it that there is reduction in taxation on butter, because it is the common people who consume that article and it is the common people who require the necessary protection in order to make both ends meet, and if they are not able to get it through the legislature in a legitimate way how can we expect them to contribute to the upkeep of this country. It is a known fact, Sir, that butterine corporations have ben making profits of twenty five per cent. annually, and at the same time have been placing eighty thousand dollars a year to the credits of their reserves. That was prior to 1925 in which year the present Government gave two cents per pound extra to these factories and to-day we are asking for the reduction of that two cents a pound and we on this side of the House are voting on that principle. I was a member of the Government when we went to the country, and when we asked the people for their support we told them that when we came back to office taxation would be reduced, and then the first opportunity the Government had they increased taxation rather than reduced it. I say it was not necessary to increase taxation, provided that the financial condition at the time warranted it, and it did not warrant it. Now in taking off that extra taxation on butter we should be able to make it up in some other way so that the revenue need not suffer. If our financial condition according to the statement tabled in this House was not right then I say the extra taxation was necessary because it would be necessary to borrow money to pay our deficit; but if it is correct that we had a surplus in 1924-25, it was unnecessary to put on that extra two cents per pound on butter because it meant the taking of $120,000.00 out of that surplus and putting it in the pockets of the wealthy corporations. I do not propose at this juncture to prove that it is necessary to borrow money to pay deficits, but if it is unnecessary to borrow money to pay deficits, then the extra taxation of $120,000.00 on butter can be taken off for the benefit of the common people of the country. Imagine dividends of twenty five per cent. profits each year by butterine corporations in addition to putting aside from eighty to one hundred thousand dollars in reserves and then they are given another hundred and twenty thousand here to put aside. It is absolutely preposterous, in my opinion, for any Government to continue that kind of legislation, and any Government or any members of such a Government whoever they may be doing such are finished in this country. There are various things that could be embodied in an amendment, but it seems that if it is necessary to pay $267,000.00 for interest on bonds next months, no doubt it will be hard scraping in order to pick up the moneys necessary to bring up the revenue. The Prime Minister stated here this evening that the fishermen of the country did not pay more than twelve per cent. in taxation. Surely goodness he was not serious when he made that assertion. Take any fisherman to-day and say he catches fifty quintals of fish for his hand. How much does he pay? He sells his fish to a merchant on Water Street. Then that merchant gets employees to handle that fish. Well that merchant would not engage extra employees but for that fish. I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker, as it is now half past six.

On motion the Debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that the House at its rising do adjourn until to-morrow, June 7th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, June 7th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

A petition was presented by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines from the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, praying for leave to introduce a bill providing for certain concessions and privileges in connection with a mining and ore treating industry near Red Indian Lake.

The petition having been read was, on motion, received and referred to a Select Committee to enquire and report as to whether the Rules of the House in relation to private bills have been complied with.

Mr. Speaker appointed the Select Committee as follows:

Hon. Minister of Justice
Minister of Agriculture and Mines
Mr. Power
Mr. Halfyard
Mr. K. M. Brown.

Mr. Halfyard presented a petition from Heart's Content re Roads.

The Hon. the Prime Minister gave notice that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting a Bill for the ratification of a contract for the St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Mail Service.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, when I moved the adjournment of the debate yesterday afternoon, I was speaking on a proposed reduction of taxation for butterine. I pointed out, I think, to this House that we had, in the tariff of 1925, given extra protection to that industry of an extra $120,000 per year, and, in support of the motion now before the Chair, that a reduction in that article should be given in order that it may be made easier for the fishermen and common people of the country to earn a livelihood or to pay their bills. I think I made the point quite clear that the people who consume these various articles were the common class, and that this House and the Government, as it is constituted to-day, were placed in power to serve the interests of the whole of the people rather than a few. I also pointed out on various occasions that extra protection, since the present administration came into power, has been given to the Imperial Tobacco Company. In the tariff of 1925 we gave them practically an extra protection of five cents per lb. on tobacco. There is consumed annually in this country 800,000 lbs. of tobacco; an extra five cents is therefore a further protection of $40,000 per year on tobacco. It is common knowledge that the fishermen of this country generally use tobacco manufactured in the country. We find, from the Customs Report, that Excise Duty was paid last year on about 500,000 lbs., or that industry indirectly gained by an extra five cents the sum of $25,000 in that year. During the time that tariff was brought in the question that occupied our minds was the high cost of living. Now, we were told at that time by gentlemen now sitting opposite us that the extra taxation that was being put on would not increase prices of these various commodities, but we did not receive any guarantee from the Government for these concerns that if a lower price could be obtained in the foreign market that the people would receive the benefit. I refer to the Prime Minister's statement at that time regarding the price of lines and twines. I think he said when that was put in force that the prices would not go up, but he forgot to tell us that if that duty was not on it to-day, the fishermen would be getting the benefit of the extra 15 per cent. taken away by the Revenue Bill of 1925. I am one of the foremost advocates of giving employment to our people, but I am one of the foremost opponents of the protection of industries that have flourished and are flourishing magnificently. Tewnty-five and thirty per cent. annually is a very good investment ,and I wish I had sufficient money myself to invest at 25 per cent. or 30 per cent., which these industries are paying. In view of the fact that the Income Tax Bill is to be reintroduced in this Legislature, I would make the suggestion to the Government now, in order to collect further revenue, that profits made by various industries in Newfoundland, industries right here in the city, which profits go out of the country, and from which we get no returns whatever, should be taxed by that Income Tax. One industry to-day in Newfoundland sends $125,000 or $140,00 out of the country. All that amount of money going out of the country should be made to pay taxes which, under the Income Tax, it would not pay, but under the Business Profits Tax, it would have to pay. It is the duty of the Government to see that profits made by concerns like the Imperial Tobacco Company, that is contralled by a large Trust outside the country, should be made pay a tax on their profits that are being taken out of the country.

HIS HONOUR THE SPEAKER—I wish to draw the honourable gentleman's attention to the fact that he must keep to the matter before the Chair, the subject of the Amendment. He should refer to those other matters when they come up.

MR. CASHIN—I don't want to further detain the House, and I will leave any further remarks until later, but I would like, in closing, to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Rule 117, when the vote will be tabled on the Amendment now before the Chair.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a word or two on the Amendment now before the Chair, because, in my mind, it seems to give practical suggestion to the only way in which it is possible for this Legislature at present to bring any relief to the people of this country who are at present overburdened with taxation, and before I proceed to the discussion of the Amendment proper, I propose to ask you permission to make an explanation arising out of some remarks of the Prime Minister yesterday on the original motion then before the Chair. It will be remembered that, during the course of my remarks, here on the Address in Reply, I made some reference to some correspondence that took place last autumn between Sir John Bennett, then Acting Prime Minister, Sir William Coaker and myself on the question that something ought to have been done at that time to have warded a serious decline. The Prime Minister was not in the country at the time, and the correspondence in question took place with the Colonial Secretary, but in reference to that correspondence yesterday the Prime Minister stated that the main idea behind the proposition which Sir William Coaker was making with regard to convening the Legislature was that the Government of Newfoundland should purchase last year 200,000 quintals of codfish supposedly in excess of what it was possible to profitably market. At the time the Prime Minister made that statement the Honourable Colonial Secretary was not in the House. Had he been present at that time it was my intention to interject an interruption and ask the Colonial Secretary point blank if he was in a position to corroborate the statement of the Prime Minister in that connection. I quoted the Prime Minister's statement from memory and in substantiation of it I have before me the Daily News of this morning which editorially refers to the Prime Minister's various statements and his statements in this connection.

(Reads.)

That, of course, is the statement of the newspaper itself, but over in the reportial columns of the paper the Prime Minister is quoted presumably verbatim, and I think we are safe in taking the report as a correct report of the statement he made yesterday afternoon.

(Reads.)

In justice to Sir William Coaker, who is not in this House now to defend himself, I think it is only right that that statement should be flatly contradicted. It is absolutely false. I reiterate that had the Colonial Secretary been in the House yesterday afternoon I should have asked him point blank if he was in a position to corroborate that statement of the Prime Minister. I know that this proposition was not made by Sir William Coaker and felt fully sure that no such proposition was made by him and no such proposition contemplated by him. The Prime Minister was not in the country at the time, and I will go further and say that, judging from his remarks yesterday, he never read the correspondence between Sir William Coaker and Sir John Bennett. The whole correspondence was published and no man on the Government side of the House is in a position to-day to say that Sir William Coaker approached any member of the Government on the proposition that we should buy 200,000 quintals of codfish last autumn. This morning I received a letter from Sir William Coaker which I propose to read with your permission before proceeding to the discussion of the Amendment.

The latter part of that letter, I must admit, in fairness, in view of the latitude you have allowed me, has no reference to the incident I have started to clear up, but I thought it just as well to read the letter as a whole. I was astounded yesterday afternoon when the Prime Minister made that statement, and I knew it was incorrect. He had no ground for making the statement; no member of his Cabinet or party can say that he, as an individual, or that they, as a whole, were ever approached with such a proposition and no such idea ever entered the mind of Sir William Coaker. I will go so far as to say that the reputation and the integrity of the Prime Minister will receive a severe blow unless he retracts the statement he has made and announces that it is without any foundation in fact.

To proceed to the discussion of the Amendment now before the Chair. It proposes that this House shall effect a substantial reduction in taxes on those items which are vitally essential to the prosecution of the codfishery. During the course of my remarks on the Address in Reply I pointed out that it was the duty of this House not only as an Opposition but as a Government and as a Legislature, collectively and as to its individual members to look to discover if there is any couse for thankfulness in the Address with which His Excellency opened the Legislature. We have discovered no cause for thankfulness but we submit that there would be if honourable members on both sides could see their way clear to support the Amendment now before the Chair. In effect it asks the Legislature to lighten the burden of taxation now weighing upon the shoulders of the people of the country. We have searched and we have discussed matters in the course of the debate to discover whether or not something could be done in a practical manner to assist and encourage the fisheries of the country, but no such promise of hope was given by the outline in the Speech from the Throne; and no such hope having been given or held out by the Prime Minister in his remarks made on two occasions speaking to this motion on the floors of the House, there remains for us to see whether there is not in our power some other means whereby to encourage the fishermen in the prosecution of the fisheries. There may be a different way of tackling our fishery problems which will encourage our fishermen without the necessity of reducing taxation, but if there is no hope in the immediate future at least of the problems being tackled and brought ot a successful solution, can we not look round ourselves and see whether we mightn't encourage the fishermen. The only other way is to lessen the taxation upon them. If we can't come in here and bring in a Bill to do something to stabilize prices and possibly get more for our fish, then let us see if we can't do something to lessen the cost for the fisherman of his going fishing. That is what in effect and substance the Amendment before the Chair proposes to bring about. The cost of catching fish can be lessened if prices can be brought down by making a substantial reduction in taxation, and it asks you to consider making such a reduction. The reduction of taxation was one subject which the Prime Minister laid before the people of the country in 1924 as a cause why they ought to elect his party to power. The electorate in 1924 went to the polls believing that the advent of the present Prime Minister to power was going to see a substantial reduction in taxation. The previous administration to this one had been severely condemned and criticised by the Prime Minister in his Manifesto on the question of taxation. I find here, referring to the expenditure of the previous administration, he said:

(Reads.)

Surely if the electorate of this country be given credit for average intelligence they must read into that the implication that if the Monroe party came into power there would be a surcease from this grinding burden of taxation. Further I find a statement making a promise of reduction in taxation in full blush.

(Reads.)

In other words I think I have made it clear that the present administration stood pledged to the electorate of this country to make a reduction in taxation, and I think it is largely because of that pledge that the present administration finds itself in power today. In 1924, when your Government took office, the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech, delivered in the House, I think, on the 28th of July, or thereabouts, made some reference to the fact that the administration then gone out of office, had left a large deficit—a deficit which the Auditor General finally put down at $1,600,000. The Finance Minister was honest enough to say that the deficit was largely due to the fact that the previous administration had made substantial reductions in taxation. Yes, sir, the administration of which I was a member and partner, and which was so censured yesterday by the Prime Minister, did make a substantial reduction in taxation—we made a reduction which I estimate was of a value of from $800,000 to $1,000,000 to the fishermen per year, and why did we make it? I tell the Prime Minister now and his Government that if the Opposition worked to engineer pressure on his party as did the administration of which he is a member, there would have long ago been a substantial reduction of taxes. But we don't want to go about these things except by constitutional methods. My mind is still very clear on parades through the town and on Memorials presented to the Governor, and as I pointed out last year the result of that pressure was that we reduced taxation by as much as $800,000 per year.

In quoting from the Budget Speech of the Finance Minister as delivered on the 28th day of July, 1924, I find the following words:

(Reads.)

In other words the administration which preceded them placed on the Free List such things as flour, pork, molasses and gasoline, and further than that, there was a reduction in other things—rubber goods in particular, and our shortage was due to the fact that we made these reductions. You came in and put that taxation back, and on the flimsy pretext that we had removed these duties illegally. As I pointed out last year, the fishermen are not interested in whether taxation is removed legally or illegally—the question for them is whether it is to be reduced or not, and they do not ask for a quibble. In any case you claimed they were illegal and the duties were put back on the Statute Book. That was the first intimation that the country had that you intended to break faith with your promise to reduce taxation and to reorganize the tariff so that it would bear less hardly on the fishermen and the prosecution of the fishery. It is not, I submit, your place to stand up here and censure a Government which made such an effort to reduce taxation, in view of the fact that when you took office it was under a contract with the electorate to reform, and they expected great things from you—we shall se how you carried them into effect. You did not reduce taxation—I propose to be brief this afternoon and develop my arguments as speedily as possible—you did not reduce taxation. To begin with, your first action was under a plea of a legal quibble to place back $800,000 taxes which your predecessors removed—that is number one. Secondly, you came in this House and took a report of a Tariff Commission which you had never read or studied and put it into effect—a tariff which increased taxes generally all round to 12 or 15 per cent.—that is number two, or Exhibit B. as proof of my contention that you betrayed the electorate. And the third is that you came in here and in direct contravention to your pledge that the tariff would be arranged to encourage and aid the fisheries and fishermen, you did it in such a way that it was more difficult for them to carry on. Instead of arranging the tariff so that their burden was lighter you made it heavier and lightened those of the already well-to-do; in other words you took off the income tax, from which source the well-to-do were paying from $300,000 to half a million per year, you gave the Banks a present of $80,000.00 by reducing the Bank Tax, and to recoup yourselves from these losses you impose an all round increase on the tariff to the extent of twelve or fifteen per cent. And then to show your greater consideration for the well-to-do, you impose a tax on articles which from time immemorial had never been taxed—you placed 10 per cent. on lines and twines, and a protective tariff on tobacco, and a further tax on butterine; three taxes which were placed on for one purpose and one only—to foster industries that were well able to take care of themselves, and to make the rich and well-to-do still richer at the expense of the people who had to use lines and twines, tobacco and ordinary oleo margarine—that is how you kept faith with the people in reference to your promise to readjust the tariff. I would refer again to the conduct of your party to your predecessors and your censure of them in your Manifesto and since you took power. I am satisfied to leave it with the fishermen that as a result of your parades and memorials your predecessors reduced taxation from $800,0000 to $1,000,000, and I am also prepared to leave it to them that in contravention to your promises you have done the things I have enumerated. You have lifted the burden from the shoulders of the wealthy and the influential corporations of the country. Is it any wonder that we ask you to go to the country immediately and see what they will do when they are face to face with the ballot paper.

Let us see how the tariff operated in relation to the various items which are outlined in the Amendment before the Chair. I shall at first refer to the direct duties, for the tariff, or your juggling with the tariff, has operated in two ways—through the Custom House in direct duties, and in another along the lines of protection. In 1924-25 the duties collected on oil clothing coming through the Custom House was $21,432.00, and in 1925-26 it was a similar amount, so that there was no substantial increase in taxation there. On rubber suits in 1924-25 the duties were $2,350.00, and in 1925-26 they were $8,900.00. On dry cell batteries, which are as essential to the fisheries as gasoline, in 1924-25 $5,000.00 was collected, and in 1925-26 it reached $14,186.000. On tobacco we originally had a tariff of 40c., and you raised it to 48c. and 10 per cent.—you collected something like $100,000 in 1924-25, and in 1925-26 it was $144,476.84. On butter and butterine you collected something like $30,000.00 in 1924-25, and in 1925-26 something like $45,000.00. Gasoline was free for the greater portion of the year, for all of 1925-26 and therefore scarcely needs any reference. But just taking the items having nothing to do with local manufactures but such as are imported, you collected according to these figures in 1924-25, $163,000, and the same returns for the fiscal year 1925-26 show an amount of $235,000, or in other words an increase of $74,-025. Now that is the result, I submit, of the increased tariff on these articles, and they are essential to the prosecution of the fishery, in the ordinary everyday living of the average man who pursues his avocation. I submit that the increase of $75,000 is as a result of the tariff on the articles which I have mentioned. Passing from that, let us consider the increased burden you have imposed by your protective tariff on the fisherman. By it on butter you have increased their burden by as much as $120,000. On tobacco you have increased it by as much as $40,000, and on lines and twines by $60,000—you have a total protection, which the consumer pays for of some $220,000, so that through these items I can easily say that the common people have had to pay through the nose to the tune of $300,-000. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have taken the trouble to go into these figures and have given the matter consideration, and I stand open to correction only by anyone who has given it as much thought as I—in any case the Customs returns must stand. What is there in this Amendment to prevent any member on the other side from lining up with the Opposition? They are not ready to bring in any particular proposition which will lighten these burdens by as much as one ten-cent piece. You are not able to do anything, and if ever it was hopeless it was confirmed by the Prime Minister yesterday afternoon. If they can't do anything of themselves why can't they assist the fishermen through the tariff as we suggest? Support us in this proposition that a substantial reduction ought to be made in connection with the articles outlined in this Amendment. You have not decided to grant a general election in the autumn, but propose to stay in for the constitutional term, which is for 18 months more. If you were going to the country this autumn you might be excused on that score, but if you propose to remain in for another 18 months you have a responsibility to the people for that period. The Amendment points unmistakably in one direction—to make the dollar worth more, and to make the purchasing power of a quintal of fish greater, and there is no more practical way than this to do it. You may ask where you are going to get the money? I believe that if we had a lower tariff we should not to-day be complaining of a shortage in the revenue, or to come in here by and by to legislate to meet the deficit. It is my opinion, and that of thousands who have studied the question, that a moderate tariff will bring more returns than an excessive one. In placing on the excessive tariff your one idea was revenue, and in that idea you have been defeated. I reiterate that the reason you have no greater revenue is because the purchasing power of the people is lessened by as much as four millions in the last two years. On the other hand I believe that if we had a more moderate tariff the people would have expended more money, and you would have been recouped in that direction. In taxing the people of the country as excessively you are more to be blamed than pitied in the deficit you have to face.

We suggest in this Amendment that gasoline as used in motor cars ought to be taxed. I say don't be afraid to do it—you are going to offend twelve hundred people who own motor cars, but you must remember that to accommodate them you have spent something over two millions in two years and it is the only practical way you can square yourselves with the people who have to pay the taxes on the highroads. We imported in this country last year one and a quarter millions of gas, and I should say that at least a quarter of that was used in cars—that is two hundred and fifty thousand gallons that you can tax. Why not place a tax of 10c. a gallon on that and get a revenue of $26,000 a year? It may be a drop in a bucket, but it can be handed back to the fishermen in a way that will produce practical benefit. In my conviction, Mr. Speaker, our one hope lies in making it easier for the people to live in the country, with the earning power as it is. I say now that the average people are being taxed as much as 70 per cent. Can't we make that less. Won't you consider a proposition to make it less? I look over and see the member for Burgeo & LaPoile, Mr. Chambers, who represents one of our most important fishing districts—he went up there in 1924 and talked bonus and reduction of taxation—he believed and used the Manifesto which has been read, and I feel now that Mr. Chambers is man enough to feel that he has an obligation to his district, and that the people would like to see taxation lessened and that their dollar might have greater purchasing power. If he sees that, and I believe he does, I see no reason why the honourable member cannot support the proposition which we place before the House—he must know that the big interests are being protected and that promises have been flagrantly trampled upon; he must know that the people are worn out by their burdens. If the people were being ground by taxation in 1924 I should like to ask what they are now I say that if they were ground then they are being crushed now—their life is being crushed, their initiative and energy are being crushed, and the average man is asking whether it is worth while for him to stand up and pay his bills and be a decent citizen. It is because of that that I want to cry "Halt" to this thing. We can do a great deal to lessen and eradicate this depression, and that is why I am supporting this Amendment, and because the Speech from the Throne holds out no hope of any such thing in this direction that I counselled with my colleagues and my leader to prepare an amendment to the Address in Reply so that we might not be lacking or remiss in our duties; so that the people might know that someone is giving them some consideration and support. It does not involve politics, but would come as an act of grace and relief if you could see your way clear to support the proposition.

I want to see the burden of taxation lifted from the shoulders of the laboring man and the fisherman. There is no excuse for turning this Amendment down when you are able to come in here and take the taxes off the risk to protect already prosperous industries, and I appeal now to the Members of this Legislature for the reasons that I have now outlined, to give this Amendment their heartiest support.

MR. GODDEN—Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the House yesterday when the Amendment now before the Chair was proposed by Mr. Hickman, and I have not had time to consider its merits or demerits. At the same time, from what I can gather I cannot do anything else but support it, because it happens to be an effort to impress upon the Government the necessity of doing something to protect our main industry, the fishery. It is an effort whereby the cost of producing fish may be lessened, so that the fishermen will get greater encouragement to go to the fishery, and they will be better encouraged to stay home to follow their avocation, rather than leave the country to follow other employments. Whilst I am decidedly not in favor of indiscriminately placing items on the free list, I realize we have to pocket our prejudice sometimes, and if it is necessary that lines and twines should be put upon the free list to encourage the fisheries, and if it is necessary to lessen the duties on oil-clothes and butterine, by all means let us consider the necessity of so doing in all seriousness. The Speech from the Throne itself conspicuously avoided any reference to fishery regulation or policy at this session of the House, so that this particular Amendment proposed by the Opposition is to my mind very timely and deserving of the most careful consideration from every Member in the House, Government and Opposition, and I hope they will give it their support, being as it is an effort to assist the fishermen of this country.

MR. BROWN—I rise for the purpose of supporting the Amendment put by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday. I do this in all sincerity and in the interests of the country. Because of the fact that previous to the Monroe Administration coming into power, there was no duty on lines and twines, and after coming back fresh from the poles, and after promising the fishermen that his duty and that of his party would be to give reduction in taxation, he immediately places the duty on a very necessary item, something that the fishermen have to get in order to prosecute the fishery, and to-day the Opposition are asking that members on the Government side of the House will see eye to eye with the Opposition and vote for a reduction in taxation as mentioned in this Amendment, namely, lines and twines.

(Reads)

Now I say sir without fear of successful contradiction that nothing has been done by the present Government for the fisheries. Conditions are worse to-day than ever before. From 1919 until 1924 there was a continual kick against the Squires-Coaker Government and the way they were handling things in connection with the fisheries of this country. I ask sir right here now, is the position of the fisheries any better to-day than in 1919. I say, no, I say it is nineteen times worse. When this vote is taken Mr. Speaker, every man on that side of the House is going to vote against this Amendment, but when they go back to their Districts for re-election they are going to have something else to face. Mr. Speaker, the Bank Tax has been reduced, the income tax taken off the wealthy and in order to compensate for that loss it is placed on the fishermen who are already overburdened with taxation after the Prime Minister and his party coming back from the poles pledged to the people that they would reduce taxation and give the fishermen a chance. Mr. Speaker, both the Prime Minister and his party know that they have deceived the electorate and the fishermen in every way. If the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and this party would do what is right and what the people expect them to do they would without further delay hand in their resignations to the Administrator and give their place to other men. I don't see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in his place this afternoon. When he went to his constituency seeking election in 1924 he was talking about codfish, the reduction of taxation, and a bonus on fish, but if he is here this afternoon he will rise and vote against this Amendment. Pure deceit. If I did that I would expect to be kicked out of this House, not let out. Now sir, the Opposition are trying to influence members on your side of the House to see eye to eye with the Opposition and vote for this Amendment, in order to give the fishermen a chance. Now sir, I ask the hon. members on that side of the House to look into this serious question, and I ask them in the name of the electors in the various districts to do all in their power in the interests of the fishermen and the workingmen of this country. In conclusion I want to say that I am going to vote for this Amendment, and I do it w.th all sincerity, and I do it in the interests of the suffering fishermen of this country.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, I beg to support the Amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, and in giving my reasons for supporting this Amendment I certainly shall have again to refer to the financial conditions of the country. I think if there is anytime in the history of this country, when we should give serious consideration as a legislature to reduction of taxes, it is at the present time. It is not my purpose at the present time to pursue the argument on the Amendment to any great length. Enough has been said, and the argument put forth so clearly and lucidly that I don't think it is necessary for me to spend much time in bringing forth any further arguments. The object of this legislature should be to pass legislation, and to support legislation which is in the best interests of this country. We are depending largely upon the producers in this country whether fishermen, miners or laborers, and the amendment dealing with this class of people who have to acquire a living by prosecuting the codfishery, and when the conditions in that industry are such that people are disheartened and are leaving their usual avocation, the fisheries, to take up other work either in this country or abroad,; then I think we should do something to try and encourage them. There has been no hope held out in the Speech from the Throne with regard to reducing taxation, and we consider it our duty as a legislature to propose an amendment to the Speech from the Throne, asking this House to consider the wisdom or otherwise of reducing taxation on articles essential to the fishermen of the country.

(Reads)

In connection with the duty on lines and twines, it makes no difference to me that the manufacturers of lines and twines are local people. If that industry pays it's way and it's dividends I don't think that this Legislature should go out of it's way to further protect them. Therefore, from that point of view it is only reasonable that we should consider the lessening of taxation on lines and twines, because local factories can get on without that protection. Oil clothes is an article worn by the fishermen and they cannot prosecute the fishery without it. This is an article on which I think this House should reduce the taxation. They tell me that butterine factories in this City or in this country can operate with profits without any further protection, that being so I am justified in supporting the proposition that butterine could be put on the free list.

I could continue the argument in favor of this amendment, but I quite agree that enough has been said. The members of this House are fully aware of the conditions that obtain in this country and of the necessity of doing something to encourage the fishermen so that they might continue prosecuting the fishery. The slight reduction of taxation asked for may not mean much to them, but still it would show them that they were not forgotten, and it is the duty of every member of this House to vote for this amendment. It would not mean the defeat of the Government. We do not want to defeat the Government. Personally I would not have the Government, if it was offered to me to-day. I would be long sorry to have to take it, although generally speaking I am a Party man. The other part of the amendment deals with increased duty on gasolene used in motor cars to help recoup the loss of revenue. It is a reasonable tax and nobody would find fault with it, except the men who have to pay it. After all, if the Government spent over two million dollars on highroads and the wear and tear on motor cars would be greater, if these roads had not been built and this money had not been spent. Besides the motor car owners would be only playing the game by paying this tax because it would help to lift the burden from those who catch the fish and who give the wherewithal to those who buy motor cars. With these few observations, Mr. Speaker, I give my hearty support to the amendment now before the House.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the Amendment before the Chair. It is a proposal to reduce taxation upon the producers of the codfishery and it is for that reason I give it my unqualified support. We cannot expect the foreign markets to pay more for our codfish than they pay to our competitors unless we can give them a superior article of food. To-day we find that Iceland fish is being accepted in preference to our own Newfoundland-Labrador codfish. In Genoa, Italy, I am told that Newfoundland-Labrador codfish is a bad third and that Iceland fish has taken the first place. Now these are matters that the Government is aware of and they should be doing something in order to encourage our fisheries. Arguing from that premises that we cannot expect the foreign markets to pay more to us for our fish than they pay to other countries, then it is our bounden duty to see that taxation upon the fishermen is brought down to the very lowest minimum in order that the fishermen may be able to produce fish cheaply and also so that he can get a livelihood out of the fishery for himself and his family. I understand that a short time ago the stocks of Labrador fish in the foreign markets were about eight times as great as they were the year previous, and I think that, anyone conversant with the state of trade in Newfoundland to-day, particularly in St. John's, cannot help but acknowledge that things are very dead and very black looking as regards the fishery. The fisheries are practically deserted to-day and we are asking ourselves where we are going to get out skipper-men, the men who will go and captain our vessels and go to the fishery in years to come? Because of excessive taxation and low prices for fish men are leaving the fishery and I am prepared to give my support to the amendment before the Chair in order that some encouragement might be given to the fishermen by reducing taxation on the articles mentioned in this amendment. I understand that when the Tariff Commission's report was tabled and accepted by the House that it might be changed, and probably it would be changed, altered and amended from time to time when it was found out that it bore harshly upon any particular section or class, but up the present time there have been no changes to any great extent. It is not that the extra taxation on lines and twines, tobacco, butterine, etc., would effect me or any member of this House, but it is the fishermen and the man on the street, the producers, that we have to look after. I understand that the French Government pays a bonus to its fishermen on fish, and it is only to be expected therefore that the French fish can be sold more cheaply to-day than our fish. So far as our present prospects for the fishery are concerned, it looks as if the price for shore fish this year will be about $6.00 per quintal and the price for Labrador will be about $4.50. I maintain that Labrador fish cannot be sold for $4.50 per quintal at a profit for the men who catch it. Therefore, it is the duty of every member of this House to see that the articles the fishermen use are reduced so that those engaged in that industry and who are at present working for starvation wages will be able to pay their accounts. We must realise that the cost of catching fish in this country has advanced very materially the past few years and we know that our national debt has increased considerably, and our interest charges are greater; therefore we have to raise more revenue in order that the Government can carry on. The fishermen on the other hand has additional expenses as well. Years ago he used to go fishing with a trap skiff and sails; to-day he has a motor boat, he has an engine and there are other expenses which have helped to bring the cost of catching fish higher than it was prev ously. Now the Labrador fishery is prosecuted to a great extent because we find that fish is more abundant on the Labrador than in other parts of the country; in fact, it is very rare that fish is not found on the Labrador. To-day we find that the fishermen are in such a state that they look upon butterine as a luxury; that they are not able to buy the butter or butterine that they need for their families. I maintain that if the fishermen of the country could earn more money so that they could feed their children better that we would not have to spend so much money on medical attendance for the poor and sick. To my mind the reason we have to do this, is to a great extent that the fishermen's families are undernourished, underfed, because the earning power of the fishermen is so low. How would honorable members in this House feel if they were told that next year they had to live on three hundred dollars for the year; yet two hundred and fifty to three hundred dollars is the average earning power of the fishermen of Newfoundland. The trouble is that the cost of carrying on Government in Newfoundland is too heavy and it reflects upon the fishermen. It is the duty of every member of this House to support any proposal which is brought in here to reduce the taxation upon the fishermen of the country and if honorable members on the opposite side of the House are not prepared to vote for it they should insist upon the Government's bringing in some reduction of the taxation upon the fishermen. A man that only earns two hundred dollars for a year cannot be expected to pay much taxes if he is going to live at all, but the man who makes a big salary is the proper man to pay more taxes and that is how the taxation in the country should be fixed so that the man who earns most should pay most and the man who earns least should pay least. To-day, at this moment, is the proper time for the Government to initiate some reduction in taxation on the fishermen because as honorable members will agree with me the condition of affairs in Newfoundland to-day are deplorable; there is absolutely very little interest being taken in the fisheries and it seems that the best of our young men are leaving the country in order to earn a livelihood elsewhere. I would suggest to the Government that it would instruct the Minister of Finance to remove these duties, with a stroke of his pen, that are mentioned in the amendment. I believe that the Government would gain prestige by doing it even at this late hour because the people of the country expected the Monroe Party when they elected them to do something in order to try and assist the fisheries as Mr. Monroe in his manifesto promised that it would be his greatest concern. As I said before with the high cost of living to-day there is not margin enough between the cost of catching fish and the value the fisherman can get for the fish, to allow that man to live in a decent way. We find to-day that flour costs over $9.00 a barrel and other commodities which the fishermen needs are enhanced in value; and at the present time it is most opportune that the Government should try to stimulate the fisheries by granting the fishermen some relief from taxation. Years ago the fishermen could prosecute the fishery and have a few dollars to boot. The reason was because taxation was low, but to-day they can't make two ends meet unless an extraordinarily good voyage is made and there is nothing guaranteed as regards the fishery that every man is going to make a good voyage; in fact it is far from that. I don't intend to take up any further time upon the amendment except to try and impress upon the Government the necessity of doing something for the fisheries nd I trust that even at this late hour that you will take our advice and reduce taxation upon these articles mentioned in the amendment.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Speaker, in discussing the amendment before the Chair I am sorry that I was not present to hear all that has been said on the different items on which a reduction has been called for. I think the members of the House on both sides are fully aware that there is need for this reduction and if we want to give the hope to the fishermen that they are looking for to prosecute the fisheries as they have in the past that this Legislature has in its power to afford them that encouragement. I presume that now they have their minds made up and that if the salvation of the Government depended upon accepting the amendment that they will vote for the Government and against the fishery. That is about the position as it presents itself to-day. The amendment seeks to have duty reduced on certain articles.

All of these are used by the fisherment to-day. We have talked considerably in the House o n the fisheries since we came in but to the present time there has been no declaration from the Prime Minister or anyone on the Government side of the House that they are prepared to support legislation in this House that will enable the fishermen to get hope and encourage those who want to continue on with the fisheries. The items of lines and twines may seem a small consideration. It is however a big consideration to some 30,000 to 40,000 fishermen employed in that industry to-day. The Scotch say "that every mickle makes a muckle," and the fishermen say the same thing to-day. We have the fishermen going out this year and those that I have been in conversation with do not know what is going to be the outcome. They are going to the fishery with very little heart in them. Now what would be the effect if it was announced in the newspapers to-morrow that the Government had decided in order to help the fisheries that the duties had been removed from lines and twines and had been reduced on tobacco, oil clothing, dry cell batteries and butterine. I want to say that then the Minister of Finance might say that he had at least given a ray of hope to the fishermen of the country and that they will go and prosecute the industry this summer with a good deal more vim than at the present time; and that is what is wanted to-day to give some vim to those engaged in the fishery and give them heart so that they may prosecute it with all the energy in them, in order that they may be able to care for their families, bring wealth to the country and increase the revenue. There is no question whatever that if we had more men prosecuting the fishery this year than many of us know at the present time that it is going to have an effect on the revenue and we will have a little more prosperity than we are experiencing at the present time. Oil clothing is a small article but there are probably twenty or twenty five thousand men buying fifty thousand suits or so of oil clothing in a year and if we can save $10,000 or $15,000 to them in the way of reduction of duty then that would be very encouraging indeed. The next item is tobacco. All those accustomed to the use of tobacco will agree, that once having become accustomed to it that there are very few who can do without it, and I can fully sympathise with the fisherman going out on the water sitting in a boat all day waiting for the fish to come along which means they wait perhaps for a fortnight or longer before they come in, if he wants something to keep his mind in some sort of a frame that he will be able to stand the strain that waiting causes. If he can take his pipe and sit down to it, there is that for consolation at any rate. There is one thing about it that it helps the mind in such a manner that there is not the same strain as if he didn't have that whiff now and then. I think so in the interests of the fishermen if the Government could reduce the duty four or five cents a pound on tobacco that a well deserved saving of money would be granted the fishermen. A fisherman uses on the average about 15 lbs. of tobacco in the course of the summer and if that was reduced 5 cents he would be saving 75 cents. That may seem a small item to the man whose means are very limited and has very often to come back from the fishery in debt to the merchant or only squaring accounts. Again a reduction of duty a few cents a pound on butterine is quite a considerable item and when we consider to-day that some of the butterine manufacturers are getting big returns from their investment and that it has been proved by investigation that they have cleared not only 10 or 12 per cent. dividends but they are able to put money in reserve as well. It is proper that the Legislature ought to protect at any rate producers to this extent, that they will get a fair share of returns out of these industries. After all the success of all our manufactures depends on the fisheries, and if the fishermen say to their representatives on the Government side "We are prepared to allow reasonable protection for industry," it is very good. They might advise their representatives in the Legislature that they are prepared to protect butter to the extent of 2c. or 3c., and it would only be fair to do so, but when they are getting retruns of 10 per cent. dividends and placing amounts in reserve, they should be willing to forego a portion and let us have something back by way of return for that protection. We would get a fair amount of revenue in that way, and I question whether we should have to make it up by a tax on gasolene. But as things stand I feel that the amendment is a good one, and that we would have to make up for the loss so sustained by a tax on gasolene. With the fishery protected to that extent, the people would be spending more money and so it would be coming back again into the revenue in addition to the increased tax on gas. So I think the proposition contained in the amendment is fair and reasonable, and it ought to appeal to every member who sits on the Government side, and they should be willing to support it. I wonder what the representatives on the other side will be able to say to their constituents if the question is put up to them "What was your attitude to the amendment in the House of Assembly. asking for reduction in taxes on articles in which the fishery is especially concerned?" What answer are you going to give—that you couldn't see your way clear to support it? You will not be able to give a satisfactory explanation, and will stand condemned as unfaithful to the trust imposed in you and to the promises made by you in 1924. It will be natural to expect that your constituents will judge you accordingly, and return the candidate of the party that is willing to support them. Mr. Speaker, I unhesitatingly support the amendment before the House.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of supporting the amendment now before the Chair. The Prime Minister, in his remarks yesterday after the Leader of the Opposition moved this amendment said he supposed it to be only to embarass the Government. Now I should like to make it clear before I go further I should like to make it clear that my purpose is to endorse what other speakers have said, and it is certainly not to embarrass the Government—rather on the other hand are we offering the Government the opportunity to redeem themselves in some small measure. It would have been a very good thing if the Government had taken the advice offered it by the Opposition from time to time, and on many occasions, but it has been to absolutely no avail; the Government seems to take advantage of its lease of life to absolutely defy public opinion, or the attempts of the Opposition or the public or anyone to deter them from their determination to carry on the same mad waste that has been going on for the past three years. No attempt whatever has been made to play the game or to redeem a solitary one of their promises made to the electorate three years ago.

The Prime Minister need not be surprised at this amendment, for we all know that he was of the same opinion previous to his becoming Prime Minister. He thought that taxes ought to be reduced, and said so—we have his utterances to that effect. On one occasion he went so far as to say that he believed the statement of one gentleman who said he could reduce expenditure by two millions. We are not going so far as that but we do think that this request is reasonable and should be carried out. As I said ,it would be nothing more or less than redeeming in a small measure the promises made to the electorate by this Government when they went to the polls. I agree with my friend, Mr. G. Grimes, that it would indeed be difficult for gentlemen on that side to explain their opposition to this amendment to their constitutents when they go back, if they do go back—I believe some have made up their minds not to go back, but I suppose others will. I do wonder what the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who is so intensely interested in the fisheries both in a public and a private way, will give as an explanation to the people of Bonavista Bay. But there is only one gentleman on the other side whom I feel will support this measure. I sincerely trust that others will consider this, and do the right thing, but one gentleman has committed himself and can take no other course than to support this amendment. This is practically the same as the one moved last year at the close of the debate on the Address in Reply, and my friend Mr. Duff, who is now sitting on the Government side was occupying a seat on this side, and I remember that he developed considerable eloquence and said that it was his duty to the people to support it, and that the tariff was discriminatory to the masses. I want to ask Mr. Duff if any change has taken place in the tariff since last year, and if the same reason does not prevail for making the taxes more equitable ,to use his own words, to the masses? I confidently look forward to Mr. Duff taking the floor when I have sat down and taking the same stand as he did last year. We will pat him on the back, and his constituents can say that he is in earnest in one thing at least. I am sure the Prime Minister and the Government are concerned as to public affairs, for what man in public life is not ,as to existing conditions. Newfoundland is becoming nothing more than a producing ground for the New England States; we raise up young men and women, and when they are old enough to start to make a living they have to go to Canada and principally to the New England States, and enrich that already very rich State. Surely we need these young people, and what is done to retain them? What is done to stem the tide of emigration going on increasingly? This year not one steamer has left here but has carried away from twenty to a hundred young men and women. After all, they are the life blood of the country, and if we are not concerned about this we are not fit to occupy seats in this House. Now you might say that taking our suggestion wouldn't take us far, but at least it would be a step in the right direction, and it would show that we have the interests of the people at heart. No one expects you to do a great deal at the present time, but they do expect a certain amount of sincerity, but you have shown none. Everyone, no matter in what industry or avocation in this country is interested in the fishery—we talk of the fisheries ,and when the opportunity comes to do something we turn it down. The Government will probably say that this comes from the Opposition, therefore we must vote against it, but that is the wrong way of looking at things. The amendment also asks that a tax be placed on gasolene for motor cars; that brings me to another matter which is of a kindred nature, and which I shall refer to with your permission.

Now I think it is a fair and equitable suggestion that the duty should be imposed upon gasolene for motor cars, and when I am saying this I would be saying it to my own detriment if I was looking at this matter from a personal standpoint, as I happen to be one of those people who own motor cars. However, it is a necessity with me more than anything else. Now when this administration came into power, the tax on motor cars was a dollar fifty per horse power ,but under the high roads act this was reduced to one dollar per horse power. Now I don't think that I would be very far out if I said that at least $50,000 has been given by the present Government to the owners of motor cars in Newfoundland.

Mr. Speaker, I reiterate that the Government have been faithless in regard to their promises. They have promised a reduction in taxation and we are merely asking them to live up to their promises. And the Prime Minister has the opportunity if he will only avail of it this afternoon. And the other gentlemen on that side of the House if they have any regard for their constituencies, and for the people toiling for a living they can do nothing but support the amendment now before the Chair. After all the policy of the present Government must be very unsound. Only last year the Dominion of Canada reduced taxation upon certain commodities, with the result that Canada had a greater revenue than the previous year, and it was attributed to the fact that they had more dutiable goods purchased than under the old tariff. The people were better off. And very much the same thing should apply here. But the people to-day are so poor in this city especially and throughout the country that they cannot buy butter to consume. And we would be conferring a favour upon the people of this country if we placed the duty back where it formerly was. Now as regards lines and twines the Prime Minister took exception to the statement made by a member on this side of the House that the placing of a tax on lines and twines may be regarded as an attempt to foster the enterprises that the Prime Minister himself was interested in. Nobody can blame the people for saying such a thing. That is the construction that the public and the fishermen placed on his action. I would like to say again that my intention in getting on my feet this afternoon was not to hold up this House or to embarass the Government in any way, but simply to make a request to the Prime Minister that he will accept the advice of the opposition as contained in that amendment and reduce the duty upon that article or if he cannot do that, that he will do something that will be equivalent. But at least I hope that he and his Government will give some consideration to it and not turn it down simply because it was moved by the Opposition. It is the duty of the opposition to assist the Government and make suggestions to the Government. And if the Government without taking our advice as it has done in the past then of course it is your own funeral.

I would again emphasise the fact that I think that it is a very reasonable suggestion that is made in this amendment, when you are asked to impose a tax upon gasolene for motor cars. You have to recoup the loss to the revenue occasioned by placing other articles on the free list. Because these people have been benefited in various ways, and it is not hard for anyone to realise how different is the position of a man who drives a motor car from those who go down to the sea in ships, who take their lives in their hands and find it hard to make two ends meet. It is impossible for them to run a motor car.

Why not take a chance? You will have the satisfaction of having done your duty and in some small way; having redeemed the promises made in 1924. I have much pleasure in supporting the amendment before the Chair proposed by the Honorable Leader of the Opposition.

MR. BRADLEY—It is not my intention to unduly delay the House this afternoon nor in any way to obstruct business although reflections of that kind have been made against me from the other side during the past week or so. In fact when I did come here it was not with the intention of speaking at all, but on second thoughts I felt that as a representative of a district largely engaged in the fisheries, that is, largely engaged in that industry which is languishing so sadly to-day, I would not have fulfilled my duty to my constituents and the people of the Colony at large were I to fail to express my views upon this most important subject. The amendment itself refers to a number of innocent looking articles and on the face of it, perhaps, one might not be inclined to attach much importance to an attempt to make a reduction upon the tariff now imposed upon these articles, but when one views the various things which are mentioned therein and observes that they include almost wholly, if not entirely, articles which are used in and are essential to the fisheries of this Colony, they assume entirely different proportions. Were conditions normal, were the fisheries of this Colony reasonably profitable to the fishermen to-day, it might perhaps be regarded by some as unreasonable in some respects that any attempt be made to deprive the Government of any revenue from tariff imposed upon these articles, but when one considers that the industry, which absolutely requires every single item mentioned in that amendment, is at present entirely unremunerative to the fishermen, the matter assumes an entirely different complexion. I say, Sir, and I say without fear of contradiction, that so far as concerns the Labrador fishery to-day, upon the whole it is entirely unremunerative to the fishermen who prosecute it, because if there should, by some strange chance, happen to be a fisherman here and there who makes a profit, that profit is more than offset by the losses of the great majority. So, Sir, I am critically correct when I say that the Labrador fishery is entirely unremunerative to the fishermen of the Colony to-day. I suppose that if that fishery and the other codfisheries of this Colony formed an infinitesmal proportion of our revenue producing industries, we might dismiss it without further comment, but when one realizes that despite what may be said to the contrary, despite the fact that the gross revenues of the paper mills of this Colony to-day pretty nearly equal the gross receipts from the codfishery, nevertheless the producing industry, from the standpoint of the people, is the fishery, and that 75 per cent. of the wealth, which the people of the country earn each year, is acquired from the fisheries, the matter, I say, assumes an extremely grave and important aspect. This industry upon which, in the main, the Colony depends for its prosperity—perhaps I had better say has depended for its prosperity in the past because to speak of depending on it to-day under existing conditions is an absurdity—this industry, which is the one which should receive the gravest, the most careful, the most sympathetic consideration of the members of this House. I have not heard a single word of sympathy for the fishermen in their present position save and except from this side of the House. Some gentlemen look at me when I make that statement. Sir, sympathy is judged by its sincerity, and those who look at me now will be given an opportunity to show their sincerity in a few moments. What is to become of this Colony I ask this in all seriousness. What is to become of this Colony? If the fisheries cannot be extricated from the veritable slough of despond in which they now languish—if in the near future, it is not possible to render those fisheries remunerative to those engaged in them. What is going to become of this Colony? Does the Government suggest that the Labrador, recently acquired, can be sold and we can all retire from business? One hears much talk nowadays particularly from supporters of the Government that this Labrador is to be a panacea for all our ills; it is to save us. Sir, nothing can save this colony except its fisheries, is what I reply to that chatter; and if they are destroyed Newfoundland must go down to destruction also. One would imagine with these facts in view ,and I think they are wholly undeniable, that some little interest would be be shown by the Monroe Administration which claimed to have the interests of the people at heart, that some attempt would be made to ameliorate present conditions, some attempt to give some encouragement to prosecute those fisheries; but, Sir, since the 11th day of May no encouragement of any kind whatever has been shown to the people of this colony by the Prime Minister or his associates. So singular an instance of incapacity to deal with conditions has never been known in this country since we had Responsible Government. That incapacity is so plain, so clear, so blatant so aggressive, that it is almost inconceivable that reasonable men should adopt the attitude adopted by the Government during the past few years. Our fisheries are unremunerative and will continue to be unremunerative until the Government takes this matter in hand. It is useless to expect that Water Street or the merchant classes are going to do anything. The industry is dying to-day, and the country in the clutches of a rapacious Government with a discontented people and a beggared exchequer. That is the situation according to the Prime Minister's own admission. His administration for the past ten or eleven months is an insolvent concern; unable to pay expenses. Everybody knows there is justification for that statement. Everybody knows that the situation of the fishermen to-day is one that hold out no hope whatever for the future. Nearly twelve months ago two young men from my district came to my office ,and I am going to relate to this House now a story which I regret very much to have to tell. These young men, somewhere in the neighbourhood of eighteen years of age, came in with a view to getting my advice as to what they should do in connection with their own futures. They pointed out to me their position in connection with the fisheries and the conditions under which their forefathers had lived years ago. The difference was almost criminal in its character in view of the causes for the change. They asked me what they should do. They pointed out that it was impossible to make a living at the fisheries as their fathers had done. They were fairly well educated young men and they produced figures to me showing that it was impossible to make a living by going to the fisheries and that they could not consider it. I inquired whether there was any other occupation which they knew of on which they might find employment here. They replied that they knew of nothing that they could do except to go to work on the highroads. How long will that last? I inquired. They were intelligent young men and they replied that they didn't want work on the highroads as that was Government work, and that they wanted to earn their living. I replied I have only one word of advice to offer, "Get out of this country as quickly as you can to places where there are opportunities for industry." Surely it was a hard thing to say about my own country, but it was truth and I had to advise these men in their interests when they came to me. That I fear is the situation which faces the average fisherman to-day; if he wants to earn a livelihood he has got to quit fishing. And now this amendment is introduced by the Honorable Leader of the Opposition with a view, in so far as it lies in our power, to, in some way, ameliorate present conditions and if possible render the fisheries reasonably remunerative if any efforts of ours in that behalf can make them so.

The hour is 6.30 and I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

On motion the Debate was adjourned until to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 8th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, June 8th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. K. M. Brown gave notice of question.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

ADDRESS IN REPLY

On motion the Debate on the Address in Reply was resumed.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon I was dealing for a few moments with the present situation in connection with the staple industry of this Country—the fisheries, and as far as I was able I directed the attention of the House to the conditions which exist among the fishermen to-day, and the prices they obtain for the product they catch, in comparison with the cost of producing the same. I think that all Honourable Members will admit that under existing conditions it is entirely impossible for a fisherman to continue his avocation with a reasonable hope of earning an existence thereat. I pointed out that despite the fact that the gross earnings of certain other industries compare very favourably with the fisheries, nevertheless the actual wealth brought into the Colony and available for the purposes of the people and for the revenue is produced mainly by that fishing industry, and that in view of these two facts, first, that the fishery is the main wealth-producing industry of the country and record that these fisheries are at the present time unremunerative, it is the duty of the Government and of this House to immediately take whatever steps are in their power to render it at least as remunerative as possible. Or we propose to stick more closely to the facts —to reduce the fishermen's losses in that industry. It must be clear to all that the diminuation of our people's ability to earn, reflects into the affairs of government, and renders the Government less able to pay its bills, of one of which the Prime Minister gave notice of a couple of days ago, when he informed us that a demand for $276,000 was being made for interest on the bonds in connection with the Humber industry operated by the Nfld. Power and Paper Co., who claim they are unable to meet it. The situation therefore is that while the earning power of the people is decreasing, the expenses of the Government are increasing. Is that sort of thing to be permitted to continue, and are we to make no effort to render that industry on which we depend for practically the whole of our revenue more remunerative? Then it is indeed confusion worse confounded— the industry will be destroyed, and the whole country go down in the holocaust. I say that it is vitally imperative that the Government take whatever steps are in its power to make it possible for the fisherman to get some returns from that industry, and the amendment which has been introduced is directed towards that end. I have not got a copy of it with me at the present time, but from memory I think its proposals are that the duty should be removed from lines and twines, butterine, tobacco, rubber boots ,oil suits and rubber suits, dry cell batteries, and possibly one or two other things which I can't remember at present ,and in place of these a duty should be imposed on gasolene used in motor cars. I propose to deal as shortly as possible with one or two of the things mentioned, and first of all with lines and twines. In view of the fact that there is a two million dollar shortage or thereabouts in the revenue to-day, it might be argued plausibly enough that the government is not in a position to reduce taxation of any kind whatever until the revenue at least equals the expenditure. I don't propose to deal with the problem of expenditure this afternoon—it is too large a subject ,and one with which the Government has failed to even attempt to deal in the past three years. It is not my duty to begin it at the present time or in the present connection, but I am going to deal with a reduction in the tariff on lines and twines from the standpoint of the revenue received from that commodity to-day. I say that we receive practically no revenue from it, because there is very little of it imported. If I were to say that we get $5,000.00 annually it would be the outside of our revenue from lines and twines, used by fishermen. In other words, the removal of this 15 per cent. tariff on lines and twines will cost the Colony not more than $5,000.00 per annum. To the ordinary man, and I claim to be no more than an ordinary man, this does not seem to be such an excessive loss as would warrant the Government in seriously considering refusing to grant this concession if there is a reasonable possibility that the staple industry of the country might profit thereby.

Some two weeks ago information was obtained from one of the largest producers of lines and twines in the United States which showed that the actual cost of landing foreign lines and twines in this country is just a little bit over what has to be paid to the Colonial Cordage Company to-day. It has been pointed out here and uncontradicted that the Colonial Cordage Company is a wealthy corporation whose stock has been watered two or three times and whose dividends are abnormally large ones. The question we have to decide therefore is whether we prefer to continue providing large dividends for the Colonial Cordage Company at the expense of the fisheries or not. It is not whether we are going to lose revenue or not, because no revenue will be lost thereby. Is it the intention of this House to, in effect, say to the fishermen of this colony: "No, we will not remove this tariff, not that we will lose any revenue thereby but because the Colonial Cordage Company will lose some profit ,and that profit you must provide whether you like it or not, whether you can pay it and live, or not." It does appear to me when that question is asked ,that the Members of this House are not representatives of the Colonial Cordage Company but of the people of the Colony, and it is to the interests of the people of the colony that the Members of this House should have regard and not the interests of wealthy corporations whose only interest is to make profits at whose expense they can. So with regard to lines and twines I think it is plain that so far as the Government is concerned, as far as the Colony is concerned, no objection whatever can be raised to the removal of that tax, and it is unquestionable that the benefit to the fishermen will be considerable. The fisheries cannot be prosecuted without lines and twines, and if they can be obtained 15 per cent. less than they are to-day, then it will undoubtedly benefit our people and our country, and even the revenue of the colony, for after all the Government's ability to collect revenue depends entirely on the ability of the people to pay. Clearly then there can be no objection to the removal of this tax; no objection from the standpoint of the Government; none from the standpoint of the people; none from the standpoint of anybody except the Coolnial Cordage Company. On the other hand it would clearly be a great benefit to the people of the country and indirectly to the country itself and the Government as well.

I think it will be admitted that butterine is an essential supply for the fisheries. Of course I suppose it is true that the fishermen can exist on herring and potatoes, but after all they are human beings and they are entitled to some reasonable human food particularly when we consider the strenuous nature of their occupation. It is well known that the people of the country consume large quantities of butterine. I don't think very much butterine is imported into this country. I do think I would be correct in saying that the loss to the revenue by reducing the tax on butterine to-day would not be worth talking about. I will give the liberal allowance ,if you will, of $10,000 annually and that far exceeds what the loss can possibly be. That additional two cents per pound was put on butterine not to benefit the revenue of this Colony nor the people of this Colony, but to the advantage of other corporations who wanted large dividends; and it is a notorious fact that that increase was placed on butterine shortly after a new butterine factory was started in this town which was owned principally by a Minister of the Crown. No loss to the revenue of any moment will possibly occur by the reduction of that tax to its former dimensions, but the advantage to the fishermen will be great. It will lessen the cost of catching fish and will thereby make profits greater. From the standpoint therefore of representatives of the people and of the working classes of the colony, it is clearly beyond all doubt that this tax should be removed or at least lessened. The same argument applies to tobacco. I have yet to learn what particular advantage to the people of this colony accrued from the increase in the tax upon tobacco. The only person or corporation that I know obtained any profit from it was the Imperial Tobacco Factory, which if my information is correct is far from poverty stricken. I suppose that strictly speaking tobacco is not an essential to the fisheries. The fishermen could do without tobacco I will admit. We could all do without tobacco and could do without a number of other things which in fact we habitually use, but it is nevertheless the fact that the use of tobacco has become so common that it is practically an essential to-day; and it is just as essential to the fishermen as to any other classes in this country. If then we can reduce this tax upon the fishermen without loss to the Colony that in itself is reason enough to reduce it. As to the amount of revenue the Government derives from the tax on rubber suits and boots I am not prepared to speak, but I do believe that some reduction in connection with these articles is feasible and would be beneficial. The same thing applies to oil clothes. All sound arguments that can be adduced must tend to the conclusion that in view of conditions it is the bounden duty of Members of this House if they have at heart the interests of the people they represent to vote for the amendment this afternoon. The position is that purely for the benefit of wealthy corporations these taxes have been placed on an unremunerative industry. It forcibly reminds us of the words of the Scripture, "To him that hath shall be given, and from him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath." We have reached a point where something must be done. If the fisheries turn out as last year then it is just as well for Newfoundland to admit that it can no longer carry on. If we can do nothing but allow the fisheries to be continued under conditions that render them wholly unremunerative, then it is useless to continue further. Members of this House have the opportunity this afternoon to show the people whether they intend to legislate for the benefit of wealthy corporations at the expense of the fishermen or not; whether they intend to continue to permit the Colonial Cordage Company and the Imperial Tobacco Company and the Butterine Companies to make large profits at the expense of unfortunate fishermen or not. That is the position and I say to them this afternoon "Choose ye this day whom ye will serve." Will you serve corporations greedy for profits with no regard for anything except the accumulating of profits in their own pockets ,or will you do something in the interests of the Colony that will not detrimentally affect your revenue. I appeal to this House this afternoon on behalf of the fishermen I represent, hundreds of whom have asked me in my office to stand by them this afternoon and not the corporations which have been bleeding them the past three years. The issue is in the hands of Members this afternoon, whether they shall regard as serious their duties to those people who sent them here, whether it is their intention to honestly abide by the mandate they received from the people three years ago, or whether, on the other hand, they intend to throw these people to the wolves and support those corporations which have been partly instrumental in impoverishing them. That is the question which honourable Members on both sides of the House have to ask themselves this afternoon.

The abolition of the duty on lines and twines will not affect the revenue of the colony. Nor will the abolition of the duty on butterine affect the revenue of the colony. Nor will the removal of the duty on tobacco affect the revenue of the colony. A reduction of the taxes upon those other articles in that amendment will not seriously affect that revenue. On the other hand there is a suggestion there whereby the small loss that would be incurred can in part be made by the placing of a tax on gasolene used in motor-cars. I don't think that tax would be harsh upon anyone not well able to pay it, because after all, any man who owns a motor-car and is not prepared to pay a tax on gasolene is in possession of a luxury which his finances do not warrant his having, and the quicker he gets rid of it the better for himself and all concerned. That tax would at least in part reimburse the Government for any small loss suffered through the reduction of the taxes on articles enumerated in that amendment. That is the situation; no loss can occur and a great advantage can be given by the reductions asked for; and how then can any Member of this Assembly honestly refuse to vote for it. Sir, it is possible that they may, then if they do they have my sympathy when they go back to the electors. No, I withdraw that statement, because under such circumstances they would be entitled to sympathy from no one, and I am quite certain they will not get it from their constituents. I am quite certain that the Members believe that these taxes should be reduced and believe that it would be beneficial to the people. They have to choose which of two masters they will serve, the wealthy corporations or the people of Newfoundland.

A couple of afternoons ago the Prime Minister took occasion to refer to me and to my conscience. Sir, I can stand here this afternoon in the presence of all men and announce that my conscience is clear so far as any action I have taken during the past three years is concerned, and I am prepared to go back to my constituents and face them with what I have done. I trust that after the vote has been taken upon this amendment that the Prime Minister's conscience will be as clear with regard to it as mine with regard to my conduct to date, and the attitude I take on this subject this afternoon.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Speaker, in rising to support the amendment before the chair, I do so with a great deal of pleasure, because it brings me back to the day when you and I, sir, under the Monroe manifesto went to the country with a policy of reduction in taxation. At our first party meeting Mr. Speaker, I tried to have a part of that policy carried out, and you are well aware ,sir, what happened. I was voted down. Neither my colleague nor myself went to the District of Ferryland to tell the people that we were going to put extra taxation on lines and twines, tobacco and butterine. Neither did we go into the District to tell the people there that if we were elected, that because the Prime Minister, the Leader of our Party, was interested in corporations that had to do with tobacco and lines and twines in this country, that we were to see that these corporations were to be protected more. Neither did we tell them that if we were elected that their butterine was to be dearer because the Minister of Finance intended to build a butterine factory and he had to be protected also. We went to the country, you, sir, to St. John's East, and I to Ferryland, and we promised the people a reduction in taxation, but I didn't think that from this side of the House I would be advocating that, from this side of the House, over amongst my friends here, who too, are the friends of the fishermen.

For these reasons, then, and without delaying the House any longer, I propose to vote for the amendment that has been brought forward by the Honourable Leader of the Opposition.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Mr. Speaker, I didn't intend to say anything at all on the question of the amendment ,but I think it might seem almost discourteous to our good friends opposite if a word or two was not said. It might be thought by some that we didn't quite appreciate their position. There is an old expression that says that "things are not always as they appear." For that reason I would like to say shortly, as one listening to the debate on the amendment, that I quite appreciate the atti'ude honourable members opposite have taken. Commencing with the Address in Reply, that was spoken to and very fairly spoken to by members opposite. This having been spoken to in the spirit of giving a general criticism of the proceedings and policy of the Government, largely for the purpose of conveying the viewpoint of the Opposit on on all these matters, then it is the customary and usual thing for an amendment to be put to the Address in Reply. To all that of course we take no objection. No objection to that would be taken by any Member on this side of the House. The debate has been very fairly conducted; a certain amount of thought has been contributed that was worth while listening to and a good deal of matter of inconsequence has also been given voice to. We have arrived at the second act. That brings me to the point I want to make. It is thoroughly appreciated that just as in theatrical work a man has to play the roll that he is cast for. Sometimes a man is cast for comedy and sometimes for a heavier roll. I am induced to make these remarks by the attitude taken in regard to this amendment. So far as the terms of the amendment proposed by the honorable Leader of the Opposition are concerned the only objection I possibly could have would be that it doesn't go half far enough. Its contents is as follows:

(Reads)

No person can possibly take any objection to that desire. Not a man on either side of the House could. The only thing that certainly could be said is that it is hard to understand why a regret is not expressed that there will not be a reduction not only on lines and twines and tobacco, but a general reduction on everything; in fact a regret that there is no indication in the Speech from the Throne that the whole tariff should be free and that nothing whatever should have a duty imposed on it. And with all respect to the fisherman who is dragged across the floors of the House until the poor man must be worn out, what about other classes? What about a reduction on clothing for laborers? What about the mechanic and all the other laboring classes that have to pay taxes. As a matter of fact I say quite fairly and seriously as far as all that is concerned that the Opposition must not think we are going to take exception to that, but I want to say also that that is alright for them so far as "getting a thing on record" is concerned, as the Americans say. They want to go on record as taking a stand, and honorable members opposite I think will be fair enough to admit that they have repeatedly drawn attention to the fact of the view that was going to be taken by people outside, when we had voted on the question. They have almost wept and deplored the fate that was going to overtake us if we voted against the amendment. Mr. Grimes, a very serious minded man, wanted to know very earnestly how was any man going to go out and face the fishermen again if he voted against this amendment; he was really disturbed, and so because in his interest in us and in me in that way I want to say a few words just now in return. In the first place this is not at all the place where an expression of opinion profits in any way whatever. The amendment is just surplusage; it has nothing to do with the case. It has nothing to do with the Address in Reply. It is a thing thrown in as it were to make weight. In actual fact honorable members on the other side will agree that the time for the consideration seriously and properly of anything pertaining to matters of duties is when we are dealing with the triff; when the Budget is brought in. That is the time when it would be proper to submit resolutoins of this character. Submitted now, they are merely an expression of opinion as to ideas we might have. We might all have these ideas and still find ourselves in the situation as any Member must reasonably expect, that this is not the time when we can make an announcement as to where we stand and what we hope to do with the tariff. This is no occasion, particularly in the light of events of the last few days in which overnight one might say we have had changed responsibilities, for the Government to say off hand that by the stroke of a pen it can wipe off this tax or that. This thing reads very well and sounds very well, but so far as that amendment was intended when brought down to be an actual request - a decisio nof the Legislature I am quite satisfied to state that Honourable Members know that it has no such position to-day.

Twelve months ago the following Resolutions were moved by the Hon. Leader of the Opposition, as an amendment to the Address in Reply:

(Reads Amendment)

Now let ue before we vote, as the honourable member has just suggested, seriously consider where we are.

MR. CASHIN—Would the Minister read the names of those who voted for that Amendment?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — The Hon. Member for Ferryland is interested to know who voted for that amendment and I thank him for anticipating my intention. That was an amendment that did go further than the present one, because besides our good old friends "butterine," tobacto" and "lines and twines," we had "clothing" in the class as well. We have not been asked to reduce the ta iff on the clothing this time, because it is evidently not regarded as seriously by the Opposition as the other articles mentioned. But we are further asked this time that the Income Tax and Bank Tax be reimposed so that wealthy corporations and wealthy persons should contribute their proportionate share to the common burden. Those who voted for the amendment last year were as follows: Mr. Hickman, Mr. Halfyard, Mr. Hibbs, M . Grimes, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Brown, Mr. Randell, Mr. Duff, Mr. Godden, Mr. Ashbourne, Mr. Cashin and Mr. Warren. Now that you have had your little laugh, please do not grudge us our two laughs. Those who voted against that amendment last year were: The Prime Minister, the Colonial Secretary, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Finance, Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Cramm, Mr. Moore, Mr. Long, Mr. Sinnott, Mr. Bradley, Mr. Woodford, M. Walsh, Mr. Lake, Mr. Russell, Mr. Cahill Mr. Puddester, Mr. Chambers, Mr. Power, Mr. Browne and Mr. Linegar, and so the amendment passed in the negative. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that we on this side of the House desire to assure our good friends opposite we are deeply mindful of the spirit in which this amendment is moved and I think that, in the light of the proceedings I have referred to, I may be permitted to say that we cannot be expected to be too quickly converted to certain of the views laid down here this afternoon; but I do think that our honourable friends who have went over the disaster that is going to overcome any person who votes against this amendment to-day can blame us for saying that if we had taken a lesson by the voting of twelve months ago we should have no cause for complaint of to-day's proceedings. It gives me great consolation to note the way a certain Opposition member discussed the amendment and I take him as an example that the country generally will interpret his voting last year against the amendment. But what is the effect of the present amendment? It is not of any consequence, it is not seriously meant nor has any member of the Opposition meant any more than to wish that he would like conditions in the country to be such that there should be a reduction in taxation. That is a thing in which every person of the community is interested in and that is a princple which does not require an elaboration; but when one is seriously asked why this should not be announced in the Speech from the Throne the reply is—and the only reply to honourable members opposite—that this is not the time nor the place to discuss the matter. It would be flippant for members to talk about local industries and the protection of members who are interested in local manufacturies, as it would be equally flippant and unfair for me to suggest that members were voting for this protection because they were handling the commodities they were voting for. I do not think that is the spirit in which we ought to view it. Personally in voting against this amendment I do it because it means nothing. it does not affect the position, nor is it intended to have more effect than to put on record for popular consumption by the electorate an expression of opinion relative to the Address in Reply, and, I am sure, it will not be accepted.

The amendment being then put, the House divided, and there appeared in favor of the amendment:

Mr. Hickman,
Mr. Halfyard,
Mr. Hibbs,
Mr. Grimes,
Mr. Bradley,
Mr. Moore,
Mr. Cashin,
Mr. Brophy,
Mr. Ashbourne,
Mr. Godden,
Mr. Brown,
Mr. Scammell (12)

and against it:

Hon. the Prime Minister,
Hon. Minister of Justice,
Hon. the Colonial Secretary,
Hon. Minister of Finance,
Hon. Mr. Sullivan,
Hon. Mr. Cramm,
Hon. Mr. Duff,
Minister of Agriculture and Mines,
Minister of Public Works,
Minister of Posts & Telegraphs,
Minister of Marine & Fisheries,
Mr. Puddester,
Mr. Cahill,
Mr. Linegar,
Mr. Sinnott,
Mr. Power,
Mr. W. J. Browne (17)

Whereupon, on the original motion for the adoption of the Report, the House divided, when there appeared in its favor:

Hon. the Prime Minister,
Hon. Minister of Justice,
Hon. Colonial Secretary,
Hon. Minister of Finance,
Hon. Mr. Sullivan,
Hon. Mr. Cramm,
Hon. Mr. Duff,
Minister of Agriculture and Mines,
Minister of Public Works,
Minister of Posts & Telegraphs,
Minister of Marine & Fisheries,
Mr. Puddester,
Mr. Cahill,
Mr. Linegar,
Mr. Sinnott,
Mr. Power,
Mr. W. J. Browne (17)

and against it:

Mr. Hickman,
Mr. Halfyard,
Mr. Hibbs,
Mr. Grimes,
Mr. Bradley,
Mr. Moore,
Mr. Cashin,
Mr. Brophy,
Mr. Ashbourne,
Mr. Godden,
Mr. Brown,
Mr. Scammell (12)

So it passed in the affirmative and was ordered accordingly.

On motion it was ordered that the Address in Reply be presented to His Excellency the Administrator at such time as might be convenient to His xcellency.

Pursuant to notice and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider certain Resolutions respecting a Bill for the ratification of a Contract for the St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Mail Service.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

Chairman, in explaining these Resolutions I may say that this is a service that has been renewed to the same Contractor and at the same price. His contract exp.red, and I made a very big effort to see if this service could not be done without or if it could not be done without, if it could be substituted by somewhat cheaper serv ce. After a great deal of enquiry, and after even going into a possibility of being able to place one of our Government steamers on the work we found that the most economical proposition, and the most necessary one was a continuation of the same boat under the management of Mr. Butler. The various clauses of the Resolut.on pretty well explain themselves, and, as they are read as we go through, if there is anything that appears questionable we shall be only too glad to answer or make explanation in connection therewith, but practically speaking the service is the same, except that this contract is for seven years instead of ten years as before. We tried to get a five years' period for the contract, but Mr. Butler said that, as his boat needed considerable repairs within the next year involving an expenditure of a large amount of money, he would not be satsfied with less than a ten year contract; we eventually got him satisfied with a seven year contract. The rates regarding freight are the same now as they were in a former Bill after amended rates were allowed by a former Government. In other respects the service is exactly the same as before. No tenders were called for the contract, as Mr. Butler had given every satisfaction before, no other people were anxious to have t.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Cair.

The Chairman from the Committee of the Whole reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had passed the same with amendment.

On motion this Report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Bill be now read a first time.

Whereupon the B ll was read a first time and was ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Second reading of a bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of lands and rights in Labrador."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— Mr. Speaker, the bill which has been distributed some time ago, and of wh.ch all members have a copy, is a short bill, and almost self explanatory. The first clause of course simply prevents the issuing of licenses. Some members must have read wrong the second clause, as I think one member said that he was not going to vote for that particular clause. I think that it must have been misinterpreted. Because .f you read it carefully it only refers to the issuing licenses.

(Reads)

The point is of course that we cannot take away any privileges or rights that anybody had before this bill came into force, and if they had lived up to the agreement and have paid license up to date, and established a right they must be continued in that right. In sectoin 3 (a) there is a provision limiting the amount of grants for agricultural purposes to be taken out by any one person to fifty acres, and provides that it must be taken within three miles of the sea. The idea is that we don't want anybody going in, to presumably establish agricultural farms, and possible interfer with water power rights for other industries in the interior.

Then again in clause 3 (b) we claim that all mineral rights shall not be included in this Bill, and so anybody can take out a license to search for minerals if he so desires.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, before the Hon. Members speak I might anticipate some of the requests for information on this particular subject. It is rather important that the matter should be clearly understood. The object of the bill is apparent on the face of it. It is to insure that the issuing of licenses of rights on the Labrador in the sense of timber lands, water power, etc., can be done only through this legislature. But section 2 goes to the extent of providing that:

(Reads)

I would like to say in connection with that, that as a matter of fact one of the parties referred to who has paid a considerable amount in the way of rental, and whose license was cancelled for non-payment of rent has given notice of an action which he is going to take up against the Government for this cancellation, on the grounds that the Government had no authority to cancel that grant. Now it would be very improper to do more than say that he has raised possibilities that depend upon the outcome of that case. You will probably have quite a number of claims, by those whose licenses have been cancelled, or parties who believe that they have been promised concessions, take place. The position put in as plain words as one could put it, in addressing an assembly such as this, is, that the Crown is not bound to do more than give the parties the title and those who receive that title have got to accept it as it is. Accordingly a request was made some months ago by people who claimed that the reason for their non-payment of the rental was that the Government would not undertake to indemnify them in case the boundary dispute went against the country. The answer of the Government was that it was their own affair, and that we were under no obligation to make any such guarantee. They didn't pay their rentals and in fairness to the people who were doing so regularly, and after proper notice these licenses were cancelled. What I want to draw the attention of the House to is that if there are persons who have established rights, this Act cannot interfere with them. Quite a number of people are contending that they were promised concessions on the Labrador, and how far they are justified is a question of law. We are not just protecting established rights, but it clearly puts the position that no enactment of the legislature can effect valid claims that any persons may have. The result of this power of the Crown is a very intricate question of law and is going to be a matter of grave concern.

MR. MOOR—Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Mines whether at the time when there were any outstanding bills unpaid and two or three days after these people rushed in and paid up when they found the Labrador was going to Newfoundland?

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—There has certainly been no money received and paid up since the licenses were cancelled. Any property that owed a dollar was cancelled on June 20th, 1925, consequently there were no arrears to pay up.

MR. MOORE—I think the Hon. Member for the information.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Speaker, the first paragraph of this Bill refers to the part of Labrador belonging to Newfoundland—what is the reason this Act doesn't affect the whole of Newfoundland as well? Why not have applications for any part of Newfoundland as well as Labrador to come before this House? We were told by the Prime Minister that no licenses were to be issued to anyone—that all the timber limits on the Labrador were to be sold for the benefit of the Coliny, and we find that two licenses have been issued in Newfoundland within the past year or two.

The second paragraph is not explanatory enough for us to vote upon if a man's title is valid, it is valid, and if invalid it s nvald, and that s the end of it, and I can't see what profit there is in putting this in. If any claims or licenses are cancelled why not cancel all, and let someone bring an action and make a test case. What is the good of the Labrador to us—I have a list from the Minister of Agriculture and Mines showing over twelve thousand square miles disposed of on the Labrador, and what is there left of value to dispose of after these are all taken out? In timber licenses issued by the Government, a copy of which I have here, it distinctly states that the license is issued on express conditions.

(Reads)

If the matter of paying rentals is, as stated by the Minister of Justice, a matter for those who hold them. then also the carrying out of their agreement with the government is a matter of their own affairs, and the proper thing for the Government to do is to cancel all licenses and let somebody bring a test action to recover his limits and see what happens. If we win, then we win something worth while. If all these limits are to be disposed of, principally by speculators then we can't hope to get anything out of the Labrador. And the same thing applies to water powers. Without a better explanation of Clause 2 I propose to oppose it as hard as I can; I think it is a wrong section and is there to protect some people who have property on the Labrador, and nothing else.

MR. BRADLEY–Mr. Speaker, I have to support the principle of the Bill; as a matter of fact it is in line with the attitude which I took throughout the two years during which I was a member of the present administration. I protested strongly against the manner in which timber limits were allowed to be manipulated for the benefit of speculators, and I am glad to stand here and support a bill which has (on its face at least) for it object the prevention of that evil. I must however agree with the Leader of the Opposition when he suggests that timber limits in Newfoundland also ought to be included—assuming that there is a few left, which I very much doubt. At the same time I am not quite satisfied with certain provisions in Section 2 which are intended to save the rights of those holding vested interests on the Labador. I very much doubt if there have been 20 licenses issued to cut timber since the Crown Lands Act of 24 years ago, the conditions of which have been carried out. For that the present administration is in no way to blame—it has been caused by the failure of previous administrations to administer the law for reasons which Ido not propose to occupy the time of the House in discussing. But the fact remains that there are licenses to-day,—and some of them on the Labrador,—which have been held for years by the mere payment of the rentals, some of these payments made when far in arrears, and without any attempt to carry out the terms of the license other than by these mere payments in a desultory fashion. Mention has been made in excuse for those holding limits on the Labrador that because of the dispute they were prevented from carrying out these provisions—if they couldn't do so they had no business to take the licenses. The Colony gave no guarantee of title — theytook them knowing full well of the dispute, and if they took a title that they knew might be unsound, they entered into a contract, and in spite of the possible unsoundness of title, they ought to carry out their oblgiations or the Government should cancel their rights. If I accept a contract with another with a knowledge that the rights he proposes to give me may be beyond his power to bestow, then I accept that contract with my eyes open—I know full well that the party on the other side may not be able to give what I want to get; I take the chance knowing that I have definitely undertaken in the agreement to perform my portion. These speculators entered into an undertaking, in the hope that it might turn out profitably to them, consequently it seems to me that from a moral standpoint they have no rights except those given them by the agreement, which they have not observed by their failure to comply with the Crown Lands Act.

Not only have they not carried out the terms as required by the Crown Lands Act in regard to the erection of mills, but in many instances they have delayed paying rents from time ot time, on the grounds that they didn't know whether their titles were good and migh lose their money, and Governments in the past have been weak enough to allow that to go on. I have to give the Monroe Administ ation credit for at least putting a stop to that, bu I want them to go further and if possible cancel all leases in connection with which the terms of the leases have not been carried out. There are a number of these leases in existence which in my opinion should not be allowed to continue provided the Government can destroy them. I agree with the Attorney General, for whose opinion I have great respect, that there is a legal point involved as to whether having accepted rents for a number of years we can now cancel these leases without giving reasonable notice. I have not heard that this notice has been given. Let this Administration do their duty by giving immediate notice to those holding grants that unless the terms of the licenses are carried out within a stated reasonable time all grants whose terms have not been complied with will be cancelled.

Under Section 2 it is provided:

(Reads)

I haven't gone into that section very carefully up to the present time, but it suggests itself to me that there may be in existence some agreement entered into by some Government of this Colony, which it had no author ity to make under the Crown Lands Act, and which therefore would not ve valid, and which might be rendered valid by this section. If that is so it is objectionable, very objectionable. I don't know whether this Government or any prior Government has given options or whether the Crown Lands Act permits it.

HIS HONOR THE SPEAKER — I want to draw the Honorable Member's attention to the fact that discussion must be confined to the principle of the Bill because the House will have ample opportunity if the principle is agreed to to consider the clauses in detail as the Bill goes through Committee.

MR. BRADLEY—I quite agree, Mr. Speaker, that such is properon the Second Reading, and I refer to that section merely in dealing with the general principle that the bill should p ovide not only for the prevention of the granting of any further leases to speculators on the Labrador, but that it also should provide for the prevention of any possibility of legalising agreements which may have been entered into by some persons in the Newfoundland Government and which are not in accordance with the Crown Lands Act. I take it that the principle of the Bill is to preserve to Newfoundland all rights on the Labrador to-day where rights for actual timber limits have not been granted and rights where grants have been issued and in connection with which the other party has not carried out the terms of his license, and furthermore the giving of protection to the interests of the Colony against any assumed right which may have been acquired by reason of any act of a Government which was not in accordance with the provisions of the Crown Lands Act such for instance as those I mentioned. I cannot state positively now, but I do not recollect any provision in the Crown Lands Act with regard to the giving of options. Possibly there may have been options given by some Government and from such options in a sense a right or rights have been acquired and this Bill should prevent those rights from being legalized. There may perhaps be a moral right as against the cabinet but such agreements are not in accordance with the Crown Lands Act and I know of no right that a Government has to deal w.th timber lands except under the provisions of that Act. This section may possibly make good claims at the present moment bad and I think that it should be amended when the proper time comes so as to preserve the rights of the Colony for which I am now contending.

There is another matter to be found in sub-section (a) of 3 which I don't propose to deal with now because it is a mere matter of detail, but this whole subject to my mind requires careful consideration and the Government should be prepared to accept any suggestions from this side of the House which will in any way tend to preserve our rights in connection with timber limits on the Labrador. I admit that the possibilities are that a large proportion of the most valuable timber limits are lost to the Colony. That is possible I say; nay, probable. Notice then should immediately be served on these speculators because their titles are morally unsound now, and if within the specified time the conditions of their licenses are not fulfilled, then immediately, instantly, these licenses should be cancelled. These people who have been paying rents for Crown Lands for the past ten or fifteen years have not been doing so for love of Newfoundland and you will find that in every case they will be quite as ready and willing to hold Newfoundland to the exact terms of its obligations under the licenses as I suggest Newfoundland should hold them. In speaking on this subject I have no axe to grind in connection with the Labrador. I have no money to invest or speculate with there and I am concerned only with conserving the interests of the Colony.

The principal of the Bill I heartily support.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—As fas as I know there is extant no option of any nature whatever in connection with the Labrador since this administration came into office. I do not know of any that had been in existence previously, nor do I know of any that would have any connection with section two of this Bill, as alluded to by Mr. Bradley, the member for Port de Grave.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that I am in accord with the principle embodied in this Bill because I think it protects the Labrador for the people, in that the people who sent their representatives to this House will have an opportunity to investigate all applications for grants or licenses for Labrador; but I am very sorry that the Prime Minister has not availed of the opportunity to give certain information as regards the cost of the Labrador Boundary to date and what it is likely to cost; and also information as regards the licenses and leases already issued in connection with that territory. I was expecting, and I do not thing it was unreasonable to expect that the Prime Minister or at any rate the Minister of Agriculture and Mines would have made a speech of considerable length in introducing this Bill, because to my mind it is one of the principal pieces of legislation that we will be called upon to consider this season. When I heard the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon state that there has been granted leases of from eleven to twelve thousand square miles, worth approximately from five to seven millions of dollars, I think that we should go very slowly and see that the people who hold these leases and options have paid their rentals in full and also to see that we have information as to whether or not there was any obligation upon the Government to refun these rentals in case the Labrador dispute was not awarded in favor of the Government. I understand that when the Bill goes into the Committee stage any amendments will be considered.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, with regard to the principle of the Bill, I suppose that nearly every member of the House will agree with it. It will be little more difficult for applicants for timber licenses now to arrange matters than it would be to arrange with ten members of the Executive Government to have their requests granted.

If this bill confined itself to terms dealing with licenses being provided by act of the legislature, there would be no matter for debate. But when we have clauses dealing with the validity or otherwise of licenses already issued, then certain things arise in the ordinary layman's mind as to whether the legal terms in this bill conform in any way with the titles already granted. We as a Government no doubt are unfortunately compelled to make concessions to those who have been successful in getting timber licenses on Labrador. However that is a legal matter upon which I am not qualified to give an opinion. But I trust that when we go into the Committee stage on this Bill that the legal men of this House and others also will interest themselves sufficiently in the matter so that we will not do anything that we may be sorry for in the future.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Speaker, I have not very much to say on this bill at the present time. I agree with the principle of the bill, however, as to making it more difficult for people to get licenses for timber lands on Labrador. It is a great pity that so many have secured licenses. I would like the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to tell us offhand if he could, the number of square miles of land on Labrador that have been granted for agriculture.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE—11,341 Square miles.

MR. HIBBS—That would be about 25% of timber lands. The point I want to make is this and I think it was in the mind of the Prime Minister himself and other members of this House, is that if supposing a sum could be secured for the Labrador, we ought to sell it, reserving the fishing rights of course. That is my own view of the matter. I think that if the Government could make a good bargain with Canada that the timber areas should be sold. In that event the licenses that have been given out down there would certainly embarass the Government in the sale. The argument that was given by a gentleman who is interested in timber lands was that there was no less than 25% of the lands on Labrador taken up by certain people and that that would be a very embarassing factor to the Government if they were trying to make a sale. For that reason it is refreshing to know that a bill has been brought in here to make it more difficult still for other people to get licenses on Labrador for speculative purposes.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill ing of Lands and Rights in Labrador" entitled "An Act to Govern the Grant- was read a second time and was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the whole House on to-morrow.

On motion the ramaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Speaker in moving the adjournment of this House I would like to make a little explanation in consideration of the statement that was made by the hon. member for St. Barbe at the last session of this House. I particularly desire that I should not say member of this House that was not anything in this House about any correct, and more particularly I should very much regret to say anything about anybody, outside this House that is incorrect. Having made the statement which I do not nd I can prove, that Mr. Coaker suggested that as there was two hundred thousand quintals of fish more than was wanted last year, and that it was proposed to the Government that that amount of fish should be bought by them, I wish to say if the statement was incorrect I want to withdraw it very fully and apologise. I want to explain to begin with that in making that statement I was convinced in my own mind that that statement was on record in wriing. I had not examined the letters that passed between the Acting Prime Minister and Sir Wm. Coaker when I was away in England, but I got the idea either fro ma newspaper or in some other way, at any rate the statement was conveyed to me while on the other side that it was an absolute fact that the suggestion of this 200,000 quintals of fish being bought by the Government was put before us, and I thought the Acting Prime Minister confirme dthat to me when I came back. In this conviction, I mentioned it to the House, and should not have done so otherwise. As it appears there certainly was a suggestion that the Government should buy fish. I say there was the suggestion that this House should meet for the purpose of keeping the price of fish up to 6.5 fo Shore and $5.00 for Labrador. And the statement was made by Sir William Coaker, and I think by Mr. Scammell also, that the fishermen were selling their fish at $5.50 a quintal and that the Legislature was to be called together for the purpose of putting the price up to $6.50 Shore and $5.00 Labrador. I cannot conceive in what way the price of fish could be kept up when the merchants were unwilling to buy it at a higher price, except by the Government guaranteeing the merchants the difference in price or the Government buying the fish themselves. That would be the only possible alternative. I would like to ask the members of this House to consider in their minds what would have happened if the Government had met this House, and had decided that the only means of putting the price of fish up to where Sir William Coaker thought it ought to be, was by buying in the fish, or by guaranteeing the merchants the difference in price. I claim that it would have cost the country a great deal more than just buying 200,000 quintals of fish at market rates. As a matter of fact, and I think that the hon. the Leader of the Opposition will bear me out in this, I would state that when buying fish as merchants, have done this year, at reduced rates, as low as $3.50 a quintal from one end of Water Street to the other there is not a merchant who has been able to balance his accounts this year as far as fish purchasers are concerned. I only speak from the experience of my own firm. Perhaps we bought on an easier cull. Perhaps we gave much more than other people for it, but I think that we tried to buy as well as we could and we tried to get it as reasonably as we could, and the result has been that we have lost a considerable amount of money. What would the country have lost if the Government bought the catch at six dollars. I have always claimed that the question of buying fish is not a matter for a Government at all. I do not suggest that it should ever be considered by a Government. Supply and demand must take care of it, and the Government has no business to step into the fish market.

However, that is beside the question. My reason for being on my feet is that I want, if I made any accusations that were nicorrect about Sir William Coaker or Mr. Scammell, to withdraw them thoroughly and sincerely and unreservedly. I now beg to move that this House do rise to adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock.

Mr. Scammell—Mr. Speaker, on the motion to adjourn I should like to rise to thank the Prime Minister for the retraction he has made here today, so apologetically and unequivocally. I thank him on behalf of Sir William Coaker and for myself. But as he went on to explain as to how hee came to make the charge re purchase of fish he argued along the lines that if the Legislature had been called together, only one thing could have come out of it—thebuying of fish by the Government. I want to say that there was no such idea in the back of our minds at that time. Even if the Legislature had met there was no such idea in our minds, that the Government should embark on any such a policy. Our intention was that the Legislature might be able to stimulate or sustain prices by means of regulations which, we had in mond and would have been prepared to introduce. It was by some system or regulations that we hoped to stabilize and hold up the price. Of course that was our idea of the situation. The Prime Minister may have thought that the only thing to have done was for the Government to buy, but there was no such thing in our minds. When the House goes into the Fishery Estimates I shall have something more to say on the subject.

Mr. Hickman gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave Notice of Question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Thursday, June 9th, at th ee of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, June 9th.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. Minister of Justice presented a petition from Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Ltd., praying leave to introduce a bill providing for the grant of certain assistance in relation to the establishment of an industry at Holyrood Pond, in the District of Placentia East.

On motion this petition was received and referred to a Select Committee to enquire and report whether the Rules of the House in relation to private bills had been complied with.

Mr. Speaker appointed the Select Committee as follows: Hon. Minister of Justice, Minister of Marine & Fisheries, Hon. Mr. Sullivan, Mr. Scammell, Mr. Ashbourne.

The Minister of Agriculture and Mines presented the Report of the Select Committee on the petition of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, as follows:

June 9th, 1927.

To the Honourable House of Assembly:

Your Select Committee appointed to consider the petition of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, beg to report that they have considered the petition and find that the Rules of the House relating to Private Bills have been complied with, and recommend that leave be granted to introduce a bill in accordance with the prayer thereof.

Respectfully submitted,

(Sgd.)

W. W. HALFYARD
W. J. WALSH

On motion this Report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that leave be granted to introduce Resolutions accordingly.

The Minister of Agriculture and M nes gave notice that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee of the Whole to consider certain resolutions respecting an agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and The Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited.

The Hon. Minister of Finance gave notice that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee of the Whole on Supply.

Hon. Colonial Secretary gave notice that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee of the Whole to consider certain Resolutions respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Brophy gave notice of question.

Mr. Cashin gave notice of question.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider matter in relation to the bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—Mr. Chairman: When the Committee last met to consider the proposition now before the Chair, Honourable Members who had taken part in the debate suggested to have the Committee rise and ask leave to sit again so that myself or some other member from this side of the House would table some statistics necessary to have before the Committee on this subject. On that occasion I pointed out that there was very little that I could add to what had been already sa d, but that I was prepared to try and secure any further information so far as my department was concerned and that I would undertake to get in touch with the various sections of the country who were particularly interested in Agriculture, and, after the Committee rose that evening I undertook to try and get an expression of op.nion from as many as possible of the farmers in the different sections of the country. As is, perhaps, known already I had inserted a notice in the public press calling a meeting of the farmers of St. John's to meet in the Board of Trade Room for the consideration of the matter. On the night the meeting was held we had twenty-five or thirty of the most prominent farmers of St. John's East and West. I outlined the object of the meeting for that gathering and after considerable discussion the following Resolut.on was moved and seconded and passed:

(Reads Resolution)

That Resolution was proposed by and on being put to a vote eighty-five Mr. Cowan and seconded by Mr. Cook per cent. of those present voted in favor of the Resolution. Following that I had the Secretary of the Agriculture Board, Mr. Bayly, send the appended telegrams to various sections of the West Coast that had a particular interest in agriculture. These telegrams were sent to Robinson's, Crabbes, Stephenville, Codroy, St. George's Welfare Committee at St. George's and Mr. M. J. Gillis, President of the Highlands Co-operative Association, Highlands. Replies to all these messages were received and I shall read them to the Committee:

(Reads Messages)

These are the replies received from the queries sent out to try and discover as to what the feelings of the people of the various farming sections of the Island were with regard to the attitude which should be taken respecting Sir Robert Bond's property as a model farm. The question arose when we were last in session as to what areas might be included in the bequest of Sir Robert Bond and I had Mr. Bayly visit Whitbourne where he met Rev. Dr. Bond, who was good enough to loan a large and complete map of the whole area, and I think it would be just as well if I tabled the map of the whole area so that honourable members can see the land included in the section of Sir Robert Bond's Will. Some of the members who have spoken on the subject matter before the Chair were expecting to have some elaborate address from me on agriculture. On various occasions in this House I have gone on record that I know but very little on the science of agriculture, so that I have very little to report, except the statistics I have compiled with regard to this important subject. For the information of the Cimmittee I would like to go back for twenty years to show as accurately as possible the expenditures that have been made for the encouragement of agriculture. In 1906-07 the legislative grant was $4,000.00; in 1907-08 the grant was $4,000.00; in 1908-09 the vote was $20,000.00; in 1909-10 the Agricultural Board was then inaugurated and in charge of Messrs. Devereaux, Downey and Seymour and the vote was $20,000.00, and the expenditure $20,822.00; in 1910-11, the year of the Agricultural Exhibition, the vote was $20,000.00 and the total expenditure was $44,596.85; in 1911-12 the Legislative vote was $40,000.00 and the expenditure was $44,146.57; in 1912-13 the vote was $40,000.00 and the expenditure $45,835.00; in 1913-14 the vote was $40,000.00 and the expenditure $45,000.00; in 1914-15 the expenditure was $20,000.00 and the amount spent was $20,000.00; 1915-16 the amount voted was $20,000.00 and the amount spent $19,000.00; in 1916-17 the amount voted was $20,000.00 and the expenditure $28,000.00; in 1917-18 the amount voted was $20,000.00 and the expenditure $31,000.00; 1918-19 the vote was $20,000.00 and the expenditure $56,000.00; 1919-20, when the Model Farm was ni operation, the vote was $55,000.00 and the expenditure $99,367.93; in 1921-22 the vote was $27,500.00, and the over expenditure was $50,000.00; in 1922-23 the vote was $40,000.00 and the expenditure was $59,575.00; in 1923-24 the vote was $20,000.00 and the expenditure $34,800.00; in 1924-25; in 1924-25 the first year I took office the vote was $5,000.00 and the amount spent was $9,000.00 and in 1925-26 the vote was $20,000.00 whilst the expenditure was $26,000.00. I might say that so far as the vote for 1925-26 was concerned the Government had undertaken to get a suitable market for eel grass which existed in various parts of the country and my department had sent across the Atlantic a large amount of this grass to try and establish a market and we put this eel grass industry in charge of Mr. Joseph Downey, who has done so much to advertise this article. I would like to point out further that during the twenty years referred to, the actual expenditure with regard to the encouragement of agriculture wis in the neighborhood of three quarters of a million dollars, and I think most of us will admit that we have not received anything like adequate returns for that large expenditure. The first time I took office it was my desire and the desire of the Government to try and bring some scientific advice into play with regard to the agricultural activities. We got into communication, on the recommendations made to us by members of the House of Assembly, with agricultural colleges abroad, particularly in the Provinces of Nova Scotia to try if possible and secure the services of a suitable Newfoundlander qualified in agriculture. We found that after close enquiry, as the correspondence will show, we could not get the principals of those Colleges referred to, to recommend either of the men suggested to the Government who may be possible suitable men so as to advise us along agricultural lines. Then again, with regard to the small vote in former years. I found it impossible to be able to do much more than depart from the old custom of giving some assistance to various agricultural communities. It is a well known fact that a country like Newfoundland should not be sending to Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and other outside places for potatoes, turnips and cabbage and other vegetables that can and should be raised in our own country. A tremendous amount of money has been spent year after year on importing these vegetables and the year 1926 was no exception; and nearly as much money went out of the country last Autumn for the purchase of potatoes, turnips and cabbage despite our attempts made for the encouragement of local products between the bottom of Placentia Bay and Cape Ray. The practise in the past has been for schooners after the bank fishery was over, to supply the South West Coast from Port aux Basques to Sound Island with potatoes brought in from outside at the expense of the people in other sections of the Coast, nay, at the expense of those people who were prevented from profitable marketing the fruits of their toil. Last year, as an experiment, I sent Mr. Bayly to the West Coast and he gave a series of lectures through the farming sections and advised the people to band themselves together and work co-operatively with a view to having their products put up in clean packages and branded as an A1 article. Mr. Bayly came back and reported to me the tdvisability of sending a commercial traveller to the South West Coast to try and see if we could not secure some of the trade that was going to Prince Edward Island and the Nova Scotian Provinces. I then got in communication with Mr. Downey, who was familiar with the West Coast and knew the personnel of the various organizations formed, and engaged him to interview the merchants and other traders of that section to try and get them to give the farmers of the West Coast an opportunity to tender for that business, with the result that we succeeded in marketing eight thousand barrels between Port aux Basques and Burin las year, as against 800 barrels sold for any one previous year, and it is now left to the growers of potatoes on the West Coast to retain that market or not. It was pointed out by Mr. Bayly and myself in correspondence and in conversation that if these people hoped to retain the market that, it could only be done by giving the people the class of article they were prepared to buy. In other words grade the potatoes and put them up in decent packages. In conversation with some of the South West Coast merchants they seemed perfectly satisfied with the result of the growth of last year's potatoes. This year I think, if farmers do their bit, there is no reason in the world why any potatoes should be imported into the section from Port aux Basques to the bottom of Placentia Bay. The farmers o nthe West Coast have taken on a new lease of life for greater production of vegetables particularly as regards potatoes, turnips, and cabbage, and, if they succeed, it will at least keep one hundred thousand dollars yearly in the country, which have been going to the farmers of Nova Scotia for the past twenty years.

With regard to the splendid offer of the late Sir Robert Bond, I think it a fitting finish to what I consider a well spent life. This magnificent gift offered to Newfoundland is only what one would expect from the patriotic and philanthropic statesman. While not offering any practical opinion as to its value to the country, I sincerely throw out the suggestion to the Committee if it would not be worth while to look forward with any measure of hope towards making this Model Farm self-supporting. For the past twenty years the Department of Agriculture and Mines spent $750,000.00 on agriculture without any practical results and I think the House might reduce the yearly expenditure instead of increasing it if the House can with any degree of hope look forward to being able to reduce expenditure instead of increasing. In the first year I was in this Department the vote was $5,000.00 and this year we have to come in and ask for over $20,000.00. The principle reason why the votes have been increased from year to year is that it has been impossible to get anything bordering on reliable statement as to what we have been producing. The member for St. John's West, speaking the other day on the same subject referred to a statement from a foreign source which appears to be an absolute joke. There are 300 000 goats listed there and 100,000 shep and I think goats were placed at a higher value than sheep—in my opinion we haven't anything like 3000,000 goats in the country. Then it is only every ten or fifteen years that we get a census of Newfoundland and it is unsatisfactory. What usually happens is that the man taking the census goes into the leading house, maybe about dinner time, has a cup of tea, and asks who lives next door, how many men and women, goats and cows. and usually finishes up the census of the village right there in that house. We have not been getting accurate information, not only on agriculture, but also on other subjects, so much so that I decided recently, and was supported by the Government that I was goint to make a determined effort to get reliable information regarding the various live stock or produce that have been raised yearly in the various parts of the country. So I undertook last autumn, or the early part of the winter to have this done, and the system worked out would be at as small cost as possible, with the assistance of the Department of Education, but we didn't get far when I found that in any system if we wanted results we had to pay for them, and consequently that venture is going to cost practically half of my agricultural vote. I would be satisfied, and I think it would be a good business as far as the country is concerned to recomment to the Government that instead of voting $25000 or $30,000 each year for the disposal of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines or the Seretary to distribute as they think fit for the encouragement of argriculture, that if this farm can be taken over and if we have no one here who can give us sufficient advice, and I know no one locally to whom I can go for such scientific or practical advice at the present moment, that we get a reliable man of the Dr. Cummings type, who is head of the Collegt of Truro or Prof. Truman or some other reliable man to go over there and see what can be done that would be of practical value to the country that would further agriculture in Newfoundland.

I notice in some correspondence the expense of operating this Farm is estimated at $10,000. In my opinion for the farm to be of any great benefit it must be operated by the class of man I have referred to, and properly stocked. Mr. Bayly has gone into the matter, with the information at his disposal, and his experience in that line, and expresses the opinion that it will cost the Colony $15,000 to get live stock, if we are going to make a Model Farm or an Experimental Farm, or whatever else is decided in the best interests of the Country.

There has been a lot of controversy as to the name, and as to whether it would be possible to link up some other part or department of the Government with it or to make it as far as possible self-supporting. In the opinion of farmers I have come into contact with, they seem very desirable to have a demonstration farm, somewhere to go where they can be taken over the ground by a reliable scientific man, nad that man be able to demonstrate to them such things as the kind of soil for various things, the kind of fertilizer for the kind of soil, or the kind of seed best suited for the fertilizer and so on, and with that I entirely agree. If the farm is to be a Model Farm the people from the farming sections must be able to come from time to time while the seed is becoming model or the animals can become model, but very little information can now be obtained by those desirous of getting information regarding agriculture.

In my opinion something of this sort would be better than the present system of voting $25,000 or $30,000 per year by the House of Assembly and handing it over to the Minister or Secretary to spend as they like, because at the present moment we have no agricultural policy, and if I cared to there is no reason why I couldn't allocate $10,000 to a friend of mine who is taking up agriculture in any part of the Island; there is nothing to prevent my allocating it as I like. I don't consider it fair to myself or to the Government or to the House—it is almost as well to keep it out of my department entirely, and make it a Department of Mines, or inaugurate an agricultural policy; I should like to see the votes ear-marked. There is too much room for abuse by a Minister, and I am only human as anyone else, and it is a protection to the Minister when the money is voted for a special purpose. For that reason if it can be found that this vote of twenty-five or thirty thousands can be judiciously spent, if we can establish at Whitbourne something more than rule of thumb agriculture it would be worth while—as we all know, there is very little known of scientific farming here to-day. If we could establish an institution presided over by the proper kind of man, and the vote were no more than that spent at the present time, I think the House would be very wise in considering the suggestion as to whether we should not have the advice of one or two scientific men of some standing, who have been associated with farming outside Newfoundland, before turning this down. We can't get local men for this—it would be desirable to do so, but unfortunately we can't, so we would have to go out of the country for them.

Mr. Chairman, I don't propose to worry the House further. I said in commencement that I had very little to offer to the debate, more than has already been said. I should like, however, once more to place myself on record as saying that no matter what we do towards establishing at Whitbourne an institution or not, that there can be only one opinion with regard to the sentiment that prompted Newfoundland's great Commoner in his last years, when the curtain was being drawn over the last scenes of his life. I think it will be remembered by the House and the Country that as Sir Robert Bond lived so he died, and I sincerely trust that even now some means will be found to establish at Whitbourne a monument that will show for all time, when we who are now here have passed away, and that will keep his name fresh in the memories of those who will reap the benefit of this magnificent gift.

MR. RUSSELL—Mr. Chairman, in reference to the matter before the Chair concerning the acceptance of the gift bestowed on the country by the late Sir Robert Bond, I wish to place myself on record as being in favor of accepting this gift. As to what should be done with the farm is a matter for consideration, and possibly, as the Minister of Agriculture and Mines has suggested, the getting of expert advice. While I would be in favor of the Government accepting the gift, I do not think we would be justified in going to any great expense in conducting a model farm; neither do I think it would be necessary to employ any expensive experts along agricultural lines. My own opinion is that we have plenty of practical farmers in the country to select one of their number to make a beginning to work this farm so that some practical work may be done, and if found necessary, a Summer or Winter school or both could be conducted for a few weeks in summer or in winter, as the case may be, along agricultural lines, for the benefit of any young men or any older men in the country who wish to obtain a knowledge of practical farming. I would suggest that that be done, and instead of employing in the beginning, if the acceptance is finalized, a high-salaried man from Canada or some other country, one of our practical and most successful farmers be engaged. I know what some farmers have done in my own district to obtain a knowledge of farming and live-stock raising in the Dominion of Canada. I have in my mind the two Sparkes brothers of Shearstown who are making a big success of farming and live-stock raising, and the same thing applies to Harbour Grace, and some other portions of the District and of Conception Bay generally. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if the farm could not be used as a place to send some of the boys and young men and even older men who find their way to the Penitentiary occasionally. I wonder if the farm was working if they could not be sent there for one, two or six months, as the case might be, and get a knowledge of farming and learn to produce something.

I am also in favour of accepting this gift because it establishes some institution in the outports. We have little or nothing of a public nature established in the outports of the country, and that is one reason why I would favour the estabilshment of this farm at Whitbourne. It would also be a great help to the farmers and those occupied in working land in Conception Bay, Trinity Bay, Placentia Bay, as well as other sections. It has been suggested that it would be a wise move to transfer the House of Assembly to Whitbourne, and if that can't be done, then the next best thing is to accept this gift and try to work the Model Farm at Whitbourne, where it will be more or less free from graft and other things existing in St. John's. That is my suggestion. I don't konw whether I can say anything else on the subject. I don't agree with going to a big expense in the purchase of live stock, etc., as in the past, but I do think that some practical man not an expert or scientific farmer, be obtained. If you can't find a man around here go to Mr. Power's district where there are a fine lot of farmers to take charge of it. You don't need to go outside the country to find a man to run a model farm or build roads or things of that sort. We have in our country men to do it, and if not in the country there are Newfoundlanders in other countries, forced to leave here, who would be glad to come back and take part in the development of their country. In conclusion, I wish to say that I approve of the acceptance of the offer, but my suggestion is that if accepted the farm should be conducted in a practical way, with the least possible expense.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— Mr. Chairman, if no other member is going to speak on this matter, I want merely to make it clear that we don't propose to take a vote of the House on a matter of this kind. Really, as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, it is a matter for the Government to decide, as the gift was proferred to them, whether they wish to accept or not. It was brought forward here because we were desirous of getting the opinion of the various members of the House, and we have given them lots of time to get the opinion of the people they represent as to whether they think it advisable to accept this gift or not. I am afraid that even with that, members have not, in putting the matter before their constituents given any opinion on the stipulations made in connection with the gift. Probably most people would look at the will alone, and go no farther than that in deciding whether they would accept it—personally I felt very much that the words were rather ambiguous, and had to ask the Executor of the will how he would interpret the words "Model Farm." As has been explained by a man who is versed in these things, and to whom Mr. Paton wrote. a Model Farm is one thing and an Experimental Farm another, and it was suggested by that gentleman, whose letter I read to the House that if we stick strictly to the term "Model Farm" he would not advise accepting the gift. I asked the Rev. Dr. Bond, as I have told the House, if he would advise His Excellency what he would regard as a proper interpretation of the will and he replied definitely that the gift must be used as a model farm and that alone. He also said that there must be an independent committee in charge, appointed by the Government and having no political influence, in connection with the working of the farm. I fail to see, and a great many of my Government also fail to see, how we can possibly give an assurance that for all years to come the matter of maintenance of the Model Farm will be kept out of political management or mismanagement, or how we can guarantee against such. This Government cannot possibly speak for its successors for years to come, and this is a gift for ever—if we accept we must accept in perpetuity. In other words if we accept this, it must be forever, and it must be kept up, and that is one of the points which I can't see how I can vote for—how I, as Leader of the Government or as member of a Government can accept a proposition of this sort without a subsidy being provided by this House, and undertake it forever. That is the position I took upon this matter when I placed it before the House, and that hasn't been debated. The attitude of the Opposition members generally has been that Sir Robert Bond was a great man and that he has given this model farm, and we ought to accept it in his memory. I have expressed my feeling strongly in commenting on Sir Robert Bond's magnificent gift and on the kindly spirit which prompted it, I have had to question whether it has not been surrounded by conditions which make acceptance impossible.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Prime Minister has just said in regard to his interpretation of the general attitude of the Opposition I would like to say that I don't think that this country should under the present circumstances accept that gift. As the Prime Minister has just pointed out, some difficulty may arise owing to the peculiar conditions under which the gift was made. There is a further element that raises a doubt in my mind, as to the justification of taking over that farm, and that is that we have not yet got any practical idea as to what it is going to cost this country. We have had some experimental farms in this country, one time after another. They cost considerable money and they have all gone out of existence. Why these failures, and if you take over this farm, what can you do to avoid having the same experience in the future? What is this farm going to cost to equip it completely with staff and material and machinery, and other things essential to the work of a model farm? What can you do when you take it over and start it probably as a model farm, to enable it to be self supporting? What revenue can you get from the products of the land? These and other questions would cause me to hesitate before taking the position of advising the Government to accept that gift. Certainly I don't see now how any member of the Government or the Opposition can say go ahead and accept that gift because Sir Robert Bond has made it, because we owe it to his memory.

Now we can't consider this matter purely from the standpoint of a model farm. We have got to take the whole agricultural situation of the country into consideration. Then the marketing of the produce presents a difficulty. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines made reference to that. The greatest difficulty of all is the getting our own produce into our own markets. There is the difficulty of transportation. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the utmost should be done to enable the farmers to avail of the markets in the country, before we do anything further to encourage other people to go farming, to raise produce additional to that which we cannot market at the present time.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, the last time that this Bill was in Committee I said at that time I would not offer any opinion. I have listened with a great deal of attention this afternoon to the address of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and I have received a great deal of information from his remarks. I am very glad to see that he has made an effort to market produce on the West Coast, and I am sure that his efforts are commendable. If the other departments of the Government were as well handled as the Department of Agriculture and Mines, I am sure that Newfoundland would be much better off. I think that what we need in this country is economy. Economy in the fisheries, in agriculture and in other every line. The only way to get that is to have a place where the people can be taught. And for that reason I am very strongly in favour of having a place such as Whitbourne, the bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond. The whole thing to my mind boils down to this. If that farm could be conducted on an economical basis and under economical and efficient management, and could fit anyone to enter an agricultural life and get an agricultural education, why then I think that it would be a great thing for this country. And I say and believe that we shall regret it in the near future if we let this matter drop. There are other things that must be done if we are to encourage agriculture. We must have warehouses, established in St. John's. This could be done very easily and at little cost to the Government by getting them built by the labour that is being paid for every year, and which is given by the Government. As I said before that is a matter for the Government, but I am going to put myself on record as being in favour of the acceptance of this farm for the benefit of the people of this country who wish to enter agricultural life.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, I just want to make one remark in respect to the statement made by the Hon. Member for Fortune Bay. I don't think that he was present when I read various statistics on the subject now before the Chair. I don't think that I did refer to the approximate cost of the Model Farm. I asked the Secretary if he would compile for me statistics in regard to this matter and they are as follows:

(Reads)

Doctor Mosdel said, also, that before encouraging any more new farms in this country we should help those that are already operating. He also said that before raising any more produce we should be able to market what we are already raising. Now, is it not a fact that each year we are bringing in a large amount of produce from the outside. In that connection I would say this that we can do a great deal to assist the farmers in being able to successfully market their own produce. If you go into any of the grocery stores on Water St. or on any other street in St. John's and you will see the ladies of the homes in St. John's actually tripping over the local article that is in many cases much cheaper than the imported article. They pass the local article by. Now the only way to combat that is to erect a tariff wall. Then we will be able to see that the local article is disposed of before the imported article is allowed in at all. While we are in a position to import whether dairy or poultry produce, the products that can be raised at home and offering for the sale at that time are turned down by our own people. This is where the members of this House can do a great deal of missionary work with regard to improving local conditions for our own products. There is another matter. But I would not now attempt to go into any proposition, although that will be necessary if we are going seriously into the raising of any kind of products by our own people. However at the present time I would not suggest the launching of a bigger proposition, with regard to the establishment of markets in St. John's. But it is a crying disgrace to go up George's Street of a Saturday and to find all kinds of dirt and filth not only getting into your eyes but getting into the receptacles in which the country people are displaying their goods. We should have an established market place in this town. I have gone so far as to get into communication with the city engineer in Halifax, who has has charge of the local markets there, in order to find out what assistance has been given by the Province of Nova Scotia for the encouragement of agriculture. I have received a reply from him, and he tells me that in Halifax the Legislature voted $130,000 for the erection of a suitable market house. It is under the control of the Municipal Council, and the people are not allowed to display anything in that market house that is not pure and good. Fish is not permitted to be sold there at all, only shell fish. The proposition has been so successful that it is now self-supporting except for the initial expenditure for its erection. I have often wondered whether we ourselves could not afford it. We have been spending money lavishly out of the various departments now for fifteen years, ever since I had a seat in this House. We have been spending money on every proposition and after all we would not have to spend such an enormous sum in the erection of a market. After that we could have other markets in other sections of the island. Now here is a statement showing the imports into Grand Falls for the year 1925-1926.

(Reads)

A quarter of a million dollars worth has come into one settlement that was not in being 20 years ago. Does not that prove conclusively that there is a vast field for some body of men to enter and depart from the old rule of thumb way that we have been working by so long in Newfoundland. Here is a statement showing the total importations for the year 1925-1926, of agricultural products into Newfoundland. $4,039,171 of Newfoundland's money sent away to enrich the farmers of another country. And I say now without fear of contradiction that half that amount of money at least could be kept in this country by producing and marketing our own products if only there was a man or a body of men with the necessary enterprise. Mr. Chairman, I merely wanted to give these statistics to the Committee in reply to the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Fortune.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Chairman, in the discussion here on this subject I was much interested and amongst other things by the mention of the quantity of products imported to Grand Falls which it was said amounted to over a quarter of a million. Of course we should ask ourselves why are these products imported there, and from what experience I have had myself from being in touch with those who handle our local produce. I would suggest that if agricultural produce was protected by the tariff at certain times there should also be protection for the consumer against such things as the selling of potatoes with many barrels containing practically one-third unfit for consumption. I happened to be in a Commission Merchant's office some time ago and he had a quantity of potatoes from an outport producer and he said to me: "You talk about encouraging agriculture in this country, and we certainly do all we can to do that as far as we are concerned, but here is an instance, "I sent five barrels to a retailer in St. John's and he sends back to me over a sack of small potatoes, some not as large as a marble, some a little larger." The consequence was that that man would not buy any more local produce and we would rather pay more for Prince Edward Island produce than the local because he was sure that there wouldn't be the loss due to undersized potatoes which are so often found in the local produce. If the Government is going to seriously consider the imposition of a higher tariff at certain seasons, as I think it should, at the same time it ought to impose rules with regard to grades, specifying what they ought to be, so that the consumer can be absolutely certain that he is going to get what he is paying for, and then I have no doubt that the retailer as well as the commission merchant will handle a great deal more than he does to-day of the local produce.

With regard to the quantity of eggs imported, there is another side to the question besides what the Minister has pointed out and that is that while the eggs are procurable fairly cheaply at this season, later, in the fall, they go up to sixty or seventy cents. Canadian eggs however, can be sent in for thirty or forty cents. Are we going to penalise the consumer in St. John's and elsewhere by putting up the tariff so that people will have to pay sixty or seventy cents a dozen on the local price for Prince Edward Island eggs or for local eggs. There are certain prices we consider fair to the producer, but like others they want to get all they can and they take advantage of the scarcity to procure high prices for the fresh article and the poor classes can only buy, then, in very small quantities. S o I think when considering imposing such a tariff care should be taken to make sure and treat the consumer fairly and not allow him to be fleeced. We speak of people being fleeced by corporations but these are not the only ones that fleece a person when they get a chance.

With regard to some of the remarks on the Model Farm, in this House when we are discussing agriculture we think of potatoes and cabbage and turnips only. There are other agricultural products imported besides potatoes and turnips and cabbage. In the vicinity of St. John's cauliflower, parsnips and carrots cannot be had at the present time and the people have therefore got to buy the imported article and there are other agricultural products imported as well that can be grown in this country. The value of the Model Farm appears to me to be as the Leader of the Opposition has pointed out, its value as an educational influence. A large number of people would benefit from knowledge acquired in it and again if people could send their samples of soil to ask what they are capable of producing they could get information of use that cannot be got to-day. There are a large number of people who would go in for agriculture to a greater extent than they do if they had that encouragement and information which they are looking for and cannot get but which is obtained in other countries where there are Model Farms and Agricultural Colleges. Then the Minister also referred to the question of finding a market for what we consume ourselves. There is no question that we can consume all the potatoes and cabbage that are grown in the country to-day. You cannot buy a turnip to-day in Newfoundland. You can search all over the country around St. John's and there are none available and there are scores of people to-day who want them and naturally they have to go to Canada, to Prince Edward Island and ask them to send them in. Not only do I think we should supply our own markets but I think we ought to be able to export agricultural products. In looking over the value of produce exported from Canada last year there was in the neighborhood of between three and four hundred thousand barrels of produce expoted to Cuba by Canada principally coming from Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island and the Customs returns value them at about $3.00 a barrel. If our outport men and city farmers could have got $3.00 they would have thought that they were getting a very good price; in fact quite a number of outport men had to sell as low as $2.00, $2.20, $2.40 $2.50 and if Canadian farmers can obtain $3.00 on the average right through for potatoes sent to Cuba where is the reason we can't do the same? It may be that they have cheaper freight rates that enable them to get down there, but that is a question the Government can well take up. If we have steamers now going to the West Lndia Islands that would take in Cuba and some arrangement might be made by them whereby they could take local produce at a low rate. I don't know whether the Minister has taken up the mater or not. Canada has succeeded very well in marketing their produce outside of Canada. They don't absorb all their own local produce any more than other countries. They can't do it; they have to find foreign markets for it, and they have succeeded in marketing it in a way that enables them to carry on farming successfully. I think the Department would be well advised if it investigated the success on the part of the farmers of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island in marketing produce outside and see if we cannot do the same and give the information to the country. I think that is information that would be beneficial and give the boost to the sale of agricultural produce that it needs to-day. I am sorry the Minister is not here just now, as I was going to ask him if he had an estimate of what would be likely to be the revenue or earnings of the Model Farm to offset the cost of carrying it on.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY— Mr. Chairman, before the Committee rises I would like to make a remark or two. Probably I am one of the few who was associated with Sir Robert in this Legislature, and possibly I can speak with a more intimate knowledge of him than most. I was always aware of the fact that the encouragement of agricutlure was very dear to the heart of the late Sir Robert Bond, and although he was much enthused over the establishment of a model farm and did succeed in some degree in that, at the same time there were members of his Government and party that did not see eye to eye with him as to the methods he took. I think that all will appreciate the good intentions of the Government in bringing this matter before the House for consideration and possibly advice before the Government whom, I claim, are the proper authorities to decide whether this gift should be accepted or otherwise, should declare their decision. The gift is a magnanimous one, and I am sure is appreciated by the people of the country. The motive behind the gift, I think, is of the purest. The great character of the man is well exemplified in his giving this property which was perhaps dearer to him than anything material in the world, probably in which he spent the happiest hours of his life, to the people for their use. Considerations of sentiment make it highly desirable to accept the gift, and its value of course is considerable, and its location is ideal in many respects, and it is in perfect condition, but unfortunately the custodians of the public funds cannot weigh things by sentiment. They have rather to take the practical view of things and act in a practical manner. Now the late Sir Robert Bond, in his bequest, saw fit to surround that bequest by conditions that are such that made the Government hesitate before accepting it. Now these conditons are very, very stringent and very far reaching, insofar that the accepting of the guardianship of this farm is not a matter of to-day or to-morrow, but for all time, that that property must be maintained for one purpose and one purpose only, and it cannot under any circumstances be used for any other purpose. It is hard to conceive of a man of Sir Robert Bond's foresight having made all these conditions. It is a large valuable property comprising some 8 square miles with a good portion of splendid timber land and with beautiful lakes included in this area, and many other attractions that are entirely foreign to a model farm. The will is, however, adamant on the point and specific that this place must not be used for any other purpose. Well let us for a moment consider what it would necessitate, provided the Government took it over and utilised that section that would be suitable for a model farm. The balance of the property would require considerable care and attention, surveyance and protection all involving a considerable expenditure of money, otherwise it would be a resort for picnickers, trouters, tutors, and probably one day not far distant by the carelessness of some sportsman or some other person the whole thing would go up in smoke. I mention all these matters to show the House what had to be considered so that it will be appreciated how very careful the Government has felt called upon to be in considering before accepting the gift. The Government did not bring the matter before the House with any idea of shirking its responsibility, as I think it would be quite satisfied to give a decision, but the matter had so many considerations that were sentimental it was thought that every possible opportunity should be given for full consideration of the matter in this debate before it should be turned down or accepted. There is one point in the conditons for that gift that has been already demonstrated is not what he thought it was. He says in his will that the furnishings in the buildings and the stock are to be taken over by the Government at a price of ten thousand dollars. And the Government have already ascertained the value by the valuation experts of this town in the line of valuation of furniture and the valuation of stock and it was found that it would be worth only a little more than half of ten thousand. The trustee says that if the Government does not take it over it has to be brought to St. John's and sold by public auction. As I said before the upkeep of this farm is going to entail a considerable amount of expenditure, and although Sir Robert Bond no doubt had the very highest intentions and ideals at his death as through his life with regard to doing what would be good in the interests of agriculture he was not without opposition as to his opinions in respect of that, because I remember in 1909 or 1910 his policy with regard to the establishment of a model farm was reversed by the Morris Administration and the model farm was dispensed with. It never amounted to a great deal. Some of those listening to me will remember it was then argued that a model farm to be worth anything would necessitate the expenditure of a very large sum of money annually and it was contended that it was unnecessary. We had then and stil have at the disposal of Newfoundland a Model Farm and Agricultural College at Truro. This has been utilized and we have had young men and farmers go up and put in a course of study there much to their own benefit and that of the country. It was also pointed out that if we wanted to analyse soil and get information as to the best fertilizer, and with regard to seeds, that was all at the disposal of the country for the very asking from experts employed by Canada. All these advantages are there for the people of this country if they are pleased to avail of them. Therefore there are always two sides to a story. As much as I appreciate the generous motive behind the gift, it must be realised there are other considerations to be taken into account. I would be the most gratified member of the House if to-morrow I could see that gift accepted and supplied with the very best stock, under the management of the most expert farmer to be procured from either side of the water, so that young men could go there and study agriculture, but all this means a large expenditure of public money, and until we can see where we can get that money without injuring public service then I say it is a matter that has to be very seriously considered before any decision is made. Now the conditions as laid down with regard to the farm are well known, and as a proof of Sir Robert Bond's generosity and still greater interest in the country, he has, characteristic of himself, very many valuable personal effects that no doubt in his life he prized highly and beyond measure, and these to a large extent he has also left to the country, and it was only two or three days ago that I had a letter from the Executor with regard to the placing of these vaiuables in the Museum.

Now it would be interesting to the House to read those clauses of the will that refer to these particular items.

(Reads)

I merely cite that to emphasize the character of the man and to show that he was actuated by the very highest motives, and as I said I believe this House and I am sure this Government would be very pleased if they could find some way to accept the gift. The gifts for the Museum have been accepted and will be placed there. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines is making arrangements for receiving and placing them, but I again say that in accepting this gift we put an expenditure on the country in perpetuity, and also the other advantages of that estate will be lost except that portion appropriate to a model farm, and I feel sure that the Government's idea in bringing the matter down here to get an expression of opinion will be appreciated, and it would be realized that the Government are acting in the best interest of the country.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman,

as this matter was brought before the House as the Colonial Secretary has just intimated in order to get an expression of opinion, I consider it my duty as a Member of the House to give my opinion on the matter. It has been said, and wisely said no doubt, by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines that we should get expert advice as to the feasibility and possible success of a Model Farm in this country, and it struck me while listening to others this afternoon that after all, can we get any more expert advice that the late Sir Robert Bond could give himself on the matter of the successful operation of a Model Farm, having in mind the best agricultural interests of this country. The late Sir Robert Bond was a man of no mean ability, he was a man not only of high standards and ideals, but with great experience in connection with statecraft and statecraft involves everything in connection with the best interests of the community. He was not poorly informed therefore in connection with the agricultural industries in the country, or possibly any industry in the country, and after all his long years as a practical farmer in the country he has given his farm to Newfoundland to be made a Model Farm, and he certainly would not encumber Newfoundland with anything not to its best interests. Regarded from that point of view, therefore, we have the opinion of a practical farmer who has given years of his life, time and experience to farming, and to every other industry in connection with the welfare of this country. Therefore, we should not lightly turn aside this bequest. It is not a matter of sentiment; we have to treat it now as a matter of fact business proposition.

It has been said by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines here this evening that we practically have no agricultural policy and he deplored the fact that something is not being done to promote the agricultural interests of this country. The Minister has given an estimate of the cost of maintenance of the farm, and, no doubt, the farm itself will produce enough to maintain the stock on that farm. It may be that revenue would be derived from the products of the farm that could go towards the upkeep, and that farm may be the nucleus of an agricultural effort that may take us out of the slough of despondency so far as scientific training and practical training in agriculture is concerned throughout this country. However, it does not follow that the few facilities offered by the grant for agriculture should cease. Possibly the administration of that vote could be more effectively done at the Model Farm. I would be long sorry to feel that we should dismiss this most important question without giving the greatest thought to the spending of money in connection with it, and, if possible, to get the most expert opinion as to the feasibility of accepting this bequest. We have been told that, as trustees of the people, we have the right to accept or reject this bequest. To give a concrete example of just how conditions are now with regard to the marketing of potatoes, I had a letter from Port Retxon, Trinity Bay, from a man stating that he had two hundred barrels of potatoes on hand and could not market any of them; he added that all the people around the settlement who raise potatoes had between them over one thousand barrels that they could not market. I made enquiries from the stores in St. John's who handle this product, but in all cases nobody wanted to buy any, as they were only then handling Prince Edward Island potatoes. Now we are not doing our duty as members of this Legislative, in view of the foregoing, it is incumbent upon this House to encourage agriculture and encourage the Minister in his efforts to try and do something to produce from the soil as well as from the sea. Then again, the opinion of Sir Robert Bond, himself a practical farmer and a man who had the interests of his country at heart, is sufficient assurance, without any expert advice, as to advisability of a model farm, and, I, consequently, put myself on record as being absolutely in favor of accepting the bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Chairman, I would like to give an expression of opinion on the subject matter now before the Chair. I hope the debate will not be one-sided, as I feel it is not a Party matter at all. I have my own opinion in connection with this matter, and. if my colleagues share a similar opinion and the gentlemen on the other side of the House express no opinion whatever, it will look as if we are trying to make a Party measure out of it. My opinion is that the Government of the day as a Government has no right whatever to reject that offer of the late Sir Robert Bond. This bequest has been made to the people of Newfoundland. The present Government happens to be in office for the time being and as they are the trustees of the people they have nothing to do but accept that offer. They have no right to deprive the people of Newfoundland of a gift bestowed upon them by the generosity of the late Sir Robert Bond. If I gather the opinion of the Government from those who spoke, the Government is more inclined to reject the offer than to accept it. I hope, however, that they will still retain an open mind. It is perfectly right to discuss the question and find out the best means to be adopted whereby the farm could be turned into a valuable asset to the country; but a Government which is not representative of the people when this gift is made, has no right whatever to reject the offer. I do not know why the Government should be so seriously concerned about the wonderful expenditure they imagine would be entailed by accepting this property. It is not such a gigantic undertaking and it could be operated either on a large scale or along economic lines, but by all means accept it. The Government claim that they will find it difficult to get the money to operate this Model Farm. Well, I know that conditions are such to-day that you have no money to throw away. Yet, Mr. Chairman, this is the same Government that came in here two years ago and gave estimates that the new Dock was going to cost $1,080,000 and later on this same Government came in here and admitted with their own figures that the construction of that Dock cost $2,000,000. The difference between the Government's estimate and the actual cost to this country would represent sufficient money to operate that model farm at $20,000 a year for fifty years. In 1925 you asked here for two million dollars with which to build highroads, and, according to the figures tabled in this House recently, you spent a quarter of a million dollars more on highroads, more than sufficient to operate this venture, if we wanted to, for fifteen years, and still you quibble over the cost of a Model Farm. If we were to look through the public accounts we would probably find that the expenditure during the past year would not indicate that the Government is over-scrupulous about expenditure, and I don't see why they should stress so very much the cost of operating a Model Farm at Whitbourne. It has ben argued that a Model Farm might not be of much benefit—that there is a farm at Truro in Nova Scotia to which people can go, and that is true. I have had a little experience with the Experimental Farm there, but I should like to point out to the House that the cost of going to Truro and staying there any period to learn something about agriculture is very great, and not everyone can afford it. There is absolutely no comparison with the cost of staying in Newfoundland and that of going to Truro for six months, instead of getting in touch with a model farm say in the vicinity of St. John's. There is a class of people farming in this country who certainly need some agricultural education. I don't mean to say that we should try to make scientists out of them, but they should try to get some knowledge of the science of agriculture, which they don't at present possess. There is no one acquainted with the slip-shod methods of agriculture throughout the country but must realize how sadly the people are in need of practical demonstrations of how to cultivate the soil with real benefit. It is really pitiful to go around the country and find men working hard to get a living, and allowing a piece of meadowland to remain in sod for twenty years without rotating it. It is no good to tell the people what to do, without a practical demonstration. Just do in Newfoundland what has been done in every Province in Canada—give practical lessons as to what should be done, and they are going to copy them, otherwise you are simply wasting your time. You could leave town this afternoon, and if it was a little earlier, before the crops were in you would see manure piles, and all along you will find them smoking, showing a simple state of affairs that people may not take seriously, but it shows that the people who leave them that way have no idea of the fertilising value coming out of the manure. You find the straw and green boughs used to stable the cattle thrown in a pile and burnt up—the most valuable ingredient, carbon, being burnt up. It isn't much use telling a farmer that that is wrong, that he ought to conserve his manure. He won't listen. You want to give some real practical demonstration of what can be done by scientific farming. Now I do want to say that before this bequest is turned down we should stop and consider. Get practical and scientific advice, if you like; you can't get the latter in Newfoundland, and you know that if you go outside to Canada and get a man he will be unversed in our conditions, and his advice of little value. But your own commone sense should govern.

I don't think you are taking any great risk in taking this over. Accept the bequest! It was given in good faith, and by one of Newfoundland's most brilliant sons, whose memory will be revered while Newfoundland lasts, and if for no other reason than that it would be a monument to the man who has done more for Newfoundland than any man in this Chamber, can ever hope to do. When he made that bequest he had well-considered plans—he did not do it haphazardly; he had given grave consideration and was fully convinced that a model farm would be a great asset to the country. He had made an attempt in 1908 to create one, as referred to by the Hon. Colonial Secretary this afternoon, and though the Morris Party destroyed it in 1909, I have always thought that it was not very much to their credit, and that it was a severe blow to Newfoundland, because what they substituted was of very little value. This afternoon Mr. Grimes discussed the matter of marketing local produce, and I would like to say that while I advocate taking over that farm and turning it into a model farm, because I see no other way out, it would be a most ungracious act and unfair to the people of the country and we have no right to do it, at the same time, unless some sort of agricultural policy is formed, I fear the model farm won't do much good. At the present time there is no policy at all—this is the only Government I have known that has taken this stand—all it is doing is backing and filling with agriculture. You have put on men and taken them off—getting so called experts and firing them. I remember last year or the year before a gentleman going around with a petition to be reinstated; he had been given a job and the Government realized he wasn't an expert and fired him—they should never have taken him on. Just about the same time a gentleman who has obtained his degree, a B.Sc., at MacDonald Agricultural College applied for a position, but it seems that his father was on the wrong side of politics; I am informed on reliable authority that a member of the Executive took a strong stand against him, and the sole reason was that his father was against that particular gentleman in his District, and the result was that the son didn't get the job.

Now it is not much use in establishing a model farm or anything else unless we have some sort of policy. It is not much use raising turnips or potatoes or anything else unless we can market them. At the present time thousands of barrels of potatoes are rotting in cellars that can't be marketed, and in place of local articles we have purchased Canadian products. We have permitted St. John's to become a dumping ground for Prince Edward Island products. I spoke in the House two years ago and pleaded for a protective tariff, at least at certain seasons of the year for local products, I wasn't listened to. And that was at a time when the present Government was protecting big interests, as already expounded by speakers here. I pointed out then that if you take the Ropewalk and the Tobacco Company you would have no more than five or six hundred employees, and most of them little boys, and on the other side to refuse ten thousand was utterly absurd. There is no reason why protection shouldn't be placed on such things as potatoes, particularly at certain seasons of the year, so as to prevent the City becoming a dumping ground for Canadian produce, to the detriment of the farmers. It is all very well to speak of the fisheries, but there is no interest in them. It is the same with farming—the farmers gets along as best he can. I don't blame the present Government rely, because it has been just as bad in the past—there has been no attempt to help the farmer to eke out a living in his humble occupation, and we could easily make it possible if we only used common sense. I know hundreds of farmers who have given up the idea of raising cattle at all.

In conclusion I will close my remarks by reiterating that this Government should not hesitate but do the obviously beneficial thing to the people of this country by accepting the gift given them in that bequest of the late Sir Robert Bond.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and made some progress, and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Minister of Justice the bill entitled "An Act respecting the Ratification of a Contract for St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Mail Service" was read a second time and was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on to-morrow.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Friday, June 10th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, June 10th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Com'tee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting an agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman: In introducing these Resolutions to the House this afternoon I think I m ght le pardoned if I dealt as briefly as possil le with them, as I feel that it is the desire of every individual meml er of the House to see something tang ble done with reference to our mineral resources, because, I think, all will agree, that the time has arrived when the future prosperity of this Colony depends upon the fostering and further developing of our various mineral resources. The Resolut ons l efore the Committee deal only with the importation of certain articles that would le required in the prospecting for and development of minerals. As is already well known to many meml ers of this House, the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, under the 1905 Act, acquired certa n timl er lands and mineral lands in the vicinity of Red Indian Lake and l ecause of scientific efforts on the part of mining men it has been made possible to have a thorough exam nation of those areas undertaken. The Schedule to this Act of 1905 can l e added to l y the Resolutions now before the House and honoural le members will notice that Sul-section (f) of Section (2) clarifies that only certain articles shall be admitted into the Colony free of duty. We are only doing this afternoon what has been done by prev ous Governments with various industries. I think the Committee will agree that a great deal more of a gamble is taken by a Company in trying to develop mineral resources than there is in developing a pulp and paper industry, because, after all, in the latter case it is possible to form an estimate of the value of the proposed undertaking; l ut what is in the ground requires careful study in order to determine if the deposits of m neral are large enough to warrant any great expenditure of money. In the old contract that was made with the A.N.D. Company they were allowed free importat on for twenty years all the machinery and equipment for the erection of their mills. Similar concess ons were allowed the Bell Island people and the Nfld. Power and Paper Company, l ut in the present case Sub-section (f) of the Agreement provides that free importation shall not apply to fuel, hand-tools, food, clothing, or movable articles, of household furniture for, or of equipment for, pr vate houses, staff houses, or hotels or articles intended by the importer for the personal and private ownership of individuals. It may l e argued that, as in the case of other enterprises and corporations, it may happen that advantage m ght be taken of the concessions and that certain articles never intended by this House to l e imported in free of duty might be l rought in. Well Sub-section (a) of Section (3) provides that the A.N.D. Company will be absolutely respons l le to the Government for any of the work of their sub-contractors they may hire, and I think it will l e agreed that, l ecause of the past actions of this Company, we can with a great deal of hope and confidence look forward to the same decent treatment from them with regard to the carrying out of their obligations. I do not th nk, Mr. Chairman, there is anything else I can add just now, but as we go through Committee I shall l e only too glad to answer any question asked, if the information is in my possession; but if the questions are of a legal nature they can be replied to the honoural le the Attorney General.

MR. HICKMAN:—Mr. Chairman,— This is the first time I have seen these Resolutions and while I agree with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines that we should interest ourselves and foster and develop the natural resources of the Colony ,I think these Resolutions are too broad and too loose. We have had many instances in the past in which corporations were allowed in free of duty certain materials, but advantages were taken and materials were brought into the Colony in contravention of the Acts. I would suggest to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines that, before we discuss these Resolutions in Committee, that he table a statement outlining a schedule of the articles that this Company wants to come in duty free, then we will be able to see what we are voting for. The. A. N. D. Company want certain materials, even for the building of houses, imported free of duty and the Colony gets no revenue and the people in the country who have to pay for this kind of thing have no opportunity whatever to have a say in the matter. Two years ago a Bill went through this Legislature giving concessions to the Nfld. Light and Power Company in connection with re-railing St. John's street car line, and everything, even pick axes and shovels, came in duty free and the country got nothing. I would, therefore suggest to the honourable introducer of these Resolutions to have the Committee rise and for him to outline exactly what the A. N. D. Company want to import into this country free of duty.

We would like to have exact information of what exactly the A. N. D. Company want imported free. Anything in the interests of development, in the way of machinery or tools for mining or getting minerals out of the earth, I think all members on this side of the House would agree in allowing to come in free, but to let everything come in free I don't think is fair to the revenue of the country or to the people of the country doing business.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE:—Mr. Chairman,— Perhaps it is but right in response to the very practical suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition that a word be said at this stage. The very point he mentioned was not lost sight of, and a good deal of consideration was given to it before the agreement was entered into, but I think it will be appreciated that there would be great difficulty in that being carried out in fact. The difficulty is if an agreement is mde specifying articles coming in duty free, anything not in it can not come in duty free and the most trivial things would make endless controversy and endless trouble. Instead of that there are then two courses to choose from. you make out a schedule of things admitted or you make your list of articles of free admission and make exceptions. Arising out of that an amplification of clause "f" of the agreement was made. As will be noticed the Agreement was signed in January and before the time to sanction our side of the Agreement this point was given a great deal of thought and finally the Company consented to the additions now made. The point was made by the Leader of the Opposition that hand tools, pick axes and things of that kind could not be included and that is obvious; those and the other things mentioned are debarred by "f."

All these things were felt ought not to get free duty and that clause now is amended to read.

(Reads:)

Now I think it will be appreciated that this is the first time we have been able to put into effect what we have always felt ought to be in those agreements. Down through the years there has come to be a custom to insert a stock form of clause such as we have in these Resolutions and that stock clause as has been very correctly said has been making trouble. As a matter of fact it is no secret to say that in connection with Corner Brook at the present moment there is a dispute between the Government and Corner Brook on matters concerning the free admission of material. The Company has imported certain materials which it is claimed don't come under the clause which has been popular in years past. For instance expressions as: "Materials necessary for construction and equipment" have been used, and the Company have alleged that certain things necessary as part of the plant come under the heading of "materials for construction," whilst on the other hand the Customs contend the opposite. Therefore there has been made as is pretty generally known a claim by the Customs for a pretty considerable amount on these items. It is to get clear of those disputes that that clause was put in these resolutions.

That is one matter; the second point is that in actual fact under the Revenue Act, under the general law of the country, the great bulk classes of equipment used for mining work, is already on the free list and the only point with regard to these is that pending development of this place that in the using or in the importation of these articles they are protected from any alteration that may be made regarding the free list. I think it will be pretty generally admitted that the encouragement of mining development has at all times, and particularly now, been a matter of great concern. The indications are that our hopes lie rather more in mineral development than even in the much talked of and hoped of paper development. Therefore I think we ought so far as possible make every effort within reason to assist a large development. . Now in this connection, therefore, I would just like to say that the point which has been taken is a point that has been deliberately discussed and has been taken up with these people, and it has been found impossible in fact to put into effect the schedule wanted with regard to the purchase of local supplies. Honorable members will remember in passing the Humber contract, the Gander legislation and other Bills there were inserted clauses, which absolutely meant nothing, some of no value, and some simply put in more for digestion outside as something that would look well and that was the form of the clauses in these contracts saying that articles which could be purchased in Newfoundland of a good quality and at a price suitable to the Company must have duty paid on them by the Company. Of course it meant nothing. All the Company would have to say is that "These nails don't suit me," "that door doesn't suit me," with something else that "the price is not right," and in all these cases therefore that the articles don't come under the agreement.

That point was discussed again as to whether it mightn't be possible to draft a clause that would be any protection to local industries and I state now that it was found impossible and I don't think even the much talked of Philadelphia lawyers could draft a clause to meet the case.

You are immediately met with the difficulty of defining what is "locally." You can't put in a clause to say that nothing will be got in duty free that is manufactured in Newfoundland. You have got to consider to what degree an article is manufactured. If a man is turning out a few things of a certain line, is that manufacturing here You have got to see every difficulty met. You can't force a man to buy articles if the quality doesn't suit him. All those points were fully discussed and no other decision could be come to. It was suggested that possibly purchases that might be made locally would be done outside under this Act.

Their answer was one that I think is justified. They said that in connection with Grand Falls and the work of the A. N. D. Company their history down through the ages has been that they have wherever possible purchased locally. That is represented by them as being their policy and they say that the trade will confirm it, that where they can get them locally they always prefer to buy them here. They say in their own interests with the trade when suitable they prefer to buy here.

Now let us consider the third clause of these Resolutions.

(Reads Section 3)

I may say that has been a matter of considerable relief and a matter which we were very gratified to get these people to undertake, because under the terms used and prevailing in the past, where contracts were made and rights of importation brought in as in this case for sub-contractors, there were continually arising cases in which it was felt that abuses were going on. It was possible in these that a sub-contractor who would be engaged only for a short time would have the benefit of free importation and assign what he had obtained when the work was through and we had no redress. They might finish off the work and clear out of the country. Now in this case under this section the A. N. D. Company, which are permanently here, guarantee payment of duties if this should happen.

(Reads)

Of course honourable members will see that under this provision now that protection is had, for the first time in my recollection of legislation of this kind, and that the Government is guaranteed payment of its duties in the sense of any disposal of materials that are made. I think that is a principle that in the future we ought to insist on. We are rather gratified in having that contained for the first time, and I think in the light of our experience in dealing with the A. N. D. Company in the past, that it is a pretty good precedent to have to put to others. If a company like that, that is here so long, is agreeable to accept that section, then I think we can look for that from other companies in the future.

I take the opportunity of telling the Leader of the Opposition that the point raised is not by any means an idle one but one that has been thrashed out in every way and which could be brought to a satisfactory solution only as it has been dealt with.

MR. HICKMAN—I have listened very attentively to the explanation just given by the Minister of Justice, but I was anxious also to get some explanation of sub-section "e".

(Reads.)

In putting up warehouses, buildings and stores you need nails, and I am sure they are manufactured in Newfoundland as good as they can be imported and in as large quantities as required. You need brick, which is manufactured in Newfoundland as good as the imported article and is manufactured in substantial quantities. There are manufacturers of doors and windows in Newfoundland that could supply them with any quantity that might be required, and I think that the permission to bring in all kinds of materials for construction of buildings, warehouses and storehouses is giving considerable latitude to any company who have those rights. In sub-section "b" of 3 it is said:

(Reads.)

Which means that any company or person nominated by the A. N. D. Company in a letter to the Minister of Finance and Customs has the privilege of getting any of these things duty free in any part of Newfoundland.

HON .THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —No, only in connection with this industry.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—As applies to this agreement?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Yes.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Would the Minister of Justice kindly explain sub-section "b" of 3?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —As a matter of fact the point is well taken by the honourable member; that is the section which caused consideration to be given and the discussion of the point mentioned. Local timber, nails and things of that kind, that is the section exactly that applies, and under that section they can if they want to import nails, timber or doors duty free and the answer they simply make is that they don't import them. They say if they get suitable nails in Newfoundalnd, and brick and timber that is suitable and they can get it, there is a certain class tthat they want that they can't get, but anything that is suitable they get here.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Surely they can get things cheaper free of duty, locks, doors and so on.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —With anything suitable their practice has always been to buy here. They say they find it better as a matter of trade. As a matter of fact we have a communication from the Nail Factory on the subject.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, I notice in the schedule the agreement provides that "nothing herein contained shall be held to apply to fuel or hand tools". Now sub-section "b" section 2 reads:

(Reads.)

Would that include coal? If the company have to pay duty on coal I would like it to be definite. "F" in the agreement is clear enough and definite but it is not so clear in the resolutions.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —That is what "f" is for—fuel is coal, and I would like to draw attention also to clause 1 of the Resolutions, seventh line. They have to pay duty on coal. That section is quite definite.

DR. MOSDELL—It seems to me that in sub-section "f" of section 2 the prohibition of importation of coal is only in respect of private consumption.

MR. HALFYARD—That is the point I was trying to make. In the agreement that is very clear.

(Reads "f" in agreement.)

That is alright if left there, but reading "f" in section 2 of the resolutions it appears that the prohibition is for private houses, staff houses and hotels and so on. My reading of that clause is that it applies only to private houses, but the company as a company can import pianos or any kind of furniture.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —I cant' quite see how members can read the section that way.

That woudn't be fuel for private houses, there is a stop after fuel. I might say in resolutions is the proper time to remedy any possible confusion as to the agreement. That particular section might be made absolutely clear but putting in the word "to" after "or", so that it will read "Provided that nothing herein shall be held to apply to fuel, hand tools, food, clothing, or to movable articles of household furniture for, or of equipment for, private houses," etc.

DR. MOSDELL—In that sub-section "f" of section 2 why not have a word of two after "houses or hotels". Why not add "or for any other purpose"?

MR. W. J. BROWNE—The point is that otherwise articles might be brought in for hospitals and used for private houses. They might bring in 20 or 30 carpets for the hospital and only two or three be used. Articles might be brought in in that manner and yet find their way to private houses.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —The point raised by the hon. member for St. John's West is the explanation of why those words are in. Suppose to-morrow they put up a hospital, as they will do, or a building for public use, we simply say that we are not going to allow them to import through that articles for their private houses or staff houses or hotel. We don't mind their doing so for a hospital or a public utility—that is the explanation. If we put it in the way the hon. member for Fortune Bay suggests we defeat the object aimed at. The whole point is that things in the nature of private uses can't be admitted, but if the company erects a hospital or building for public purposes, use or benefit they get the benefit of this section. That is the explanation.

MR. K. BROWN—Mr. Chairman, I know very little about mining; much of it is foreign to me. I have noticed sub-section "e" of section 2. I have on my desk a letter from a man who has been 25 years in the mining business in this country, and he says:

(Reads.)

I quite agree with the writer of that letter, and it contains a whole lot of common sense. I shall not discuss at the present time the things that should or should not come in duty free, but there are one or two things that I would like to say, and that is that Newfoundlanders should get preference, which has not been done at the Humber. I can assure the House that I speak the truth when I say that Newfoundlanders have been discriminated against at the Humber, and I hope that won't take place now. Also that a certain wage ought to be stipulated for the workers who go to Buchan's Mine. There has been all kinds of dissatisfaction over work at the Humber, and if we have to give the American Smelting Company twenty years clear of duty they should give the workmen the wages they deserve. I think twenty years is too long a period because in twenty years a company can get in enough material for sixty years' operation. I shall have something further to say when the different sections are going through.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Chairman, going back to section 2.

I should like to ask the Minister of Justice what is the Red Indian Lake district—what area does it cover? Does it mean that the company can prospect over any vast district as they like? I should like an explanation.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —If the honourable member will excuse me; before I go any further, the hon. member for St. John's West has suggested certain words which carry out the point raised by the hon. members for Trinity and Fortune.

(Reads.)

Regarding the point raised by the last speaker as to the Red Indian Lake district, the expression in the first place concerns the importation for the building and extension of warehouses and storehouses, and operations arising out of that special work. As to the area, if I were to follow an expression very familiar to me a few months ago I should say the Red Indian Lake watershed. We have never gotten down to geographical limits; as I understand it the special area surrounds the Red Indian Lake, and the only explanation that I take is that of the watershed of Red Indian Lake. That is the only answer I can make.

MR. HIBBS—There is nothing to prevent their prospecting elsewhere and getting an advantage?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —They can do what they like over their own land. My answer is that I wish they would, because they would then do the same thing as they here propose, somewhere else.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Chairman, after we grant all these concess ons, what benefit is all this going to be to Newfoundland. Do we get only a day's work, or is there a royalty coming to us?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE.—I am glad that question has arisen. I shall read the section in the act of 1905, which provides for a 5 per cent. royalty.

(Reads)

That is to say that we are entitled to a royalty of 5 per cent. on net profits on anything arising out of the agreement. The Government will probably bring in a short bill regarding Crown Royalties, and a draft is being made to that effect, so that the royalties will run with the land. I think the members will agree that it is but right to have a provision of that sort, and it is no reflection on the present Company that it is now suggested.

The point has been raised by a couple of speakers as to what is the benefit of this agreement. As far as I personally am concerned I must say that I attach the greatest benefit of any of these agreements to the number of people able to get labour; I am not a believer in the same degree in royalties and export duties in comparison with the possibility of getting plenty of employment. One disadvantage on Bell Island is that the men have been practically compelled to accpet whatever has been offered them for the obvious reason that there is no other employment to be had. I don't need to do more than suggest that to honourable members to show how the rate of wages depends on the demand. I make that remark because Mr. Brown, the honourable member for Twillingate brought up the consideration of employment of Newfoundland labor—I should like to point out that the clause which is usually inserted in bills of this k.nd is nothing more than a myth. We can't put in a clause to the effect that no one but Newfoundlanders shall be employed, as that is impossible under the circumstances—any other clause has merely amounted to this, that when men are available we are told the reason our men were not taken is that they were not suitable to the work. So the clause is valueless, and as I see it, dangerous. It is a mistaken attempt to put in a minimum wage, as we have in the past. You all know that the experience has been that the rate mentioned has previously been accepted as the highest, and I feel that the rate will be controlled by supply and demand, and if we start with a minimum rate it will ultimately be accepted as the standard—I think it is best to say nothing about it. My point therefore is that we get ultimately the 5 per cent. royalty. With regard to the question of the hon. member for Twillingate as to what we should admit duty free, my personal feeling is that we ought to admit everything in the way of machinery, for the reason that for every machine you erect it means more labor. In a country such as ours where we have to depend so much on outside people to exploit our resources, we have to go a long way towards accepting the principle that we must give concessions. But the concessions ought not be too extensive, as they have been in the past.

MR. GRIMES — Mr. Chairman,I should like to ask the Hon. Minister of Justice if there was any strong endeavour to get a less period than 20 years.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Yes, we did make the attempt. Their point is this, that they ask for that period, hoping this will be a huge plant, and for the extensions they believe will be necessary, 20 years is a very small period. We did mention the length and try to cut it down, but they had a very good ground in that in the original act for pulp and paper making they got 20 years. We have in the past given periods of 50 years, and in this particular case 20 years was in the original concessions given in 1925, and they seem reasonably entitled to the same.

DR. MOSDELL — Mr. Chairman, there are one or two things that appeal to me in the remarks of the Minister of Justice, and the first is this. Can't we form some scheme or plan whereby we can protect goods manufactured in Newfoundland, and thus fostering industry? Is there no successful way of making a minimum rate of pay? Is that the experience of other countries: there are places where Newfoundlanders go and work where these schemes are in effect, and surely we can devise a scheme to the same effect?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I don't want to interrupt the honourable member. In Corner Brook we had to provide that Newfoundland workmen were to be provided were possible. But people come in from outside, and when we ask the reason, they say they couldn't get the men. I honestly believe that in practice these things are controlled by supply and demand. In Grand Falls they tell me that not 2 per cent. of the employees are foreigners, and they have a practice that if there is a vacancy it is to go to a son of an employee.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Speaker, I don't want to monopolise the attention of the House, but I think that there are some matters on which at the present time and with the limited inform ation available. I cannot form a very intelligent opinion, as to the value to the country generally of the provisions made under this Bill. Almost every session some proposition for duty remissions is brought in here in connection with industrial development, and to my mind before we give any further concessions we should proceed to check up the actual return in labour etc., for those concessions. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition made some suggestion as to a schedule. I think that he had in mind this fact that with this schedule we should get some idea as to what materials are to be given free entry and their value. at the present time we are quite at sea. We don't know what exactly is involved, or to what extent. We don't know to what extent we can expect benefits from this industry not necessarily immediately but in five or ten years time. Of course if the balance is in our favour or if things are even equal, as between returns and concessions, I would be the last one to kick nor do I think that any gentleman on this side of the House, would object either, but I think that before anything definite is done by this committee we should have some more definite statement in respect to this Buchan's mine proposition.

THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Speaker, I want to say first that I have listened with much appreciation to the members of the Opposition and also members on this side of the House saying that it is the desire of every member that this country should get every possible dollar that it can by way of duty for revenue. But in a matter of this kind I think that we should be very careful or we may not only kill the hen that lays the golden eggs but we may even kill her before she lays an egg at all. The A.N.D. Co. asked certain rights in the area of Red Indian Lake, and they have been for the past twenty years trying to find something out there that it would be worth while to develop, not only in the interests of the country but also in their own interests. But it has been only within the past couple of years that they have been able to bring in a method whereby the ore that we are going to deal with in this bill that we are discussing, could be separated. It is a complex ore. On account of this new development there is a great deal of hope, although I have not any assurance that it is going to be a success. There has been a tremendous amount of money lost in this country and outside of this country in mining development. The A.N.D. Co. have been paying a great deal of attention during the past two or three years to mining in this area over which they have complete control. And they have succeeded to the extent of being warranted in bringing a scientific process which only came into being during the past two or three years. It is going to cost a tremendous amount of money, before it will be placed on a basis sound enough before they can reasonably hope to employ a large number of men. Whilst I have no reliable data to submit, but there is every reason to hope for great things from this proposition, and I take it that every member of the Committee is determined to assist in every possible way, whereby this industry can be established so that it will be able to employ a considerable number of the men to-day crying for work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the concessions asked for in these resolutions, there is nothing new about it. We have been doing the same for any company coming before this House since I have had the honour of a seat in this House, and long before. For example in connection with the Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Company, by an act passed in 1905, all materials necessary in the manufacture of paper, have been admitted into this country duty free. It is the very same as is being asked under these resolutions this afternoon. Here is the Act passed by the Nova Scotia Government in connection with the Nova Scotia Steel Company.

(Reads.)

Then there is the Act passed between the Government and Harry J. Crowe, allowing him free entry of various machines required in the operation of his proposed industry in the White Bay area. Then there was the Act passed in 1923 between the Government and the Newfoundland Products Company.

(Reads.)

Then take the Revenue Act itself. Items such as Mining machines are admitted duty free.

(Reads.)

Practically every piece of machinery that is required by this Company now for the development of their mine at Red Indian Lake is allowed into this country duty free. I may also point out to the Committee that we will have coming into this country the present autumn, about a hundred of the biggest mining men not only in the Empire but in the world. A meeting will be held in Montreal on August 22nd. And from the Congress in Montreal there will come a hundred of these men to Newfoundland. They are from Europe, South America, United States, Canada, and I am very hopeful that some of these gentlemen may become interested in this Island. Because of the advertisement that we have been receiving recently on account of the find at Red Indian Lake, the outside mining world has its eyes turned on Newfoundland, and there is every reason to hope that this area will be able to take care of a great number of the unemployed in this country. And it is only by a further development of the mining resources of this country, so far as I am concerned, can I see any hope for the working men of this country. We say what we will about the fisheries, and its being the staple industry of this country, but without minimising its value in any way, I want to say unless we are able to provide continuous employment for our people for months of the year, there is no hope for our being able to get back to what we call normal, pre-war times. The time has passed when the fishermen were able to go away, and as a result of two or three months work they were able to sit around in comfort and ease until the fishing season came again. We must develop other industries so that when the fishing season is over, the fishermen may be able to get further employment at a remunerative wage. Until that time comes you will always have this happening, that no matter what Government may be in power, they will be coming into this assembly and putting through loans if they can get them, and spending the money on unproductive work in order that the people may live. So I am very hopeful that with the introduction of the legislation that we are discussing this afternoon, and with the men who are coming here this Autumn we will be able to develop not only that mine at Red Indian Lake, but also other sections of the Island as well. And I would also like to say that one of the best expenditures that this Government ever made was the voting of a salary for Doctor Baker, who is at present in charge of the Geological Department of the Government. He is convinced that we have in this country wealth that we don't even dream of, although at the present time we are going through a period of depression. We have on Bell Island supplies of ore that will last for millions of years to come, And Doctor Baker is also convinced that in parts of Conception Bay there are other beds of ore. I have great hopes with regard to the future of Newfoundland and I believe that in the future the welfare of Newfoundland is going to largely depend upon the development of its mineral and timber resources.

MR. ASHBOURNE.—Mr. Speaker,—I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture and Mines whether or not the Government is aware of the possible value of Buchan's Mine. I can quite readily see why the concession should be granted to assist the development of a mine that may contain a certain low grade ore. But the mine that may be fabulously rich or a gold mine, I do not think that the same argument should be used as regards a low grade ore mine as a gold mine.

THE HON. THE PRIME MINISTER:—Mr. Chairman,—In reply to the junior member for Twillingate I must say that I had generally regarded a mine as simply a hole in the ground for sinking your money in. It is now nearly twenty years ago since the A. N. D. Company began development of the mineral resources of Buchan's Mine and it has taken all that time to carry out the process of separating the ores so as to make the thing a success and now they have got the American Smelting Company, one of the biggest of its kind in the world to come in and do it. The member for Twillingate seems very anxious to know what is going to accrue to this country through the introduction of this Company into Newfoundland or through its operation here. I say that this is a case where you have a great benefit in getting into the markets of the world all minerals of Newfoundland, through this Company. We recognise that there is only room for one or two more paper plants in the country. Consequently, we cannot look for more development of that kind with any ray of hope, so that the great hope is the development of our mineral resources. For that reason the loss of the development of Buchan's Mine would be a great blow to this country. The second reason why the loss of this mining corporation will be a blow to this country, and this is a reply to the member for Ferryland, is the amount of freight that will be carried over our railway and the value it will mean to this country in that respect. The Company will be carrying over our railway between seventy and eighty thousand tons of concentrates per year, and in addition there will be a large passenger and freight traffic, besides the natural trade brought in there. This Company also propose to build their own railway from Millertown to the mine and are not asking the Government to build it for them. The A. N. D. Company built their own railway in connection with their plant at Grand Falls; they propose to build their own railway at Buchan's Mine and I think we ought to give them credit for that, as against the concessions in the way of importing material duty free. The proposition is in the main that the Company expect to smelt the mineral in this country and in order to do so they would require to develop a twenty thousand horsepower smelter, which would require the expenditure of another three millions of dollars. This alone is a big thing in itself, and, as I stated on the opening day of this Legislature, Buchan's Mine is going to be a bigger thing for this country than the Labrador. Besides we will get five per cent. on the nett profits of the Company in addition to the immense labor possibilities. Listening to some of the American people here now, they can hardly believe that we spent so much money in trying to win the Labrador case. So that altogether I really believe in course of time the business and revenue derived in connection with the Buchan's Mine project will have the effect of paying off the annual deficit on the railway of ours, apart from the labor earnings for our people. I do not agree, sir, with the member for Twillingate that we ought to mulct this Company, because I believe that if there is one Company in this country that deserves consideration from the hands of the Government it is the A. N. D. Company.

MR. MOORE.—Mr. Chairman,—I am thankful for the explanation of the Prime Minister because it puts a different complexion on the proposition we are now discussing. I shall not attempt nor is it my intention to stop any Company or any corporation from endeavouring to develop the resources of this country, provided that our people get employment, which is so badly and urgently needed at the present time; but I hope that the A. N. D. Company will not get the same concessions as regards free enteries as did the Bell Island Companies.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, with reference to the observations of the Prime Minister in reply to mine, I would like to say that I want to try and introduce capital into this country to develop our natural resources as much as any member in this House or outside this House, but I think that the period of twenty years for concessions should be cut down. My remarks earlier in the afternoon were that it should be seen that the country would not be mulcted through this project in any way, and I think that the words of the Prime Minister are uncalled for this evening. But I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that there is no guarantee in these Resolutions that the company has to smelt their ore in Newfoundland. If there is, I would like the Prime Minister or the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to point it out to me. I consider it should be smelted here in Newfoundland.

As I said in speaking on the Address in Reply in reference to twenty years' duty being asked for, I said it is too long a period, and I maintain that now. I can't blame the A. N. D. Company or any other company for asking for concessions but we are here to protect the people's interests and though it is not my intention to knock the A. N. D. Company or any other company coming here to open up Newfoundland, I intend to try and protect the interests of the people, and when I can't do that I will tender my resignation to His Excellency. I consider that this period of twenty years can be cut down and I will suggest that it be cut down, and then if the company comes back in five years and says they want further concessions, let that be considered then and the Government will be in a better position to know whether it is best to grant concessions for a further five or ten or fifteen years much better than now, unless we feel that the enterprise is one of doubtful success. That being the case it would be our duty to try and look after the country's interests by encouraging it, but I do not feel that we need to, to that extent, if it is felt that the industry is going to be a success.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity in connection with the development of the first mine in the interior of Newfoundland to say a few words on mining development here in general because I have on many occasions, as will perhaps be remembered, contended and stated here that the great future of Newfoundland lay in her mineral possibilities. I was very strong in advocating the acquisition of a first class geologist, and I think we have one in Dr. Baker, a man eminently qualified and whom I believe in a few short years will have justified the existence of his position and do untold good for Newfoundland. When one realises that all through the ages the only mineral developments we have had have been on the coast, and we have had several mines all around the coast worked successfully, as the Tilt Cove and Little Bay Mines.

And when these discontinued it was owing to their petering out or becoming no longer workable.

Well I always contended that if that was true of the coast that it must be true of the great unexplored and unknown interior, and said with great confidence that the future of the country lies in its mineral posibilities. We have before us to-day the first consummation of that anticipation. We have the beginning of the first great mineral development in the interior and from all that we can gather prospects are bright for its success. I don't agree with Mr. Ashbourne that if the proposition looks a valuable one for them they should not have any lengthy concessions. The more successful they are the better for Newfoundland. If the employment that will be given by them will be anything in keeping with what we anticipate, then I say it is a dawn of a new era for this country. As has been mentioned too it will bring revenue to the railway. It is then a mater for congratulation that at least something coming here is going to be a help to the country and people generally. We know that the American Smelters Company are not coming here for any idle purpose. They are a wealthy company fully equipped with a staff of scientific men and engineers and they don't do anything unless they mean business.

I want therefore to reiterate, have said many a time, that I think Newfoundland has greater possibilities in the development of her mineral resources than we have any idea of to-day.

MR. HIBBS—Mr. Chairman, while I agree that we should do everything possible in this country to-day to encourage that industry, at the same time I think we should not lose sight of the industries we have got. If we are going to encourage industry I think we should begin right here, and I would suggest that there be inserted a provision that articles manufactured in Newfoundland should not be allowed in duty free to this company. We must not forget that while these people are coming in here to develop they are not doing this for the good of the people, and while we welcome them, their main object is to make profit, and while we hope that they will do that, as it will be in the best interests of Newfoundand also, we still must remember that our industries should be patronised. With regard to that part of the resolutions which deals with the admission of materials for construction and so on, I think it is a mistake to allow them to get in brick duty free and nails and lumber when these commodities are manufactured in Newfoundland. It is reasonable that the companies engaged at these industries should be assisted and that money should be kept in the country, and I think that if that were put up to the company they would see that this is only reasonable. They have been long established here, and I think that they would see the reasonable argument behind the suggestion that all goods manufactured in Newfoundland that are to be used by the company in connection with this mining industry should be taxed to protect our own manufacturers. They should be given a chance. Around Trinity Bay and other sections there are mills for brick making but they can't sell the brick they make. I know one man who has been in my office several times and who has been in the business 40 years who told me that he has been discriminated against in connection with public buildings. I don't think that is good enough to people who are trying to establish a busines and to make two ends meet. I think therefore that it would be reasonable to protect them. Of course, as the Honourable Colonial Secretary pointed out, there is not a great deal of these goods manufactured in this country that will require it—we could count lumber, nails and things of that sort that I think should be protected, and if we place goods on the free list for twenty years, it should be with the exclusion of such goods as are manufactured in Newfoundland. That is only reasonable, and I direct it to the Prime Minister's attention. I am sure he would be glad to protect, as far as possible, industries in this country.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, I have just a few remarks. I agree with the principle that a Company of the magnitude of the American Smelters should be encouraged to come in this country and try to develop any minerals we may have here. At the same time I feel that this Company which is coming in and developing Buchan's Mine has caught us in a rather unfortunate condition, and possibly they are taking advantage of the fact that we are—I would go so far as to say "poverty-stricken"—and I don't think any honourable member will take exception to that, because practically every man in the country is looking for work.

In looking over the resolutions I haven't seen anything of very great benefit to the ordinary people of the country. I agree with the minimum wage rate being inserted, but I don't agree with a Company coming in and taking advantage of our poverty by paying half nothing. I feel they should pay just as much for our labour as they do in other countries where living is much cheaper. Furthermore I have seen nothing about an export duty on ore shipped out after the mine is developed; I feel somewhat inclined to suggest that an export duty be placed on ore shipped out in its raw state, and free from duty if they erect a smelter and smelt the ore in this country. There is nothing in the resolutions to indicate that they will erect a smelter. It has been suggested by the Prime Minister that they will probably erect a smelter costing in the vicinity of three millions.

The general principles of the Bill are the same as that of every contract which has come up in the House, especially in the last three years, taking advantage to the fullest of our poverty. If precedents are of any value we should learn a lesson from the Humber Deal—we gave concessions on everything, and where are we today? Certainly there is no guarantee asked for in this contract, but we are taking money from the revenue in that we allow these people to come in and exploit our resources and give nothing but some labour, and if they make a profit they will probably cut their accounts in order to show none, and leave it to the Auditor-General to see if they have made a profit or not —if that happens I trust the Auditor-General will make a better job than he has made of some things in the last few months.

There is another aspect of this contract. The people working in the Mines should be protected in the sense that business should not be confined to one or two who have a monopoly and fleece the people as they do in other sections. I understand that a certain Company belonging to St. John's is going to have the sole right to do business in that area with the result that they can charge what they like and the people have to pay or go without. I suggest to the Government that they take this matter up and see that the people are allowed to compete in business, and not have it confined to one or two sharks from Water Street. It is very well to say what a wonderful thing this will be for Newfoundland, but like any others, they are not here for the benefit of their health. I hope not, anyway. But at the same time there ought to be some protection for the people going there to work. I don't know what rate of pay they are giving now, but if it is like the Humber, with a minimum rate of 25c. which is fleeced out of them as soon as it is earned, by those allowed to go in and do business and charge as much as they like, there isn't much in that.

I agree with the principle that we should encourage capital to come in and attempt to develop our resources, and I trust that this Company will have every success, but I also trust that the Government, whether it is the present one or a future one, will see that unless the ore is smelted in this country, that an export duty be imposed on any shipped out of this country to be smelted in the United States or other places. We shall then be doing something to further our own interests and also to encourage foreign capital to come in.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Chariman, I should like to ask the Hon. Minister of Justice as regards the contract which we are now discussing, whether there is anything in it to prevent the Government putting an export royalty on ore?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—No. Regarding that point, there is nothing at all in the 1905 Act that in my judgment would prevent doing any such thing, except that it might be regarded as a breach of faith by inference. I should say that the construction that would be put on the 1905 Act would be that the 5 per cent. royalty would be a substitute for an export tax. That would probably be argued by the Company. But as far as the present Act goes, it in no way affects the position the Company is in; whatever rights the A.N.D. Company have they have under the Act of 1905, and this Act is concerned purely with importation of materials. That is why I suggest that the Government will introduce this session a general Bill dealing with royalties, and providing that where any companies have concessions the royalties will run with the land, and the assignee be bound thereby. Secondly, as regards providing machinery that an export tax be placed on sales of ore, I shall give it some consideration and if it is thought well that an export duty be taken up, I should be pleased to bring that in, not in connection with the present Act, as this is only secondary to the Act itself.

Regarding the point as to export duty raised by the honourable member for Ferryland, we must not forget that in the A.N.D. Company case we get advantage of the 5 per cent. clause, and that is a different position from the Bell Island Mines, for instance. The intention would be that where there was no royalty the export tax would operate—it strikes me that if this proposition is going to be what we hope it will be, the 5 per cent. will provide a very substantial royalty and equal a fairly substantial export duty. As that has been raised, we might take it up when dealing with the general Bill.

MR. CASHIN—Might I ask if it is correct that in the contract with the A.N.D. Company originally there was nothing that lets them off with the Business Profits Tax?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—No. If we bring in the Business Profits Tax this year there is nothing in this legislation that affects it.

MR. BROWNE—Mr. Chairman, as this contract is going to last for twenty years, I think the Minister of Justice might give us an explanation of a phrase commonly seen in contracts of this sort. It occurs in Subsection (a) of Section 2:—"But not in substitution for old." How far would the exemptions be whittled down by a following section where these words are not inserted?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE.—Mr. Chairman,—In reply to the hon. member I may say that it is clearly the intention that there be no substitution at any time. The words in clause A, I take it, govern the others. If the hon. member will refer to the agreement in sub section A clause 1.

(Reads.)

It seems that that will be the construction.

MR. BROWNE.—Is not that doubtful, though.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —To my mind there is no doubt at all. The object of the first section A is the governing clause throughout all the concessions. That is as I see it. I may say for the information of the hon. member that one of the reasons why our attention was brought in particularly to having that clause in the Bill was that as regards that particular clause it was distinctly had in mind, that as regards the actual place in the sense of the mill site or the headquarters for the machinery it was felt that as to the mill to be put up they ought not to be allowed to substitute the new for the old in that. But as regards transportation and things that might wear out, such as rolling stock on the railroad or engines, of course if they got worn out the situation would not be the same. That explains why that clause got attached to that part of the agreement.

I think, however, that the hon. gentleman will appreciate the fact that there would not be any need for a court house if it was possible to anticipate every objection. I take it that the governing spirit of this thing is going to be the bona fide of the A. N. D. Company, and in that connection your Customs' Department has got to try and keep ahead of the situation, in seeing how far the spirit of the agreement is complied with. If you think that you can draw up an agreement that is going to be totally water tight against the man who wants to be a crook, that cannot be done. It is not possible to draw up an agreement of that kind, no more than any Auditor can possibly undertake to say that he can make a system that a clever crook cannot beat. So we have got to consider one thing and that is whether the A. N. D. Co. are likely to live up to the spirit of their agreement.

MR. BROPHY.—Mr. Chairman,— I am fully in acord with the Bill before the Committee, and I trust that the returns from this mine will be as splendid as the Prime Minister anticipates. I am sorry such latitude was given to this matter, and I would like the Government to take its time and not rush into this bill too quickly. He certainly must realise the conditions of things, and all members of this House I feel sure are anxious that these conditions of things should be remedied as soon as possible. But I think that we should not give or extend any more concessions to these companies until we have more definite knowledge to go on.

MR. SCAMMELL.—Mr. Chairman,—I have listened with a great deal of attention to the discussion that has taken place this afternoon on the resolutions now before the chair. First of all I want to say that I think it is a pity that we are obliged to go and take contracts of this nature that have been drafted years ago as our precedent to guide us in making a new bill. The practise now seems to be to hunt up a contract of a similar nature and be guided by that in drafting a new one. It is plain to me to see that we are learning nothing by experience and doing very little new things off our own bat. I want to go on record as being thoroughly in accord with these resolutions as regards encouraging this company to come into this country and develop our mine areas. But there are some sections of the resolutions that are objectionable. One of these is section two which gives them twenty years exemption from duty. Now if they have as I am lead to believe they have such a great thing in Buchan's Mine, then they ought to be prepared for a shorter period of exemption, and the Government ought to press for a shorter period. I contend that the twenty years is too long.

The second criticism that I have to offere is in connection with the general wording of sub section A, section 2.

(Reads:)

I don't agree with that at all. I don't see why these articles that are going into the construction of workingmen's houses should be imported free of duty. Most of these things in any case can be manufactured in Newfoundland. We learn by experience, and we ought to profit by that experience and by the mistakes that have been made in the past. We have got before us now the story of the Humber, and no man in this legislature but knows that things were absolutely put over on us. Now in sub section B section 2.

(Reads:)

I contend, Mr. Chairman, that this is making provision for what might be quite another industry entirely outside the scope of the present resolutions. I have in mind what sooner or later we must have in this country and that is an aluminum plant, which might be entirely different from what is contemplated in the scope of these resolutions.

In concluding my remarks, Mr. Chairman, I apprec ate the position taken ty the Hon. the Colonial Secretary and the point raised ty the member for Fogo, namely, that, if this Buchan's Mine project is going to be as good as we are told it is going to be and .f we are anxious to safeguard the interests of the Newfoundland Railway, the Company should not be given such a period of twenty years exemption of duties on such materials as are mentioned in Sub-section (e) of Sectoin (2). We should tenefit ty the lesson of the Humber where even the build ng of private yachts was charged to construction, according to common reports. I feel that, in order to encourage local manufactures and local industries, everything that can te produced here for this project should be produced. Neither should monopoly be given shopkeepers within the area concerned, as was given the promoters of the Grand Falls industry, as this system that has prevailed in the past is detrimental to the purchaser and tends to fleece him. The Government should strike out against this and see that the common worker is protected against profiteers. Reports of the Aud tor-General also in connection with profits of this mining industry should le carefully watched in view of recent revelations.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Comm ttee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again to-morrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted and it was order that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion of Hon. Colon al Secretary the motion that the House go into Comm ttee of the Whole on Resolution respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission was deferred unt l to-morrow.

HON THE SPEAKER—In refer nce to the questions proposed to be asked by the hon. member for St. John's East, Mr. Brophy, and the hon. member for Ferryland, Mr. Cashin, relative to the invoice cost of, and amount of duty paid on certain importations by two private parti s, I should like to draw the attention of the hon members to the fact that I fear this type of question intrudes upon matters of purely private concern. Rule 92 which covers the asking of questions says that "Questions may be put to Ministers of the Crown relating to any bill, motion or other public matter connected with the business of the House," but surely it was never intended to permit enquiry into matters of a distinctly private character unless there was ground for supposing that there was some wrongdoing in connection with it which made it a matter of public moment. If for example it was alleged that the transactions were fraudulent or that there was collusion between the Customs officials or the valuator and the importer, whereby the revenue was defrauded the quest ons would be permissible because public interests would be affected and it would be a matter of public concern. But where there is no suggestion that there was anything illicit about the matter—and I presume that the hon. members who seek to obtain the information, do not allege that there was—I do not think that questions should be asked, the answers to which would disclose information of a private nature. Under our fiscal and commercial system private parties are required to give to certain Government departments information of the most confidential character; for example, income tax returns, (the secrecy of which is specially protected by statute) and, as in the present case, invoices and other particulars of importations which under the Customs Act cannot be publicly disclosed except under process of court. If therefore questions were permitted which tended to the disclosure of matters of private business, public confidence in the secrecy which should be observed by departments in reference to such transactions would be lost and a very serious state of affairs would result I therefore suggest that hon. members should hesitate before exercising the inherent right which lies in the Assembly of obtaining the fullest possible information on all public matters so that there would be no intrusion into private affairs—unless, of course, as I have stated, there were reasonable grounds for alleging fraud or illegality which would make it a matter of public concern and the subject of proper public enquiry.

HON. THE MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to say to the House, that in connection with the remarks that I am going to make I have the consent of Mr. Thos. Smythe to lay the matter on the table of this House. Dur.ng my time as Finance Minister a considerable quantity of second hand cars were imported into this country. Not having a man in the department who I considered qualified to exam:ne cars I endeavoured to find one. Now I don't think anyone in this House would doubt that man. We have had a great deal of friction over the matter, because certain people complained that this man was a dealer in automobiles. But unless he was a mechanic he would not be qual.fied to put a true valuation on those cars. Most of the complaints alleged that he valued them to protect the motor business. Now I have every reason to believe that Mr. Cocker was absolutely square and above board, and I don't think for one minute that Mr. Thos. Smythe would have any influence in the appraisement of this car. And until a few days ago I did not know myself that Mr. Smythe imported a car, and I don't know what k nd of a car he has got to-day. I had a drive with him the other day and he told me that he had brought a car down with him second hand. The value of the car was simply the valuation that Mr. Cocker puts on every other car. I have much pleasure in laying this answer on the tal le of the House if it will g.ve anyone much pleasure after they get it.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until Monday, June 13th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, June 13th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock n the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Grimes, from Middle Arm, re Coastal Service.

Hon. Minister of Justice presented the report of the Select Committee on the petition of Holyrood Pond Fisheres, Ltd., as follows:

"June 13th, 1927.

To the Hon. the House of Assembly:

Your Select Committee appointed to consider the petition of Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Ltd., beg to report that they have considered the petition and find that the Rules of the House relating to Private B.lls have been complied with and recommend that leave be granted to introduce Resolutions in accordance with the prayer thereof.

Respectfully submitted:

(Sgd.) W. J. HIGGINS,
" M. S. SULLIVAN,
" W. C. WINSOR,
" T. W. G. ASHBOURNE."

On motion th.s Report was received and adopted.

Hon. Minister of Justice gave notice that he will on to-morrow move the House into Committee of the Whole on certain Resolutions respecting the confirmation of an agreement between the Government and Holyrood Pond Fisher es, Ltd.

The Hon the Prime Minister gave notice that he will on to-morrow ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "An Act respecting Education.

On motion of Hon. the Min:ster of Finance the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

On motion of Hon. Colonial Secretary the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting the Incorporat'on of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Cair of Committee.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —Mr Chairman, honorable members are no doubt aware that for the last year or more there has been operating in this community a committee of young business men who have styled themselves "The Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Bureau." This bureau was started for the purpose of developing and encouraging tourists to come to this country. The work was taken up by nine or ten young business men at the request of the Government and they took upon themselves the responsibility of raising certain funds by public subscription. The Government agreed to subscribe dollar for dollar for every dollar they raised for this object. The past year they collected I think something in the neighbourhood of $3,250 and the Government subscribed an equal amount which made an entire revenue of some $6,000 and odd. This year of course it has been considered too great a hardship to those who are voluntarily working for this matter to have to go round and solicit these subscriptions. As a matter of fact they pointed out that it would be impossible to get these subscriptions this year. The spade work of this development in this country has been accomplished I think very satisfactorily and to those men who have voluntarily undertaken the work, who have given their time, who have worked assiduously and have acquired a tremendous amount of knowledge and information with regard to what steps should be taken to make successful the tourist policy which has been incorporated in the policy of the present administration, a very great amount of credit is due. I cannot speak too highly of the self sacrificing efforts of this committee because they have in season and out given their time and attention to this work and all through the winter for the past two years they have been meeting continually, communicating with people outside the country, and in every way possible arousing an interest in the attractions of Newfoundland. Their work has been performed gratuitously and I am sure that the House will admit that their work has been accomplished with tremendous advantage to us in this respect.

Last fall we had a visitor here from the United States, a lady by the name of Miss Boggs who was representing the American Bureau of Commercial Economics. This bureau is comprised of representatives of people in all parts of the world and their idea is, by lectures and other means of communication and information to make known the attractions and merits of one country to another; in fact it might be styled a bureau for introducing one people to another. When Miss Boggs arrived here last fall it was represented that it was essential that Newfoundland be represented on this bureau and to give effect to all the benefits of this bureau, some person would have to be found to go about and lecture about Newfoundland; not only as a tourist resort, but with regard to its advantages from a commercial and natural standpoint. I had prepared a resume of the actions of the bureau since its inception, and with your permission, I will go through it, because I think it covers pretty well all the points with regard to the Bill just now before the Committee.

(Reads)

So I submit Mr. Chairman, that as we have accomplished the preliminary work in connection with the establishment of this bureau, that it is nothing but right that some security should be given to the continuation of this work and to the financing of it which I am sure will receive the approbation of this House. When we come to think of a tax of $2 or $3 on persons going to any part of the United States or to England or any other place, on first class passengers, it is not a very onerous tax on those people who in the great majority of cases can well afford to pay it. I might say in explanation that this payment is also applicable to round-trippers. Arrangements have been made with the transportation companies that when they issue a ticket they have to be responsible for two dollars for the outward portion of that ticket, so that every round-tripper coming here will have to contribue $2 towards this fund, and in that way we will get from those people who are here on pleasure practically the entire revenue to support this bureau, and some amount will be collected also from our own people, those who go away occasionally,once or twice a year. It doesn't apply in any way to people en route from England to the United States or vice versa. Those people being merely on their way though they passed through Newfoundland it wasn't considered that we had the right to tax them being merely in transit. The Bill I think has been well founded on the experience of this bureau and the different sections that are referred to will show that it has been well and thoroughly thought out. The first section has reference to the constitution and the management of the Commission. The first sub-section gives the numbers of the commission and the next the names of the original founders of the Bureau. Those names are the names of those gentlemen to whom I referred a few moments ago that have done such good work in the original stages of this, which I consider will be very useful. They have done the work without any hope of reward. They have done it because of the interest they have in the country and I am sure that the House will appreciate their efforts up to the present time. They are prepared to do the work without any compensation. The only official being paid is the Secretary, Captain Gerald Byrne; he was my secretary when I was Minister of Militia; and all those who came in contact with him will agree with me that a more competent and capable official it would be hard to find. He was also employment officer last summer and had charge of the placing of men and everything he did was done with that thoroughness and gentlemanly conduct that he is well known for. I am sure that the Bureau is fortunate in having so obliging and capable an official; much will depend on him because he has the organizing and he has to come in contact with people and he has to show a great deal of initiative and ability to carry on the work and he has well demonstrated this in the past. The next section provides for vacancies. The next refers to the election of the Chairman and Vice-Chairman and so on.

(Reads)

At the end there is a section referring to hotels. The idea is of course to get the hotel people interested in standardization of hotels if possible. We have people coming here who want information as to where they can go to be comfortably housed and it is unfortunate that in the past we have not been able to supply good accommodation for tourists except in very rare instances. Now I think that a word should be said with regard to a body of citizens in St. John's who have recently got together and have made substantial improvements to the hotel at Placentia known as "Fulfort's." I might call them a number of philanthropic citizens, because I don't think they will ever get a dollar out of the money they have spent, who have placed from five to ten thousand dollars at the disposal of the hostelry to make extensions, instal hot and cold water, electric light, and making it thoroughly up-to-date, so that people who are used to them can find comforts in that place. They have shown a great public spirit, and I believe we will benefit. We are great imitators in Newfoundland, and if this proves successful, it will be an incentive to others to go in the same line, and improve their properties. Whatever may be said of the Government for building roads, and for improving conditions for tourists, those of us who believe in the Tourist policy and who have advocated it will have to live only a short while to see its benefits. They are not coming suddenly—it may not be this year or next, but I feel sure that what we have expended will bring a great revenue, and we in turn will get our share as time goes on. I have these expectations, and I feel sure from the information received from the Bureau and the Transportation Companies as to the bookings on the various steamers, that practically every steamer will be full this summer .In this connection the New Hotel has played an important part, and everyone will agree that it has justified its existence. Although it has not been running one season, and that cannot be considered as an average of its possibilities, even during the winter months it covered expenses, and I feel sure that in the months to come it will be crowded, and will make considerable profit. The manager, Mr. Quick, has been largely instrumental in bringing that about; excellent conditions are maintained, and as time goes on we will see greater evidences of progress and prosperity. I don't know if I can say any more on these matters, but feel that the bill will be explained as it goes along, and if there are any suggestions I shall be glad to receive them and give them consideration.

MR. HICKMAN—I should like to ask the Mover with regard to Section 3, making the tax a charge on the fare. Who pays that—the passenger?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—When the Company issues a ticket it puts a stamp on it, which it has bought from the Bureau. The Company has to make good to the Bureau, and I suppose collects from the passenger.

MR. HICKMAN—What does the Steamship Company contribute?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—It is supposed to be a tax on passengers.

MR. HICKMAN—But what do they contribute? Shouldn't they contribute as well as the passenger.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—They are not doing it anywhere else in any other way. It must be borne in mind that the Transportation Companies have invested a large amount of money during the past few years. It may mean more passengers for them, but I doubt if they are making any great amount of money. We put the tax on the Company, and presume it will be carried by the passenger. I did hear that some Companies were considering absorbing the tax, but think they found it more than they could handle.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, I notice that Section 5 gives the power to employ clerks and pay salaries—I have no doubt that they will use it. I should like to thank the honourable introducer for the interesting account of the Tourist Bureau and its work to date. If these men have worked without remuneration it is very commendable on their part, and I suppose that this House, having adopted a Tourist Policy, will have no great fault with this piece of legislation. It is no great addition to the revenue of the country, but will aid the work of a number of men who no doubt have a great interest in trying to advertise the country and increase the number of people visiting us and spending their money here. That is commendable, and we thank them for their efforts in that respect.

Mr. Chairman, the honourable introducer said that if a tax of $2.00 per head had been imposed on first class passengers last year, sixteen thousand dollars would have been realized —that is, that eight thousand persons bought first class tickets. That is quite a number, and I suppose the Bureau has sufficient data to make that estimate. He also said that there would be no tax on second class passengers as it is generally understood that persons leaving to seek employment travel second-class. There is the only objection I have to this Bill, the system of taxing. I feel sure that hundreds of young people went out last year seeking employment in the United States and bought first-class tickets; I asked why this was and found that it made it easier to pass the immigration officials. Now it is bad enough to be subjected to such conditions that people have to leave here, but to tax them going out is doubly bad and regrettable, and if we can amend this so as to be sure not to tax our people seeking employment, it will be following out the spirit of this bit of legislation, and not have the same objection. A man who goes on a trip for business or pleasure hardly feels the paying of $2.00 or $10.00, and it is little enough for him to pay this $2.00 extra. But we should not make it apparent to those leaving for employment that they are being taxed going out. We can't support them here, and leaving make it more difficult. Some of these have to borrow funds to make it possible to travel first-class, and I should like for the mover to give consideration to this and receive it in the spirit in which it is given.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman, I quite appreciate the idea of the honourable member. I am afraid that prior to last year there was a great deal of trouble in getting into the United States, but I think it can be successfully contended that since Mr. Warren has taken the post of Consul for the United States there is a marked improvement in facilities for passengers on arrival. Now I have travelled back and forth a great number of times, and found that usually all passengers are treated alike—the immigration Officers come into the saloon and all the passengers pass along and have their papers vised and go ashore. I have yet to experience any distinction being made between the passengers. I think however it will be found that there has been a vast improvement. However, this Bill will be coming up for a second reading, and I shall ask the Tourist Bureau if that might be arranged. They may formulate a scheme to meet that contingency, and I shall be glad to put it before them.

MR HIBBS—Mr. Chairman, just at this stage I do not propose to say much, any more than that I think the sources from which the Commission hopes to derive its revenue are equitable and reasonable as any I can think of. With the exception of what my honourable friend Mr. Halfyard has referred to, that hardship may be inflicted on those who are leaving seeking employment. Personally I don't feel that there would be a great many of these seeking employment who would travel first-class, but no doubt there are some, and I hope the honourable introducer can see his way clear to safeguard these.

My own view is this—that we embarked on a Tourist Policy, spent a great deal on roads and hotels, and of course our paramount object now is to get tourists here. We all hope the policy will be successful. The men who compose the personnel of the Commission deserve to be congratulated—I have reason to know that they have given time and toil and interest. I had the honour of being a member of the Commission, as did also the Hon. Colonial Secretary, I think, but perhaps we were not good publicity men The Commission deserve credit, for they have worked hard. and I think men of that kind should be encouraged. There is too little effort of that kind in this country, and they should be patted on the backs. Candidly, I don't see any better way of raising the money, which doesn't bear at all on the laboring tax-payer. I should certainly object if it did. This seems to be a way of raising money in which the more well-to-do persons alone are likely to have to contribute. It is just possible that some people will travel first-class who can't affort it, and who are seeking employment, but I don't think that will be a large number. For that reason I don't see any objection to the resolution at this stage. However, when it comes in the form of a Bill I may have some suggestions. I agree with the principle of the Bill.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman, a couple of weeks ago when I was called home owing to sickness, I felt that I was challenged by the Prime Minister as being an obstructionist. I have been away two weeks, and would like to know what has been done during my absence? You have brought in resolutions that are weak enough to make anyone sick. If someone brought in anything about the fishery you would spend a tenth of the time on it and then throw it in the waste-paper basket. If the members of this House would go to the South-West Coast today and see what is going on, they would close up this House and get to work. People on the West Coast are producing—every schooner has an average of 1400 quintals of fish. You are doing nothing here, and the Prime Minister tells us we are obstructing legislation—what has he brought in? I have seen nothing, and we are down here on the thirteenth day of June talking about the Tourist Policy, wasting the people's time and money. If we don't soon get a constructive policy it is better for the people to get out. The thirteenth day of June and nothing done—it makes me sick.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, I feel somewhat like my honourable friend Mr. Lake. I feel that we should sympathize with the Colonial Secretary for having to bring in this sort of legislation on behalf of the Government. When the Opposition were talking of the Address in Reply, we were told by the Prime Minister that by our talking we were obstructing constructive legislation—I haven't seen any since the I have seen nothing, and we are this evening on a thing so foolish that sensible men can hardly talk about it. You have brought in Legislation on Buchan's Mine and nothing else of a constructive nature, and I would like to know where we are going to get off? Have we got to depend on a Tourist Policy which has been encouraged by the present administration?

There is nothing drastic in this Bill, neither do I intend to oppose it, because it is only a joke. But where is the constructive legislation that the Prime Minister told us he was going to bring in? Surely you don't look upon the Buchan's Mine agreement as constructive? I intend to deal with that later. It seems to me that the present session has been deferred until members who have to attend to their business had to stay away. I feel like moving that the thing go through without further comment because it is a joke.

MR. RUSSELL—Mr. Chairman, may I suggest to the Hon. Colonial Secretary that he go one step further than that suggested by Messrs. Halfyard and Hibbs. I think that something ought to be put in this clause to relieve any persons, not only those looking for employment, but those people who do not go on business to other countries, but to visit their children and for other purposes, and would find themselves taxed. They are taxed enough now without being compelled to find a tax for the operation of the Tourist Bureau. I think that taxes and taxation have gone the limit, and here we are attempting to do something to make them worse. There are lots of people whom I know who buy first-class tickets, and who go to visit their sons or daughters who have not been able to get home to see their parents, and have sent the money to go and see them. They find it hard enough to provide the money. There are other cases that might be enumerated. We should go a step further and relieve our own people of this tax. We may be able to apply it to the people who come to this country, but to tax our own people for the purpose of keeping this Bureau going, because they buy a first-class ticket, it is not good enough. We should get it from some other sources, and I suggest that this be stipulated.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—Mr. Chairman, I may say that while I sympathise with the idea of exempting the people who are not over-endowed with this world's goods, I am afraid that it would be difficult to discriminate. How would we find out whether people are going to visit their relatives? If would be difficult to draw the line, but I shall take a note of the suggestion and see what can be done.

Regarding the member who referred to this as a "piece of nonsense," I don't agree with him. We had 6,000 tourists last year and according to estimates of the Bureau they averaged an expenditure of $100.00, which totals $600,000.00. Now that is a fairly big income, and if it can be doubled it will mean much. It is absolutely absurd and ridiculous to entertain the proposition that we just want to get tourists in and give them a good time; these people spend money, and that is what we want to see, and further we might interest them in the development of our natural resources. And that six hundred thousand went to the taxi-man, the hotel-man, the river-warden, the store-keeper and the curio dealer—they all got the benefit, particularly from the people who stayed over—the round-tripper is not of so much benefit. This is going to be a big source of revenue. And as I pointed out in giving the list of enquiries to Mr. Tait, people are asking not only about scenic beauties and fishing, but other things, and we want to get them and see if they can't find things that will bring them here for other reasons. We want to put Newfoundland on the map, and to try to make this a revenue producing movement, so that we may justify the amount of money spent. I believe that in two or three years' time we will wonder why we didn't do this before.

MR. RUSSELL—Mr. Chairman, the point taken by the Honourable Colonial Secretary is alright as to the outside tourist spending his money, but what I object to is that a tax should be levied on our own people who have to buy a ticket. If I want to go away to-morrow and go to the steamship company to buy a first-class ticket, why should I be taxed one, two, or three dollars as the case may be? Tax outsiders as much as you like. It brings back to my mind a ballad written by our old friend, Johnny Burke, some thirty years ago. In writing on the effects of Confederation, he said:

"They will tax your dogs, cats and canaries,
And the blakeys you wear on your shoes."

And we are getting to that point. And that is what I object to. Tax the outside tourist all you like, but for Heaven's sake place no more taxes on our own people.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Chairman, I think the gentlemen who form this Committee deserve to be commended for the public spirit that they have shown, and their desire to help the country in giving their services free of charge. We ought to show our appreciation of the work they have done, particularly when they have got such results ;they have given good value, and the country has been the gainer.

One thing that strikes me particularly, and that is the part contained in Sub-section D of Section 2, that part of their work is to be to discover, preserve, mark, restore or provide means of access to matters or places of sporting, scenic or historical interest. Our neglect of our landmarks must be patent to every Newfoundlander and every visitor, and something of which we ought to be ashamed. If I bring a man around to see the Battery, there is nobody to take an interest in seeing that marks are preserved, or forts and relics maintained. I remember having been a member of a history club a few years ago, of which Hon. John Harvey was a prominent member, and he brought up the idea of asking the Government to give a grant to repair these places, but there was nothing done. And here we have these men who are willing to devote money and care in preserving these places. If a man goes to Boston, or the Old Country or Canada he sees every place of historic interest marked off. A man can get a guide book and discover about prominent personages and places, and say that he visited there; I should like to be able to see that here. There must be numerous places around St. John's and Trinity Bay and the Northern districts, where we would like to know where such and such things happened of historical interest. And thousands of our own people who come back from the United States and Canada to visit us, if they knew these places were marked off they would spend more money to see them —they would be willing to incur the expenditure to be able to show that they had visited these places.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, I am disposed to favour the principle of these resolutions, although I am not prepared to admit that they should occupy such a position of importance as they appear to have taken in the deliberations of the House. I have before during the session done my best to impress upon the Ministry the seriousness of the situation which confronts us in this Colony, and I had hoped and possible still hope that ere the session draws to a close something can be done which one can anticipate may further the essential industries of Newfoundland. When we realize, as every honourable member must, that the major industry of this country is starving to death, not slowly but rapidly just now; when we realize that the duty of the Government is at least to make some effort, well or indifferently, towards the resuscitation of that dying industry, it does seem an anomaly to find ourselves here this afternoon expending time on a measure that is of no financial or other benefit to the country. The mountain has laboured and brought forth a mouse, and I presume that for that mouse we must be duly grateful. I do trust that it develops the element of possible profit outlined. I quite appreciate the position taken by the Honourable Colonial Secretary when he says that any effort that will induce tourists to come here will be a factor in bringing in revenue. If these tourists come here and spend from fifty to a hundred thousand dollars, I suppose from fifteen to thirty thousand of that will be profit to the revenue, and if in order to obtain that amount we have to expend ten thousand, the balance is favourable to us. It has been suggested that this will mean no cost to the Colony—with that I do not agree. An income is provided for the Tourist Bureau which is to be raised by vote of this House, and as such is an expenditure of monies that could otherwise be at the disposal of the Colony I admit that I don't like expending money raised by a vote of this House otherwise than for essentials, which will lighten the burden of the working people. But I suppose the benefit derived by the workers of this country by the addition of this small amount to the revenue be a small boon to the people, and when one takes into consideration the possibilities which I, with the Colonial Secretary, believe to exist in connection with the expansion of this Tourist industry, I feel justified in supporting the measure. I agree with Mr. Grimes that there are many places of historic interest which are slowly but surely falling into ruin and disrepair, and that is nothing less than a national calamity. One of the greatest assets of a country is its old historic places and scenes—a shining example of that is England today. I suppose that most of us at some time or other hope to have the opportunity of visiting the Old Land and see the scenes where the great events of history have been enacted during the past 1500 years. They hold a glamour not only to those who were born in that country, but to those of us who are descendants of the native born, and even to foreigners who have no blood ties in that land. We have around St. John's today many places of this character which I can call to mind, and which are in fact crumbling in decay. If it is possible for the Tourist Publicity Bureau to preserve them it will have done something to justify its existence and our action in supporting this measure.

I haven't any definite idea as to what revenue they are likely to derive from this source, but possibly from ten to fifteen thousand dollars. I fear that with that amount it will be impossible for them to do very much in a substantial way towards rehabilitating and restoring historic places, but with an expansion of the tourist trade which may follow their efforts, their revenue will be materially increased and they may have sufficient funds to undertake that work.

I feel that I must support this measure, although as I said before I dislike appropriating funds of this Colony for other than essential purposes, but I believe that there are possibilities in the tourist trade. Whether we catch the mackerel for which we are now throwing the sprat I do not know, but let us hope the efforts of these gentlemen will be successful. Up to the present they have confined themselves to the United States. Might I suggest that there are other countries from which trade of that kind may be drawn. There are European countries which have people with money to spend, who are looking as it were for pastures new, from the standpoint of the pleasure seeker .England herself is a country with a very large population, and Newfoundland is occupying a large place in the eyes of Englishmen today. We are gradually becoming known all over the world. Might I suggest that the Bureau extend its field of operations and take in England and some Continental countries. In conclusion I have only to say that I support the principle of the resolutions, because I feel that they contain at least a scintilla of hope of profit to the Colony and the small expenditure is therefore in my opinion justified.

MR. HALFYARD—I would suggest to the Honurable Introducer that Section 3 be deferred.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—If I may be allowed to interject, it seems quite obvious to me that it will be impossible to have that suggestion carried out. This has been drafted purely to exempt a class as a class, and second-class passengers as a class are exempted. When you come to deferentiate among first-class passengers, I think honourable members will see that the method adopted is the best that can be done. It would be manifestly unfair to have the same size of tax on a short trip such as from Port aux Basques to Sydney where one dollar would be paid. It is hardly square to charge the same as for a person travelling quite a distance. Take the other two divisions comprising fares between ten dollars and one hundred and over one hundred dollars. I remember distinctly that the feeling was that first-class passengers generally speaking are best able to pay the imposition of this tax.

The position that we are confronted with, as pointed out by honourable members to-day is: If a Bureau of this kind is to ge assisted, as it is largely in the nature of experimental work, largely in the nature of assisting what is not yet an industry of the character that the honourable member for Port de Grave referred to, it was felt that the method of assisting had better come in an unusual way. It will be generally agreed that the imposition of this kind of a tax is a very much fairer method of giving assistance to that Bureau than a general levy out of the Colony's funds. It is a levy in a direction which, it is felt, is the fairest form to make a levy. The great bulk of this taxation is of necessity bound to fall upon those people from outside and those of our own people who go outside who are best able to bear it. That will, generally speaking, be the position, and I think it must be assumed that if that be the general position, it is hardly possible for us to meet all cases. You will have the exceptional cases which may be a certain amount of financial inconvenience, but, generally speaking, that is not so. The remark here I would like to avail of, in confirmation of what the Colonial Secretary has said, and I say it in fairness to him, because one would imagine that this was some sort of a pet child or some kind of a novelty of his own that the introducer was carrying alone. One honourable member made some remark about the fact that, having waited for some time, this was the constructive legislation. I think that the honourable members present in the House will be good enough to understand that that remark is hardly quite in line with the fact that there are certain measures on the Order Paper to-day that will require very serious thought in the sense of being regarded as constructive measures in the way of industrial work. Amongst them we will notice confirmation with regard to the St. George's and Bay of Islands services. That is a measure that we will have to introduce legislation for in the regular way. It is not professed to be in itself the whole progress of the Government, but, as the Colonial Secretary has put it, I think it is very likely to develop into a much more important side of our life than one would at first be inclined to think. Right alongside of us in Nova Scotia the value of the Tourist Trade is $5,000,000 a year. It has become an industry. I do not think we could very well expect to get this overnight. Already there is undeniable evidence of a very considerable incoming of people, and, if we can by a levy of this nature, impose on people a tax that is going to be a contribution in a form that will not be generally felt, I do not see myself that there can be any reasonable objection. In this respect I agree with certain members who have already spoken, and I am very glad to find that some of the honourable members opposite see as the Government see. The mere fact that this year alone we have evidence of certain people coming here for conventions and meetings indicates that this is slowly but surely becoming a substantial asset in the life of the community. My point was to say that it will probably be found that, despite desires of many persons to try and meet the situation indicated there as regards exempting our own people, that practically is going to destroy a large proportion of the revenue that the bureau might expect to get from a class of our own people who, if they were not paying such a tax here, would be paying it somewhere else. I do not think that the average first-class passenger is going to object; the people who come here on this round trip by the Clark Steamship, I do not think they will object to the imposition of a couple of dollars tax.

I would suggest to the Colonial Secretary that perhaps we might leave the entire section stand.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I do not think there is much to be said about this Bill. The matter speaks for itself, and unless there are any questions to be asked on any point that honourable members are not satisfied with in respect to Clause 2, I would suggest that we read it.

MR. GRIMES—I should like to hear the point explained as to whether the holding of licenses on Labrador would affect the possible sale of that peninsula.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—The position, as I understand it, is that we practically have granted the whole of our timber limits on the Labrador before this Government came into power, nearly 30,000 square miles. Of that we took back nearly 20,000 since we have been in office. About two-thirds of the area granted was forfeited by means of cancelling the licenses. As has been explained by the Minister of Justice there is a claim put in by some of these parties, to be tried in Court as to whether they do not still hold their rights. The Government contend we have a right to cancel these licenses. I understand that one of the largest of those timber grants was held by the Hamilton Pulp & Lumber Company. Considerable license money was paid on this grant, and I understand they are going to look for their rights under promises that were made. They have in the neighbourhood of 2,000 square miles.

MR. HICKMAN—5,800 square miles, for which there are arrears of $163,000.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—The position is that two-thirds of the grants issued have been taken back by this Government; the licenses have been cancelled. It is only as regards those who have paid their rentals that it is proposed that, in this clause 2, they are not interfered with. Those people have, as far as I know carried out all provisions of their licenses except those called upon to erect a mill within three years. Regarding many of the claims brought before us in connection with three or four of those icenses, I think the Attorney General was of the opinion and the Justice Department advised the Government accordingly that we should extend that time and give them three years from the time when the Labrador boundary question was settled. It is not unreasonable that when licenses had been paid up to that time, they should be given three years from the time that Labrador was definitely settled to be ours to erect the mill. As far as I know, the Attorney General will correct me if I am wrong, that is the only condition which they say has not been complied with, and in two cases already it has been agreed by the Government to permit that, and I think there are one or two others.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman: Attention was directed on the last day to an important point, and that is the position which the Government took as regards those who had paid rentals. It was purely from equitable reasons, not from any accepted legal right, that the Government felt they ought do with them, what the Prime Minister has stated, give them two years as from the settlement of the Labrador question. Many cases have existed, of course, in which that feature has never been lived up to. As honourable members are aware, the great bulk of the holdings of timber limits in Newfoundland have been created by the various administrations acquiescing in the mere acceptance of the rentals and not insisting on the carrying out of the conditions. The Government, therefore, having cancelled the licenses of those who had not paid, in justice to the condition existing in the country itself as regards adherence to the Crown Lands Act, felt that it was equitable to permit those who had paid, two years from the date of the settlement of the Labrador question within which to erect their mills.

MR. HIBBS—In the case of failure to carry out the provisions of a license, that is not a matter in which we should be sentimental and talk about equity. We should regard the rights of the people of Newfoundland in that case, rather than the rights of half a dozen people.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—It would be expected in any Court of law to give a person a reasonable opportunity before cancelling his license. The Government have cancelled every license on the Labrador where the licensee has not conformed with the conditions of his license, as regards payment of rental.

MR. HIBBS—The matter is very far-reaching. It might have the effect of embarrassing the Government in any sale they might wish to make. When we come to consider the condition of this country to-day, all agree that we cannot go on as we are going. We are in a position today where we cannot pay our bills; cannot collect sufficient revenue from the people to make two ends meet. Things are getting worse and worse, and it looks as if we will not be able to carry on. We are getting nearer and nearer to a bankrupt state. One redeeming feature which we have realized during the last few months is the fact of a favourable decision of the question of the Labrador. There was a hope that we might be able to dispose of the inland portion of Labrador at a price that would enable us to pay off our national debt. About 25 per cent., if I am rightly informed, of the valuable timber lands of Labrador are being held at present by people who have violated the terms of their licenses. Just for sentimental reasons, or for other reasons that we do not understand the Government hesitates to cancel. I I think that in every case where the licensee has not conformed with the terms of his license, the Government should not hesitate to cancel that license. I do not know whether the Minister of Justice has given a legal opinion. He put it "for equitable reasons." Those words "would expect to give a person a reasonable time to carry out provisions." A number of years have elapsed and people have made no attempt to carry out these provisions. I am of opinion that they never had the slightest intention of doing so. Is it not a fact known to us all that the majority of those who get licenses on Labrador and other places do not get licenses with the intention of operating mills. They merely get them for the purpose of speculating, selling off at a p ofit to some other person, thereby making a fortune.

I notice that another gentleman on Water Street has secured a license, I think, dated 18th May. I wonder does he intend to erect a mill or a pulp mill or is he only hoping to-day, like many others, and we cannot blame him, is he hoping to transfer this valuable property over to the hands of some other speculator and clean up $200,000. That is the object behind it all. The far-reaching sight of the situation is the fact that the Labrador peninsula is not going to be much benefit to Newfoundland unless they can sell at a substantial sum. The hope of Newfoundland to-day lies in turning that valuable asset into cash and paying off the national debt and relieving the people of the burden they are sinking under. The interests of the Government must be in the people of this country and not in a handful of speculators. If their licenses are cancelled, let them go to the Courts.

Well, I would say if you want to salve your conscience pay back the rentals to the capitalists, then we won't lose anything. They have forfeited their titles to the property because they have not carried out the provisions of the act. They have no claim there whatever. Their license should be cancelled as they never even intended to carry out the canditions of the act. I think that every member on both sides of this House, not the Opposition alone, but the Government as well and the rank and file members of the Government have no interest in Labrador but they have an interest in their constituencies. Here you have an asset that has been handed down for years and years and only now our claim has been substantiated and just when we have come around the corner your object is again thwarted by speculators who are trying now to take advantage of the victory we have won to enrich themselves at the expense of this country. This is the biggest question that was ever before the Assembly. They tell me that twenty-five per cent. of the timber lands on Labrador has been taken up, that is about twenty thousand dollars worth. Suppose you have to pay back one hundred thousand dollars in rentals, that is all they can demand. I don't think any law court in this country or in any country will substantiate their claims under the circumstances. I feel very strong about this matter, Mr. Chairman. I think every gentleman on this side of the House should immediately consider not to allow this bill to pass until some understanding is given, that those licenses will be cancelled.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, I just want to state the legal position in this matter as regards the difference as to the powers of cancellation for the non-payment of rent, and non-compliance with the terms of the contract in respect to the non-erection of a mill. The Governor-in-Council has absolute power to cancel licenses for the non-payment of rent, but he has no such power as regards the non-compliance with the terms of the lease calling for the erection of a mill. The only remedy in that event is for the person to take action against the party for the non-compliance of the terms of the lease. I would like members to understand that whatever position the country is in will not be affected by anything done under this bill. Therefore honourable members may approach this agreement with an absolutely settled mind on this point.

With regard to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Ferryland, that is rather a different point. To suggest that the Government should cancel every right on Labrador, is a very tall order. When you come in and do what has been done, now, and when that is questioned, and as I say the mere fact of that being questioned, and legal opinion being sought to question that right makes me feel that they have good reason to question the attitude of the Government.

The other phase of the question in connection with the cancellation of leases is this, that I think that it will be found under the Crown Lands Act the penalty for non-erection of a mill is the imposition of a fine, and not cancellation.

The trouble I say, Mr. Chairman, is this, that it is going to be very difficult to arrive at just what should be the minimum rate. Some people in this country to-day have not got the high idea of the value of Labrador as we have here. The practice has prevailed as this House is aware all down the years of accepting a rate of two dollars a square mile, and there has never been more charged. And I have been even told that that is actually what Labrador ought to be got for now. The Government does not even think any such thing. The danger that I see is what are we going to make the rate. And I think that when we have considered this matter in every aspect, it will be found that we want to be careful that the minimum price is not too high to scare people from doing trade with us, and also that it is not too low to give them the idea that the land could be got for that price. I am sure that the Government's attitude in this matter in connection with any proposition that might be made on Labrador was that it would not be an arrangement for two dollars a square mile or any such price.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, in reply to Mr. Mosdell who asks whether the Government have in mind a survey of the timber lands on Labrador, I may say that in discussing the Gander proposition with the International Paper Company the other day, they threw out the suggestion that if we would fall in line with their proposed project, or if we could come to any kind of terms whatever with respect to the areas that they are looking for on the Labrador, that they proposed to have a survey made of the timber lands down there, with a view to selecting for themselves certain areas after they had made the survey and that survey would then be at the disposal of the Newfoundland Government. I just mention that to show this House that there is no time being lost as far as the Government is concerned, but at the same time there is no reason why we should rush in and employ surveyors to go over that territory just now. At any rate it will not be until this House has had an opportunity of discussing these big industries.

MR. BROWN—Mr. Chairman, if a survey is made of Newfoundland I certainly don't want to see the International Power and Paper Company make that survey. I rather think if they survey Labrador with the intention of getting any idea of the timber lands there, that the account that will be given of Newfoundland and the amount of timber that is there, will not be very favourable to Newfoundland.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that the Government has not seen fit to fall in line with my suggestion that timber limits in Newfoundland (if any exist) should be included in this bill. It seems to me that after all if we have anything that ought to be safeguarded it is the timber limits in Labrador and Newfoundland. I entirely concur with one of the previous speakers, who referred to the reservation of any mineral resources on that peninsula, and suggested that they should be included in the scope of this act. I quite appreciate the point raised by the Minister of Justice in connection with the rights of discovers of minerals. But that does not cover all the rights in respect to minerals that may be acquired, under the Crown Lands Act to-day. Under that act it is true that the discoverer acquires rights to a certain area and there is not any reason why he should be disturbed. But the moment that a discovery is made, we know that speculators immediately rush in and grab up sections all around discovery location. I think that every location outside where the discovery is actually made, should be reserved for the country, and there should be clearer indications on the part of the Government, that they intend to protect the interests of the country. They should go furher and include all mineral rights except discovery locations, within the provisions of this act.

A great deal has been said sir, with reference to the persons who have held and now hold timber licenses on the Labrador,—and in Newfoundland as well for that matter,—and who have not carried out the provisions of the Crown Lands Act or complied with the conditions under which they received these licenses. And it will be suggested that the fact that they have not carried out these conditions and provisions is the fault of a previous Government. In that I entirely concur. But at the same time, I do say this, that no previous Government had the right to forego the performance of those conditions nor has the present Government. A license to cut timber under the Crown Lands Act is in the nature of the agreement made by the Government by the authority of this act. It is a grant subject to plain unvarnished conditions, and these conditions, under the act, have to be put in the license. I think that it will be found, as I think I have already said, that some hundreds of licenses have been issued by the Newfoundland Government to cut timber either in Newfoundland or in Labrador and hardly one attempt has been made to carry out the stipulations contained in those licenses. And every hon. member in this House knows that so far as Labrador is concerned, most of the holders of licenses not only did not carry out the conditions of the licenses with regard to the building of a mill but they even failed to pay their rental until they found that their licenses would be cancelled unless rentals were paid. And then they offered as their excuse that their titles were not clear. As to the performance of the conditions contained in the licenses they never made the slightest attempt to carry them out. Now they have failed in their duty in that respect, and so far as this country is concerned we are under no obligation to them. It may be illuminating to some members of this House if I draw the attention of the Committee to some of the stipulations under which these licenses were issued.

Under Section 30 of the Crown Lands Act you have provisions which enable the Governor in Council to relieve licensees of the duty of erection of a mill under certain conditions, but unless these conditions are fulfilled they cannot be relieved of the obligation. Then it is contended by some people that in spite of that expressed provision licensees can ignore the terms of their licenses. Here is a clear undisputed law that this must be done, and only under certain specific circumstances can the Governor in Council relieve the licensee of that responsibility. It is suggested that these people have some moral rights. My moral vision may be somewhat limited but I don't see where these people have any moral rights at all. As a matter of fact, as the Minister of Justice has just pointed out, we can sue these people for compensation for failure to carry out the stipulations of the license, and the fact that we have permitted them to fail as a Governmen does not alter the law at all. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines can sue tomorrow every one of these holders who has failed to carry out the terms of the license and mulct them to the sum of $10,000.00.

(Reads Section 28, S-s. 8)

I am not prepared to agree offhand with the Minister of Justice that that should be interpreted as to the days after conviction. I am rather inclined to think that it is capable of another interpretation, namely for every day after the period named in this act, during which the default continued. Be that as it may, I am only interested in the preservation of the timber lands of this country which in the past have been the football of speculators. I am particularly interested in abrador, because of course its chief value consists in its timber property. The people who hold these limber licenses are interested in them purely from a speculative point of view, and purely for the purpose of selling them to somebody for a large amount when they get an opportunity. In other words they are speculators pure and simple trying to make a large sum out of the property belonging to the people of this country, and only given to the many conditions with which they have failed to comply. I say that they have no moral rights whatever. In my opinion sir, the Government should immediately take such steps as may be necessary to thrash out this question at once. But whatever the future may bring, there is little doubt but that a great part of our valuable property has passed out of our keeping. We have only half Labrador to sell to-day as far as our timber rights are concerned. And it is an undisputed fact that timber is becoming more valuable every day. I read an article only the other day wherein the writer said that in a very few years countries like the United States would have so depleted their timber resources, that the value of timber itself for particular purposes would be nearly doubled. One can imagine from that the great difference that it would make to this country if we could hand on to some purchaser the timber wealth of Labrador unimpaired. Nothing in that regard can be done under this bill. That is quite clear. I do want to impress upon the Government the absolute necessity of fo getting all individuals who ave no moral right, and of strainiy every effort whether by the cancellation of licenses, or by the conviction and the fining of these delinquent holders, and the consequent seguestation if necessary in order that we may be enabled to again obtain the title to the best of this property that has been given to us by the Privy Council within the past few months.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, do I understand the Prime Minister to say that the Executive Government had intimated to one or more license holders that they would be given two years to perform the terms of their lease?

THE PRIME MINISTER—Yes.

MR. HALFYARD — Then you are worse than I thought you were. Here we are trying to reclaim what has been legally and illegally given away, and you as a Gov't are trying to conserve the timber lands of Labrador, and is there no possible way under Heaven to recover those valuable lands out of the hands of those speculators, for the benefit of this country. And this Government has said to those people who have not complied with the conditions of their lease, "We will give you two years longer now, and ı you will own the right to those lands." Well, that is an admission. I am surprised to hear that because I did not think that this Government committed any sins, at least in connection with the timber lands on Labrador. It is an outstanding reflection of what is agitating the minds of the members of this legislature at the present time.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on tomorrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of Question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to tomorrow, Tuesday, June 14th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, June 14th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Halfyard, from New Harbour, ıe a wharf.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Justice, on behalf of the Hon. Minister of Finance, the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred.

Pursuant to notice and leave granted, and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act Respecting Education" was introduced and read a first time, and it was ordered that the said Bill be read a second time on tomorrow.

Pursuant to notice and on motion of Hon. Minister of Justice the House resolved itself into Committee of the whole to consider certain Resolutions respecting the Confirmation of an Agreement between the Government and Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Limited.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, this bill being a private one I was asked to introduce it and I would like to explain that apart from the ordinary petition of the Company asking to introduce it that there is an additional petition that has been here on the table of the House from the people of the neighbourhood; a petition from St. Vincent's and St. Mary's that might be of some interest to the Committee. This petition is signed, I think, by all the fishermen of that district and it shortly sets out that:

(Reads)

The petition of the Company itself sets out:

(Reads)

The Resolutions as it will be noted provide that: under section 2:

(Reads)

Section 3 provides:

(Reads)

That section as members will appreciate is a technical provision so as to allow the working of the plant

Section 4:

(Reads)

It was clear that there ought to be some provision in the event of taxation of a municipality; there ought to be some provision towards contribution to this taxation and the amount was fixed at $500.00.

Sections 5, 6, and 7 set out that:

(Reads)

In connection with the agreement proper it shortly provides:

(Reads)

In regard to Section 4, I would like to say that the application of the Company was for a period of twenty years and then provided the expenditure was made there would be a renewal for a further period of twenty-five years. It was felt that instead of binding some future legislature to a period of twenty-five years that a straight period of thirty years would probably give them ample protection for the reason th t if the operations are successful thirty years from now whatever leg'-lature is in power will see that they do not suffer by reason of that for whatever investments they have made.

(After Section 6.)

I would like to say that clause was put in because it was felt that there has been occasions, very rarely, I understand, in the past when it has been necessary to anticipate that that might happen and this merely provides that irrespective of anything the Company may do, power is given to the people to protect themselves under the circumstances mentioned.

(Reads)

I don't know, Mr. Chairman, that I can do more than merely say that I was instructed by those interested in this proposal that it is largely an experiment. For very many years it has been felt by the people up there that quite a fishery could be carried on in the waters of Holyrood Pond. The present proposal is to try out the fishery in the general sense to a certain degree, but I think the idea is largely something in the nature of a fish meal plant. Those interested feel that if Holyrood Pond is as prolific and as regular in the matter of fishery wealth as has been estimated that the industry ought be not alone beneficial to the residents of the locality but should be a profitable one to those seeking these concessions. As I said however it is largely in the nature of an experiment and for that reason I do no more than say that it has this advantage in this particular instance that it is supported and practically requested by the people themselves who are largely concerned in that fishery.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, I have just been able to follow the honourable introducer of the Bill in Resolutions and while I have no objection to this bill being put through, with regard to the general rights to the people in utilising the pond and the rights of fishing in the pond, I think there are some extremes. In the Resolutions I notice in paragraph 4 that:

Why confine it to the residents of places between Peter's River and Mall Bay? I understand that it is a fourteen mile inlet of the Bay and supposing fishermen from somewhere else wanted to go there and fish why shouldn't they be given the same rights and be allowed to go there and fish with hook and line and bultows?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—If that were so it would not be much use in these people putting up the plant. If the whole country can go there it is not much encouragement to them to try and make a success of this proposition. It was felt that the only persons to operate there should be the residents of these places.

MR. HICKMAN—I don't see why the sea should be confined to people of a particular section. Why shouldn't the people in other portions of the Island where there are similar enclosed salt water ponds ask for similar rights. I don't think there should be anything in these Resolutions to confine those waters to any particular residents.

Section 4 says people shall have the right of catching fish there by hook and line including bultows and of catching bait fishes there by any means available, but so as the Company's operations shall not in any way be unreasonably interfered with. Certainly they can't fish there with bultows if this Company is going to use trawls or have traps or nets there. So it is brought down after all for those people to catching fish by hand line and that is about the only right given and that is given to a small section of the coast.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I may say that we telegraphed the Parish Priest there to ask if the people thoroughly understood that they would have no right to fish with bultows there and that they really understood what they were confined to and he informed us that they had expressed themselves as perfectly satisfied.

MR. HICKMAN—Paragraph 5 says:

(Reads)

They have access to the rivers but not to the sea?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Sometimes they get in and can't get out for two years.

MR. HICKMAN—Why is the provision in paragraph 8. What does that ten thousand represent? Will the gates cost that much?

MON. MR. SULLIVAN—They may cost a considerable amount. They have to experiment to find out what is suitable. They must under this erect a plant and continuously operate.

MR. HICKMAN—Paragraph 12:

(Reads)

What is that plant and fixtures? What sort of material do they require to erect their buildings—felt, locks, doors, sashes and putty and such things? You are allowing them to bring in these things free of duty. I think it should be specifically provided that they are not to bring in anything manufactured in this country.

These are a few observations I considered as the hon. introducer was speaking, and I think they should be taken up.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, I should like just a word. I fully appreciate the points raised, but I should like the Committee to understand that this is a case where the people of the place distinctly say that, as far as they are concerned, there is no misunderstanding. The Prime Minister has been in touch with Father Battcock, and he clearly says that. It says here:

(Reads)

Now I don't think this ought to be viewed as an ordinary arm of the sea, as it is practically almost like an inland pond, and the situation has been that down through the years the prospect of development by someone has been alive. The honourable member himself would be the last to go and develop a proposition of that sort without reasonable protection, and these resolutions merely provide that. Instead of having a general right to fish, the people of the vicinity are given a right to fish there. There is a decided difference between this particular area and an ordinary arm of the sea.

The other point is answered by saying that there will not be an elaborate admission of materials after all, except a few hand tools and things of that sort. And it may be safely anticipated that in view of the fact that this undertaking is confined to a Company who will not probably spend at first more than $10,000, that only by growth of the undertaking is the expenditure likely to increase, and it may be considered that growth may be most beneficial in the interests of the people and the fisheries there. If it develops into a great big success it is a matter of very considerable moment in fishery development.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, did I understand the Minister of Justice to justify this because this was somewhat in the class of an inland pond? Is that a justification?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—

I said there was quite a difference between an arm of the sea and this place.

DR. MOSDELL—You referred to it as an inland pond and gave that as a justification.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—No; I said that it compared more with an inland pond than an arm of the sea. I did not use that as a justification, but it would perhaps require different treatment.

DR. MOSDELL—If you admit that as a justification, you can go anywhere and do the same with inland ponds. My deduction is that you justified the proposition by describing this particular body of water by saying that it was like an inland pond, and that it was therefore quite justifiable to give an exclusive right to it. Is that the position?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—You can make any deduction you like from a wrong premise, and I submit your premise is quite wrong. However that is somewhat of the position.

DR. MOSDELL—Then if you give the exclusive right to fish to this Company and the residents, couldn't that apply to the Salmonier River?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—There is nothing very remarkable about that. It has often been argued that we should lease the Salmonier River.

DR. MOSDELL—Yes, but that is a policy which every government has avoided.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Yes, because we haven't had sense enough to take advantage of it.

DR. MOSDELL—Do I understand then that this is the beginning of a new policy? You are forming a precedent.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Certainly not. I should like to say in connection with this, that I do not think there is any analogy. So far as the exclusive rights of fishery are concerned, we have almost that condition with regard to drawing for berths by fishermen. It is not so in law, but is nearly so in actual practice. But the second point is interesting because I have decided views on that line—the point raised is not an indication of the Government's views, but if it were there would be a good deal to be said in favor of it. The Game and Inland Fisheries Board has been discussing with the present and previous administrations to hire out the pools, and that has been a subject of debate for years. Every honourable member knows that there are rivers where scarcely a line is thrown, and the ordinary fisherman doesn't even see them. Even if that were our policy there would be nothing in it to be alarmed over. But the Bill does not foreshadow anything of that sort; it is designed merely to meet the proposition put up, and instead of giving absolute exclusive privileges, the rights of the people of that part are preserved.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—There is no fish up there to catch unless they put up these gates, and if they can get them to work they can hold the fish. They will be able to get more fish, and this ought to be a great boon to the fishermen. This thing has been suggested long before I went into politics, and I remember Mr. Neilsen was sent up there, and some attempt was made to put up a gate with no measure of success. The only thing I am afraid of is that this company will not be successful in putting up their gates. It is a very exposed piece of beach—the Leader of the Opposition knows it as well as I do, and what difficulty there will be in putting the gate up and keeping the gut open. I am very much afraid that their culvert will be filled up, as the gut is at the present time.

MR. BRADLEY—What is the size of the pond?

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—It is about

15 or 16 miles long and a mile or a mile and a half wide. The water is very deep, going to 90' within 200 feet of the beach. There is no outlet, and in the spring the people have to get out and dig a trench through the beach to see that the water goes out and does not flood the homes and stores of the residents. This culvert will provide for that, if the sea does not heave the beach up on it.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask who is connected with this proposition, and what are the standing and resources of these people? They are getting great concessions, in the 30 years' exclusive rights and the 20 years' freedom from duty. Is the Government quite satisfied as to the bonafides of the company, and why they should want such a lengthy period? Take the Hudson Bay Company who are operating the cold storage plant in St. John's. They took it over and were satisfied with two years for experimentation in connection with the fisheries of the whole country generally. Theirs is an experiment on a large scale, and why should we give these people 30 years to experiment? It looks like giving a chance to speculators.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Regarding that point, they wanted two years merely to test it out; if they decide to carry on they may then make their request. The other point, regarding the personnel of the company is of more importance. As I understand it, the gentlemen mainly interested are Hon. R. B. Job, and Mr. P. H. Cowan who is the secretary—I think he is the main promoter. Regarding the whole venture, I have intimated to my associates, the members for the district, that they have to bear the burden of establishing its wisdom or otherwise, as the case may be. But I do want to say that from information given me by Mr. Job this morning, when I asked if they would be likely to enlarge, he told me that it was absolutely an experiment—it may or may not materialize, but it was absolutely impossible for him or anybody else to say whether it would be a success or not.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two in this matter, because I can say as far as Mr. Job is concerned, he is not very keen about the business. He has been urged to promote it because of the pressure brought to bear upon him by the people of St. Vincent's and St. Mary's. He said to me only the other day that if it didn't go through soon he would give it up, and when we substituted 25 years for 50 years, he said he thought he would drop it. He is not keen, and would not be disappointed if it were dropped. But the proposition as I see it is that the fishermen of St. Vincent's and St. Mary's often find they have bad fish and don't get much returns, and the result is that they are looking for a way of getting better returns, and I see it in this proposition of Holyrood Pond. The gentlemen on the other side have been talking a great deal about the Government doing nothing for the fishermen, and here are a number of fishermen asking for something that will benefit them. They are willing to have it tried out, and Mr. Job is willing to undertake it. I have no doubt of his being able to finance it, but I feel that if he senses opposition he will drop it.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Chairman, I happen to know something about Holyrood Pond. This is the first time I ever heard that they make bad fish in St. Mary's; I thought they made the best of fish. Holyrood Pond has been up in St. Vincent's since Newfoundland was discovered — of course wherever you find lawyers you will find lots of debate. I did not stand up here to knock this but to support it, and if it is going to be a benefit to the fishermen of St. Vincent's and St. Mary's I give it my hearty support. There may be some technicalities arise for discussion, but this is the first fishery legislation since the Monroe Government took office, and it affords me great pleasure to support it.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a word or two to what has been said in connection with this matter. I take it from what I have heard here that the company controls the waters of Holyrood Pond once this Bill is passed. I presume they intend building a culvert so that the fish can go in at high tide, or built in such a way that when the tide goes out they are in something like a trap, and then the company will proceeed to catch the fish in the Pond and will debar the fishermen from fishing with trap or seine. The Pond is only one and a half miles wide, and the company will get all the fish and the fishermen nothing, except, perhaps, a little employment. As far as being allowed to go in and use nets is concerned, I don't think they will be able to do so.

In view of the fact that they want it themselves and that they have petitioned for it, I suppose they have got to suffer for themselves.

With regard to the proposal, I want to give it my hearty support, and I also want to put myself on record as saying that as far as every individual fisherman is concerned, the only thing that he is going to get out of it is a little work; that as far as catching fish and selling it is concerned, that the company are probably going to use their own gasoline trawlers and cod seine or trap skiff and they will catch their own fish and ship men every summer to do it, but there will be no great deal of selling to the company.

I do not know whether the men understand that or not, but if they don't understand it and don't want it, then it is up to us to throw it out; but if they do understand it and want it, then we should help it.

I agree that the principle should be laid down that fishermen from all over the island should have every right to come in and fish there. One end of the country belongs to the other end just the same. Every fishing settlement no doubt has its own local laws with regard to catching fish to try and carry the prosecution of the fishery on to the best interests of those in that particular locality.

I think that I can for the first time stand up and extend my hearty congratulations to the Government. I feel that it behoves every member of the House and every member of the Opposition to extend congratulations to that august body known as the Monroe Administration in view of the fact that after three years in office some proposal has been put up to them to do something for the fishermen and they have condescended to bring a Bill before the House to do it. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think every member on this side of the House and every member on the Government side should get up and congratulate the Government on introducing these resolutions; but, true to its traditions, it has introduced legislation to give control, as it has been giving during the past, to a company. It is wonderful that after a petition has been presented the Government has condescended to carry out the prayer of the petition. It would be interesting to see how many other petitions have been presented and have not received the same consideration as this one got, but no doubt if we had associated with these petitions people of the standing, of the aristocratic standing, I might say, of those associated with this one, those other petitions would have received the same consideration as this one. Why, the petitions presented to this House could start a bonfire and no doubt it would form an effigy to the Monroe Administration. I say I congratulate them sincerely on having at last granted one, and I trust the promoters of this company shall meet with every success, which they evidently shall at the expense of the fishermen of St. Vincent's and Mall Bay.

I understand that also one of the objects of the company is the putting of fresh fish on the market at St. John's. Well, I trust that will be successful, but I don't know that the local fishermen of St. John's will be very pleased to have a company control the fresh fish industry where they have been accustomed to sell.

I again congratulate the Government and I trust that within the next twenty-four hours that we shall have another piece of legislation with regard to the fisheries, even though criticisms on it may not be considered constructive in their minds. Even so we are always ready to help any proposition in the best interests of the country.

DR. MOSDELL—I would like the Minister of Justice to explain to us with regard to Section 9, what kind of a fish plant is proposed. The nature of the operations as referred to in these Resolutions is very vague.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The only information I can get is that the operations will be twofold. Presumably it is to be a fresh fish proposition, but that in conjunction with it is this fish meal plant. Their intention is to store fish in cold storage.

DR. MOSDELL — The proposal seems to be something like this. Here is this Company prepared to spend $20,000, the price of a good sized fishing premises. Take for example Harvey and Company's premises at Belleoram, costing, perhaps, fifty to sixty thousand dollars to instal. Because Harvey and Company have that plant at Belleoram they don't claim the right to keep other fishermen away from there and prevent the fishermen there from interfering with them. They take a chance on enough fish being supplied to them. This Company for undertaking to spend $20,000, an amount that can do very little more than construct the gate referred to in the Resolutions, insist on getting all those very valuable concessions. I quite agree that the wishes of the people of this section should be acceded to as far as possible in the matter but are we sure that in assuming the attitude of complying with the wishes of the people the promotors of the Company are not exploiting the popular wishes and that the people are fully aware of all that is involved in this? The Company for expending $20,000 gets a monopoly of this pond. That is what it amounts to, because, as has been pointed out, if the Company is to use a lot of fish nets as they are permitted to by this Act, and the fishermen can only use the methods approved by the Company, that the rights of the fishermen as to the use of appliances there are going to be very restricted. The Company are allowed concessions of free entry.

(Reads)

Also they get property worth something, perhaps only for purposes of speculation.

I contend that the passing of this measure and granting of these concessions will be setting a precedent that is going to cause a deal of trouble.

My objection is not that you benefit only these fishermen, but that you are setting a precedent that may give trouble regarding the exclusive fishing rights or monopolies on specified sections of our coast. Then, too, it appears to me that the major portion of benefits under this measure goes to the promoters of the bill, that it is, therefore, not desirable that the bill go through in the present form and that the Government should be ready to consider reasonable amendments thereto.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chai:man, I should like to reply to the last speaker. I fully appreciate the position that the various speakers have taken, and say in all humility that I am thankful for it. I told the honourable member for Burin that we waited for him to get back, and that is the explanation of the first Fishery Bill. I want to say now that the honourable members who have taken the position that Holyrood Pond has been up there all these years, and that this is an attempt to try it out, have hit the nail on the head. That is all it is.

I don't think the points raised by the last speaker need worry us. I don't say that the imprimatur of the parish priest binds us in any way, but I do say that so far as it represents the wishes of the people, the honourable members can be absolutely sure that there is no doubt about it—there is no possible doubt about the attitude of the people. They have been kept in touch with this—Father Battcock was present at a meeting at which Mr. Job, and the Clerk of the House, who is assisting in the work of my department were also present, and all phases of these resolutions were gone into, so that honourable members may accept the assurance from me that there is no misunderstanding in the mind of that gentleman, who came there in the interests of the people. It is not a question of the people not understanding the ramifications of this—it was all thoroughly threshed out, and I might say he is a very intelligent gentleman, and thoroughly appreciated the position. I will say also in fairness to those concerned that it is an actual fact that the people of the locality are clamoring most for this, as the Prime Minister has said. When the Government started to restrict the period of years. the attitude of Mr. Job was that he had been asked to try this out, and that he wasn't over-enthusiastic, that it was simply an experiment, and might be a success or a failure. But his attitude indicated that if undue force was operated against it, he would not be over-keen about the matter. What I would like the House to understand is that the pressure to instigate this comes from the people themselves.

There is nothing in the way of an exclusive right given to this concern. But accepting the charge that it tends to give an exclusive right to the fishery, we have been handing out for a number of years, exclusive rights in other industries, and I think that if these people are going to exploit something new, it is only reasonable to give them some protection. I might say for myself that I would pass a Bill of this sort for any section of the country at any time. I am not binding the Government by that, of course. Isn't it the history of every enterprise that someone has to go in and start it, and usually not for their health—it is a business proposition. It has to contain a reasonable indication of success or they would not tackle it. I do think that with regard to the views of honorable gentlemen who have spoken, which I respect, there is nothing that we ought to feel alarmed about.

MR. BRADLEY — Mr. Chairman, without desiring to delay the Committee, I have a few remarks to make before we proceed further, particularly in view of what the Minister of Justice has said. First, it seems that this Pond has never been of much use from the standpoint of the fishery, and looking at it from that angle, it would appear that any proposition to develop it so that it may produce is desirable, and it seems reasonable to give any fair concessions that this company would require. But I find that they ask concessions, not merely for the development of this particular pond, but for associated enterprises. If the concessions asked were confined to the free entry of those articles which are requisite to build that trap or culvert, or whatever they require in that line, it would be clearly reasonable, and I don't think that the residents of that or any part of the Colony would object. But I doubt if those persons who are most closely concerned in the matter—namely, the fishermen—really understand just exactly what these people are asking under these resolutions. Section 12 reads as follows:

(Reads.)

Now that is practically a blanket clause for a period of 20 years under which they are entitled to import all these things duty free. It seems to me that they could obtain an electric lighting plant for supplying light to towns, and that has nothing to do with a fish plant. No doubt they want power to run their fish plant, and to develop it for that purpose, but does the Government know that in Petty Harbor there is a fish meal plant on which duty was paid, and why should this company have an advantage over another concern—this seems to me to clearly discriminate between these establishments. I agree that so far as the gate or culvert is concerned we should give them free entry on all things necessary to erect that gate or culvert, but so far as subsequent operations are concerned, other principles apply. Surely the placing of the gate or culvert is what is going to give them the fish, and they ought to be permittted to bring that in duty free. But when afterwards we undertake to give free entry to everything for factories, or developing water power or electric light, we are discriminating against firms already operating. I know of one fish meal concern operating at Petty Harbor to-day which is paying the ordinary duties, and you are going to allow these people to obtain an advantage over them, to give them an undue advantage by lessening the cost of production. I don't usually speak for capitalists, but I feel that it would be unfair to allow one capitalist to gain an advantage in this way over another. If one can carry on without concessions, and pay the ordinary taxes, I don't see how you can justify giving any concessions for the carrying on of that industry under the present resolutions.

As I say they operate at Petty Harbor by steam and have to pay ordinary duties. They even had to pay duty on coal that came in through St. John's; they had to pay duty on all piping; in fact on the whole plant. Now it is contemplated to allow these people to get a plant in duty free. We would be quite agreeable to giving free entry to those things which are requisite to turn that Holyrood Pond into a fish producing body of water. This project, however, should not get any advantage over any other concern. Such discrimination will tend to drive independent men out of business altogether.

MIN. OF AGRICULTURE & MINES —Mr. Chairman, to get back to 1913, one of the first officials I had anything to do with came from a part of the section dealt with in these resolutions. In 1914 or 1915 a company was formed here in St. John's, and I think Mr. Dove, of Steer Brothers—Mr. Wilfred Dove—was sent away to the United States to try and secure sufficient capital to inaugurate the industry outlined, and consequently I might say that the agitation so far as the people in the section referred to in these resolutions is a very popular agitation. I want to give my support to the resolutions. In the meantime I want to go on record that I am not in sympathy with any legislation or proposition that would give an exclusive right to any one section of Newfoundland against the other.

I have on former occasions given expression to that sentiment. I think that so far as Newfoundland fishermen are concerned there should be no restriction. Men from Twillingate should be permitted to come to Placentia Bay and fish. I am not in sympathy with the fishermen in St. John's being able to bar fishermen from other parts if they want to come here and fish. If they are able to come in contact easily with the House of Assembly or the members thereof I do not think it is fair that they should be successful in getting restrictions placed on fishermen of other sections of the Island. I do not think it would be fair to the residents of Groais Island to be permitted to restrict persons who have frequented that section year after year. Twenty-five or thirty years ago I went there myself as a fisherman. If I wanted to go there to catch fish I would feel sore if I discovered that this House of Assembly had passed legislation that I had to go back to Little Bay Mines. Why I am giving my support to these resolutions now before the chair is because these do not deal with the coastline operated by the fishermen. This is a pond, a winter place, and we are dealing with a proposition whereby this company say they are going to convert Holyrood Pond into a codtrap eight miles long and one and a half miles wide. There have been certain years when the Gut did not open at all, and there is a certain season of the year when the fish chase the caplin to the land. If the Gut is open when the titde starts to rush in a large amount of fish could be had—it has been said hundreds of thousands of quintals, nobody knows. On the rising tide the fish rush into the Gut. The Gut is somewhat similar to Placentia Gut. The fish go in on the rising tide, and when the tide starts to fall the fish run out. I have had no conference with any members of the Government, but I take it for granted that what the company propose to do is to erect a gate which will not interfere with the tide running in. If they see a large amount of fish going in on the rising tide they will close the gate and the fish is caught. Regarding that section of the resolutions giving the people between Peter's River and Mall Bay the exclusive right to go in and fish with hook and line, I had my doubts as to whether the people were satisfied and thoroughly understood what was being done. I brought the matter to their attention, and I am now informed that the reverend gentleman who has been looking after these interests telegraphed that the people were satisfied. If the people are satisfied, so am I. Dealing with section 4 of the resolutions, the honourable member for Burin, Mr. Lake, in referring to the resolutions raised the question as to whether or not fishermen from any part of the Island would not be permitted to catch bait fish in Holyrood Pond. Up to now there has never been any person go there to look for bait fish; certainly very few, but it is impossible to say what change is going to be brought about when the natural course of events is interfered with. By purely artificial means it is hoped to trap a large amount of fish in there. Whether we may not find that a large amount of bait will find its way into that pond we do not know. We have no knowledge of what these various fish will do and have very little knowledge of what any of our fish will do. It might be possible that a large amount of bait fish would find its way into Holyrood Pond; it might multiply and might be so content with its home that it would not want to go back to the Atlantic Ocean.

I would like to see inserted in Section No. 4 an addition whereby if bait should be found in sufficient quantities, fishermen from any section of the Island would be permitted to go in and get it. I do not think there could be any serious objection to this suggestion. The whole thing is purely an experiment. I am not surprised to find that Mr. Job told the Prime Minister that he was not very particular as to whether the resolutions went through or not. To my mind it is purely an experiment, and I would not be at all surprised to find that, after the resolutions had gone through and this House had closed, very little activity would be displayed on the part of the promoters of the company for the carrying out of the contract and the expending of the money involved. For the past thirteen years I have been listening hour after hour to members making enthusiastic speeches in support of resolutions and bills with regard to propositions, but as soon as the House closed and we had all got away home and the promoters had received the assurance that the Bill had gone through, that was the last we heard of it.

I offer this suggestion to the honourable father of this Bill with regard to that section of clause 4 giving exclusive rights to fishermen from Peter's River to Mall Bay that, in the event of bait fish in sufficient quantity being found in Holyrood Pond, that all Newfoundland fishermen should have the same right to get this fish in the same way.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Speaker, it is very pleasant to be able to listen to the honourable member making statements along lines with which I entirely agree. I have placed myself on record that I think no fisherman should be interfered with in this country. My idea is that no legislation should be brought into force at any time, present or future, that would in any way interfere with any fishermen, with the one exception, and that is that they shall not use small mesh traps. I have said that before the measure should be carried out and those few words inserted in the fishing laws of this country. We have no sound fishing laws at the present time. A man should be permitted to catch fish when, where, and how he likes. As regards the matter of bait fish in this resolution, I trust the honourable father of the Bill will see to that.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — It is natural, of course, to advance such a proposal. When we come to that matter we will leave that section open. I will be only too glad to consult the people about it.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact in connection with all bills for duty free purposes that saving clause regarding Newfoundland made material, about which the Minister of Justice is sceptical, that should be inserted.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — I was rather taking it as apart from the Newfoundland make.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, as a matter of general principle, I think the proper procedure would be that, where Newfoundland goods are obtainable suitable for the purpose, those goods should be used exclusively.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, perhaps we might, if honourable members care to do so, read the resolutions. I will not close the resolutions, I will leave them open for adoption—these points, the matter of the duty and the matter of the bait fish.

MR. HALFYARD—Schedule 9 of the schedule (reads) . . . . . That means continuous operation.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — The point of that was to secure the fish. That is what we call a fee simple grant.

MR. HALFYARD—If these resolutons are passed to Section 3 (reads) . . . . . I suppose if the company begins to operate at all they will retain the 200 acres whether they continue operating or not.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — It would not amount to much—200 acres at 30 cents an acre.

MR. HALFYARD—By Section 4 the company is given the exclusive right to catch fish in this pond, with the exception that residents on the coast from Peter's River to Mall Bay shall have the right of catching fish. It goes on to say: I think I had better read it.

(Reads)

If they have 200 acres around the shores of the lake the fishermen will either have to go outside to the Atlantic Ocean to split their fish or go to the head of the pond to get clear of those 200 acres owned by the company; otherwise they will not be able to split fish.

(Reads)

The point raised by one or two of the speakers in connection with the proceeding that we are now instituting with regard to the granting by Legislation of exclusive rights to any of our fishing coasts is that it is a new procedure. We can make our legal laws for the community; can make legal rules and regulations with regard to the setting of traps, but I don't think the Government should ever give exclusive fishing rights to any section of the country. This is only a matter of sentiment. I think we could leave out Peter's River and Mall Bay and substitute, "The residents of Newfoundland shall have the right of catching fish in said Holyrood Pond," and I think the people of Peter's River and Mall Bay can go there and I believe they are the only ones who will. It is not the object of anyone, of course, to postpone this bit of legislation or otherwise obstruct it. It is honest criticism that has been given from this side of the House. If these people say that they undertake to build a factory up there, I hope they will be successful.

MR. ASHBOURNE—I would like to ask whether or not there is any objection raised or any protest received by the Government from any parties in this vicinity.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Not the slightest. The other way about. The principle enunciated about the care we ought to exercise with regard to an exclusive right, is quite agreeable. Not alone has there been no objection, but the other way about —a great desire expressed from all the people. If the Committee does not mind we shall proceed as far as we can, leaving for further construction Sections 4 and 12, so that, not alone out of courtesy, but as a duty to the House, I shall ascertain what I can do about it.

I may say in advance regarding troubles regarding these kind of matte s that, where we have signed an agreement and restricted it down as narrow as we can get it, what I am concerned about is as to whether we might be told that the whole thing is off. The point raised by the honourable member who just sat down, as regards that clause 12, that suggestion about the extent to which use of the beach might be permitted, it is possible that it may be an interference. I would like members to understand that, on these points, I will take it up with the company. If I cannot manage to succeed, I hope it will be understood that I tried to do the best I could. There appears to be not altogether too much enthusiasm on the part of those who are going into it. They merely say it is an experiment, and they are not over enthusiastic.

DR. MOSDELL—If the company takes up these 200 acres, they will take up strips of land and shut off the pond.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I had that very contingency in mind.

I can conceive it might be possible. It is hardly likely, however, because a long strip of land might be taken. The answer to that is that care ought to be taken to exercise discretion on the part of the Government to see that such does not occur in giving the grant.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, we are here creating a precedent. It seems to me that if we allow these people the free entry of material and machinery to erect their plant, we cannot very well refuse any other corporation that seeks the same exemption from paying duty, and I think that,, in this matter, we should be very careful when we allow any company free enry of goods.

We should be very careful when we allow any company free entry of goods for a period of twenty years I just want to go on record as regards that point.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again on tomorrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned this debate in the Committee stage last evening, there was apparently some comment on the fact that certain lease holders had been granted a two-year extension in order to put their mill up on Labrador. The member for Trinity particularly told us that we had been worse than he even thought we were. Now in this connection I want the members of this House to consider what they would have done under similar circumstances. It has been explained by the Attorney General and others that it was quite impossible for any Government to do anything more than take action as regards the non-compliance with the terms of that part of the contract, that the Executive Government could not cancel the lease because the mill was not put up, but that they could have apparently taken action and said that "because you have not put up a mill, we are going to make you put it up or fine you for not doing so." That apparently was the position and it was not acted upon. It has not been acted upon for all these years that the Labrador question has been under consideration. What we did during our regime of office was to notify those who were in arrears, and give them three months to pay up, and they did not pay up then. Then we gave them another three months and when they did not pay up after that time we cancelled their lease altogether. But those who did continue to pay up were apparently within their rights. And now the proposition comes up to the Government, from two or three lease holders interested. They come forward and say, "Tell me, when do you think is the proper date from which to claim that we should be compelled to put up this mill on Labrador, it being clearly understood that we were not allowed by the Canadian authorities to do so before." We say that from the date when the Labrador boundary question was settled, is in our opinion the proper date, and I still claim that it is. We should give them an extension of two years in order to give them an opportunity to put up that mill. We can't do anything else. We can't take their money with one hand, and take action with the other against them. But I ask is it really open to debate whether any Government should take action against people because, they did not do the impossible (that being to put up a mill that would be torn down by the Canadian authorities, as Mr. Dickie's was.) Sir Robert Bond's Government gave a leasehold interest to Mr. Dickie for water power rights on Labrador for 99 years at thirty dollars a year for the purpose of driving machinery for his mill. For all I know that lease holds good to-day. Mr. Dickie is dead, but the Canadian Bank of Commerce is following up the case, and has been following it up for the past number of years, and are claiming their rights under that lease. We are criticised in large type this afternoon in The Tribune for this terrible matter of having given two years for those people to put up their mills. I want to point out that it was only brought to our notice quite recently that in connection with the Corner Brook propositions, rights and water powers on Labrador, were given to the Products Company and they forwarded or transferred their rights to the Power and Paper Company. These rights would have expired in 1925, but the last administration gave them a renewal for eight years and therefore it will not be until 1933 that these people will lose their rights in connection with that big water power on Labrador. That lease was renewed by the former Government of which Mr. Halfyard was a very prominent member. Why, I do not know. There was no more reason for that being done and less I may say, than for us to take upon ourselves the responsibility of cancelling the right of some people who have paid their rentals right up to date.

It has appeared to me in certain remarks that have been passed and certain question that have been asked, that there was a sort of insinuation that I was influenced in this action because in one of these properties, in Lewis Bay, my uncle, J. H. Monroe was one of the partners with Tobin and Baird in the ownership of that property. Now I want it to be understood that I have no interest whatever in that property. I never had an interest. That property means no more to me than any other. In fact I did not know anything about the claims coming before this Executive until they actually did. I never heard a voice on the Executive other than one opinion that there was nothing else to do but to give them two years concessions. It never occurred to me that we were doing anything except what appeared to be the right thing in the matter. I just wanted to make that explanation.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the Hon. the Prime Minister I want to say that the circumstances in connection with any act of the Government was altogether different from the conditions that obtained previous to the settlement of the Labrador Boundary Question. And previous Government never did consider the selling of Labrador. Even though we had our rights on Labrador confirmed and we thought that we would have to trust to outside capitalists to develop it. But the thought that has occupied the minds of the Government of Newfoundland for the last year or two, is the selling of Labrador. Now if we have anything to sell we don't want to have its value impaired in any way, and if there are any encumbrances we ought to get clear of them. Now if these people are confirmed in their titles, I don't suppose that we will ever sell it or if we do it will be for very little. So we can dispense with that thought of ever selling Labrador. Now we are blaming the present Government or the past Government anyway for what has been done, but really the thought that runs in the mind of the ordinary citizen outside of those who a e in public life is "Can we get possession of those timber rights on Labrador" except about 587 square miles belonging to people who have conformed with the terms of the lease and erected mills. Is there any possible way of Newfoundland coming in possession of those timber lands? Now we have to deal in this matter with the whole people of Newfoundland. A lot of the lease holders may think that they are not being treated right, but they are not the only s to be considered. And if there is any way of getting back those timber lands, in a legal way, we have to consider the welfare of Newfoundland in this particular. Never mind the sentimental part of it. This matter must be treated on a purely unprejudiced basis even if it means that we will have to compensate them to the tune of three million dollars, for any monies that these people have spent in connection with the rentals or anything else. That is the thought that has been in my mind. Perhaps the Government have made mistakes. I don't want the present Government to bring in an act that is against the interests of the people of Newfoundland. It would be no doubt of great advantage to the lease holders of property on Labrador now when they see the opportunity no doubt of selling their timber lands down there and make a lot of money out of it. The trouble with us as a people and as a Government is that we don't go about things in the right way. We do not yet know our legal position in connection with those people that the Government has made contracts with. In a few days we will be dealing with another question of outstanding importance in connection with Corner Brook and the Gander. The Minister of Justice will bear me out I feel sure, when I say that he has no data in his office that will enable him to state without hesitation the claim that Newfoundland has against these two companies, the Corner Brook Company and the Reid-Newfoundland Company. And that is the reason why we make blunders. We get left every time. Penny wise and pound foolish. We are going on in the same old way. What have you done in respect to the appointment that has been made in connection with a representative of the Newfoundland Government in the International Power and Paper Company. That is a purely political appointment. Just because you want to give the job to somebody you make that appointment. This is a position where you must have the best abilify and the best expert knowledge. And while we do these things how can we expect to be any better off than we are in connection with our contractural obligations. But what is the good of talking about these things. I thought that you were going to be something different as time passed, that you would learn by experience to govern yourselves accordingly, but apparently you are going on in the same old way, and I think, as I stated here in my speech on the Address in Reply, that it is about time that we had a change of Government and get the whole lot of us out of this Assembly and get in some one that will do something different from what has been done in the past.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again on tomorrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on tomorrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Speaker, I would just like to draw the attention of the House to a matter. In a newspaper of this date under the heading of Parliamentary Indecency, appears this item:

(Reads)

I would just like to say that neither Higgins, Hunt and Emerson nor any member of that firm is acting in any way for the International Paper Company, in connection with any matters now under discussion of the Government, nor will they be acting in any matters that may come up for discussion in their negotiations with the Government.

MON. MR. SULLIVAN—Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would also like to reply to an item in the same paper.

(Reads)

I had occasion some three or four years ago to deal with the same matter, and I think that the hon. member for Fortune will bear me out in this. I wrote a letter to the Daily Star of that time denying that I received any salary from the A.N.D. Company. I never consulted the A.N.D. Company about going into politics. Nor did they ask me what side I was supporting, or did they care as far as I knew, or the position that I was going to take up in this country. I received no salary from the A.N.D. Company except the remuneration that I had for the sale of wrapping and newsprint. The gentleman who wrote that article knows that is the position that I occupy today. I am no servant of the A.N.D. Company. I intend to take my stand on every subject that comes before this legislature, and as far as making myself officious in connection with the legislation now before this House, I want to ask in what way have I acted that would intimate that I have been officious in connection with the present legislation. Up to this moment I have not opened my mouth in connection with the debate now before the chair. And the Prime Minister knows that in the discussion that I had with him in this connection and before this matter came before the House, I was of the opinion that we ought to curtail some of the requests of that company. I trust that this explanation will be satisfactory. I don't mind fair criticism, but I think that this is hitting below the belt, when it is said that I am here as a servant of the A.N.D. Company. I know something about some of the measures that are shortly to come before this Legislature, and I am going to fight to get the best deal that we can for this country. I hope that this explanation will be satisfactory.

It was moved and seconded that this House, at its rising, do adjourn to tomorrow, Wednesday, June 15th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, June 15.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Godden, from Clarenville, re roads.

Dr. Mosdell, from Bay du Nord, re telegraph connection.

Mr. K. M. Brown gave notice of question.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, the Bill which is now before the House is one of the most important, probably the most important, which will engage our attention this session. It prohibits any person from getting any land on the Labrador except through the avenue of this Legislature. I note there is nothing in it regarding mineral rights on the Labrador being reserved in like manner. My objection in speaking for a while is this, that while I agree to a large extent with the principle laid down in the first paragraph, I think it should also include minerals as well as timber. And there are very good reasons for that. To begin with, I understand that in these modern times instruments are being used to discover minerals, and I feel that no Executive Government should have the right to grant mineral licenses any more than timber licenses. While I am no legal mind, Mr. Chairman, I speak on this Bill from the standpoint of preventing would-be speculators from getting in, inasmuch as we have been told that the people who applied since this question has been in dispute have been told by past and present governments that their application has been filed and will receive consideration, but that until the Labrador Boundary case was decided nothing definite would be given. Well, looking at the Labrador Boundary from every angle, I feel, and believe that honourable members on both sides will agree with me, that the duty of this and every Government is to hold the Labrador for the welfare of the country. During the past few months we have been told by the press supporting the Government, from the house-tops that now that we have won this case we are in a better financial position inasmuch as we can probably go into the money markets and get credit, strengthened by the addition of the Labrador, representing approximately one hundred and twenty thousand square miles. I agree that that position should be held intact, and that the people who have violated their agreement with the Government and who now or during the past few days, even since this Bill was introduced, have been given authority by the Executive to carry out the terms of their agreement. I have before me letters of aplication written by three companies to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and no doubt passed on by him to the Executive Government for consideration—these applications are dated April 25th, May 13th and June 4th, 1927. Why I would know that it is 1927 is that it wouldn't be necessray for the companies to apply at all otherwise, because it is only owing to the fact that the Labrador Boundary case has ended, and that Newfoundland has won, that they ask the Executive Government to give them further time to carry out the terms of their agreements; the reason pointed out for their failure to have done so previously was that they weren't certain whether Newfoundland was going to win or not, and if Canada had won their money would have been gone. But here is the position as I take it: If the Canadians had won where would they have gotten off with regard to the money paid by them? Would the Newfoundland Government have to refund it? I feel that the Newfoundland Government would not have had to refund any money paid in by these people for licenses on the Labrador, not for any purposes of development, but merely for speculation, just as much as a man going to the stock market and buying stock to hold until it goes up—that is the position in which they had placed themselves. And in spite of the fact that the Government introduces a Bill to prevent further grants on the Labrador, at the same time they give these three firms a further extension of time to carry out their agreement. And we knew nothing about these when the Bill was introduced. If the Government had been honest the Prime Minister would have told the House that certain firms had applied for and been granted a further two years. The Government has not been honest but has attempted to put something across. I look at this from a commonsense point of view, and I am fighting this clause on principle; perhaps I read it differently from others.

(Reads.)

That would mean to my mind that the leases granted to people who hadn't carried out their agreement that the Government could take action and they would lose these properties on the Labrador. We well remember that a few years ago the Legislature granted concessions to some people who were going to build pulp mills and who were going to spend fifty thousand dollars annually

(Reads.)

What does that mean? I take it that "Government" means "Executive Government". Now, Mr. Chairman, we might as well get down to brass tacks—isn't this a case where favors are being shown? Should we give them further extensions? I say "No," in the best interests of the country, and to prove I am right I shall read an extract in the Daily News from the Toronto Star, quoting Premier Taschereau.

(Reads.)

I agree with what he has said as applied to the present Government—it is fruitless if we are to continue to grant concessions to people who go away and gamble with them; and we have no better example of that than the action of the present administration during the past few weeks, and the way they withheld information until it was dragged out of them that they were giving extensions of licenses to people—for what? I can tell them for what, or at least one could get that construction out of it. Some of these companies have options to sell their properties on the Labrador, one in particular—a company over in England has an option to buy a property of 2400 square miles for £400,000, provided the title is right, and that company has placed in the Bank of Nova Scotia in Newfoundland $5,000.00 as a guarantee that they mean business—if they don't carry out by the end of 1927 they forfeit the $5,000.00. If that is worth two millions to that company, what is it worth to the country? I may be talking green stuff, but these are actual facts. We found that out of 1141 3|5 square miles granted only approximately 500 square miles had conformed wtih the terms of the licenses, and not one of these who are given this Minute of Council. Not one. When speaking the other day the Minister of Justice asked how we could expect them to spend money on an area in dispute. How is it that other people did it? They haven't conformed with their licenses and it is our duty to cancel them, even if we have to pay back the money.

MON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — A man couldn't conform unless he operated, and they weren't allowed to build. They were afraid to build because of the Quebec Government.

MR. CASHIN—And these people came in and took licenses in spite of the fact that they couldn't build. The probabilities are that Dickie has an action against the Quebec Government Are we going to allow the Labrador to become the prey of a crowd of greedy speculators? If we are, let it go, but to whom are we responsible? This country is, as members on both sides will admit, in a precarious financial position, and we look to the Labrador to take us out of the hole, and we ought not to allow it to go out of our hands. They have picked the best portions and left the rocks for this country, and what we have always had—the fishery—it is just as well if we hadn't won at all. Why did these men who got licenses agree to build? It was none of our business that the Quebec Government stopped them; their agreements with us were that they were going to build mills costing anywhere from $250,000. They didn't do it and it is our duty to cancel their licenses. It looks as if the Labrador will be a feast for the lawyers for half a century, and now you are putting something else on the Statute Book to entangle our minds. It is hard to understand what is meant. I shall just read one letter from Mr. R. S. Fulton, chairman of the London-Labrador Corporation; evidently he wrote it after having received legal advice from lawyers in England.

(Reads.)

Evidently he was told that unless they had carried out, or the Newfoundland Government had waived objection, they had no title, and that bears out conclusively the position that their title is not clear, and that the Government can take advantage of that.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, and I feel every member will agree, that this letter was written by a legal mind, and he evidently knew that they had no legal right to the property on the Labrador, not having carried out their agreement, but having an easy fish in the present Government, they were immediately given two years to carry them out, and consequently if one accepts the construction that all actions of an Executive are legal, these men own 512 square miles that Newfoundland can't dispose of. I object to the funds of this country being given away, so to speak, to any people who have no interest in it, except what they can make out of it. We should legislate not only for the present generation but for future generations, and if we barter away every part of Labrador, as we have started to do by giving away 5,000 square miles, where are we going to get off? We are selling something that doesn't belong to us. I believe that the feeling of every member when that case was won was that we should dispose of Labrador to pay our national debt and make the country somewhat fit to live in, but the Labrador is not of much value in the hands of a Government who are prepared to give it away to a crowd of sharks. In 1921 an Act was passed in this House. I will read a section of it.

(Reads.)

This evidently wasn't an incorporated company, and to-day they have applied for a further period of two years, and this company has an option of two millions—this same crowd that didn't carry out their agreement. That agreement ceased in January 1927, and here on April 25th we have the Executive Government receiving a comunication from the same aggregation asking for a further two years to carry out what they should have done in 1922, and you went and gave it. Isn't that giving away what don't belong to you? I would go as far as to say that it is like my going to-morrow and stealing a suit of clothes and selling it. Why did the Government conceal the fact that these concessions were given until Mr. Halfyard got it out of them? Why didn't they lay their cards on the table—it is something which a man with what you would call a diseased mind might have put a strong construction. What I object to as a Newfoundlander who will probably have to live here for the remainder of my life, is for the Executive Government to barter the rights of the country, which have cost us between $500,000 and a million cold cash, and all the bills are not paid yet.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that this bill ought to be thrown out here this afternoon or the greater portion of it, and that a bill ought to be brought in cancelling the licenses on the Labrador, and that we take a chance on winning if we went to Court. If you are not prepared to do that, apart from political feeling, you are not here in the best interests of the country. It looks as if people look upon this country as something to make what they can out of it at the expense of the common people. It is just the same as if I went to play a game of poker this afternoon and kept filling all the time until finally I got a full house or a straight flush. This crowd have been given a straight flush by the Executive Government here the other day. Well, are we going to stand for it? Furthermore it looks to me as if the second clause in that bill is put in for another purpose. I am not a lawyer but I think that I have a certain amount of ordinary common sense. The people who have applied for licenses as already stated may come in under this bill and may claim the licenses they have applied for on the Labrador and then where are we going to get off. Those comprise the best of the Labrador, some ——— thousand square miles. It would be very interesting to know and I intend to put a question on the order paper to find out what individuals or firms have been promised that they will get licenses by this administration or any other.

You have given away what we have waited for and what the people of this country looked to, to take them out of the mess which your Government helped to put them in, and what I might say your Government claimed all the credit of winning when the Labrador Boundary Dispute was settled; a most indecent action. One would imagine that those opposed to the Monroe administration were absolutely opposed to the country winning the Labrador dispute if one read the comments and the applause that appeared in the press since that dispute was settled.

It would appear that all the patriots in Newfoundland composed the Monroe administration's party. But I could put a different construction on it and say if I were absolutely in order, that all the brains of Newfoundland, so to speak were confined to the Executive Government or the Monroe administration. I feel that we should stop right here and now, unless we want to forfeit our rights on the Labrador and unless we want to go insolvent.

What I object to is not being given definite and accurate information in this House. It has been going on since the House opened. I want to know right now if it is the intention of the present Government to make a test case out of the various licenses now outstanding. What I mean by that is this. These people who have paid up to date their rentals for licenses but have not complied with the terms of the licenses; is it the intention of the Government to grant them a further two years to carry out the terms of their licenses. I would like to know right now from the Prime Minister.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER— Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that we have to repeat things over and over again in this House to get some members to understand what we are saying. We had this question up yesterday and the day before and I thought it was fully explained by the Attorney General and by myself and by others that we had given nothing away whatever as far as the Labrador is concerned. On the contrary, we have been busy since being in power in re-claiming the Labrador. When we came into power 30,000 square miles of the Labrador was given away, practically all the timber on it, and we have reclaimed over half that amount, nearly two-thirds. What we did was that we asked how these licenses stood and we found that there were some people in arrears, who had been in arrears for years and nobody had taken the slighest notice of it. We said that notice should be sent immediately by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to inform the holders of these licenses that their licenses would be cancelled unless arrears were paid up by a certain date. Some didn't pay, so we sent a second notice in order that they be treated with every deference in respect to what money they had already paid in. The honourable member for Twillingate made the perfectly correct statement that it is not likely that this Government or any other, in the event of this property passing to Canada instead of to Newfoundland, would hand back the money to those who had paid it in. Those people were paying in money for licenses, payments in hundreds of thousand of dolllars on the off chance of Newfoundland winning this case. Some of them after being notified and being in debt a certain amount of money, decided not to continue. And now they are coming back making legal claims on the Government and there will be a test case in connection with it. Some, however, have made us payments every year for something they did not know they would procure, and they say to us, "There is a clause in my agreement that I have got to put up a mill, and now that Newfoundland owns this property, how do you think this ought to be treated " Now I ask any member of this Committee whether, if he had been paying money for some years on licenses and Governments had been accepting that money year after year, if he would think that it was a square deal for the Government to say, "Now we have got your money and now we are going to take a lawsuit because you have not put up a mill during all the years we have been collecting money from you, and try to put you out of court." I claim it would be entirely unfair and dishonest, and I think any ordinary common sense business man would view it as commercially immoral. As is well-known, Mr. Dickie was one man who did put up a mill and he took machinery down there on the Labrador and I am told, those cases of machinery are lying there with bush growing up all around. He was not allowed to construct the mill by the Canadian Government. Any of those licensees would have been in the same position. If they had gone down there, put up a mill and brought down machinery, it would not have been any benefit to anybody, but only a loss to themselves. I think it is very unreasonable of honourable members to talk about our giving away wholesale millions of dollars worth of Labrador. We haven't given one single grant on the Labrador since we were a Government and I wish the same were true of other governments. If they had not done so, we would have the whole Labrador to dispose of to Canada or whoever we might get to buy it. We have given nothing away, but we have interpreted the act by what we would call fair-play, and in a way I am certainly satisfied would be the interpretation of the Supreme Court. If the Minister of Justice told me to-day that he thought we had a good case to go to the Supreme Court to put those people out of business, I couldn't vote for it, because I think it would be absolutely unfair treatment of persons paying licenses so many years and we have accepted their money. Some reference has been made to the International Paper Company wanting timber limits on the Labrador and in Newfoundland at $2 a square mile. I think that $2 is a perfectly absurd valuation, and I guarantee that we are not going to give them or bring before this Legislature anything to give them land on the Labrador for $2 per square mile.

The whole intention of this Bill is to protect our rights on the Labrador and to prevent them from being given away in the future or being granted except by the Legislature. It is not intended to affect anybody in or out of the House. I had a suggestion from the Attorney General in connection with Clause 2 with regard to the objections made in that espect. He suggested an amendment and if it appeals to the House as better securing the interests of the country, we shall be perfectly willing to substitute it and let Clause 2 read as follows:

(Reads)

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman: Following upon what the Prime Minister has just stated, there appears to be a slight misconception of Section 2, a perfectly honest one, with which I have no quarrel. Section 2 is what we call a negative section, which means it has no effect whatever on any rights that any parties have. It is not a declaratory section declaring any rights. I hope I won't go on record as endeavouring to deliver a school master's lecture when I respectfully suggest that, with the most honest intentions in the world, there has apparently been a misapprehension of Section 2. Section 2 as it reads to-day is as follows:

(Reads)

The Prime Minister has stated that the object of the act is absolutely and entirely confined to one point, that nothing in the future can be done with lands with respect to timber rights and water power right, on the Labrador, except through Act of the Legislature. That is the object of the Act, that and that only and in Section 2 it is merely declared in order that there be no contention made that the legislation is not interfering with any rights, any legal rights, that persons may have there, that nothing here shall effect such rights.

(Reads)

Now that particular clause consists of two parts in the main, before the amendment suggested by the Prime Minister is considered at all.

The first says:

(Reads)

That merely enacts that any person who has got a concession in law is not affected with regard to that by this enactment. The second clause says, "Or heretofore with approval of the Legislature agreed to be given granted or issued by the Government of this Colony."

(Reads)

I would like to say for the information of honourable members that there were two classes as regards the outstanding rights on the Labrador. There is for example first the class of the ordinary Crown Lands Act grant, the straight grant from the Crown, and the person having that grant has complied with the grant, or under the grant from the Crown contends that he still has the right even when he hasn't paid rentals to hold the grant. There is a subsidiary to that class consisting of those that it was suggested have Minutes of Council giving undertakings that when the Labrador Boundary dispute was settled that they were going to be given grants. That is the first class referred to under the section. Then there is the second class that comes under the heading of any persons "hertofore with the approval of the Legislature" having undertakings to get grants. There is an outstanding case in mind, that of the case of the grant given in 1915 of water powers in Labrador to the "Products Corporation" which right in due time was transferred to the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company and which right as a matter of fact is to-day extant in their opinion; as regards the fulfilling of their conditions of compiling a survey and expenditure of five millions at Corner Brook these have been complied with, and there remains the expenditure of ten million dollars on the coast of Labrador to entitle them as of right to a grant. The Government of the day in connection with this very important water power will practically have to make up its mind as regards its attitude towards this and I think I may take the liberty of saying it has made up its mind. Honourable members will remember that, not this administration but a previous one, transferred to the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company in 1923 all the rights of the Newfoundland Products Corporation to those water powers on the Labrador and they will also remember that not alone did they transfer all their rights to that water power on the Labrador to this company that did not require that water power in connection with its Corner Brook enterprise because the proposal to utilise the power on the Labrador had nothing to do with making of paper or pulp; not alone were the rights of that company transferred to the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company but an extension of time was given them and time was to begin to run instead of 1915 from 1923 with the result to-day. I merely make the statement of fact and am not speaking c itically, that instead of the Colony owning that water power again as it would if that extension had not been granted, that the Company have completed two of the conditions and now the expenditure of $10,000,000 on the coast of Labrador will entitle them to a grant. Now that is one of the cases as to what is the meaning of talking of "heretofore with the approval of the Legislature agreed to be given or granted or issued by the Government of the Colony." In other words the object of that section is clearly to state or make it manifest that this Legislature is not interfering with obligations that the country is under. The Prime Minister has called attention to the fact that since the present administration came into power there has been no grant in any shape or form of concessions on the Labrador with regard to timber or water powers which are the subjects of this bill and has also stated with regard to the grants that were drawn attention to by the Member for Ferryland that there was a legal impossibility for these companies to comply with their agreements by reason of the interference with that property popularly known as the Dickie property by the Quebec Government and the continuance of that interference. It is in connection with grants of that kind where it was the agreement to build a mill was not complied with for that reason that we are taxed with the responsibility of having given away the Labrador. This Government or any Government during the past three or four years was in this position that it had to do one of two things. Certain rights were outstanding on the Labrador; a certain number of leases had been issued by previous administrations; of these leases a certain number of people had regularly paid their rentals; a certain number of others had fallen into arrears. Now as the Prime Minister has stated it would be manifestly unfair for a Government after accepting rentals when the dispute was outstanding to take action when it was settled for not having erected a mill. I want to make the point that we could not cancel a man's license merely because he didn't erect a mill. What we did do was the only thing we had power to do. There were two clauses there and they were all circularised. Not one of these license holders can complain of not being given the opportunity to pay up. That had been done also by previous administrations and had not been put into effect, so a second notice was sent. We felt that there were a certain number of people taking chances on paying rents and taking chances on the result, when it was possible and likely that if the dispute had gone the other way, they would have had no redress from the Quebec Government. They certainly could not compel them to make returns for what they had paid in. We found ourselves then in this position that we had either to allow them to continue or say to the people in arrears: "You have either to pay up or we will cancel your licenses." We had that power expressly under the Crown Lands Act. We had no power whatever beyond that; therefore, the only effective steps that could be taken to put into execution all the legal powers of the Government were taken when these people's licenses were cancelled. The second position that arises is an absolutely different one altogether. It is suggested that now, the dispute is settled, that the people who had kept their rentals paid up and from whom the Government had accepted rents, and who were in good standing in that respect should not be allowed the benefit of the condition under the lease of two years to erect a mill. Now, I think it will be agreed, no matter how members view this question, that it is not a personal question, it is a question, not of honour, but a question, as a matter of fact, of an absolute obligation for any Government as to what is proper and right. When the Labrador Boundary dispute ended and the title of the Colony was confirmed, it was absolutely clear that those people no longer had the answer they could make previously. If an action was taken for the erection of a mill before, they had the answer behind them of the actual facts of the Quebec Government stopping the mill running. Therefore, I say with due deliberation and the fullest appreciation of the seriousness of the statement that there was no other course open to any administration but to say to these people: "Yes; your two years will be construed from the date when it was first possible for you to proceed with the erection of your mill." I do say, further, that if an extension beyond the actual terms of the lease, which, I think, is two years, were given; for example, if these people were told that, "Now, you are in a position to have an undisputed title, we shall give you three years or four," then I say we might have been accused of giving a concession. But I think they could insist on that construction of their agreement which allows the time to run from the date of the settlement of the dispute and I don't think it is right that we should leave the country under the impression that anything at all in the nature of an act granting concession has been done in connection with these people. Now just one word more with regard to the suggestion made probably without full consideration as to these grants of that class. I have heard the reference repeated, "Wipe out everything on the Labrador. Bring in an Act here now to say that any people who have rights on the Labrador shall lose them and all licenses shall be cancelled? I merely want to say that when that is said I trust it will be considered what the possible cost would be to be paid for an action of that kind. I trust that if the country decides on an action like that that it will endeavour to see the way clear to be able to meet the result. It would be improper for me not to say in passing with regard to that that any Legislature of a self-governing Dominion who repudiates the Act of its Legislature its own Crown grants, then very serious consideration would have to be given as to where that is going to land you. If we had before this country to-day some proposition; if we had as a matter of fact, as has been so often suggested, a proposal from some people who were going to buy the Labrador, about which we have heard so much, and if it were so that these people made it a condition that they would buy the Labrador provided we gave them an absolutely clear title, we would then have to consider how much of that money we could afford to pay to those people who would come back on us. Candidly, however, I don't see any terrible rush for the Labrador. There doesn't appear to be a general clamouring of bidders for the purchase of that territory and while one would like to feel that we are able to sell the Labrador overnight, I don't think so. I think its immediate value is simply additional credit to the Colony. I think that is its only value at present. I trust that the immediate value will be increased in the near future but I have no delusions about our being able to sell the Labrador now, and certainly in the light of the present situation it does not appear likely to me that offers are going to be as elaborate as we would be disposed to think of suggesting.

As to the second section my idea in suggesting the amendment to the Prime Minister and which he has referred to was that I thought it would remove what appeared to be a possible doubt in the minds of honourable members. As now amended, of course, it makes it perfectly clear that the section only applies to Acts of the Legislature.

(Reads)

In other words if it be felt that that section is of any value as giving any protection to any persons outside, put it that way and it is confined to rights outstanding by Acts of the Legislature. I suggest that may remove any possible discrimination. There is none in mind anyway.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Is not one of the conditions of the lease the erection of a mill?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Yes.

HON. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—This lease here says that in case the lease holder shall make default in any of the conditions herein contained then in that case the lease shall be null and void.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —There is also a provision in the Crown Lands Act. That is not what we call a condition precedent. A condition precedent to cancellation would be in the case of rentals.

(Reads Crown Lands Act)

I was dealing with the grant from the point of compellability. It is a condition that doesn't make liable to forfeiture. It is merely a technical distinction. I stated that in one case you automatically forfeited and in the other there is no forfeiture but the remedy is by an action.

MR. HALFYARD— With regard to the erection of a mill within a certain time under the lease you say that it has to be done within two years. When is that to commence?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Within two years of the settlement of the Labrador Boundary question; from the date of the judgment. The two years begin to run from that date. It has to be completed within two years from that date.

MR. HALFYARD—The time referred to in the license appears to be different. It says.

Reads)

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE

It is as there in the license. If I said two I correct myself according to whatever is in the license. It is simply interpreted as beginning from the date of the judgment, they are given the time stated to comply with their agreement.

MR. HALFYARD— They are given two years to comply?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — They are given nothing. They are to understand that the date of the lease is the date of the judgment..

MR. HALFYARD—Then instead of the lease being dated in this case, November 1923, it will be dated March 2, 1927. You will simply make a change in the date of the lease is that all?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — The terms of the lease with respect to the building of a mill. That is all they asked about.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, they have not got a license or lease or grant, they merely got an agreement, an understanding with this Legislature by the Act of 1925, that if they performed certain conditions they would get a grant of water power. That case has got to be considered. They have got to make election as to what water powers they are going to take. If they carried out the other conditions of the lease they would be granted three years to do that.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, I am glad at any rate that the few words that I did have to say have brought about an understanding as to where we stood in connnection with those people holding property on Labrador. It is all very well to talk about what we should do for these people who have invested their money in this property in the way of paying rentals. They have gambled, sir, and if the Canadians had to win I would have no sympathy for them. It is time now to end our sympathy for gamblers. The two hundred and fifty thousand people in this country have got to be considered just as well as those who gambled at the expense of this country. From the time that they invested that money they were up against it, inasmuch as they could not build a mill but they agreed to build one. And now this Government gives them two years further extension in order to build them.

There is another point that I want to make clear. You have given this company two years' extension, and you have also given this company, the Pulp and Paper Company of America, a further extension to export pulp wood after that mill is built. I say, sir, that we are now in a worse position regarding the Labrador than we were before this question was settled. For this reason, that these people who have gambled at the expense of the country have been encouraged by the present administration. I take it that after this Bill passes the people who want extensions can get them from the Executive Government, and after this Bill passes it will not be necessary to come into this Legislature to get these concessions. Now I feel, sir, that a clause should be inserted in this Bill to the effect that these people should have to come to this Legislature and then we would know where we were getting off. The point is the Governm't in introducing this Bill should have told us that many people had been granted extensions. Two or three days ago this Government gave extensions to one crowd and we heard nothing about it whatever.

I have no sympathy for gamblers, and that is all you can call them—gambling at the expense of the country, and going down into this department and that department and taking out land grants, and going around then, if they get stuck, looking for sympathy. These men have no complaint to make, seeing that they took it upon themselves to build a mill on Labrador. They knew that this man Dickie had been thrown out by the Canadian Government, and even in spite of that they went and agreed by Act of Parliament, some of them at any rate, to go down and build mills on Labrador. Morals! Why those individuals don't even know the meaning of the word "moral". They have no morals, as far as this country as a whole is concerned. I don't want to be personal, but I am here to try and protect to the best of my ability the interests of the people of this country, and while I am here I am going to try and do it. Aftetr I get out, whenever that may be, let somebody else carry it on; but I don't think it is right that this Government should come in here and take upon its own shoulders all the morals of a crowd of people who don't intend to spend five cents of their own money on Labrador, and to-day they have that land sold, some going to England and more to America. Why did you not come in here and tell us that they had done that? That was hidden from this House. If those people had you or the country in a similar position, there is no doubt what they would do. If you feel like throwing away Labrador we cannot stop you. I want to know now whether, when you gave these people the extension of two years, you also allow them to export pulp wood free of duty from Labrador.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — That matter was not raised at all.

MR. CASHIN—Anyway the words that I have said this evening upon this matter I don't think can be construed as obstruction. These few words I feel have brought about a certain amount of debate from both sides of the House, and also a lot of information which was withheld from the Committe has been given us this afternoon. I think, Mr. Chairman, that you will agree with me that regarding the Labrador question it has been a question of dentistry. I think that you will agree with me that we did our duty as far as lay in our power, and now we know that the present administration has adopted the policy of encouraging the art of gambling, and gambling with real estate, in Newfoundland. I think, sir, that the public morals of the people of this country have been despoiled by the action of the present administration, and I do not think, sir, that the interests of the country as a whole have been served by the actions of the present Government during the past few months.

I have listened this afternoon to the remarks of the Minister of Justice with regard to the disposal of the Labrador territory. I realise that it will take considerable time to sell Labrador, but we must remember to look to the future, especially as regards this paper industry. At the present time the demand for that article has fallen off. But you will agree with me that in a neighbouring country of ours they have gone short of raw material, and in a few years no doubt they will be looking elsewhere for their raw material to feed their mills. At the present time I understand that the International Pulp and Paper Company have eight or ten mills not in use, due (1) to the lack of raw material; (2) because the demand is not as great as it has been. And I contend that in giving these people those concessions on Labrador, we have given away to-day the principle parts of that country which should be left for Newfoundlanders. It is all very well to say that these concessions were granted by a previous Government and that we were not to blame. But they were granted purely as a gambling proposition, and when the time arrived that the bluff was to be called, Newfoundland had a straight flush in her hand and these fellows had ace high. The point that I want to get at is this, that it is our job to try and get the whole of Newfoundland Labrador together, in order that when the time arrives, when we will be in need, it will be of financial assistance to us. Because all the Government has to do is to look at the financial situation of this country to-day, and the people can tell you that we are up against it. We are to-day at the point where the national responsibilities of this country are in the neighbourhood of $80,000,000, and how long further are we able to go along? I think that the ordinary individual realises that when we arirve at the $100,000,000 mark we are broke. What is going to happen then. Go to Labrador and you will find as you say that those gamblers have put it all over you and you have nothing to sell. The Minister of Justice has said that the Labrador has added to our financial borrowing facilities. I agree with him. But has it added to any considerable extent to our paying abilities? Not one cent. The ordinary man has not been enriched by the acquisition of Labrador by Newfoundland. How can you expect to borrow large amounts of money on properties that are not producing anything. I don't think that it is over-populated. The housing situation is not such as to call for grave consideration.

No, sir, the Labrador, in my opinion, if we continue along the path that has been adopted by the executive Government, has brought us to the point where it is going to mean financial bankruptcy in four years. I say that this evening knowing what I say, and I mean it. Because we cannot get along at the present time, paying out four millions of dollars in interest, and having to come in here again this year and borrow another five or six millions anod pay off deficits, which the Auditor General says we have not got. I say that the information tabled in this House with regard to the actions of the present administration have been withheld from this House, just the same as the information tabled with regard to the financial position of this country is being and has been withheld, and what information has been given this House was incorrect. And how can we on both sides of this Legislature, how can we expect to discuss legislation properly in the interest of the people of this country when we are deceiving each other.

Mr. Chairman, I want to apologise this afternoon for taking up so much of the time of this House, and I trust that the Government itself and the members of the Opposition will agree with me that whilst I have not lived up to the legal traditions of this House, I have brought about an understanding with regard to the Labrador Boundary question. I have laid before this House the tactics of the present Executive Government which I personally did not agree with, because I feel that any hopes for the future welfare of this country depends to a large extent upon the guarding of our rights on Labrador, but I regret to say that the sentries are asleep at their posts.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman, during the past few weeks the whole country has gone into ecstasies over the Labrador Boundary question, and the people in this country, if I read them aright, feel that they have something now that they can sell. At least that would help to reduce the national debt. Now it seems to me that during the past month or so we have been living in a fool's paradise. We have been flattering everybody from the Minister of Justice down. I say the Minister of Justice because I claim, and feel and congratulate him on being one who had a great part in settling the Labrador Boundary question. And now we find, as the Minister of Justice has just told us, that about 30,000 square miles has been given away and leased to parties inside and outside this country. But this afternoon we have gleaned considerable information. This afternoon we have gleaned much information about the properties that are owned in the territory. I do not feel competent, Mr. Chairman, to speak on this subject, but I am a man that has a stake in this country and I thought that with this property we perhaps could make a sale of that territory down there to Canada or perhaps the United States. But now I find that the property that we thought we had we have not got. Instead we find that from day to day the present Government has been giving away certain rights on Labrador, or at least giving an extension of time to those owning rights on Labrador. The Prime Minister stated a few moments ago that he thought it would be right to give a square deal to those who have taken out leases on Labrador. I am very glad to see that the Prime Minister has at least tried to give somebody a square deal. But they are evidently not the people who elected him to power, or at least only a small majority of them. I don't know who they are, but I do know that it is not myself. I have no property on Labrador.

Now while we were on the Address in Reply I made some remarks about the Labrador Boundary. I was very pleased to hear from my hon. friend, Colonel Sullivan, that he at least made the statement that showed to me that we would see that Newfoundland was going to get a square deal as far as Labrador was concerned. I trust, and I have faith in the Colonel, that he will see that Newfoundland does get a square deal. We have heard a lot about square deals but we have seen very little. Has this country been considered as much as those "poor" individuals who have had licenses on Labrador. It is they who are getting justice by having their licenses extended over two years from the date of the settlement of the Labrador Boundary question. Now I say that this country should be very careful and the Executive Government should be very careful about what they are going to do with the Labrador. The Minister of Justice has spent a lot of time on the Labrador question, and now we come in here and try to put through a Bill that has been changed since yesterday, or is at least about to be changed, and it reads a little different from what it did before.

According to this anybody that has had a lease before can get it extended if it is valid even though he has not lived up to the terms of the agreement. It seems that we will have to make new laws in this country if we are to live here. Not only the Crown Lands Act but many other Acts will have to be changed.

And the question now arises as to what. we are going to do with this matter. Are we going to pass this Bill or are we going to let it lay, or are we going to still give away our birthright, so to speak. I contend, like the hon. member for Ferryland, who has preceded me, that we should think about future generations in this country and not so much about ourselves. We should try to conserve the territory of Labrador for future generations, and make this country fit to live in, because, as I said before, you cannot live in this country at the present time. And while the Minister of Justice said a few minutes ago that we may not be able to sell Labrador very quickly, yet I believe to-day that we should make an effort to sell it, and my suggestion would be that the Government of the day or the incoming Government should immediately tryto sell what is left before the Government gives away what we have left now.

The land at Labrador is waiting to be claimed by certain individuals who have already enough of this world's goods, and these are the people who are getting the protection from the present Government even while this House is in session. I do not wish to be personal, but we all know that there are people reaping rich rewards from this Government and looking for more, and we must swallow that and come in here to make laws for hungry speculators, while if a hungry man stole a piece of bread he would be put in clink for months. And you call that justice. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this country will see and the Government will see that they are at least given some sort of justice—I mean the fishermen, the laborers, the clerks in the stores, and the mechanics—all the laboring classes are given a square deal, not the hungry speculators, not the land sharks, but the people that are the bone and sinew of the country, whom the Government has neglectd. Unless the Government of the day sees that they are protected, we are in a sad state of affairs. Here we are with nearly 80 million dollars debt, and all classes thought that we had at least the Labrador to depend on to reduce that debt, and now we find that we have the Labrador with a great deal of it given away. I think that is a sad state of affairs at which we have arrived, and I trust that someone will see that something is done in the very near future to give the people what the Monroe Administration promised —"a square deal."

I don't want to do any more obstructing. I was told I was an obstructionist, but I went home for two weeks and found nothing done when I came back. They said they had to wait for me, and I am glad to know I am of such importance. I am opposed to giving extension of grants on Labrador, I want it for Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman, I don't know whether the gentlemen who are speaking realize that the object of this Bill is to hold Labrador for Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. It has been suggested by the hon. member for Ferryland that he didn't like Clause 2; we are prepared to amend these in any proper way suggested. I would like for members to debate the resolutions, and if there are portions they don't like, give us their suggestions. I will read an amendment which has been drafted to Clause 2, and if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition or the members consider it an improvement we will adopt it. There is no object in this Bill except to protect Labrador for Newfoundlanders. We are not protecting any particular persons, and we will alter the bill in any way the Opposition wants, in line with the object, that is to prevent the Labrador being given away by this or any other Government. I made it perfectly clear that we have given nothing away—we have done nothing but interpret an Act in existence. Now if members feel that Clause 2 ought to be altered, we will alter it it in any way to meet your views, but in the meantime the Clerk and Solicitor have put their heads together and drafted an amendment which may improve it, and I would suggest to the hon. member for Ferryland that it meets his objection.

(Reads)

If any hon. member thinks he can improve upon this, and suggest any alterations, we can adjourn the committee to give him time to consider it, but I want it clearly understood that we have nothing to hide; we are doing this to protect the Labrador. I took it by the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, and some of his followers that they were thoroughly in accord with the principle that we should protect the people, and prevent the giving away by this or any future government. But let us get down to talking about the sections and see if we can agree.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me I would like to make a suggestion as to how the man on the street is concerned in the Labrador Boundary — the man on the street seems to be frightened. As to what the legal position is I don't know, but if it is possible I would say that the Government should take back the land now under license, and pay these people the money they have paid the Government. That is the part that concerns us. If we have the Labrador, is it going to be any use to us in paying off our public debt? If we are going to give some to these speculators, and more to any company coming in next week; if it is going to go in dribs and drabs we will have nothing at at all. The Opposition to-day is in a kind of fog regarding why the Government is bringing in this legislation—if it is to protect the Labrador I certainly will support it, but not if it is going to give away parts of it to every Tom, Dick and Harry that comes along. And these communications show that you are trying to protect someone. Pay back their rental and take the lands, since they have not carried out their agreement. That is where you are going to have trouble with the Opposition. And if we are going along like this when the Estimates come down, we won't get out of this till Christmas.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, I feel kind of responsible for bringing about a certain amount of discussion about this Bill. There may not be anything very grave about the Bill, but the point that I was making, and the criticisms I was offering was that the Executive Government should not have given extensions of time to anyone. And I am absolutely opposed to that still. I can't understand it because these people who are given further time to comply with their licenses are not going to develop this property; if they were going to develop it they would have the hearty support of the House, but we all know well enough that they have no intention of doing so, any more than I have of jumping over Shea's wharf. I would have been agreeable even if they hadn't carried out their agreement, if when asking for an extension of time the Government had said: "Look here, we are going to conserve the Labrador and get the properties all together; legally we can cancel your license, or otherwise take an action against you for non-fulfilment of your contract and have you fined $10,000 and $100.00 a day. But we will tell you what we will do—you will find us to be decent and honourable —we will refund you the money you have paid in." Then we will own the Labrador, but we all know that for years speculators have been gambling with our rights, and it is time to put a stop to it, whether under this or any future Government. If I have obstructed this Bill, I hope the Government will reflect, and instead of giving renewals, they will decide that these people have no right, morally or otherwise. The point has been made by me, if I do say it, that when Dickie was turned out of Labrador by Quebec in 1905 (I wasn't in public life then) this is clear, that these speculators knew all about what happened to Dickie, and went in with their eyes open; they knew they couldn't go in and build, and they have no right to-day, morally or otherwise, on the Labrador, as I see it. As far as I am concerned, I am going to fight it to a finish. If I don't accomplish it I will do my best.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, in moving that the Committee rise, at the suggestion of Mr. Scammell, I should like to suggest to the hon. member for Ferryland that he obtain legal advice on one point. Supposing this Government had told these people that they were going to cancel the licenses or take an action for non-complying with the terms of their agreement, would we have gotten a judgment in any court? I don't believe we would get a judgment. We have been taking money for rentals year by year, and then at the end of the term it is suggested that we take action to eject them from the land, or try to have them fined an enormous amount because they were not allowed by the Canadian Government to carry out their agreement. Surely scuh action would be unjust.

MR. MOORE—We might not be sustained, but at least the Government would have done its part.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — We could only ask the Justice Department if it looked as if our case would be sustained. We don't want to take action for doing a thing that in our opinions there is nothing very wrong about, in order to get back lands when our own lawyers advise us that we have no case. That is the only point I would like to have hon. members satisfy themselves on. I beg to move that the Committee rise and report progress and ask leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the ratification of a Contract for St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Service."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — This Bill has been already discussed in Committee and some amendments were suggested. The sections 3 and 4 have been amended and now read:

(Reads)

The honorable member for St. George's communicated with Captain Butler asking him to reduce the rate and he didn't want to reduce the rate as suggested for produce in barrels without reducing it on other things, so he has consented to an all round reduction from 25 cents to 15 cents as the rate per barrel.

I would ask that these two, section 3 and 4 being the only ones altered, be read.

MR. SCAMMELL—I would like to ask the Prime Minister, with regard to the matter of Section 1, the classing of the ship A1 at Lloyd's. Is Captain Butler going to take steps to have it reclassed? How is the Government going to take steps to see that it is reclassed after this?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I am afraid it can't be done this year. The vessel was passed last year. The owners contemplate some very extensive alterations and Captain Butle thought he could not have her surveyed this year. However, the Government has no reason to think that there is anything wrong with the boat.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The Government waived the condition as it would be in the public interest to carry on the service.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the bill to them referred and had passed the same with some amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Second Reading of Bill "An Act Respecting Education."

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker: I would like on this occasion of the introducing of the second reading of this Bill to make some statements in connection with the Bill and for the purpose of greater accuracy I will refer to some notes I have in this respect.

(Reads)

I have been Minister of Education now for four terms of this Legislature. I don't know but this may be the last term of this administration. If it is or is not I feel that I would now like before giving up the position of Minister of Education to be able to have to my credit the passing of legislation which is in the opinion of the educational people of this country advisable. I cannot find that there is any contentions about it. Everybody, church, teachers and all others interested believe that this legislation is necessary. We have saved for this country four thousand dollars a year in the salary of a Minister of Education, seven thousand dollars of a contribution will immediately come in from the teachers themselves. I don't know of any particular reasons why this particular bill should be in any way contentious. It is quite possible that Dr. Barnes may come back as a member to this House again and it might be advisable to have him head of the Department of Education. I am not going to comment on that, but I am going to say that while he was a great educationalist, that it may be possible that a Government might come into power in which there will not be found anybody particularly interested in the educational work of the country. It is much easier in the party of twenty or thirty members to find a Minister of Fisheries or Public Works, than it is to find a Minister of Education, consequently it seems to me that we should create a bureau that will comprise representatives of each denomination. Whilst we have denominational education, and personally I was never in favor of it, but here lt is and here it will stay; while we have that in this country, I do claim that really men who have made an absolute study of denominational training in this country as have the Superintendents of Education, should have more voice in the affairs of education than they have under the former administrations For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I commend this Bill to the House, and hope it will not be contentious. I hope we will not have to go through it clause by clause and argue it out. I do not want to hurry the House about it but I want any member that is at all likely to take an active interest in this Bill, to take it home, read it, consult his friends in the educational world and find out whether this Bill is not desirable, and if he finds it is in the interests of the country that he will give it his support.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the second reading of the Bill entitled "An Act Respecting Education" was deferred until tomorrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Colonial Secretary the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that when this Bill was before Committee before there were one or two matters that were discussed and I promised to investigate and find out from the Tourist Publicity Bureau with regard to certain points raised by Mr. Halfyard and others. I have been in touch with the Bureau and with the permission of the Committee I will read the reply that I received to the communication I sent in reference to the subject matter of these contentions.

(Reads)

About one dollar up to thirty dollars and from thirty dollars to sixty-five, that is from the United States, from Halifax here I think the tax is five cents on every five dollars. Now with regard to the idea of people going into Halifax. Honourable members will appreciate that there are very few passengers that stop at Halifax from here. It is only a place en-route, and any distinctions made with regard to that would be hardly worth considering. Another point that must be considered is, that a person now going to the States, if he pays his two dollars or three for a tax on tickets he is now obviated of the necessity of providing a passport. The United States does not require a passport for anyone going from Newfoundland at the present time, so we are now saved that expenditure.

(Reads)

I may say that one of the representatives of the Bureau since I wrote them have interviewed the American Consul and the representatives of the Furness Withy and the Red Cross Companies, and they said if you are going to make any exception you are going to cause tremenduous confusion and going to interfere with the regular operation, so I submit that the clause which we suspended the reading of at the last sitting should be now read, and I commend it to the consideration of the Committee.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that the Committee had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had passed the same without amendment. On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that leave be given to introduce a bill accordingly.

On motion the Bill entitled "An Act Respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes" was introduced and read a first time and was ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I beg to move the House now rising do adjourn until to-morrow at three of the clock.

MR. K. BROWN—On the motion to adjourn I would like to ask the Prime Minister if it is the intention of the Government to grant any special moneys for Public Works this year?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—The Government has not come to any decision about that. It is a matter for the House rather than for the Government.

MR. BROWN—I would like to say that it is about time for the Government to take up the matter because things are getting pretty serious. I have a message here which says:

(Reads)

I have a message from Springdale:

(Reads)

Now several places in the district that I represent, Mr. Speaker, have roads impassable, bridges broken down and the people can't get over them;can't get by with horse and waggon or motor cars. From the answer of the Prime Minister I suppose we can judge that the Government is not going to grant any special money for public works. Well, if that is not done it is just as well for us all to go and commit suicide.

While I am on my feet might I ask another question. Is it the intention of the Government to do anything in the way of finding employment for people now out of employment in St. John's

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—In reply to the hon. member I may say that the Government have had a few interviews, at any rate, with a large committee of the unemployed. The members from St. John's East have had numerous interviews and we have pointed out to them that $90,000 has been spent by the Government in St. John's and that we as a Government don't see where we can find any more money to take care of the situation in St. John's; that there was a certain responsibility with regard to people in destitute circumstances, but we claimed that responsibility; if there is to be work done in St. John's and work is needed in St. John's badly enough; it is on the taxpayers of St. John's to pay for it and not on the taxpayers of all parts of the country and for that reason we have sent those people who have come to us to the Municipal Council. They were sent back to us and they have been battledored and shuttle-cocked about; but I can't see what the Government, under present financial conditions can do in the way of granting money for employment in St. John's any more than for many other places where I know there is a great need for employment.

I find in my district the matters the hon. member for Twillingate has put up this afternoon. It is no way new. We have had representations that bridges are falling down in my district and other districts. We are getting letters and messages all the time about people starving; about people needing to be fed, and people needing work and I don't think even if the present Opposition were in power to-day that it would be very much better able in the financial condition of the country to cope with the situation than we are. That is all I can say to the hon. member as far as the people of St. John's are concerned.

MR. K. BROWN—I thank the Prime Minister for his explanation and I may say I am sorry the duty falls on me to bring the matter before the House this afternoon when I am not representing that particular district. Altogether from the answer I received from the Prime Minister it seems that nothing can be done and these unemployed and their wives and children must starve. That is the answer; nothing else can be arrived at only that the unemployed in this city must starve and if there are unemployed in the outports they must expect the same thing. With scores of people going to the United States and more left home to starve it is just as well to get out of here right now. To bring this before the House is in my opinion the duty of Mr. Linegar, the member for that district. I wouldn't be talking about that but that so many unemployed have met and asked me to bring the matter before the House.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Or of Mr. Brophy.

MR. K. BROWN—No; I say Mr. Linegar because in 1924 when your Government was returned to power, Mr. Linegar rose to second the address in reply, if I remember rightly, and the honourable gentleman got up and congratulated himself on being the first labour representative elected in this country. I told him if that was an honour that honour fell to me in 1923. If Mr. Linegar is proud of having that honour of being a labour representative I am sure he ought in the interests of his constitutents and those that are starving to-day in the city of St. John's live up to that honour and get up and say "I want relief for those unemployed and I'm going to have it. If I don't I am going to walk across and take an independent seat." The Government can do something. In 1923 and in 1921 when the unemployment situation was acute something was done. They gave them rock sheds or something to keep them from starving. But nothing is done today. I assure the honourable member for St. John's West that if he makes a motion in this House in the interests of the unemployed in St. John's or elsewhere I will support him right to the limit. Now, however, I am presenting the case for his interests. I realize that to-day people in this town and their children are starving. I know; people have asked me and have asked you for money and said they didn't have food to eat in the house, and they didn't have enough to buy a loaf of bread. That is all very well for us who have enough to eat. I will support any member who will get up in this House and speak in the defence of the unemployed in the city of St. John's or elsewhere—and I hope that the honourable member for St. John's West will see fit to grasp the first opportunity of taking the matter up in this House and at party meetings to see what can be done for the unemployed.

MR. HALFYARD — Mr. Speaker, speaking to the motion to adjourn, as Mr. Brown, member for Twillingate has brought the matter of construction of roads and bridges to the attention of the Government, and also the prevailing unemployment in St. John's, I may be regarded as remiss in my duty if I did not say something on behalf of Trinity District. Numerous letters and messages are received by me weekly and daily and 99 per cent. of these contain requests for sums of money to repair roads and bridges or asking for employment. A number of men left for Millertown, and through the good offices of Magistrate Fitzgerald they had to be passed back at Government expense. The conditions in Trinity District are somewhat similar to those obtaining in other districts, and I don't know what can be done. I presume it is agitating the minds of the Government as to what can be done. As summer advances and many find nothing to do, they ask themselves what will happen when the winter comes. Mr. Speaker, all I am asking for is enough to make bridges passable for people to walk over from one place to another. Roads can be gone over, but bridges must be kept in repair, and I trust the Minister of Public Works will see that the Government finds money for the absolutely necessary cases, suppose they have to anticipate another loan. It won't take a great lot—if you would only put to the credit of Trinity District just what it cost to build one mile of road in 1926 I would be satisfied.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, following the hon. members for Twillingate and Trinity, I just want to confirm that with something which I took up with the Department of Pubilc Works to-day, I was instrumental in having Mr. Gosse sent out to inspect two bridges, the Gallows Cove Bridge in Witless Bay and the Mobile Bridge in Mobile, and I understand Mr. Gosse reported them to be in bad condition. I asked the Minister of Public Works what would be done, and he said he had no money, and that he would see the Minister of Finance this afternoon. I want to tell the Government that while I am a member for the District I hold myself morally responsible for accidents that might happen on these bridges, and I place that on the shoulders of the present administration. There ought to be a special sum allocated to put them in passable condition. I shall defer any further remarks on that until the Estimates come up, when I shall criticise the action of the Government in spending other money.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Thursday, June 16th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

THURSDAY, June 16th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Hon. Colonial Secretary tabled the Report of the Superintendent of the Tuberculosis Sanatorium for the year ending December 31st, 1926.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the bill entitled "An Act respecting the ratification of a Contract for St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Mail Service," was read a third time and was ordered to be sent to the Legislative Council with a message asking their concurrence in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled: "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, I might say in reference to the amendment suggested by the introducer of the Bill that it doesn't cover the requirements of the members on this side of the House. What we want is an amendment to that Bill to prevent any further extension or renewal of licenses that are supposed to be held on the Labrador at the present time. We consider that licenses were renewed and that it is not in the interests of the country nor in the interests of the people. It is unnecessary and uncalled for and we think it is illegal and we want if this Bill goes through, to have it stipulated that no further licenses shall be extended or renewed on the Labrador. We haven't had time to give it quite all the consideration we would like and we thought that perhaps in view of this the introducer of the Bill might be good enough to have the Committee rise at this stage and see if they could give further consideration to what we suggested.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER —I think we would be perfectly satisfied to have the Committee rise. As I explained yesterday we have done all we can through the various legal minds on this side of the House and in the Department of Justice to provide for the very point the Leader of the Opposition raises, and as far as we can get it to do so the Bill covers the very point he raises. In other words we claim that lands or rights can't be given away after this Bill is passed except by the Legislature.

HON. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION — Perhaps you misunderstood. I said no further extension or renewal of these that are held.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — No further extension can be given after this is passed.

HON. THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—You said you have given a further extension. You said you have renewed leases. You have provided for two years to erect a mill.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — My point is that we simply interpreted the legal position under the Act as we understood it; that under the Act as it stood that they had legal rights and we couldn't prevent them from having two years after the declaration of the settlement; that we couldn't prevent them from having that term to put up a mill. That was the legal advice given to us by the Justice Department as I understood it, that was in their opinion what the Supreme Court would decide if the matter was taken to the Supreme Court and was only interpreted at the request of these persons that put the question up to us. We referred to the Justice Department and they gave us to understand that if we were to attempt to tell these people that because they had not erected a mill that their leases were forfeited, in spite of the fact that their rentals were paid up to date, that the Supreme Court would not stand behind that decision but would have given judgment to the contrary.

MR. CASHIN—Try it out.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Governments as a rule don't try things out like that unless they think they have got a case.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—I can only say in reply to the Prime Minister that I don't see how the Prime Minister or any other legal man can say what the Supreme Court is going to do.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — You can't say that; you can give an opinion what it is likely to do.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—In every battle that comes off you find two men of different minds and they don't know until the decision is handed down. When you gave that two years to erect a mill that was certainly an extension. Yesterday the Minister of Justice told us that it was about 1905 that the dispute arose over the mill put up by Dickie. If that dispute was in 1905 every one of the leases held by people to-day on the Labrador was issued since 1905, and they certainly accepted the leases with their eyes open to the fact that they were not able to erect a mill, and they simply took a gamble as to whether for paying in money they be allowed to retain their interests on Labrador. Now it has come to a point that the Labrador means so much to us that the Government should take some steps even if it should cost a bit of money to find where we stand. Even if the case should have to be taken into Court it would only amount to whatever would be the cost of the case, and if you lose you have only lost the cost of the suit, and if you win you have all Labrador given back to us and have something to dispose of for Newfoundland's interests.

That is the position we take, and we take the strong position that no extension should be given to the holders of licenses, as we would be only compromising that which we secured at great cost by giving the best part of the Labrador territory to private speculators.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, in response to the statements of the Leader of the Opposition, it appears to me like arguing in a circle. As he very aptly said, one can only give an opinion and I have not that presumption of my own opinion to think that it is perfect any more than any other member has. So long as we have the Privy Council so long will a case, if taken, be liable to appeal there. Differences of opinion in law will exist up to the last court of appeal. With regard to the views expressed respecting the interpretation of this Act, as to what ought to be done under a given set of circumstances, there is no court in the world, as I see it, humanly constituted that is going tomorrow to give rights to an action for damages and penalties taken by a Colony against a man who had paid his rentals all along, because he went in with his eyes open and with the knowledge that this Labrador dispute was on. The fact that a man went in while the dispute was on is ample proof that he took a gamble for what it was worth. The object of this Act lies in one direction—and no other—and that is to ensure the disposition of lands on the Labrador should go through the Legislature. Then so far as we are able we draft legislation to carry out the intention of the Act to the best of our ability, and so that there will not be any misapprehension, if there is any other member of the House who is prepared to make a better draft I am prepared to accept and I feel that the other gentlemen associated with me are also. Primar ly the advice tendered the Government as to the action it ought to take towards the two parties whose rentals were accepted down the years and waived any attempt to erect the mill would, in my opinion, be endorsed by any court of law, despite the opinion of the Leader of the Opposition to the contrary. Now when one talks about trying things out one must remember that it is not altogether a matter without results. Trying test cases costs money. If you lose you lose on two counts. First of all you lose your money, and secondly you are held up to public opporobium. A case is now threatening testing the power of the Government to cancel licenses wh ch had not been paid. If the Government had not power in this, they certainly had not power where rentals had been paid.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, the trouble is that sufficient attention to licenses has not been paid and the Government has been too easy and too lax. I hold in my hand a license issued to John C. Hepburn, dated May 6th, 1927. Previous to that date Mr. Hepburn never had a license on the Labrador. There was a property down there in the name of Messrs. Baine, Johnston & Company and which property was first in the name of H. J. Crowe. Now, I understand that Mr. Hepburn never held the license so that there was no necessity for the Government to issue a new license to a man who never held one before. Now it is specifically stated in this license:

(Reads.)

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—Mr. Chairman, I would like to put the Leader of the Opposition right with regard to the statement he made in connection with a license he held in his hand in relation to Mr. Hepburn. This is not a new license but merely a renewal of transfer. I called up the office a few moments ago and ascertained the facts from the Deputy Minister. This lease was originally granted to Walter B. Grieve and he made an assignment to Mr. Hepburn. From him it was transferred to Mr. H. J. Crowe, who recently transferred it back again to Mr. Hepburn. So that it is in no sense a new license but simply a confirmation of title.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman: In reply to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines I have but to say that the Minister of Justice knows well that it is not necessary to issue a new license in the name of a different party.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman: This document does not affect the title of the property. It is not a new lease, but simply a confirmation of the title. Nothing more was given than that had been previously held. This procedure has nothing in the nature of anything wrong about it. The original lease had been transferred and re-transferred and surrendered back to the Department and for which lease the Department merely issued a new license in confirmation of the title. The mere presence of Mr. Hepburn's document now did not affect that property at all and he got no better title than before.

MR. HICKMAN — Mr. Chairman: The Government has been three years in office and the Department of Agriculture and Mines must have known that the conditions of the licenses were not carried out. You knew the circumstances respecting the Labrador territory last autumn and you should not have accepted rentals last year from speculators. Now, having accepted the rentals, the Government should return the rentals to the people who paid them within the past three years.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—Mr. Chairman: Respecting the subject matter now before the Committee, I might say that in 1925 when the licenses were cancelled on the Labrador one of the parties interested came to me with regard to the cancellation of his lease. He pointed out that he owed a large amount, but that as he had paid a very considerable amount he claimed a vested interest in the property. I told him that in order to retain his vested interests he would have to pay all his rentals. He then asked me if it were possible for us to give him a title to the property—the Labrador Boundary case was then in dispute. I told him we could, because, if we had taken any other course and balked at the authority we claimed we had, we would have admitted the weakness of our case and admitted doubt in our title to the Labrador. The Government then gave three months' notice of cancellation to those who had not paid up their rentals. We were not arbitary in the matter and we gave them a further three months' notice. I remember when the Morris administration was in office the same idea was intended, namely, to cancel the leases for people holding large areas on the Labrador. Suddenly we found we were losing revenue from that property because some were paying and others were not. But, sir, you got to put that class of people on the same level and it was only in 1925 that the matter was taken in hand seriously and effectively by the present Government, and it would have been suicide if any lessee could have the evidence that Newfoundland had doubted her rights to collect rentals just as it would have been good evidence for the other side, but we claimed that Labrador belonged to us, and, if we did not maintain that position, we would have been weakening our own case. I remember some ten years or more ago during the Morris Government, in Governor Davidson's time, the Governor General of Canada suggested that no further leases be granted there until a settlement of the dispute was arrived at. I do not know whether the Morris Government or any other former Government carried out that policy; but since the present administration assumed office there has not been a single lease granted on the Labrador; those who have been in arrears and have not paid up their rentals have had their leases cancelled.

Regarding the erection of a pulp mill. I do not know the legal aspect of the case, but I do know something of the moral aspect of the case. These people who have paid up their arrears, I have no doubt, would have erected their mills, if they had been permitted to do so; but the Quebec Government interfered and would have prevented them if they had attempted to carry out the terms of the lease. After the title was made clear and absolute, the Government of Newfoundland gave these people two years' extension to carry out their contract.

I merely submit these ideas, Mr. Chairman, to the House because I think the position of the present Government now is absolutely unassailable.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman: I have listentively to the various arguments put up from the Government benches. My reply is that, if I were one who had not half carried out what I had promised to do, I would have been nervous that any person would let me off. No doubt, the parties in the transaction on the Labrador were in a similar position until they found that in the present Government they had a soft crowd to deal with. Those speculators agreed with past Governments to build and operate mills but did not do it. Still they are able to hold the properties and are granted extensions of their leases. Another lease that expired some years ago has been renewed. The whole trouble is, in my opinion, that the present Government made a mess of the whole thing. If past Governments are to be blamed now for these legacies, as we are told they are to blame, why cannot we put something in this Act now as a safeguard for the future.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—It's no use.

MR. CASHIN—Well, then, if it's no use, this Bill should be cut out entirely, as the point of this Bill has nothing whatever to do with these old leases. It looked fishy from the start and I maintain now that when the Bill was introduced that it was fishy because the Government never told this House that you had extended those leases. The Opposition were not told what was being done and what information we did get we had to drag it out of you. Evidently there is something rotten in the State of Denmark.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—We don't tell the Opposition everything we know.

MR. CASHIN—I agree with the Prime Minister. The Government has not told the truth and a lot of wrong information was given to this House by Ministers of the Crown when they were asked for a true statement of the country's affairs in this House. You thought you were dealing with an aggregation of children here. But, I agree it is a crowd of children who are controlling the destinies of this country because my three-year-old child would manage things better than the people who are managing the affairs of this country at the present time.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — I understand that the Leader of the Opposition wants this to stand over until they have an opportunity to draft legislation which they consider more protective. If that is so I shall move that it stand over, but I don't see the sense of it. We have a bill that apparently covers every contingency, and if you are going to strain things to cover what happened in the past I think it will be difficult. However, if the Leader of the Opposition wants it I shall do so.

MR. HALFYARD— Mr. Chairman, before the Committee rises, I should like to thank the Minister of Agriculture and Mines for the copies of the letters sent his Department by the parties asking for an extension of time to conform with their leases. I agree with some of the speakers—we seem to be arguing in a circle, and we do not seem very clear on the statements we make. At first an extension of two years being granted was spoken of, but the Prime Minister added to the complication by saying that the Government gave no extensions. I thought that if I were speaking to the matter again, I should try to give expression in so speaking in terms that meet that interpretation put on them by the Prime Minister, and that I would say instead that new leases had been given. Well, if that has not been done, what has? Nothing? Well, for the information of the House I shall read the letters that were sent to these people.

(Reads)

Well, they have been given two years from the settlement of the Labrador Boundary dispute in which to complete their agreement. I suppose that can be interpreted as an extension of time; I think it will take a Philadelphia lawyer to make out that there was no extension. At any rate we can say that it looks like an extension.

Another point. The Colonial Secretary and I usually see eye to eye in things which affect the welfare of the country, but strange to say we usually come to a different conclusion on the different acts and clauses. The Colonial Secretary, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition as to the action of the Government in not cancelling the leases or not taking the rentals, gave as his reasons that it might affect the title to the Boundary, and that it might make a bad impression.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —I beg your pardon for interrupting, but I think you misinterpret my statement. What I said was that one of the people who was a delinquent, and who wanted his title to be accepted without paying rental, and I told him that we couldn't admit that there was any question as to our title, and that he must pay his rental or otherwise we would have to refuse it.

MR. HALFYARD—That is all in the point of view. Cancelling the licenses for non-performance of the terms would not affect your case in the Labrador Boundary dispute, and that is no excuse for the present Government not cancelling them. There is no excuse whatever. You accepted their rentals, and because of that some want to argue that you are morally responsible. That all depends on the people with whom you are dealing. I take the attitude that you are dealing with a crowd of speculators and gamblers; I don't believe there was scarcely a license holder on the Labrador who intended to operate. They were speculating—they wanted to sell out and make a great gain. They were gambling and we allowed them to gamble, but we are not obliged to extend that one second longer than necessary to develop. And these people had all kinds of time before the Labrador was settled, and could sell out and make their money but now their time for gambling and speculation has ceased and we want to sell the Labrador. They have gambled and lost and we are under an obligation to the people of the country as their representatives. We have allowed them to gamble, and no doubt they would still like to sell and make some money, but that doesn't suit us, and it is not in the best interests of the country to continue.

HON. THE LEADER OF OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the Prime Minister, I understood him to say that he would be willing to have the Committee rise, giving us the right to change the Bill to cover what we require. We shall be very glad to make some suggestions between now and the next meeting of the Committee if the Prime Minister will do that.

Now, I must make a few remarks regarding the letters read by Mr. Halfyard. Here, on June 14th, two days ago, after the Bill had been before us and before it could be thoroughly discussed and all points taken up—in face of that the Government only two days ago gives an extension of time to erect a mill. That is unfair. The Bill was before the House and they should at least have held off until we reached some conclusion. And an extension has been given on the 10th and also the 14th of June for large tracts on Labrador—it looks to the House very much as if it was done on purpose before we could prevent these being given.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the matter to them referred and had made some progress, and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Second reading of Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes."

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the second reading of this Bill, and in deference to Mr. Scammell, whom I believe wasn't here when I gave the information asked for regarding Mr. Tait's services. I beg to state them again. The first year of the Bureau they collected from the public $3,300.00 and the Government agreed to pay dollar for dollar. In addition their requirements have been $5,000.00 which included Mr. Tait's salary. The matter will be going into Committe to-morrow and I will have accurate information! I suggest, therefore, that the second reading be gone on with now.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, I have not prepared any special address to deliver to the House on this occasion, but merely rise in my place now on this second reading to give expression as to how I feel on the matter which is now before the House. In my humble opinion this Bill now under consideration is nothing more or less than a waste of time and with-al absolute trash. I am very much inclined to the opin.on that if some one brought into this Assembly to-morrow some Bill to place a tax on something for the encouragement of the fisheries or to lessen the burden of taxation which is crushing the life out of the people of this country, honourable members opposite would not display the same avidity towards its successful issue as they do to this piece of nonsense. Briefly, we are here to-day, and this is an echo or tail-end of the Tourist Policy which the Government has seen fit to inflict on the people at their expense. If a man gets up here and talks about something practical he is almost told to close up and no one is prepared to stay and listen to him. But when a half dozen gentlemen from Water Street get their heads together on a scheme of this nature all the House is prepared to cons.der it. If this is the kind of legislation the Government intends to bring in; if this is the way they hope to make a Paradise out of Newfoundland, there is little hope for us. I have tried to impress on members the absolute farce of this Tourist Policy; we have the country in the position where the people are driven out, and now being taxed further at the behest of a few sports. I rise to protest at this Bill which is brought before the Assembly; I consider it an absolute disgrace that the time of the House should be taken up with such stuff as this Bill now befor us.

MR. RUSSELL — Mr. Chairman, since we last discussed this Bill, I have made certain enquiries and received certain information, but at the same time it has not changed my opinion very much regarding the placing of this tax on the travelling public of the country. I notice that the only people who will be called upon to pay this tax to support the Tourist Policy will be those travelling first-class, whether on steamers or trains. There are a number of people in the country who, if the Tourist Policy develops, will benefit thereby—the hotel-keeper, the boarding-house keeper, the steamship owners, the railway, the shopkeepers and numerous others—but none of these as such are called upon apparently to pay a cent of this tax. But the man or woman, or family man or woman going out of the country, perhaps with two or three children, is called upon to pay a tax of two or three dollars on every ticket they buy. I say it is wrong in principle, and I strongly object to it. If it is the policy of the Government to develop a tourist traffic, and if they think the Tourist and Publicity Bureau is going to be of any benefit in the direction of development, I claim that the revenue or funds to support that should come out of the general funds of the country, to which everybody who buys a ticket is already contributing. I am not sure that this is going to warrant any large expenditure, but admitting that it will, I claim that it ought to come from the general revenue of the country and not from a few individuals who happen to travel to add that additional expense to their passage. It is all very well to say that it doesn't apply to second or third class fares, but there are lots of people not very well off who try to scrape enough together to secure decent accommodation from this country to Canada or the United States or any other country. They are entitled to do so, because in many cases second and third class is not a very good way to travel. So I say that I wish to place myself on record as being opposed to the Government levying a special tax on our people who travel first class from this country to any other in order to support a Tourist Publicity Bureau.

On motion of Hon. Colonial Secretary the Bill entitled "An Act to Incorporate the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for obtaining Statistics of Tourist Traffic and for other purposes" was read a second time and was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on to-morrow.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the second reading of the Bill entitled "An Act respecting Education" was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. Minister of Justice the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Resolutions respecting an Agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Since the Committee was on these Resolutions there has been a material change in sub-section F of Section 2.

(Reads.)

That sub-section has now been divided into three sub-sections.

(Reads.)

That is the only change that has been made since the Committee last met.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, under Section 2 of this measure the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. Ltd., or "its lessees, assignees, licensees, agents and any person or corporation undertaking actual work in or about" these operations or this industry, is granted concessions for duty free import of numerous and valuable articles in respect to an area defined as "the Red Indian Lake District". Surely that definition is altogether too vague and too general. I understand that a strict interpreation of that provision would bring twenty-six hundred square miles within the scope of these concessions. Does the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. own all that property? If not, who are the owners, and if there be any such, apart from the company, would the company be in a position under this measure to transfer any of its rights and privileges hereunder to such independent owners? This Committee should be provided with more exact information as to the extent and the ownership of properties to which the privileges in these Resolutions are to be accorded. If the Buchan's Mine property is as valuable as has been represented to us and to the general public, surely it would be sufficient encouragement to development of that property, if these concessions were made to apply to a specifically limited area including the mineral discoveries so far announced as made and proven. The Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co., I understand, are owners of two thousand square miles of territory in this district.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, in answer to Dr. Mosdell, I may say that that practically represents the whole area out there.

DR. MOSDELL—I wish the Honourable the Minister of Justice would be more specific, Mr. Chairman, because if the ownership of all the territory comprehended under this Act is not vested in the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co., that concern, under Section 4 of this measure, is enabled to vend its concessions to other owners of territory in the Red Indian Lake District.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, in reply I may say that this Bill covers any development that may take place, not alone as regards Buchan's Mine but any other mineral development in that area. This contract, in other words, is not confined to the immediate place that, perhaps, will be called Buchan's Mine.

(Reads the Act)

In other words, any mining exploitation that is done within the Red Indian Lake District during the next twenty years will get the benefit of this.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, the provision of this Bill whereunder the Company are allowed free imports during twenty years strikes me as very objectionable. Why such a lengthy period?. Very much less time than that is sufficient for the development of such an area as that at Buchan's Mine is declared to be. The idea, I take it, is to encourage the industry in its infancy. Then, why propose to continue to lead it by the hand when it has attained to man's estate? Assistance having been given to the establishment of the industry at Buchan's and in the district immediately surrounding that locality, all that is necessary has been done on its behalf. Five years should prove amply sufficient for a test of the possibilities of this area. Then, if the industry proves able to stand on its own legs, why continue to make concessions to support it? If the industry cannot thrive at Buchan's, where the deposit is said to be so large and so rich, it cannot reasonably be expected to thrive anywhere else in the Red Indian Lake District, as the Bill describes it. Make a liberal allowance of territory that is to be covered by the concessions granted under this measure, but do not blanket a district of such extent wholesale. Give the pioneers of the industry every reasonable chance to prove the value or otherwise of their deposits, but after that their successors or their own extension operations are no longer being conducted on chance and should be left to their own devices. In other words, encourage the establishment of an industry at Buchan's and others will be shown the prospects are good for realisation of satisfactory profits on their investment. Non-success at Buchan's would scare them away; success will encourage them to come and take their chances in a proved field. Government bonuses or subsidies or concessions are then unnecessary and unjustifiable.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr Chairman, while I see eye to eye with the hon. member on the general principle of avoiding admission, over lengthy periods, yet it is only right to say that if one looks at it from another point of view, we have had free admission for longer periods for enterprises coming into this country, and a twenty years' period was chosen in this case on the idea that it was a reasonable time for the full development of this proposition. The period of years is only of account in the case of certain new stuff coming in. In other words, supposing, fourteen years from now, some new development should take place, that would only mean new stuff coming in. It is not as if that during that period of years we were giving wholesale exemption of duties. Exemption is not for repetitions. It seems to me that it is good business to give a fairly reasonable time in the way of encouraging an industry. As a matter of fact the last agreement with the Pulp and Paper Company at Corner Brook was for a period of thirty years. With regard to what the hon. member says, I don't think that twenty years in this industry is an unreasonable period of time. I think, as he says himself, whilst the object is to encourage an industry in its infancy, at the same time under the words of the resolutions, where free entry is confined to extension, it seems to me that we ought to encourage the development for the next twenty years. I imagine that the period of twenty years in the life of a big industry would be very short.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, I think I am correct in saying that in constructing Section 2 of this Bill the Government followed the procedure aforetime usual to the making of such agreements. In other words, the old tariff was found of no use in such connections and was absolutely ignored, duty exemption clauses being framed to suit the necessities of any particular negotiations as they were undertaken. The position under the new tariff, adopted in 1924, is different, however. When that tariff was being framed, developments like the present were taken into account. Practical mining men were consulted and, acting on their advice, the Tariff Commissioners framed Sections 204 and 205 for the guidance of Governments in making future agreements in connection with the development of our mineral areas. These sections are definite and specific. They stipulate what materials and equipment shall be admitted into this country duty free for prospecting purposes and in connection with the development of a mine and for the equipment of that mine. Instead of the dangerously vague and general provisions of Section 2 and its multitude of clauses, this Bill should have embodied the specific and definite provisions of Sections 204 and 205 of the Tariff of 1924. The company would then have had a list of the equipment on which it was permitted free entry and customs officials would simply have had to check off that list instead of engaging in wrangles over the interpretation of general clauses, as is bound to be the case if the Legislature agrees to the passage of this measure as at present constructed.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, in reply to Dr. Mosdell, I may say that that very criticism was made by the Leader of the Opposition, and that may be a better way to have the contract drawn. It was pointed out by Mr. Wood, the solicitor for the A. N. D. Co., that it would be practically impossible to enumerate all the stuff in a schedule and it would be a tremendous schedule because there would be so many things to enumerate. As a matter of fact that section as it stands there in this Bill is the result of a consultation with the Deputy Minister of Customs.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the Minister of Justice I must say that I can see no insuperable difficulties in the way of the Company compiling a catalogue of goods they desire to get into the country duty free. They can take Tariff sections 204 and 205 as the basis for such a list. The list could, of course, be amplified to include necessities of the case not provided against under the Tariff sections referred to. While these sections were based on the recommendations of practical mining men, there may, quite conceivably, be important omissions therefrom. The company, indisputably, should be allowed free entry of whatever is necessary for prospecting, for the actual development and working of the mine. Now, as any honourable member can see by reference to the provisions of the Bill before us, the concessions proposed to be made cover a multitude of things far beyond the scope of the Tariff Sections I have cited, things that no practical mining man regards as essential to the purposes now under discussion.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—There are a number of things that come under this Bill that are not covered by Sections 204 and 205 of the 1924 Tariff Act. Cement, for instance.

DR. MOSDELL — And boats and ships. My contention, Mr. Chairman, is that when we get away from the granting of concessions in respect to the actual necessities for prospecting and mining we should be exceedingly careful what we do and should specify exactly what articles are to be considered as coming within the scope of the concessions. Take the case of ships, for instance. Wooden ships can be obtained in this country; steel ships cannot. The present Bill does not differentiate between the two kinds. Why not? The general experience of this country has been that when once mining or other promoters get the concessions they want they start in to develop their business with only so much consideration for the rest of the country as the terms of their agreements force them to show. Well, then, we must now proceed to make this measure serve the interests of Newfoundlanders generally.

The Minister of Agriculture and Mines has made reference to the large quantity of goods of very considerable value irregularly permitted free entry in connection with the Corner Brook development. My personal attention has been called to the fact that local goods were discriminated against, even when of equal quality and price to the foreign article. I am creditably informed that that discrimination was practiced to such an extent that goods were imported even when they could have been obtained locally and at considerably lower prices. I am by no means anxious to hamper the development project of this company with unnecessary restrictions, but I earnestly claim that the duty concessions accorded its undertaking should be qualified by providing protection for goods of local manufacture. Where it is possible to turn out goods suitable for use in connection with a project such as we are here considering, of quantities and qualities and at prices that meet foreign competition, then the preference should be assured the manufacturer of the local article. Otherwise, discrimination is certain to be practised and, in our anxiety to ensure the establishment of a new industry we are bound to inflict hardship and loss on industries already established in the country and being conducted in the country at considerable expense to our general population.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Chairman, in regard to the clause which says:

(Reads)

What should be regarded as a local article. For instance if the company is going to fit up their private houses or their staff house with stoves or furnaces, will that come in free of duty.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—So far as furnishing private houses is concerned sub section a of section 2 says for "the installation of water, sewerage and lighting systems." I certainly don't think that a stove in the ordinary sense would be a part of the heating system of a house. I take it that a water system would be plumbing fixtures in the ordinary sense. I don't think the Customs House or a court would regard a stove as part of a water system.

MR. GRIMES—What I want to be clear about is this: The Bill says "provided nothing herein shall be held to apply to fuel, etc., moveable articles of honsehold furniture for, or of equipment for, privates houses, staff houses or hotels; or articles intended by the importer for the personal and private ownership of individuals." It seems that it does not apply for the personal and private owenrship of individuals living in houses but it does, that is, these things may be imported free when they are for the use of the company. Will the company be allowed to import stoves for the heating of houses free of duty?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I should say certainly not. The Company will not be allowed to import stoves for the heating of houses. As I read it under sub-section a water systems to serve houses and towns may be imported free.

(Reads)

I take it that means pipes for water, and say in the sense of buildings like hospitals and of that kind, but I don't think the plumbing outfit of private houses or that are going to become owned by private individuals would be regarded as being free of duty.

MR. GRIMES—A very clear definition should be given of clause "f".

(Reads)

I am not now referring to heating systems installed in houses for the purpose of hot water. There may be a system just for heating houses put there by the Company and it is part of the house for which the occupant is paying rent to the Company. Would that be regarded as coming in duty free? You say articles intended by the importer for the personal and private ownership of individuals are excluded.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Let us take stoves. You clearly can't import a stove "for the equipment of private houses, staff houses or hotels, of if intended by the importer for the personal and private ownership of individuals." It seems perfectly clear that if you can't import a thing for a private house, a house not a company house, or can't import it for a staff house, which is used as the name implies only by working men or employees, you couldn't import it for a house owned by the company in which an employee lives and pays rent to the company. That would be still a private house. Therefore I don't think they would have any right to import an article such as a stove. I say that it comes under "equipment of private houses." I think it is clear from that first part of the section.

DR. MOSDELL—If the company owned the houses; say if the company build a number of houses all as part of a plan, they are company houses, not private houses.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—No! They are private houses still. A private house does not necessarily mean the house owned by the man living in it. If you let your house to somebody, you can't go in on him at any time nor could the company in their case. As I understand there is no intention whatever to ask for moveable articles or equipment going into houses erected by the company. If that can be made more clear, the Bill might be changed to make it so.

MR. W. J. BROWNE—Mr. Chairman: I think these terms are quite generous to the company, and I think that we should make sure not to err on the side of generosity. I think several of the sections are so comprehensive that at the first glance, one does not get a complete idea of everything that might be entailed by them. On looking over the Bill, someone has drawn attention to clause E. It says:

(Reads)

"All materials . . . equipment of transportation and shipping facilities." It is quite conceivable that quite a few articles necessary for the equipment of those transportation and shipping facilities could also be used in other connections; could be used in private houses and then too, there are certain clauses which allow the importation of articles which are excluded under section F; for instance, office furniture, office equipment, steamer equipment and store equipment. So that , some article which will be entitled to be imported free, for the use of an office, would not be permitted free for the use of a private house or a staff house. I am not saying that it would be done, but it is possible that the loophole might be taken advantage of, and the equipment imported for a man's office might be used in his house. Then referring back to sub-section A, they would be entitled to import a furnace and radiator equipment. I think that will be admitted. The section says too "Including materials for house building." I don't wish to be dogmatic on the point; I am just pointing it out. We are not acting on behalf of the company. They have very good legal minds to look after their interests. With regard to a stove, I would imagine that it would be necessary to complete a water system where there is a hot water system. The system would not be complete unless water was circulating freely; so, if a hot water boiler is not connected with the stove, you have not got your system working. A lighting system is not complete without lights so they might be enabled to import all kinds of bulbs, piano lamps and things of that kind.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN — These would be "moveable articles of household furniture."

MR. BROWNE—They are parts of the lighting system. I just point these things out as they occur to me. Perhaps there is nothing in them. If there is nothing in them, there is no harm done.

DR. MOSDELL—The Honourable member for St. John's West, Mr. Browne, invites further attention to subsection (e) of Section 2 of the Buchan's Mine Bill. Honourable memmers on both sides of this House would do well to give repeated and careful attention to the provisions thereof. It is provided that, for twenty years from the 20th day of January, 1927, the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, shall have the rights of importing, duty free, "all materials, machinery, parts, plants, utensils and implements for the construction and equipment of transportation and shipping facilities at and between mines and railway points or ports in Newfoundland including ships, docks, lighters, boats, railways, tramways and conveyors of any kind, wharves and docks; and all materials for the construction of buildings, warehouses and storehouses." We have already had some unfortunate experiences in connection with the Newfoundland Railway and industrial developments in this country. When the Corner Brook development was projected, we hoped that the amount of freight made necessary by the creation and operation of this industry would retrieve the fortunes of the railway. We were sadly disappointed. What has happened is that the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, Limited, has made an independent contract with an outside concern and the result has been not only to deprive the railway of freight charges on the great volume of goods it was anticipated would be hauled over it, but, in effect, it has transformed that section of the line between Corner Brook and Port aux Basques into a branch line, while much of the usefulness of the steamer Caribou has been destroyed.

The Prime Minister, speaking in connection with this Bill, said he hoped to see a freight business created in connecton with this industry that would be sufficient to wipe out the deficit on the operation of the railway. But there is nothing in this Bill to guarantee such a very desirable development. As a matter of fact, there is nothing in the Bill to ensure the continued use of the railway by the company at all. Moreover, there is here in subsection (e) of Section 2 a provision that all the equipment and materials for a railway shall be admitted duty free, if the Company desires to make such imports. It is to be presumed that if the company gets permission to import such materials it will not be prevented from using them. The only use to which they can be put is the construction and equipment of a railroad. Evidently, then an independent line of railway, owned and operated by the company and joining their mining operations as directly as possible with some port is not impossible in the future. Such a line may not even cross our own railroad. It may be built to a port on the southwest coast where shipping facilities are available all the year round. Without stressing the point further, I take the position that this agreement affords no adequate protection to our railroad; that it permits duty free imports of materials and machinery for the construction and operation of an independent line of railway and that it creates the inference that that is permissible under the provisions of the present Bill itself. This is a point of major importance and one that should be made clear and specific, whatever the intention of the Government and the company may be as contractural parties to the agreement.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the remarks of the member for Fortune Bay I may say that I quite agree with him that what has happened at Corner Brook so far as the Clarke Steamship Company is concerned is very unfair treatment to our railway. But the two cases are altogether different. The A. N. D. Company can never do this for the simple reason that they can get no stuff to the scene of their mining operations unless it is brought over the Newfoundland Railway system The honourable member who has just sat down said that there is nothing to prevent the A. N. D. Company from building a railway down to tidewater and that they might treat our railway as they treated the Reid Newfoundland Company. Well, I do not know anything about the Reid arrangements, but I do know that under this contract this Government will have the authority in their own hands whereby they will be able to put the A. N. D. Company or any other company or corporation in their places. The A. N. D. Company or any other corporation can put a railway where they want to build it, but they have to go to the Government first and get permission to build it. It is true, as suggested by the member for Fortune Bay, that the A. N. D. Company has a railway to the sea already. That applied to the Grand Falls project only; but in the present instance we have the matter in our own hands so far as giving them any rights to build a railway is concerned, even if they wanted to build it? I have a sentimental regard for the Grand Falls Company, as I worked for that Company for ten or twelve years. I am not an employee of the company now; I wish I was. It is a pity we have not more such companies operating in this country. Then, again, Mr. Chairman, it must be remembered that the promoters of this Buchan's mine proposition are not asking for any guarantees on their debentures, nor are they asking for a railway to be built for them, so that their case is not analogous to the ones cited by several members of the Opposition. And even if they do want to build a line of railway from Buchan's mine to Millertown Junction, it is not likely they would have Pullmans on their trains. They have to bring their traffic to Millertown Junction and our railway will carry it to Bishop's Falls in summer time and to Argentia, the probable port of shipping, in the winter time. Regarding exemptions on taxable goods, I might say that when this Bill was drafted I asked Mr. Laycock why he was asking to have the exemptions on barges and steamers and he told me that the intention was until the mine was developed sufficiently to ship forty tons of concentrates per day from Buchan's to Millertown. Later they decided that, if given a right of way they would build a railway to connect with main line at Millertown Junction, and they would ship two hundred tons of concentrates per day instead of forty tons; they will not be shipping any raw ore from the country, it will be concentrates or smelted into metal. In 1909 I was Assistant Manager for the A. N. D. Company and up to that time they had spent $150,000.00 in locating this body of ore, but it was only recently that the process for separating the zinc from the other ores has been succesfully accomplished.

It is quite likely that the Company will at an early date go ahead with the erection of a smelting plant which would mean a further 20,000 tons horsepower development for the hydro-electrical power to treat this ore and an additional outlay of three millions of dollars. The promoters of this project should be given every encouragement and I think it would pay this country to give this company the concession asked for in these Resolutions. Although I have no authority to speak for the company, I do not think it is the intention to have stoves or movable articles of furniture admitted free of duty.

DR. MOSDELL— Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point raised by the honourable member for Placentia and St. Mary's, I think that in view of the two or three experiences we have had in connection with railroads, surely we are not going to commit another mistake and allow the Newfoundland Railroad to go further in the hole than what it is now? We should make it positively certain that this thing is preserved against from Buchan's Mine itself and that it is not competed against, as is threatened by the importation of railway materials which are provided for in Sub-section (e) of Section (2) of these Resolutions. If you are going to give this Company general and unlimited rights to those materials, you are going to give them the right and permit them to have a railway parallel with ours. If this Company are getting vast and valuable concessions, we should take steps at the initial stage of the undertaking and make sure that a public institution like the Newfoundland Railway, which has cost so much to us, should not be put in a position to be destroyed by the operations of the Buchan's Mine just as the value of the steamer Caribou was destroyed by the Corner Brook people contracting with an outside steamship company.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—Mr. Chairman, if it is not perfectly clear to the Committee that this Company cannot build a railroad parallel with ours, then I say it is for the legal minds of the House to make clear. I take it that the Company cannot build a railroad without asking for a right of way to do it and they cannot get a right of way without asking the Governor in Council and if then granted it must be confirmed by this Legislature.

THE HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, I think the answer of the last speaker is a complete one; but at the same time I agree that the provision suggested by the honourable member for Fortune Bay would not do any harm. If the Company, though, shall not be allowed to build other railroad lines parallel with ours, I don't think that, at least, we ought to put it up to them because in that sense it would be in the nature of a private bill.

MR. SCAMMELL— Mr. Chairman, there is another point on this matter of a railway. Isn't it a fact that for some years the A. N. D. Company has been looking to the South Coast for a port? It is possible that they have large timber areas well south of the present railway line, and isn't it possible that they might contemplate the South Coast port, not only for Buchan's Mine, but to carry paper from their mills, and things of that sort. That seems important, and I don't think we are making proper provision for things of that sort, by providing that they shall not build parallel to the railway. They might contemplate the South Coast Port, and no doubt they do as regards paper. Mr. Sullivan referred to the Charter given the Company—he said they had a Charter. I thought it was the privilege of the Legislature only to give charters, and I heard nothing of any Charter. What is there to prevent building a line to the South Coast without a charter?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, a thought arises from the remarks of the hon. member for St. Barbe. As far as a business proposition is concerned, they might go to the South Coast—this requires a lot of thought. If this is going to be a big proposition they will naturally have to complete a new line of railway—it seems to me to be an extraordinary way to legislate to say that the longest way round must be taken. The point is well taken, and I suggest that the Minister give it some thought. But to say that they can't build a railway seems hardly possible; I was hoping that the Buchan's Mine may develop to such an extent that they will take over the railway. One of the hopes we have always had is that someone may become a millionaire overnight and take over the railway.

DR. MOSDELL: Mr. Chairman, I had no idea that the range of effective legislation was so limited until I heard the pronouncement of the Honourable the Minister of Justice on the subject. I, in common with ther honourable gentlemen on this side of the House, have urged that this measure, commonly known as the Buchans Mine Bill, should include a provision making it mandatory for the company to use Newfoundland workmen as exclusively as possible in connection with their development undertakings and their subsequent permanent operations. he Minister of Justice demurs. is of opinion that no legislative enactment could ensure the end at which we aim.. The fixing of a minimum wage rate has also been advocated by members of the Opposition. It has been and is being claimed that protection should be afforded our workmen against the possibility of he company fixing a wage rate substantially lower than that paid for a similar class of labor in connection ith plants operated in other countries. The Minister of Justice dissents again. He expresses the opinion that if we set a rate for labor as the lowest that shall be allowed to e paid to our workmen, it will presently develop that that is the highest the company will offer them. Surely, if the rate we set is in keeping with rates paid elsewhere, nobody would have any complaint if the company did presently adopt any such policy. Our effort should be to give the Newfoundland workman the greatest possible protection, to ensure him preference in employment on developments in his own country and to make certain that he is not forced to work at starvation wages, while imported workmen are paid the much higher rates obtaining in the countries from which they come. Then, too, for many years past this country has sacrificed a great deal in an effort to build up manufacturing centres in our country. We have aided these undertakings with duty concessions. We have given these undertakings high tariff protection. The revenue has suffered in our zeal to foster manufactures and the taxpayers are still suffering through our desire to maintain these plants in full operation. Now, we are considering a new industry. The establishment of that industry should open up a large additional market in our own country for goods manufactured in Newfoundland. It should, but under the terms of this measure as now submitted to us, it will not. The Government proposes to grant the company interested in the exploitation of Buchan's Mine such wide duty concessions that it will be hopeless for local manufacturers to expect orders for local made goods. Under this Bill even boats and ships, obtainable in Newfoundland will be permitted import to the country duty free. Such a policy is so obviously injurious to our local workmen and is so utterly at variance with the procedure in, say Canada, where such concessions are permitted only when Canadian goods are not available, that I am positively amazed. The Minister of Justice asserts that this is a condition to which we must submit, because we have no effective means of protecting our workmen as a preference in employment and a scale of wages or our goods as to exclusive use when they are obtainable at qualities and at prices that are as advantageous as goods of foreign manufacture. That, I submit to the honourable gentleman has not been the experience of other countries. They have found and applied means of protection of their workmen and their manufacturers and we can be equally as successful if we are equally as earnest in our endeavors as they have shown themselves to be.

The Honourable the Minister of Justice is also of opinion that we are powerless to assure to the Newfoundland Railway retention of the benefits of the great passenger and freight traffic, particularly the latter, which will be created as a result of mining developments in the Red Indian Lake district. Why not ? At present, Buchan's Mine is accessible to passengers and freight via the Newfoundland Railway only. Well, if we do nothing under this Bill to create or permit the creation of a rival road for any purpose whatsoever, then our present railroad must continue to hold the monopoly of passenger and freight traffic. That is the reason why I have so carefully examined the clauses in the Bill that have reference to railways or tramways or transportation generally and that is why I have so urgently called attention of the Committee to the fact that one of these clauses appears to me to give the company a right it does not at present possess, that of creating its own transportation line. Mr. Chairman, as I see it, we are hoping that the establishment of this industry will ensure employment of Newfoundlanders on a large scale; we are hoping that the industry will in large measure restore the prosperity of Newfoundland. The Prime Minister has expressed the expectation, shall I call it hope that the operations in connection with this industry will enable us to wipe out the deficit and the losses created on operation of the Newfoundland Rail-

-ay. We are, in other words, living on hopes for the future and we have a real or definite assurance of anything in this connection.

That is an awkward position and an unnecessary one. Moreover, it is an extremely dangerous position, when our railroad interests are considered. We should put ourselves in a definite and an established position in this connection. As I have already observed, the simplest way of doing this is the most effective. It consists merely in making it plain that this measure accords the company no right whatsoever to create its own independent transportation lines, railroads, tramways, or any other. As the Bill stands at present there is considerable doubt on that score. Don't let us forget what has happened in the past when similarly dubious clauses in legislation have had to be interpreted by the courts, by lawyers or by arbitrations. To a pretty uniform extent, the benefit of the doubt has been given to the corporation concerned. That is likely to happen again and to grave loss to this country and to our people generally unless we now proceed to make the provisions and the intentions of this measure so specific and so plain that he who runs may read and understand it. We cannot afford to permit anything to be vaguely understood; there must be no obscurities and there must be no indefinite understandings. Let us consider some of the warnings of the past against such a risky policy. When the Grand Falls enterprise was undertaken, there was a sort of "gentlemen's agreement" between the Anglo - Newfoundland Development Company, Limited, and the Reid-Newfoundland Company, Limited, whereunder the latter concern was to handle all the traffic of the former. If I am correctly informed, the Reid-Newfoundland Company convinced of the identity of interest between their own concern and the Anglo-Newfoundland Co, transferred to the latter for "a mere song" valuable lands and rights essential to their pulp and paper operations. It was, however, not very long before the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company set up a claim for lower freight rates than the Reids considered they could grant. The Grand Falls concern then proceeded to construct their own independent transportation line to tidewater at Botwood and the Reids were powerless to object, because they had an understanding with the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company merely that and not a hard and fast agreement that could be taken into court.

Consider an even more recent experience of ours in connection with our railroad. One of the outstanding advantages claimed for the Humber proposition when it was submitted to the electorate in 1923 was the claim that it would create traffic enough to wipe out the railroad deficits with which we had become so consistently and so painfully familiar. The railroad did get the benefit of that traffic for a while, but only long enough for us to learn its immense benefit to that railroad if it could be permanently retained. To cope with that increase of traffic, we made improvement in our railroad terminals, its rolling stock and its roadbed. We invested half a million dollars in a new steamer to ply on the Cabot Straits. And then all our railroad advantages were suddenly filched from us. The directorate of the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, Limited, made a contract with a Canadian concern to run a line of boats from Montreal and other Canadian ports direct to Humbermouth. That line now handles all the freight that formerly passed over our railroad and is, besides, a formidable competitor for regular passenger and tourist traffic. As a result of this competition, that section of our railroad between Bay of Islands and Port aux Basques has been reduced virtually to the status of a branch line, during the summer months, at any rate. Our investment in a new steamer for Cabot Straits is virtually lost. The 1923 contract in respect to the Humber Proposition embodied no hard and fast agreement in connection with the railroad and the result is that a concern that has received huge concessions from us gives the business we helped create to foreign concerns rather than to our local railroad and steamers. That is an experience that we cannot afford to repeat. We must carefully protect ourselves against its repetition. We have no such protection under the provisions of the Bill now being considered by this Committee or the House of Assembly.

Wide publication has from time to time been made for claims that at Buchan's Mine there has been uncovered an ore deposit totalling five million tons and having an estimated value of close on two hundred million dollars. The proposition is to create an immense industry for the mining and concentrating of this ore and, possibly as the Prime Minister observed, for its smelting and manufacture into articles of various kinds. The American Smelters, an immensely wealthy concern, are undertaking this development, because they have faith in its profits in the future. We are asked to give the development assistance by relieving it from taxation and by extending other benefits. To that extent, and it is a very large one, Mr. Chairman, we, the People of Newfoundland, make an investment in that undertaking in the Red Indian Lake district. We become partners in the enterprise. What, apart from a certain and indefinite amount of labor, and that mostly unskilled, can we hope to get by way of returns from our investment ? Nothing at all commensurate with the assistance we now propose to give the undertaking. I claim that, as the industry, by virtue of our interest and our assistance, is established on a paying and a profitable basis, a percentage of such profits should accrue to the People of Newfoundland and should be payable to the Newfoundland Treasury. But this Bill places us in no such position of ultimate financial advantage through the Buchan's Mine operations.

Why not a royalty at a rate worth while , to become effective if and when this concern is established on a profitable basis? At present, I understand the Minister of Justice to claim the only future liability of the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Co. or its subsidiaries or assigns is in respect to the payment to the Government of a royalty of five per cent. on the profits of mineral developments on its properties. The honorable gentleman is of opinion that we cannot impose an income tax because we are in duty bound to observe the provisions of the 1905 Act under which Grand Falls was created and its operations are now being conducted. But the Company does not propose to operate solely under the terms of the original agreement. A demand is here being made on the Legislature for new and sweeping concessions such as are not included in the Act of 1905. A new agreement is, therefore, being made and it is utterly absurd for the Company to claim that it must receive the broader scope of new benefits under the new arrangement, while this Country must content itself with the restricted benefits that accrue to it under certain conditions through the operation of the old Statute. If we are to amplify Newfoundland's investment in this concern then we must insist on the recognition of our right to a large share in any prospective profits. I am in favor of the application of a royalty much bigger than the original five per cent. one, applicable as soon as the company has had a chance to get on its legs and to continue in operation until the company erects smelters and manufactures here and exports only the finished article. Then the royalty will cease because no unmanufactured Newfoundland products will be exported. The income and business profits taxes can then assure the Newfoundland Treasury due profit from the operations of the company in this country. At present we are assured only of the five per cent. royalty and appear to be ensuring ourselves a repetition of our unfortunate experiences in connection with the export of iron ore from Bell Island.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The income tax or business profits tax will still be applicable.

DR. MOSDELL —How much have we ever received from industries of that sort through the medium of the income tax? Very little. Unless something specific, such as I have suggested, is undertaken, this agreement will not be worth the paper it is written on, as far as any concrete benefits to the people of Newfoundland are concerned.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — We have different views on that. As far as I am concerned I would admit anything free of duty into this country that I thought was going to create an industry. The principle I go on is that of employment. Secondly, regarding the royalty—it is very questionable how much we will get, or as to whether a royalty is the best method of getting returns. But the labor part of it appeals to me.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the remarks of the honourable members who have spoken, I maintain that what this country needs to-day is a political economist. We have no authority to go to find out what value Buchan's Mine is, or as suggested by the Minister of Justice, the Boot and Shoe industry. That is where we lose—we can't find out what value any particular industry is to us, and we become the prey of investors who seize on our poverty and lack of labor and ignorance to come in here and get concessions that we shouldn't normally grant. And in our ignorance we don't know where we stand.

As I said the other day, the period of 20 years for free entry is too long, on general principle. The man on the street wants to know why the Government is prepared to grant this company 20 years free entry; the Minister of Justice told us that it is not an unreasonable period. The Prime Minister said the other day that he hoped Buchan's Mine would be the means of paying off the railway deficit. There is nothing incorporated in this Bill that they are going to haul one ton of ore over the Government Railway.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — They can't get it out any other way.

MR. ASHBOURNE—But they are granted free entry on railway locomotives and irons or whatever they want. What is there to prevent them from building a railway to Botwood from the Mine, then where does the Government Railway get off? As far as we know they may have the right to do so now. Here is a section.

(Reads.)

Isn't there some continuity implied in that? What is there to prevent them from building their own line as they have done to Millertown? As I said before, here we are making a dangerous precedent which we may be called upon later to re-enact for another company. And the prospects may not be as good as Buchan's Mine. As regards the encouraging of local industries and local manufactures, I am in full accord with that. I don't see why that free entry should be granted those people. If we could afford to give those concessions it would be alright, but how much of an asset would six or seven million dollars be to the revenue of this country if we denied them those concessions? There is fifteen million dollars' worth of goods coming into this country duty free, and I think that the position here to-day is that anybody that has got an iota of conscience is asking whither Newfoundland is drifting. Where will we be in three or four years' time? Now we should see that nothing else comes into this country duty free except what is permitted at present. In the position that we are in to-day we cannot afford to be letting in many things duty free. It has been mentioned that the A. N. D. Co. has in the past pursued the policy of buying as much as possible from our local industries. But we cannot go by what has been done in the past. Our duty is to have it laid down in black and white.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman, I would be glad if the hon. member would frame us some clause that would be acceptable to the A. N. D. Co. in regard to the protection of our local industries. I made such a suggestion, but it was claimed that I made this suggestion because I was trying to protect myself, as I had large interests in a local industry. But still I do agree that there is great difficulty in framing a clause that would compel any company of this kind to buy its material in this country just because there are local manufactures in this country, while it is desirable that it should be so. Take the case of the Colonial Cordage Company for instance. Suppose the Act said that this A. N. D. Co. could only buy cordage that was manufactured in this country. There would appear to be nothing to prevent that manufacturing concern, with the bad reputation that it has, according to this House, from putting such a price on its material as would make it almost prohibitive. Of course that is rather an extreme case. But that is the point that makes it difficult to absolutely stipulate that any company has got to buy in this country anything that is manufactured in this country.

Another point in connection with the very excellent suggestion made by Doctor Mosdell, to compel the company to bring the ore over our railway, is this. Some time ago one of the things that came up for consideration in connection with this matter was the possibility of a railway being built from Red Indian Lake right through to Grand Falls, and that it would be a shorter route than to come around by our railway. It was pointed out to me, as it has been expressed by one member here this afternoon, that they cannot cut a line of railway along that territory without the permission of the Government. So I am satisfied that we are protected in that respect. But at the same time, if anything could be done in other respects that would protect us, I would be glad to know. I got the Minister of Justice, Mr. Wood, and the Deputy Minister to work for several hours trying to bring about a clause that would take care of that injustice. The matter was first brought to my attention by Mr. Angel, the representative of the Nail Factory. I would like to see something done that would be fair to the country and the local manufacturers, but I am sorry to say that so far I cannot see where the solution lies.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairmaan, I have not yet heard from any gentleman on the other side of the House what reason there is for the granting of these concessions. In the first place it strikes me that it will mean a considerable loss to the revenue by permitting the importation free of duty into this country everything with the exception of pianos, and one would naturally look for some justification. What is the company giving to this Colony in return for the huge and long continuing concessions that are involved in these resolutions.

This game has become a habit; it is even more than a hardy annual. There is a profuse crop each year of requests for free entry by everybody who wants to start an industry. Whilst I am not adverse to giving reasonable concessions to any organisation, provided that it can show that it is going to give the Colony some adequate return, yet at the same time I fail to see why we should tumble over ourselves to give just what happens to be asked for. If everybody who starts an industry in this country is to be given every concession for which he asks, where will it all end?

Only a few days ago an organisation came in here named the Holyrood Pond Corporation, which is going to begin some kind of industry—we don't know what—at that pond. In the course of the debate on the resolutions it transpired that it was going to start a fish plant. And it was also apparent from the resolutions themselves that it was going to enter the electric light business in the near future or far distant future. For all these purposes—purely visionary—it required free entry for a period of years of almost everything under the sun. And this House of Assembly in Committee was seriously considering giving these people all the concessions for which they asked, and I suppose, as the resolutions seem to have the support of the Government side, they will probably get them.

It was pointed out by me in that connection that there is already a fish plant in existence in Newfoundland, and that the owners of that plant are compelled to pay a tax on their machinery of every kind and description. But this company with a visionary scheme fathered by Mr. Job and Mr. Peter Cowan can get what concessions in the nature of free entry which the imaginations of these gentlemen may suggest to them.

Now we have the A. N. D. Company coming to this Legislature again and asking for huge, far-reaching and long continuing concessions. I think the A. N. D. Company have got enough out of the taxpayers of this Colony already. They have a closed town at Grand Falls where nobody is allowed to trade, or even enter, without their permission, and now they are endeavouring to get another closed town for themselves. Everything imaginable, under these Resolutions, is to come in duty free; but if somebody in St. John's or any other part of the Island wants to build a house he has got to pay the tariff on the material he uses. I would like to see a statement from the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, who fathers these Resolutions, as to what this corporation undertakes to do for this Colony in return for remissions of duties and for permission to import practically everything they can for the next twenty years. There are always two sides to a bargain This House of Assembly is not a charitable organization, I take it. We are here to protect the people and the revenue of the people of this country because every cent that this corporation does not pay in the way of duties upon their goods the people have got to pay. That is the question we want answered. It has been suggested here that their undertaking is in the nature of an experiment and that they are investing a lot of money; but it is not suggested that the millions they will spend will give no returns .No, the evidence is to the contrary. I cannot understand what possible justification there was for proceeding with these Resolutions nor can I understand what benefits this Colony is going to get in return for the huge concessions asked for by this corporation. I ask any member of the Government who may be in possession of the information to state what benefits that corporation is going to confer on us and what they will do in return for what they get?

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES — Mr. Chairman: I have listened attentively to the lengthy debate on these Resolutions, but so far little progress has been made on them. Mr. Ashbourne and Mr. Bradley have repeatedly asked me to tell this House just what benefits the country is going to derive from the concessions asked for by the A.N.D. Company. That is rather a tall order, but I shall endeavor to give an instance of the benefits to be derived by the people of this country by the establishment of this new industry to the best of my ability, and as far as the expenditure of public moneys in the near past is concerned. This company imports say $500,000.00 worth of machinery and mining equipment and on which we would levy a duty of 20 per cent., or in other words we should collect $100,000.00 in duty. We are doing away with that $100,000.00 by allowing the Company free entry on their importations. Against that this company will employ two thousand men. In fact they have more than that number employed now at excavation work. Well two thousand men at a minimum wage of $2.50 per day is $5,000.00 per day or $150,000.00 per month or $1,800,000.00 per year. That represents the earning power of the laborer because of the continuous employment. We have been told time and again that the laborer and the underdog pay back in taxes to the revenue of the Colony between fifty and seventy-five per cent. of their earnings. Well let us take the lowest figure and fifty per cent. of the $1,800,000.00 would bring back to the revenue practically one million dollars a year by the employment of these two thousand men. You lose on the one hand by allowing in material and machinery duty free $100,000.00 and on the other hand the revenue gets one million dollars. Just one other point and that is is connection with the railway, as I think the point was well taken by the gentleman who made it and is worthy of the best consideration of the Committee. Now we must not forget the fact that the A.N.D. Company operate their own railway between Botwood and Grand Falls. They also operate their own private railway between Millertown Junction and Millertown and now they are building a railway between Millertown and the scene of Buchans Mine. There will be only a short space between Millertown Junction and Grand Falls for transhipment. I have an idea, and I sincerely trust if the idea is put into effect by some company or some Government, that the day is not far distant when you will have the Topsails eliminated with much saving to the cost of operating the Newfoundland Railway in that territory; and if the opinion of some eminent mining men turns out to be correct you will have a valuable area between Buchans Mine and Howley. It may be possible to divert the main line of railway up through from Red Indian Lake to Howley, a distance of twenty-five miles extra, and even if you cut out that costly portion of the railway, it would have the effect of increasing the traffic for the railway. This country is not forfeiting anything by allowing the concessions asked for in these Resolutions. The only thing we are doing is allowing them free entry for twenty years on their importations, and I think, under present circumstances obtaining in the country, that we should give all the encouragement we possibly can to the promotors of this project in order to develop our natural resources. We have no absolute proof that the company have discovered any valuable body of ore. The A.N.D. Company or the American Smelters are not publishing broadcast what they have discovered. The people today all over the country are looking for honest employment, not snow shovelling or such unproductive work that was carried on around St. John's a few months ago. The present Bill is the first ray of hope I have seen for some time, and I would ask the Committee if it is not far better to forfeit $100,000.00 now by giving the Company free entry on their machinery when we can get one million dollars in return from one year's employment for our working class of people ?

Mr. Chairman, I would like for these few thoughts of mine to be taken into consideration, and if any members are honest in their wish to assist to make this country better the time has arrived. We have men in all sections crying out for work; they don't want the pauper dole. I read a letter in the public press the other day from Canon Smart, of Trinity, making an appeal for employment for people who did not want to accept the pauper dole—his letter might have represented the views of the people East, West, North and South. There is not a man in the country anxious to get papuer dole, he wants work whereby he can earn an honest livelihood and be as independent as men who are better placed. This bill is the first ray of hope for some time, and I trust the committee stage will not be much longer delaryed, so that this industry can be started on a sound basis, and may encourage other people to come in by the concessions we have given.

MR. HICKMAN — Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises I should like to offer one suggestion to the hon. introducer, so that this legislation may get ahead. There is one point that we are all agreed on, and that is that the machinery ought to come in duty free, but we are not agreed that everything covered under this bill can come in. I would suggest, therefore, to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines and the Government that he submit a list or schedule of what requirements are to come in duty free. The information we have is not definite enough, and if, therefore, you will get the tariff list at the custom house and get someone representing the A. N. D. Company tick off exactly the articles that they wish to have come in and lay that on the table so that we can discuss it, and safely arrive at a conclusion. If that is done, and it is satisfactory to the A. N. D. Co. and to the House, work can go ahead and the people have labour without getting the dole. I make that suggestion to the hon. introducer and to the Prime Minister and to the Government.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—That is a very wise suggestion, and I am very glad it has been made, because honestly it is very difficult for a layman to specify what is meant—I am not able to do so myself, and consequently it is hard to expect others to do so. I will be glad to take the matter up when the committee rises. I now beg to move that the committee rise and report progress.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN— Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the attention of the members to a matter. In picking up the Tribune dated June 6th, I find that I am supposed to have stated in the House yesterday that St. Mary's people have always made bad fish. I contradict that emphatically — St. Mary's has made excellent fish always. We were discussing St. Vincent's, and I said that they made excellent fish, but that under the handicaps which they suffered it was in a bad state when they got it aboard; that there is no harbor, and the fish is brought off under trying circumstances. To make matters worse, Mr. Moore is quoted as saying that he didn't like to hear Mr. Sullivan say that these people made bad fish. Mr. Moore did not make any such remark, and I feel sure that he will be good enough to admit that. I think that if we are going to be quoted, it should be in the way we said the thing.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining orders of the day were deferred.

Mr. Bradley gives notice of question.

MR. MOORE — Mr. Speaker, will you permit me to say just a word regarding the matter brought before the House by Mr. Sullivan, and in justice to him I wish to say that he made no such remark; that was made by the Prime Minister. He said they didn't make the best of fish in St. Mary's Bay, and when I stood up I said it was the first time I had heard that they made bad fish there. In justice to Mr. Sullivan I make these remarks, and it only goes to show had badly we must feel when We are misquoted by the Government papers. But we don't want any papers to fight the Government, because they are absolutely gone now.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Friday, June 17th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

FRIDAY, June 17th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of question.

Mr. Bradley gave notice of question.

Answers to questions Nos. 285, 288, 289 and 290 were tabled.

MR. SCAMMELL — Mr. Speaker, with your permission, sir, I would like to make a personal explanation. Referring to my remarks yesterday on the Publicity Tourist Bill, I am reported by the Daily News this morning to have said that "it was a pastime for Water Street business men." Now I do not wish to retract anything from my attitude of yesterday, but what I meant to imply was that the Bill was a pastime for Water Street sports. It would be rather a big order to say that it was a pastime for business men.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION —Mr. Chairman, yesterday when the House was in committee on this Bill the Prime Minister suggested that we draft some amendments. I might say that we have made some amendments, which we think will be acceptable to the Government and to the House. They are not quite ready yet, but they will be ready to submit to the House at the next sitting. I would, therefore, ask that the honorable introducer defer the Bill until Monday?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman. Would the Hon. Leader of the Opposition let us have any of the propesed amendments beforehand so that we may have an opportunity of knowing what they are before they are dealt with in Committee, because a couple of days have now gone by and when we go into Committee of the Whole on Monday next we will be in the same position again, if the Bill is drafted until then, unless we see the amendments and have time to consider them in the interim?

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION —Mr. Chairman. As Monday is the next sitting of the House, I think it would be quite possible for us to see that the amendments are submitted before that time.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that the Committee had considered the matter to them referred, and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this Report was received and adopted, and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Colonial Secretary, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled: "An Act respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY— Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the attitude of the member for St. Barbe regarding the question he asked yesterday and which have some bearing on this Bill. I might say that it is unfortunate he was not present when the House was dealing with the Resolutions and when I gave somewhat of the information he asked with regard to the amount paid Mr. R. H. Tait for lecturing in the United States and also the amount paid to the Publicity Bureau since its inception. I think that when the answer to Mr. Scammell's question is tabled on Monday it will be found that the sum paid Mr. Tait, including all his expenses, was $5,000.00.

At the outset the Publicity Bureau entered into an arrangement with the Government that they would collect from certain people a certain amount of money to inaugurate this work. They collected $3,300.00 and the Government agreed that they would subscribe dollar for dollar for the amount collected in subscriptions. Accordingly, the Government subscribed a like amount. At the end of the year the Publicity Bureau required further finances and I think the total amount paid them, including the amount paid to Mr. Tait was $,8300.00 so that the full cost of the Publicity Bureau's activities to date is $8,250.00.

I might say that an advance was made this year of $5,000 to finance them until the passage of this measure. The tax that will be imposed upon passengers leaving the country will go into immediate operation after passage of this measure and they will refund the $5,000 that they got from the Bank under Government guarantee early in the spring. That is the situation with regard to the question the hon. member asked.

DR. MOSDELL—Before proceeding with sub-section 2 might I ask what is the idea of appointing these gentlemen. Is it considered that they made such a good showing?

HON COLONIAL SECRETARY—Yes. We consider that they did.

DR. MOSDELL—Is there some record of their activities?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—They have sent in a report and it will be tabled.

DR. MOSDELL—Might I ask what powers are given the Commission by sub-section B of 2. The word "promote" has a very broad meaning?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—The idea of it of course is to give information and advice and plans or anything of that kind. Any person who wants to get advice with regard to improving hotels may ask for it from this Commission. They are not authorised to spend money for the promotion of hotel enterprises. It is possible as suggested that the section be given a different construction from that intended. I don't know if that can be put in any other language that would make the intention clear.

DR. MOSDELL—Why not put in "Provided none of the funds of the Commission shall be utilised for this purpose.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Colonial Secretary who looks after the getting up of the advertisements for Newfoundland. In the Financial Post recently there appeared an advertisement in which the information was not accurate.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—I might say that it is done under contract with the Government by a gentleman named Dow who comes down from Canada every year. The last two issues of the Financial Post have given Newfoundland a special place with a view to bringing before the travelling public in different parts of Canada and the United States the attractions of Newfoundland. I know there was objection taken to the wording of the advertisements. The Deputy Colonial Secretary has been looking after it. Was there any particular information with regard to it that the hon. member was anxious to know?

MR. SCAMMELL—I wanted to know what the cost of the advertisement was?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—A thousand dollars. We have changed our policy with regard to advertisements. There has been a great deal spent on dull and drab and uninteresting advertisements in English papers and we have instructed the High Commissioner not to give any more advertisements except something of some moment or use. These have been cut down and I think a considerable amount of money, considerably more than spent in the Financial Post, will be saved on that account.

DR. MOSDELL—When this Bill goes through will the matter of advertising be left entirely to this Tourist and Publicity Commission or will the Government go on advertising as well?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—I don't imagine that altogether everything will be left in their hands in that respect, for instance the Minister of Agriculture and Mines may want to have some advertising in some mineralogical paper that the Publicity Bureau have not anything to do with. General advertising with regard to sport and attractions and everything of that kind will now be left to them and will be paid for by this Bureau as well as the cost of lectures, moving pictures, etc.; and anything of that kind that is required will not in any way be provided by the Government after this Bill goes through. I don't think the country will be called on to pay much with regard to advertising except perhaps some special advertising. Hon. members will appreciate that it may be quite desirable for the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to have a special advertisement in some paper drawing attention to Newfoundland in the connection of the special subjects the paper is interested in.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that under "5" of the previous section, it strikes me that this Tourist and Publicity Bureau might quite conceivably use up all the funds they have received to pay several officials monthly salaries and then when it got down to advertising, the thing really wanted, there would be nothing left.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—I don't think the Commission will give us any worry on that account. As a matter of fact the only one being paid is Capt. Gerald Byrne, the Secretary of the Commission. Of course he is a full-time man. Outside of him nobody is being paid. They may have a stenographer down there. I presume they will. Outside of that I don't think they contemplate any expenditure on salaries. They have taken rooms as an office in the Hotel. The Hotel have given them that at half price on account of the Hotel's interest in this movement because they want to encourage it and work with it. In that way they are economising and I think the Hotel will get in return sufficient patronage to warrant it. But I don't think there is any possibility of such a thing as suggested happening. I believe these men are sincere about this so that there could not be any misappropriation of the funds in that way.

DR. MOSDELL—I can conceive of misapplication on any large scale of the funds of the Bureau being as fatal to its ideals as misappropriation of such moneys would certainly be. I make not the silghtest insinuation that gentlemen of such standing can possibly be suspected of the latter offence, but I can understand how, in their zeal for the cause in which they are interested, those charged with the management of the affairs and the funds of the Bureau may get together an army of officials for various purposes, legitimate enough, but also big and expensive enough to use up all the Bureau moneys for payment of salaries. I think the Governor-in-Council should have some check on the extent of such employment, at least, to ensure the application of sufficient of the funds of the Bureau to the essential purpose for which it was created and incorporated and is now being endowed with revenues at the public expense, namely widespread publicity abroad of Newfoundland's eminent suitability as a tourist resort.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—You can make a provision for that of course. They are responsible to the Governor in Council as it is, and they have to make a report to the Governor in Council.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—By doing that would you not be likely to destroy the whole object of the Bill? To begin with what would the Governor in Council know about the necessity of the number of officials? Isnt' it a case of what you simply do is to depend on the earnestness and competency of those whom you have appointed and they will give a report yearly, and if it be discovered at the end of a year that the amount spent in salaries is inordinately great wouldn't that be the time to deal with the situation? It seems too that if you start a commission who work for you voluntarily and then tell them that they can't take on a hand unless you approve of it is immediately going to destroy the whole object. The impression will be created that it is merely another case of Government appointments. I submit that it is going to mean that instead of having that matter under the control of those who are capable to manage it, you are putting it in the hands of a crowd around an Executive Board who know nothing about the requirements of the case.

DR. MOSDELL—The Bill gives power to the Governor in Council to remove Commissioners.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I say that is where you have got your check.

DR. MOSDELL—We should not delegate the responsibility that is on this House to see that the money is spent properly.

MR. SCAMMELL—Who is going to pay the officials this Board engages? Will the Government pay them?

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—No.

MR. SCAMMELL—What exactly has been done with the money that this Bureau has got?

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—The report will be tabled. Every dollar will be accounted for.

DR. MOSDELL—I think before proceeding to further discussion of this Bill it would be advisable to rise and defer the matter until that report is tabled so that we may have further information to enable us to properly discuss it.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman: The point that seems rather objectionable to me about this Bill is that after it passes every individual going out of the country to earn a living has got to pay a tax in order to enable half a dozen Water Street sports to amuse themselves. Now we had seven or eight thousand dollars spent by Mr. Tait. Seven or eight thousand dollars is a nice lot of money to send to a man in the United States to lecture on tourists. Seven or eight thousand dollars is a pretty good salary. If we got paid for talking here we would earn quite a lot of money too. If all the speeches we have made here since the House opened earned us money at that rate we would be quite wealthy.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—We are prepared to give all the time necessary but we wanted to get this Bill through so that the Board can function. This tax goes into operation as soon as the Bill passes.

MR. GODDEN — Mr. Chairman, I think it is distinctly understood that second class passengers don't pay taxes.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY—Yes.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the Bill entitled "An Act Respecting Education" was deferred until to-morrow.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Justice, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, the Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting an agreement between the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Ltd. and the Government was deferred until a later hour.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting an Agreement between the Government and Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Ltd.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddister took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Mr. Chairman, I think the last day in Committee, the Committee was good enough to rise leaving in reserve two sections only, Section 4 and Section 12; Section 4 on the point whether it might be possible to include in addition to the right of bait fishing a general right of bait fishing, and Section 12 as to the admission of some materials, the point was suggested as to whether such things as nets and twines would be brought in duty free.

On the first point, I took up that matter with Mr. Job, but felt in anticipation that his attitude would be as I found it that I could not get him to agree, and for very obvious reasons when you come to think of it. Bait fishing there by any methods is allowed to the residents, and the residents, in turn, I have no doubt, will be glad to supply bait to any person coming there, but, in the sense of allowing the pond of itself to become a bait fishing ground for everybody, the company say, if that is to be granted, they might as well abandon the whole thing. That strikes me as a reasonable position to take. In connection with the second point, in the first place I don't see any necessity for it. The suggestion was made that under this section the company might bring in such things as seines or lines and twines. I submit that, under the section, as it reads, that cannot be done.

(Reads)

I don't think one could fairly say that would include them, but the Company has no objection to putting it in. But I would like to remind the House that it seems a sort of anomaly that we should be insisting on the purchase of nets locally, and of lines and twines, from a factory, the President of which is Mr. Job himself. He told me that he had no idea of importing nets and such like, but if we wish to insist on it we can put it in, for it will be only helping that factory. I don't see how they could possibly be included under that material but if you think it would be he had no objection whatever.

DR. MOSDELL—Reads Section four. This is the point, that in Section 12 it refers to all materials and contriv ances, and I take it that under Section 12, these things as well as other material might be imported.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—With all respect, I submit not. I take it that means clearly the fish plant, and that would be the actual factory. I don't think equipment for fishing would be part of the fish plant. Fish Plant has a specific meaning here, and I think that is bordering on a fish meal plant. The only thing I want to draw the attention of the House to is that they have no objection to putting it in, and I think there is no point in putting it in. It seems a bit of an anomaly that in one breath we talk of local monopolists and in the other we give them further scope.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, when we were in Committee yesterday on the A. N. D. matter, the Hon. introducer of that resolution agreed to submit a schedule to the House. Why can't we have the same thing here? It is a simple matter, and I think it is quite right to have a schedule regarding this as well as the A. N. D. Co., or any other matter whereby certain things are to be brought in free of duty. If we don't lay down a schedule and know exactly where we stand we will always have trouble and confusion, and the Customs are going to be mulcted, of duties. We should have a schedule of exactly what articles they desire, and all members will be only too glad to encourage the industry.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman, as a representative of a fishing District I am glad, as I said before, that the Government is at last bringing in something affecting the industry. The Hon. introducer was probably referring to me in his remarks regarding lines and twines—the cap fits and I don't mind wearing it. But we are not through with that—there is another day coming. It seems strange to me that the people of St. Peter's and Mall Bay can fish in the Pond with materials on which they don't have to pay duties, but if they fish in the ocean they do have to pay them. They are free from the monopolists and not for the fishermen.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—That is only the Company, not the fishermen.

MR. LAKE—While I have no great love for the Colonial Cordage Company getting more duties on lines and twines, as they have enough already, as I said before, if they have to buy lines, the fishermen should have the benefit, and the clause should be put in the Bill. We were not supposed to know that Mr. Job was the President of the Company; we are not interested in who is President—the Prime Minister said yesterday that he was considered one of the big nabobs in that industry. Even if the Government has a duty on lines and twines it will only be a matter of a few months when there will be no duty. As far as this Company is concerned it wouldn't matter, but we may as well have it there.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, I wish to support the attitude of the Leader of the Opposition regarding the introduction of a schedule in place of the generic section we have here, and particularly in view of the remarks I made here a few days ago in connection with another industry operating a plant somewhat similar to that which this Company will probably introduce. It seems absurd that this Company which plans to enclose a pond and make a trap out of it, should be able to introduce certain articles that other industries already established have paid duties on. They are going to erect a fish plant, and I pointed out that there is already at least one fish plant in the country that has had to pay on the regular tariff. It seems a peculiar anomaly that one manufacturer should pay duties and another starting in the same industry is allowed the same sort of materials duty free. I wonder if by any peculiar line of reasoning any member of the Government can conceive of that as a square deal. For that reason I would very much prefer to see a schedule of articles submitted, because I desire to object to articles of a similar nature coming in free. As I have said, I have no objection to retaining on the free list articles for the culvert or gates, or anything peculiar to them, and for that purpose they can have all the free list they want, but if you are going to include articles that give one fish manufacturer an advantage over another I say that it is unfair and unjust, and it is hard for others to continue against a monopoly. It is objectionable on its face and in point of principle, and unfair, and I would therefore like to see that schedule introduced.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, I should like with the others to get a schedule completed if possible. But I should like to know what is the position of the members regarding this Bill. To begin with, as I see it, those concerned with the Bill, as I told the House, are frankly entirely of a local character, in the sense of the people there, who have backed this up with a petition. The whole thing is an experiment, and the attitude that I understood was being taken was that expressed by the hon. member for Burin, who staated that he was glad something was being done for the fisheries. If you are taking that position, what is the attitude of the House towards this? Do I understand that you don't want to encourage it, or that you want to take the position that because the man who is starting it is likely to make a success of it you think we ought to make it as restrictive as possible at the start? What is going to be your viewpoint? I can't see what assistance the Government can give this enterprise except to let them go ahead and bring in what they want for the plant duty free; if we don't do that we don't deserve any credit. If the position taken is to be that this enterprise will get strictly what is la:d down in a list, duty free, :nd nothing else, that isn't much encouragement. As I said the other day, the whole proposal is simply to try out a plan that has been suggested for Holyrood pond for years, to utilize the fisheries there. I have heard it in this House and outs:de for years. Then largely through the enthusiasm of Mr. Cowan, he enlists the support of Mr. Job, who says he will try it out, and the only thing the Government can claim credit for is the offer to bring in necessary things duty free. Is it the idea of the Oppostiion that we are going to be as restrictive as possible. I have frankly approached it from a different aspect, and regarded the permitt:ng things to come in duty free as encouragement of the fisheries—that is my viewpoint. If I have the wrong angle, and you are viewing it from the other standpoint, you shouldn't say that you are anxious to do anyth ng for the fisheries. The only way we can deserve credit or approval is to take a position in support of this Bill and say that we are not going to worry much about it, provided they don't start and bring :n something totally unconnected with the industry. I am only passing along the statement that has been made to me that these people have no overburdening desire to go in on this, that they only would do so with a fair amount of encouragement, but if the Committee thinks they should be tied down to a schedule I am perefctly prepared to try it .The force behind this is the people who have been looking for it, and if we are going to try to discourage :t, I am quite willing, but it is all to no point.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, I don't want to discourage this, neither do I want to be a party to anything for which we will be sorry. How much better :t would have been when the Humber deal went through a schedule had been arranged so that the customs would have known what should have come in and what should not. It is a very simple matter, and not as hard as you would have us believe. If these people want to put up gates, we are satisfied to have the material come in duty free; if they want machinery to manufacture fish and make fertil zer, everyone would be satisfied to have that come in duty free; if they go as far as to want the cement for the culverts and things of that kind, we might be satisfied to have that come in duty free; but if the company wants to bring in everything like nails, paints, plaster, varnish, lines and twines, dories, oars, grapnels and so on, I don't think they should come in, and we ought to have the opportun ty of striking out things of that nature. They could be bought here at a little more cost. If I were in the place of Mr. Job I would be very glad to submit a schedule for my own protection so that there would be no trouble in the future with the customs or the Government, aand certainly I would know what I expected to come in duty free. There is no objection to putting :t in writing and submitting it to the House of Assembly and have it finalised and fixed in the interests both of the company and of the country. I have no objecti:on at all to the Bill; I would like to see the project go ahead and the thing encouraged, but I do not want to be a party to putting anything through that we might be brought to book for in a few years. The trouble in things of this kind is the amount of latitude given; the Government interprets them in one way, and the party interested in another, and this cannot happen if we have a schedule.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman, if I might be allowed, I should like to say something regarding the remarks of the hon. member for Port de Grave, who told the House that he knew of fishermen in Petty Harbor paying duty on a fish meal plant, and that this was unjust when the Holyrood Pond Co. would be getting their's duty free. I entirely agree with him, but I can't find that any application was ever made to the Government to admit a fish meal plant for Petty Harbor. The Minister of Finance and Customs is the member for that place, and if one of his constitents was desirous of getting anything in duty free, he could go to the fountain head, and if the Minister of Finance and Customs thought he didn't have the authority, he could take it up with hte Government. But I undertake to say that if the Holyrood Pond Co. plant comes in duty free under this Act, the Government will be pleased to give a rebate in the case of the Petty Harbor importer. I don't think any person putting up a fish meal plant should have to pay duty on it, and I entirely agree with the member for Port de Grave. But if there is no appl.cation, the Minister of Finance and Customs cannot be expected to find out if a man has a plant and to tell him that he could get it in duty free. If that man had come in and been told by the customs officials that the plant was dutiable it is not too late now, and he has a perfect right to look for a rebate.

MR. GODDEN—Mr. Chairman, anything that is brought before this House by way of encouragement to the progress of the fishery will have the firm support of every member of the Opposition as well as the Government, but when a proposition is brought before us, honourable members should consider what is the personnel of the company who is asking for concessions, and what is their ability to make success of the venture possible. I think that an essential to success is enthusiasm, backed up by confidence. If I am correct, the Minister of Justice has informed us that the more powerful man of the two interested didn't care very much whether it went through or not. If that is so, and Mr. Job is only half-hearted, success is not assured.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — That is not quite what I meant. I drew attention to the fact that he was not the kind of monopolist that we had been mouthing about. He has not been lobbying about the Government as we are ordinarily accustomed to seeing; he hasn't regarded it as the kind of thing that he is going to stop awake at nights for. He is doing it personally because these people have asked for it, and are pushing it; it is an experiment absolutely to him, but if we don't grant it he is not going to make too much fuss. That is the way I view it.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the Minister of Justice that fish meal is getting more and more in use every day. There are other places in Newfoundland where in the near future people are going to make fish meal, and if you give unrestricted concessions in this instance as the Minister of Justice would like to bring in you will have to give the same concessions to every other man in Newfoundland who wants to start, and it will be in the interests of this company to state exactly what machinery they want to bring into the country. I think the promoters of the company should outline a schedule and place it before the House so that we may know exactly where we stand. That is the way I view it and that is the reason for my remarks. It is not my intention to put any obstruction in the way of the Bill.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, I would like to state briefly the reasons that underly my displayed attitude on this Bill. In the first place, permit me to say I am not desirous of putting obstacles in the way of this development or of embarrassing the company in any manner whatsoever. Nor do I want to be misunderstood as wilfully withstanding the declared wishes of the people of the particular section affected under this measure. I am as anxious as any honourable member of this Committee to co-operate with fellow-countrymen in any undertaking on which they embark for the betterment of their condition in any rspect.

I must, however, take exception to the assertion of the Minister of Justice that the principle involved in this measure is a very small one. On the contrary, I regard that principle as very important and as calculated to have far-reaching, very embarrassing, effects, if made of general application. And, if we now endorse that principle in connection with this measure, we must in all fairness hold ourselves in readiness to apply it to other sections of the coast and to the undertakings of other sections of our people, if and when such demand is made on this Legislature. If the people of this section are conceded exclusive rights to the fisheries of their section, then it is not at all impossible that other groups of fishermen will in the future make similar demands and we must be prepared to show equal sympathy with their wishes. I know, as the Minister of Justice has observed, that the situation at Holyrood Pond is in many respects unique, but it will be difficult to persuade fishermen of other localities, if demands similar to those connected with the present measure be refused, that they have not been discriminated against.

Then, to my mind, the Company concerned in this development are pledging too small a total expenditure to justify the concessions asked for, which are sweeping both as to the items covered and the length of the period involved. This committee should be provided with a schedule, or list, of the articles in respect to which duty free entry is required. That is a broad principle that should now be adopted in connection with all Bills embodying concessions of similar tenor. Its strict observance would enable us to avoid the disputes and troubles of the past and would prevent further large losses of revenue, without in any way hampering the development and the operations of any particular company.

As I have already observed, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire whatsoever to be obstructive in this connection, nor am I at all hostile to the project of this particular company. I am, though, anxious to make sure that capitalists are not taking advantage of local necessities to secure unnecessarily large and far-reaching concessions for their own particular advantage; for the most part I am, frankly, inclined to be a bit suspicious of an undertaking which mixes up hydro-electric and similar projects with what was at first understood to be strictly a fisheries proposition. The latter is the more important to us. It should be divorced from projects foreign to it. Otherwise we take the risk of presently having submitted to us and urged on our favourable consideration projects ostensibly marine in nature but really used as an excuse to gain concessions of a radically different and more profitable kind, such as water power and hydro-electric developments.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman: I know the early history of this subject. It is thirteen years ago since this proposition was first mooted, and then as now it was asked for by between four and five hundred fishermen. At that time I took an active interest in it, not because Mr. Dove was the promotor of it, but because I saw some hope and some encouragement for the fishermen of that section where the fishermen were laboring hard under great disadvantages. Not only were the fishermen anxious at that time to have the project, but they had embodied in the original agreement with Mr. Dove that they ere prepared to pay fifty cents a quintal as a royalty to the Company for fishing in that pond. Even with that Mr. Dove and his associates had to go to the United States and failed to get the capital because the proposition did not appear to be sufficiently attractive. Now, because Mr. Job and Mr. Cowan and others, along with four or five hundred fishermen are going to benefit by this new project, we hesitate and put all kinds of barriers and obstructions in the way. Certain suggestions are offered by members of the House, no matter how honest they are, they can have but one effect and that is we may wake up to-morrow morning and find that Mr. Job and his associates will throw up the whole proposition. I have a greater hope now in this project than I had thirteen years ago. During the past few years a great deal of interest in these by-products which is now only in the experimental stage, but I look forward to the time when fish meal will become one of the greatest parts in our industrial life, and as this is the first attempt made to establish such a plant, it is for that reason, if for no other, that I am particularly anxious for this Company to get all the advantages possible. The fishermen in the particular section involved, that is, between Peter's River and St. Mary's Bay, have not got the same facilities that are to be found in other sections of the Island. Most of them are situated on a wild bleak shore and are handicapped by other elements. In this proposition I have hope where they may be able to increase their earning power largely and the people given a means of livelihood that they otherwise would not have, so I think the Committee ought not put any obstacles in their way that may hamber this project. There is no Government but must bear criticism for its actions, but a proposition that is going to benefit the common people should not be brought under the guns of the Opposition or of any other section, because Mr. Job is not very keen on the proposition and may possibly throw it up. I take this opportunity to say, Mr. Chairman, that I would not in any way associate myself with any aggregation of men who would criticise the fishermen of any section of Newfoundland. All of us here rise in our places from time to time and support and eulogize the underdog and go on record as almost being prepared to shed our blood on their behalf. Well, if we are sincere now is the time to give them what they honestly deserve—the operation of this plant. If the present venture is a success, and I have no doubt it will be, it is only a matter of time when you will find similar plants established all over the Island and when the same concessions that are asked for Mall Bay fishermen will be given to the fishermen of other bays, and, if the opportunity offers, I shall be glad to endorse any such concessions for the fishermen of any section of the Island. I would not attempt to insinuate that any deliberate attempt is being made to hamper the welfare of the people interested in the present project, but I would suggest that some people be not overzealous in trifling matters and, at least, focus our attention on the main issue and that is to try and get this country out of the rut she is in to-day. I trust that we will not have to rise the Committee this afternoon, but allow the Resolutions to go through in their present form. I think I ought to thank the gentleman in charge of the Resolutions, on behalf of my constitutents, for the patience displayed by him during the period the Resolutions were before the Committee, but I do not think there is any hope of having any schedule, as asked for by the Leader of the Opposition.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Chairman: I can quite sympathize with the Minister of Agriculture and Mines in reference to the Resolutions before the Chair. Like him I believe in doing everything possible to encourage the development of the fisheries and we ought to do everything possible to assist any body of men willing to vest capital that will foster the fisheries and give employment to the fishermen in any way; but there is a principle involved, as maintained by the Leader of the Opposition and the member for Fortune Bay, and that is as to whether we are going to allow clauses to be put into a Bill which will leave it to the Company to decide for themselves as to what is going to come in duty free. I am not questioning the motives or the intentions of those interested. They might be willing to deal honestly with the Customs. We have had experience of free importations by corporations and the Customs and the country suffered and that is my reason for asking that a schedule be outlined of what is to come in duty free. As is well known, in the past large corporations under clauses like this took advantage of the concessions granted and thousands upon thousands of dollars were lost to the revenue of the country. On the West Coast things that were brought in such as dry goods, pianos, etc., were not duty free articles and these goods were brought in by persons who had no regard whatever for dealing straight with the Customs of this country. Therefore, if the Customs have to be protected, we must ask to have a schedule laid down. We are not mistrusting anybody by asking for a schedule through which no man can question the purpose behind it. By asking for a schedule, surely no man can say that we are deliberately attempting to hold up the proposition, rather it is in the interest of Mr. Job and his company and in the interest of the whole country that a list be submitted indicating what is to come in duty free. I think that it is only proper for the introducer of the Bill to put forward this point I have raised to the promotors of the proposition in order to prevent what has happened in the past.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman: With the principle laid dwn by the honourable member for Twillingate I am in entire accord, namely, that we should not permit duty free any articles not covered under these Resolutions; but does not section (5) cover the point raised and prevent a repetition of what has happened in the past. I cannot see how it is possible to include pianos, gramaphones, etc., under these Resolutions, except you are dealing with a crowd of disreputable men who have no object in view but to beat the revenue of the country.

HON. MINISER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, just a final word. In the first place there is no quarrel as to the principle of the operation in any other contract. The present proposition is not a parallel case with the contract of the N. P. and P. Company. Your duty exemptions can only come in under your Resolutions. What any court is bound by is what interpretation would a court put upon these Resolutions? Now hon. members need not endeavour to imagine that I have any professional connection at all with this thing, except in the manner of piloting it through the House. My opinion is given honestly and without bias. I cannot see how any court could by any stretch of imagination allow anything else brought in duty free, except what is covered by section (5) of the Resolutions. No such construction could be put as that raised by members of the Opposition, as regards lines, twines, nets, etc., because they are not a part of the construction and equipment of this plant, in my opinion. Section (5) says:

"All material, plant, fixtures and machinery required for the construction, equipping and installation of the Company's gates and for steel nets, culvert, factories and fish plant, and electrical and hydro-electrical plant and works connected therewith, both for original installation and further extension, but not in substitution for old, and not including fuel or hand-tools, shall for a period of twenty years from the date hereof be admitted into the Colony free of taxes and duty."

Mr. Job not only held a similar opinion but he had been advised so by his Solicitor. To satisfy the Committee I asked the Prime Minister to ask Mr. Job if he was able to form a schedule, and the answer is that he is not. With regard to the objectionable feature raised by Mr. Grimes, I have but to say that the case of the West Coast people and the present one are not analogous.

I think it will be found that the analogy is not the same. Surely it could not be set up that nets would come under materials for the construction and equipment of the factories and plant of the Company? I don't think that a court would hold that.

MR. GRIMES — With regard to equipment for the plant, they said that they were perfectly within their rights in importing rubber boots and oil clothes duty free.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Yes, but there is a substantial claim against them by the Colony; the Minister of Finance and Customs has as a matter of fact instituted a complete research into the records of the Customs House and the Company and all these things are to be claimed for.

MR. GRIMIES—If we had a schedule we wouldn't be up against that sort of thing.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I say candidly that I am very anxious to let somebody get a chance to try out this Holyrood Pond experiment.

HON. THE LEADER OF OPPOSITION—Would the hon. member give the House a definition of what a plant is?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, in answer to the request for a definition of a plant by the Leader of the Opposition I can only give the old definition that a plant is a plant and I want to say that I can make it any kind of a plant overnight according to what side I am acting for. A plant it might be said is one of these kind of flowers to which the saying might apply "the rose might smell as sweet by any other name." We get round to a fish plant. What is the plant that the gentlemen concerned in this venture are going to put up? We know that we have people here we trust. We know Holyrood Pond and we know that this thing is an experiment. We know this Holyrood Pond proposition is an experiment and that Mr. Job is not going to go into it and throw money away and that the plant is not going to break the country by any pianos or gramaphones that are going to be brought in. I don't think he belongs to that class of "Water Street sports" and that he is going to put in a lodge for tourists or something. I think he is going to get such things only as are necessary in the opinion of a practical business man for the operation of the plant. I can only say that a plant is just whatever you like to make it. I admit that.

HON. THE LEADER OF OPPOSITION—I would like to be in a position to vote for these resolutions but if that is the definition of a plant whatever you like to make it, then I say we are giving the people constructing this plant the opportunity of importing into this country anything they like.

HON |MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I refer you to Section 3, where we can get a definition of this plant.

I should say for this plant therefore that is the definition.

HON. THE LEADER OF. OPPOSITION—Well as I have already stated we are going to have a lot of fish plants in this country if the Government are prepared to give concessions to this particular plant to import everything they need for the use of the plant, well then we have to give it to every other. In this particular case we have not to take into consideration who is connected with this, who is the promoter or the president or the directors. The personnel of these companies changes about and perhaps while we may have one man as a promoter of a company today in a few years that man might be dead and somebody else have succeeded to his place who perhaps would not have as good a reputation, and I don't think anything of that kind should be taken into consideration at all. Our consideration should be to conserve the interests of Newfoundland. That is what we are elected for. I maintain that it is no hardship on the promoters of the Company to submit to this House, to be attached to the Resolutions the schedule of what they require to carry on business.

I don't want to say anything to knock the project or keep it from going on because the people in that section of the country want this and as long as they want it I think it is up to us to let them have it; but at the same time we owe a duty to the country as a legislature and as representatives of different districts to protect the people as far as it is in our power and not to go too far in granting concessions, and then find we have to give the concessions to a large number of people.

HON THE PRIME MINISTER—I may say I went out and spoke to Mr. Job, and he has told me, that he particularly didn't desire to have any nets included in this free entry list; and that his lawyer is of opinion that he can't have them free under this. He framed the resolutions with a view to avoiding that; and that it is only the plant or any part thereof that is required to be free. As a matter of fact he thinks it is quite all right not to have such things as nails and paints admitted free; he wouldn't be at all likely to think of importing these things in connection with a small proposition of this kind, and in any case he doesn't feel inclined to make a schedule or both about it, if it can't go through the House as it is.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Chairman, I do not want to oppose the Bill, in fact I would like to see the Resolutions go through the House, but I wonder whether Section 5 could not be tightened up. It seems to me a rather broad construction might be placed on permission to have free entry for material etc., for an electrical plant.

(Reads)

I take it that according to the definition of the plant to which our attention has been called as referred to in Section 3 of the Agreement that the main idea of the plant is as outlined here:

(Reads from Section 3)

Perhaps under this some fifty or sixty or a hundred houses might be linked up and considered part of the plant and be equipped with electricity. It is a small settlement and quite a few houses may spring up around this fish plant and they may be connected by electricity, the supplies for such an extended electric plant having been got in duty free.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—What I feel about the possibility suggested by the Honorable Member for St. Barbe, is that if that did happen wouldn't it be a decided advantage. If it should happen that they should erect an electric plant and extend it to be used by the people out there, I don't think we should object. What has happened in the past is that we have always given any lighting companies for lighting towns and settlements the privilege of getting lighting materials in duty free. The idea behind encouraging those was that it was felt that it would benefit and encourage development throughout the Colony. It has been the policy of the country to encourage free admission for lighting plants anyhow on account of the benefit to the people, so even if they should do that I don't see why we should object. I think encouragement should be given them to do it, if they should put up an electric plant in connection with this fish plant and they want to extend it for the use of the settlement as a large lighting system.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Chairman, before the Committee rises I should lige for the Mover of these resolutions, the Hon. the Attorney-General, and Mr. Walsh to understand that while we have criticised this Bill we have not done so for the spirit of wanting to hamper it. We have done so because we feel that it is yearly becoming more important that we must be careful in all these matters, and in that spirit we criticised them somewhat contentiously. But I for one wouldn't like to have it go abroad that the Opposition was trying to hamper this measure.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, I don't only think that there was no such desire, but I want to thank the members for the spirit exhibited here this afternoon. And I say further that I agree with the principle enunciated, and think it an ideal one, and one that we should in future carry out. I do not regard this Bill as setting a precedent, nor do I regard the attitude of the Opposition as captious or objectionable. In this case we made an endeavour to get a schedule, but I merely want to draw attention to the point that where a contract is already made it is difficult to change things. I want to thank the Hon. Members and I have looked on it as a case where they were honest and sincere.

Mr. Speaker resumer the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had passed the same without amendment. On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that leave be given to introduce a bill accordingly.

Whereupon the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Confirmation of an Agreement between the Government and Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Limited," was introduced and read a first time, and was ordered to be read a second time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting an Agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company, Limited.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddister took the Chair of Committee.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, As I promised the Committee last evening, I had consultation with the Solicitor for the A. N. D. Company, and I found that a few months ago, every possible angle of his matter was explored by the Solicitor and the Attorney-General and the Acting Deputy Minister. He told me that it might be possible to get a more definite statement from the Directors of the A. N. D. Company if we were prepared to delay the measure for a month or six weeks longer, but even with that he gave me the assurance that there wouldn't be any material affected other than that set out in sub-section F, which seems to be the whole matter of contention. Personally as a layman it is very difficult for me to analyse the long-drawn out sections, but I am satisfied that the Department of Justice has seen to it that our country's interests are safeguarded, and I am doubly satisfied considering that we are dealing with a Company with such a record as that of the A. N. D. Company. They have always been entirely up to the letter of their obligations, and I am sure they prize their reputation highly. For that reason I feel that we need have no serious misgivings regarding the possible outcome of this industry. Regarding the possibility of a repitition of what happened in the big industry at the Humber a year or two ago, I want to thank the members for the anxiety displayed to see that we don't have a recurrence of that, but I don't think we are likely to get in serious trouble regarding the sub-section to which the Leader of the Opposition referred to last session, and asked if it would b possible to have a schedule.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, I am very disappointed in what the Hon. Introducer has said. He assured the House yesterday that he would have a schedule prepared.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Pardon me, I said that I would consult their Solicitor. How could I give an assurance?

MR. HICKMAN—You led the House to believe that you would get a schedule. I think that we have had legislation enough of this nature, and I intend to oppose it; I am not going to support anything to let a Corporation get everything they want in duty free, when it is a simple matter for their Solicitors to sit down and make out a schedule. Then there will be no necessity for the Department of Finance and Customs to go through their books every few years and have to take an action for duties. Who is there in the Outports to pass on these articles, to know whether they should come in duty free or not? What Customs Officer is there capable of construing an Act drawn up by legal minds? I venture to say there is not one. If any Corporation wants to put through an Act whereby they can bring in articles of machinery for development of an industry, free, I am prepared to vote for it, but not by a broad Act that can be construed by different parties to have different meanings, and allowing a Corporation to bring in lots of goods on which duty should be paid. Unless the Hon. introducer is prepared to bring in a schedule, why not let this stand over for a few weeks; there is no possibility of the House closing in that time. Unless that is done, and the tone of the Act made clear, I will not support it for any Corporation.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, In reply to the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to point out that I would like to be able to facilitate the Committee, but I have no guarantee from the Company. I have been in conversation with the Solicitor who has been in Communication with the Directors of the Company and he was informed that even after deferring the matter for two or three weeks a schedule might not be possible to get.

MR. LAKE — Mr. Chairman. It does seem strange that such a corporation as the A. N. D. Company cannot get up a schedule to apply to their own line of business. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines tells us it cannot be had for three weeks and then we may not get it at all. I state right here and now that I think that, if this House intends to vote for Clause "2" of these Resolutions, they are throwing away Newfoundland's birthright. I shall not vote for this Bill and any Newfoundlander with his country at heart should not vote for it. It is an outrage on the people of this country because this corporation wants everything in the way of concessions and are not prepared to give anything in return, except that a few hundred laborers will be hired to work for possibly $2.50 per day and be made slaves of like they were at Corner Brook. I do not want to repeat what happened there because it is all too plain to members of this House. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines intimated that we were trying to obstruct the passage of the Holyrood Pond Bill. Well, I do not see why we should give the promoters free duty for twenty years, much less to give the A. N. D. Company exemption for twenty years in connection with Buchan's Mine. Last year $27,532,00 worth of merchandise was imported into this Colony. Of that amount $10,232,000 came in duty free. In other words duty was collected only on a little over fifty per cent. of what came into the country. Still we allow the A. N. D. Co. and I suppose other companies to import oiled clothes, rubber boots and pianos and everything else they want duty free. I wonder if an employer of the fishing business asked to have his goods imported free what would the Government think of him? He would be laughed at. I think that if the A. N. D. Company cannot make up a schedule of what they want to import they are poor business people and they are different people from what I thought them to be. This Act now before the House is all for the A. N. D. Company and not for this country. There is nothing in the Act for the protection of the workingman to see that he is properly housed and properly fed while he works like a slave in the woods for the paltry sum of possibly $2.50 per day. No Newfoundlander there will get any kind of a job just like men were imported for the good jobs at Corner Brook where the Company got in everything free of duty and Newfoundlanders had to pay for it. If the rest of the Opposition members feel about this thing as I do this Act will never go through this House. If I had the power I would hold up the House on this Bill until the end of this year because the Bill is aimed to assist monopolists. It is an outrage to perpetrate this sort of stuff on the people of this country. And then they come in here and say they do not know what they want to get in duty free. It was stated here yesterday that the N. P. and P. Company put it over the Newfoundland Railway. Well, I think the A. N. D. Company, having the same chance, are out for doing the same thing at the expense of our railway and the taxpayers of this country. They can build a railway line where they want to, under this Bill, and forget that the Newfoundland Railway ever existed. The Prime Minister stated here some time ago that, owing to the depletion in the Government ranks, he was not in a position to put through any drastic legislation. He stated what was quite true, and I feel that the Government, as at present constituted, have no right to bring into this House the Resolutions that are before us to day. It is an outrage for the people of this country to have to swallow such drastic legislation, which will mean nothing but poor wages, poor food and poor lodgings for a handful of people. I suppose we will have the International Paper Company coming in here soon and asking for a grant of all that is left of the Labrador. Then all the Newfoundlanders that are left in the country will have to get out. I have no great faith from the workingman's point of view in Buchan's Mine, although some people are inclined to think there is a Klondyke in it.

There should not be left an opening to bring in anything duty free that is manufactured locally. We should try to help concerns in this country and make sure to prevent that. If they want to under this Bill they can bring in several things that are manufactured locally. I don't suppose they'll want any lines or twines so it won't affect the Colonial Cordage Company, the Prime Minister's hobby, but it will affect other concerns in this country. I think the hon. member from St. John's West suggested that they might be able to import stoves duty free. I understand that not a stove was bought in Corner Brook from local contractors. Whether that is correct or not I am not prepared to say. I am not interested in the companies or corporations that I say should be protected but I am interested in the working man and I think we should protect every industry we have and every manufacturer up to a certain point, and if the A. N. D. Company is going to import nails, stoves, brick, boots and shoes (I suppose that's clothes), and all the rest of it, I think, right here and now we should insist on a schedule for this Bill stating exactly what is to be allowed to come in free of duty. I was very much surprised to hear the hon. introducer of the Bill state that it would take three or four weeks to prepare a schedule.

HON THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES— I said it would take several weeks, if you were going to carry on a conversation by telegram or letter.

MR. LAKE— That is what I said you stated. You stated it would take several weeks. I believe that you yourself (not to talk about the A. N. D. Company) could have it drawn up in three or four hours. You came in here a few minutes ago and brought in a Bill in connection with an industry at Holyrood Pond and told us evrything about it, and that was quite satisfactory.

HON. THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—I am trying to tell you everything about this.

MR. LAKE—I thought you had said you had thought that they could very easily get a schedule with regard to Buchan's Mine? What is the use of our admitting everything here duty free and in a few years time the Minister of Finance may have to get an auditor to go through the books to find on what they have to pay duty on. I think that now is the opportunity, and it should be laid down that every company coming in here looking for concessions shall state what concessions they want and on what particular articles they need concessions. I think no company coming into this country should get over five years protection. If a company can't get things in shape and have a mill erected in five years then I don't know what I am talking about. I admit I don't know much about mining but I contend that our giving a company as here twenty years is absolutely outrageous. I am told by people who profess to know that they have $180,000,000 of ore at Buchan's Mine. These figures are so big that I can hardly utter them; $180,000,000 worth of ore at Buchan's Mine; and I undersand that they can get out of that 50 per cent. which works out as is obvious $90,000,000. Well, if a company that has $180,000,000 in sight comes into this House and asks for twenty years free entry, I don't think it is good enough, and I don't think we should allow it to pass, unless on the other hand they give us some concesions as far as the Newfoundland labouring man is concerned. I see nothing to protect the labouring man in these Resolutions, nothing to protect the labourer in the slightest degree. The labouring man has got to come to his member or a merchant and try and get money enough to go to Buchan's Mine and when he gets there he is at the mercy of some employer who tells him he isn't wanted. If he does get there I suppose he has got to live in a shack not fit to live in and perhaps eat miserable food. He is the slave and the Company gets all that's in it. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves if we allow that thing to pass in its present state, and I for one will say here and now that as a representative of the District of Burin and the people of Burin, I don't intend to vote for that measure in its present state. What the other members are going to do I am not prepared to say. I am standing here alone as far as that is concerned. But I shouldn't suppose that all the members of the Government would vote for it, but perhaps they will, being a party measure, they have to do what they are told or get out. It would be better if they did get out when this kind of thing is brought before them. It is what I call outrageous for a Government to bring in such resolutions as have been brought in and expect honorable members representing the labouring classes of the country to vote for them.

Section "f" of section 2 says:

(Reads).

"Hand tools." That means because they are used by the labouring classes. I think if you are going to allow everything else you might as well allow hand tools also.

I did not intend to speak for any length of time and I shall reserve any further remarks I may have to make for when the Bill comes to the Committee stage.

MR. BRADLEY— Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Hon. the Attorney General give his interpretation of sub-section "e" of section 2 in respect of its effect on the Newfoundland Railway. Will they be in a position to transport over a route of their own freight that would otherwise go over our road?

HON MINISTER OF JUSTICE — Mr. Chairman, in reply to the honouraable member, as I understand it the only route at present is shipping by Botwood via Bishop's Falls. They would have to utilise the railway in the winter time. If on the other hand they wanted to construct a railway to some short port they would have to get from the Legislature a franchise to traverse Crown lands. That is the point where the protection comes in. I think Dr. Mosdell asked this question yesterday and it was discussed. A right of way would have to be obtained if they wished to do that, and it seems to me there is no danger.

While I am on my feet there is one point I would ask honourable members to consider, and I think it is only right that attention ought to be drawn to it. I think there ought to be a time when if some improvement is made we ought to say to one another a kind word where a kind word is due. I think any honourable member who reads this Bill and reads the provisions now made ought to agree with what I am going to say. I don't say it is not what ought to be done but as a matter of fact I say that for the first time at least, whatever our opinions may be about different Bills, for the first time in many years, I think the first time since the Legislature has granted concessions, there has been a great advance in the way of getting over difficulties which have to be met. When you provide the things that you simply can't bring in duty free that is a step further than ever was gone in the history of legislation in the past. Section "f" provides:

(Reads.)

I think we at least ought start with this thing. It is quite easy to get up and talk about what has happened in the past, but there has never yet been a contract before the Legislature in this country in which such a clause appeared. I want to say, and I say it with the approval of the Customs Department, that it has been a distinct step towards the realisation of the hope that we have been endeavouring to bring to that realisation in making it clear that certain things would not be brought in under the general terms that have been used in the past.

That clause was put in by the Govt. arising out of the very position that has been referred to regarding the schedule. We discussed the idea of a schedule honestly, but found it impossible to get a contract on that basis, and we then went the other way about it. It is only a matter of viewpoint; we say you can't admit these things, but they can't include such and such. If we say this can't apply to hand tools, clothing and articles of household furniture and office equipment, that is because these things were notorious in Corner Brook. All these things are remedied by that clause, and at least hon.members will be good enough to say that this is a considerable advance. Then in clause 3 the country is protected by the provision as to the disposition of any articles that have received the benefit of the free list and may have since been sold.

MR. BRADLEY — Mr. Chairman: The word contract used in connection with this agreement is a bit amusing. Of course as it stands this is technically a contract. But to the ordinary man a contract implies the giving of some thing by both parties to the agreement in consideration for something in return. I have looked through these resolutions, and, maybe, I have missed some essentials, but so far as I have been able to discover up to the present moment, all the giving is on the part of the Newfoundland Government and all the taking on the part of the A.N.D. Company. There is no giving on the part of the A.N.D. Company .Yesterday afternoon when we were in Committee on this matter, I asked the Hon. the Introducer of these Resolutions, if he would be good enough to point out to me what Newfoundland was getting for the concessions that were being given to this corporation. The Hon. the Minister of Agriculture in reply pointed out to me what he thought would be the benefits that would accrue to Newfoundland, and they were purely visionary on his part; hopes which exist in his mind, and which I trust will fructify, but of which I have the gravest doubts. It can hardly be contended that what the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture hopes will be the benefits that will accrue to this country through the passage of this bill, is a "Quid Pro Quo."

We have for a number of years past, being introducing into this House and passing through their various stages to completion agreements giving concessions to this, that and the other company. And there have been various reasons adduced from time to time to justify the giving of these concessions. Amongst others it has been advanced nearly always that if these concessions are not given these corporations and promoters will be frightened away, and the people of this country as a result will not get the labour. I have been agreeably surprised, sir, sitting here during the consideration of these Resolutions and down to the present moment have not heard any member of the Government suggest that this corporation is going to run away unless they get these concessions. We can then take it for granted that these people do not intend to run away. They have got a proven and a valuable property. Whether we give them these concessions or not they will continue their preparations and operate these mines. They are not philanthropists. They are not down here to expend money in the interests of the people of this country. They have no more regard for us than they have for any other country in the world, and so far as this corporation itself is concerned, Mr.

Chairman, it will be found that if any benefits are to be given to any one, it will not be to Newfoundland. That is borne out by sub-section C, section 2.

There is only one object in that, and that is for the purpose of exportation. In other words, they will take the raw material out of this country in these bags to be manufactured in the United States of America. The labour is to be given to the Americans. And then they ask us to admit free into this country articles to take the raw material out of this country that the Americans may get the benefit of the manufacture.

No, Mr. Chairman, there is nothing whatever to intimate that the promoters of these resolutions will withdraw from the operation of this valuable property even if they do not get these concessions. If they have $200,000,000 worth of proven ore down there,—and I heard a member of the present administration say that it is a wonderful property, then even if we refuse to grant them the concessions they are asking for, they will still continue to operate that mine. Why then I ask should this Legislature tumble over itself to relieve these people of obligations to the revenue of this country, which the ordinary person has to consequently assume. If the A. N. D. Company will come into this House with a proposition that will show us that it is, in the interests of the Colony, essential that these entries should be allowed free, then I would be the last man to stand up here and oppose the Resolutions. But with my friend Mr. Lake, who has just sat down, I say here and now that so far as I am concerned these Resolutions shall not pass. I am prepared to stay here until Christmas to prevent their passing. If on the other hand that corporation is prepared to prove to us that in order that the undertaking can be carried on, it is essential to have these concessions, then we won't be here two hours. But I want that proved, and I am not prepared to accept the words of any corporation, particularly when it is associated with an American Trust. You have only to consult the records of the American Government to see what the practices of these American Trusts usually have been. Monopolists of the worst type. They have been squeezing concessions from Legislatures down through the history of the American Republic for the last hundred years. We have the asset down there in the mine. It is in this country, and the Government should see that that asset is kept and protected not for American speculators, nor for the A. N. D. Company, but for the public of the Colony to whom it belongs.

The Minister of Agriculture and Mines came in here and told us that the solicitor of the corporation, refused point blank to give us any information about what they wanted to import under these Resolutions. Why? If they are honest about the matter and if everything is fair and above board, then they ought to be only too glad to give us the information that we are asking. Surely they cannot contend that they don't know what they want. If that is the case I sugges that these Resolutions be stricken off the order paper. If they don't know what they want they have no business here at all. They say they can't give us the information. They are not going to tell us down to the last nail just what concessions they require. They can if they will, prove to us whether it is essential that they should have this blanket free entry, and for that period of twenty years. But they make no attempt to do it in the first place, and when we ask them to do it they point blank refuse and intimate that whether we wait for three weeks or six weeks they will not give it to us. That is the position taken by the solicitor of the corporation. And I give them the credit for having a very astute solicitor too. Now how much of all that is bluff and how much is true I would suggest that we call the bluff at once, and refuse to proceed with these Resolutions un-'il they are prepared to give us the information that we require. They come to us for concessions, asking us to relieve them of thousands of dollars of duty. We ask them for nothing. And surely it is the duty of the party asking for concessions to tell the party from whom he is asking that concessions, what he wants. Now my methods of logic may not be correct. Perhaps my mind does not run in logical channels. But if there is anybody here that is able to disprove what I have stated, or is able to deny that my logic is correct, then I shall be glad to hear it. I don't pretend to have any particular ability. I don't pretend to know very much about mining, (and I know that that statement will be repeated in the Daily News to-morrow morning), but I do pretend to have at least the ordinary common sense. And I do want to tell this House now that the attitude that I have taken at the present moment is the attitude of 90 per cent. of the men on the street today. The whole of this country is up against these resolutions in their present form. I am sick and tired of seeing this Legislature put through from time to time, bills giving concessions to corporations of this kind merely because they are afraid that we will otherwise lose the labour. While the Honourable the Introducer of these resolutions does not say so in so many words, the fact that it is his belief that we are going to get this labour from these Resolutions, at least shows that he has in mind, that maybe we will not get that labour if we don't pass these resolutions. I don't agree w th that position.

HON. MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, if the last two speakers are a fair indication of the attitude of a considerable portion of the people of this country, then I think that it is valuable waste of time for members of this House to be trying to put through legislation that is absolutely in the interests of the people. And I want to take this opportunity, I don't want to wait until this Committee meets again, to absolutely disassociate myself entirely from the attitude taken by the last two speakers. Mr. Lake gets up and makes a first class political speech, and nobody can doubt but that it is purely political from start to finish. In one breath he refers to an extract of the Revenue Act, that class of material that we are allowing in duty free, of the admission of articles required to operate mining ventures. And in the next breath he takes up the act, and entirely and absolutely disagrees that all such articles should be admitted in duty free, and then he refers to no provision being made for the underdog. I remember when the hon. member had a seat on this side of the House and when he was connected with the great big enterprise that we are talking about now, and I did not hear him get up here and make any lengthy speech with regard to the labouring man being treated as a dog. Last year in the House when the Government and this House discussed as to whether or not we should assist the mining venture up in St. George's District, every member on both sides of this House got up to recommend that we should hand out $100,000 for testing as to whether we had in St. George's coal in commercial quantities. Why was that done? Where is the consistency of these members who last year were inclined to give $100,- 000 to see if we had coal or not, and I for one thought they were in earnest. And here now we are asking as I pointed out yesterday to assist a company to develop a mine. This is the first time in my recollection that any legislation has been brought forward to assist in developing the mineral resources of Newfoundland. There was a period after the death of Mr. Howley when nobody gave it the slightest attention. And this Government has now made an earnest attempt to try and assist that important industry that we have been discussing under those resolutions. And these are the fruits, and I claim some of the credit of it myself.

Mr. Lake has said that twenty years is too long. I want to tell him that in twenty-five years from now that prospecting will still be going on up in that two thousand mile area around Red Indian Lake. It has been going on for the past forty years. It is thirty years since the mine at Little Bay closed down and ever since then prospecting has been going on. My friend, Mr. Ashbourne must know that there has been large amounts of money spent in Green Bay to develop a mine up there without success up to now. But now a new scientific discovery has been made whereby the sulphite ore can be located, and the A.N.D. Co. are making an earnest attempt now to develop that mine.

. I also want to tell the last speaker, that I entirely disagree with him that 90 per cent of the people of this country are opposed to this legislation. I want to assure him that the man looking for employment, and I am not referring now to the crowd on Water Street, but the man that wants honest employment and is prepared to give a hundred cents to the dollar, I want to tell the hon. member that that class of man is not in opposition to the proposition that is going to give him honest employment at a decent wage. And now that brings me to the question of wages, and I want to say that wages depends on supply and demand. The price of labour is like the price of fish; it has been said in this House that so and so made the price of fish. The price of fish is what supply and demand makes it.

Another statement was made by Mr. Bradley to the effect that we own the property. We don't own the property. In 1905 the Bond Government made a contract with the A.N.D. Co. and gave them two thousand square miles of land in the watershed of Red Indian Lake. They gave them the right to the minerals as well as the wood and water, in fact everything in connection with the area. So that the A.N.D. Co. own the property. But the minerals are of no value to them in the bowels of the earth, but they are making an attempt to bring it out and turn it into dollars and cents. I don't at all subscribe to the attitude taken by these two gentlemen who said that we are going to get no returns. For instance if the value of the output was worth annually $5,000,000 20 p.c. on that, plus the employment of two thousand men at $2.50 a day, would mean a benefit to the revenue of nearly two million dollars.

Mr. Chairman, I get warmed up to this subject because I am a practical mining man myself. I worked in Newfoundland and out of Newfoundland for eight or ten years underground. I am particularly interested in this property. I am in contact and connection with large numbers of men of my own class and my own associates who are very anxious to see the mineral resources of this country given a fair chance. In the course of debates here, we hear the various avenues of industries spoken of, but rarely do we hear a word about what I am convinced is going to be a very important branch of our local industries and that is mining.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committe have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, on the motion to adjourn I would like to draw the attention of the Prime Minister to a reply that he gave to question 1 on to-day's order paper.

(reads)

That is true to some extent. I know that when that steamer was discharging rails at Clarenville there was quite a number of men employed from Trinity District. The question that I asked did not refer to that. I asked about work on the railway. I was informed, for the benefit of the Prime Minister, and no doubt it was brought to his notice also, that there is quite a number of men in Trinity District out of employment. They went to Clarenville seeking work on the railway. They were employed by the agent there, but a man from Placentia District, one man at any rate from Placentia and St. Mary's, got employment and the man from Trinity District working on the railway, was dismissed because he was told that the man who went there from Placentia had got his certificate from his member. And in other cases men from Trinity District were dismissed and others were taken on in their place. I don't know whether the Executive Government knows the truth or otherwise of that statement, but this was told me and I have not any reason to disbelieve it, because one man was actually treated in this way. I don't think it is fair. These men come to me and they say that the members representing a Government district are sending men in and they say, "Why cannot you give me a job?" But I have no authority, and I do not know anyone else that has any authority. I have treated these requests through Mr. Joyce. I have left the matter entirely in his hands. This thing has been going on that a man from Placentia and St. Mary's and other districts go there with a note from their representatives, and the men from Trinity District have been dismissed. I don't think that is a square deal. It is a matter of such importance that I take this opportunity of bringing it to the attention of the railway commission, so that they may investigate the matter and find out whether that is the actual condition of things at Clarenville or Shoal Harbour. I don't want to elaborate on this but poor old Trinity District is getting the treatment that it does not deserve, and I do not want to make it apply to the poor individual outside of the general situation affecting the whole district.

HON. MR. SULLIVAN—Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word. It is presumed that I must be that man, well I want to inform the Hon. gentleman and this House that I have not given a note to anybody in my district to get employment on the line. If men from my district want to get work I tell them to ask Mr. Joyce. I also believe that the Hon. Member does not believe all he hears about taking men on, and putting others off, and I am sure that he is willing to accept my explanation that I had nothing to do with the incident to which he has referred. I have made this explanation to put myself right.

Mr. Grimes gave notice of question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

Mr. Russell gave notice of question.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn until Monday next, June 20th, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, June 20th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of Question.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of Question.

Mr. Bradley gave notice of Question.

Dr. Mosdell gave notice of Question.

Mr. Hibbs gave notice of Question.

Mr. Lake gave notice of Question.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred.

On motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights on Labrador" was deferred until to-morrow.

Committee of the Whole on Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for other purposes."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY— Mr. Chairman, Since the last sitting I endeavoured to get information requested by members of the Opposition in respect to moneys paid at different periods to the Tourist and Publicity Bureau. I have also an answer to the query of the Leader of the Opposition with regard to the estimated revenue from the tax imposed under this Bill; and I have also got some general information from the whole operations of this Bureau since its inception in 1925. I might say that, in 1925 when the preliminary step was taken by the Government for the inauguration of this Bureau, certain gentlemen got together and discussed the desirability of having some effort made to increase the facilities and adopt some policy to give assistance and information to visitors coming to this country, particularly during the Summer months. The idea was taken hold of and developed in a preliminary way and the Government were approached to give some financial assistance. Whilst at the time the Government felt that this was an effort on the part of citizens of St. John's primarily, they considered it of sufficient public importance to give it some financial aid. Accordingly, in that year the sum of $1000.00 was voted and the preliminary work of the Tourist Bureau was inaugurated. In 1926 the Government were again approached by these gentlemen with regard to financial requisites for this Bureau and the Government told them that they thought the community itself should be given an opportunity to subscribe something towards this object. Then an agreement was come to and the Bureau was informed that for every dollar they would raise by subscription that the Government would subscribe a dollar willingly.

Through their efforts, which must have been strenuous and took a great deal of their time, these gentlemen raised $3,300.00 from the community of St. John's, including subscriptions from the transportation companies. The Government then sent the Bureau a cheque for $3,000.00, which was practically sufficient to cover all the expenses for that year. I think it will be borne in mind that the Bureau kept well with their limits because at the end of the year they were only a hundred and odd dollars short in their requirements; but having promised to contribute dollar for dollar the Government still owed $300.00. However, the Bureau made requisition for $200.-

00 which amount was handed over to them by the Government and that completed their finances for 1926. In addition there was a question, as I pointed out the other day, of connecting up this proposition with the Bureau of Economics at Washington. A lady came down here and waited upon the Government and discussed the proposition. It was decided that the best and most effective way of introducing each other and becoming better known was by lecturing tours and moving pictures. Accordingly, at the suggestion of the Tourist Bureau here, Major Tait, who was then living in Boston, was appointed to do publicity work in the States. Previous to this Major Tait had done a great deal of work through the medium of his small newspaper in the general interest of Newfoundland and in doing what he could for visitors going to Boston, and generally giving the country all the assistance he possibly could in the way of boosts. It was then reported by Major Tait that he had done this work without remuneration and that he could not continue to do so. He pointed out that his home had become a place of reference for all things connected with Newfoundland. As a matter of fact, he was fulfilling the duties of a High Commissioner or Trades Agent, without remuneration, for Newfoundland. As a true Newfoundlander, he naturally did it for love of country. But it is not possible for anyone to live on sentiment alone and he found it necessary to make application for some financial aid. The Governemnt appreciated his efforts and decided to give him encouragement, pointing out to him he had to put up a proposition. His proposition was that he would move in a more suitable office, as his office then was in an obscure part of Boston. He got an office on Washington Street, one of the principal centres, and he promised to do all possible for the people who came there for information. The Government agreed to pay him $500.00 every three months up to $2,500.00. Mr. Gibb, his associate in the office, looked after that part of the work during the absence of Major Tait on his lecturing tour. Up to the present time only $1,500.00 has been paid Major Tait and the balance is still on hand. That probably explains why the figures did not coincide with those tabled in the House, because I stated here the other day that the total cost was in the neighborhood of $8,000.00. We gave the Publicity Bureau $3,200.00 and $5,000.00 we subscribed towards the lecturing tour of Major Tait and that is what it cost the country last year. I think that will explain the figures that were submitted here and the report of the Committee that I wish now to table will also further explain the details.

With regard to the question of the Leader of the Opposition respecting the estimate of income for the Bureau for this year, I have this memorandum from the Secretary of the Bureau, which I think will explain exactly the position with regard to the probabilities of what they will receive. If this Bill had been in operation last year, owing to the fact that some eight thousand first class tickets were sold out of this country to different places in Canada, the United States and England, we would have collected on that eight thousand tickets at $2.00 per head $16,000.00. It is hard to estimate for this year because half of the year practically is gone. Even if the Bill passes to-morrow it will not be enacted into law before the first of July, and that is one of the reasons why I am desirous of giving all possible information, so that when the Bill becomes operative we will be able to anticipate the revenue to be derived. Here is a memorandum from the Publicity Commission.

(Reads Memo).

I think I might give the Committee this information also, because I have been asked on what authority those bills have been paid and from what funds. For the fiscal year 1925-26, $1,-000.00 was paid by Minute of Council out of general Contingency Account on July 31st 1925; on February 28th, 1926, $1,000.00 was paid on same authority and out of same account; $1,000.00 paid on March 31st, 1926; $1,000.00 paid on June 30th, 1926; $1,000.00 paid October 12th, 1926, by Minute of Council from the Loan of 1926 and on November 17th, 1926, another $1,000.-00 was paid out of the Loan Account of 1926. These are five payments of $1,000.00 making a total of $5,000.00 to cover Major Tait's expenses. I may say in this connection that we have a statement from the Bureau of Commercial Economics, Washington, that gives an absolute account of every dollar that was spent, and, strange to say, there is a credit balance to come back of over $140.00. The $5,000.00 guaranteed by the Bank of Montreal for this year's operations and is an overdraft against the Bureau and which $5,000.00 will have to be paid out of the revenue received by the tax provided for in this Bill, so that the Government is no longer liable up to the end of 1926, except for $250.00 due on the previous year's account. The balance in the Bank against the Bureau will now come under the immediate jurisdiction of the Publicity Bureau because it will be used primarily for the purpose which they have control of. I think, Mr. Chairman, these are all the facts that I have to give to the Committee and if there is any further information I can give, and am able, I shall be only too glad to furnish the House with it.

MR. MOORE—Mr. Chairman. From the very outset I was opposed to this touirst scheme and I am strongly opposed to it to-day. I object for any man or woman leaving this country having to pay a tax of two dollars for the benefit of this Tourist Commission. Three years ago at the first Party meeting of the Government after coming back from the country I asked the Party to have one million dollars devoted towards the encouragement of the fishery and one million dollars for Highroads, but both myself and my colleaguee were voted down. I have not altered my opinion since and for the reason stated I object to the passage of the Bill, and, in the interests of the people of the district who sent me here, I am going to vote against this Bill.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, will the Government, after the passage of this measure, continue to spend money advertising the country in foreign publications, or has a decision been made to cut out such expenditures thereafter? It is possible that the payment of officials might use up the major portion of the income of the Bureau and that the Government would then be asked to supplement their revenue. Are any safeguards provided against such a possibility I am interested in hearing from the Honorable the Colonial Secretary just what the plans of the Government are in this connection. I have here to declare that, despite the explanations and the championship of that honorable gentleman, the Bill proves no more attractive to me now than it did when I made my first observations on its provisions. The principle of exacting a transportation tax from people who have to go abroad to seek a living appeals to me as utterly wrong and entirely unfair. There must, surely, be a more equitable way of finacning whatver foreign publicity Newfoundland may require to attract tourists to our various resorts.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —Mr. Chairman. It is definitely understood, I think, that the Government are not to be called upon to supplement or subscribe any further moneys to be expended by this Bureau. With regard to advertising, I realise that a lot of money has been paid for advertising, particularly on the other side of the water. It is a very expensive item and very little returns come from it. I remember in the days of the Morris administration I drew attention to the fact that hundreds of pounds were spent yearly for advertising in English periodicals and magazines and very little good came from that source, and it is only within the last two months I wrote the High Commisioner in London instructing him to cut down advertising in the English periodicals to the very minimum. It was only on Friday last I had a letter from him stating that he had carried out our instructions and that he had got some sour looks from those who were receiving this patronage. In that connection I think that considerable saving can be brought about. I think the intention of the Publicity Bureau is not to advertise in papers or periodicals. Their advertising will be done through lecturing tours, moving pictures and illustrated books and folders showing the attractions of the country. There is a very excellent work in hand now. A Mr. Palmer, who for the last eight years has been connected with the Reid Newfoundland Company's Natural Resources Department, has compiled a book for the purpose of advertising the country. It is one of the most elaborate volumes imaginable and will be valuable to visitors coming here. It deals with eighty salmon rivers, most of them unknown before and points out to visitors how to get to them and the possible cost of getting to them. The book is in the hands of the printers now and I understand that Mr. Palmer has already received large orders for the book from the Red Cross Line and Furness Line. The book will be on sale for a dolalr a volume. I saw a draft copy of it and it struck me as a valuable and atractive publication. To give an illustration of publicity. A member of the Tourist Bureau told me the other day that while on a Rotary Convention abroad he knew that there was distributed between Maine and New Brunswick thirty thousand circulars to tourists and those circulars were all in regard to the attractions offered in Newfoundland. One cannot imagine a better kind of advertising than that. It is the kind of advertising that catches the eye and it is a very comprehensive way of doing it. There, I submit, that it is quite competent for this country to develop a very large influx of visitors and it is not within the province of anybody to say what that will mean for the country. The only thing to guide us is what is wanted for other places. Honourable members know that in most of the Provinces of Canada the tourist traffic is looked upon as one of the most valuable assets and lucrative enterprises. I think we can secure a reasonable proportion of that money, if we can attract the Americans to come here. We are not after the Americans themselves; we are after the money they have to spend when they get here. It is like a man doing business. He makes his shop as attractive as possible, not that he wants to converse with the customers, but it is their money he is after. The same applies to the tourist project. We will never do anything unless we try and I have no doubt there will be ample demonstration of the efforts made by attracting visitors here. I understand that both the Furness Line and Red Cross Line steamers have every passage booked coming into this country from now until the end of September next . I do not claim that has been brought about by the Tourist Bureau, but I do claim that they materially helped to advertise and make this country's attractions known in the far-flung parts of the United States. Then, again, the Red Cross and Furness people have greatly improved the transportation facilities of their steamers so that intending passengers can travel on this route with more ease and comfort than heretofore. With regard to the sentiments expressed by Mr. Moore, I may say that it is not the man who goes second class that is taxed, and even if he is going first class he will be asked to contribute $2, but, after all, the number will be very few. At all events it is not the idea to tax those people who are going away looking for employment, but it is very difficult to make a ruling on that point, as there are always sure to be some exceptions.

MR. HALFYARD —Mr. Chairman, when this Bill was first introduced I objected to the system of taxation to get revenue for the Publicity Bureau—by taxing people going out of this country. The Colonial Secretary said that he would take the matter up with the members of the Publicity Bureau and see if they could devise some means whereby people going out of the country looking for employment would be relieved of that tax.

Now that is the objection that I have to the bill. I do not think that any one going out of the country, either male or female, going to Canada or United States, seeking employment should be expected to pay a tax whether travelling first or second class. People leave this country and go to Canada, to the United States and other parts of the Empire to seek employment but none of the people leaving Canada are coming down here to seek employment. There may be one in a thousand. In that respect we are different than other parts of the Empire. People leaving the Old Country and going to Canada get every encouragement to go there. They practically get a free passage just to encourage them to go. We are dealing with unemployment in a different way altogether.

And because of this hardship which it is imposing the Government is going to be spoken of unkindly for taxing the people who are going out of the country to seek employment, and I presume that the Government as a Government has considered that and made up their minds to stand or fall in the opinion of the people in connection with this extra tax which the people leaving the country seeking employment are to have to pay.

That is the one point that I am interested in with reference to this Bill. There are a great many people who travel on a first class ticket because it is easier to get into the United States when travelling first class than if they went second or third.

I do not want to labor the question but I feel that I shall have to vote against it for that reason.

DR. MOSDELL — Mr. Chairman, there has been so much of an obscure nature said about the Tourist Bureau proposition since it was brought into this House that I have to ask a great many more questions because, as the honourable the member for Trinity District has said, we must have all posisble information before the measure comes to the vote, so that we can then take intelligent action on it. Frankly, at the present time, I feel inclined to vote against the Bill, not only because of conscientious objections to its general principles, but because of the methods proposed for raising the money necessary for financing the expenses of the Publicity Bureau. It may be that my prejudices are unfounded. If I discover that to be the case, I shall certainly have no hesitatoin, later on in the debate, in withdrawing the objections I have voiced or may voice as the discussion proceeds.

The Honourable the Colonial Secretary has given this Committee some figures showing the value of the tourist traffic to Canada of recent times. These figures prove nothing, as far as Newfoundland is concerned. We do not bear the same relation, geographically, to the Un ted States as that country does to Canada. We cannot in reason expect to profit to the same extent from the American tourist trade as has the Dominion of Canada. Hundreds of thousands of Americans can cross the border into Canada, driving their own motor cars, as easily and as cheaply as the c.tizens of St. John's can make the tour round Conception Bay to the attractive and thriving towns of that section. It is a far different thing for the American tourists to vis.t Newfoundland, bringing their motor cars with them. A large expenditure of time and of money would be involved in any such undertaking. It will be useless, for a good many years to come, to anticipate any considerable influx of tourists of this leisured and wealthy American class, and certainly not until we have more local attract ons and conveniences to offer them than happens to be the case at present.

The Honourable the Colonial Secretary, quoting from the report of the Tourist Publicity Bureau, asserts that six thousand tourists came here by various routes last year. Well, how many of these thousands came because of any presentation to them by the Bureau of the case for Newfoundland as a holiday resort? How do these figures compare with the tourist stat stics of previous years? What is the significance of the figures just quoted? Do they mean that six thousand tourists came here, sojourned in the country for a while, billetted at our hotels and spent their money in the country? On the other hand, the statist.cs of last year's tourist traffic may merely signify that six thousand tourists, or the great majority of them, entered St. John's Harbor, making the round trip on some steamer or other and affording no outstanding or substantial benefit to anybody but the transportation companies that brought them here and ferried them home again.

The only class of tourist that it is worth Newfoundland's while to encourage and attract here is that which is prepared to holiday in our m.dst for weeks or months. That, however, is the monied class, one which expects to pay for whatever he gets but expects to get the very best for what he pays. Except as far as hotel accommodation at St. John's is concerned, we are not prepared to receive and to entertain such tourists. Take them away from this city to our sport.ng resorts, to our best scenic resorts, or to spots especially suited to those who seek rest and quiet after the rush and hurly-burly of big city life and they must simply rough it, as far as hotels and boarding houses go. This is an experience to which the majority of them are not prepared to submit. They want to holiday in comfort, in luxury even. Other countries offer attractions equally as great as those of Newfoundland; our outstanding lure for these people is our strangeness. They regard us as a field for hol.day exploration. Countries that rival ours as tourist resorts are prepared to give their holiday visitors adequate and most modern living arrangements. We are in no such posit.on and we cannot hope to attract and to hold any large and lucrative tourist traffic until we make provision to overcome this handicap. Moreover, until we are in such a position we w.ll seriously injure our future prospects if we induce, or attempt to induce wealthy tourists to pay us a visit.

The Newfoundland traveller, therefore, whether he goes abroad on business or on pleasure, must now submit to a tax exaction designed to attract wealthy tourists to a country that is prepared neither to give them the sort of welcome or the kind of accommodation that is calculated to satisfy them to retain them here for any considerable period or to induce them to return here when vacation season comes round again next year and for years afterwards. They are certain to go away dissatisfied over the fact that outside of St. John's there existed no up-to-date hotels or boarding houses, and that our boasted scenic and sporting resorts might just as well have been non-existent, as far as they were concerned. The transportation tax is bound to hit hard that class of Newfoundlander who goes abroad to earn his livelihood, returning to his own country to spend some months of the year with his relatives. His own country cannot provide him a means of earning a livelihood. He has to seek employment elsewhere. He is taxed to ensure an influx of holiday-makers to the very land from which stern necessity drives him. That, as the honorable member for the District of Trinity has just observed, strikes one as an absurd and an unjust policy.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, the Colonial Secretary stated that the tax was to be collected from the round trippers as well. I would like to know how you are going to collect that?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman, the steamship companies have agreed to assess the tickets when leaving New York. The agent here will have to be responsible for the amount.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that clause 8 be added by way of amendment to Section 3 to this effect:

(Reads.)

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman, I might say with reference to the point taken by the last speaker, as I pointed out before, I took the matter up with the steamship owners and they told me that it was absolutely impossible to make any discrimination or any difference. Everybody would be going looking for employment. Of course this tax is going to be paid by people who can well afford to pay it. There may be some cases where the tax will prove a hardship, but as I have already pointed out, a short time ago everybody going to the States had to have a passport for which they had to pay $2.50. This has now been wiped out. In some cases I give identification letters, but this is not always necessary, and there is no longer the tax on the passports which the people paid and did not trouble about it. The tax is smaller and the number of people leaving this country to seek employment who travel first class is very small.

I would very much like to be able to meet the wishes of the honourable member in this connection but I think he will appreciate the fact that it would be very difficult to bring about any discrimination as suggested.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, I would like to know the immigration laws of the United States as to whether there is any tax on men going there to seek employment. Do they encourage people to come in there looking for employment?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman, I think it is the other way about. The immigration laws are very severe. They don't want men going in there looking for jobs. They want to keep people out who are seeking employment. They know that if these people get jobs they will be keeping some Americans out of a job, and that is what they do not want to have done. When an outsider has a good job there they feel that he is standing in the place of some American who should have that position.

I have advised many men going to the United States that whatever they say not to tell them they are going to take a job.

As an example, I remember one case when four men—I think they were from Trinity, and the honourable member for Trinity will probably remember the occasion—went there and made the mistake and were sent back. They said that they were looking for work and were immediately sent back. Now their immigration law is not as severe on Newfoundland as on most other countries. Nearly every country has a quota—that is only a certain number of people from that country can enter the United States during the year and when that number is reached nobody can go in to stay; but Newfoundland has no quota. Canada has no quota. No matter how many Newfoundlanders go into the country there is no trouble with regard to the quota. In that respect we are much better off than most countries.

MR. ASHBOURNE—Mr. Chairman, I think they have a law in the United States against contract labour. Under that law no one can go out and contract to bring labourers into the United States.

Would it not be advantageous to put a tax on all workmen coming into Newfoundland to do lumber woods work? I do not see why our men should be taxed and have to pay a head tax of $8.00 or $10.00 and their workmen can come here into Newfoundland without any trouble or check. There is lots of unemployment in this country which this tax would help considerably. I merely offer this as a suggestion to the Government.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman, I think the honourable member will agree with me when I say that very few people come into Newfoundland seeking employment and most of those are Canadians. If we were to impose a head tax on all Canadians coming in here the Canadian Government would put a head tax on our people going in there and we would be the harder hit when you consider the hundreds of our men who go to work at Sydney.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, will the Honorable the Prime Minister, Chairman of the Railway Commission, be good enough to inform me whether the increase in passenger rates for coastal steamers applies also to the cross-country service. The steamer rates were increased some time ago.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — When do you mean they were increased?

DR. MOSDELL—During the last month or so.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — That has no connection with the matter.

DR. MOSDELL—The steamer rates were recently increased forty per cent., and what I am asking is does the same increase apply to railroad fares?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — No. not the same as the steamship rates. They were increased to the same level as the railroad rates, I think.

DR. MOSDELL—Then, if a person who is leaving this country takes the cross-country train to Port aux Basques and there buys a ticket by the Caribou, he can get to Canada for less transportation taxation than if he go direct by steamer.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — He will save a dollar.

DR. MOSDELL—That may make the Newfoundland railway more popular.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE — As a matter of fact, it costs a lot more to go by rail to Boston than to go there by steamer.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had passed the same without amendment.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Bill be read a third time on to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice the Bill entitled "An Act for the Confirmation of an Agreement between the Government and Holyrood Pond Fisheries, Limited" was read a second time and by unanimous consent was ordered to be referred to a Committee of the Whole House presently.

Whereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman: I was wondering whether the Government is certain that this bill is going through. Have they given any thought to what it involves? It certainly doesn't look much if it on the face of it. In connection with this Bill nobody seems to know what a plant is. The Honourable the Minister of Justice gave us his definition of a plant.

There is no doubt that there will be in this country very many fish meal plants in the next few years and having given the concessions under this Act to the first concern we will certainly be compelled to give them to every other concern and I was wondering whether the Government has given serious consideration to the position and to what they really want brought into this country duty free. I would like to see the Bill go through. I would like to see the enterprise start, but I certainly wouldn't like later on to see this House sorry for this and be forced to give hundreds of other concerns concessions which we will not want to give. If the Honourable Introducer of the Bill would get the promoters of the company to outline in schedule what they required I think everything required to get the plant started would be allowed to come in duty free and this side of the House would be satisfied to make no objection in respect of those things. As it stands it seems to be giving them concessions in a way that is rather a broad order. I know a great deal has been said about the personnel of the company but that is not what we must work on, because the personnel of these companies changes very often, and if abuses are allowed to creep in they might be taken advantage of by somebody in the future and I would like to call the serious attention of the Minister of Justice to the position. I don't think it is any hardship on the promoters to give a statement of what they are asking for in detail and then whatever happens in the future in reference to other companies starting here we will know exactly where we stand.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I thought when the Committee rose everything had been agreed to in connection with the Bill and that there was nothing left but the ordinary matters of form to be gone through. In the resolution stage of the Bill I thought that we had thrashed the matter out fully, and now all that I can say is that I can only repeat what I then said. As to what a plant is I said the only definition I could give was that contained in Section 5 of the Bill which intimated that a plant in this particular Bill is a fish plant "including a factory or factories, wharves, docks, piers, stores, stages, flakes and other erections in connection with the Company's operations and rights of way to and from the said fish plant or the said Holyrood Pond." Secondly, as to the admission of duty free materials, I said that I didn't think that in this particular case so far as this Bill was concerned that there was anything at all to be worried about, and that Section 12, as governed by Clause 5 of the Bill, limited free entry to things that are for the plant. I can do no more than say this, and I say it with full regard to the point raised by the Opposition that I don't egard this thing at all as more than a case which the House approaches with an absolute conviction that we are only dealing with something under different conditions from ordinary legislation. The people simply have asked to have this thing tried. I don't know that it ever will be tried. I don't know that anything will be admitted duty free. You won't find many men like Mr. Job who are prepared to go so far as to try it. There is quite a doubt about the success of it. The fish may go in the pond and they may not. Even if they do come in, they may not be in quantities to warrant operation. They may come in one year and not the next sufficiently for the operation of the factory. So far as I am concerned, speaking as a layman and with all respect to the point raised, I rather look upon it as a thing which is being tried now after we have heard it talked of for so many years. As to the point raised about a schedule, the position with regard to it has already been discussed by me. The Leader of the Opposition asked whether the Government have considered the extent to which things may go as regards future requests. I can't speak for the Government, but I certainly will speak for myself, and I say with anything of the nature of a new industry duty exemption does not give me much concern. I don't say the consideration ought not be given to the matter in the fullest degree. I don't suggest for a minute that any man ought be entitled to import anything for his private benefit when he is given free entry for a plant, but I only say that I consider that in starting an industry here which has not been here before, I am not much worried about giving it duty free exemption. I don't Know that I can say very much more on the matter. I understood when the Bill passed resolution stage that the matter was disposed of, and I don't see that I am able now to make an alteration, and I can't see that anything more can be done. I was anxious to have it put through today so as to see it start this year, and, as the matter has to go through another chamber, I thought possibly it might be put through and sent up to them and give them something to do .I don't see any way in which we can improve it.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION —I wanted to ask if you had given that due consideration.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I have.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION —And you consider the Act fair to be placed on the Statute Book?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I can't see any danger myself.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that the Committee had considered the Bill to them referred and had passed the same without amendment.

Whereupon with unanimous consent the Bill was read a third time presently and was ordered to be sent to the Legislative Council with a message asking their concurrence in its provisions.

Second reading of Mill "An Act respecting Education."

HON LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Speaker, in reference to this Education Bill, Mr. Halfyard has asked for the report of the Department of Education and certain information has been sought by questions to be asked to-morrow by Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Bradley, Mr Lake, Dr. Mosdell, and I don't think we could get very far with this Bill until such time as that information is forthcoming, and if the Prime Minister will be good enough, we would like to have the second reading of this Bill deferred until we are in a position to talk on it intelligently.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I would be quite prepared to have the Order stand over until to-morrow.

On motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the second reading of the Bill entitled "An Act respecting Education" was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Resolutions respecting an Agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Anglo Newfoundland Development Company Limited.

Mr. Speaker left the chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, since last we were in Committee on this matter, I have got in touch with the Solicitor of the A.N.D. Company. He telegraphed the Managing Director at Grand Falls to ask if it were possible to have a schedule something along the lines of what was asked for by the Leader and members of the Opposition. The Solicitor has given me a copy of the reply he received from Mr. Harris of the A.N.D. Company which reads as follows:—

(Reads)

This is the only further information I have to give the Committee. I merely want to show the Committee that at least all that can possibly be done by myself has been done to meet the wishes of the Opposition with regard to a schedule.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. introducer of the Bill, and he tells us that the party to this Bill, the A.N.D. Company, refuse to give information that the House requests. It looks to me very much as if these people are dictating what legislation shall be put through this House. It is only natural for them and for their solicitor to say that they cannot submit a schedule, but it is the duty of the Government to say, "You must submit the schedule if you want the legislation put through." We should certainly not allow them to dictate what is going to be put through. It is up to you to say that they must submit it. The position to my mind is very much worse than it has been at any time. When a statement like that is put forward by people who want concessions the position I want to take and take very strongly is that they must submit to the request of the House. On this side of the House we protest very strongly.

We protest and protest very strongly against such action, and, if the Government will not take the matter up themselves, then we, the Opposition, might take the matter up and demand that legislation that passes through here will meet the wishes of the people of Newfoundland and not the legislation that suits the A.N.D. Company. I would suggest now that, after what we have heard, the hon. introducer of the Bill have the Committee to rise and demand the information required.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE—I have had very little to say on this Bill thus far. It is, in my opinion, an utter impossibility to lay down a schedule that will cover what is really meant by free entries. In my experience there is a possibility of doing ourselves more harm than good and we have had many concrete cases since I assumed control of the Department of Finance and Customs of what it really means, nor do I think that the House as a whole understands the true position. Take for instance a piece of machinery, which would cost say $20,000.00, that would be laid in position to-morrow morning and one month afterwards it became broken and went out of kilter, what would happen? I feel that the Leader of the Opposition and those associated with him, particularly the member for Fortune Bay unless he has changed his mind, want to be fair and we are trying to do the best in the country's interests. For that reason I would very much like to know who wrote the article entitled "Why not submit a schedule" in last Saturday's issue of the "Tribune?"I never saw or read this article until my attention was drawn to it. I never saw this paper before and to be honest I don't even know where it was printed I feel convinced that the members on the other side are interested enough in the welfare of Newfoundland as not to play politics with Buchan's Mine and I hope that Mr. Hibbs, whose name is on that paper as the Printer and Publisher, wants to tell the country what that Bill contains and what it really means, and I know he would not for a moment drop out the essential part of it. I am sure that the members of the Opposition would not like to see anything in the interests of the Colony left out. Now I would like to ask the Leader of the Opposition to read the editorial of this paper under date of June 18th, under the caption of "Why Not Submit a Schedule," and he will notice that the main clause (f) is left out entirely. May be it was done by accident, but, I think that if you are printing a Bill, surely it is not the custom to leave out the principal clause of that Bill. Now clause (f) says: "Provided that nothing herein contained shall be held to apply to fuel or hand-tools, etc. etc." I would like to know from Mr. Hibbs, Mr. Grimes or Mr. Halfyard who is the editor of that paper? Seeing that I cannot get an answer to my question from these gentlemen, may I ask the Colonial Secretary who the editor of that paper is?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—I will make enquiries and let you know to-morrow.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE—According to the Custom House records the A.N.D. Company had imported only three million dollars worth of goods duty free for twenty-five years of its operations, as against twelve million dollars worth of free entries for the N.P. and P. Company for only three years of operations. Yet because the promoters of Buchan's Mine are asking for certain concessions in the way of free entries—an absolutely new industry—the Opposition cry horror! horror! The answer given to me by certain members of the Opposition is that it is not because we did wrong in connection with the Humber proposition that this Government should do the same. Now I contend that, if the people who are promoting Buchan's Mine told us to-morrow that if they did not get the concessions they wanted that they would withdraw, the Opposition would be the first to kick and cry out, "Give it to them." Mr. Chairman, I am going to support this Bill, as I believe that anything in reason brought in here and employing anywhere from two thousand to twenty-five hundred men, particularly at the present time when labour is so scarce, it is my bounden duty to support, and I think that this proposition is the best that has been brought down here for some considerable time.

I think this Bill in connection with Buchan's Mine is better than any bill that has been introduced in my time or previous to my time. There is one thing I would like to say about the A. N. D. Co. people—I have no reason for saying it but I would give praise where it is due—to the pioneers of the paper-making industry in this country. They have done a tremendous amount of good and particularly through employment they have brought a lot of money into the country. Everyone knows, and the Leader of the Opposition and Mr. Godden and others will tell you, that in dealing with the A.N.D. Company people they have found that they purchased everything they could in Newfoundland, and it is very unfair to intimate that the A. N. D. Company will take any unlawful advantage of the duty or betray the trust of the people of this country.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, What does the Honourable minister of Finance refer to as impossible?

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE—What you know is impossible, what I know as Finance Minister as impossible for any industry that is worth while. You must know as well as I do that there are a lot of things on the tariff that come in free that the people get the benefit of it. The Deputy Minister of the Department says that this is the best bill ever introduced and he has sufficient ability in handling such maters. The Finance Minister only comes in for three or four years but the Deputy Minister has to keep the work going and carry out the business of the Department.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—The same gentleman was there in the time of the N. P. & P entries.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Yes, but there was a different bill in force in that connection. The Deputy Minister is the man who knows the work. In most cases the Finance Minister goes in there and doesn't know the first thing about the job and tells the Deputy what he has to do. If the Deputy had been allowed to have a free hand in some of the matters that took place in the past the result would have been more beneficial for the country.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Honourable Minister to tells us how much the claim is against the N. P. & P. Co.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—I don't mind telling you how much the claim is. We contend under the Customs Act that we are entitled to $423,000.00.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—If there had been a schedule there would have been no claim.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—The claim would have been worse. It could never have been definite and this bill has been carefully made up.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—What class of goods are you claiming duty in respect of—from the N. P. & P. Co.?

HON. HINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—A good deal of what is set forth in Clause F. For example there were certain grinders which, I think, cost a thousand dollars a piece, and were needed for the mills. We contended that when the mills were equipped with these grinders they could not get any others in free of duty supposing they smashed in a week. We claimed that the next stone that came in they would have to pay duty on and that was just what happened. There was an unlimited amount of goods brought in on which duty should have been paid—private furniture etc. We are claiming duty in respect of all these goods which they had no right to bring in and the claim has been made up very carefully. I might say in connection with the Corner Brook plant that I don't think for one moment that the servants of the Custom House were capable of taking care of the great quantity of goods that passed through their hands. They absolutely lost track of a great deal. But even under the Act there was a lot of stuff provided against in Clause F that we contend they are indebted to us in respect of. I am fully convinced that if this Bill goes through you will have no difficulty in carrying out the Bill and the Finance Minister, whoever he may be, will have no trouble in connection with same, and we will be out of the hole we're in now before we know where we are.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman, I did not quite grasp what the Honourable Minister of Finance was trying to say. He was speaking of the Honourable member for Fortune and at the same time was looking at me and I am not quite sure as to whether I am to reply for the Member for Fortune.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Honourable Member for Burin, I beg your pardon.

MR. LAKE—The Honourable Minister tried to infer that I was not sincere on Friday, when I made a statement here.

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Excuse me, I did not say that, I credited you with being very sincere, but in speaking I said that the Member for Fortune, which I now correct to mean Member for Burin, like many others did not understand the matter.

MR. LAKE—I did not see the copy of the "Tribune" to which he refers and in fact I did not know of the matter. I am not the Editor of the "Tribune."

HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE AND CUSTOMS—Here it is.

MR. LAKE—Now, Mr. Chairman, I know to what the Honourable Minister refers, and even if he did not accuse me of being insincere, then I have to challenge the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, who said that I had made a first class political speech. Now, I want to tell the Honourable Minister that I was absolutely sincere in my remarks on Friday and any other remarks that I make in the House, and I want all the members on the other side of the House to understand that. The Bill before this House is an outrage, as I said on Friday, and I repeat it to-day. I f I could afford the time and had the ability I would remain here until the thirty-fist day of December before I would let this Bill pass. And I am not playing politics. I am not the same as the Minister of Agriculture and Mines. I have no axe to grind, perhaps he has. I don't hold a job with the Government. He does. My stand in this House is always an independent one in the interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders and as a representative of the District of Burin.

I expect that I should have felt elated when the Honourable Minister attacked me, by saying, that I made a first class political speech, but I did not take it in that light, I take it as an insult and I don't take insults from any member of this House. I was insulted by the Prime Minister or at least, that is how I take it. I don't stand for people on the other side of the House telling me that I don't know what I am talking about, whether it is the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, or any other member.

I don't believe the Minister of Agriculture and Mines was sincere himself when he knows that this Bill was against the best interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders. He stated here on Friday afternoon, that the Bill was for honest Newfoundlanders who would give an honest day's work for an honest day's pay and he referred to the working men of St. John's. I have nothing to do with the working men of St. John's except as a Newfoundlander. The men in the gallery and under the gallery do not interest me, but they are as much citizens of Newfoundland as I am and ought to get a square deal.

I don't see much in the Bill which shows that Newfoundlanders will receive an honest day's pay. No doubt, they will have to give an honest day's work alright.

The Minister of Agriculture is interested in the . . . .

MR. CAHILL—Is the Honourable Member making a political speech now, may I ask.

MR. LAKE—I am not addressing my remarks to the Member for Harbour Main, I am replying to the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and I think, Mr. Chairman, that I can have that privilege without being interrupted.

THE CHAIRMAN—You have every privilege as long as you don't repeat yourself too much.

MR. LAKE—The Honourable Member, Mr. Walsh, Minister of Agriculture and Mines said that he did not hear much from me when I was a Director of the Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Company. Perhaps I did not get much of a chance. I did my duty to the best of my ability and brought into the House reports from time to time and made out these reports and gave them to the Government, but I am sorry to say that though I asked for a report on the work at Corner Brook, on the first day of this session, that same has not been forthcoming.

I was told that I was bought by the Humber job, but I think I proved that I was not bought by it. I would not say anybody else was bought with that job, but I know it was taken from me very quickly and I can think what I like. I enquired into the labor situation at Corner Brook when I was on the Directorate of the N. P. and P. Company and submitted detailed statements from time to time, but we have not yet seen any report from anybody since I came off the Directorate. A month ago I asked for the present Government Director's report, but it is not forthcoming. It has been insinuated in this House that I was at Corner Brook during the construction period, but such is not the case as construction was completed when I went on the Directorate; but I do know that there were laboring men from the United States and Canada who worked side by side with our Newfoundlanders and got twice as much wages, and it is high time to have legislation passed governing foreign labor so that our people will get a square deal at the Buchan Mine. If there were mistakes in the Humber Bill it is the duty of the Government to see that they do not occur again. There should be a clause in the present Bill to take care of workmen and also a schedule of goods to be admitted free of duty, as asked for by several members of the Opposition. For the benefit of the House I propose to read a letter showing how free admission of duty has been refused machinery to be used in connection with the dory industry at Grand Bank.

(Reads Letter)

Now it was suggested here that I was afraid to make statements because I was a Director of the N. P. and P. Company, but such is not the case.

I feel that the Minister of Finance and Customs is going to do what he can for the interests of the fisheries. Therefore it is very hard for the Sub-Collector of Customs at Grand Bank or any other place to know exactly what to do as far as the Customs Laws are concerned. It is a very difficult law. I state here now that I was sincere when I stated that it was not clearly outlined in the schedule made up as far as Buchan's Mine is concerned. The people who are coming to me are talking about it. There is nobody that I have heard yet in favour of the Bill that is now before the House, even people who are Monroe admirers so to speak, have stated to me that Buchan's Mine agreement is outrageous. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines was trying to tell this House on Friday that because I was a Director of the Newfoundland Power and Paper Company, for which I received a certain amount of money that I was afraid to get up here and make a certain statement. I want to tell the minister that I have no fear of making these statements either in this Housee or outside, whether as a member of the Government or not. I am surprised to see that there are not more members of the Government side to-day that have not more independence in them. The man who represents the labouring classes in this country instead of being over there watching me now should be up on his feet and fighting for the rights of the people of Newfoundland. That is not talking politics. That is sound common sense logic.

The Hon. Minister of Agriculture and Mines stated here the other day that I supported the St. George's Coal Fields. I want to state here now that I would support them again as spending more money if I thought that it was in the best interests of the country and the Newfoundlanders in this country. St. George's Coal fields I know nothing about, I have heard nothing about them for the past year. I am not an interested party. But if coal can be produced in this country, then I say that it is up to this country, and the Government of the day to assist the St. George's coal fields in every shape and form. And if I were the representative of St. George's and it was in my power to assist the St. George's coal fields, and if there was a bill brought before this House, I would support that bill and assist that coal field, even though I was criticised for it. I am not partial, at least I hope I am not. I want to be fair. But the people of my district would not want me here if I did not speak my mind. Thank God that is one thing that was given me "Freedom of Speech." And I intend to use that fredom of speech as long as I live. I may not be admired for it but that does not affect me.

But to compare Buchan's Mine with St. George's coal fields. Why there is no comparison whatever. Buchan's Mine that is worth $180,000,000, so they say. It would be interesting to know if the Minister of Agriculture and Mines has a report from the Government Geologist, and what he says about it. Also what he would say about St. George's coal fields. I presume that he has some correspondence on the matter. But it would be very interesting to this House and to myself to know if he has any facts about Buchan's Mine. I have heard it said that another corporation is trying to get some more land in the vicinity of Red Indian Lake. If this be true I think that this House and this country should know it. And if there are other syndicates trying for that property then it shows that there must be some development going on up there of considerable magnitude. I understand that Buchan's Mine people, or the A. N. D. Co. who I understand are the prime movers of this thing, and perhaps the chief owners in the mine, I understand that they have already large quantities of machinery imported into this country. No doubt they have had the assurance that everything was satisfactory. I don't think for one moment that because we asked this company to present a schedule to this House that they are going to run away altogether. I think that it was an insult to this House for the Manager of the A. N. D. Co. to send such a telegram to his reresentative to be tabled in this House. I don't think that it is quite good enough. I don't think that this House should stand for it. I think that we should demand of the A. N. D. Co. that they produce a schedule. And when they state that they don't know how to produce one, I should not like to say that they don't know what they are talking about. But I have my doubts. I believe and I know this that if somebody were to send me down to-morrow afternoon to provide of something apertaining tc the fisheries, I could easily get it up inside of one hour. I feel sure that the A. N. D. Co. have men in their emloy who get up a schedule inside of twenty four hours, so that this House would know what they are talking about, and they would not have a repetition of what has been going on by the Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Co. And I agree with the Minister of Finance and Customs when he makes a statement that I believe is true that the Government have had no trouble with the A. N. D. Co. since they began operations. That speaks very well for that concern, and it shows to me that the Minister of Finance has faith in that concern. I am very pleased to hear it. I have not had any connection with the Customs to know whether they did or not, but that statement satisfied me a great deal. I want to tell him that I want to be fair as far as this country is concerned, but I do not want to give away any of our birthright. And further than that to give them free admission of articles for a period of twenty years is out of the question entirely. I think that it is an outrage on Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders as I said before. And then there is this expression that bags should be admitted duty free for only a period of ten years. But it seems strange to me that they should want to put in that clause at all. Now I want to be correct about it. I don't want to be like the Tribune.

I do not understand why that clause is put in there, because one would imagine that would be of small moment anyway. I think that they might have left that out. Because I think that there are people in this country who could manufacture bags within a year that would be satisfactory for shipping away minerals. It would look on the face of this that they are not going to smelt the ore in this country, but it is going to be shipped out to be manufactured somewhere else. I would take that clause to mean that they are going to import the bags free for ten years and by that time perhaps they will be in a position to smelt the ore in this country. Anyway I still insist that we should have a schedule and not give them free importation for any longer than five years.

But I would like to know just what they are doing at the labouring end of it and what protection they are giving the labouring man in this country. I see my hon. friend the member for St. John's West, and I would like to know, though we don't exactly class him as a labouring man, does he think that there should be a clause in that agreement which would provide for the maintenance of a schedule of wages for the Newfoundland working man. I don't see why there should not be a clause in that bill to see that what happened at Corner Brook will not happen at Buchan's Mine. And that is that the men who went out there almost perished while doing the construction work. It seems that something should be done whereby the working man would be taken care of especially when the fall and the winter comes on, so that he will be properly housed and fed, and that he shall also get a fair amount of wages for his day's work.

The people of this country demand that all their representatives see that the working man gets a square deal along these lines. I trust that the district that I have the honour to represent will not have occasion to send any men to Buchan's Mine. I have tried very hard to get a couple of men to work there, but I have not succeeded. But the people that I have the honour to represent are most of them fishermen, and I trust that they will make a fair amount of wages at the fisheries so that they will not want to go to Buchan's Mine. But the fishery may be a bad 'e this year, as Mr. Cahill says it 's last year. We know that to our orrow. I trust that the Government of the day will see to it that something will be done fo the labouring man in the way of wages and provisions and housing at Buchan's Mine. But so far in this bill now before the House I see nothing absolutely for the working man or for Newfoundland except for the capitalists that are coming in here to make money out of this.

It will be very interesting to know just what the House is going to do n that question. The Government of the day I understand have made a contract with the people at Buchan's Mine. And we must stand up here now and discuss those things and be dictated to by that corporation as to what we shall or shall not do. I say that we shall not be dictated to by them. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines told us the other day that we did not own Buchan's Mine. I quite agree with him that we do not own it. But I suppose that we have a say as to what we shall do with the goods that will be imported for Buchan's Mine. If we have not then I do not know the Minister of Finance and Customs, but I know him well enough to know that he knows what he is talking about, and he will see to it that Newfoundland will have a say as far as importation is concerned, even if we do not own that mine. So that argument is wasted entirely by the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, because whilst we may not own that mine we have a say as to how they shall conduct that mine in this country in the way of imported goods.

Now I don't pretend to know anything about mining but the Minister of Agriculture and Mines told us the other day that he was a miner and therefore he does know something about it. I trust therefore that the honourable member will see to it that the miners are protected. And if he does not I trust that his honourable colleague the member for Placentia and St. Mary's will try and do what he can to see that the labouring man of this country is protected, but as I understand that the Hon. Mr. Sullivan is also the agent for the A.N.D. Company.

MR. SULLIVAN—You are wrong there. The honourable gentleman does not seem to know the difference between an agent and a representative. I said the other day that I was not a representative of the company but I had the agency for the selling of their paper.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Sullivan says that he is not an agent or a representative of the company. Then I would like to know the difference between a representative and an agency. You have no interest in the A.N.D. Company then

MR. SULLIVAN—No more than you have.

MR. LAKE—I have none whatever. But if I had the agency from them I would take it that I was paid by them for doing a certain class of work for them. If I was selling paper for the A. N. D. Company I would be their agent. But I am not and you are. And you are a member of the Executive Council that helped to make a bill to suit the A. N. D. Company. Perhaps if you were in Great Britain you would not be allowed to sit on the Executive Council and draft a bill for a concern that you are receiving a consideration from. But we do not happen to be in Britain. But it is questionable to me whether you have not got an interest in the A. N. D. Company. You sell paper for them, for which you get a commission. Therefore you are their agent, and I take it that you are also the representative of the A.N.D. Company. The direct representative as far as the selling of their paper goes, and therefore you must be friendly towards them, or you might lose your job.

However I won't say anything more to Mr. Sullivan and his agency. I don't want to offend the honourable member seeing that his district is so close to mine.

Now I didn't say anything to the Minister of Posts and Telegraphs. The next thing will be that I will be getting embroiled with him.

HON. MINISTER OF POSTS AND TELEGRAPHS—Mr. Chairman: It is about time that this House realizes that we are approaching Midsummer Day. And some members in this House have just stated that they are prepared to take off their coats and stay here until Christmas. I think that it is about time that this House put a stop to this nonsense. If this Bill means labour for our people, and that is what I am concerned about, and this is what I am approached about every day by men in my own district,then it is about time for me and every other man in this House to take this Bill seriously. We are sent here not for the purpose of delaying this House on important matters such as this Bill is to the working men of this country. The present representative of the District of Burin stated here on Friday last when he read out his gospel of the day that this Bill would not pass. I say that this Bill must, and shall pass. This is direct obstruction. You are merely asked to pass a Bill to give this company the privilege of importing into this country duty free their machinery, and here you are quibbling. You are determined to make opposition anyhow. Although at the same time , I realize that the whloe opposition must not be included. It is only a few politicians that are trying to make capital against the Government, who are trying to damn the Government. Well if these are the tactics that you are going to carry out this session, and if you are prepared to carry on as it seems to me you are, then we are prepared to fight you, man to man, and remain here as long as you are. But if you will take my advice you will treat this matter and all other matters that may come before this House seriously, and stop making political speeches. And you, Mr. Hickman, I ask you to try and control your men, and make them do their duty. You will make them work early and late, and we will then be able to get through the work here quickly. But at any rate we should not delay this House with such a good measure as this.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman: I think that the Honourable Minister of Posts and Telegraphs made the statement that I gave a political speech here. Now I think that it is about time that this House got down to business. I agree with the Honourable Minister, that we ought to try to be serious instead of turning this House into a comic opera. I try to be serious myself and I meant to be serious in dealing with this Bill. But there are many serious aspects of this Bill that need to be thrashed out, and no doubt the Honourable Minister has had an opportunity of thrashing out this bill with the Executive Council. Now this is our opportunity to thrash it out from our point of view. While I do not want to see anything for the benefit of this country going out of the Colony at the same time I do want to see Newfoundland get a square deal. I don't think that according to this Bill that Newfoundland is getting a square deal. And while I have every respect for the Father of the House, yet I think he will see that this bill needs some amendment. It needs to be overhauled and some new clauses put in. I am not a philanthropist, I have more to do. And if my home-town needs me I do not intend to stay here until December 31st. But if I thought that I could do this country some good and Newfoundland some good then I think that it is my duty to stay here and fight that Bill and get the best ou of it. I think that the people who sent me here demand that I should do my best in the interest of this country. And if I do not do that I am betraying the trust that Burin District has reposed in me. I have been called a traitor in this House before, and if I left the Monroe party it was because I thought that it was the right thing for me to do, and I have not regretted it. You may take that down. I say that we need a clause in that contract that will provide for the labouring man of this country, of whom you say that you have many in the District of Harbour Main. I trust that the people of Harbour Main will not have to come to the Government for supplies next winter. If it is in my power, I will see that they get labour.

HON. MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MINES—Mr. Chairman, before the committee rises there are a few words that I would like to say with reference to a remark made by the member for Burin in his speech this afternoon. He spent most of the afternoon throwing bouquets across the House to the Finance Minister. That is his own business, not mine; but there is one remark that he made that I want cleared up right here and now. He insinuated that I was interested in the bill for private reasons and these are the words he used, "I have no axe to grind perhaps he has." I want the hon. member to explain just what he means by that statement. Does he mean that I hope to enrich myself by getting this bill through. I have been fifteen years a member of this House and have never been a party to any disreputable transactions or mixed up in any graft and if the member can point a finger at one dollar of graft that I have received during these fifteen years then I will take my hat and bid the Speaker and Chairman good-bye and leave this House for ever. Now I will take my seat and have the hon. member explain what he means.

MR. LAKE—Mr. Chairman, I suppose I can make remarks in this House without having to explain everything I say. I did not say that the Minister of Agriculture and Mines was personally interested in this bill, MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MINES—What did you say then?

MR. LAKE—I don't want to be interrupted by you.

MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MINES—When was I interrupting you?

MR. LAKE—You are interrupting me now this minute.

MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MIINES—You said that the hon. minister had an axe to grind. You meant that I was being paid to put this bill through.

MR. LAKE—I did not mean that.

MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MINES—You prove your charge or take back what you said.

MR. LAKE—I have nothing to take back.

MINISTER AGRICULTURE AND MINES—You can't prove your charge because it can't be done. Your explanations are no good.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reeported that they had considered the Resolutions to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, before the House moves to adjournment I would ask the Prime Minister for an answer to question number 293 on the Order Paper.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I was going to make a remark on the motion to adjourn the House that while we in no way are compelled unless the question was decided by the House, to bring down the minute book and we would be justified should we refuse to bring it down, yet our action might be misconstrued by the members on the other side of the House, who would think that we had something to hide and so to dispel that idea we have decided to bring down the minute book but only on the condition that it is kept within this House. We must have that clearly understood for we have not got a copy of it at the Railway office and that every day of the session that it is in this House for the information of the members it must be returned to the Clerk of the House. On those conditions the book will be brought down to-morrow.

MR. SCAMMELL—I think it will be quite safe for the Prime Minister to bring the book down as I have absolutely no intention of taking it around town for everybody to read and I think I can speak for those who will use it.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—That is what happened last year. It was taken out of the House.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I feel that I owe it to myself and to the House to make a few remarks with regard to this minute book. I remember that I was the unfortunate who asked last year to have this book tabled and I want to say that it never left the House and I want the Prime Minister to take back what he said. It never left the House and the Prime Minister should take back the suggestion that it was taken out of the House.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—I never mentioned your name.

MR. CASHIN—I was the one referred to.

HON. PRIME MINISTER—You are not the only member in this House.

MR .CASHIN—Mr. Speaker, I want the Prime Minitser to take back his statement that the minute book left the House last year.

HON. THE SPEAKER—The Hon. Prime Minister has stated that he did not say that you took it out of the House.

MR. LINEGAR—Mr. Chairman, I would like to say something with reference to the argument that took place on Friday afternoon. I find that for some reason the Minister of Agriculture and Mines has been blamed for making some statements here in reply to the member for Trinity in connection with men for the re-railing work.

It was brought to my notice that he had spoken against the interests of the working men of this town. I did not catch the remarks passed by him and I want to make myself clear and give the Minister of Agriculture and Mines a chance to defend himself.

The terms he used with reference to the men who were here looking for work were that they were "drunkards and Water Street bums" or something to that effect. I cannot think that the Minister of Agriculture made such a statement. He is not that kind of a man. I would like the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to explain.

HON. MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE & MINES—Mr. Speaker, don't you think things have come to a pretty pass when members have to account for their expressions to anyone who may be hanging around the galleries of this House and have to cater to half a dozen men who may not be pleased with your words. In all sincerity and in all honesty then it is about time to pack up and lock up the doors of this House and send the key to the Old Country.

The honourable member for St. John's West gets up to give me a chance to defend myself. I never uttered a word in my life that I had to apologise for. In my fifteen years in the House I filled a considerable space in Hansard but have never made one word of apology—nor will I apologise now. Nor do I remember the exact words that I used. I might have offended somebody. I might have said that I was not interested in the bums of Water Street. I might have said that, and if I did I repeat it for the benefit of anyone who considers himself of that class. We want to give employment to men who will give a hundred cents to the dollar return for what wages they receive, and anything that I may have said was in the interest of the public generally. I have nothing to take back. And I would suggest to the honest men here that it is about time to cut out this playing politics and get down to work and do something worth while. I have nothing to take back.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries about a question that has been outstanding since the first of June regarding the accounts that were supposed to be kept by persons who went to the Labrador last year.

MINISTER OF MARINE & FISHERIES—Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will get that question when I get it and not before. I have told the hon. member this on the floors of this House and I have told him this in my own home, and now I tell him for the last time that he will get it when I get it.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Speaker, certaintly the Hon. Minister is exercised unnecessarily in the statement that he made. I was just reminding the Minister. I know that he is very busy and cannot attend to these small matters. But I am interested in that reply, and I will be glad to get it when the Minister receives it.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Tuesday, June 21st, at three of the clock in the atfernoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, June 21st, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Petitions were presented by:

Mr. Cashin, from Ferryland, re keeping of dogs.

Mr. Grimes, from Noble's Cove, re roads.

Mr. Cashin gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Russell gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Halfyard gave Notice of Question.

Mr. Scammell gave notice of Question.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary the Bill entitled "An Act respecting the Incorporation of the Newfoundland Tourist and Publicity Commission and for obtaining Statistics of Tourist Traffic and for other purposes" was read a third time and was ordered to be sent to the Legislative Council with a message asking the concurrence of that body in its provisions.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman: I think when we adjourned last the Leader of the Opposition was going to bring in some suggested amendments to meet the views of the Opposition.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Mr. Chairman: I have here some amendments which have been drawn up at the request of the Prime Minister, the introducer of the Bill, who suggested that we frame something that would meet the requirements of the House. We have drawn up the amendment a copy of which I will pass to the Prime Minister. I might say that the Members of the Opposition have put in a great deal of time and have given a great deal of attention to these amendments, with a view to having something that we thought would be satisfactory to the Government as well as to the Opposition, if Members of the House of Assembly have the interests of their country at heart. This Amendment goes a little further than the Bill. It covers what is one of the main things in the Bill which is the prevention of any further leases from being granted on the Labrador and also the prevention of any further extensions and to cover the point raised by the Prime Minister, the introducer of the Bill, we have included here that those people who have licenses on the Labrador which have not been cancelled, be remunerated for the money which they have spent on lands by the return of this money with six per cent. interest. This will involve a little outlay on the part of the Government but it will be money well spent because we can redeem Labrador as Newfoundland's property and have it for the people of the country and have something which we can dispose of, and something which will perhaps in the near future, after a proper survey of the Labrador areas has been made, that will bring returns that will be beneficial to Newfoundland and help to meet our public debt and reduce taxation which is the main trouble with the Government at the present time. I might say we have drafted and redrafted the amendment until we have finally brought it to its present form to bring it in for the consideration of the House.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman: Naturally we would require some time to go into these proposed amendments before definitely pronouncing on them, but just taking the expressions of the Leader of the Opposition in his remarks just now, it would appear that they propose, that we should hand back the money, over certain years paid by certain parties for leasehold interests on the Labrador. What, however, if the people who have these leasehold interests refuse to accept the money. It would be very easy if the people would hand back their leases just for our handing back the money. I think if the Leader of the Opposition held a lease, now, after the case has been won and the property belongs to Newfoundland, after having run the risk of having it void and valueless through the decision of the Privy Council going in favour of Canada, he would not consider taking his money back. I think, I am perfectly certain, that there is not a man on either side of the House who would consider taking his money back under these circumstances. It necessarily follows that if they didn't accept the money, we can't take the property back. It has been explained by the Minister of Justice already in this House that the only thing the Government could do would be to take an action in Court to compel these men to give up their leases because they have not complied with one clause of the agreement to erect a mill. I have claimed before in Committee, if we have for years as the Government of the day, or as previous Governments, accepted the rentals of these people holding leases on the Labrador, and have never said a word to them about the erection of a mill even though it was in the agreement, nd should now call upon them by aking action in Court to compel them to give up their titles because they didn't erect a mill, rather than be a party to it, I would resign my seat in this House, because it wouldn't be a fair thing to do to anybody, and I think the Leader of the Opposition will agree with me, if he takes the matter into consideration. In my opinion, it would be no less than highway robbery, to actually go and accept for years and years a pile of money and then say to the men who paid it "We are going to cancel all rights on Labrador," valuable rights that they may be, and take an action to compel the forfeiture of leases, and merely pay back the money paid in. It would be an illegal action, an immoral action, from the commercial standpoint and every other and I wouldn't give consideration to any uch thing, and I would rather be out of the House than be a party to any vote to take any such action.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—With all due respect to the opinion of the Minister of Justice, I suppose he is one of the legal minds and there are many others with different opinions. I have had the legal opinion expressed that it is illegal for the Government to extend these; and not one of the people on the Labrador have carried out the conditions in their licenses, and if they want really to gamble on paying each year a rental on the property that is their own gamble and not the Government's affair. The Government have accepted the rentals and the Prime Minister having made a statement that it would be unfair and immoral to cancel the licenses after taking the money, we considered that we would include in this amendment a clause whereby the money paid as rentals be returned. Under these circumstances I don't see how the Prime Minister can say that the thing is illegal or immoral. He knows as well as I do, and as well as every other member of the House, that all these licenses were taken out as a gamble. Not one intended to erect a mill or to manufacture. It was all a gamble on the prospect of their selling their rights to people outside.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER — No gamble; as far as I can see a sure loss, according to your interpretation.

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—They took a chance. From the opinion we have we find that all these licenses are illegally held and we have now a chance to get back the territory and turn it into money or make it of some value to the country, and it is up to the Government to take advantage of it. Instead of that you have been extending leases. You have even gone so far as to give people extensions of time to erect mills which they never intend to erect even while this Bill was under discussion, and it looks very much to one looking on as if these people were looking for an extension or else they certainly would have waited until the Bill now before the House had been disposed of. I cannot agree with the Prime Minister that the conserving of Newfoundland's rights at the present time would be either illegal or immoral; perfectly legal and perfectly moral. If we have taken money we should not have taken it, and the most they can expect is that we can return the money with interest at the rate of six per cent. However the amendment is a long one and I will defer any further remarks until the introducer of the Bill has read it.

HON THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that the amendment be read. I think it is desirable. I don't think the Members of the House can be competent to give an opinion until we hear it read.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Mr. Chairman, Following upon the suggestion of the Colonial Secretary, of course, it is only when we hear the amendment read that we can fully discuss it. The House will appreciate the fact that this requires consideration. A couple of outstanding points of course, can be considered at the outset. It is not for me to dictate to the Honourable Leader of the House, who has charge of the Bill, just what attitude should be taken towards it and I merely express my opinion. The first position, of course, is that I think that the object behind any amendment should be of course with the idea of improving a measure. In this connection of course I don't think I can do more than say in any event an amendment of this kind which involves a charge upon the colony cannot emanate from the Opposition. That is an incident to the point I want to make at the outset. What the House will have to seriously consider is just exactly whether, before any thought is given at all to this matter we fully appreciate the significance of what this probably means. I certainly say that in the history of deliberate legislative assemblies you probably wouldn't find any precedent for an act like that. I don't say that critically, but I think that the idea is novel, and a legislative assembly taking a course that would repudiate the good faith of administrations down the years is a matter that has got to be very seriously considered. I fully appreciate the fact, that it may be said that the situation here is novel; that the Labrador decision doesn't find much precedent in the sense of the magnitude of the territory acquired by peaceful conquest; and that in that respect it ought to be treated as war booty. In times of war, in the sense of what we call territory, the invader of course makes his own law, but I don't think we ought regard ourselves in that kind of spirit. Ought not we rather consider that any step that may destroy all conception of good faith in the past in this country should be seriously considered. I repeat deliberately what I told the Opposition the other day, that there is no Court today that would agree to endorsing any attitude by a Government that would come along and having accepted rentals down the years ask the enforcement of a clause that was physically impossible of performance. I mentioned here the other day that in 1902 the Canadian Government stopped the compliance with the erection of a mill in the case of Dickie. I mentioned that by despatches between the Governor-General of Canada and the Governor of Newfoundland, I think about fifteen years ago, it was agreed that pending the settlement of the Labrador Boundary no action of any nature would be taken with regard to rights on the Labrador, and the whole matter was left, like Mahommed's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth, and so far as the different Government's were concerned they merely collected rentals. Beyond collecting rentals, notice was given to those who hadn't paid and these were cancelled by this administration. But to come in and take action against people to seek the imposition of a penalty for not erecting a mill under these circumstances would I say have been a most dishonest procedure, and in that sense, I suggest here now, that to come to the stage of coming in and taking the position that in spite of the fact that they were not able to erect a mill, in spite of the fact that they would not be allowed to erect it, we now decide here as a House of Assembly to pass a law to wipe out any rights they may have in connection with this matter, is a very, very, drastic step. The legal consequences are such that one dreads off-hand to give an opinion. When considering the suggested amendment I want you to remember that there are times when even a legislature can put a colony in very serious straits, financially. We oughtn't forget that while it is perfectly true that we can pass a law as a self-governing colony to do anything, still there remains redress even against the passing of such a law and for that reason I do quite solemnly ask Members on both sides of the House to consider quite seriously the extent to which these amendments appear to go. I have not given them much thought, but as I heard them read and glanced through them I am very much inclined to fear that they are going to land us into a situation in which the outcome is not alone not easy to see but in which the outcome may be very far reaching so far as the colony itself is concerned.

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — Mr. Chairman. I have not taken any great part in the discussion of the Bill before the House. The object of the Bill, of course, is primarily for the protection of the Labrador. As a matter of fact, the Executive Government have taken powers from themselves by this Bill. Hitherto the Executive Government had the right to grant timber licenses in any part of Newfoundland or its dependencies. The settlement of the Labrador boundary question has placed tremendous territory, which is considered of very far reaching value, under the control of the Government of this country, so that that territory will be conserved to the very greatest degree possible for the interests of the people of Newfoundland. The Government, as a matter of policy, have introduced a Bill that will make it almost beyond possibility and beyond peradventure that there be any dickering or wrongdoing on the part of any Government at the present time or in the future in this connection.

This House will be the only Court of Appeal to decide what grants of timber lands will be given on the Labrador. I have yet to hear from hon. members whether they agree with that statement. In my opinion it is very far-reaching and I don't suppose there is any precedent in the History of Newfoundland for the Government of its own volition to take out of the hands of the Executive the authority they possess and the rights they hold to grant timber rights on the Labrador. Now, of course, this point is to be debated; we have not heard any encomiums heaped on the Government for taking that position —some have commended it, but advantage has been taken of the fact that there is a Clause inserted purporting to establish the rights of these who have faith with the Government and with previous Governments. We have a big stake in the Labrador, and I have always taken a firm position in this and other Governments regarding the people who had rentals and had carried out certain obligations, particularly with regard to the payment of rentals. Not one quarter of the land on the Labrador to-day is recognised as that of private persons, that was previously granted to parties on the Labrador. About eleven or twelev thousand suare miles is the total extent of recognized timber grants on the Labrador.

HON. LEADER OF OPPOSITION— Isn't that the best timber land on the Labrador?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY — I dont 'know and don't suppose any one else does, or can, when it has never been surveyed. I do know this, that timber grants held by persons previous to these held by the people who have paid their rentals, and which fell in arrears, and honorable members have the information as to the amount of arrears, showing there are double the amount of arrears over rentals paid), have been cancelled, and as I said there was not one-third of the land granted on the Labrador held to-day. Why? Because they defaulted and fell down on their agreement, and their licenses were cancelled, and that only two years ago. If the present Government had not taken the interests of the people to heart and done what they did in 1925, we would to-day have over thirty thousand square miles held on Labrador. And if we were to to accept the suggestion put forward this Session, the people who had paid part but didn't continue and have now fallen down on their bargain, may perhaps come and sue the Government to get the lands they haven't paid for. I think this is a serious point, and I think it should be emphasised that the Government intends to keep faith with those who have complied. I have no personal axe to grind, and I have never had any interest in a mile of property on the Labrador; I am not concerned personally except as regards my duty to my country. And I don't suppose any members on this side have any personal interests in these rentals or having the titles confirmed. I stated the other day that one of the largest holders came to me in my capacity as Colonial Secretary when we threatened to cancel the licenses in 1924-25, and I told him then and repeat now, "We can't admit any doubt on our title; we can't accept the explanation that you would pay the rental if there was a clear title. We maintain that there is a clear title and any admission would weaken our case."

HON. LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION—Then who prevented the people from erecting mills?

HON. COLONIAL SECRETARY—I shall come to that presently. I am talking about the people who paid their rentals for years, and the Government decided there would be one policy and one only—that the people who did not pay their rentals would lose their licenses; that was straightforward, conscientious and honest, and according to the Act. Well, these people fell down, and didn't pay their rentals and after two or three notices, extending over a period of several months the licenses were cancelled, and I think whoever may take an action to recover them will have a hard row to hoe.

Regarding the erection of mills. It has been stated here, by the Attorney-General I think, that there is a precedent where a man did erect a mill on the Labrador and the Government of Quebec interfered and said "We cannot give you any right and hence haven't given any." We gave a man the right to cut, and the Quebec Government prevented him; from their standpoint you can't blame them, because once they admitted that Newfoundland had a right to give power to cut wood and erect a mill, and allow a man to stay there they would weaken their case. It became an issue between Newfoundland and Quebec, and the decision is that we had the right to grant a permit to erect a mill and if they removed the mill it was their look-out. It came to where some understanding was nevessary, and the Governor-General of Canada, in the time of our Sir Walter Davidson sent a despatch requesting the Government of Newfoundland to make no further concessions on the Labrador while it was in dispute, and although there is nothing on the records it has been a matter of policy ever since not to do anything which may cause friction. In the meantime the people being considered kept their titles clear by paying the rentals right up to the settlement of the Labrador dispute—there was no question of erecting a mill ever raised by any Government. Now the matter is settled, and since under their lease there is an obligation to erect a mill in two years, naturally they want an extension of that period to erect these mills, and the Government has decided to give it.

Mr. Chairman, I have not had the opportunity to go through these amendments thoroughly, but I have grasped their import, and I have to say that it is a most dishonest suggestion, to say that we go on year after year, taking their money, and leaving them in an atmosphere of security, and, when we get the opportunity, take them by the back of the neck and kick them out, and say that we don't want them around now, because the property is more valuable to us.

Is that an honest suggestion? As the Prime Minister has said, we can't do it; no Court in the world would endorse it, and what is the use of endorsing what we know to be wrong? It may be good politics, to console the people who have lost that privilege, but on moral grounds I can't refrain from raising my voice against any such action. They paid their money in good faith and kept up their payments, sometimes at great sacrifices, up to the last moment, and bye and bye when the dispute is settled we tell them that we are going to be dishonest and break our contract, that we were only fooling them, and they are to get out. In my opinion it is preposterous.

The Labrador is a matter of very serious consideration, because of the part I feel it is going to play in the future prosperity of Newfoundland, and I would be the first to advocate the retention of every acre of land for the use and benefit of the people. But I am not pirate enough to go and take land that a man has a right to, and I care not what opinions are advanced, morally it is wrong, and most laws are founded on morality! If the Leader of the Opposition and his followers consider this good tactics to use, well, I cannot congratulate them. I am perfectly satisfied that the people of this country don't want its fair name besmirched by any breach of contract such as has been suggested by the amendment brought in.

HON. MR. CRAMM—Mr. Chairman, in connection with this amendment there are just a few observations I wish to make. Apart from concurring with the statements made by the Prime Minister and particularly by the Colonial Secretary regarding the moral aspect of this question, the proposed amendment appears to be quite meaningless if not entirely ridiculous. In section one of this proposed amendment is says.

(Reads)

Now the position we take on this side of the House (and we don't say that our opinion is infallible), the position we take is that the provisions of the Crown Lands Act referred to have been complied with so far as possible. That is out position. Consequently if we are right this section will have no effect whatever on these people who have leases on Labrador —absolutely no effect. That I say is a matter of opinion. I have long held that opinion, and I know that it is shared in by the Attorney-General, who has a much greater experience than I in these matters, and I have met no one outside who has any other opinion. Consequently this section will have no effect whatever.

Take section three of the proposed amendment. Possibly there was an oversight in the drafting, but I submit that under this section, once you passed it and until repealed a person couldn't get a right or title on the Labrador anyhow. We couldn't sell Labrador or any portion of it even by Act of the Legislature. I think the person who drafted this probably omitted the clause that is in the first section of the Bill itself, viz: "Save by Act of the Legislature of this Colony Here it says that it can't be licensed, leased, sold or given anyhow, and makes no provision for an Act of the Colony; consequently the Legislature would have to repeal this section before anything disposition could be made of Labrador or any portion of it.

Apart from these words, which are merely observations, I want to reiterate what has already been said, that I think it would be entirely without precedent in this Colony, or anywhere else as far as I know, in orderly, civilized and commendable Governments, that, holding the opinion we have, viz, that the Crown Lands Act has been complied with so far as possible, and that these licenses cannot be cancelled under existing law, that we should now, after these people have continued paying rentals, take away by the Act the rights which we led them to believe they held. I should hestitate, no matter what side of the House I was on, to think that the Legislature should be a party to any such action. It has been stated by previous speakers that they would not be parties to this, nor would I, to any Legislature which would take away rights existing under the laws of the Colony. They paid up in perfectly good faith, and we can't compensate them by paying back their money. It is stated that this Proposed Amendment would be in the interest of Newfoundland; but I say it would be to the eternal detriment of Newfoundland and a black eye for all time, from which we would never recover. I cannot concur in any such amendment as this.

MR. HICKMAN—Mr. Chairman, before the Committee rises, I wish to take exception to the speech made by the Colonial Secretary, in which he made the statement that this is a dishonest suggestion. He meant this amendment which is now placed before the House by us, at the suggestion of the Prime Minister. I take exception to that remark—no one on this side drafted that measure with dishonest intentions. We are just as honest as the Colonial Secretary, and I did not expect to hear that from him. He is as dishonest as anyone. What right has he to barter away the rights of the country? What right has he as a member of the Executive to say who has or who has not complied with their leases? There is some ulterior motive in this, to safeguard people who have some interests and haven't complied with the terms.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motive this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the second reading of the Bill entitled "An Act respecting Education" was deferred until to-morrow.

On motion of the Hon. Minister of Justice the Committee of the Whole on Resolutions respecting an agreement between the Government of Newfoundland and the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company Limited was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole to consider matters relating to the late Sir Robert Bond's bequest.

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

THE HON. THE PRIME MINISTER —Mr. Chairman, it is sometime now since we were in Committee on this particular subject, and I want to say again that on commenting on this bequest the hon. members of the Opposition have given their views on agricultural and other kindred subjects, but there has been a very noticeable absence of considering the points I raised when I brought the matter up on the first occasion.

The position I take regarding this bequest is that when we got this offer of a Model Farm from the late Sir Robt. Bond, with the stipulation that it be kept as a Model Farm forever, we would be obligated if we accepted it, and in my own humble opinion I should feel so if it were offered to me privately in that way, to provide for it long after I was dead—for always, a fund sufficient to take care of the Model Farm. I consider, and other members of the House may have different opinions, that if we take this and undertake to keep it forever, that we have to get a vote of the Legislature for at least $200,000, to be perfectly sure that it be kept as a Model Farm forever. We have very often in this House talked about not legislating for anything over twenty years. We never know what may happen in twenty years, and we certainly don't know what may happen in one hundred—in that time it may not be necessary to have a Model Farm, for we may be getting manna from the sky. We don't know what may happen, and consequently I don't see how we could undertake to accept this offer under any such conditions. I haven't heard any expression of opinion from hon. members opposite as to whether we should take this Model Farm and vote an annual subsidy, and say that we are not responsible for future governments that come into power. I know there are members on this side who think that is so. Personally I do not, and I would like to have some expression of opinion from the gentlemen of the other side on that very point.

MR. GRIMES—I have stated my attitude in connection with this request before. I only wish to ask now is it fair to the members of this House, seeing that we have had this debate for several days during three weeks, is it fair that this House should not be given the information which is its due, with regard to the revenue that could be derived from the operation of this farm. Seeing that we have a Department of Agriculture and Mines, I think it is only fair to this House that this information should be given. He have heard much about the expenses that must be incurred in connection with the running of this farm and nothing about the revenue. I don't think that this is a fair way of treating propositions of this kind. The request has been made by the greatest statesman that Newfoundland has ever produced. It was given to the people of Newfoundland, if we care to accept it through this legislature, and we do not respect the memory of the late Hon. Sir Robert Bond enough to be able to go into this thing seriously, and give both sides of the question. What was emphasized in the early days of the discussion was the cost of the management. Could the country afford to run a model farm. Well we have not been given the figures as to what it would cost to run it, and I think that this House should insist that this information be given before we dispose of the matter.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to agree with the Prime Minister when he says that if we accept this bequest then we have to provide for it in perpetuity. And we cannot accept any bequest unless we are prepared to respect the obligations that go with it. But while that may be so, it does not necessarily follow that because this country has to provide certain sums of money in perpetuity to meet the expenses of the model farm, that therefore an annual loss will be entailed. I agree with Mr. Grimes when he says that we are not in possession of any facts with reference to the possible revenue to be received from that farm. The only thing that has been given us is a few bald figures, not by any means detailed, as to the annual expense of conducting th s farm. No effort has been made to detail this expense. There has been no effort to define to this House just what a model farm is. To be quite frank about the matter I don't know. The difference between a model farm, an experimental farm, and a dairy farm are not particularly familiar to one who has not had very much to do with agriculture. I conceive it to be the duty of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines to explain just what a model farm is, and in what obligations this country will be involved in accepting a bequest which requires it to conduct a model farm in perpetuity. I did suggest about a month ago that the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture should call a meeting of the farmers in the neighbourhood of St. John's, men who I presume should know more about farming matters than the average member of this House, and ascertain what the views of these gentlemen were on this subject, as to whether they think that it would benefit interests generally in this country, or whether any good would accrue to agriculture by the operation of this model farm. If they agree that it would benefit the interests of agriculture to any appreciable extent than I do say that I am prepared to vote for a measure that would place in trust a fund of $200,000 the interest on which will defray the expenses of that farm. I do not pretend to be an enthusiast upon possibilities of agriculture in this country. I am rather inclined to believe that we are not so well endowed by nature in that respect as Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island for instance. But that certain farm products can be grown in this country is beyond a doubt. And I am told that there are sections where the land is extremely fertile. Possibly the member for St. George's will corroberate that. I have always understood that considerable quantities of arable and fertile land are to be found in that District. If that be so and we can by expending $10,000 a year so encourage farming as to enable us to produce in competition with other countries those articles, for which we have to send a large sum of money out of the colony annually, then it strikes me that it would be killing the goose that lays the golden egg, if we refuse to accept a gift which under the circumstances would materially benefit the agricultural interests of the colony. I have forgotten the figures but I think that somewhere in the neighbourhood of two or three million dollars annually go out of this colony for agricultural products. It is upon these points that we need information, and that is why I suggested that the Minister of Agriculture and Mines should call a meeting of the neighbouring farmers. I regret very much that these resolutions come before this House this afternoon in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture, whose duty I think it is to be here when we are discussing them. Surely if anybody should be here it would be that particular official of the Government whose duty it is to attend to agricultural matters and to see that those matters have proper and due consideration and that the necessary information is given to members of this House, who like myself know little about agriculture. I do not want our Colony to undertake anything that will not be remunerative. There has been too much of that in the past, and that is what places us where we are to-day. But before refusing this bequest which after all is a valuable one: (I suppose that it is worth $20,000 as it stands)—from a man who was actuated by the most honourable motives, and had at least some experience in farming, we should have all possible light thrown on the subject. I now suggest that this committee rise and before we proceed further, the Minister of Agriculture make some effort to secure the information for which we asked three or four weeks ago in order that the members of this House may be in a better position to judge of the advisability or otherwise of accepting this gift.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question asked by Mr. Scammell I may say that the Rev. Dr. Bond is carrying on the farm on his own account. He wrote to me a month ago saying that the farming season is about to begin, and he wanted to know if the Government were going to accept it or not. I told him that it would not be settled until the House had an opportunity of expressing their views on the matter. We felt that it was left to the people of Newfoundland, and while the Government had to make the decision regarding it, that it was at the same time fitting that the members of the House generally should have an opportunity of expressing themselves upon it.

In reply to a question asked by Mr. Grimes, the hon. member for Twillingate as to the expenses of running the farm, that entirely depends upon how big the farm is that you are going to run. Dr. Bond considers that this farm could not be run correctly as model farm, unless we imported an expert from Canada. He would not listen to the suggestion that we had in this country farmers who could take charge of it and run it successfully as a model farm. He claimed that from Canada or somewhere else we must bring in somebody to take charge of it.

Now we may say "What has the Executor got to do with it." But the will seems to be so ambiguous that we have in deference to the testator to consider the opinion of the executor. I have a very great regard for him, and told him that we would not desire he should go back to Halifax and say that this farm was not being run as a model farm should be, that the desire of the testator was not being complied with. We have all talked a great deal about the necessity of accepting this gift because Sir Robt. Bond was a great statesman. But could we do any more harm to his memory than by accepting this gift and not carrying out the wishes of the statesman in connection with the gift that he left us. Personally I think that it would be a great deal better to refuse it. I feel that his relatives would feel exactly the same way about it.

Whilst I am not prepared to turn down the gift at the same time I want to be perfectly satisfied that this country is doing the right thing in accepting, before we make up our minds so to do. The Government will decide the matter. The Government wants to get the opinion of the country generally, and consequently an opinion from the constituencies. The Minister of Agriculture called together the farmers of St. John's. He got various opinions from these men. The Minutes of that meeting showed me that one man spoke against accepting the gift and he was I think that gentleman that questioned the motive for acceptance.

The Minister of Agriculture took a great deal of trouble in telegraphing to the large number of constituencies, and trying to get them together in the various sections to consider this proposition as well as they could with the little detailed information before them. It is rather absured to see the variety of views from those particular districts. One man said "Don't have anything to do with it, what we want is roads."

I would think a great deal more of the model farm if it was in St. George's than in Whitbourne. It does not seem to me that Whitborune is the place for people to go out and see how a model farm is conducted. The large proportion of the farmers are on the West Coast. The trouble about farming to-day is the getting of markets for the produce of the farm. It is not the finding of new methods of farming. I think that if this country has got $10,000, it would be better to spend it on roads or the reduction of freight rates for farm products, and to try, as the Minister of Agriculture has been doing for the past two or three years to get people of one part of Newfoundland to buy produce from the other part. In other words to make the Department of Agriculture a sort of central zation for the distribution of farm products. The Minister of Agriculture himself has already told the House how last year he sold eight hundred barrels of potatoes from one section of the island that they could not find a market for. And he may be able to do the same thing this year. If by reducing the rates he has done that and if by reducing them still further, and if by organising the Department for the distribution of farm products from one part of the island to the other, we spend ten thousand dollars, I am perfectly satisfied that it would be very much better than to embark on a scheme that has already been tried on one or two occasions and has cost this country an enormous amount of money. The last model farm cost this country $100,000. I don't see why there is not a fair chance of another farm doing the same thing. Sir Robert Bond says to get a local committee in charge, keep the whole thing clear of politics, and get a man from Canada to run the farm.

I wrote away to the Agricultural College in Toronto and asked the President of that establishment what he thought about it. This gentleman said that if it is to be run as a model farm your Prime Minister is right in going slowly. It is my opinion that the information as to what it would cost to run this farm if brought into this House would convey very little to the members, for a model farm with a lot of implements and raising a lot of different kinds of produce, would cost a great deal more than simply a farm keeping a few cows, and sending milk to St. John's as Sir Robert Bond did. I don't think that the way he was conducting that farm could be called a model farm. I don't know what a model farm is. There are many kinds of farms and where the difference comes in I don't know. But we are told that this has to be kept as a model farm and it seems to be a very difficult thing to decide just what is meant. However if no member wants to say very much more on the subject I am going to move that the Chairman leave the chair, and the Government will be prepared to consider any proposition that may come from any part of this country, before we make up our minds definitely, and I think that we could get the Rev. Dr. Bond to run it for this year, and we will see what it is going to be done next year, in accepting what I don't feel inclined to accept at this moment. I know that if I had ten thousand dollars I would prefer to spend it on a breakwater in Bonavista than on a model farm. If the Chairman leaves the Chair, and it is left to the Government to decide the matter I can assure the members of this House that we will give the matter our weighty consideration before accepting this gift.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Mr. Chairman, I think that it is only right that the hon. members should get an explanation of the absence of the Minister of Agriculture this afternoon. As a matter of fact it was at my request that he stayed home this afternoon. He is suffering from an attack of bronchitis. Yesterday he came down to this House with considerable difficulty. To-day I telephoned him at his house that the Buchan's Mine matter would be on. These resolutions were not expected to be on to-day.

I have discovered from an item in this evening's paper that a model farm is not an experimental farm, but is greater than anything in Canada. All these people who give lectures about model farms have not model farms, and under the terms of this gift this farm is left us to be used as a model farm forever.

MR. POWER—Mr. Speaker, I was responsible for the Minister of Agriculture and Mines sending to all the farmers of the district of St. George's asking them for an expression of opinion on this matter. The farmers at Stephenville, Stephenville Crossing, St. George's, Robinson's, Crabbes, The Highlands and at Codroy Valley were asked for their views, and practically every farming section, in fact all with the exception of Crabbes rejected the offer of a model farm at Whitbourne. It is because of that I have not taken any part in the debate.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

MR. POWER—Mr. Speaker, on the motion to adjourn I would like to acquaint the House that I have just received a most cheerful message from Mr. T. J. Freeman at St. George's Coal Fields:

(Reads Message)

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, I think there is some ground for the matter I am about to refer to. There seems to be a growing practice on the part of Government officials in the outports to engage in business and which is not at all fair to the people engaged in legitimate trade. Now recently I received representations from my district intimating that a certain official of the Government was trading on a Government steamer and trading to the detriment of the legitimate business people. That is one instance, but I understand that this sort of thing is going on all over the country. The Government must be aware of this fact. At all events, the people generally are outspoken against it. I think the Government should cry halt to such practice and not allow civil servants engaged in a remunerative calling to be competing against legitimate business people. It is absolutely unfair and I would like a pronouncement from the Prime Minister on the subject.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for St. Barbe has referred to this matter and no man in the civil service who receives a salary commensurate with the services he performs has any right to indulge in private business to the disadvantage of the legitimate trader. I do not know of any man who is doing it, but I will support any motion to relieve any man from his position for engaging in such a practice. There is a provision in law, I understand, against that sort of thing. Of course, there are men around the Island who act as relieving officers, but they only get about $3 a month and I do not think this objection would apply to them. At the same time I do all I can when appointing a relieving officer in my district to make sure he is not in business for himself because of the great temptation there is in the way. The Finance Committee in looking into that matter of relieving officers throughout the country and trying to re-organize it found that men who did not have stores conducted the affairs of the relief of a district more economically and efficiently than it was conducted by those who had stores. There is a general rule that it is objectionable to have a storekeeper as a relieving office. At the same time I concur entirely in the suggestion that Government officials should be kept out of business and certainly should be kept out of trading, and I would very much like if any member of the Opposition will represent a case to me.

THE HON. MINISTER OF FINANCE—Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for St. Barbe. However, I think you will find it very difficult to control men who knock off work at five o'clock every evening, that is to say, supposing a man is energetic enough and industrious enough to work from five o'clock until late at night. I think it would be very hard to stop a man like that from engaging in other business besides his regular work.

MR. SCAMMELL—Mr. Speaker, I did not have in mind relieving officers who are poorly paid, but a Purser on a Government steamer, who was acting as an agent buying up cod oil. I could mention other concrete instances, but I just state this one offhand.

It was moved and seconded that the House at its rising do adjourn to tomorrow, Wednesday, June 22nd, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

WEDNESDAY, June 22nd, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

Mr. Speaker informed the House that, in accordance with the intimation received, His Excellency the Administrator would receive the Address in Reply presently.

Accordingly Mr. Speaker and the House proceeded to Government House, and being returned to the Assembly Rooms Mr. Speaker informed the House that His Excellency had received the Address of Thanks and had been pleased to reply thereto as follows:—

Government House,
St. John's, Nfld.,
22nd June, 1927.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly:

I thank you for your Address in Reply to the Speech with which your present Session was opened.

(Sgd.) W. H. HORWOOD, Administrator.

A petition was presented by:

Hon. Colonial Secretary, from Spaniard's Bay, re roads.

Mr. Halfyard gave notice of Question,

On motion of the Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursurant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. PRIME MINISTER — Mr. Chairman: When we adjourned this yesterday we had presented to us what was called an amendment to the Bill now before the Committee, but it merely is another Bill. As I pointed out yesterday I don't think that a money bill as this would be can be accepted from the Opposition, but outside of that the terms of the suggested Bill are not acceptable to the Government, and I now, therefore, suggest that we take up the original Bill and as we have already explained it, and gone into it with some amendments to Clause 2 as suggested by various members. I now move that we proceed with it.

MR. GRIMES—Mr. Chairman: With the principle of the Bill that we had before us, for consideration I am in full accord, as I take it to mean the greater protection of the rights of the vast timber areas on the Labrador. The lengthly discussion that has taken place since this Bill was first introduced in relation to those who have made applications for an extension of their rights on Labrador. it would seem that the action of the Government has been considered in the nature of a compromise. I have listened with interest to the remarks of the Colonial Secretary when the amendment was introduced yesterday by the Opposition, and he thought that it was grossly immoral for an amendment like that proposed to be attached to the Bill. Well, there are differences of opinion as to what is moral and what is immoral. The Colonial Secretary said that there was a moral issue at stake. Well, accepting the Prime Minister's statement that the amendment was dishonest, I would like to ask the members of this House, some of whom were here when the Prohibition Bill was put through this Assembly if that was dishonest? It was well known that a number of men were conducting a business according to the laws of Newfoundland, and there was not one member of this House who stood up and said that it was dishonest to go and take away business from people who were carrying on legitimate trate, and give them no compensation whatever. So I fail to see the difference between the position that was taken by this Legislature when the Prohibition Bill was introduced and the Amendment that was introduced by the Opposition in this House of Assembly yesterday. If it is proper for this Assembly to close down a business that they legalized for years and years, then it is perfectly proper to say to those holding areas on the Labrador: "Now that we find that it is more for the interests of Newfoundland to take those interests from you, and notwithstanding that we have good reason to believe that you have not conformed with the regulations governing the granting of timber leases, you have not taken a survey of the areas in which you have given the lease, you have not filed them in the Department according to the regulations the license required, you have failed to do all this and we are still prepared as Members of this Assembly to refund you the money which you have paid and to give you the interest as well, and I don't see anything else that could be done in dealing with those who have paid rentals for these areas that they have acquired on Labrador, by permission of the Governor in Council. If their contention is right where should we have been now if all those person who have been getting leases on Labrador had paid up their rentals. All this fighting made on behalf of the people of this country for the past twenty years in connection with the Labrador dispute would have been in vain. This House would not have been fighting on its own behalf, it would not have been fighting for the people of Newfoundland. It would have been fighting chiefly for the sole interests of those acquiring those lands for speculative purposes. And it would not be Newfoundland that would be getting the benefits of the territory that has been given to us by the decision of the Privy Council, it would be those who held areas on Labrador, and all the profit that we would get out of it would be the crumbs that fell from the speculators' table.

I submit that the amendment that was suggested here yesterday was far more in the interests of this country than was the position taken against that amendment, and that it was only proper on the part of the House to accept that amendment in order that the value of Labrador to to Newfoundland may be preserved. We understand that there are about eleven thousand square miles leased out at the present time on Labrador, and we have good reason to believe that that is one of the richest in timber, on the Labrador. Well supposing to-morrow we find ourselves in the position that we have got to go and find a purchaser for our timber rights on Labrador. Of what value will they be to this country if the intended purchaser finds that one-third of the best timber lands are already in the hands of those who are holding them for speculative purposes, and I am sure that the Prime Minister feels and every member of this House feels that those people asking for those concessions have no intention as has been pointed out before of establishing any mills down there at all. What the purposes in the mind of those people when they asked for those concessions was that some day or other the demand for timber would be increasing, and it is only a question of three or four years when the paper market will adjust itself again, and we will be having demands from England and the United States for lands on the Labrador, and then we can make our pile. It is going to be a valuable asset to us and why should we sacrifice that asset. Why should we lessen its value to Newfoundland by allowing one-third of it to be held by speculators not in the interests of this country? It must be admitted by members on the other side that those interests are being held by private parties purely for their own concern. And that this House should first think of this country and not of private speculators, who are endeavouring to get this extension of time. The members of this House owe a duty to the country first. That is what we are sent here for. Before we can talk about the rights of the man who acquired those interests on Labrador, we must first think of where this country fits in with regard to the position that it is going to find itself in in the course of three or four years. I think that that matter had not been considered by all the members of this House, or else they would have taken into consideration the amendment that was proposed yesterday, and if it was not exactly as it should be, we could have perhaps made some amendment to the amendment, in order that it would better serve the interests of this country.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we realize just what the Labrador is. I have never visited the whole of the territory myself, but I have visited a portion of it. I have not visited that portion which it is claimed of great value to Newfoundland, but I have read the accounts of men who have gone over that territory. I have read the account of a man by the name of Hickerson, a gentleman who travelled through the woods and visited Hamilton Inlet. In that account he says that there was no climate to him that was more invigorating, where the air was so balmy, and so healthful as in those places that he visited during the five or six weeks that he spent on the Labrador. He said that the timber lands there were something to him, indescribable. There were stretches of spruce and fir, and birch as far as the eye could reach. There were quantities of white spruce suitable for pulp wood of which he had not seen anything the like in his travels through Canada and the Western States, Sweden, Iceland, etc., and other parts that were similar. That is the story of a man who knows what he is talking about. He has visited other portions of the world where they are taking great interest in timberlands. He has seen those vast tracts of spruce and fir in those countries, and yet he is prepared to state over his own signature, that Labrador, around these places, and Newfoundland included, contains all those kinds of wood in greater quantities and more suitable for the manufacture of pulp than in the other countries that he visited. In his description of the Fraser River, the White Bear and another river, he saw tremenduous quantities of all kinds of wood. He said that there was sufficient quantities of berries there on the hills around these three rivers to keep all the preserve factories of Great Britain going from year to year. And he tested for himself the quantities of black berries alone. He took a piece of paper and made holes in it about three inches square, and he found that he could pick up on the average 40 berries through a hole six inches square. That gives us an idea of the value of that property from the standpoint of berries which are more and more becoming an article of food, and when we read his description of the places in that section, and generally the people have an idea that Labrador is cold and bleak, and unsuitable to live in, but in this particular section, the climate in these places are mentioned as being equal to the best for the summer months, that he has come in contact with the world over in his travels.

Now what I would ask is this. Is it right that having an asset of that kind that we should allow three or four men to gobble up one-third of that, and all that Newfoundland is to get out of it, is $20,000 a year in rentals, when those who hold these areas may in three or four years time sell them for a price amounting to millions of dollars. If we were to handle the timber areas of this country, as Quebec does for the same quantity of land, we should be getting rentals to the total of three and a half millions yearly. Why should we come in here and sit down and calmly cast aside the suggestion that was made that we should retain our hold on that very valuable portion enclosed within that eleven thousand square miles. Here is what has been done in the Province of Ontario:

(Reads)

Now we should not give away any area in this country before we know what we are doing. We may not be able, perhaps we have not the finances sufficient to be able to survey the whole of the Labrador, but certainly we should endeavour to spend some money in surveying certain portions of it, and do so from time to time as far as our means will allow. But at least we should hold it all intact. If they are doing that in Ontario and Quebec in a similar manner, and they have found it a valuable means of getting revenue for their country, then I think that we ought to follow their example. To-day we find ourselves with a deficit of $2,500,000. To me there is no question whatever but that in the course of three or four years we ought to be getting a revenue from three quarters to one million from our timber lands. And not only does it apply to Labrador, but Newfoundland itself and I already see in this Gazette that applications have been made for the granting of timber lands around Bonne Bay, and other sections of the country, for a few men to enrich themselves at the expense of the taxpayers of this country. I submit sir, that the proper thing for the Government to do would be to decide that they are going to stop this thing up to the limit. But what they are doing is compromising themselves by saying that they are going to allow an extension of time to a certain number of persons for the next two years.

Now, Sir Patrick McGrath in his lecture in the Pitts Memorial Hall gave a very realistic idea as to what the Labrador might to be to Newfoundland. He instanced the case of Alaska being purchased by the American Government for seven million dollars, and apparently to the Russian Government it was valueless. But the United States in the course of 15 or twenty-five years found that it was worth in the neighborhood of several hundred millions, yearly. Well that territory is not as great as the Labrador. And if Alaska, a much smaller territory, is worth so much to the United States annually, what is its value likely to be to Newfoundland in the course of a similar period. We do not know what scientific methods might be introduced in another few years that will enable us to overcome those difficulties that lie in the path of the development of Labrador. We may find that the airplane or the dirigible will be so developed that we will be able to go down to Labrador and carry out quantities of timber from there at a cheaper rate than it is done to-day by steamer. That may seem a fanciful picture but I submit that some things have developed within the past twenty-five years that we would look upon twenty-five years ago as a dream. But these things that were once conceived in the imagination and were never intended to be looked upon as a reality have become real, and something may happen that will facilitate the carriage of timber from Labrador to other parts of the world.

Mr. Powell, I understand, has estimated the timber areas of the Labrador at about $250,000,000, and water power at about three and a half million. And I think, Mr. Chairman, that taking all these things into consideration, we should go slowly before we attempt to barter away the rights that have been bought so dearly, for it has cost considerable sums of money to fight this before the Privy Council. And then again I have it on very good authority that offers have already been made for timber areas on the Labrador; I have been told that there are parties now ready to buy it in, in the neighbourhood of twelve and a half cents per acre in the way of bonuses, and that would net us altogether a sum of $1,-300,000. Besides that they are willing to pay the rental of $2.00 per square mile, and 25c. per thousand feet Board Measurement. If this is a bona fide offer and I don't think it would be made if there were not some financial interests behind it, and it ought to be brought to the attention of the Government. I understand that at that rate it would be worth in the neighbourhood of three millions. But if we give this away and allow these people to sell them, we are throwing away value that we ought to be getting ourselves. Are we satisfied to allow to go into speculators' pockets money that ought to go into the Treasury of this country, particularly in the position we are in to-day. And if we find that there are parties interested in this, and that it can bring in, in the next three or four years in the neighbourhood of three or three and a half million dollars, that deserves serious consideration of the Government. It shows that these people set a greater value on the Labrador than we do, for if I remember rightly the Minister of Justice stated that there was no fear of having continued ringing at the telephone by persons to find out if the Labrador was for sale or not. He took a very pessimistic view of what is likely to happen in the next seven years. In face of these parties being willing to put up a proposal that would net the sums I have mentioned—the Telegram the other day put the case in a nut-shell and it ought to be taken seriously by the Government seeing it is an organ of theirs, and represents to a certain degree the opinion of supporters of the Government. The Telegram says:

This is against speculation, and I take it as good sound advice, which can be taken by the Government and the country.

Mr. Chairman, we have to-day a serious proposition as far as the financial condition of the country is concerned, to face, and are we going to make it still worse by losing the value of our interests on the Labrador If we are going to give away for the next two years, for the small sum of $20,000, eleven thousand square milles of territory, we are certainly not helping the financial condition of the country as well as we might, and I think that before this Bill is disposed of, that while the Premier may state that it is not the business of the Opposition to bring in money bills, he might accept the principles outlined in the measure, and secure for ourselves the whole of the Labrador intact so that it may be more valuable to the country than it will be with the loss of this eleven thousand square miles.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman: I would like to say a few words in reply to the honourable member. He seems to take no notice of the recommendations that were brought forward while this question was under discussion. We have claimed, and I still claim, that while previous governments gave away enormous tracts on the Labrador, and while they renewed for eight years rights to water power for no apparent reasons, to a big corporation and so have tied up what is probably the greatest value in one particular asset on the Labrador, the waters of the Hamilton North-West River; which they have tied up until 1933 to a big corporation, and while they gave away large tracts, we have not given away a single acre—we have not made a single grant. And in face of that this terrible accusation has been brought against us that we have compromised ourselves by catering to our friends and supporters. Now I claim, Mr. Chairman, before the House to-day, that if I were approached by the greatest enemy I have in the country, asking what rights he had under his lease, I would say that most certainly, when he couldn't build a mill during these years while he was paying a rental — when the Canadian Government would not allow him to build; when he was taking a chance and perhaps throwing his money away, if the Canadian Government happened to win—I would have nothing to tell him but that he would have to comply with the terms within the same period after the question was settled. Now these parties made their application, and we got the opinion of our Justice Department, and of lawyers in our party, and we have some pretty good ones, and there isn't one that isn't of the same opinion—and I don't believe there is one in the country — who considers otherwise than that we would be fools to go before the Supreme Court in an action to cancel these leases, and ask them to say that these people have not rights, and that after paying their rentals they had to get out. It doesn't stand in justice, to the ordinary commoner, and neither to a Court of Justice, and I don't believe there is a lawyer in town who would say that we had a dog's chance of winning. But if we did that and said that after taking their money we were going to take their licenses back, and that they could have their money back, we would be disgraced before the whole world.

MR. CASHIN—How many gentlemen or companies on the Labrador carried out as far as having a survey made, under the provisions of the Crown Lands Act?

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I understand all.

MR. CASHIN—There is no record in the Department. Mr. Bradley asked the question and was told that there was no record.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—That is news to me. However, I say that the same argument applies. If we have been taking their money we can't possibly give it back and say that their licenses are to be cancelled.

MR. CASHIN—It might have been taken under the impression that we were going to lose the Labrador case.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—That would be much worse, and almost false pretences. But because the case went for us, then we are going to cancel their rights, and take a possible action against them because they haven't built their mills.

The hon. member who just sat down Mr. Grimes, made the statement that these people have no intention of establishing mills. I want to tell the House that if they don't do so they will only lose their properties anyhow, and we will get it back. According to their lease they have to build the mill within three years; we might very well have extended to three years after the boundary question was settled, but we were even harder than that, and have said that it must be done within two years, or we will cancel. Whether we would have justice behind us in doing so or not I don't know, but it is quite possible that we haven't. But the fact remains that if they don't build in two years we will do our utmost (and any other government the same) to cancel their leases—it may be possible that we shall find out that we have no right to cancel within two years.

MR. RUSSELL—You gave an extension in 1924 for two years, which expired in September 1926, but nothing was done, and that company had another extension of time. They have done nothing, and apparently have no intention of doing anything.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—They must have paid their rentals. We know they didn't carry out the terms of their lease as regards building—how could they? We have explained all that. If you consider that they couldn't build a mill, there was no point in making a survey—the whole point is that successive governments have taken their money. The grants shouldn't have been issued in the first place and there would have been no trouble. But after having taken thousands of dollars from them, we can't now very well say that they didn't carry out when we knew it to be impossible. What would have been the use of making a survey? It wouldn't help in any way at all—you would still say they didn't complete because they hadn't built their mill. You ask why we should give away areas before we know what we are doing? We haven't given any—the honourable member who has just sat down (Mr. Grimes) was a member of a Government which gave some away. Mr. Chairman, I heard the Leader of the Opposition say in righteous indignation.

MR. HALFYARD—Mr. Chairman, if I may interrupt. I know the honourable introducer would not wish to be unjust. But he has stated that the Government in which Mr. Grimes was a member, and of which I also was a member, was one of these that did the giving away. Now the dates of grants here are 1913, 1911, 1914, and I don't think he was a member of any Government in that time.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I understood a great deal was given away during the Squires administration. I know it has been given away for years and years.

MR. HALFYARD—No, that is not correct. Squires came in in 1919, and none of these are in his time. The International Grenfell Association has a lease in 1923 which has been conformed with. Don't blame the Squires administration for everything.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I certainly don't wish to blame them for anything they haven't done. As I was saying, the Leader of the Opposition was indignant because the Colonial Secretary referred to these amendments as being dishonest. After all, I don't know why he should be so indignant on the one hand because the Colonial Secretary termed them dishonest, and at the same time we be accused of having ulterior motives in expounding the law. The suggestion has been made that we are trying to help our friends, and to put them on Easy Street, and I think that is quite as objectionable on their part as anything the Colonial Secretary has said.

MR. CASHIN—Mr. Chairman, might I ask the Prime Minister a question. I will read to the House a section of the Crown Lands Act.

(Reads)

Did the Government collect the extra bonus of $2.00 per square mile.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Certainly not. The very section gives the answer. For good and sufficient reasons they haven't exercised their rights.

MR. CASHIN—Yes, but even so you can collect the $2.00 extra.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—In connection with this point, if I have the permission of the Prime Minister to interject a remark. That section clearly applies to a normal case. In Newfoundland to-day for example, if that is not done the only excuse would be if they could show that it was impossible to have the survey made or to get surveyors. It would be alright in a case of that sort to give an extension on paying the bonus. But in answer to the honourable member for Ferryland the point is this, that beyond paying the rentals there was no physical act that anyone could do; they couldn't build, or couldn't survey and blaze trails. They couldn't do so, first because of the attitude of the Canadian Government 25 years ago in the Dickie matter and secondly because of the Convention between the Governor-General of Canada and the Governor of Newfoundland, that nothing be done until settlement of the dispute. I make this explanation, because the difference between conditions in this country and Labrador haven't been grasped. In Labrador if an action were taken for cancellation or imposition of a fine that excuse could be made, but in Newfoundland no such excuse could be advanced.

My second point is this—that it is rather amusing to hear honourable members make the statement that the Bill is introduced through ulterior motives, and that the object is more or less to give protection and special privileges to certain people. I trust that honourable members will feel that I have too much respect for their intelligence to think that they will lose sight of the fact that if that were so the easiest thing for the Government to have done was not to have brought in the Bill at all or to withdraw it now, because without this Bill the Governor-in-Council could parcel out the Labrador tomorrow. If there was ever a case in which an administration came in and divested itself of power, this is that case. If we brought in no such proposal or if we withdrew it now, any number of people could go tomorrow and put their notice in the Gazette and the Governor-in-Council could parcel out the Labrador. Surely you can see that this is a good principle; surely you will agree that this is a marked step in advance of the old situation, and I don't think it right that that should be lost sight of. The people of the country should not be given the idea that this large and important measure has not that merit in it. I think it was Mr. Grimes who suggested that at a certain lecture a position was taken by a gentleman in the Upper House, and in the Speech from the Throne and indeed immediately after the decision was announced it was made.

As a matter of fact immediately following that first suggestion I myself must feel that a Government intending to introduce legislation to conserve the position as regards the Labrador as it is at the present time and improve it from its past situation in other respects is so placed, that surely we ought be fair enough with one another to at least say that if those people who have paid their rentals are considered as they have been considered after very careful consideration and been put in the position they have been placed in to-day and after all the others have been by this administration, been put in the position which they were threatened to be put by previous administrations and were not by them, and taking into consideration that arising out of that fact that the Colony is threatened by an action for having done that, we ought be fair enough to say that this legislation is certainly something that ought not be treated in a way that will take from it whatever merit it has got. I want to say deliberately that I have been around this House in one capacity or another for thirty years and I have never seen yet legislation brought in by any administration that so far deprived itself of the power to do a thing that might not be in the interests of the people as this legislation does. The Government didn't have to do it. Half a dozen people could have got the whole Labrador by application in the Gazette and the Government could have allowed it; and the Government has not alone not allowed that but has come in and told the House that it feels that the situation as regards the Labrador ought to be altered. I go further and say that it is a pity in the light of experience of the past that it was not the law of the country. Honourable members have referred to the position on the Labrador in comparison with conditions in respect of timber lands in Canada. As far as our knowledge of timber laws is concerned it must not be forgotten that we are only gradually becoming educated and it is only very recently that Canada herself has become educated. (They have still the outcome there of the conflict of the export of timber from one province to another.) Only in recent years they have become alive to the situation as regards dealing with Crown Lands. We have dealt with Crown Lands altogether apart from timber and water powers, in the giving out of agricultural land in a way that has shown that the provisions of the Crown Lands Act with regard to it are entirely unsuited to Newfoundland. The provision as favored down the years is that for thirty cents an acre a man could get 160 acres of land. That was never a law properly applicable to this country. It was applicable to big prairie lands like Canada. The result has been that now there can't be got an acre of land on the West Coast and the lots will never be cultivated. One hundred and sixty acre lots are too big. These grants are away out of proportion to the size of our country, and out of proportion in particular to the size or extent of our agricultural lands. I instance this to show (as this is not a partisan matter but of individual concern) that the whole Crown Lands Act ought to be revised. It ought have been done years ago. As I am talking now a draft revision of the Crown Lands Act is in contemplation. It requires drastic legislation in the light of the experience we have had. We have only been educated in this country lately to think of things in the interior. Up to a few years ago all our thoughts were kept in sight of the sea. I would ask Honourable Members if they would be god enough to try and view the legislation in the spirit it is submitted by the Government. It is not protective legislation in the sense of individual interests. It is exactly the opposite. It is protective legislation for that section of the Labrador which we say in the light of our lack of knowledge of it, in the light of our lack of knowledge as to its worth, for all we know about it is merely conjecture in respect of that, we shall conserve for the people by allowing it to be granted only by the Legislature. I do think that we are making a long step forward if we see eye to eye and put this legislation into effect. I feel quite satisfied that on second thought Honourable Members opposite will realise that for a legislature to come in and take the position suggested is a step that I certainly in any responsible capacity wou ld not alone declare wrong but would certainly have to oppose in the most earnest way. I think the whole object and whole result of the Bill is at least to ensure that this Government which you are naturally so glad to criticise, and we don't blame you for doing it, that this Government, which if you want to put it that way, has so little confidence in itself, and feels itself so absolutely dishonest that it thinks that overnight it might make away with the Labrador, be made unable to deal with rights on the Labrador except that it be done by the Legislature. We ask you then to put through this Bill and consider it that way if you will. Nothing could be fairer than that.

MR. RUSSELL — Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it was well known by all timber limit holders on the Labrador that the Canadian Government had prevented the Dickie Company from erecting a mill; and considering the further fact that in 1924 this Government granted an extension of time of two years to a certain company, why did they a few weeks ago get a further extension of time?

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Will you allow me to answer that question? The reason why they got it then was because we thought the Labrador case was going to trial three years ago.

MR. RUSSELL—What I fail to understand is this: Why the Government in 1924 granted an extension of time to this Company? They wrote a letter as follows:

(Reads)

Now that couldn't be any plainer. The two years expired in 1926, and still nothing was done, and now in April or May this year the same Company is given a further extension of time, the excuse being that the Labrador boundary is settled. I don't understand how that can be worked out. I don't understand the reason for that. If they got an extension of time in 1924, why did they ask for it if they thought they couldn't carry out the terms of their lease, and when they didn't do it what is the necessity for the Government to grant them another two years? I refer now to the Labrador Pulp and Lumber Company. I direct my question to the Prime Minister.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —It is not quite fair to ask that question of the Prime Minister; it is really a question of law. I don't object to the Honourable Member not appreciating the point I want to make, just the same as he would excuse me for knowing nothing about a newspaper. The Honourable Member must appreciate the connection that these people asked for an extension in the hope that this matter would be through by then and that we thought the case was coming on for trial at that time. The second time they asked was when they drew attention to non-compliance. Might I say this to the Honourable Member? If he was going to finance a company such as these people would have he very probably would require full information, and outside people having no knowledge whatever of the situation here would require to be assured that what would appear to them as a noncompliance with conditions was a matter that was clear with the administration of the day. That is all that is to it.

DR. MOSDELL—Mr. Chairman, if the Crown Lands Act had not been complied with, why did the Government decide to grant these extensions of the terms of the leases? Strict compliance with the law cannot be the explanation of this extraordinary action of the Executive Council. It would really be a reason for non-interference. I judge from the remarks made by Hon. Mr. Cramm that the complete requirements of the Act had not been carried out and that the additional time has been allowed so that they may do, according to law, the things they have not hitherto done or attempted to do. Is the Executive Council competent to grant such extensions It occurs to me that they favor people who have not kept the law. How can the Executive Council, in effect, condone non-observance of a Statute?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—Mr. Chairman, the extension is of no value. We will get those lands back in two years' time and I am afraid there is not going to be a flock of aeroplanes over night in the interim with people to build mills there. Any man who wants to go to the Labrador and build a mill there will get my consent without any hesitation whatever. So far as the Government is concerned, the reason why we set the minds of the people who hold licenses on the Labrador at rest is because we did it with the full consciousness that people who are putting up the money are not likely to rush here with their money and with the same spirit that some people think.

The present Bill does not alter the legal situation at all. As to the meaning of the section of the Bill under discussion, Opposition members can interpret it as I can. It is merely a declaration to assert that nothing is done that affects any rights a person has got. If they have not got the legal status already, this Act does not give it to them. This Act is made in the interests of the country and to avoid possible consequences otherwise.

MR. GODDEN—Mr. Chairman, now that the ownership of the Labrador has been definitely decided on, a great many speculators are looking with avaricious eyes on the possibilities of exploitation there, and I take it that it is our bounden duty to let nothing stand in our way, except our honour, in order to realise the utmost value of the areas of the Labrador territory we hold, for the betterment of Newfoundland. During the past few years various licenses have been granted to different people, and I claim that if the conditions under which those leases were given had not been carried out then we should strive to regain the territory over which those licenses apply. That is, of course, a legal matter, and, I take it, the Government of Newfoundland is not afraid to stand for any legal action in that matter. The Bill itself looks quite innocent and I do not say it is not; but before legislating on Labrador I think we should get a better idea than we have to-day of what value the Labrador is to us. In other words, before granting future licenses or giving extensions on present licenses, we should know what we are giving extensions for and we should know what is the value of the property. We have within the past decade spent a lot of time and money in upholding our rights on the Labrador, and it would be a thousand pities if all this time and money were to be wasted and if we did not show something for our investment. As far as I can see Newfoundlanders generally are wondering why we are bringing in any legislation about Labrador at this time, and they are looking with suspicion upon this legislation. I would suggest that before we proceed further with this Bill, and before issuing any more licenses we should have a Labrador programme defined and approved of. In brief, I would suggest to the Government the suspension of all privileges on the Labrador, other than the fisheries, until a proper Labrador policy is drawn up.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, in response to the observations of the last speaker, I may say that what he has suggested is exactly what the Bill does. It prohibits any further privileges on the Labrador, except the fishery, without the sanction of the Legislature and until such time as a survey is properly made, and we know exactly what we own on the Labrador coast. As I stated in Committee yesterday, before I would be a party to taking action against those people who did not build mills I would resign my seat in the Government. Now suggestions have been thrown out that I was interested particularly in this measure because a relative of mine happened to hold some property in Lewis Bay and property which is generally conceded to be some of the most valuable on the Labrador. But I would like to point out that I never had a conversation or an interview with anybody on this matter nor did I make any suggestion as to legislation before the Executive Council. I never even bothered who owned the property. I simply viewed the matter as other members of the Government did, including Mr. Bradley, who sat on that Committee, and his views were the same as we had. The purport of these views were that when the Labrador Boundary question was settled that these people who held licenses were to go ahead with their pursuits and build mills and have surveys. Now I think this is a proof of the good faith of the Government that almost the moment after the Labrador Boundary question was settled the Government, through the Justice Department, began to take up the matter of conserving the Labrador for the country. Now we bring in a Bill and there is a suggestion of ulterior motives behind it. I would not like to suggest that there will be ulterior motives behind the Opposition members and that because they think they will soon be in power that they will be able to divide it up amongst themselves. This is a Bill that is in no other sense than to protect the Labrador and I would suggest to the Leader of the Opposition that it is good legislation and should be allowed to go through.

MR. HALFYARD — Mr. Chairman, ever since this Bill was introduced some weeks ago it has caused the greatest interest, as the subject—the value of the Labrador to Newfoundland—no doubt, has occupied the minds of the people in Newfoundland, that is, those who have any knowledge of anything that has transpired in connection with that country.

The question has been asked "What is the value of Labrador to Newfoundland? We were all enthusiastic in our expressions of congratulation to anyone who had any connection with the trial that was decided before the Privy Council in connection with the ownership of Labrador. We thought that we did come into undisputed right of territory millions of dollars in value, but I must say that those who have followed the debates in this House are very disappointed, and I find from the speeches made by the Prime Minister and legal men on the Government side, that it is very difficult for us as a country to reclaim the timber rights that have been granted in the past to certain people. Now it is not right for us who are supposed to be an intelligent people to be talking for the sake of argument about this very important question. The principle of the bill is important and no doubt all agree with it. But the second clause has given us an opportunity of discussing the timber lands of Labrador and all around it, the argument has centered it seems. As the debate proceeds we get more and more disgusted from day to day over the actions of the Newfoundland Government in relation to those who hold licenses. I really thought that the licensees had not conformed to the conditions of the lease. And that was the thought that was uppermost in my mind until yesterday evening when the Hon. Mr. Cramm who is a lawyer, stated that the Government took the position that the Crown Lands Act had been complied with, and therefore the amendment was without effect.

THE HON. MR. CRAMM—Mr. Chairman, my recollection as saying and what I intended to say was that these licensees had complied so far as possible.

MR. HALFYARD—Perhaps that is what you did say, but I took you down. Now it is questionable whether they have even complied with the terms of the licenses as far as they could. I cannot see why they could not have complied with some part of the agreement in connection with the survey. But they have not even blazed a trail or gone over the ground at all. I don't think that there has been any attempt made by the licensees to carry out the terms of the agreement.

Evidently a strong argument in favour of the Bona Fides of the claims of the licensees is, that if the Government should interfere with them and try to take away their licenses they would be subject to damage. Now I think that it would be in the interest of the country, and I suggest that we should have very definite opinions. This is a question which affects Newfoundland more than any other question that has been brought before this Legislature. If we cannot get in possession of the eleven or twelve thousand square milts of timber land on Labrador, then I think that there is something in the statement supposed to have been made by Premier Taschereau that "their victory is a fruitless one." Now with regard to turning that property into cash, I am afraid that some of us will not live long enough to participate in the fruits of the great possession that is ours. As to the idea of selling the Labrador, with one third of the best timber lands under license and owned by somebody else, we shall never make a sale of Labrador. The only hope now is of some one developing these timber lands down there, erecting mills and manufacturing pulp, and that is a far-fetched idea I think. But of course in the distant future if the timber will continue in demand for paper, and the areas that now produce timber for making paper become depleted ,then of course timber lands will become more valuable, and they won't mind the extra cost of getting it away from the Labrador.

It is a serious matter for us to have to contemplate or realise that we do not own the timber lands on the Labrador. The only object that the opposition had in mind when they suggested amendments to this bill was to get an expression of opinion as to whether it was possible for us to buy these timber lands back by compensating those who had paid rentals for them to the Newfoundland Government. I don't think that any member on either side of this House would after due consideration, attribute dishonest motives to anyone in this House for suggesting anything that was not in the interests of this country. We firmly believe that if the paying back of rentals which would mean anywhere from half a million to a million dollars, that that would be money well spent if we could get a clear title to those timber lands.

As far as I am concerned, and I think that I can speak for all those on the opposite side, the only object the opposition had in bringing in this amendment was that if this House thought that there was anything in that, and that a bill could be drawn along these lines, then we thought that it would be in the best interests of the country to do so. We have to approach this subject in the spirit of justice to ourselves. We may have reason to criticise the actions of the present Government, but criticism is not much good unless you can offer suggestions to the remedy of the mistakes that you claim have been made. It is no good to blame the past Government for what they did. Since I have had the honour to have a seat in this House of Assembly certain things have been done, certain laws have been put on the Statute book. At the time it was thought to be in the best interests of the country, but time has shown, as we have had more experience in the operation of these laws, that perhaps mistakes have been made. Even the experience I have had, (and I have had a little) has been that anyone criticising a government always says "You shouldn't have done this or that," and would make it appear that they have intentionally been lacking. That is all trash. The Government of Sir Edward Morris was criticised for building the branch railways in the country, and I suppose that the party of Sir William Whiteway or whoever was connected with the main line, was criticised as foolish. During the years of depression, in 1920, 1921 and 1922 I feel sure that if there hadn't been Branch Railways to Bonavista Bay, Bay-de-Verde and other places, they would have been built then, instead of building roads to Badger and Deer Lake. What is the good of a country unless it is developed, and what was uppermost in the mind of Sir Edward Morris at the time, was to open up the timber and mineral resources. We find that perhaps it was a mistake, and that nothing has developed in our forests and mines thereby to any great extent. I suppose that in Sir Edward Morris' day, according to the date of the leases here, he was a sinner in this regard, in that leases were granted in his regime. They go back to 1922, then to 1912 and 1913, 1915 and 1916, during the administration of Sir Edward Morris, and in 1914. Possibly there were leases since then; I have been mixed up with Governments, but I don't remember if there were any new leases granted. I know that in some of the Governments I have been a member of, the attitude of the Attorney-General was to do nothing with the Labrador, and if he could cancel he would do it. I know one Minister of Justice I had the greatest respect for, who put his foot down on everything of that kind. So the personnel of the Opposition can't be accused of giving away the Labrador.

If I could be satisfied that nothing could be done; that the Government can do nothing to get back these leases in an honorable way, I wouldn't continue talking further on this subject, because I have no criticism to offer of the principle of the Bill that we are supposed to be talking about. The first clause of the Bill deals with the granting of timber limits of the Labrador by the Legislature and the Legislature only; I am told by those who ought to know that the second Clause is negative and better in that not, and I am satisfied. But the question of timber limits on the Labrador is so important that I hope the time I am spending on it is not in vain. To lighten my laborious efforts in talking to this serious and important measure regarding timber on Labrador, I would refer to a remark made by the Hon. Minister of Justice. I asked him what legal or other rights the Executive Government had to extend the period for carrying out the terms of these leases, and if I understood his reply, he said that they had the right to carry out the honest wishes of the country, that is to put in effect what the country would do. You felt that the country would like you to do what was right, and what was right was to give an extension of two years on the Labrador.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—It wasn't extension.

MR. HALFYARD — It wasn't extension? But, Mr. Chairman, to understand that it was not an extension, one must have the mind of the Hon. Minister of Justice or of the Hon. Prime Minister, who also says it wasn't an extension. But to the mind of an ordinary individual, the literal meaning given to it in the letters of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, and the Deputy Colonial Secretary is acceptable, and they would say it was an extension.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we have been talking about honesty and dishonesty, morality and immorality of the action of the Government in dealing with people who had timber limits on the Labrador. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the correspondence passed between the license holders and the Minister of Agriculture and Mines and the Executive Government through the Colonial Secretary, have been interpreted by all the persons who have read the correspondence and by the people who received the replies themselves from the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, that an extension had been granted—they believed that they had a bona fide extension for two years to carry out the terms of their leases. Is it honest to so mislead these licensees? Further, Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, in reply to an interjection from this side, said that he gave them these letters because they, just like anyone else, would like to have them. Gave it to them just like we give candy to a baby—gave them an all-day sucker! While they have these letters which mean nothing they will be quiet. To please them and salve your conscience you gave them these letters, and to let them think they had something valuable. Now then, if you were honest, would you do these things? I think from the statements of the Minister of Justice, that it was merely something to show outsiders to lead them to believe they had something valuable. To deceive poor investors of money in England! That is to fleece the poor honest investor of money in England. Is there anything honest about such an action as that, to deceive the poor people who have money and want to invest it and who are told by a man who has received a letter from the Executive Government of Newfoundland that he has two years in which to erect a mill, his statement being proved by the letter. A man having that letter from the Executive may ask people in England, the United States or elsewhere to invest their money in a project, saying that he has a valuable property on the Labrador. If they ask does he own it he says he has a letter which he got when he asked the Executive Government to grant him an extension of time to allow him to make his title complete by erecting a mill and he produces the document showing that he has been given two years, to do so. But the Minister of Justice says it wasn't worth the paper it was written on.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—I didn't say any such thing. I said no act of ours could change the law.

MR. HALFYARD—You are on the horns of a dilemma. To be a party to giving a document, signed, sealed and delivered, from the Executive Government of Newfoundland to the unsuspecting people of other countries so that they could invest their money! You say it wasn't an extension at all. You had no legal right to do that; no legal right to extend the license. Hon. Col. Sec't'y made a remark in connection with the amendment. I don't suppose the Colonial Secretary would say it on second thoughts. In the heat of debate in the interest of the cause we all sometimes unthinkingly make some remarks that on second thoughts would be withheld. It was said however by somebody that the Hon. Colonial Secretary thought that there was a dishonest motive behind the amendment brought in yesterday.

HON. THE COLONIAL SECRETARY —I don't think I said a dishonest motive. I am glad to be given this opportunity to explain myself. What I wanted to infer is that an action of that kind to go and cancel leases when the holders had lived up to their contracts I consider would be nothing more than dishonest. Mr. Grimes said that I said the thing was immoral. I didn't say it was immoral. I said it was morally wrong. I still consider it to be morally wrong. I don't suppose there is any immorality or dishonesty in the Opposition ranks, nor do I think that any such construction can be put on my words. I merely said that we would be acting dishonestly if we broke a contract when these people had lived up to their side of the agreement.

MR. HALFYARD — The Colonial Secretary has explained the matter very satisfactorily to me at any rate. There is nothing dishonest about our intentions, but I wish that the same could be said with regard to the actions of the present Government in granting extensions to license holders. These letters conveying the idea of extensions could be used to get money from unsuspecting people. I say this action was most dishonest. I don't know what about the motive behind it, but the outcome was most dishonest. As certain correspondence was referred to by the Hon. Member for Ferryland from the London-Labrador Corporation, Limited, addressed to Hon. W. J. Walsh, Minister of Agriculture and Mines, written 30th of May, 1927—so that clause "e" or "f" will not be left out I will read the whole lot:

(Reads)

One would gather that the London-Labrador Corporation, Limited, which is situated at St. James' St., London, would have expert legal opinion as to whether they could retain their licences or not without appealing to the Newfoundland Government.

(Reads)

That admits that there is a right to enforce certain clauses of the agreement. They want to know whether the Newfoundland Government is going to enforce them or not. When legal opinions differ in this country we go outside for expert opinion. I don't see why they should take the trouble if they were sure they had a right. That is why I think there is some legal right to carry out the spirit of the amendment that was presented by the Opposition yesterday—the spirit, not necessarily the letter of it.

There are two sides to every question. If it was a straight business proposition we might take the opinion of the Hon. introducer of the Bill, the Prime Minister. Two individuals may have entirely different views on almost any question. I beg to differ from the opinion of the Hon. Minister of Justice that in writing those letters and assuring them the granting of an extension on paper that you were putting into effect the honest opinion of the electorate of the country. I think it is absolutely contrary to the wishes of the people of the country. They have been hoping and praying and looking forward to the acquisition of the Labrador to help them in these hard times, and now they find it is all thrown away, and before the Labrador will be any use to us it will be years and years, and there is nothing left for them but to pack their bags and get out, for the years of depression are still with us.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee of the Whole reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committe have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of this House until Monday, I wish to say that I do not want to detain the business of this House, but we have some matters of considerable importance to attend to in the next few days with the representatives of the International Pulp and Paper Company who are in the city now, in order to try to come to some sort of arrangement with them so that they might know whether they are going to stop here or not. While we have been in conference with them almost every night during the last week until 12 o'clock, we will be again for such extra time as will be necessary, and as Friday will be a whole holiday anyway, I thought that we might adjourn until Monday, when I hope to be able to bring in, in the early part of the week, some suggestions, if not the actual bills themselves, in connection with these larger matters.

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to Monday, June 27th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

Mr. Ashbourne gave notice of question.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

MONDAY, June 27th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until to-morrow.

Pursuant to order and on motion of Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

MR. ASHBOURN—Mr. Chairman, when this Bill was before the House in Second Reading I went on record as being in full accord with the principle of the Bill. I hold in my hand a copy of a license issued to the London Corporation Limited in the year 1924 to cut timber on the Labrodar. In perusing this document I find that the London-Labrador Corporation Limited was given this license to cut timber, and, in consequence of being granted this license, there are certain conditions here which this Corporation is called upon to fulfill. One of them is that they have to pay to the Government an annual rental of $1,024.00 per year, that is, $2.00 for every square mile, of a total of 512 square miles. In addition they have to pay a royalty at the rate of 25c. per thousand feet, board measure, for all trees cut down for every year during the continuance of this license. Furthermore they are required to commence operations within one year and complete within three years from the first of August 1914 the erection of a saw mill which must have an output of not less than 51,000 feet of lumber every twenty four hours or to expend the sum of $26,000 00 in the erection of a pulp and paper factory or mill and the erection of which to begin within two years. Further down in the license I find that it is hereby further declared and agreed that this license is granted under and is subject to the provisions of the Crown Lands Act and the Acts in amendment thereof, and it stipulates that if the London-Labrador Corporation Limited should default in the performance of any of the conditions herein contained that this license shall be null and void and the timber licensed shall revert to the Crown. I think that every member with.n hearing of my voice knows that the conditions under this license have not been fulfilled and it seems to me that, under that contract, this license is forfeited. It is true that the Government has continued to collect the annual rental from th.s Corporation and it is argued that on account of the payments of these rentals that this license still holds good. According to this document, it is expressly stated that if the conditions are not fulfilled the l cense becomes null and void, and it is a question in my mind as to the validity of the Government receiving rentals from any person or any corporation and whether or not it is legal for these people to hold that lease. If the Government cla m it is right, it is very strange to me and I cannot understand it. I would also like to point out to the Government that all those years while the Labrador Boundary question had been in abeyance the timber licenses held by those parties increased in value from year to year and I think .t is only right and proper to expect that if those people should be given a clear title to their lands and leases on the Labrador that the Government would be perfectly right in expecting this corporation to pay royalties which would have accrued if they had carried out the terms of their contract. The reason why these licenses are issued at all is in order that the forest on the Labrador might be utilized to provide employment and not simply to hold them for speculative purposes. In other words a man goes and appl es to the Governor-in-Council for a grant say of 500 square miles. He pays a certain sum and in addition a royalty of $2.00 per square mile per year. Besides that he is required to erect a mill and that mill is erected so that a certain quantity of timber, as laid down in the license, might be cut each year and on the amount of timber cut—the minimum output is laid down in the license—the Government collects a royalty. Now in the case of th.s license of the London-Labrador Corporation Limited I have figured out that the royalty which would be due to the Government if that mill had been erected and if they had cut the stipulated amount of 51,000 feet of lumber daily would be in the vicin ty of $3,800.00, as against the rentals of $1,024.00. By that it will be seen that the royalty is a far bigger amount than the rentals.

If it is argued that these people who hold licenses on the Labrador should hold those licenses then certainly it is only fair to expect that seeing that the timber areas have become more valuable each year, that they pay us at least the royalties which would have been due us if their contract had been carried out. I don't think there is anything illogical about that. The argument may be put forward that if these parties went down on the Labrador to operate that they would not be able to sell the timber that they sawed. I submit that that has nothing to do with this country. If a man enters into a contract by wh.ch he is supposed to erect a mill and cut so many feet of lumber per day and if he can't sell that timber then that is his affair and not ours. What we are looking for is the royalty on that. A few days ago when this Labrador question was up, I made the remark that if the Government enforced the Crown Lands Act that there wouldn't be any unemployment in Newfoundland. The Prime Minister asked me what I meant by enforcing the Crown Land's Act. I don't understand, and I fail to see why in Newfoundland as well as in Labrador the Crown Land's Act is not enforced. If these people hold valuable timber rights it is only right and proper for us to expect them to operate and to carry out their obligations of the contract as well as we should do so, but as has already been stated in the House, the majority of these areas have been held for speculative purposes, and the person who goes and gets the lease just holds it until he can get somebody to come in and take it off his hands and then he makes a clean up. Surely these licenses should be cancelled, because the conditions have not been fulfilled. It says in the license itself that if the conditions are not fulfilled the license is null and void and of no effect. I have figured out the amount of money that would have to be paid by the Government to holders of areas on the Labrador who have paid their rentals in full, and I find that the amount would be roughly about three hundred thousand dollars. I have also figured up the value of the areas on the Labrador and I find that it approximated at least ten million dollars worth. Now Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the Government that they take up this matter seriously as regards royalties and see whether or not we can claim the royalties which are accruing under these leases and licenses, but I fear very much that the Government has committed itself in that they have granted an extension, which we are told is not an extension, of two years to erect saw-mills etc. In that word etc., I see a loophold whereby those people who might have been forced to pay royalties on the timber which they should have sawn and which timber to-day is there on the Labrador and is more valuable year by year, because if not sawn it grows and increases and naturally is becoming more valuable on account of not being cut over. The Minister of Justice may tell me that it is stipulated in the licenses that they must erect a mill with the capacity of cutting fifty-one thousand feet of timber per twenty-four hours, but it is not obligatory on their part to cut this much. I know there is an option there that they can spend a certain amount of money on the area, and that may be another loophole. In my opinion there should be a minimum in all these contracts and licenses by which the holders of those licenses should be bound. Another point that has been brought out during the course of the debate is that there have been no surveys made on properties that have been held on the Labrador. As I understand it, the Act calls for surveys being made within one year, and I fail to see how the Government can claim that the parties to licenses have carried out the terms of their contract. I believe in the sanctity of contract, but I also believe that when a man is under an obligation to carry out certain things we should see that he carried out his side of the bargain just as well as we should carry out ours. I would suggest that the Government take steps immediately to enforce the Crown Lands Act, not only in Labrador but also here in Newfoundland and parties who hold leases here and licenses to cut timber either here or in Newfoundland and who don't carry out the terms and obligations of their licenses should have those licenses cancelled. The Attorney General said a few days ago that it looked as if in a few years we would have all these properties coming back on our hands again.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —I said I feared so.

MR. ASHBOURNE—It may be so but I am very doubtful. However, I say that it is only right and proper that the Government should be firm in this matter because these areas on Labrador and licenses are granted under certain specific conditions which are mentioned in the license. We are told that no further areas will be given on Labrador for such a small rental as two dollars per square mile, and I agree with the Prime Minister in that remark that it is an absurd amount to pay for timber licenses. If on the other hand the holders of these areas find that the Government is weak and doesn't insist on their keeping to their bargain then the chances are that they are going to apply to some other Governor-in-Council to grant further extensions of time to erect their mills. If that can be done I would like to know the authority by which any Governor-in-Council can extend the time and furthermore if it can be done I would suggest that a paragraph be inserted in the present Bill which would prohibit any Executive Government giving any further extensions as regards carrying out the Crown Lands Act. We are told that there may be a legal battle as far as the Labrador is concerned in relation to those whose applications had been approved pending the settlement of the Labrador award. To my mind, if the people who had paid their rentals have a claim those who have not paid any rentals have absolutely no claim whatever.

We have a railway here in Newfoundland and when we took it over from Reids', as I understand it, I speak subject to correction, no land was given with the railway then owned by the Reid-Newfoundland Company so that the cutting of railway ties could be provided for, for the railway, and the result is that we have the railway and the Reid-Newfoundland Company has timber limits which were given with the railway (for that purpose) and now to-day we have to go and buy from the Reid-Newfoundland Company, railway ties in order to use them for the railway.

The cost of winning the Labrador is no small item and I trust that the Government will see that those who hold areas on the Labrador carry out the terms of their contracts without any further extensions in order that the Colony may be able to recoup some of the money that she has spent in getting the Labrador award in her favour.

The Attorney General said a few days ago that "no act of the Government could change the law." When I sit down perhaps he will be good enough to explain how in view of the fact that these obligations that are incumbent upon the holders of areas in Labrador have not been fulfilled, how it is that these licenses are not null and void as is mentioned in these licenses. To my mind, (I am not a lawyer) but it seems to me very clear, that if it says in this license that should the terms and obligations and conditions mentioned here not be carried out and should the holder make default—then the license is void.

(Reads)

I don't intend to talk at greater length on this question at the present time but I would suggest that the Government take up this matter particularly as regards royalties because I fail to see why the Colony should not benefit considerably in that respect.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman, I would just like one word of explanation. I know of nothing in the shape of royalties except the export duty that would be paid for wood going out of the country and if they didn't export from the timber limits on the Labrador they naturally wouldn't have to pay royalty. I don't know any other royalty that applies. As regards the other terms of the contract we have gone over that I think so many times that everybody thoroughly understands that it was a physical impossibility for them to carry out the terms of the lease and consequently they didn't do it.

Now it has come to my notice since we were in debate on this question last that in 1921 an Act was passed called "An Act respecting the exportation of timber." In that Act there is a clause which refers to the export of wood respecting Labrador.

(Reads: Sec. 3 Sub-sec. 2 of Act)

That was a clause put in I think deliberately for nothing else but to give rights to these people who had rentals paid, even possibly who didn't have rentals paid; and without their erecting a mill.

MR. CASHIN—That Act is restricted to five years. I think it went out of operation in January 1927.

MR. HALFYARD—That was passed merely to help the situation in times of stress that then were.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—It is the opinion of an eminent lawyer that the clause was put in specifically for the purpose of protecting parties who were holders of licenses on the Labrador.

HON. THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE —Mr. Chairman, just in amplification of the point the Prime Minister has just made I would like to add a few words to what he has said. In demonstration of the attitude taken by previous administrations with regard to licenses on the Labrador it was cited that in 1921 this Act with regard to Labrador permitted the export of wood from Labrador without a time limit because of the generally accepted position that people were not going to build with the dispute still on. A very clear line is drawn between the export of wood from Newfoundland which is limited to five years and from Labrador and that is the whole point. That shows that the Legislature in 1921 accepted the position that the only hope of getting any results from any limits on the Labrador was to abandon all thought of a power to compel people to put up mills in view of the dispute and allow them instead to export timber. That is the point of the Act and in that sense it is valuable in showing that the accepted position down the years was that these people because they were unable to comply with their agreements with regard to a mill were not considered liable to forfeiture on that account.

Mr. Ashbourne asked if I would give some explanation as to what I meant by the statement that the Executive Government could not change the law. I mean nothing more than just the exact words in it. The Executive Government can't change the law.

MR. ASHBOURNE—The point I want an explanation on was in connection with the license which reads that in default of the performance of the conditions therein it shall become null and void.

(Reads.)

How does the Government consider that these licenses are fully in effect?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE —

I don't want to appear to be discourteous, and if the honorable member will not think me so since there are so many poins arising out of that, I would suggest that he put his question to-morrow, say, to some competent lawyer who will explain to him the difference between conditions in a lease which automatically entitles the lessor to cancel and conditions in a lease that do not carry that penalty. I do not know that there is much to be gained by discussing the technical situation in the House.

With regard to the discussion of these matters, in view of the fact that the Government is threatened by an action for having repudiated the licenses on which renals had not been paid, we do not want to do more than leave these people to their own recourses. It is rather interesting to remark that in connection with that situation that while statements have been made quite confidently and clearly that these people have no rights at all, that opinion is not accepted by all. I don't say they have any. I have advised the Government that the people who have not paid rentals have no rights, but it will be rather interesting to discover that very eminent lawyers in this city have accepted retainers and have announced their intention of taking legal steps to assert that these people have rights. I only mention that to show that other people are not as clear on the position as we are. The contention of the Government is that these people have no rights, not having paid their rentals, but very competent legal advisers have apparently advised their clients the other way.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman, before we pass on to further consideration of this matter, I desire to make some comment with reference to the Act quoted by the Prime Minister a few moments ago as a ground on upon which he bases the position which the Government takes with regard to the alleged rights of holders of Labrador limits at the present time. In the first place this Act in company with three or four others that appear on the immediately preceding and succeeding pages was passed, as the honourable member for Trinity, Mr. Halfyard, has remarked, in time of stress, and not with a view to in any way alter any rights of individuals holding leases or limits on the Labrador and who had not carried out the terms of their contracts, but rather for the purpose of making it possible, if it could be made possible, to induce some person or persons to undertake the cutting and exportation of timber in Newfoundland in order that labour might be provided to relieve the stress of the times. The Act quoted is by no means the only Act on the subject at that time. There is an Act, immediately preceding, entitled "An Act to Amend the Crown Lands Act," which is technical in its character and not to the point just now; then there is the Act "Cap. 24: An Act respecting the cutting and exportation of timber for special purposes;" and then there is an Act "Further respecting the exportation of timber," and then the Act to which the Prime Minister referred, entitled "An Act respecting the exportation of timber;" then the next Act is "An Act respecting the exportation of codfish," and I submit if I were to go through the volume of Statutes I would find numerous Acts proposing to do something that might possibly induce persons to undertake operations that would give labour that was so badly needed in that year of grace 1921. Now, to come to this particular Act to which reference has been made, I feel that I will have to read a portion of it again in order to be clear on it.

(Reads.)

It does not say "Notwihtsanding anything in the Crown Lands Act, 1923, or the amendments thereof." It has nothing to do with the cutting of timber under the Crown Lands Act, or the making of pulpwood under the Crown Lands Act.

(Reads.)

Now that, I think, means this, that under the circumstances in Newfoundland (this has no reference to Labrador) conditions were such that the Government were willing to give concessions to holders of licenses who would not carry out the Crown Lands Act in order that labour be obtained. Section 2 says:

(Reads.)

In other words nothing in this Act shall in any way affect the rights of any timber holders under the Crown Lands Act, nor affect their obligations thereunder. That seems to me to be plain, sir, and I think that it does not require a lawyer at all to see the point that I was trying to make just now. Now as regards Subsection 2, Section 3:

(Reads.)

That is all very well, but have they cut it. If they had they would have applied to be permitted to export it, but they have neither exported it or cut it at all.

(Reads.)

Now did they cut it, that is the question. There would be no infringement of the Act if they had not cut. Surely the fact that you have failed to take advantage of the power that was given you under this Act of 1921 does not surely involve the loss of any right that you may have had by reason of the failure of these people to carry out their obligations under the original license. Particularly in view of the preceding section which points out that this Act does not affect any rights or obligations under any contract, and this license is a contract. One would well understand that judging by the attitude that the Government have taken since these resolutions were brought before this House that a superficial observer would come to the conclusion that this persent administration was more than solicitous in their desire to see that everybody got fair play. The insistence with which they reiterate their attitude with respect of the payment of rentals by these people; the enthusiasm with which they referred to the fact that th people had paid their money in good faith, and that even if the Government was in a position at the present time which enabled them to take those rights from these people, such an action would be dishonourable, and would make it appear to anyone who did not delve very deeply into the question that this administration was prepared to do the straight thing by everybody. That is the reputation, sir, which the hon. gentlemen who compose the present administration endeavour to obtain for themselves at this moment, but to which they are not entitled in view of the fact that, while they are prepared to carry out what they deem to be the obligations of the Government, they are unwilling to enforce the country's rights against speculators. Now we have unfortunately to admit that during the past three years they have failed to carry out their promises to the people of this country. If obligations, whether moral or legal, were so binding upon the present administration as they would have us believe that these present obligations are, then why is it, sir, that during the past three years they have failed ignominiously, in fact never attempted, to carry out those things which they undertook with the electorate to do three years ago. The mere onlooker may mistakenly conclude that their attitude in the present connection is the nature of the repentance which the thief on the cross exhibited some two thousand years ago, but of one goes a little deeper, it is quite apparent upon the consideration of the persons, whose apparent rights the Government desires so earnestly to preserve, that their attitude is in line with their whole conduct of public affairs during the past three years, and their motive the preservation of the rights of capitalists of this and other countries at the expense of the rights of the people. It is not a moral attitude that they have adopted for the direct purpose of preserving the honourable name of Newfoundland. It is not even a deathbed repentance for the past sins of the Government and an endeavour to do right. It is a continuation of the policy that has characterised them since their birth.

Now, sir, even at the expense of wearying this House I do propose to go into this matter a little deeper this atfernoon. I want to say here that any right that the Newfoundland Government has to deal with Crown lands was received from this Legislature, when the Crown Lands Act was passed and amendments made thereto. This Act deals with every conceivable kind of land. Whether timber, bog, agricultural land, water power, or minerals, the whole subject of land grants is dealt with by the Crown Lands Act, and the powers of the Governor in Council are specified therein. And outside these powers he has no right to go. Now it would be interesting for a moment to consider what motives actuated our Legislature in introducing and passing this Act. We had at that time a very considerable amount of Crown lands upon which there was growing valuable timber and underneath the surface of which there would probably be found valuable minerals, and near the surface of which were valuable bog lands, and in various portions of which we have valuable water powers. All these assets which belonged to the people were lying dormant, entirely idle. Nobody was receiving a dollar of advantage therefrom. Wealth untold in the Colony and yet the people of the Colony were receiving no advantage from it. So our Legislature very properly undertook to remedy this so far as it could. The Crown Lands Act was drafted and presented to the Legislature and passed with this object in view. Be it noted that that Legislature was very careful to hedge in all people who wanted to obtain land under this Act with numerous conditions, and all those conditions had in view one thing and one thing only, and that was the exploiting of the wealth which was in the country. None would imagine for a moment that it was the intention of the Legislature to make it possible for speculators to get the rights of timber and hold them for twenty-five years in order to make large profits. On the contrary the intention was that this valuable asset should be immediately utilised and commercialised for the benefit of the people of this country. Consequently anyone who got any timber rights or other rights under this Act was obliged to take those rights subject to certain conditions directed to this end, as I have already pointed out. It was provided that the Governor in Council could issue licenses to cut timber and other licenses to applicants upon certain conditions and provided that certain mills were built within a certain time and that certain operations were carried on. All this shows, when viewed as a whole, that the intention was that these areas should be operated. Now I intend to draw attention to some of these clauses this afternoon which deal with this matter. It was provided under Section 25 of the Crown Lands Act

(Reads.)

An applicant then who had a bona fide intention of opening up some of the valuable Crown lands and of employing men thereon and of taking those raw materials which are the assets of the Colony and of applying to them a certain amount of local labour, and rendering them consequently more valuable, would be thereby increasing the wealth of the Colony by making it possible for more men to earn a livelihood here. In order that everything should be fair and above board the Legislature further provided that no such leases should be granted until the notice of the intention of the applicant should be published in the Gazette for four weeks. The very next section of the Act, which is the important section, goes on to point out the conditions under which the licenses may be issued. I am going to read this portion of the Act verbatim.

(Reads.)

Now let us take the case of an applicant for an area of 500 square miles. Under those conditions if that application is approved and the license is issued, the holder has to manufacture every twenty-four hours in his mill 50,000 feet of lumber. Now there is an alternative to that.

In other words the Governor in Council could agree with this applicant that in the place of manufacturing 50,000 feet of timber every twenty-four hours he could manufacture something else that would be equivalent. In other words the intention was that he was not merely to manufacture timber, wheel barrows for instance, but that he should give a certain amount of labour whether in the cutting of timber, or in the manufacturing into lumber, or the cutting of the timber and the manufacturing of it into bureaus and washstands. Now there is also another alternative. But before I go on I wish to draw the attention of the Committee to this point.

(Reads.)

Now if either of these alternatives is adopted or agreed upon by the Governor in Council, the applicant shall have that embodied in his license, and further, there shall be a time limit placed upon the erection of the mill or other manufactory. Then there is the other alternative.

(Reads.)

But that may be agreed upon, and there has been no information received from the Crown Lands Office that any application was made for a reduction or increase of the quantity to be manufactured. There never was an application made because there never was a mill built to manufacture the lumber.

Now in addition to that and in order to provide the means whereby the Government may be able to check up as to whether the holder of the license was carrying out the terms of the license, there is another subsection of this one which goes on to provide that returns are to be made of the timber cut whether for pulp or paper, and that these returns are to be made in November of each year. And this cutting is liable to a royalty which has to be paid. And the Minister of Agriculture can take action if it is not paid. And if the returns are not filed at the proper time he can take a further action and compel them to be filed. And there is the provision which says that if the rents are not paid the license shall be forfeited. Under this clause, as I have already said, the Monroe Administration is to be commended for having in some instances undertaken to carry out the law and cancel certain licenses the rentals of which have not been paid. But there are other conditions that have not been complied with also. I think that it is unquestionable that in a number of cases no attempt of any kind whatever has been made to carry out the terms of the lease. And that particular breach of the contract is provided for in the amendment of the Crown Lands Act in 1918. The original Act I think provided that any holder of a lease who had failed to carry out any of the terms or conditions of his lease shall be liable to a fine of $10,000, and a further imposition of one hundred dollars a day for the continuation of his neglect. Somebody evidently discovered in the Legislature that this was not working as well as it ought to work, and that the Governor in Council either could not or would not carry out the provisions of the Act. And the amendment Sub-section 8 of Section 25 reads as follows:

(Reads.)

Now I th nk that is about as strong as the Legislature could possible make it. Finding that the fine of $10,000 was not doing its work, and that the further fine of $100 a day was not doing its work, the Legislature amended the act, so that now the license can be forfeited for any breach whatever. Under these circumstances it strikes me that the Governor-in-Council probably has the legal right to apply to the Supreme Court for the cancellation of those licenses. I have already made the statement that the authority of the Governor-in-Council to deal with these Crown Lands is specified clearly in that Crown Lands Act. A few days ago we were informed here that the Government had undertaken to extend the term within which the present holders of timber lands on Labrador could comply with the terms of their licenses. I say here and now that the Government in my opinion has no right or authority whatever to make any such extens ons. It is their duty to enforce that Crown Lands Act. And they are guilty, I say it plainly, they are guilty of the failure to do their duty if they fail to carry out the act as it stands, particularly when that act is aimed at the protecton of the assets of this Colony which are regarded as essential to our future to-day. Now there are certain contingencies in the Crown Lands Act itself under which an extension could be granted, or to put it in another way, the licensees are relieved from certain obligat ons which are contained in the Act. One of these is to the effect that where an individual holds a license he may get a further right to cut certain timber, for the manufacture of pulp without the payment of a royalty.

(Reads)

Now under subsect on 1 section 28 the very fact that the act sets forth certain conditions under which the Government-in-Council has the right to relieve him of some obligations, surely leads us to the conclusion that under the ord nary circumstances he has no such right. One of the obligations is to erect a saw-mill and properly operate it. Another is to make returns. And now we are told that the Governor-in-Council has extended the time limit for the erect on of saw-mills in favour of these gentlemen for another two years. They have no right to give them any such extension of this.

Now there is another point to which I want to refer, and that is the quest on of the obligation of the licensee with reference to the identification of the particular timber limits which has been assigned him. That is dealt w.th in section 37 of the Act which I propose to deal with in "extenso."

(Reads)

Now I directed a question to the Department of Agriculture and Mines a few days ago on this point. I asked for the dates when these various applications were approved and I got them, and I asked for the dates upon which the surveys were filed and I did not get them, for the simple reason that there is not a single one in existence. There are no records dealing with th:s matter in the Crown Lands office and we must conclude therefore that there never was a survey made. If that was not done within one year after the approval of the application then all the licensees rights were forfeited. And now I propose to read to the House the part of the act which relieves that stringency to some extent. In other words, if it is impossible to make the survey and file the same within 12 months, it may be extended for a further time not exceeding two years, on payment of an extra bonus of $2.00 per square mile within 30 days of granting the extension. Now note that! It is provided, in favour of the licensees that if it found impossible, reasonably impossible, for them to comply with the strict letter of the law and file the survey within 12 months from the time of the approval of the r applications, they can, by applying to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, by proving that it was so impossible, and by paying the bonus of $2.00, obtain an extension of time within which the survey may be made and filed, for two years and no longer. There exists in the Governor-in-Council the power to permit any such licensees to fail in that regard for a limited period. But there have been no surveys filed—I asked the Minister and he has told me that there were none—and apparently the bonus has never been paid. Two or three applied for extensions at varying times, but even after they got it they didn't make and file their survey. In other words they didn't carry out the terms of this particular section, and that being so I claim that they have forfeited their leases.

(Reads)

Now sir, we didn't need that amendment of 1918 for the purpose of forfeit ng these gentlemen's licenses. They had been forfeited years and years ago, and the Governor-in-Council of the day, and of day after day as Governments came and went, failed in their duty to the people of this country, and took no steps to see the conditions fulfilled. And that is the situat:on to-day. There are a number of licenses held by various persons on the Labrador to cut timber on varied areas of land, and far from the mills being erected there has not even been a survey of the limits. These licenses have been held for varying periods, some for nearly 30 years. They have at times and most irregularly paid their license rentals, but have not at any time attempted to survey the limits which it is claimed are theirs—they have totally ignored the Crown Lands Act in every particular, and yet the present administration comes in and asks us to believe that these people have r:ghts against the people of this Colony. What utter trash and nonsense! Now I have one of these licenses here and in order that we may be more specific I am going to read it. This is a license granted on the first day of August 1914 to a Corporation known as the London-Labrador Corporation, Ltd., of London. whereby, they acquire the right to cut t mber over an area of some 512 square miles, more or less. And that is as far as they have ever gotten with it! They have never made the survey in accordance with the Act; they have never filed the survey in the Crown Lands Office; they have never applied for an extension of time for making a survey; they have never paid the bonus they should have paid. They d d nothing except pay their rentals. Now here are some of the conditions contained in this license—this is an actual license; it s not a matter of law but a matter of fact.

(Reads)

That was in 1914, thirteen years ago Mr. Chairman, and that mill is not there yet. And yet we are asked to believe that these people have rights! Now in place of building the mill they might have done this.

(Reads)

Sir, that factory isn't there yet! And we are asked to believe that these people have rights!

(Reads)

And they are to keep correct books, so that the Minister or his duly authorized agents may be able to go over them. Further he has the right to go in the mill and examine it if he wants to. And there are two or three other clauses dealing with the right of the Governor-in-Council to make roads and bridges, and for ordinary citizens to cut timber for vessels and spars and so on. And then we come to the second last clause.

(Reads)

Now I am not going to deal with the question as to whether that is an absolute forfeiture or not—to be frank, I think it is somewhat doubtful. But the intention of the Governor-in-Council of that day was that in the event of the licensee failing to carry out the terms of his license it would mmediately cease. Whether the interpretation put on that by lawyers is that they have lost their rights or not, it is clear that the expressed intention was that if they didn't carry out the terms of their licenses they were to cease at once. That is how an ord nary man reads it, and that is how these licensees read it, and that was the spirit of the license, whatever the letter of the law may be. And yet this Corporation, having failed to put up their mill; having failed to put up a factory, hav.ng failed to make a survey; having failed to file a survey in the office of the Minister of Agriculture and Mines—having failed to do anything except pay rentals, claims that they have to-day an honest, bona fide, valid and equitable right to this property which belongs to the people of the Colony. Perhaps my knowledge of moral rights is not so extensive as that possessed by some of the members of the Executive Council in this Colony; perhaps my moral vision is somewhat twisted, but I freely admit that in my opinion an individual who enters into a contract and fails to carry out a half dozen of its terms is from the other party. If I enter into an agreement with a gentleman from the other side to-morrow to operate a saw-mill continuously and to give returns each year, to make a survey and give me a copy and to pay a rental, and he did no more than pay a rental, would anyone conceive that he was carrying out the terms of the agreement, or that I would not be justified in putting an end to it. I contend that the Legislature has not only a legal but a moral right to cancel every license on the Labrador, the terms of which have not been complied with. It is argued that these gentlemen have paid their money and that, having accepted that money it would be dishonourable on our part to now say "We have your money, but now that you are in our power we are going to take your lands from you." Sir, we have never suggested that any such thing be done—my contention is that the Governments of ten and fifteen years ago have illegally accepted these rentals; they have illegally allowed these men to go on—they have failed in their duty by not cancelling these licenses. They knew their terms were not being carried out and accepted that in defiance of the law. And now, because they have failed in their duty, because they have allowed speculators to hold on when they ought not to have done so the Legislature is expected to back up illegal actions.

One may be forgiven Sir, if in reviewing the history of timber lands, the history of timber licenses and the story of licensees for the past 24 years, one is suspicious that individuals in governments of the past have been in collusion with these licensees. I say again that one may be forgiven if suspicions enter his mind that members of governments have been in collusion with licensees in connection with timber limits. I don't suppose there is one out of twenty who ever had the slightest intention of carrying out the terms of his license, and the story of these licenses during the past twenty-four years leads one to the conclusion that governments never expected them to carry them out. If that is true then clearly they were guilty of malfeasance; the transactions were wholly illegal, the acceptance of their money was illegal, and we as a Legislature are not bound to endorse it. If the Executive Government chooses to usurp powers which it does not possess then let them answer for it—it is not for the people of the Colony to do so. I say the Executive Government never had the right to permit these people to go on, as they have gone on, paying infinitesimal rentals upon large areas of timber limits—holding on with a view to going into foreign markets and hawking our property so that they might receive a big price for the natural assets of Newfoundland, instead of the people to whom they belong—a speculation; a game of poker, and we as a Legislature are expected to endorse the gamble of these adventurers. Asked to protect the rights of speculators in one of the few remaining assets of the country by giving those assets away for nothing. There was never a bona fide intention on the part of these men to carry out the Crown Lands Act or the terms of the licenses which they hold. They entered into an agreement which is here in writing, and under the Seals of His Excellency the Governor in Council, knowing at the time that they were not prepared to carry out their contract. One might say in the terminology of lawyers that the parties were never ad idem, in other words that there never was a contract, or if there was one it was illegal, between an Executive Council acting beyond its powers and outside parties, prepared to take advantage of anything they might plunder. The Governor-in-Council had the Crown Lands Act before them, or if they didn't they ought to have had it—if not it is no use to plead ignorance. If, having that before them they issued these licenses and permitted the parties to carry on by paying rentals, sometimes letting these go in arrears for years,and never tried to make them carry out the terms, that is their own business. They acted entirely outside the law, and on their own heads be whatever may befall, but that has nothing to do with us. If these gentlemen had carried out their agreements I would be the last to come in here and suggest the lands be taken back and vested in the Crown. But I do say this, and without fear of contradiction, that these men who took these licenses never had the slightest intention of carrying out their terms or those of the Crown Lands Act—they accepted them under false pretences and with the intention of speculating for their own advantage. Not one of them intended to build a mill! I believe there was one who tried—Dockie, but no one else in Newfoundland or Labrador—not one intended to export pulpwood. We have heard too much during the last twenty years of the stipulations in the Crown Lands Act to have any doubt of that. Anyone here could name individuals who were veritable timber pirates, and who sold large areas of water as timber limits to unsuspecting individuals. And it is men of that type who accepted these licenses, and we are asked to regard the rights of these gentlemen who utterly neglected their agreements, and were permitted so to do by various Executive Governments who should have known better. It is time to put a stop to it! Very little profit has ever accrued to us because of licenes to cut timber; the whole object of the Act has been defeated, and no labor given; the natural assets of the Colony have never been exploited, in the sense of development—it was purely a case of holding on until they could get some one to buy it, at a price that enabled the seller to retire. They have paid thir rentals—that is one of the arguments which has been used to convince this Committee and the people of the country generally, I suppose, that these gentlemen ought not to be interferred with to-day. There is no attempt to take any of the profit which they may make of the timber lands they hold. They have paid their rentals—it is not advanced as an argument in their favour that they have carried out the terms of their agreements—that they did not receive them for the purpose of exploiting these limits, as the Act suggests.

The Government does not offer as a reason for considering what rights these people may have, that they failed in these matters upon which the framers of the Crown Lands Act intended their rights should depend. This Act was never framed and passed by the Legislature for the purpose of permitting these individuals with a few dollars to gamble in the assets of the country—the Act was passed for the purpose of opening up the internal resources of the country, and the framers were very careful (which is more than we are sometimes) to see that the rights of the Colony were protected. Having done their work, and framed an Act which if carried out would have been of great benefit, they left it to the Governor-in-Council to see that the details were carried out in each individual case. But the Governor in Council fell by the wayside, and in place of licenses being issued which were of advantage to the Colony, which opened up and developed the internal resources, which gave labor to the people and revenue to the Government, a scandalous system of land grabbing has been going on for 24 years, which has been of advantage to no one but speculators. It is true that they lost sometimes, but a man can't go into a game of poker without losing occasionally. So much for the payment of rentals.

And then another argument is put forward in excuse for these gentlemen's failure to conform, namely that their title was doubtful. Didn't they know what title they were getting when they obtained these leases, and wasn't it their business to find out? If I sell a house to-morrow I don't lose time searching the title—I leave that to the buyer, and sell him whatever title I have. And if timber speculators take a lease to-morrow we don't guarantee him their title. If I am wrong the Attorney General can correct me—we are not bound to give any title. We say, "There it is—there is the land." If the title is bad that's the other fellow's business. If they know the title is doubtful, it is up to them to take it or leave it. Do you suggest for a moment that any firm or corporation with serious intentions of going on a large tract of timber land such as this one of 512 square miles and operating under the terms of the Crown Lands Act would take it unless they were sure of their title. If this London and Labrador Corporation honestly intended when they received the license to go on the Labrador and make the necessary survey, build the necessary mill and operate year after year, they would have taken very great care indeed to see that their title was a sound one. And if they did not take any care, then we can only assume that they did not intend to go to the Labrador and did not intend to operate at all and that their whole aim and object was to hold that timber until they could sell it at a handsome profit, and that is what they did. It is quite clear, sir, from all the facts that from the first day of August, 1914, down to the present day these people never had the slightest intention of operating a mill. If they had, they would have seen to it that the title was good, and if it was not good they would not pay their rentals, unless they had an ulterior motive and that ulterior motive was to hold the land, if the title holds out to be good, until they could sell it at a huge profit. There has also been advanced a further reason why they had not complied with the terms of their license, namely, because the Canadians stopped them from doing it. I am surprised to hear such an argument put forward. What have we to do with the Canadians? Supposing the Australians or the New Zealanders or some Hottentots from the middle of Africa came over and attempted to stop them. What have they got to do with us? We gave these people a license under the conditions that they were to build and operate a mill and if some outsider comes in and begins to kick up a dust over it, what business is that of ours? We are told of one instance in which the Canadian Government did send a man to the Labrador some years ago and interfered with some one who was going to operate a mill there. In all probability that man who was interfered with has a claim against the Canadian Government to-day. That man's rights were illegally interfered with and it is up to him to take action against the Canadian Government and not against us. We simply gave him the license to operate. If Canada interfered and had no right to interfere, then this man must look to Canada for compensation, but we have nothing to do with it. We gave him a license and under the terms of that license he failed entirely to carry out his agreement. It has also been suggested here that we led this corporation to believe that they would be safe enough if we won the dispute with Canada and that as a consequence they risked their money. Who led them to believe that? I suppose that must have been the Executive Council I do not know who else there is to do it. Well I want to tell the Executive Council that they had no right whatever to lead them to believe such. The Executive Council were stepping entirely outside the Crown Lands Act when they did it. I repeat the Executive Council have no powers outside the Crown Lands Act, and when they assured these gentlemen, if they did so, that they could pay their rentals and forget the conditions of the license, the Governor in Council went entirely outside its powers. It was the act of ten men who failed in their duty under the Crown Lands Act and we are not responsible. Next we come to the correspondence that was tabled in this House a few days ago showing that three sets of parties applied for an extension of time within which to erect saw mills and comply with the other terms of their licenses. There is the estate of J. J. Tobin, C. P. Eagan and Alderdice who hold 2434 square miles of timber; the London Labrador Corporation, Limited, with 512 square miles and the Labrador Pulp and Paper Company, Limited with 2158 on the Labrador. Now if my information is correct all those areas are on the southern portion of the Labrador, that portion nearest to the River St. Lawrence and the most valuable portion from the standpoint of timber in the Labrador. In fact I have been talking to fishermen who have been going to the Labrador all their lives and they tell me that if the licenses which are at present in existence cover timber limits southern of Hamilton Inlet then you can forget the rest of the Labrador so far as timber is concerned. In other words, if these licenses are going to stand the rest of the Labrador is not worth a snap of my finger, despite the $200,000.00 spent on winning it. These gentlemen speculators have got all the benefit out of it and all we got is the experience.

It is interesting to know the attitude of these gentlemen. Here is a copy of a letter to the Executive Government from the estate of J. J. Tobin and C. P. Eagan:

(Reads Letter)

Note how carefully these gentlemen stress the fact that they paid rentals; but they are not so specific about erecting saw mills. These people have not carried out the initial terms of the Crown Lands Act, namely, the survey. A survey should have been made within twelve months after the license was issued, but two years have now elapsed and no survey made. Now, Sir, that letter is a request to the Executive Council to do an illegal act, a request to the Executive Council to do something that has no warrant under the Crown Lands Act and the Government assents to the proposition. In my opinion, Sir, the assent of the Governor-in-Council is not worth the paper it is written on because it is outside the provisions of the Crown Lands Act entirely and the Governor-in-Council had no business to place itself in such a position as that in which it now stands with reference to these matters, and, may I be pardoned for saying, Sir, that doubts, as to the lofty motives of the Government, are entertained by those of us on this side of the House. The letter I have just read is signed by C. P. Eagan and John Tobin as Executor of the estate of the late James Tobin. Now we come to the London-Labrador Corporation Limited whose license I read here this afternoon. Be it noted that none of those gentlemen got very busy about this license until after the decision of the Labrador Boundary question, as the following letter to the Governor-in-Council shows:

(Reads Letter)

Well that is interesting if true but we have no proof of it whatever.

(Reads)

That may or may not be true. I have grave doubts of it myself.

(Reads)

They wake up after eighteen or twenty years to discover that there are some terms in the license wh:ch ought to have been complied with.

(Reads)

That law suit is thirty years old. They have held the license for twenty years and in 1927 they finally discover there has been a law suit.

(Reads)

I presume they hope it has happ:ly terminated. They won't regard it as happy unless we let them get away with what they want.

(Reads)

If they read the Hansard of this House which will be published about twelve months time they will find that there was three years from the date of the license and the date of the license in 1924.

(Reads)

Evidently these investors are aware of the fact that the Newfoundland Government has a right to forfeit their licenses and they want the Newfoundland Government to waive their rights under their failure to perform their conditions of the license.

(Reads)

So if they will read the Hansard they can take the information from me that the Governor-in-Council has no right to waive the performance of these conditions.

(Reads)

The Newfoundland Government ought not to have accepted these rentals.

May I be pardoned for saying so but I believe that to be absolutely untrue. I don't believe they ever had the slightest intention of developing the property. Their idea was to float a company which might or might not afterwards develop the property but only

In other words if you have the power to revoke this license we want you to waive this right, if you haven't the powers then beat the law in another way by giving us a new license, so we can start all over again. The dishonesty of that document is apparent on the face of it.

Then there is another one. This is the14thof June after the present Bill was tabled in this House.

They have expended a large sum of money in acquiring these licenses. I wonder where it was expended. I wonder if this colony received it and if not who did and if after this letter in itself is not the best evidence we have that they are speculators. They didn't pay this Colony a large sum of money. We got a miserable two dollars a square mile for it, but somebody got a large sum of money for it.

Sir, I cannot understand how any sane, sensible man can take a document of that character seriously. Nine or ten years ago these people go to the Government of Newfoundland and make an application for a timber license to cut timber on the Labrador. They make that application with a knowledge of the Crown Lands Act; w:th a knowledge of its provisions. If they don't they are fools. We must assume that they knew the provisions of the Crown Lands Act. They make application to the Governor-in-Council for the grant of a license to cut timber on the Labrador under the conditions of the license and under the terms of the Crown Lands Act and the license is granted. I am entitled to assume that when that license was granted it was the intention of the Governor-in-Council that that Crown Lands Act should be carried out and that the terms and conditions of that lease should be fulfilled. At the time I probably would have assumed that the Executive Council intended this should be done and I would be compelled to assume on the grounds I suppose that every man is innocent until he is proved otherwise, that the licensee intended to carry out the terms and conditions of the license. But from 1914 to 1927 no attempt whatever has been made by the licensee to fulfil those conditions which are essential to the retention of his license and Governments from time to time, in spite of the fact that they and a Minister of Agriculture and Mines presumably familiar with these matters, whose duty it was to watch these various holders of timber limits, apparently took no action whatever, made no attempt to bring these licensees to book, accepted the payment of rentals from time to time without making any inquiry as to whether the other terms and conditions of the licenses had been fulfilled or not and in that way were guilty of a prostitution of the Crown Lands Act. They used the powers given them under that Act to grant away areas of timber lands to persons who had no intention whatever of carrying out the terms of their agreements and whose objects were entirely foreign to what was intended by the Act. They got that land as a private speculation buying at two dollars a square mile in the hope that some one would come along and pay them a hundred, and some of them, sir, got away with that, some of them after holding on to these areas did sell some of them to people who really intended to operate and thereby became rich. The subject is one sir, that is distressing to anyone that has the interests of this country at heart, and who contemplates the manner in which our natural resources have been made ducks and drakes of during the past twenty or thirty years. Some individuals have got rich because the Governor-in-Council permitted them to acquire licenses to cut timber, and sell them to some outside investors, and as I have already pointed out to some investors at least they sold large well watered lakes.

Now sir, to me and I feel that to many of the members of this House the position is quite clear. Ever since the passing of the Crown Lands Act, it has been prostituted for the purposes of speculation, by people who had no interest whatever in this country, and whose only object was to make all the money they could out of it. And the people guilty of this conduct sir, have been permitted to do so by the connivance or the neglect of the various executive councils from time to time. There has been very little effort made, we find, by Governments in the past to see that those who acquired timber lands under the Crown Lands Act kept their lawful contracts. As regards those contracts I do not think that it would be going too far to say that the various Executive Councils from time to time, accepted these rentals from these speculators knowing that they were not carrying out the provisions of their licenses or the Act, and they did not care whether they carried them out or not. And under such circumstances the Governor-in-Council was acting entirely outside its rights. It was permitting something to be done that it had no right to permit. And those who were sacrificing the interests and the rights of the people of this Colony were doing it with eyes open. With the Crown Lands Act before them they permitted these people to get away with this kind of jockeying. They held up timber rights and water powers for the purpose of speculation in order that they may make fortunes. They saw that prostitution of the Act going on, not for a day nor for a month, but for 20 years, and never on a single occasion as far as I am aware has any Government stepped in and attempted to do its obvious duty. In many instances the action of the Government in connection with these matters was illegal as I tell the Government this afternoon their extensions are. If at any future time I happen to be a member of that party which has a majority in this House and this question comes up before this House, I know what attitude that I shall take in the matter. And I am satisfied that every hon. member on this side of the House would take exactly the same position. I say sir, that this thing has been permitted to go on illegally. It has been permitted to go on immorally. No attempt has been made by the Government of the day from time to time to call a halt and preserve the rights of the people of this country to their natural resources. One would think from the attitude of some of the members in this House that Newfoundland possesses timber lands for no other purposes than to give these gentlemen a chance to make money, and that the people had no rights at all. This country has carried out its obligations under these licenses and these gentlemen have carried out none of theirs, except as to the payment of rentals, and yet to-day they are the persons who must be shown courtesy by this House, and we must forget entirely the people whom we represent. I want to tell the members of this House that we are not here representing any speculative interests. We represent the people of this country and we are here to preserve the rights of the people of this country against those who hold them improperly. Those, I say, who have timber property on Labrador to-day hold that property improperly. In no single instance whatever save in the payment of rentals have they made any attempt whatever to carry out the conditions under which they received their grants, not even as regards the surveying of the limit itself. If you went down there to-day or any time within the past twenty years it would be impossible to locate the particular areas which any of these gentlemen holds. They have got a sort of inchoate claim to the timber on Labrador. Just where that timber is has never been defined. Admittedly there has never been any survey, and yet we are asked to-day to endorse their licenses the terms of which have never been carried out. And we are regarded as the type of men that deprive others of their rights because we are opposed to the retention of these areas by these people.

I want to refer for a moment to the value of that Labrador. I don't suppose that there is a single Hon. Member in this House this afternoon who has any real knowledge of the value of that territory. I must quite frankly say that I have not. But we have seen statements made in the newspapers and by various persons at different times, since the settlement of the dispute to the effect that it is worth to the ancient colony, $200,000,000 $250,000,000, and so on. I have not got the faintest idea as to whether either of these statements is even aproximately correct. But it is quite apparent that there are a number of people, there are some I know, who have some idea of the value of that territory and who believe it is a valuable one. If it is valuable then we must remember that it is the last asset in the nature of timber of any appreciable value which this country possesses. We have no timber in Newfoundland. At least I understand that we have very little. What we have is not worth talking about. So insignificant is it in fact that the Government to-day does not consider it worth while to include Newfoundland in the operation of the Labrador Bill which is before the House now. If then we have any asset in the nature of timber at all today it is this Labrador, which the Privy Council finally decided belongs to us. If then it is worth half or quarter of that $250,000,000 it is of essential importance to this country that it should be conserved. It is a notorious fact that the national debt of Newfoundland today is over $70,000,000, and according to a statement made by the Prime Minister it is possible that even in the very near future we may be saddled with another $10,000,000 on account of the Humber industry. In other words it is likely to approximate another $80,000,000. When one adds to that the fact that the present Government admits that there is a deficit of something over $2,000,000 on current and railway account, we can confidently anticipate the necessity of a further loan of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 which will bring the national debt up to $85,000,000. Under existing suggestions I say that unless we can conserve every possible asset that Newfoundland has it will be hardly possible to meet our obligations in any shape or form. Less than twenty years ago the debt of this country was less than $23,000,000. Now it is nearly four times that. I forbear at the present moment to comment upon the causes of that terrific inincrease in our national debt, but it is there and it must be faced. And if this Labrador is an asset and is of value to its owner, is it not our duty as the representatives of the people of this country to do all in our power to see that it is conserved for the people. Why should we lie down because these speculators claim that they own it, and let them take it? Must we take the atitude suggested by the present administration, and say, "They paid their rentals and therefore let them take it." Must we forget the fact that they have not carried out the terms of their agreement? Must we as the representatives of the people deprive this country and the people of the only remaining asset we have of value in the nature of timber?

I say, sir, that if this Labrador is of value, for the purpose of lifting this Newfoundland of ours out of the slough of despond into which it is plunged, then it would be to the undying shame of this Legislature if it passed a measure that failed to preserve that territory intact. Generations yet unborn will live to curse us.

As I have already pointed out here this afternoon, the most valuable part of this territory is the Southern portion. I am informed by fishermen who have spent their life time on the Labrador that this is the case. I am further informed that most of the licenses which exist cover areas on this portion, and if these individuals are permitted to retain them, the best of Labrador will be lost to the Colony. And further than that, assuming for the sake of argument that a large quantity of that portion is not covered by these licenses, I suggest this for the consideration of the House, that the Labrador intact is worth more than twice as much as half of it would be. We will not command half price of the whole for half of the territory; in other words, as the quantity shrinks, so proportionately will the price shrink also, and our duty, as I see it, is not to speculators but to the Colony. If these gentlemen had any moral rights I would be prepared to consider them, but I do sincerely contend that they have no moral rights, and that payments of rentals have been dragged out of them by Governments which ought not to have dragged them out. They only pay because they want to retain the lands, so that as soon as conveniently may be they can sell to speculators for huge sums. The agreements under which they have held have been entirely ignored—there has been no effort to carry them out, and no intention to make an effort, and they come in with an effrontery that is almost unbelieveable and ask the Government to give them an extension, and the Government meekly falls for it. I trust, sir, that the present administration will take this matter into serious consideration; I trust they will see that to continue on such a line of conduct is detrimental to the interests of the people of the Colony, and a giving away of the birthright of the people—the only thing in my opinion which can save us unless miraculous good fortune intervenes. This is one of the means whereby the present stress can possibly be relieved. There are other reforms which I don't intend to labour now, but to which I have referred before, and which the present administration promised and failed to carry out. These have to be coupled with this. One of the necessary courses which the Government must adopt if they are to pull the Colony through is the preservation of whatever is in the Labrador for the people of the Colony. The deaf ear must be turned to the whinings and demands of speculators whose only desire is to gamble with the assets of the country.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Mr. Chairman: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the eloquent speech made by the honourable member for Port de Grave. There is just one point that strikes me, and that is that I came in to take charge of the Government as a very ordinary layman, and I endeavoured to get all the best legal advice I could in my Executive to keep me straight on questions of this kind. Now this matter came up while Mr. Bradley was a member of the Executive, and Mr. Bradley, to my knowledge, never raised the point at any time of the cancellation of the leases of those who had paid rentals to date, and neither did any other legal or other member of the Council. The question of cancellation of those leases which were paid up was never mooted, and the position is not a bit different to-day than when Mr. Bradley sat in the Council—it is not changed in one iota. The position is that if they didn't have rights then they haven't got them now, and if they did then, they have them now. If we were to take them by the throat and attempt to compel them to give up these properties, they would claim that they have a right to them —if we were to take legal action it would surely have been a great deal more reasonable to have taken it two years ago. The more money paid in by these people, the less right we have to cancellation—that is a view anyone would take I am sure. That is why I am so astonished that the honourable member for Port de Grave who is able to tell us how absolutely wrong this is was sitting in the Council and did not raise this point even though we were discussing cancellations of leases on which rentals were not paid up. Surely if anyone had thought when that was before us that even those who had paid up to date should be cancelled, that was the time to say so, and I want to say before the House that from no one have I had the suggestion that these should be cancelled. When this matter came up the Minister of Agriculture and Mines asked the position and the Minister of Justice said: "Of course they must have another two years." As to any question of legality, that has never occurred to me. There was no ulterior motive before the Government in connection with extensions of these conditions; there is not a single member interested. I am nearer to having an interest than any other member, inasmuch as a relative of mine is connected with the Lewis property. He has never spoken to me, nor has anyone else, and I did not know there was anything being looked for that might be regarded as a concession.

Now we have time to finish the Bill to-night unless some other member wishes to speak. The Bill has one object only, to prevent the Labrador from being given out to speculators. I do not think any member of the Opposition opposes the principle.

MR. HICKMAN—May I ask the honourable introducer if he intends to reject in toto the amendment brought in by the Opposition.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—Yes.

MR. BRADLEY—Mr. Chairman: The Hon. the Prime Minister has suggested that it is rather late in the day for me to bring this matter up, and that when I was a member of the Executive Council I said nothing about it. That is true in part. But I was not one of the law officers of the Crown, and was not called upon to investigate licenses or examine as to who performed their conditions. There was the Minister of Agriculture and Mines, in the person of Mr. Walsh, who knew the facts, and the Hon. Attorney-General, who was a member of the Council, and if he was satisfied I wasn't going to take up the question. Even if I was a lawyer, if he didn't raise the question naturally I wouldn't do so. But I want to say that if anyone was a kicker to have licenses cancelled I was the one, and I was kicking for 12 months before I could get any action. And furthermore, since I am forced to say it now, I want to make the statement that although for 2 years I was a member in the Council, I was never of it, sir.

DR. MOSDELL—I was not present in the House when the Bill regarding the Labrador reached its second reading and, up to now, I have had no opportunity of making a pronouncement on it. I have been given to understand, from statements published by the Government press, and from pronouncements made in the House by members and supporters of the Government, particularly by the gentlemen who moved and seconded the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, that the intention of this legislation is to ensure the exploitation of the Labrador territory to its fullest value for the especial advantage of the people of Newfoundland generally. With any such intention, decision or undertaking I entirely agree. The principle of protection and advancement of popular rights is one of major importance; it is also, Mr. Chairman, one to which scant respect is usually shown when public undertakings are being dealt with. Now, if I were persuaded in my own mind that this Labrador Bill did, in deed and truth, represent a departure from the old order; if I were convinced that the principle proclaimed as inspiring this measure is being entrenched and protected by the provisions of the Bill and if I felt tolerably sure that this legislation would, in effect, conserve and advance the material interests of the ordinary people of this country in the highest possible degree, then I for one would not occupy the time of this Committee discussing this matter to any great extent. I would simply voice my approval of the Bill, would give it my support and my vote and would help all I could to hurry it along its due course towards the Statute Book of Newfoundland.

During the considerable number of days I have sat here in Committee, I have listened carefully to the pronouncements of various members of the Opposition in criticism of this Labrador legislation, and I have to admit that there has been ground for extended debate of the measure, for stern fault-finding and for outspoken expression of the suspicion and the claim that this Bill will not safeguard the exploitation and disposition of Labrador territory in accordance with the principle enunciated by the Government when the measure was brought into the House.

The bare susicion that this proposed legislation will leave popular rights without adequate protection is calculated to disturb any representative of a district who takes his duties and his responsibilities seriously. The consideration that, in enacting this measure, he may be entrenching those who encroach or seek to encroach on popular rights on the Labrador is sufficient to bring such a member of the House of Assembly to his feet in indignant protest. It is for that reason, and that reason only, and to give outspoken expression of my own firm convictions in that connection, that I am addressing this Committee of the House this afternoon. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I have absolutely no intention, that I have no idea whatever in mind of attempting to cause delay in these proceedings and that obstruction of public business is far from my thoughts. I would,I assure this Committee, be the first to frown on any ill-timed attemt to prevent the Government from enacting legislation indubitably calculated to advance the interests of the common people of the country. I call your attention, sir, to the fact that member after member of His Majesty's Oposition has addressed himself to the terms and effects of this Bill. Member after member from this side of the House has spoken in critical, in uncomplimentary and in hostile terms of the measure. Every Opposition member has given good and sufficient reason for the denunciations they have hurled at this legislation, so bright in promise, but so utterly disappointing in its actual terms and provisions.

Reviewing in thought the course of this Bill since its introduction here, sir, I am persuaded in my own mind that it might have gone through Committee with a great deal more of ease than has actually been the case, or is likely to be the case, had it not been for the disquieting announcement made, just after the debate started, that certain extensions of rights in respect to large and very valuable areas on Labrador had been granted by the Governor-in-Council, without reference to this House or to this Legislature. This announcement, in effect, informed us casually and for the first time that a number of leases of Labrador territory, including a total of close on twelve thousand square miles of the best and most accessible timberland, worth in terms of money many millions of dollars, had been extended for a further period of two years. The effect of this official action of the Government is to alienate forever from the possession and the profit of the ordinary citizen of Newfoundland the whole of this vast and valuable area and to confirm in their title those who, in the opinion of members on this side of the House, have not consistently lived up to the terms set forth in their leases. The circumstances under which that announcement was made, the nature of that announcement and its obvious effects, were so astonishing to the members of His Majesty's Opposition that it led them to examine with more than usual care the bona fides of Government claims based on the provisions of this Bill. It suggested more careful calculations of the probable effects of the Bill in operation. It inspired persistent and searching questions as to the motives and intentions of the Government. In fact, that development itself, and not any intention or any desire of the Opposition to be unduly or unreasonably pugnacious or obstructive in such a connection, has led to the extent to which this debate has been initiated and sustained by members on this side of the House.

With respect to the legal effects of the Bill I do not pretend to be qualified to pronounce. I have listened with considerable attention to the eloquent and reasoned pronouncement made to the Committee by my friend, the honourable member for Port de Grave. His legal training has enabled him to analyse the provisions of the measure from a professional standpoint. One important result of this phase of the debate is the extent to which lay members of the House have been made familiar with the provisions of the Crown Lands Act and the effects and significance thereof. Even though we have lawyers on opposing sides of the House who disagree as to the effects of this Statute in practice, we have learned some new points about the provisions of timber licenses in effect in this country and on Labrador. It is something worth while to be educated as to the significance, the conditions involved and the line of conduct laid down by the enactments of this Legislature.

My honourable friend, Mr. Bradley, who preceded me, wound up his eloquent and effective speech with a reference to the wealth of this Labrador territory and its prospective value to Newfoundland. He did it very well, but even so I propose, as a layman, to address myself particularly, to this aspect of the discussion and trust I will be able to so treat it that I will succeed in advancing some fresh points of significance to both sides of this House. It is true that the Bill now before us has been traversed and re-traversed. Its provisions have been considered and examined and discussed from numerous points of view. It may be contended that the discussion has been both exhaustive and exhausting. I hold, however, that the extent to which the discussion has been continued is proof positive of the desire of honourable members to proceed with the utmost care and caution with the enactment of legislation so far-reaching in its effects on the general welfare of this country. The opposition have offered much more than destructive criticism of the measure now before us. Not only have they subjected it to critical analysis and not only have they condemned what they regarded as the certain effects of some of its sections, but they have brought in a constructive amendment and have given the Leader of the Government a full and definite idea of the lines on which they considered a measure of this sort, embodying the principles declared to be associated with it, would be constructed. Members opposite saw fit to discard that amendment in toto. It is true that, from a technical constitutional standpoint, they were correct in their attitude. The amendment contained a provision that the Opposition were not competent to offer, one for the payment of money to re-imburse leaseholders who had paid in certain moneys to the Crown by way of rentals for their timberlands. But, that amendment was offered at the invitation of the Leader of the Government and in the best of faith. It was constructed with the most careful deliberation. Had it been admitted by the Government, even in modified form, it would, in my opinion, have been most effective in protecting the underlying principle of the Bill.

Frequently, in a discussion like the present, it is very necessary to hark back to first causes. We have been debating, day after day, the provisions of a Bill in relation to the disposition of territory on Labrador. We have heard the ordinary laymen and we have listened to the lawyers air their views. There is always a danger, in a connection like this, of allowing a discussion of something that is secondary to the subject attract our attention from the big point at issue. I, therefore, urge upon this Committee contemplation of the fact that we are now engaged in debate on a matter which, dependent on how we decide to act in connection with it, will make for the future weal or woe of our country. Very, very often a multitude of words will submerge a consideration of this nature. We must carefully avoid allowing the sound and fury of debate to deafen our ears to the insistent calls of public necessity and public duty. I do think, therefore, that at this stage of the debate it would profit the country and the Committee, if we were to consider, if for a few minutes only, the vastness of the territory on Labrador with which this Bill is concerned, the importance of that territory to Newfoundland now and the value of that territory to Newfoundland in the future, should we reach a time when it can be disposed of to financial advantage. Later on, we can go ahead and thresh out the meaning and significance of the various clauses of the measure.

Geographically and territorially, our definite acquisition of Labrador puts Newfoundland prominently on the map. Until the recent momentous decision of the Privy Council in our favor, we were only a small island, a tiny speck of creation. Now, we have not only our own Newfoundland lands in our undisputed possession but have, in addition, Labrador lands aggregating the vast area of one hundred thousand square miles. Newfoundland, then, in the outside world, both in geographical position and in territorial extent, is a vastly different and more important country than it was before the Privy Council handed down the decision which assured us the ownership of Labrador beyond all question, dispute and preadventure. As a result of that decision we are here considering a measure intended to govern our future methods of disposing of that territory. Our victory in the fight for Labrador has engaged our attention and has constituted a drain on our efforts and our finances for the last quarter of a century. The conduct of our case has occupied the cleverest legal minds of the country, including the present Attorney-General, down through these many years. Having, therefore, given so much of money to bring our case to its recent victorious issue, it is the obvious duty of every member of this Chamber to make as certain as is humanly possible in this life of uncertainties that our time and efforts, and brains and any measure we enact as a law to govern the disposition of this territory benefits, first, last and always, the people of Newfoundland to whom this matter is so vitally, so supremely important at the present time. Let us not forget, either, that when we have stated the vast area of our Labrador possession, we have not stated the chief reason for its outstanding importance to our country and our fellowcountrymen. I say, sir, that the possession of that territory, to have and to hold and to dispose of, represents to the average Newfoundlander a chance of the realisation of the hope that, through its proper and profitable disposition, this country can be saved from some of the grave menaces it now faces as a result of some of the terrible tribulations through which it has passed of recent years. This measure is designed to effect such a proper and profitable disposition. It is incumbent on us, therefore, to make as sure as we can that nothing we enact here will dash the hopes of those we represent or will spoil the future of our own country.

The total area of Labrador has been stated as exceeding one hundred thousand square miles. The figures are staggering enough, but mean little unless we have some knowledge of the contents of the territory represented thereby. What does our Labrador area contain that is of commercial value, that we can realise upon in the near or remote future and in terms of dollars and cents? Of this feature of our Labrador territory we cannot speak definitely, except in one or two respects. We do know something of its wealth of timberlands and of its potentialities in waterpower resources. Of its minerals we cannot affirm anything certain. However, nature is usually very kind to lands so situated. She usually provides some compensation for the bleakness and the remoteness of their surroundings and their situation. We are hoping that we will discover this to be the case in respect to the Labrador.

Mr. Chairman, it is now half past six, and as I have not time to finish my remarks this afternoon, I now move the adjournment of the debate for to-day.

Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chairman from the Committee reported that they had considered the Bill to them referred and had made some progress and asked leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion this report was received and adopted and it was ordered that the Committee have leave to sit again on to-morrow.

On motion the remaining Orders of the Day were deferred.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Justice, and by unanimous consent, it was ordered that a message be sent to the Legislative Council asking that body to make the following amendment in and upon the Bill sent up entitled "An Act for the Ratification of a Contract for the St. George's-Bay of Islands Coastal Mail service," namely, that the following Section be added to the said Bill:

5. Section 14 of the Agreement forming the Schedule marked A. hereto shall be read as if the words "the last four years" there were substituated for the words "the last three years."

It was moved and seconded that when the House rises it adjourn to to-morrow, Tuesday, June 28th, at three of the clock in the afternoon.

The House then adjourned accordingly.

TUESDAY, June 28th, 1927.

The House met at three of the clock in the afternoon, pursuant to adjournment.

A petition was presented by:

Mr. Brophy, from Portugal Cove Road, re roads.

On motion of Hon. Minister of Finance and Customs the motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on Supply was deferred until a later hour.

Pursuant to order and on motion of the Hon. the Prime Minister the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill entitled "An Act to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador."

Mr. Speaker left the Chair.

Mr. Puddester took the Chair of Committee.

HON. THE PRIME MINISTER—I think, Mr. Chairman, that Dr. Mosdell was addressing the House when we adjourned the debate.

DR. MOSDELL—This Labrador legislation is of extreme national importance because of the great interests involved, of the time at which it is introduced and of circumstances existing to-day in this country. As I remarked in the course of yesterday's debate, the Labrador territory is of outstanding importance to Newfoundland, because of what was involved in our legal fight and because of what it cost us to win and I now propose, Mr. Chairman, with your permission, to spend some little time endeavouring to arrive at an approximately correct estimate of the value of that territory to our country and our fellow-countrymen. Though a great deal of that territory is of no known commercial value, as far as natural resources are concerned, we are fully aware that a considerable portion is of the utmost potential value. Scores of thousands of square miles contain natural resources ot outstanding wealth. We know that if that wealth of resource can be secured to our people and insured to use to their general advantage, some of the most depressing days in our financial history are behind us; that we can hope, by the proper exploitation of this wealthy possession of ours, out of the maze of financial trouble in which we now find ourselves and into a broader, more prosperous and altogether more advantageous future.

It is generally accepted as correct that, of the whole Labrador area of upwards of one hundred thousand square miles are sufficiently wooded to permit of operations on a commercially profitable scale. If we regard that total area of timber lands as calculated to produce only four cords to the acre, we have a total prospective output of almost seventy-seven million cords. It is perfectly safe to assume that the production would be at least an average of 2600 cords per square mile, giving the total production just estimated by me. Now, such a total production of seventy-seven million cords of pulpwood at even a value of one dollar per cord represents a total valuation of pulpwood on this area of thirty thousand square miles of timbered Labrador land amounting to the enormous total of Seventy-seven Million Dollars. I have, of course, taken as the basis of my estimate a ridiculously low rate of production per acre and an even more ridiculously low rate of valuation per cord. Still, the totals arrived at are impressive enough to induce the feeling that this Labrador territory, properly exploited in the popular interests, can do all expected of it, indeed a great deal more, in the way of relief of the financial burdens of the country.

In a previous reference to this subject, I mentioned the fact that the Province of Quebec adopts a radically different and a much more profitable policy than do we in dealing with the timberlands. Where, for leasing purposes, we set a nominal rate of two dollars per square mile per year. Quebec demands an initial royalty of four hundred dollars per square mile and gets besides additional royalties in respect to stumpage and other charges totalling another five dollars per square mile. Lest it be concluded that these charges aply only to more favorably situated territory than that owned by us on Labrador, allow me to point out that this is the Quebec assessment at Clark City, situated in immediate proximity to the southern end of our Labrador territory. There are, of course, various and sundry reasons why Newfoundland has not up to now been able to collect royalties on her timberlands at the same rates as has Quebec. With these reasons I propose to deal later on in the course of my remarks. Let us now assume, for argument's sake and to arrive at a true estimate, or one approximately correct, of the value of this Labrador territory to Newfoundland, that we are in a position to charge only half the initial royalities collected by Quebec. Then, these 30,000 square miles of wooded territory on the Labrador, at $2.00 per square mile, are calculated to bring us in a revenue of $6,000,000 for the first year. Thereafter, charging at the Quebec rate of five dollars per square mile, we would receive an annual revenue of $150,000 in respect to royalties for the whole area, always assuming, of course, that the Government of Newfoundland has entire control of this territory. The application of our own present rates would bring us in a total of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars for the first year, and a total of half of that amount annually. Now, $76,000,000, the total conservative estimate of this Labrador timber area is a huge sum of money. Six million dollars is a large amount to receive by way of royalty. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars would be a handsome addition to the annual revenues of the country. The whole aim and object of the Legislature should be to ensure the early and profitable disposition of Labrador territory; to make certain that the returns secured for such disposal are more nearly in accord with their real values than would be the case of a sale or of leases under our present Crown Lands Act and, above all, to so handle the whole matter that whatever the financial returns may be the benefit and the enjoyment thereof are assured to the bulk of the people of Newfoundland beyond all preadventure.

I must now point out to this Committee, Mr. Chairman, that the rates I have adopted are not only those prevailing in Quebec Province, but they are rates which prevail under present timber supply circumstances. But the fact must not be overlooked that the value of the available and accessible pulpwood supply of the North American continent is steadily, increasing in value and that the present day valuation of these timbered areas represents nothing like the much-increased value that will most certainly attach to these same areas in, say, five or ten years time. To emphasise what I say in this connection and to prove the official recognition of this tendency elsewhere, I beg to point out that the Canadian Government is completely shutting down on the export of raw materials from Dominion crown lands. That Government, aware of the increasing value of pulpwood as a natural resource and as a source of large revenues to the Dominion, is conserving these resources and is promoting their use for local manufactures exclusively. In this connection I was much interested to read, in a balance sheet recently issued by the International Paper Company, representatives of which are now in this country conducting certain negotiations, a statement that the Dominion of Canada has become the centre of the newsprint producing industry of the world. That is not because Canada possesses the preponderating number of mills. It is purely and simply because Canada possesses the greatest supply of raw material for feeding those mills. Canada has so protected those raw materials of hers that those who desire to exploit them are forced to go to that country and establish their manufactories there. The result is that, as the International Paper Company observes, Canada has advanced to the position of centre of the newsprint manufacturing industry of the whole world.

We have, then, Mr. Chairman, this significant fact to note in connection with the manufacture of pulpwood into newsprint—that that industry for the last few years has been marching steadily northward. Where, formerly, the centre of that industry was in the United States, it has crossed the border into Canada. It, of course, moves ever forward to keep in closest possible touch with the source of greatest supply and, naturally, to those localities where such a supply can be utilised to the greatest advantage and at the least possible cost. Invested millions cannot keep the industry in any country because the mills are located there. The position of the United States in relation to this particular industry is evidence enough of the truth of that statement. In that country there are almost twelve hundred pulp and paper mills. Some of these manufacture pulp, but the majority of them were constructed and equipped for the making of newsprint paper. The latest statistics to which I could make reference show that, of the 840 paper mills and 315 pulp mills—1155 in all—in the United States, over five hundred, or almost fifty per cent. have absolutely no local supply of wood, either privately owned or located in their own country, from which to draw supplies of raw material. So pressing is this manufacturing situation that American pulp and paper manufacturers last year had to import almost a million and a half tons of sulphite and sulphite pulp, an equal quantity of groundwood pulp, a tremendous quantity of unmanufactured pulpwood and, in addition to these items, two million tons of manufactured paper of various grades.

The last official figures available show that the quantity of pulpwood that went over the border of Canada, exported to mills in the United States that are either without supplies of their own or which have not a sufficiency of such supplies, is one and a half million cords. The export value set on this pulpwood was at the rate of ten dollars per cord, which, I am assured is a low estimate. Still, on that basis, Canada's exports of that raw material in the year referred to reached the large total valuation of fifteen million dollars. You will note here, and in passing, that in reckoning up the value of the wood on the timbered areas of Labrador, I adopted the relatively very small valuation of one dollar per cord.

The position, then, of the pulp and paper manufacturing industry in the United States being such as I have described, and the tendencies in respect to the industry and the supplies for that industry being such as I have just outlined, I regard it as of the utmost significance that representatives of the International Paper Company of New York are now here negotiating for the plant at Corner Brook, proposing the creating of a new and similar industry in the Gander Valley and making tentative proposals in regard to the pulpwood supply on the Labrador. It is true that their negotiations are at present mainly concerned with properties in Newfoundland, but it is certain, indeed it is absolutely inevitable that they must eventually reach out after the supplies of raw material available on our Labrador territory. And, by the way, a further reference to the balance sheet of that concern from which I have already quoted, shows that the International Paper Company place an average general value on their woodland areas of two dollars per acre. Reckoned at even that low valuation, our thirty thousand square miles of Labrador timberlands would figure out at a cash sale price of forty million dollars. Looking, then, at these figures, considering the persistent trend of the newsprint industry and taking into account the obvious fact that as woodland supplies are rapidly becoming exhausted those industries are moving further northward, I think this Committee will agree with my contention that we have in our timberlands on Labrador a magnificent possession of almost unlimited potential value, resources worthy of the highest estimation we can place on them, resources such as demand the exercise of the greatest care and highest judgment and protection, resources that call for the most careful planning to ensure their due exploitation to the highest possible profit to Newfoundland and Newfoundlers generally.

Reference should next be made to another outstanding natural advantage of our Labrador territory. It consists in the waterpowers of Labrador, a resource that is bound to become of great and increasing importance as the pulpwood possibilities in connection with such a natural resource. I am informed that there is possible, in connection with the timbered areas of the Labrador territory, a total development of at least ten million horsepower, development that can be made from the streams that traverse these lands. The Province of Quebec makes a royalty charge on such developments ranging from one dollar to three and a half dollars per horsepower. For purposes of our estimate of Labrador waterpower values, let us adopt the lowest Quebec rate of one dollar per horsepower. Ten million horsepower, at that royalty, figures out at ten million dollars per year. Such an annual income represents, at five per cent., a capitalised value for the potential waterpower development on Labrador, of the huge sum of two hundred million dollars. Some of the best waterpowers of Labrador are conveniently placed in relation to timbered areas that promise commercial profits from their exploitation. Such a waterpower is that of the Hamilton River which along its course of two hundred miles provides a possibility of developing a million horsepower. Here are located the Muskrat Falls, capable of a development of half a million horsepower. At the wonderful Grand Falls alone are capabilities of the huge development of a million and a half horsepower. There may be displayed an inclination to scoff at the declared possibilities of values or revenue derivative from such a source; it is quite possible that a considerable number of people of average intelligence will sneer at the idea of approximating, even, a small percentage of such possibilities from Labrador waterpower developments. But there is really a foundation for the declared estimates and there is good and sufficient reason for the faith that ultimately they will be developed and realized on to some considerable portion of their estimated value. It is indisputable that the nearest and most accessible timber areas are almost entirely depleted; it is a matter of common knowledge that the search for new supplies had led the papermaking industry to Canada; it is also obvious that the scene of the next invasion must be the Labrador. That is an inevitable development of the near future. Accepting these premises as correct, there can be no disputing the fact that the inevitable exploitation of the pulpwoods of Labrador inevitably involves the development of Labrador waterpowers. In proportion as Labrador pulpwood and paper industries are promoted, so must Labrador waterpowers be developed in order to keep the wheels of such industries turning.

Just as I have emphasised the significance and the importance of Labrador waterpowers in relation to the pulpwood areas in that territory, so I must now ask your consideration of their equally great significance and importance in connection with other potential resources of that great country, its mineral areas. I must, at the outset, admit that the mineral possibilities of Labrador are far more of the remote future than are its pulpwood potentialities. At present these mineral resources are pretty much of an unknown quantity. Very little has been done in the way of the mineral exploration of our great northern dependency. A great iron ore deposit is known to be situated in the neighborhood of Grand Falls, but that is of little potential value at present. It is too remote from manufacturing centres which for many years to come can continue to draw ample supplies from mines that are nearer home and that are more readily and more cheaply accessible. But the fact that other mineral areas of different classes, of more restricted general supply and of higher value than iron ore are not known to exist on Labrador does not prove their absence from the country. Systematic search may prove their presence. Nature appears almost always ready to provide countries of the geographical situation and climatic characteristics of Labrador with ample compensations for the inconvenience of situation and for the drawbacks of general conditions. It is really not too much to expect that when it is properly explored the Labrador will prove, from a mineral standpoint, of as much value to Newfoundland as Alaska, for instance, has proven to the United States of America. In 1869 the American Government negotiated the purchase of that territory from Russia for seven million dollars. The Secretary of State who put through the deal was reviled by his fellowcountrymen for having squandered public moneys on such a remote, inaccessible and valueless territory. It was commonly referred to as "Seward's ice chest." Since those days of misrepresentation and misapprehension Alaska has amply proven its value as a mineral, fur and fish producing country. As an American territory it has taken in a few years one hundred and fifty million dollars' worth of U. S. products, manufactured by plants in the United States. The revenue of Alaska totals nine million dollars annually. There is absolutely no reason why we should not have confidence that our experience in connection with our Labrador territory will be equally as profitable to us as has been that of the United States in connection with its Alaskan acquisition. We should maintain that much faith in our great dependency and its future possibilities, if only to maintain and improve the morale of our people generally during the times of great stress through which they are now passing. We should also manifest a disposition to protect the interests of the people during Labrador exploitation, present and prospective, in order that their confidence in the administration of public affairs may be increased.

So far, Mr. Chairman, we have emphasised the outstanding importance of this Labrador territory of ours from a number of viewpoints, and I consider it well worthwhile to recount them here, briefly, of course. We have considered what it has cost us to establish our undisputed and indisputable title to that territory; its absolute and its potential value in timberlands, in water powers and in mineral lands; its importance in relation to the pulp and paper industries of today in respect to adequate present and future supplies therefor, and, finally, from the standpoint of the ever-increasing values of these pulpwood resources. We must now consider our Labrador acquisition in connection with our present economic position and future outlook. We have won our legal victory at a time when such a triumph, with all it signifies, is nothing less than the accomplishment of public salvation. The Labrador territory has been confirmed to us by legal decision of the Privy Council, when the effects of such a judgment are nothing less than providential to this Dominion of Newfoundland. That territory has become unquestionably ours, ours to exploit to our own general advantage and ours to manipulate to the utmost of economic and financial benefit at a time when Newfoundland stands sorely in need of such a boost in the general regard of the outside world and in its credit rating in the international money market. It was because I held such ideas in my mind; it was because I had such a conception of the present value of the Labrador territory to us at this juncture and it was because I cherished high ideals as to the degree and the manner in which this opportunity could and should be developed, that I have listened with approbation to the manner and the extent to which the members of His Majesty's Opposition have debated the measure now under consideration in this Committee. There is every justification for the care with which my colleagues on this side of the House have examined and analysed the Bill to Govern the Granting of Rights and Lands in Labrador, have debated it and have offered amendments to it. After all, we are not considering so many trees or so much of an area of wooded lands; we are not concerned merely with so many water powers or so many horsepower of certain or possible development; we are not alone bothered about the question as to whether or not Labrador is rich in gold, silver, copper or some other mineral that offers prospects of commercially profitable development. We are, as a matter of fact, a fact which must be treated as the most outstanding one in connection with this whole discussion, dealing with the people's heritage, a heritage won by and for the people after great expenditure of time, effort and money, and as such to be guarded jealously and exploited solely in the popular interests.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Bill was brought into this Legislature by the present Government with the declared purpose of applying to the granting of lands and rights in Labrador the principle of ensuring all the financial and other advantages thereof to the enjoyment and the benefit of our general population. The Opposition have carefully applied the acid test of that principle to the measure during the last few days of debate. Members of the Opposition have examined and analysed that Bill purely and simply from such a standpoint. It is solely with the idea of forming a settled opinion as to how the provisions of the Bill in practice will or will not ensure the strictes possible adherence to such a principle, the principle enunciated when the Bill was introduced, that I am now taking part in the present debate. Does this Bill really ensure to Newfoundlanders generally the utmost possible protection and advantage in respect to the leasing of Labrador areas under consideration? Any amount of analytic debate and constructive criticism is just fiable on the part of the Opposition, seeing that it 's vitally necessary to satisfy the House on such a point and to reassure the country as a whole. The Government of the day must remember that it has lost the confidence of the electorate and that there is a great deal of suspicion and anxiety abroad generally regarding the manner of disposition of this great and valuable territorial acquisition of ours, popularly regarded as the ultimate and effective remedy for our major economic and financial ills.

With reference to Section One of the present Bill several pronouncements have been made from the Government side of the House. I was particularly interested in one made by the Hon. the Colonial Secretary on the day on which the Opposition brought in the Amendment that received such scant consideration and that had such a short lease of life. The honorable gentleman contended that in Section One was to be found embodied an action of the present Executive Council without precedent in the history of Governments in this country. He proceeded to set up the further contention that the present Executive Council had, of its own volition, decided to forego outstanding powers and privileges in connection with the disposition of Labrador territories and to delegate those powers and privileges to the Legislature. I am prepared to admit that that action of the Executive Government did represent something of a step in advance in this connection and that there is a great deal commendable about the spirit so displayed. I am not, however, prepared to admit the sweeping contention of the Hon. the Colonial Secretary that as a result of this radical policy very sweeping benefits are bound to accrue to the people of this country. I cannot concede, even, that the step of the Executive Council here referred to represents anything worth while from the standpoint of Government self-sacrifice. Further, I hold that that step by no means represents the highest poss.ble degree of protection of popular rights on Labrador, though that is the contention I understood the honorable gentleman to make in this connection.

Now it is possible, just as it is preferable to analyse the present position from an entirely impersonal point of view. This is my impression as to the change that has actually been made, or will be made, through the enforcement of the provisions of Section One of this Bill to Govern the Granting of Lands and Rights in Labrador. Formerly, the nine or ten politicians composing the personnel of the Executive Council issued licenses in respect to timberlands on Labrador, as elsewhere. To these are now to be added a further number of politicians to the extent sufficient to form the ruling majority in the House of Assembly who will now do, through legislative debate, what was formerly done by the Executive Council off its own bat. It may be said by way of rejoinder that that is what happens any measure in the Legislature. That is true, but it must also be admitted that legislation passed here is not always just the sort of legislation that is advisable in the best interests of the majority of Newfoundlanders. Aforetime, the Executive Council granted timber licenses without reference to the Legislature, but was in a position to argue its action in this connection would be endorsed were it submitted to the Legislature just as all other actions are endorsed by the party majority when they are so submitted to the Legislature. The specific effect of this Bill is to force the Executive of the day to obtain such endorsation. There has thus been created by this measure a distinction much stressed by the Government but without the differences from the former system so strenuously claimed by advocates of the Bill.

Then, too, sir, I beg to point out to those who express such delight that this Bill takes the disposition of Labrador lands from the hands of the Executive Council alone and places that power in the hands of the Legislature, that the measure also removes those Labrador lands from the scope of the rules and regulations whereunder these lands shall alone be granted. Not even a minimum rate of rental or royalty is stipulated for. There is another obvious objection to such a broad latitude of procedure and I will deal with it specifically later on in this debate. The position to-day, as I see it, is that a partisan political majority in the House of Assembly can, under this Bill, deal with the issuing of grants or licenses on the Labrador in absolutely unrestricted fashion, utterly untrammelled by rules or regulations such as are usually regarded as protecting the rights of the country generally. It stands to reason, sir, that the Executive Council of the day will still continue to recommend to the Government Party in respect to such licenses. It is unthinkable that the Leader of any Government Party will fail to exercise in such a connection a supervision with benevolent effects on the followers of his own party, in the Legislature or outside it. Obviously, then, party interests, under the new order, will as now continue to dictate the policy and the undertakings of any government in this connection. At any rate, it can be said the door is left wide open to such partisian exploitation of this portion of the domain of the people of Newfoundland. I apprehend, indeed, with the wider knowledge of available lands and grants made of timber lands, which will now be in the possession of every politician there is bound to be a greater scramble than ever for shares in the spoils of office.

Conversely, of course, the general public will suffer more than ever.

The contention, Mr. Chairman, has also been made that the decision to make grants of timberlands on Labrador only through the medium of the Legislature will ensure wide publicity in respect to such transactions. Even were that actually the case, I would not regard such a development as ensuring any additional protection to the general public. Honorable members on both sides of this House know that measures embodying provisions that are anything but in the public interest sometimes reach this House, are fully debated and are given the widest adverse publicity. But they are passed just the same, unamended, because party exigencies of the moment demand that their objectionable features shall not be removed. The administration of the day finds itself up against some particular difficulty, the Leader of the Government represents to his party that a way of escape is to be found only through adoption of the measure and its enactment as law and, given a fair majority in the Legislature, such a measure gets by, despite the most strenuous criticism of its opponents in this House or in the public press. But, I do not see how you are to get any such extra publicity as is anticipated by the Government from the enactment of this measure. Applications for licenses do not have to be brought in here over the actual signatures of those who are after Labrador lands. The trend of the times in this connection is very noticeable in the pages of the Newfoundland Gazette, where one notes that, instead of notices of applications for Labrador lands being made in the names of the parties concerned, solicitors are now being employed and are advertising Statutory form on behalf of their clients. I take it that gentlemen who adopt this manner of giving notice of their intention to apply for timberlands on Labrador are trying to avoid as much publicity as possible.

I regard the departure of the present Government from the old time rule of issuance of timber grants or licenses by the Executive as a retrograde and an exceedingly dangerous step. In delegating these powers to the party as a whole and to the varied units that go to make up such a party serious dangers are created. The Executive Council is generally regarded as composed of the best and most reliable elements of any administration. For the most part, they are conscientious, anxious to perform their duty to the country as a whole, and usually act as a buffer between party demands and popular interests. This relationship is now altered and this public safeguard is now removed. There come times in the experiences of Government when it is found necessary to take extraordinary steps either to maintain a slim administrative majority or to secure accession of strength from the opposing party. Left in its present form, this measure can easily be used to exploit Labrador lands for the maintenance of adherence to the ruling Government party or to induce new adherents thereto. In a few words it leaves that Labrador territory wide open to the fullest possible advantage to selfseeking politicians. Under the Crown Lands Act there was set a minimum rate of two dollars per square mile. As the Minister of Justice has observed, what was intended as a minimum has through custom of years been accepted as a maximum rate. It is, of course, a ridiculously low rate. Inadequate though it is, it is better than none at all. The present Bill should embody such a minimum rate, more in keeping though with the scale of Quebec charges, defined as neither more nor less than a minimum rate, and above this should be a scale of charges graduated in accordance with the situation, resources and exploitable value of various areas.

Another shortcoming of Section One, in my opinion, is its failure to ensure special attention to the mineral areas on Labrador. No pretense, even, is made of ensuring special protection to this feature of the natural resources of this territory. I am, of course, taking a layman's view of the matter and I am anticipating some practical troubles and difficulties that may be created. Let us suppose, for instance, that an area of timberland is applied for on Labrador and that, after a fast and furious debate in this House, the Government make such a grant, but are forced to charge something like an adequate rental. The grantee can then proceed to recoup himself for the financial loss he has sustained through having to pay more dearly than he expected for his privilege. The Minister of Agriculture and Mines, even under the Crown Lands Act to-day, has the right to reserve mineral areas from exploitation by the general public. Under this Bill the Labrador Mineral areas are still retained in the jurisdiction of the Crown Lands Act. What, then, is there to prevent the owner of a timber area on Labrador, who has discovered the presence or signs of the presence of valuable mineral deposits on his timberland, from having his political friend, any Minister of Agriculture and Mines, declare such an area a reservation from the public within the meaning of the Act?

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—The Minister has no such power. Lands can only be reserved conditionally, and they are open to the public.

DR. MOSDELL—Lands cannot be reserved from the public and open to the public at the same time. I quite see, however, the point that the honourable the Minister of Justice attempts to make. I was not claiming that the Minister of Agriculture and Mines could or would make reservations of mineral areas on Labrador specifically for the benefit of any owner of timberlands on that territory. I think, though, that the honourable gentleman will admit that such an owner, having his lumbermen working there, can easily and quietly bring in his prospectors and use them on such reserved areas until he satisfies himself as to the value or otherwise of his mineral prospects.

HON. MINISTER OF JUSTICE—But that does not stop me from going over his timber limits to look for minerals.

DR. MOSDELL—Surely it would, if the area were reserved. Then too, the honourable gentleman must understand that we are now talking about remote timber areas, that if the owner happens on signs of minerals he can readily pull the wires, have a reservation made and the public debarred, prove his property and proceed to take up as much of it as he desires under the old and inadequate provisions of the Crown Lands Act.

I have endeavored, Mr. Chairman, to point out what I regard a certain grave menace to public interests under the working provisions of this Bill. My conscientious opinion is that it leaves wide open, that, indeed, it throws wider open than ever before these areas on Labrador as the objects of party political exploitation. The Leader of the Government has been frank enough, on several occasions in the course of the present session, even, to admit that it is not always possible for the politician in office to carry out his pre-election promises. The ideals embodied in a pre-election programme cannot always be realized after that party has assumed control of the administration of public affairs. That is the Prime Minister's declared attitude and, I presume, he speaks from personal experience. I am prepared to admit my belief that the present Prime Minister did assume office with the highest motives and with his heart set on realising certain high ideals. Now, according to his own admission, he is in the position in which other leaders of governments in this country have aforetime found themselves, that because of party interests and political pressure of one sort and another, he cannot make administrative undertakings coincide exactly with electioneering programs. He is not the first prime minister to discover that, while he may not permit party influences to take his feet from the straight and narrow path, still those same influences are persistent and powerful enough to delay his progress along that pathway. Heretofore, he appears to have been so trammelled by party considerations that he has failed to justify the high hopes his fellow-countrymen entertained of his term in office. Still, making allowances for all the obstructive and trammelling influences that have hitherto been held insurmountable by him, I claim that it is high time he set his face resolutely towards his electioneering ideals and henceforth refused to be turned aside from his efforts to realise them. Three years ago, he announced a programme and a policy for his Government. He has abandoned that programme and he has departed from that policy. Small wonder, then, Mr. Chairman that there should be created a position such as the present, whereunder the administration rules without the confidence of the people, in spite, in fact, of repeated declarations of loss of trust by the electorate in the Government of the day. His Majesty's Opposition have by recent, repeated and major developments been proven to have taken the place that was vouchsafed the Government in the general election of 1924. In other words, the position of three years ago has been reversed, because of the sheer disgust of the electorate with the breach of faith of which the Prime Minister has been guilty. The country looks confidently to members of the present Opposition to advocate public rights and to attend to the protection of public interests. Realising my duty as an associate of that Opposition I am now warning the Leader of the Government, the Minister of Justice and other honorable members opposite of what I regard and what the people of the country generally regard as the loopholes in this measure through which may come destruction to the very popular interests which this Bill professes to safeguard.

I have referred to a general menace which I regard as created by the provisions of this measure, permit me now, Mr. Chairman, to make some reference to what I regard as nothing less than an outrage perpetrated by a recent action of the Government in the same general connection. Of recent days we have heard a great deal about this matter, the extension of the terms of the leases held by certain gentlemen in respect to timber lands on the Labrador. Bear in mind the fact that the public generally, the electorate of this country, no longer regard the Government as they did three years ago. Bear in mind the fact that the Leader of that Government, as a politician at any rate, no longer occupies the position of influence and of trust that was his at that time. Then, even his strongest opponents, including myself, expected him to stick to the letter of his undertakings to the electorate of the country. Our expectations have been disappointed and our confidence has not been respected. Bearing all these considerations in mind, contemplate what must be the effect on the electorate of the announcement of the circumstances and the effects of these extensions of terms of leases on Labrador timberlands. Some of these leases are held by strong political supporters of the present Prime M.nister, even by relatives of his. Surely, there can be but one effect of such a public announcement; it must be an effect still further destructive of whatever bit of trust in the Prime Minister may still persist :n the minds of a portion of the electorate. Everybody may not possess the high regard for the Prime Minister's personal character that some of us admit. Most people, indeed, will contend it is safest to argue back to examples in recent years to when outstanding politic!ans, because of close political identity of interest, or family identity of interest, have given away large port!ons of the public domain in order to make sure of standin well with their family connections of their political supporters. I have no intention of making charges of any such corrupt pract ces aginst the Prime Minister. I would be the very last to point the finger of scorn at him. I must, however, point out to the honorable gentleman the position of jeopardy in which he is placed through an action of his own Government, and, presumably, w.th his own consent. If he does not take immediate opportunity of disavowing all connection with and any approbation for the Executive Council decision that gave these extensions of Labrador leases, the general publ!c suspicion as to his personal as well as his political integrity must inevitably be aroused, and all the bad odors created by this transaction must most certainly cling to his reputation. I don't care how jealous the Pr.me Minister may in fact !e of public interests; it matters not in how conscientious a spirit he may have shared in the transaction to which I refer, there is bound to be the worst sort of constructoin placed upon h!s connection therewith.

That which explains, more than anything else, the protracted nature of the debate on this Bill, Mr. Chairman, was the announcement of the extension of some of these leases and the declared intention of the Govrnment to grant similar extensions to those who make application therefor. As far as I am concerned, I must admit that, to me, that announcement came as a bolt from the blue. Certainly, it was not the sort of thing I expected. Had it been predicted to me, I could not have regarded such a development as possible. Just as certainly, it does not appeal to me as playing the game by the public and I regard it as be.ng anything but in keeping with the declared general policy and intentions of the Government in connection with the reservation of timberlands on the Labrador and their ultimate exploitation in the sole interest of the general public of Newfoundland.

There are some features of outstanding importance in connection with these announced extensions of Labrador licenses. The first, which strikes me very forcibly, as it must strike all those who have given the subject the slightest consideration, is the location, the extent and the value of the lands on Labrador covered by the grants in respect to which the Government has made extensions of license terms and which, to all intents and purposes, are now alienated from the public domain forever. In my opening remarks this afternoon, I referred to the total potential value of Labrador timberlands. I also pointed out that there was not much hope of these timberlands being exploited for manufactur!ng purposes in the immediate future, because of their remoteness from manufacturing centres and because, at present, many of them were, relatively speaking, inaccessible. Now, we are here concerned with the nearest and the most accessible of these lands. We are dealing with the first timber areas to be tapped when circumstances force the pulp and paper manufacturing interests to resort to Labrador for supplies of raw material. Twelve thousand square miles of the most accessible and the best wooded lands on Labrador; twelve thousand square miles of woodland situated in proximity to the best Labrador waterpower; twelve thousand square miles of the most valuable of all the Labrador timber areas are represented by grants to parties who have paid up their rentals only, and who, despite their complete disregard of the other terms of the Crown Lands Act, are, this House has been informed, to have a couple of years more in which to speculate on these immensely valuable properties and to endeavor to turn them to personal profit. Some of the Labrador licenses have already been extended, others will get similar extensions on application therefor to the Governor-in-Council. It is but reasonable to expect that all such licenseholders will hasten to obtain an extension, so that we may consider the whole of these twelve thousand square miles of territory as definitely lost to the people of this country. The total number of square miles of wooded territory on Labrador is 30,000. So that the recently announced decision of the Government to confirm to the possession of the present licensees these twelve thousand square miles of the best of all the Labrador timberlands means that over one-third of all that Labrador woodland that is of any commercial value has been absolutely and definitely taken from the people of this country.

One honorable gentleman, in speaking to this measure on yesterday, expressed the opinion that the area so alienated from the public domain by this extraordinary act of the present Executive Government is worth about seven million dollars. It is worth more than four times that amount, even considering it on the basis of a production of four cords per acre and at a valuation of one dollar per cord. Thirty million dollars would be a very low estimate of the total value of the area comprised in the extended grants. Small wonder, then, that the effect of the announcement of the extension by the Government was to redouble Opposition criticism of the Bill that was supposed to prevent just such outrageous exploitation of the public domain, or that the Opposition has protracted the debate in the hope of inducing the Government to rescind such an unpopular decision. The value of the land affected is so great; the amount at stake is so large and that money would be so nearly in the public treasury even now were the lands retained as portion of the public domain, that the cause of retention merits the strongest championship from every member of this House who is ready to do his duty as representative of the people who sent him here. The Government does not appear to have made any outstanding effort to discover whether they were legally bound to grant any such concession to these holders of grants. They appear, quite casually, in an almost irresponsible manner, indeed, to have decided that the extensions should be made. They surely could not have been quite oblivious to the value of the lands they were thus alienating from public possession. They must have known that these lands represented a huge total valuation that merited a legal fight to a finish for their reversion to possession of the Crown. If they were aware of these factors, they have given no evidence of having been duly impressed by their importance.

Mr. Chairman, there is another peculiar aspect of this decision of the Executive Council to extend the term of grants covering Labrador timberlands for two years more. The Government brought in here a Bill declared to be framed for the general protection of the public interests in this territory. It was loudly proclaimed throughout the country that the purpose behind the Bill was to ensure the public interest in Labrador the full protection of the Legislature, composed of elected representatives of the people. This Bill had been under discussion for some days before, quite casually, almost accidentally, in fact, the Opposition learned that the Labrador territory had been shorn of its wealthiest areas even while the measure was being debated. The cream of value has been taken from the total area; the Legislature is now to be vouchsafed the privilege of guarding the skimmed milk. I contend, Mr. Chairman, as other honorable members who have preceded me in speaking to this measure have contended, that if the Government were sincere in their declaration of deep and abiding interest in the public weal, they would have taken the Legislature into their confidence in this connection, they would have consulted this House on such an important matter and they would have put up as strenuous a fight for the reversion of these areas to the possession of the Crown as they did to secure the decision of the Privy Council that the whole Labrador area is indisputable territory belonging to Newfoundland and its people.

That is the policy for which the Opposition are fighting; it should be the policy of the Government, too, were they really anxious to do the general public the highest possible material service. The Opposition affirm that the action of the Government in granting these extensions is unjustifiable and the Opposition demand that these licenses be cancelled because their provisions have not been kept. The policy that commends itself to the general public of Newfoundland is one that assures the loosening of the tentacles of the timber speculators from Labrador lands, that public heritage that has cost us so much to secure to our own undisputed jurisdiction. That is the policy for which the Opposition stands and the policy which it endorses. It is the policy that I champion because by its observance alone can the real, outstanding interests of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders be advanced.

The Opposition amendment to this Bill provided for the cancellation of all Labrador timber grants, the holders of which had in any respect failed to comply with the terms of the Crown Lands Act. Permit me, Mr. Chairman, to pay some little attention to the objections which were raised by honorable gentlemen opposite. I am satisfied in my own mind that cancellation should have been decided on, rather than extension of these licenses. I am persuaded that nothing less would satisfy this House and the country generally. What is the case as presented against such cancellation?
